SUPPLEMENT TO THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS JANUARY 11 1845.

OUR PREFATORY POEM

TO VOL. V.

Another Volume,—(one more charmful link
  In the bright strong and intellectual chain
That binds us to the public,)—bids us drink
  From the full Cup of Gratitude again—
Pledging a happy future to those friends
  Whose firm support has crown'd our prosperous Past;
And promising to work out noble ends,
  With hardy purpose that shall live and last,
Long as their countenance our toil beguiles,
And we are sunned by such a host of smiles!

A host!—the word is one of multitude:
  Armies have been concentred in't ere now;
Yet is it not with such a force imbued
  As may describe our "troops of friends;"—we bow
To half a world of readers;—thousands more
  Than fight our nation's battle, read our page
In calm enjoyment of that peaceful lore
  Which pours its influence upon youth and age,
Giving historic value to the time,
And fixing memory with a mark sublime!

How Art hath reared its triumphs in our tomes!—
  How it hath ploughed, and tilled, and cropped our field,
It hath gone into a million homes!—
  With what a glorious impress hath it sealed
Year after year of fate!—as Time rolls on
  We form its picture-gallery of the mind,
For many after years to gaze upon
  Through the dim Past at what it left behind!
And as it peers the wondrous vista through,
Dwell on the glories we have brought to view!

The by-gone year—nay this one volume—holds
  No few memorials of a teeming age
Of startling progress; every leaf unfolds
  Some novel freshness—Life on every page!
More of free Commerce, sprung from hallowed Peace,
  Of friendly converse 'tween the crown'd of earth,
Of Royal Home-tours—that will never cease
  To prove the Queen's love, and the people's worth.
More of Art's progress,—what the mind achieves
  When Science guides it—Literature's display,
The Drama's mimic show—and all the leaves
  In the strange book which we call "Every day!"

For still one feature more—we hope to gain
  The public favour—'tis our "New Year's Gift,"
Fresh watered into life by genial rain,
  Of Genius, Patience, Industry, and Thrift!
Thrown into pictured form—and soon we hope
  To deck some thousand walls, from goodly frames,
Showing our noble river's glorious scope
  The Mighty London on Majestic Thames!

Enough—more words were idle: now adieu,
  No more, sweet Public, we your time abuse,
But still grand efforts shall be made for you
  Who Illustrate the triumph of our News!

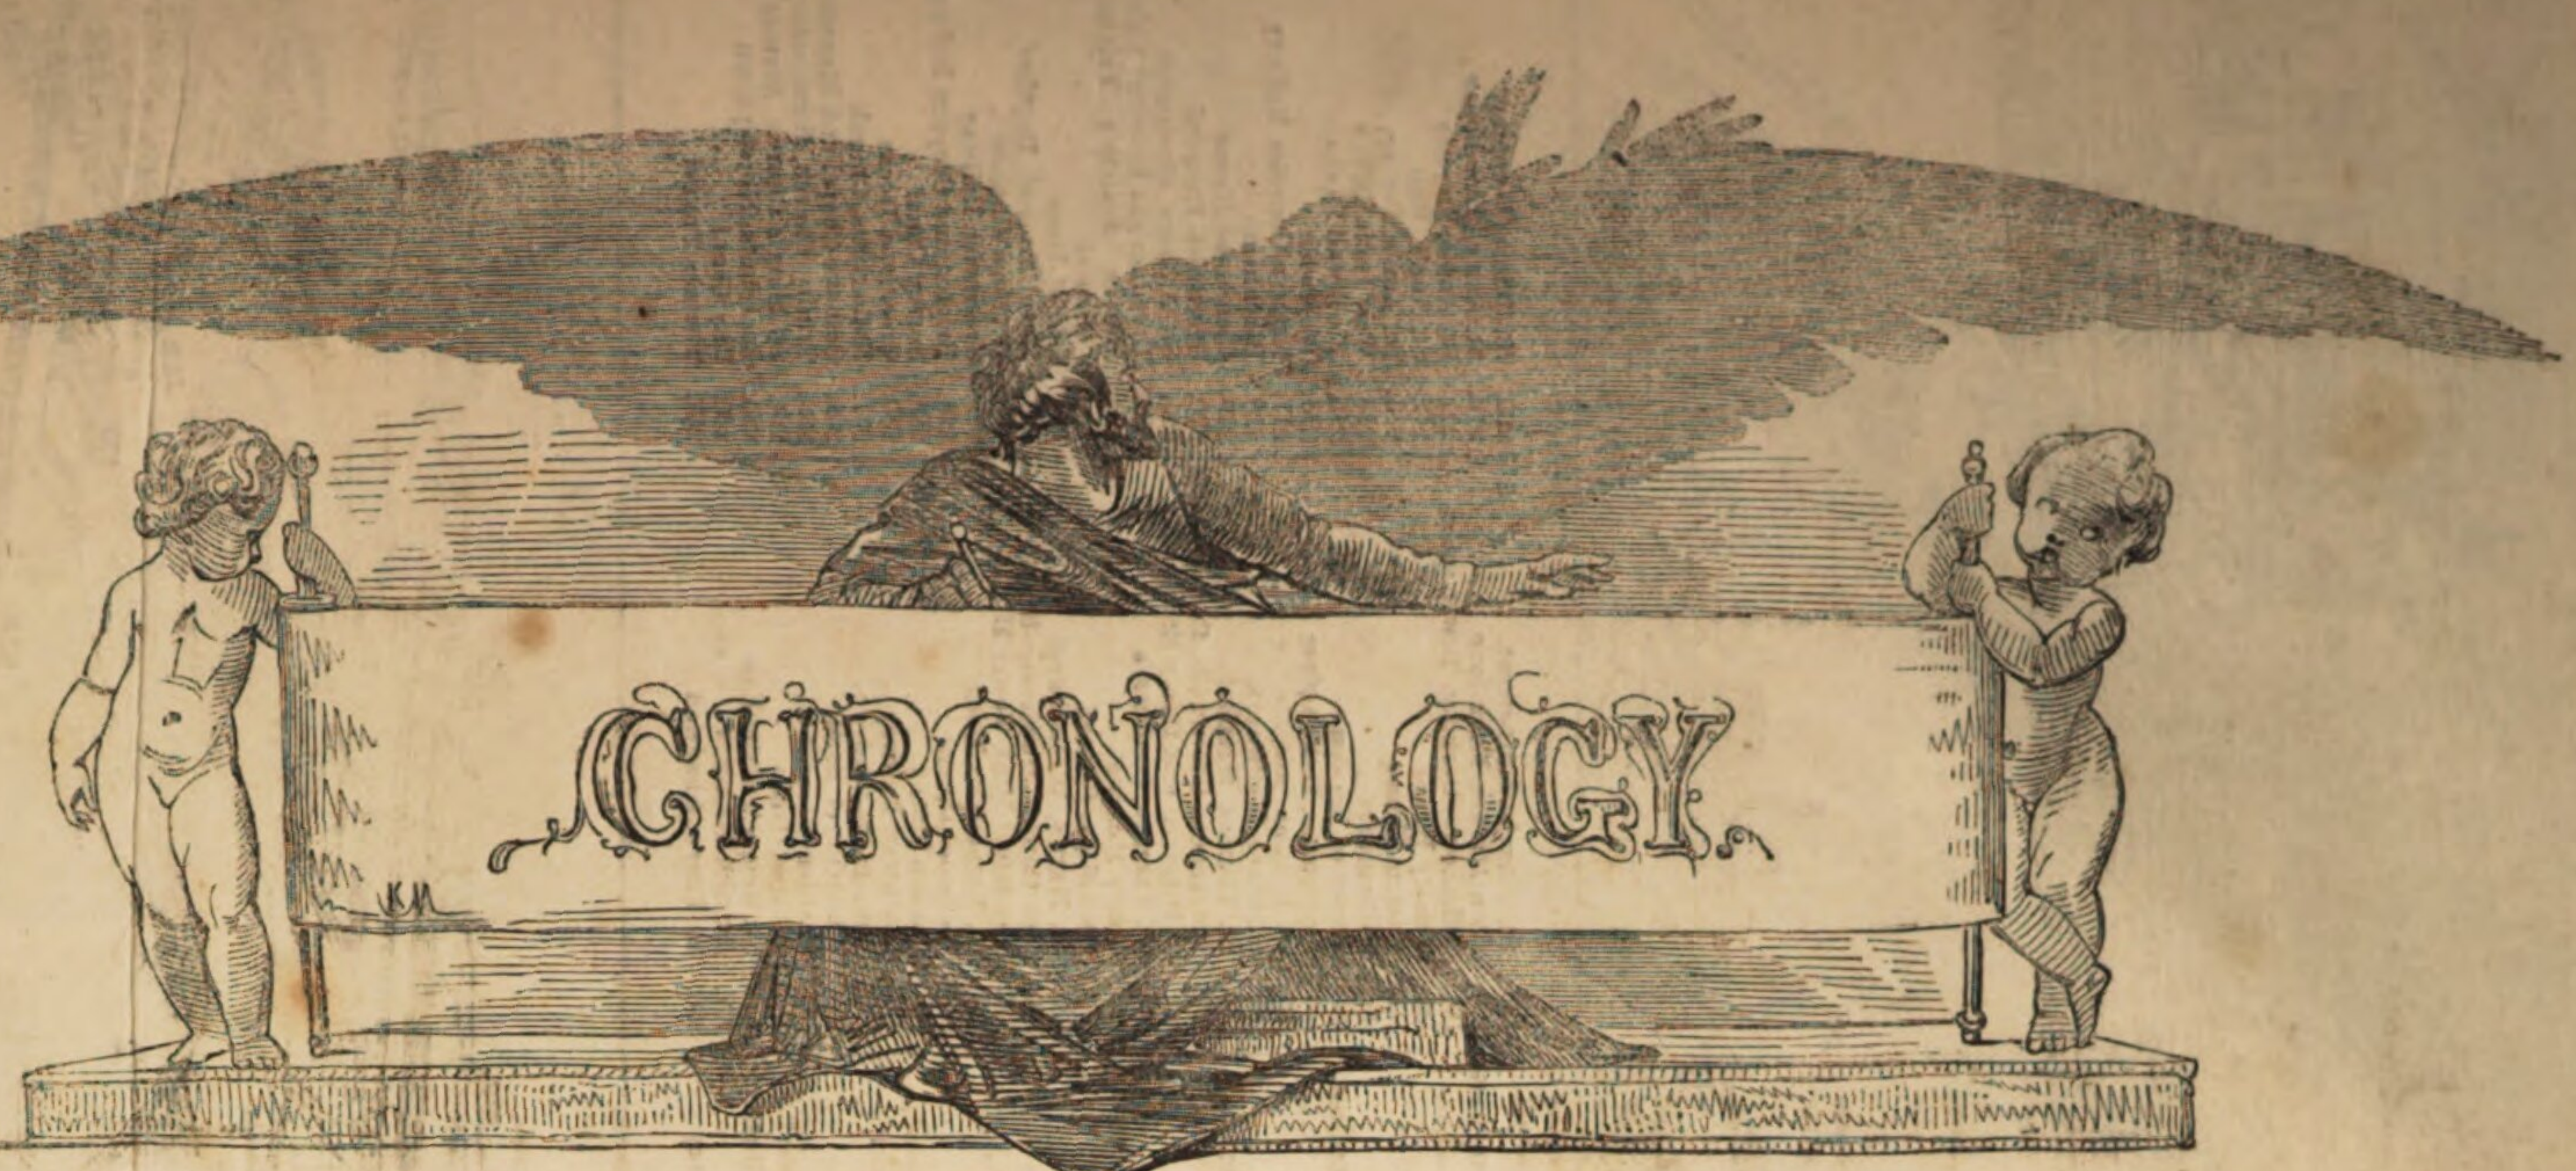
London, January, 1845.



CHRONOLOGY.

JULY 1, TO DECEMBER 21, 1844.

JULY.

2. A Revising Barrister in Marylebone decided in favour of a claim to vote under the Reform Act, from a lodging only.

3. News of the arrival of the new Governor-General, Sir H. Hardinge, at Calcutta, on July 23; and of Lord Ellenborough's embarkation on his return, on August 1, previous to which a splendid banquet was given to his lordship at Calcutta.—Intelligence conveyed by steam-ship and railway, from Liverpool to Montreal in 13 days 3½ hours.—Entire the destruction of the city of Nicaragua, by earthquake.—Accounts of O'Connell's triumphant progress to his native mountains.

4. The King of the French granted an amnesty to all political offenders whose penalty, pronounced previously to 1844, was to expire before the 1st of January, 1847; and to twelve other political prisoners sentenced to imprisonment for various terms, from six to twenty years, or to transportation.

6. Sudden death of Lady Hayter, aged 66, at Brighton.—Death of Lady Heytesbury, at the Viceregal Lodge, Dublin.

7. The King of the French landed at Portsmouth, and proceeded to Windsor, on a visit to her Majesty. His Majesty was most cordially received by all classes, and, by his frankness and affability, made a most favourable impression. During his short stay at Windsor, he was entertained by stately banquets, and was installed with the usual ceremonies as a Knight of the Garter. Addresses were presented to him from the Corporations of London and Windsor, and he received one from the Corporation of Portsmouth before he landed. On the 14th, the King, accompanied by her Majesty and Prince Albert, left the Castle for Portsmouth, intending to embark for France, but the tempestuous state of the weather rendering it probable that he would be enabled to disembark at Treport, his Majesty took the resolution of proceeding by the South-Western Railway to London, and thence to the New Cross station, and forward by the South-Eastern line to Dover. On reaching New Cross, about eleven P.M., escorted by the Royal Horse Guards, the large station was in flames, a most destructive fire having burst out about two hours before his Majesty's arrival; notwithstanding which, preparations were hastily made for receiving his Majesty with suitable respect, and which he courteously acknowledged. He entered the railway carriage amidst the mingled cheers of the people and the noise and confusion of the firemen engaged in working the engines, and arrived in Dover about two A.M. About eleven o clock, after receiving an address from the Corporation, his Majesty embarked for Calais.—The Queen and Prince Albert passed the night on board the royal yacht, in Portsmouth harbour, and afterwards spent a few days at the Isle of Wight.—Companion to the Almanac.

9. Seven lives lost by a boat swamped at Plymouth.—Nine persons drowned in a heavy gale in the Mersey: four in a boat run down by the Iron Duke steamer, and five by a boat capsizing.—On the previous day the Nymph, from a collision with the Ocean Queen, sank in the Mersey, and of the crew, all but three, were drowned.

12. Sudden death of the Duchess of Marlborough, at Blenheim Palace.

13. Marriage of Queen Christina to the Duke of Rianzares, at Madrid.

14. Terrific explosion of a gun, in firing salutes at the King's Bastion, Plymouth: two artillerymen killed.—O Connell's manifesto issued for Federative or simple Repeal.—Mr. Hampton's new balloon totally destroyed at Dublin, by striking in its ascent against a chimney, and taking fire from the sparks issuing therefrom. Mr. Hampton escaped with little injury.—The Gladiator war-steamer, 1210 tons, launched at Woolwich.—Marriage of Mrs. Nesbitt, of the Haymarket Theatre, to Sir W. Boothby, Bart.

15. The Earl of Ellenborough gazetted as Viscount Southam.—Lucerne made a strong demonstration against the instalment of the Jesuits there.—Two men and two horses drowned on Lancaster Sands, by the rising tide.

16. Atrocious murders in Cork and Kilkenny, and Carrick-on-Shannon; and two brutal murders in Tipperary.

17. Extensive fire at Blackwall: the Britannia Tavern burnt, and others much damaged.

19. News of the town of Matamoras, in Mexico, destroyed by a hurricane.—The long-looked-for Brazilian Treaty received from Rio de Janeiro.—A Bill for the Abolition of Slavery lost in the Portuguese Chamber of Peers.—Eleven persons killed by a colliery explosion at Rowley Regis, Staffordshire.

20. The New Royal Exchange opened by her Majesty and Prince Albert, in state; the royal procession being met by the Lord Mayor in state, who, with several of the Aldermen and Common Councilmen on horseback, preceded her Majesty to the Exchange, where a banquet and the ceremony of proclaiming "the Royal Exchange," took place by sound of trumpet. The day was one of general rejoicing throughout the City.

21. The Duke de Montmorency tried at Paris for the distribution of alleged seditious emblems, and acquitted.—Opening of the States General of Holland, by the King.

22. Opening of the Belgian Chambers by King Leopold—A waterspout burst upon the town of Cette, and crushed several houses.—Great overflow of the Rhone, the Durance and the Saone.

23. News of disunion in the Cabinet of Greece, and a change of Ministry. Several persons killed at elections.—The Honourable W. R. Tuchet tried at the Central Criminal Court for shooting at Mr. Smith, gunmaker, of Holborn, and found "Not Guilty, on the ground of insanity."—The celebrated Father Mathew arrested in Dublin for a debt incurred for temperance medals, and a subscription set on foot for his relief.—The first stone of the New Docks at Birkenhead laid with splendid ceremony.

28. Died, Miss S. Wynard, aged 71, at Kensington Palace, daughter of the late Lieutenant-General Wynard, and for many years bed-chamber woman to the late Princess Augusta; Col. Sir Samuel Gordon Higgins, K.C.H., aged 74, in Chapel-street, Belgrave-square, Equerry to the Duchess of Gloucester; his Grace the Duke of Grafton, K.G., aged 84, Lord Lieutenant of the county of Suffolk.—The Spanish Constitution of 1837 abrogated, under the dictation of General Narvaez, President of the Council of Ministers, who proposed one of much less liberal construction.

29. Defeat of 3000 Kabyles by the French troops under Marshal Bugeaud.

30. News of renewed disturbances at Canton.

NOVEMBER.

2. A large factory at Oldham fell down and killed 21 persons, besides injuring others.—Alarming conflagration at Strathaven: 40 houses, a brewery, and tan-work, burnt.

5. Six men killed at Derby by the falling in of a newly-built sewer arch, by the removal of the centre before the materials had set.

7. A verdict of manslaughter found against the master of the Waterman steamer, No 6, for running down a wherry, by which a waterman was drowned.

12. A very melancholy accident occurred on the river, near Blackwall, on board a new steam-boat called the Gipsy Queen, by which Mr. Jacob Samuda, the head of a firm engaged in business as engineers, lost his life, along with nine other persons. The vessel was making an experimental trip with a view of trying engines of a new construction, called bell-crank engines, said to be the invention of Mr. Samuda; and while he was in the engine-room with the other sufferers, superintending and examining the working of the engine, the boiler burst and scalded to death all within reach of the explosion.—Her Majesty and Prince Albert left Windsor Castle for Burghley, near Stamford, on a visit to the Marquis of Exeter, and returned to Windsor on the 15th.

13. News of a dreadful hurricane at Lake Erie, with loss of more than fifty lives, and property of great value.—Death of Mr Sergeant Andrews.

14. The closing prices of the following Stocks this evening were:—3 per Cent. Reduced Annuities, 99½; 3 per Cent. Consolidated Annuities, 100⅜; 3½ per Cent. New Annuities, 102.

19. The sum of £3000 subscribed at Birmingham for public baths and walks.—Violent affray at Stapleford Park, between the agents of Lord Harborough and of the Midland Counties Railway.

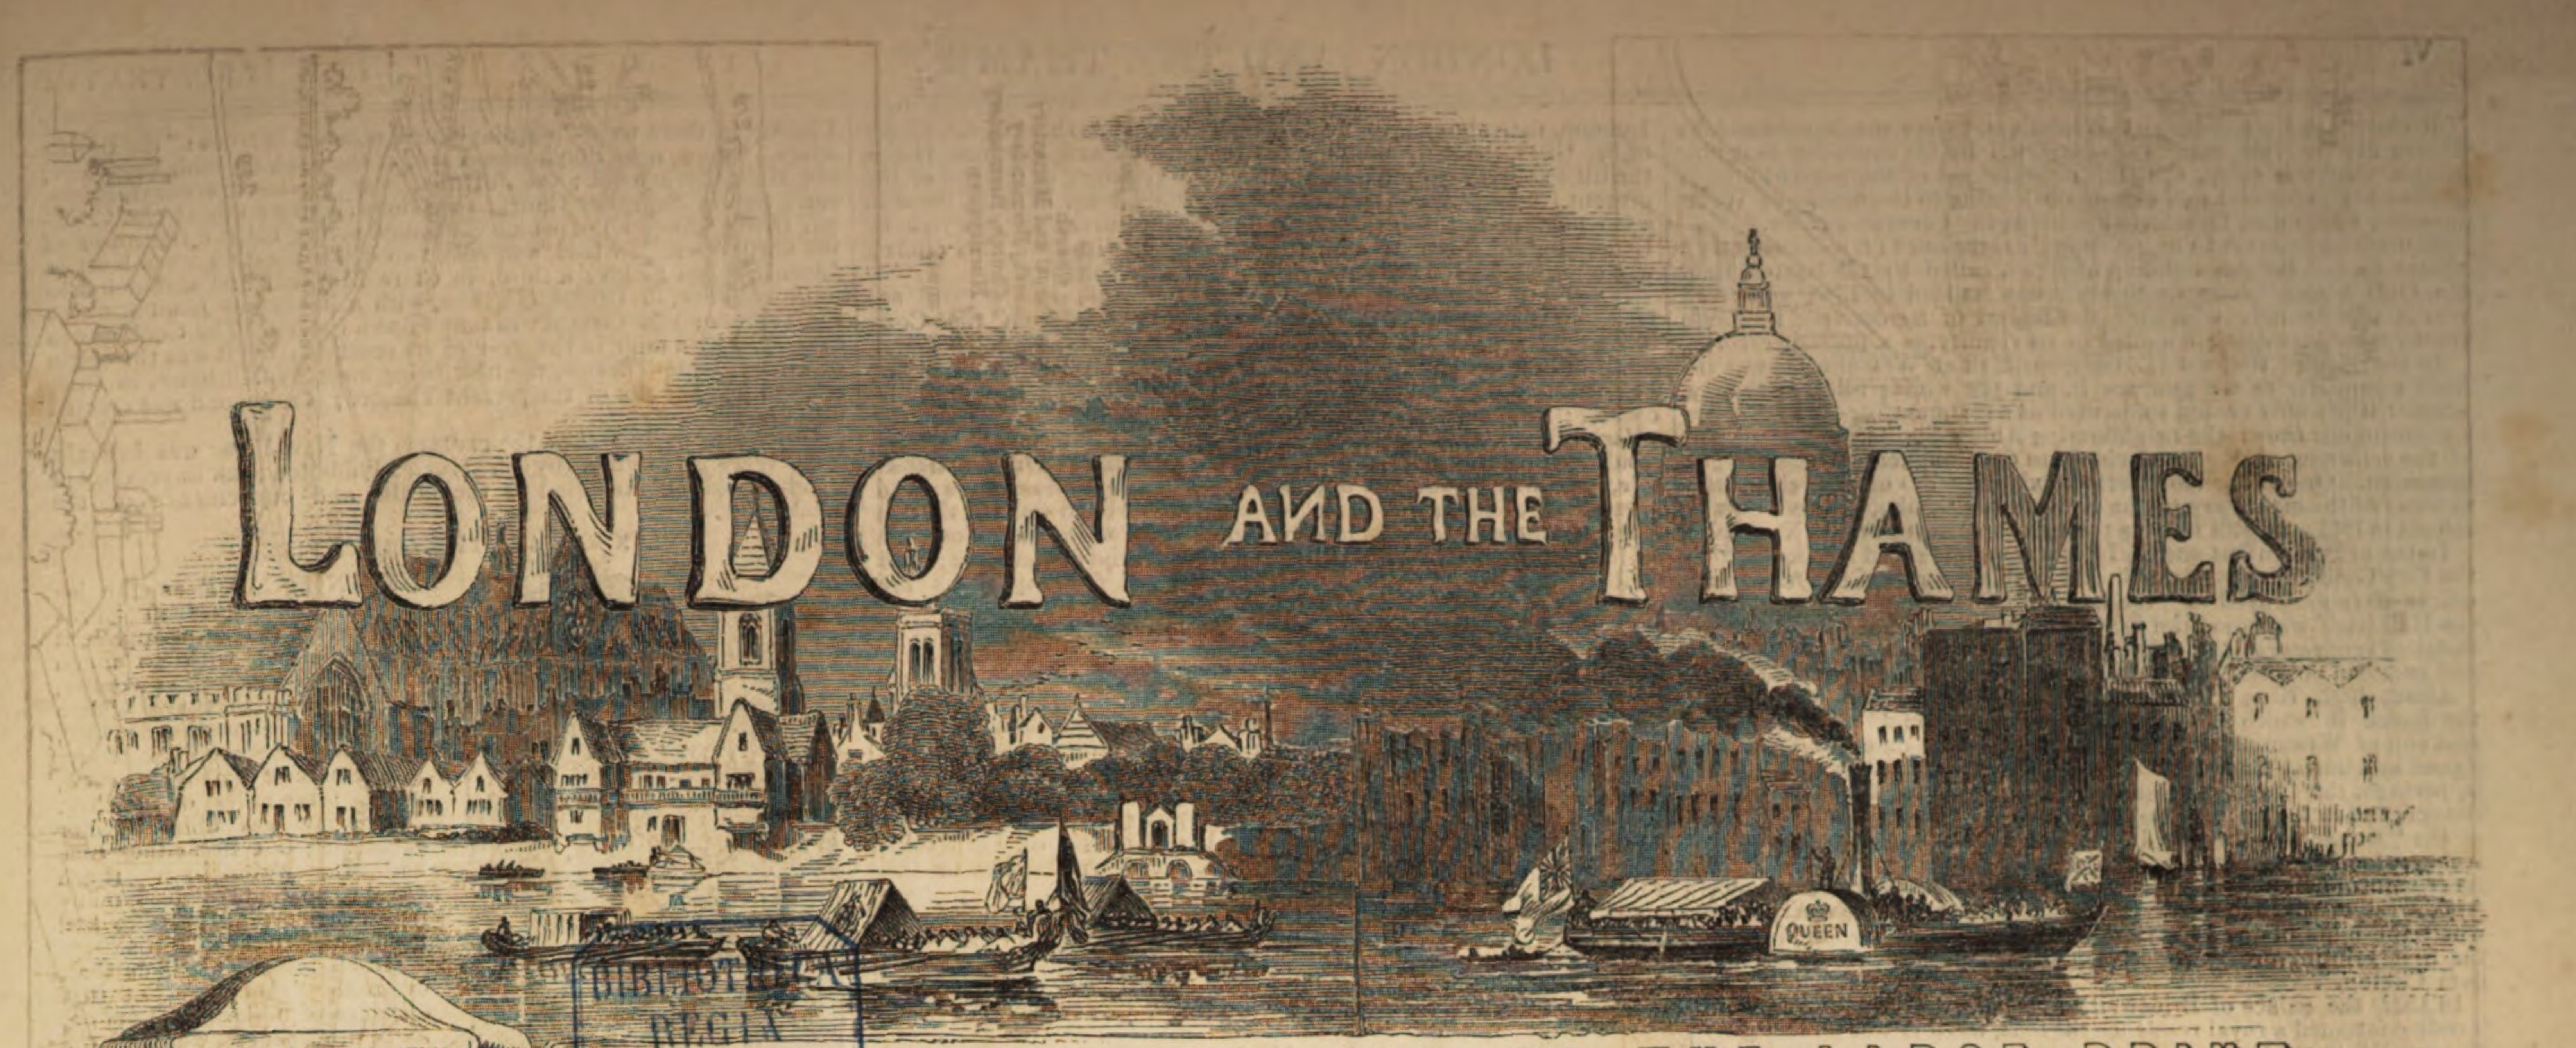
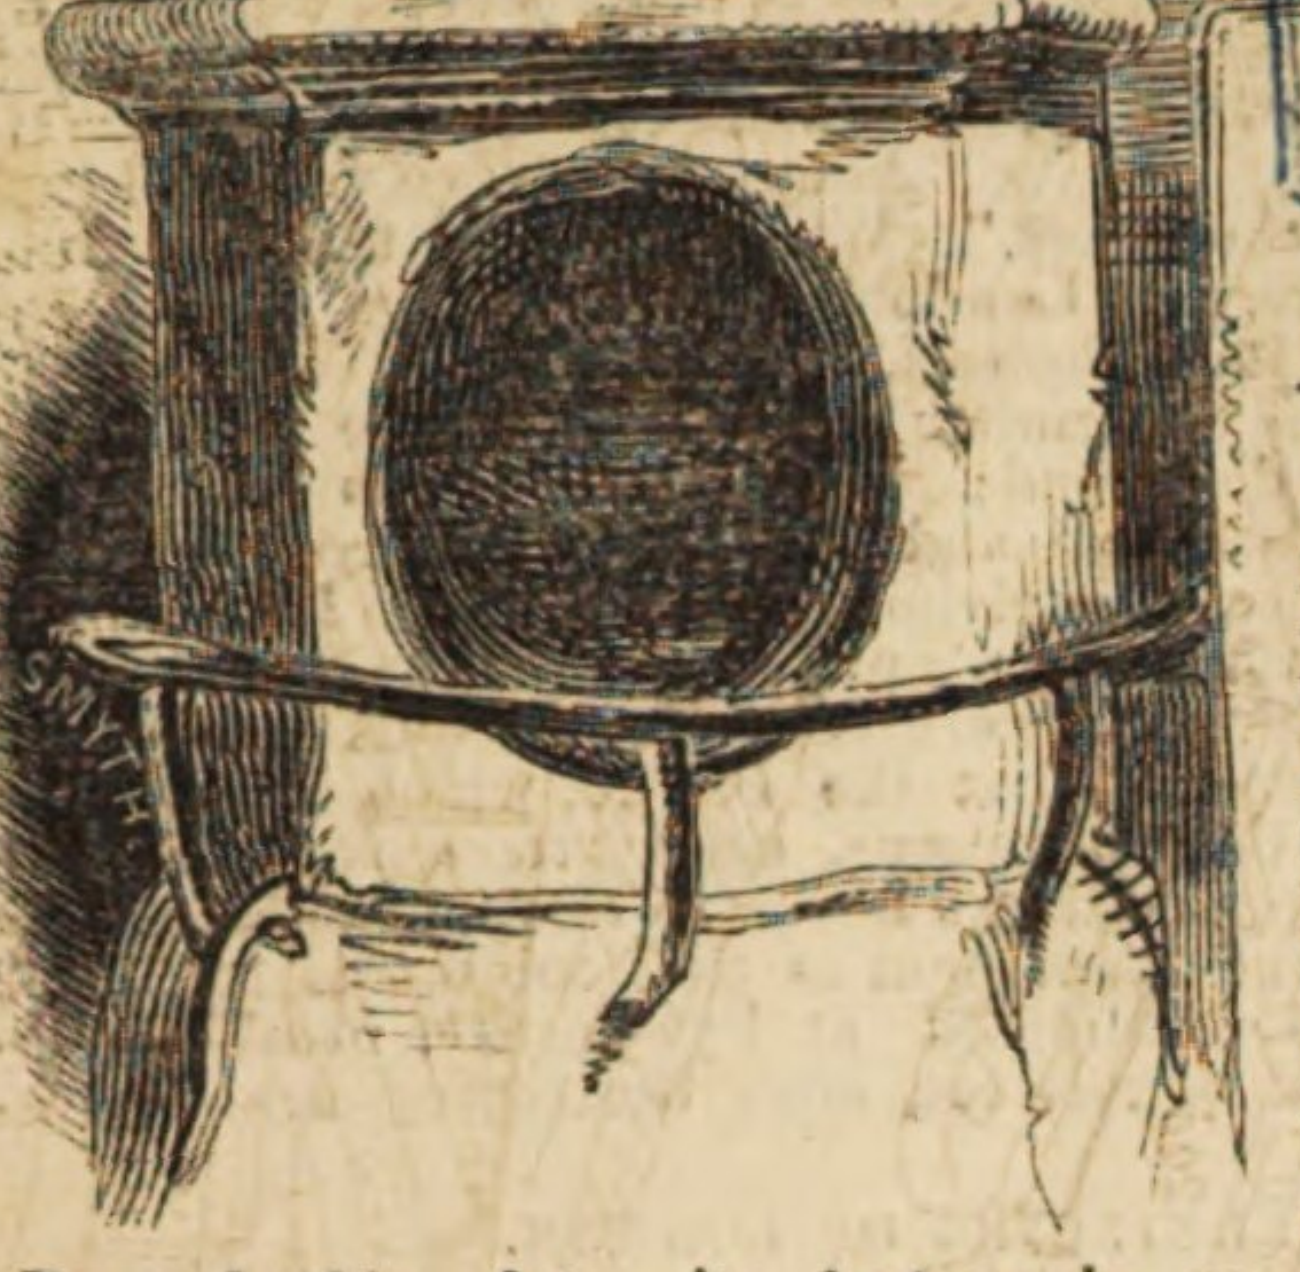
LONDON AND THE THAMES



BIBLIOTHECA REGIA MONACENSIS

A DESCRIPTIVE KEY TO THE LARGE PRINT,

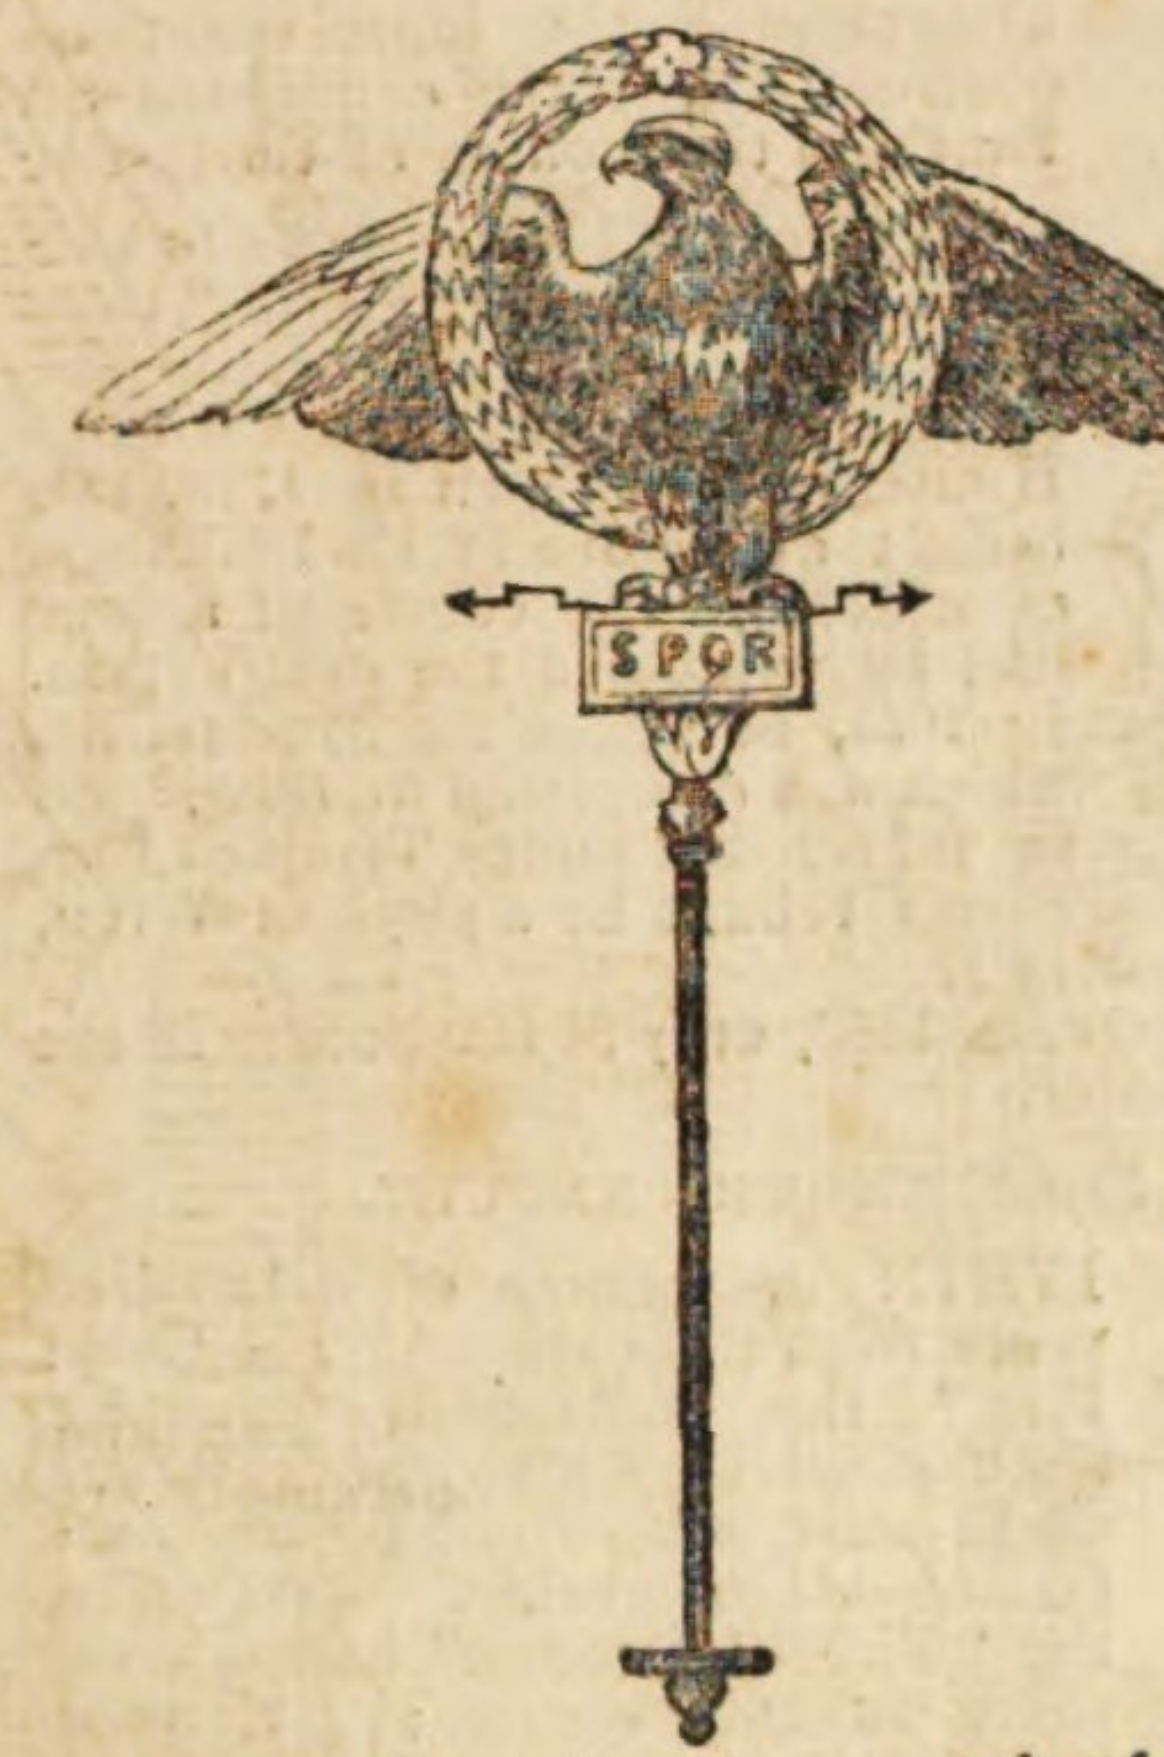
GIVEN WITH "THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS," JANUARY, 1845.



ORIGIN.

London, the capital of England, and the Metropolis of the British Empire, boasts antiquity second, perhaps, to no European capital except Constantinople and Rome. It is known to have existed as a town for nearly 2000 years. Beyond this date, its history is so interwoven with fable, that it would be loss of time to attempt to unravel its mingled yarn. The Chronicle of Geoffrey, of Monmouth,—that it was founded "by Dardanian hands," at command of King Brutus, and called Troynouvant, 2900 years ago,—is now regarded as a romance; notwithstanding, this Trojan speculation has found favour with Camden, "the nourrice of antiquitie." We need not go so far back as this; for nineteen centuries is a tolerable antiquity for a capital of modern Europe, and that antiquity may safely be assigned to London.

BRITISH AND ROMAN LONDON.



THE common error of attributing the founding of London to the Roman colonization has in all probability, arisen from the earliest mention of London by any extant writer of antiquity occurring in the pages of Tacitus, who did not compose his "Annals" till more than a century after the invasion of Britain by Julius Cæsar. Wherever the Roman conquers, he inhabits, says Seneca; but the interval between the first Roman invasion, 55 B.C., and the notice of London or Londinium, by Tacitus, in the year 62, would scarcely allow for the growth of its great importance: "not, indeed, dignified by the name of a colony," is the description of the historian, "but yet of the first distinction for abundance of resident merchants and of traffic with other places." "Both parts of this statement go equally to support the probability of London having been a town of British origin; if it had been founded by the Romans, it would, undoubtedly, have enjoyed the name of a colony; but, in that case, it could only have existed some seventeen or eighteen years at the utmost, for there certainly was no Roman colonization of Britain antecedent to the expedition of Claudius, nor, probably, till some years later; and it is scarcely to be supposed that it could have grown up to the magnitude and eminence it had now attained in so short a time;"* for the facts which Tacitus relates, testify both to the populousness of London at this early date, and to its special importance on every account.

The conjectures as to the meaning of the name, London, are far too numerous for us to quote. One of the most intelligent antiquaries of the day, Mr. A. J. Kempe, observes: "there is every reason to suppose that there was a settlement of some importance at London before the coming of the Romans. That name stamps on it a British origin, whether we read it Llyndin, the hill fortress on the lake, or Llong-dinas, the city of ships, from its maritime character. Although much may be said in favour of a name pointing to the broad expanse of waters,—which, probably, at every returning tide nearly surrounded the British settlement, and washed the bases of the Middlesex, Kentish, and Surrey rising grounds—we incline for the etymology received by the judicious Camden, Llong-dinas—simply because the Roman writers distinctly designate it *Lon*dinium."

It is doubted whether Cæsar ever saw London, as he does not mention it; but he only particularizes one British town, supposed to be Verulam; and London was not yet recognized as the capital of the country. At a later period of the Roman sway, it attained this importance, as is denoted by the chief Roman ways branching from its centre; where, according to Camden, the famous "London stone" was placed as the Milliarium, or Milestone, on the Guetheling or Watling-street: this grand way was, however, originally a British road, forest lane, or trackway, before the Romans arrived in England; and the discovery of early British remains on the line settles its origin. The Romans made it their grand route from the point of their invasion, through part of Kent, and the north-eastern corner of Surrey; thence by a ferry over the Thames, to Dowgate, north of the river, by the present Watling-street; and the Great North Road.

The London Stone, presumed to have been originally set up in the centre of the forum of Roman London, is the most ancient relic of the city, of which, in after ages, it seems to have been regarded as the Palladium. When Jack Cade, at the head of his rebel army, entered London, he struck his sword on this stone, saying: "now is Mortimer lord of this citie." This relic of 17 centuries since is now inserted in the wall of St. Swithin's church, Cannon-street, nearly in a line with Watling-street; and is engraved above.

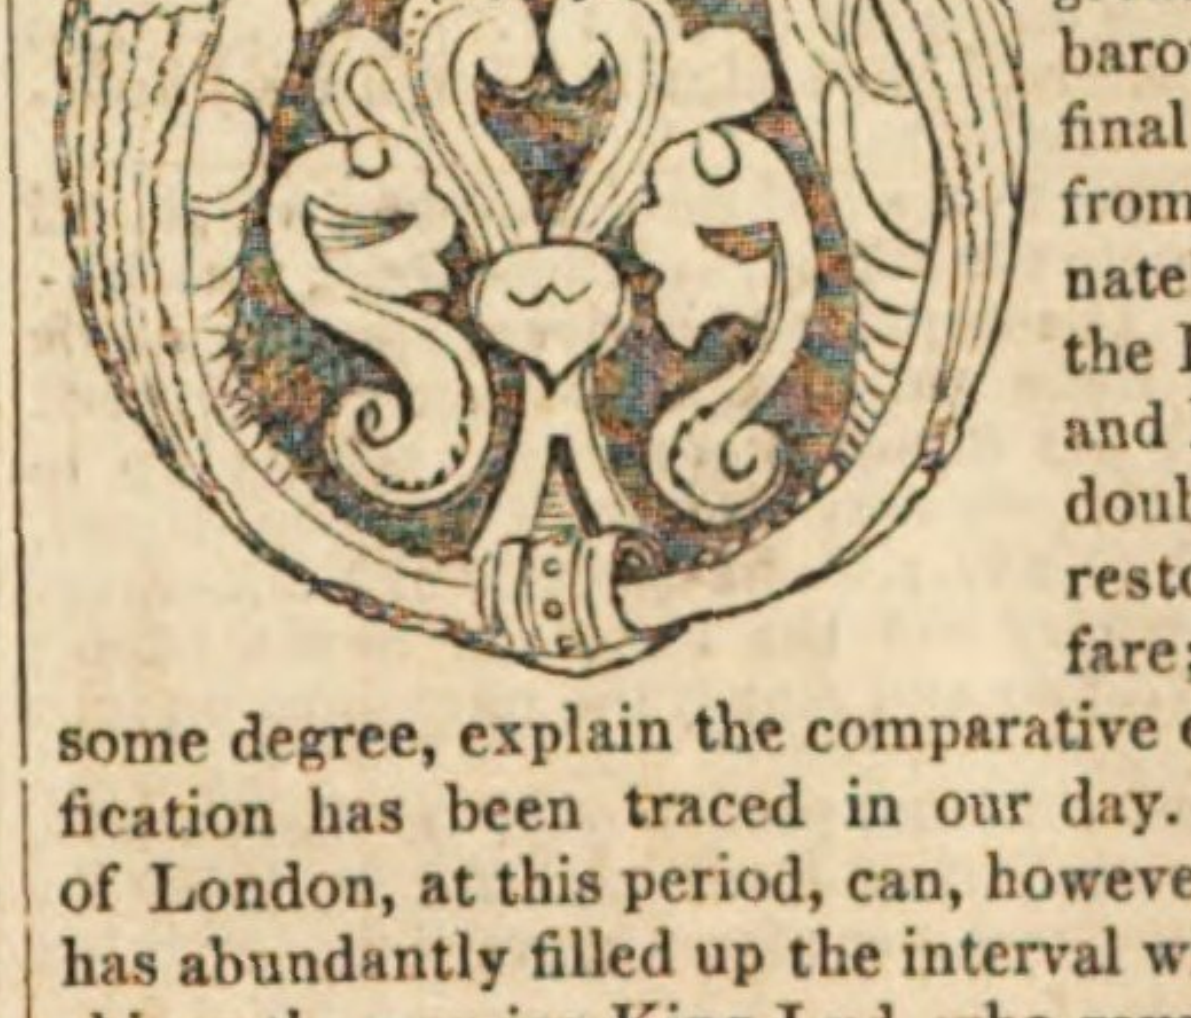
The London of the Britons could only have been a collection of huts set down on a dry spot in the midst of marshes, or in a cleared space within a wood, and encompassed by a mound and ditch; such being the general description of every British town of this period. On the highest ground of the City, about the site of St. Paul's, was, probably, a hill fort: thus London remained until Vespasian made it a Roman military station; and the Prætorium and its adjuncts have been traced, by walls and other vestiges, to have occupied the site of the Poultry and Cornhill. The great wall, of which there remain several fragments, was built by Theodosius, Governor of Britain, in the year 369; or, according to some, by Constantine: it began at a fort near the present site of the Tower, and continued along the Minories, to Cripplegate, Newgate, and Ludgate; inclosing an area of somewhat more than three miles in circumference. The natural boundaries were, on the west the Fleet and the Wall Brook; on the south, the Thames; on the north, the Lang Bourne, and a morass, beyond which lay an extensive forest, stretching also towards the eastern side of the city.

The Arx Palatina stood near the river Fleet; on its site, in ancient times, even before the Norman invasion, was built a royal palace, wherein King John subsequently held his court.

Passing to the Surrey side of the Thames, the Borough was the site of a Roman settlement, which the upturned remains prove to have risen to importance, at least, as early as the reign of Nero. Its intersection by the great military way, in later days, called the Ermine-street, also denotes this to have been a locality of importance in the Anglo-Roman times.

Thus far the London of the Britons, and of their conquerors: the latter we find recognized as the chief town of the Trinobantes, in the province of Britannia Prima; and as a colonia under the name of Augusta. Of its progressive prosperity are the following, among other records: in 211, it was styled "a great and wealthy city;" and in 359, there were engaged 800 vessels in the import and export of corn to and from Londinium alone.

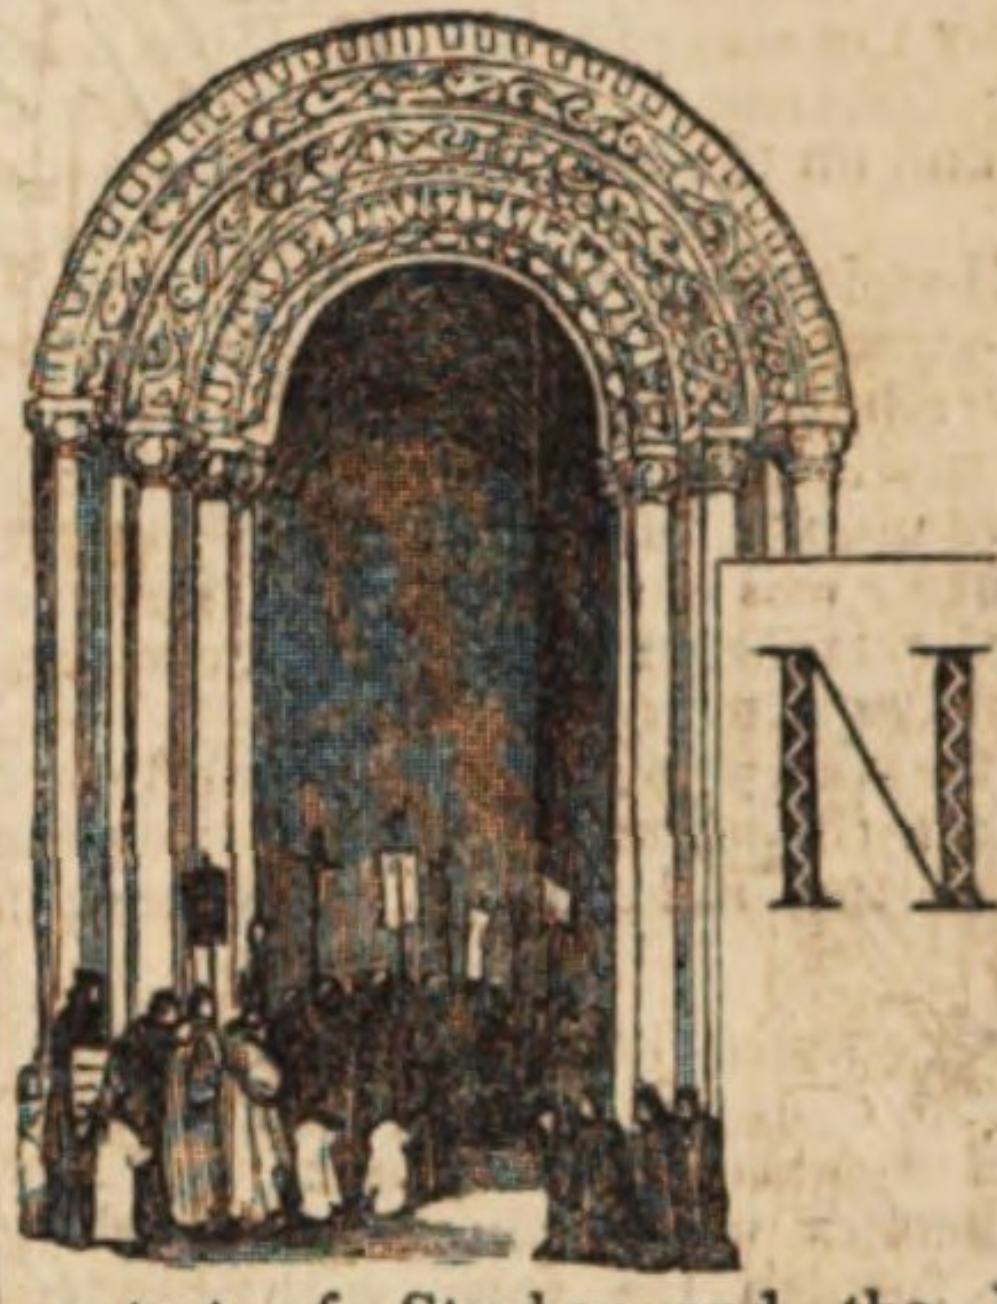
ANGLO-SAXON LONDON.



OF THE London of the Anglo-Saxon times, it would seem that we possess even less information than of the Roman city; but it must have greatly fallen off during the barbarous period that succeeded the final departure of the Romans from the island, when it was alternately attacked and ravaged by the Picts and Scots, by the Saxons and Danes. The great wall was, doubtless, by turns, destroyed and restored during this harassing warfare; which circumstance may, in some degree, explain the comparative entireness in which this fortification has been traced in our day. Little authentic information of London, at this period, can, however, be obtained; but tradition has abundantly filled up the interval with tale and legend; in these, shines the warrior King Lud, who gave name to one of the city gates. Early in the 7th century, London became a bishop's see; and Sebert, King of Essex, having been converted to Christianity, erected a cathedral church to St. Paul, and an abbey church to St. Peter, on the sites of the present cathedral, and West-minster; the latter a rude church of timber, or at best, rubble, reared on Thorney Island. But the memory of the city, at this date, has been preserved in a few sites and names, although the walled town itself could have been little more than an assemblage of hovels, intersected by miry land. It was on the banks of the river, and on the south side of the present cathedral, that the Saxon monarchs resided in a palace, erected, most probably, by Athelstan, whose name is retained in that of Adel or Addle Hill. This royal abode was forsaken by Edward the Confessor, who then removed to that which he had erected at Westminster; both the cathedral and the first mentioned building were burnt in 1087. "Edward the Confessor must, therefore, be regarded as the founder and father of Westminster, and whose palace we find standing, (one hall of which is now occupied as the House of Commons,) upon the spot once called Thorney Island: this insular position is, however, no longer apparent, the rivulet and moat surrounding it on three sides, having long ago become covered common sewers. On this spot, powerfully defended, St. Edward founded his celebrated Abbey, the church or minster of which gave name to the great city which, in process of time, grew up around it."—(Bardwell.)

London was, however, esteemed but as the second city by our Saxon monarchs, who viewed Winchester as the capital. A wittenagemot, or parliament, was held here in 883; and Alfred repaired and strengthened the city after its plunder by the Danes, when he also founded its municipal government. The attachment of the Confessor to Westminster, was, probably, the first step in the return towards the pre-eminence which, under the Romans, London unquestionably possessed; but the Conqueror was the first to recognize London as the Metropolis of the kingdom, which, immediately after the Conquest, began to have the title of "the King's Chamber."—(Camera Regia.) He gave the inhabitants a charter; and even under his stern rule, they enjoyed peace and prosperity.

ANGLO-NORMAN LONDON.



NOTWITHSTANDING the favour of William I., long after the Conquest, the King's palace and treasury remained at Winchester; but the extensive additions to the buildings at Westminster, and especially the erection of its magnificent Hall, seem to prove that Rufus contemplated the removal of the seat of government altogether to London. Beauclerc preferred Winchester as a residence; but "good Queen Maude" dwelt wholly at Westminster, and founded a priory at Aldgate, and hospitals at St. Giles's and Cripplegate. It was, however, to the contest of Stephen and the Empress Maude, in which Winchester was crushed, that London owed her re-establishment as the metropolis. She had long been the capital of Mercia, whose arms, the red cross, she bears; her facilities for commerce had already rendered her important; and the laws of Offa, King of Mercia, are, with great probability, said to be the basis of "the Customs of London." (See a cleverly written paper in the Athenæum, No. 723.)

To this age belongs the foundation of the Priory of St. Mary Overie; and of the massive White Tower (of London), built by William the Norman, in 1076; and further castellated, and surrounded with embattled walls and a moat in the reign of Rufus. The church and monastery at Westminster were rebuilt by Edward the Confessor, and were completed in 1065.

LONDON FROM THE 12TH TO THE 16TH CENTURIES.

FROM Fitz-stephen, the first (in time) of our metropolitan topographers, we gather that in the reign of Henry II., there were in London and the suburbs, 13 conventual churches, besides 126 lesser parish churches, though the majority were of wood.

To the palace at Westminster was next added St. Stephen's Chapel, built by the King of that name, and afterwards rebuilt by Edward I.; then burnt in the "vehement fire" of 1298; once more rebuilt in the reigns of Edward II. and III., and completed in that of the latter, about 1363, in the Pointed, or "Pure Gothic" style; the walls being painted in a style which prove the decorative art to have been in a high state of development, even in those "dark ages." In the reign of Edward VI., when the chapel was fitted up for the Commons, these paintings were wainscotted up; they were discovered in 1800; but the structure was almost reduced to a picturesque ruin in the great fire of 1834. The most beautiful architectural addition which London received in the reign of Edward III. was the Chapel of St. Stephen, already referred to.

Houses, by a law of Richard I. were built of stone, for defence from fire; but, in two centuries, to gain ground, many stone houses were taken down, and others of timber erected in their place; and it is distinctly stated that London, before the Great Fire, was chiefly built with chestnut.

Of public buildings there were scarcely any besides religious houses and hospitals, both which were very numerous prior to the Reformation: of several of them, the names are retained to the present day, viz. Black Friars, White Friars, Crutched Friars, Chartreux, (the Charter-house); Priories—St. John of Jerusalem, Clerkenwell, St. John's Gate; St. Bartholomew the Great; St. Mary Overie, Southwark; Nunneries—St. Helen's, Bishopsgate-street; and Holywell, in Holywell-lane, Shoreditch: Hospitals—St. Giles's, St. James's, (the Palace), St. Katherine's, and St. Thomas's. The few residences of note were scattered about, and mingled with the meanest habitations: the finest existing specimen is Crosby House, in Bishopsgate, built in 1470, a portion of which has lately been restored.

* Knight's London, vol. I. page 150; Roman London, by Mr. Craik, one of the best written papers in that very unequal work.

The church and monastery at Westminster were much enlarged by Henry III., and the latter was completed by his successor as it now stands. In this reign, too (1222) the largest of our present metropolitan market-places was a garden belonging to the monks of Westminster, which was, therefore, known as the Convent-garden.

Shoreditch deserves to be incidentally mentioned: it was anciently a village on the Roman military highway, called by the Saxons Eald (i.e. Old) Street. John de Sordich was its lord in 1343, and from him it was named; wherefore the legend of its deriving its name from Jane Shore dying in a ditch in its vicinity, is a popular error.

In the reign of Richard II., the great Hall at Westminster was rebuilt essentially as we now see it, and the wonderful roof thrown across: it has only ceased to be used as a banquetting-hall for coronations in our time; the neighbouring Abbey having been the place of the crowning of our monarchs from the Conqueror to the present sovereign. One of the most perfect existing relics of this reign is the gateway of the monastery of the Knights of St. John, at Clerkenwell, rebuilt in 1381, and still bearing the rich escocheons of the Knights.

In the next reign but one, in 1411, was commenced the building of the City Guildhall, at the north end of King-street, Cheapside: the offices were destroyed in "the Great Fire," but the massive walls of the Hall itself withstood the flames, though only to be patched up by tasteless renovators: the original Hall, with its pointed oaken roof, and enriched porches, was, indeed a magnificent edifice.

About 1502, King Henry VII. began,—almost upon the site of the house in which Chaucer lived,—the splendid chapel at the east end of Westminster Abbey, which bears his name, and was designed as a burial-place for the royal founder and his posterity. It is, perhaps, the finest specimen of Florid Gothic architecture in existence, and in the quaint exaggeration of a past age was termed one of the "wonders of the world." About this time, not far from the Abbey, stood the Sanctuary, (the place of refuge for criminals,) and its cruciform church, supposed to have been built by the Confessor. And, west of the Sanctuary was the Eleemosynary, or Almonry, where the alms of the Abbey were distributed; and where, in 1474, the first printing-press ever known in England, was set up by William Caxton.

In 1522, the palace of Bridewell was rebuilt by Henry VIII.; but it only continued a royal residence till 1553, when it was given up by Edward VI. to the City. Within the palace was a well, dedicated to St. Bridget, or St. Bride, which gave its name to the precinct, the parish, and the church.

Of the actual appearance and condition of the metropolis, we learn little until we come down to times comparatively recent. We may, however, picture to ourselves what London must have been in the first half of the 16th century, when the act for improving and paving the City passed in 1532, describes the streets as "very foul and full of pits and sloughs, very perilous and noyous as well for all the king's subjects, on horseback as on foot, with carriages;" and the narrow crooked streets, gloomy by day, were left in total darkness at night. The houses were mostly built of plaster and timber, and covered with thatched roofs, each story overhanging that immediately beneath it. Hence, from the denseness of the buildings, the combustibility of their materials, and the insufficient supply of water, fires were rendered as destructive as is still the case at Constantinople.

From a very scarce map in the Guildhall Library, of the time of Henry VIII. or Edward VI., we find the metropolis to have then extended from east to west about 3 miles, and from north to south about 2 miles. Among places marked in this map, which do not appear in other maps, even of later date, are "the Spital Fyeld," seemingly used by archers; "Fynsburie Fyeld," with "Dogges' House," for citizens to hunt in; "More Fyeld," with marks as if used by clothiers; "the Banck," by the side of the river; "the Bolle Bayting Theatre, (near the Beare Batynge House,) Black Fryers," near to where the Bridge now is; and on the opposite are houses and trees named "Paris Garden."

In 1552, was founded Christ's Hospital, on the site of a convent of Grey Friars, north of Newgate-street; the buildings were mostly destroyed in the Great Fire of 1666; but were soon rebuilt.

Smith*field*, noted for its horse market and fair from the twelfth century, was also the scene of tournaments, theatrical performances, and martyrdoms: the site of the latter was in the centre of the area. The chivalric association of the locality is preserved in Giltspur-street, through which the knights rode to the tourney.

Between London and Westminster was principally fields and open grounds, and was not paved further than from Temple Bar to the Savoy, till the reign of Elizabeth, on the building of Cecil House in the Strand.

Stow tells us that "within the compass of one age, Somerset House and the buildings were called country-houses; and the open places about them were employed in gardens for profit; and also many parts within the City and liberties, were occupied by working gardeners, and were sufficient to furnish the town with garden-ware."

ELIZABETHAN LONDON.

WHEN Aggas drew his map of London, in 1560, Finsbury and Holborn, St. Giles's and St. Martin's, were scattered villages. Westminster was not only a distinct but a distant city. A long dreary road led through Ludgate to the village of Charing, where one of Queen Eleanor's crosses, (now supplanted by Le Soeur's fine statue of Charles I.) pointed the way to the palaces of Whitehall and Westminster. Beyond this Cross, all was open field and garden. Hedge-lane, (now Whitcombe-street) and the Haymarket are marked as the roads to Oxenforde and Redynge. On the top of Hay Hill, stood the gibbet of Sir Thomas Wyatt. In Marybone, (now the Regent's Park), Queen Elizabeth sent her Russian ambassadors to hunt. The venerable Abbey of Westminster was surrounded, on three sides, by a creek. The adjacent palace of Edward the Confessor, with Rufus's Hall, which alone remains, then covered both the "Palace-yards," and extended as far as Whitehall, where it joined the precincts of York House: where Henry VIII. kept his court, after the disgrace of Wolsey. St. James's Hospital, till then under the jurisdiction of Eton College, was seized by Henry, who converted it to a palace, and inclosed the Park, which was afterwards planted by Charles II. About the same time, Hyde Park became the property of the Crown, it being part of the ancient manor of Hida, which belonged to the monastery of St. Peter's, Westminster.

The Palace at Westminster, which had been the residence of our Monarchs from Edward the Confessor, was now forsaken for St. James's; and its ancient buildings were, from time to time, demolished. The chamber in which the Confessor died, has, however, been spared, and is that now occupied as the House of Lords. It may be added that Westminster is known to have been a royal residence since the reign of Canute.

In the reign of Elizabeth, the royal palaces occupied the whole of the east side of the street of Whitehall, and that part on the west where the Horse Guards and the Home Office and Treasury now stand. King-street, the only thoroughfare, was guarded by a gate; and another, of nobler dimensions, designed by Holbein, stood in the midst of Whitehall, and formed the principal entrance to the palace. In the next reign was commenced the magnificent palace, designed by Inigo Jones to have comprised six distinct courts; but the beautiful Banquetting-room alone was completed.

Although Holinshed admits that, in his time, London had a very mean appearance in comparison with most foreign cities—during the sixteenth century, it greatly extended itself westward, along the north bank of the river, where many of the nobility erected "fayre and statelie" mansions; of these, Northumberland House is the only one remaining; although the names of several of the others are still retained in the streets opening into the Strand. Even Exeter 'Change, which occupied the site of Exeter House, originally built by the great Lord Burghley, has, in its turn, disappeared. Eastward, on the river-side, were the ancient Savoy, by turns a palace, hospital, and prison; the palace of the proud Duke of Somerset, then just built; the Temple, with its famed Round Church; Dorset-street, where Shakspeare had a theatre; Baynard's Castle, then in waning magnificence; Queenhithe, a Saxon harbour; and Billingsgate, its successor; and the first Custom House, built by Elizabeth.

Still, greatly as the metropolis had increased in extent in the reign of Elizabeth, the map of it at that period shows it to have been a mere dwarf in comparison with its present gigantic dimensions: all to the north and west of the Strand was open fields and country; St. Martin's Lane was a fine leafy avenue, and Covent Garden, "fields, with some thatched houses, stables, and such like." In Vertue's Plan of London, date about 1560, the last houses seen are those of the village of St. Giles, the only building between which and Primrose Hill is the little solitary church of Tybourn (Marylebone), at the end of the present High-street. The first church, taken down in 1400, stood in a bye place near the highway, on or near the corner of Marylebone Lane, in Oxford-street; and, from its lonely situation, this church was often plundered of its images, bells, and ornaments.

Nearly all the south bank of the river, too, had a rural aspect. Bermondsey had its monastery, famous from the Conquest, when hogs were kept in its woodland. There, too, was the fine cathedral-like church of St. Mary Overie, although the Priory was dissolved; next were the palace of the Bishop of Winchester; Bankside, with its numerous playhouses and circi; and the village of Lambeth, where the Archbishops of Canterbury had then resided in palatial style, for nearly four centuries. On the Bankside, too, was Beaumont and Fletcher's house; Shakspeare lived here as late as 1609; and in the same neighbourhood was the theatre where an audience saw Shakspeare nightly tread the stage. Nor must we forget Southwark, with its "fair inns for receipt of travellers;" not omitting the Tabard, where Chaucer and his fellow-pilgrims lay in 1383.

The site and date of the first theatre are very doubtful; but, early in the reign of Elizabeth, the Curtain, near Shoreditch; the Red Bull, St. John-street, Clerkenwell; and the Globe, Bankside; were all flourishing. Rymer, in his Fœder, relates, that in the sixty years preceding 1629, no fewer than seventeen "common playhouses" were built in and near London; besides inns turned into playhouses, one cockpit, St. Paul's singing-school; the Fortune, near Golden-lane, built in 1599; one in White Friars, &c. The Swan and the Rose were two very early Southwark theatres; and Taylor, the water-poet, tells us that about the year 1596, the players began to play on the Bankside. There were also, about this time, six other theatres on the Middlesex side of the Thames.

The building of the first Exchange upon the site of the Roman Prætorium, was accomplished by Sir Thomas Gresham, in the reign of Elizabeth, who conferred upon the edifice the dignity of "Royal."

LONDON IN THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY.

BY A MAP published early in the reign of James I., may be seen how much of that which is now the heart of the town was then field and garden. Then, as now, the most crowded part of the City extended from Newgate-street, Cheapside, and Cornhill, to the banks of the Thames. With the exception of Coleman-street, and a few buildings here and there, from Lothbury to Bishopsgate, and from Bishopsgate to the Tower, all was uncovered or garden ground. Goodman's Fields were but inclosed pasture-grounds; and there were very few buildings east of the Tower. Whitechapel, the eastern outlet of London, consisted of a few houses only; and Houndsditch, which contained a single row of houses, opposite to the City Wall, opened behind into the fields. Spitalfields was then a hamlet. From Bishopsgate Without to Shoreditch Church, there existed a tolerably regular street, yet, still with unoccupied sites intervening. At the back of the western side of Bishopsgate Within, in Old Broad-street, were Gresham College and Almshouses, now the site of the Excise Office. Still further west, Moorfields was nearly all unbuilt; if we except Bethlem Hospital, rebuilt from the Tuileries at Paris, and not pulled down until 1814; the original hospital being a priory founded in the 13th century, on the east side of the Moor. Southward of Moorfields ran the great City Wall, taken down in 1814; but its name is retained in the street known as "London Wall." From the upper end of Chiswell-street to Whitecross-street, there were very few houses; and Goswell-street was called the road to St. Alban's. Cripplegate, the northernmost of the City Wards, is as old as the Conquest, and part of the City Wall, with a bastion, may be traced in the churchyard. A street westward is named Barbican, (Arabic, watch-tower), which was the advanced post of Cripplegate.

Clerkenwell was still chiefly occupied by the monastery and church.

Gray's Inn Lane then extended but just beyond Gray's Inn, demised by the Grays of Wilton, in the reign of Edward III., to students-at-law. Then, indeed, St. Giles's was literally in the fields, there being no houses beyond Red Lion-street, Holborn. The latter was anciently a village called Old-bourne, being built upon the side of a brook, or bourne, of that name, which sprang up near Middle Row, and flowed down the Hill till it fell into the river Wells at Holborn-bridge. Along the rivulet, the village gradually extended itself westward, and gave name to this long and spacious street. Ely Place, on Holborn Hill, was, at this period, the site of the palace of the Bishops of Ely, with 40 acres of orchard and pasture land: the western corner was granted to Sir Christopher Hatton and is now the site of the street —Hatton Garden.

Passing from the City to the north-western suburb, we find the latter becoming the site of some truly magnificent specimens of domestic architecture. Lincoln's Inn, built by Henry Lacey, Earl of Lincoln, upon the site of a palace of the Bishop of Chichester and a monastery of Blackfriars, had passed to the ancient society of Lincoln's Inn, for whom Inigo Jones had built a handsome chapel. The same architect also commenced at Lincoln's Inn Fields the erection of that class of houses, and in that disposition, which gave such novel features to London; and forms, to this day, in the different squares, one of its principal charms. Early in the reign of Charles I., Jones was employed by the Earl of Bedford to improve his newly-acquired property of Covent Garden and Seven Acres, called, from its shape, Long Acre. At Covent Garden, a space was cleared, 500 feet long by 400 broad, around which were commenced stately buildings with arcades, after the Italian manner, with a church in the form of a Vitruvian Tuscan temple, on the western side. The north, and a part of the east sides only were erected by Jones: if completed, this Piazza, or Place, would have been one of the finest squares in Europe: "the proportions of the arcades and piers crossed with elliptical and semicircular arches into groins, are," says Elmes, "exquisitely beautiful, and are masterpieces of architecture."

The remainder of Covent Garden was laid out in streets, which still bear in their names a reference to the period, as King-street, Charles-street, and Henrietta-street. The impulse thus given, spread: noble mansions shot up in Drury Lane and in Queen-street, of fine red brick, in Jones's manner. Of the minor streets that sprung up in this locality, in the same century, we may mention Catherine-street, named from the queen of Charles II.; Duke-street and York-street from his brother; also Bloomsbury and the streets of Seven Dials; and, lastly, in the reigns of William and Anne, the remaining unbuilt sides of Covent Garden.

At the bottom of the present Southampton-street, in the Strand, was the family mansion of John, Earl of Bedford, built in 1552, "a mean wooden building, shut up from the street by an ordinary brick wall;" it was pulled down in 1704.

Proceeding westward, Spring Gardens were what the name imports, and the gardens extended to the present Treasury, which occupies the space of the Cock-pit and Tilt-yard, appertaining to the old Palace of Whitehall. From thence to the Abbey and Palace Yard, the buildings were close and connected; and there were houses west of the Great Hall, on the Thames bank, opposite Lambeth Palace: this spot having been for centuries the seat of the Court and of the Legislature, would, naturally, be thickly peopled at an early period.

In 1642, was, in part, completed the fine western outlet, Piccadilly, named from a house of entertainment called Pickadilly; a little east of which stood the country-house of Lord Keeper Coventry (now the site of Coventry-street); and further on, the mansion of Sydney —Earl—of Leicester, upon the sites now occupied by the Passage, Court, and Square, which retain these names. The first mansion built in Piccadilly was Goring House, on the site of Arlington-street; nearly opposite, about 1688, rose Clarendon House and Berkeley House; and, eastward, Burlington House, built by Sir John Denham, and refronted by the celebrated amateur architect, the Earl of Burlington. This negatives the hackneyed story of Lord Burlington choosing the site of his mansion so far out of town that no one would build beyond him. Immediately to the east, were the house and gardens of the Earl of Sunderland, the treacherous minister of James II.: the site is now occupied by the Albany, built by Sir William Chambers, for Lord Melbourne, who exchanged it with the late Duke of York and Albany, for the present Melbourne House, in Whitehall.

The theatres of this century may be noticed here. In the reign of Charles I., there were "six playhouses allowed in town:" the Blackfriars Theatre, near Playhouse Yard, at the back of Ludgate-street; the Bull, Clerkenwell; the Fortune, near Whitecross-street, Barbican; one in Salisbury Court; the Globe; and a sixth at the Cockpit, Drury Lane; all of which continued acting till the beginning of the Civil Wars. In 1662, and 1695, two other theatres were built in Lincoln's Inn Fields; a third, in Clare Market; and a fourth was built by Wren, in Dorset Gardens, with a handsome front towards the Thames; this theatre was taken down in 1709. The Cockpit was destroyed by a mob in the year of its erection; but it was the origin of Drury Lane Theatre, the first being built by Killigrew, in 1660, nearly upon the site of the present Theatre; the second was erected in 1674.

During the early part of the century, the New River was brought from Ware to London, by Sir Hugh Myddelton; an improvement which greatly contributed to the health and convenience of the inhabitants.

LONDON, AT "THE GREAT FIRE."

INSIGNIFICANT as the increase of buildings in Elizabeth's reign may now appear, it was regarded with so much apprehension as well as wonder, at the time, that the Queen issued a proclamation in 1580, forbidding the erection of any but houses of the highest class, within three miles of the City. The same was done by her successor; but in neither case had the prohibition much effect; so that, by 1666, many new districts and parishes had been added to the suburbs.

Howel quaintly tells us that, in 1650, "there was not that elegance of building in London, as in other places, nor were the streets so straight and lightsome, by reason that the houses paunched out, and their stories hung one over the other." We glean from the Rev. John Ward's Diary of this date, that London then stood upon 460 acres of ground, and contained 150,000 houses.

By the Great Fire of September 2, 1666, almost the whole city, within the walls, was destroyed: including upwards of 13,000 houses, and St Paul's Cathedral and its walls, which covered three acres. "Heaven be praised," exclaims Malcolm, "Old London was burnt!" for, although neither Wren's nor Evelyn's plan for rebuilding the city was adopted, such were the improvements introduced in its comfort and cleanliness, that the Plague, which in the preceding year, carried off 160,000 persons, never afterwards appeared.

"The Great Fire" commenced at a house in Pudding-lane, exactly the same distance from the Monument as that column is high—202 feet. The conflagration terminated at Pye-corner, nearly opposite the Compter, in Giltspur-street, after destroying nearly five-sixths of the whole city.

THE REBUILDING OF LONDON.

ALTHOUGH the art of brick-making was among the benefits introduced into Britain by the Romans, bricks were not generally used in London until after "The Great Fire:" there are, however, some fine specimens, of prior date; as, the piers of Lincoln's Inn gate, and the chapel by Inigo Jones.

In the great re-edification, Wren built no fewer than 52 churches, besides St. Paul's Cathedral, the Monument, and several public offices and private mansions. Notwithstanding the most vexatious obstructions, Wren completed St. Paul's in the course of thirty-five years from the laying of the foundation-stone; this being the third church raised upon the same site. In 1668, Wren built the Custom-House, burned down in 1718, this being the only one of his buildings, of which, in the course of a long life, he witnessed the destruction. In 1671, he began the Monument, which was completed in 1677; and in 1671-2 he built Temple Bar. In 1667-9, the Royal Exchange was rebuilt by a pupil of Wren, the first stone being laid by Charles II.

According to Stow, there were, in 1682, only 84,000 houses in the City, Southwark, and Westminster.

LONDON IN THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY.

WITHIN the course of a hundred years from the date of "The Great Fire," the metropolis extended itself considerably to the west and north-west, where it became more fashionable to reside. Doubtless, the "Fire of London" had a great share in this change; for, their mansions in the City having been destroyed by it, the nobility removed from the seat of bustle and traffic much earlier than they otherwise would. "Time was," says a contemporary, "when all the first nobility in England had their town houses in Aldersgate-street, and other (then) fashionable quarters of the old City; and some of the very highest quality, indeed, had grand mansions out of town in the Strand."

In 1700, Old Bond-street was in situation, almost rural, all to the north being fields, lanes, and uncovered ground; and many mansions, which are now surrounded with buildings and streets, for a considerable distance, then stood, if not quite solitary, with only a few straggling houses in their neighbourhood. Such was the case with Montague House, now the British Museum, in Great Russell-street, the gardens of which were noted almost down to our day.

At the beginning of this century, Mary-le-bone, or Marybone, was a village nearly a mile distant from any part of the metropolis, with which, however, St. Giles's and St. Martin's began to be incorporated. Marylebone long retained its fame as a place of recreation; hence, the line, "Some dukes at Marybone bowl time away." The manor was anciently called Tybourne, from its situation near a small bourne, or rivulet, formerly Aye-brook, or Eye-brook.

Inigo Jones may be regarded as the true founder of the modern domestic architecture of the metropolis. It was not till after he had laid out Lincoln's Inn Square and Covent Garden, and built the palatial mansions that adorned both, that Soho Square and Golden Square arose: the former was originally called King's Square, and on one side of it stood the house of the Duke of Monmouth, after whose execution his friends changed this royal name to "Soho," the watchword with which he advanced to the fatal battle of Sedgemoor.

Hanover Square and Cavendish Square first appear in the maps about 1720; Oxford-street (then Tyburn Road,) extended no further than Princes-street; and Bond-street scarcely reached to Conduit-street. Trinity Chapel, which stands in this street, has a curious history: it was originally a Popish chapel of wood mounted on wheels, and followed the camp of James II. to Hounslow Heath, where it remained neglected long after the Revolution; till Archbishop Tennison, then rector of St. Martin's, brought it back to its original position, and rebuilt it of more durable materials.

During the reign of Queen Anne, 50 new churches were ordered to be built in and about London; and St Paul's cathedral was completed. There were also built, by Wren, Arlington, (afterwards Buckingham) House, St. James's Park; and Marlborough House, in Pall Mall, which street was scarcely then commenced. In this reign, Clerkenwell, Old-street, and Shoreditch, were much increased; Marlborough-street, Soho, was formed; as also Bedford Row, Red Lion Square, and the greater part of the neighbourhood immediately north of Holborn.

During the reign of George I., London was greatly enlarged. In 1718, were laid out several streets north of Tybourn-road, the row of houses in which was finished in 1792, when it was called Oxford-street. Berkeley-square and the vicinity were now in progress, as also a few of the 50 new churches.

Early in this century, were built three of the finest churches in the metropolis: St. George, Bloomsbury, by Hawksmoor, in 1731; St. George, Hanover-square, in 1721; and St. Martin-in-the-Fields, by Gibbs, in 1721-26. Each of these churches has a beautiful Corinthian portico; and that in Bloomsbury has also a Palladian campanile and steeple. In 1714-18, was built St. Mary-le-Strand, by Gibbs; who, about 1719, added a picturesque tower and steeple to St. Clement Danes, in the Strand, the body of which was built by Wren. St. Dunstan-in-the-West, in Fleet-street, was built long before "the Great Fire" of 1666, which it narrowly escaped: it was taken down in 1830, and the present Gothic church erected nearly on its site. Only two other churches of this period, merit notice: St. Peter-le-Poor, Old Broad-street (1791), and St. Martin Outwich (1796), Threadneedle-street.

In 1705, was built the first "Italian Opera-house," in the Haymarket, by Sir John Vanbrugh; in 1789, this theatre was destroyed by fire, and in 1790, the present theatre was in part built by Novosielski, and completed by Nash and Repton, in 1818: it is a fine specimen of Italian architecture, and is the largest theatre in Europe, except that of La Scala, at Milan. In 1720, was built the first "Haymarket Theatre," where, in 1744, Foote first appeared: this house was taken down in 1820, when the present elegant theatre was erected from the designs of Nash.

In detailing the increase of western London, we have, however, overlooked the improvements in the City itself. In this and the latter half of the preceding century, were built most of the Companies' Halls, which, however, are more to be admired for the richness of their interior decoration than for any high architectural merit: several of them contain exquisite specimens of sculpture in wood and stone, enriched ceilings, painted walls, &c. Ironmongers' Hall, Fenchurch-street, begun in 1748, is far superior in external appearance to any other of the City Companies' halls then erected. Bridewell Hospital was rebuilt in 1668, the old palace having been destroyed in "the Great Fire:" the hospital contains a hall, chapel, prison. &c.; the front, in New Bridge-street, is of much later date. In 1739, was founded the Mansion House, designed by Dance, and occupying the site of Stocks Market: it is, in effect, a massive Italian palace, with a very fine Corinthian portico, enriched with sculpture. In 1769, the Excise Office was built upon the site of Gresham College. In 1770-82, the prison of Newgate was built by Dance; in 1780, it was gutted by the "No-Popery" incendiaries; in 1783, the execution of criminals that had previously taken place at Tyburn, was removed to the spot in front of the prison. It was named from New*gate*, built later than the other city gates, used as a gaol for felons as early as 1218; and for debtors until the year 1815. In 1789, was founded the Bank of England, a structure of no striking merit, until picturesquely embellished about forty years later. In 1799, was enlarged and fronted as it now stands, India House, by Jupp, in Leadenhall-street; the main features being a hexastyle Ionic portico, sculptured frieze and pediment: the original building was erected in 1726.

Here we may notice some of the principal changes in the metropolis during the eighteenth century—or rather the great features of change within that period, though chiefly within its latter half, inimitably depicted by Hogarth.

About 1711, the streets were first lighted with glass globular lamps; parish engines and party walls were introduced to prevent the spread of fires: and the "watch and ward" of the City was improved: the costume of the watchmen. by the way, which lasted to our time, was as old as the fourteenth century, and they carried halberds instead of staves, so late as the year 1706.

In 1713, Sir Christopher Wren extended the west front of Westminster Abbey, and carried up the towers, though in a very incongruous style.

The Fleet River, at this time, had wharves on either side for landing goods from the barges, which came up as far as Holborn-bridge: about the year 1733, the arching over of the channel of the Fleet was commenced, and subsequently was extended to the Thames, forming, at present, one of the main sewers, which debouches at Blackfriars-bridge. Fleet Market was next built; and the Fleet Prison (where had been a goal since the twelfth century), was rebuilt for the second time after its destruction by the rioters of 1780. The market has since been removed, and the prison vacated.

In 1747, the last beheading took place on Tower-hill, which had been a place of execution since the reign of Richard II.

In 1760, the houses and other buildings were removed from London-bridge, which was built between 1170 and 1182.

In 1770, the City gates were removed, with the exception of Temple Bar, built a century before. They were, in the main, unsightly structures.

Between 1739 and 1750, was built Westminster-bridge; and between 1760 and 1770, was constructed Blackfriars-bridge; their approaches, thenceforth became important localities.

The physiognomy of the London streets of the last century included signs to each house, which were only removed in 1750: of these, the Barber's Pole, the Bible and Crown, the Leather Bottle, and the Good (headless) Woman, have descended to our day. The shop-fronts were not inclosed and glazed till about 1710; and each shop was open, like the butchers' at the present day. The fishmonger's shop on the western side of Temple Bar is a specimen of the penthouse front of Old London. May-poles stood in the Strand until 1718; and the heads of traitors were placed upon Temple Bar until 1746.

In 1728, the City conduits were destroyed, it is supposed, to compel the public to have the New River water laid on to their houses. In the olden times, at coronations and public festivals, these conduits ran with wine.

One of the great improvements was the formation of "the New Road," in 1756, from Paddington to the Bank; which was opposed by the Duke of Bedford, lest the dust might annoy him in his house half a mile off, and buildings might be erected, which would destroy his prospect. Within half a century, the Duke's house (on the site of Bedford Place), was levelled to the ground; and now, the fields beyond it are covered with mansions, enlarging, by many thousands, the income of the Bedford family, with a reversionary interest in a city of itself.

The following quaint parallel of Old Rome and London presents a very amusing picture of manners, from a somewhat rare work, by De Poligné, new edit. 1710.

> London enjoys a good air, and has a fine prospect on all sides, the ground upon which it stands being, in most places, like the back of an ass! by which situation it has, on one side, the prospect of a noble river, with a fine open country, full of meadows, gardens, trees, houses; and on the other, delicate fields and meadows of the finest green in the world, with abundance of large and neat villages, and pleasant walks to 'em. The ancient authors take no notice of the walks of Old Rome, which makes it questionable whether there were such as we have about London; particularly in St. James's Park, Hide Park, and in many public places within the City. * * Tho' the Romans had a great many great and curious edifices, I question if they had any of their Temples so stately as St. Paul's Cathedral at London. I am confident the best of them never cost half so much building, their public structures being generally reared by their slaves. Nor had the Old Romans the satisfaction of seeing thousands of fine coaches move along their streets as we see in London, or their streets so full of people well clad, especially women, who had not the liberty at Rome, to appear abroad in the streets; if the narrow streets of Old Rome were full of people, 'twas chiefly of old slaves, very ill kept by their masters. Whereas, at London, the common people and even servants, are better clothed and fed than the Roman Senators and Knights, for the generality. The markets at Rome were neither so numerous nor so well stocked as ours. The great admirers of Old Rome must be very much to seek before they can find in it so many thousands of large and rich shops adorned with handsome costly signs, and stocked with all sorts of goods, foreign and domestic, as we have in London. The conveniency alone of our coffee and chocolate houses goes beyond all the common diversions they had at Rome. 'Tis to be attributed to the wealth and number of our citizens that we have so many stately taverns, chocolate, and coffee-houses, and cook shops; the streets so fine, and in a perpetual hurry of carts and coaches; shops and storehouses so well stocked; houses so well furnished; and so many ships in the river; that we have so many stately Inns of Lawyers, such an Exchange, and such a Custom House; * * that people make so good an appearance in the streets, no slaves, nor starved people.
> Now, the great part of the beauties, ornaments, and delights of London, are owing to the wealth of its citizens; as, for example, there are in London about 20,000 houses fit, one with another, to lodge gentlemen of £1,000 a year, with a competent retinue, &c. Whereas, historians tell us of only 1,800 domus, or dwelling-houses, of such sort of people in Old Rome; I mean of senators or knights, who were not, generally speaking, so rich as our citizens.

EXTENT.

London is usually said to include all the buildings within four miles' radius of St. Paul's Cathedral, which will give it a circumference of 24 miles. The area actually covered with buildings and streets, together with the surface of the Thames, cannot be less than from 19 to 20 square miles. Still, London is not merely one city, but, exclusive of the villages, and groups of houses in the environs, it consists of 8 distinct cities and boroughs: City of London, within and without the walls; City of Westminster; and the boroughs of Mary-le-bone, Finsbury, Tower Hamlets, Southwark, Lambeth, and Grenwich: the first five mentioned of which are situate in Middlesex, the two next in Surrey, and the last in Kent; so that London lies in three counties.

The connected town, however, extends east and west, from Bow to Hammersmith, or about 11 miles; and, from north to south, the greatest width is from Holloway-chapel to Stockwell, about 6 miles. The whole may be considered egg-shaped: the east, or Greenwich and Stratford end, being round and broad, while the west end terminates nearly in a point at Hammersmith. The circumference of the town thus reckoned, is about 30 miles. On the south side, it extends from Vauxhall-Bridge to Greenwich Church, the limits of the foreground of our picture.

PROGRESSIVE POPULATION OF LONDON.

THE population from the reign of Queen Anne to the last Census, will appear thus:

Year 1702	674,300	persons.
1750	676,250	—
1801	900,000	—
1811	1,050,000	—
1821	1,225,694	—
1831	1,375,237	—
1841	1,950,921	—

The last quoted enumeration, however, includes the population of Greenwich; so that, in round numbers, the area of the Metropolis may be taken at 60 000 acres; and its population at 2,000,000.

It is also calculated that if the population of 69 of the principal cities and towns of England were added together, the total would not equal the population of London. It would require above 60 cities as large as Exeter, or 534 towns the size of Huntingdon, to make another metropolis; and it is computed that a population equal to that of Salisbury is added to London every three months!

Mother Shipton's prophecy is now rapidly in fulfilment: London has almost extended itself to Hampstead and Highgate, and those villages are stretching their arms towards each other.

London, which, a century ago, ranked only in the fifth or sixth degree of population among the cities of the world, is now the very first. Yet, London with its 2,000,000, has little more than a third of the population of the Rome of the Cæsars, which according to Lipsius, was between 5,000,000 and 6,000,000! and the "English Opium Eater," from a laborious collation of data, considers Lipsius to be nearer the truth than his critics.

The whole mass of buildings within the limits of London cannot comprehend less than 10,000 streets, terraces, lanes, alleys, and courts, 80 squares, 24 market-places, and nearly 200,000 houses. From an official return, recently presented to Government, it appears that, since the year 1829, no fewer than 45,000 houses, forming 750 new streets and squares, have been erected, or are in the course of building in London and its environs. And, within the memory of one architect, 20,000 houses have been built in the metropolis in the short space of 15 years.

Several populous villages, equal to many county towns, are not included in the above statements; as Hampstead, Highgate, Hackney, Clapham, Wandsworth, Chelsea, &c.

SOIL AND SURFACE.

THE general substratum of the metropolis and its vicinity is clay, hence called "London Clay," the most considerable of the tertiary formations of Great Britain. Beds of clay from 100 to 200 feet in thickness, proper for making tiles, are found in the immediate neighbourhood of the City; and, all around the metropolis, brickmaking is, or has been, carried on extensively. The clay is, in many parts, especially on the north side of the river, for a distance of more than a mile, covered with a thick bed of gravel.

Under the London Clay, a stratum of sand extends, and bears upon a chalk basin, containing an immense quantity of pure water.

This basin is formed by the strata, or layers, bending or dipping in the middle; the dipping causing a greater thickness, and a greater variety of layers in the middle than at the circumference of the basin.

The Isle of Wight, and the City of Paris, occupy basins very similar to that on which London stands.[*] These basins seem to owe their existence to depressions in the chalk formation, which extends under them all.

The depth of the chalk below the surface at London is very considerable, since wells have been sunk several hundred feet without its being reached: but, a few miles south of the metropolis, it is frequently reached.

The seam of chalk which makes up the London Basin varies from 300 to 500 feet in thickness. Several of the wells in London are between 200 and 300 feet deep. At Primrose Hill, near the Regent's Park, some years ago, the ground was bored to the depth of 500 feet without success. One mile east of London, according to Sir H. De la Beche, the chalk is only 77 feet thick, at a well in St. James's-street it is 235 feet thick, and at High Beach 700 feet thick.

Artesian Wells have been bored in the metropolis with various success. In 1835, the New River Company, in the Hampstead Road, unexpectedly reached the chalk at a depth of only 150 feet; but this was at the cost of upwards of £12,000, and the supply of water was uncertain. On the other hand, the Artesian Well in Covent Garden Market is 280 feet deep, and yields 1600 gallons of water per hour; and that in Piccadilly is 240 feet deep; whereas, a well of this kind, bored in 1844, at Hemming's Row, at the rear of the National Gallery, is considerably deeper. Another Artesian Well, near Wandsworth, is 347 feet in depth. These are interesting and important points when we recollect that the quantity of water daily consumed in London is considerably more than 20 million gallons.

From the abundance of clay, London is, as might be expected, a brick-built city; although the ingenuity of our age has cased miles of streets with cement to imitate stone.

This abundance of clay is, in great measure, explanatory of the vastness of the metropolis. It is, however, nowhere better illustrated than in the fact of "the Five Fields," (between Pimlico and Chelsea), formerly a clayey swamp, being now the site of some of the finest mansions in London. A few years ago, it retained so much water, that no one would build there, and the "fields" were the terror of foot passengers proceeding from London to Chelsea after nightfall. At length, Mr. Cubitt, on examining the strata, found them to consist of gravel and clay, of inconsiderable depth; the clay he removed, and burned into bricks, and by building upon the substratum of gravel, he converted this spot from the most unhealthy to one of the most healthy, to the immense advantage of the ground landlord and the whole metropolis. This is one of the most perfect adaptations of the means to the end, to be found in the records of the building art. Of course, the level of this locality is low; for it has been ascertained that the ground-floor of Westbourne Terrace, Hyde Park Gardens, 70 feet above the Thames high-water mark, is on a level with the attics of Eaton and Belgrave Squares. Yet, Chelsea acquired a proverbial salubrity in the last century by Doctors Arbuthnot, Sloane, Mead, Cadogan, and Farquhar, making it their residence.

The rise of the ground from the north bank of the Thames has already been incidentally noticed; and that it continues to rise to the northern suburbs, Hampstead and Highgate, need scarcely be added. But, what will the reader say when he is assured that the summit of St. Paul's Cathedral, the cross, which occupies nearly the highest ground in the City,[*] is lower than the level of the above environs; the relative heights being as follow above the Thames high-water mark:—

	Feet.
Hampstead, Jack Straw's Castle	433
Hampstead Heath	427
Highgate (Old) Church	414
Shooter's Hill	411

The depth of artificial or made ground above the surface is, however, very considerable, as we gather from the evidence of Mr. R. Kelsey, before Parliament, including the following results collected during excavations for the sewers in different parts of the City:—Thickness of made ground at Paul's wharf up to St. Paul's Churchyard, 9 feet to 12 feet; Watling-street, 11 feet to 12 feet 6 inches; Bread-street, 17 feet 6 inches; Cheapside, the natural earth was not reached—the cutting varied from 14 to 23 feet; Gracechurch-street, 14 feet to 18 feet; King William-street, 12 feet to 17 feet 6 inches; Princes-street, 10 feet to 33 feet 6 inches; Moorgate-street, 16 feet 6 inches to 21 feet 6 inches; Fenchurch-street, 15 feet 6 inches to 17 feet 10 inches; Bishopsgate Within, 9 feet 6 inches to 16 feet; Fish-street-hill, 5 feet 6 inches to 18 feet 10 inches; Eastcheap, 12 feet to 15 feet; Redcross-street, 7 feet to 9 feet; Barbican, 10 feet to 13 feet; Cannon-street, 9 feet throughout; Rosemary-lane, 8 feet to 12 feet; Water-lane, Fleet-street, 5 feet to 9 feet; Cateaton-street and Lad-lane, 12 feet to 14 feet 2 inches; streets in Cloth-fair, 4 feet 6 inches to 12 feet 6 inches; streets in St. Ann's, Blackfriars, 4 feet to 13 feet 3 inches. The plinth of Temple-bar is buried in accumulation. The east end of Newgate-street was lowered about 12 inches when the present Post-office was built. London-wall has in part been raised above 2 feet within the last 25 years. The Pavement and Little Moorfields have been wholly re-arranged within the last 10 years. All the improvements from London-bridge to London-wall have largely altered the surface of the main line, and of the adjacent streets. The north side of what is termed Holborn-bridge, the north end of Farringdon-street, has been raised about 2 feet. Such occurrences as these are distinctly noticeable in some way, but the insensible alterations are equally great and curious; as, for instance, from levels taken in 1770 and 1842, it appears that in Bishopsgate-street Without, at Bishopsgate Churchyard, the surface has risen 2 feet 2 inches in 72 years, but at Spital-square only 12 inches in the same time. The result of this examination is confirmed by the depths of the sewers as originally built and as they now measure.

CLIMATE AND HEALTH OF LONDON.

A LIVELY writer has agreeably observed, that "London, in winter, is warm; in spring, it is gay; in summer, it is shady; and in autumn, it is quiet." These pleasantries are facts; for London, generally speaking, is the healthiest spot in all England. Amidst its greatest filth, the inhabitants enjoy excellent health; for, in St. Giles's, 50 persons often sleep in the same room without engendering disease: and, comparatively, the town is free from typhus and other contagious disorders.

A few of the leading facts in the climatology of the Metropolis will, however, speak more for its salubrity than pages of discussion. Such are the following:—

Temperature, mean annual at London is 52 deg., and the extremes 81 deg. and 20 deg., the former occurring generally in July, the latter in January. In mild situations, in Devonshire and Cornwall, the winter temperature is 2 deg., 3 deg., 4 deg., and even 5 deg. higher than in London.

Rain.—A smaller quantity of rain falls in the neighbourhood of the Metropolis than elsewhere in the kingdom. At London, the average is 22·7 inches; the average of the whole kingdom is from 30 to 40 inches; whilst at Keswick, the average quantity is 67 inches annually.

From the observation of several barometers hourly for fifteen days, at the apartments of the Royal Society, it appears that in London, the greatest heights of the barometer take place about 10 A.M., and 11 P.M.; and the least heights about 5 A.M., and 5 P.M.; the whole range being about one-fiftieth of an inch.

Winds.—At London, during the year, the S.W. wind prevails 112 days, the W. 53, the N.N.E. 50, the S. 18, the N.E. 58, the S.E. 22, the E. 27, and the N. 16.

Fogs.—The vast town, with its dense and busy population accumulated within a circle some ten or twelve miles in diameter, has some influence upon the atmosphere over it. This is apparent in the London fog, which sometimes darkens the mid-day atmosphere almost to midnight gloom. The artificially heated air over the city and its environs, sends up, especially after the fires are lighted, far more humidity in the state of vapour, than the cold air above is capable of receiving. Accordingly, this moisture is returned mixed with particles of charcoal and various other substances, which form together the London Fog. Still, this fog rarely, if ever, reaches the height of the cross of St. Paul's; and though it is inconvenient, it is a dry fog, from the continued heating of the lower stratum; and, except to asthmatic patients, it is healthy rather than the reverse, as is proved by the fact that during its continuance, the fever-wards of the hospitals are in great part cleared. Were it not for the fog, it is probable that in those seasons which are peculiarly foggy, the more densely-populated districts would suffer from malaria and its legion of evils.

We have only space to illustrate the Health of the Metropolis in similarly brief manner.

Dr. Arnott states the healthiest part of London to be the north-west; from the prevailing winds there being south-west and north-east, which winds are not contaminated by blowing over London: on the elevated ground in Marylebone parish, the air is as pure as at Hampstead.—Evidence before the House of Commons: Health of Towns.

The most unhealthy district in London includes the parishes in the neighbourhood of Whitechapel; whilst the suburban districts of Camberwell and Hackney are the most healthy. The healthiest parish in London is that of St. George, Hanover-square; for, whilst 39 in a 1000 die annually in Whitechapel, the proportion in the former parish is only 17.—Dr. G. Gregory.

So great is the difference between the average value of life in the east and west of the metropolis, that whereas in the latter it is 2.1 per cent., in the former it is 3.2; and in Whitechapel it is so low that one female in twenty-four dies in a year, an awful mortality, scarcely, perhaps, equalled by Portugal or any other misgoverned country.

[*] The Basin of the Thames, i.e. the country drained by its tributary streams, including the Medway, comprises the greater part of Kent, with the whole of Surrey, Berks, Oxford, Bucks, Herts, Middlesex, Essex, and Suffolk, with part of Gloucester and Wilts—an area of about 8,500 square miles, or between one-sixth and one-seventh of the surface of England and Wales, on which is accumulated between a third and fourth part of their inhabitants, and decidedly more than one-third of their wealth.

[*] Against the wall of a house in Pannier Alley, Newgate-street, the width of three streets from St. Paul's, is a flat stone, on which is sculptured a naked child sitting upon a pannier, or basket, with the following doggrel underneath:—

"When ye have sovght the citty round,
Yet still this is the highest ground.

Avgvst the 27, 1688."

The mortality of London is one thing, but the mortality of its various parishes another; some of them being twice, thrice, and even four times that of others. Every ten minutes, some one inhabitant in 44 dies in the year.

The number of medical institutions in the metropolis devoted to the alleviation of human suffering is about 70.

During the lapse of time, the public health has been wonderfully improved on the one hand, by better diet and accommodation acting as a preventive of disease; on the other hand, by the mighty strides which have been made by the science of medicine. This fact is abundantly shown by the table of deaths in the liberties of London at six different periods in the census of 1841; and hence it has been deduced that the annual deaths out of 100,000 living were as follow:

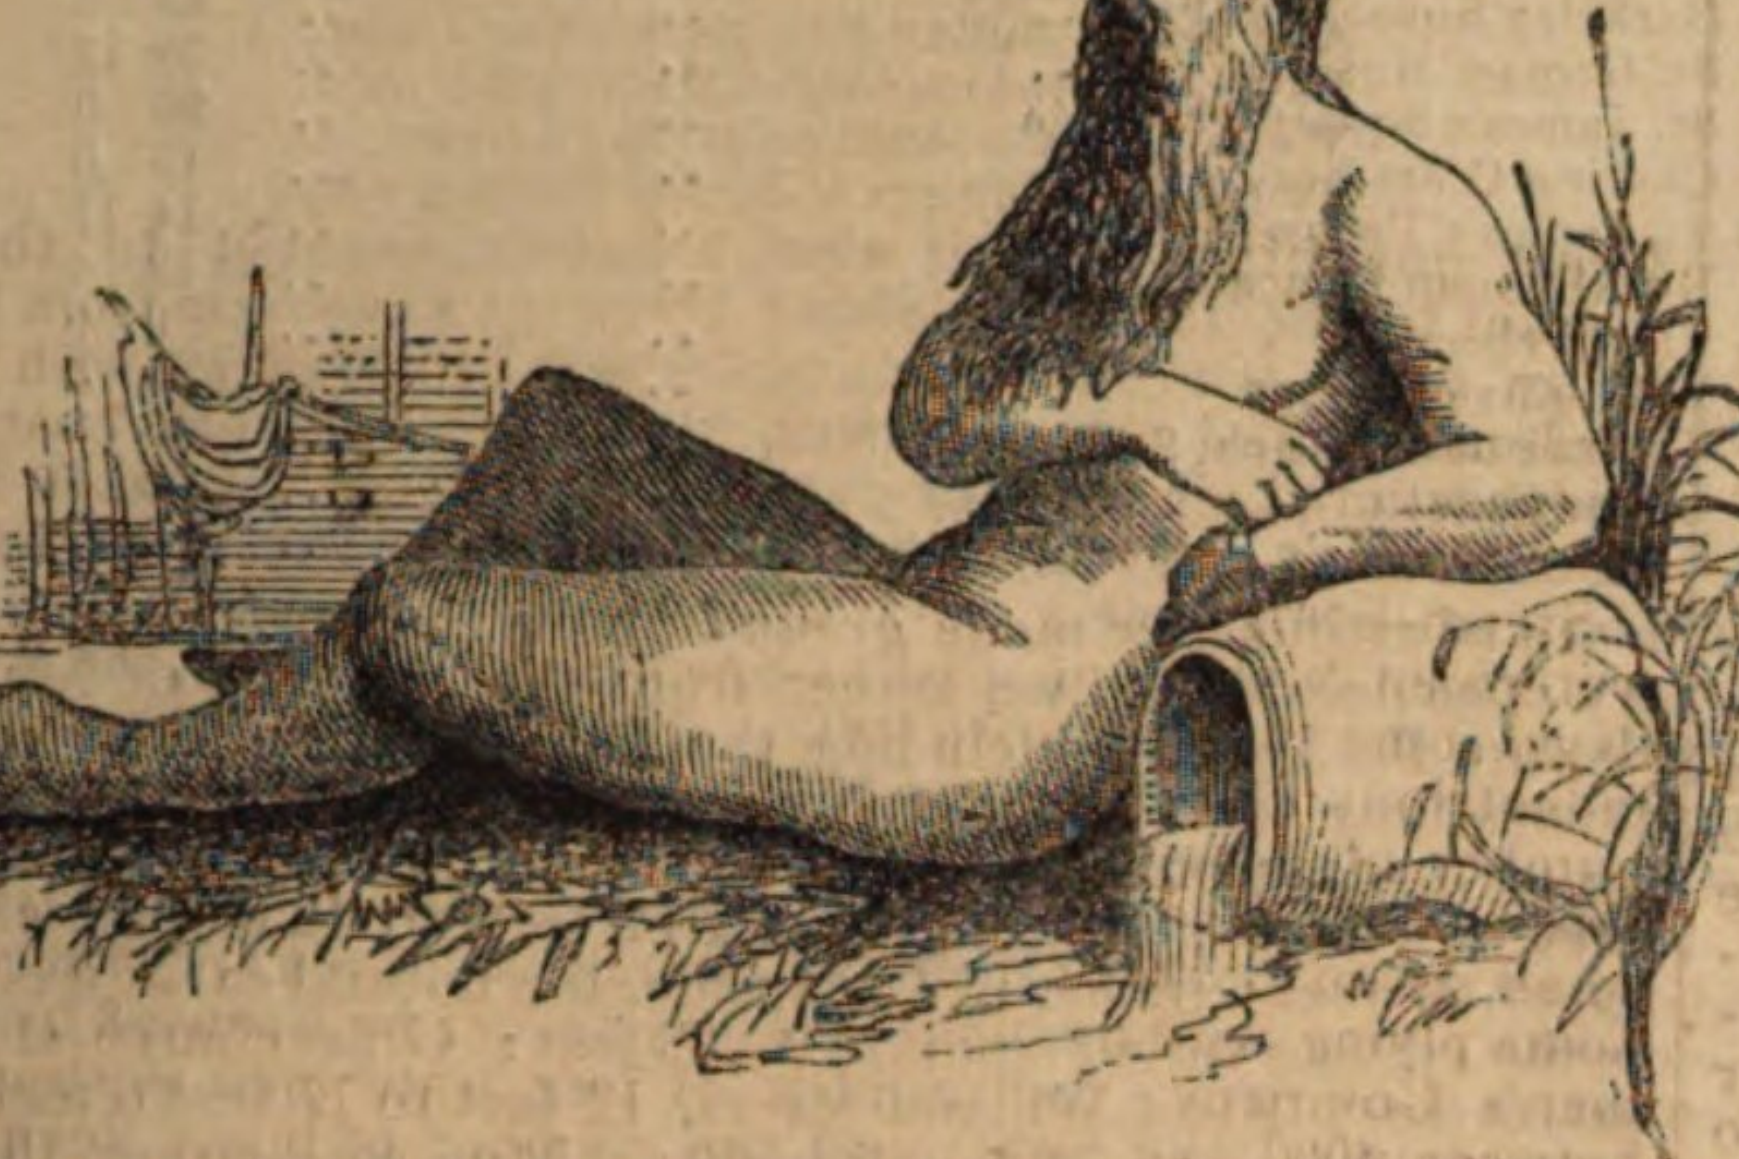
1660 — 1679 (plague years)	8,000
1728 — 1757	5,200
1771 — 1780	5,000
1801 — 1810	2,920
1831 — 1835	3,200
1840 — 1812	2,500

THE RIVER THAMES.



BEFORE we proceed to the details of the metropolis upon the banks of this majestic river, it may be interesting to glance at its characteristics; for, although the portion represented in our Engraving is little more than one-thirtieth of its entire course, it is that portion which entitles the Thames to rank as the most important river in Great Britain.

The name is inferred to be of British origin: Cæsar writes it Tamesis, evidently Tames or Thames, with the addition of a Latin termination.

The true head of the Thames is about three miles south of Cheltenham, on the south-eastern slope of the Cotswold Hills, in Gloucestershire. About a mile from its source, the stream is swelled by several springs, and from these forms a constant current.

The Thames soon enters Wiltshire, eastward; then winds between the counties of Oxford and Berks; and passing by the Gothic piles of Windsor and Eton, its channel divides Middlesex from Surrey, throughout the whole extent of their devious and opposing shores. We have not space to enumerate its tributaries, or its various windings and flowings, until, proceeding to the north-east and east, its broad stream separates the cities of Westminster and London from their long-extended Southern Suburbs—Lambeth, Southwark, Bermondsey, and Rotherhithe. How various are the emotions when we reflect upon the "oozy bed" to where

> And on her banks Augusta rose in gold.

The noble river next divides the counties of Essex and Kent; and, gradually expanding into an arm of the sea, it unites its waves with the German ocean, at about the point called the Nore; the entire course from Thames Head being about 220 miles; of which nearly 190 miles are navigable. How eloquently and truthfully has Denham sung its fame, in these oft-quoted lines:

> Thames, the most loved of all the ocean's sons,
> By his old sire, to his embraces runs;
> Hasting to pay his tribute to the sea,
> Like mortal life to meet eternity;
> Though with those streams he no resemblance hold,
> Whose foam is amber, and whose gravel gold;
> His genuine and less guilty wealth t' explore,—
> Search not his bottom, but survey his shore.
> No unexpected inundations spoil
> The mower's hopes, nor mock the plowman's toil;
> But, godlike, his unwearied bounty flows,
> First loves to do, then loves the good he does.
> Nor are his blessings to his banks confined,
> But free and common as the sea and wind;
> When he to boast, or to dispense his stores,
> Full of the tribute of his grateful shores;
> Visits the world, and in his flying towers
> Brings home to us, and makes both Indies ours.
> O could I flow like thee, and make thy stream,
> My great example, as it is my theme;
> Though deep, yet clear; though gentle, yet not dull;
> Strong without rage; without o'erflowing, full.

The matter-of-fact old chroniclers, however, gainsay one of the poet's attributes; for the Thames has been subject to floods, recorded six centuries since; and ebbs so extraordinary, as to leave dry land in the midst of the channel.

To the wise policy and admirable discipline of the Romans it is inferred that we are indebted for the first embankment of the river; and, according to Tacitus, they pressed the Britons into their service. This is but one of the countless benefits derived by Britain from a people "whose legionaries in the great work were as familiar with the use of the spade and pickaxe as with that of the javelin and the sword."

The maintenance and repair of these embankments, have been traced to the reign of Edward I.; but, such have been the encroachments by the erection of wharfs and other buildings, so as materially to contract the water-way of that portion of the river which flows immediately through the centre of the metropolis, that the only relic of the old line is to be seen adjoining Waterloo Bridge. For example: the distance of the River Front from Westminster Hall, in an old plan, is 100 feet; whereas, at present, it is 300 feet. Of course, these changes can only be slightly glanced at here; but a variety of valuable information upon the embankment of the river, will be found in Mr. Cruden's excellent History of Gravesend and the Port of London; and in the First Report of the Parliamentary Commissioners for improving the Metropolis, 1844. This Report contains the several plans submitted to Parliament for the embankment of the Thames, (including lines of railway), which plans will, in all probability, be discussed during the Session of 1845: an outline of that favoured by the Government, has been engraved in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, No. 113: it differs materially from all previous Embankments, inasmuch as it contemplates arcades, terraces, and other architectural embellishments. The only important Embankments of this class hitherto completed, are the terraces of the Custom House, Somerset House, the Adelphi, and the New Houses of Parliament; although, more than a century and a half since, Wren designed "a commodious Quay on the whole bank of the River, from Blackfriars to the Tower."

The Conservancy of the Thames is a privilege and trust vested in the Corporation of London, by very ancient charter, though their rights and duties are much disputed. The Lord Mayor bears the style and title of Conservator of the Thames, and with his deputy, or Water Bailiff, periodically has, for many centuries past, held Courts of Conservancy, when juries are empanelled and sworn, to inquire into all offences committed on the river, and to make presentments thereof; such as those relating to obstruction of the navigation, encroachments of all kinds, and the preservation of the fish in the River. The Admiralty also claims a certain jurisdiction; and the Corporation of the Trinity House has authority to remove shoals, to regulate lastage and ballastage, to provide lighthouses and beacons, to licence pilots, mariners, &c.

In Fitzstephen's time, the Thames at London was, indeed, "a fishful river;" and we read of (a picturesque custom)—the Thames fishermen presenting their tithe of salmon at the high altar of St. Peter, and claiming, on that occasion, the right to sit at the Prior of Westminster's own table. At this period, the supply of fish materially contributed to the subsistence of the inhabitants of the metropolis; and the river even below the site of the present London Bridge abounded with fish. In 1376-7, a law was passed in Parliament for the saving of salmon and other fry of fish; and, in 1381-2, "Swannes" that came through the bridge or beneath the bridge, were the fees of the Constables of the Tower. How changed is the picture: a salmon is now rarely caught in a year, within 5 miles of the metropolis; and, as Mr. Cruden pleasantly observes: "Salmon captured in the Thames at Gravesend, now-a-days, would be considered (from that circumstance) like a sturgeon, an offering worthy of royal acceptation, and forwarded with due ceremony, through the hands of the Conservator, to Buckingham Palace; but the public have lost nothing by the change from the dull stillness of the water highway, when swans had their eyries and salmon swam undisturbed by shipmen in the Thames at Gravesend, to the crowded bustling scenes which now enliven the river's surface."—History of Gravesend.

The causes of the disappearance of fish from our metropolitan river (from Vauxhall to Greenwich), are too various to be enumerated here. The epicure may, however, yet rejoice that one of the Thames luxuries has been spared for his gratification; since from April to September the delicious whitebait are caught as high up as Woolwich or Blackwall every flood-tide, in glittering myriads.

A few of the more popular natural phenomena of the Thames may be acceptable here.

The tide ascends above London Bridge, about 18 or 19 miles, to Teddington, where high-water mark is about 1½ foot higher than at London-bridge, and the time of high-water is about 2 hours later. Low-water surface at Teddington is about 16¾ feet higher than at London-bridge. Altogether, the tide in the Thames flows from the Nore to Teddington, a distance of more than 60 miles from the sea, which is said to be a greater length than it flows into any other river in Europe.

At ebb-tide, there is a depth of from 12 to 13 feet water nearly or quite up to London-bridge; and the rise of the tide is about 17 feet, or at the extreme springs about 22 feet.

Since the construction of the new London-bridge, and the removal of the old one, there has been less water at St. Katharine's Docks, at low water, by about 18 inches, than formerly. To this point, however, vessels of 800 tons get up; and those of 1400 tons to Blackwall, about 6 miles below bridge.

The depth of the river is constantly maintained by steam dredging engines, consisting of iron frames, with buckets and cutters, made to descend into the bed of the river. Filtration is performed upon a vast scale at the Chelsea water-works, which occupy about seven acres, with machinery, filtering-beds, &c.; and by a powerful steam-engine raises upwards of five million gallons of water daily.

The current of the Thames, too, is of great importance to the health of the vast population of the capital; since, by this means, the river is washed out twice a-day, carrying with it to the sea a portion of the impurities that would bring back insupportable evils by accumulation; whereas, the flood brings back clear and pure water from the ocean.

Thus far have we glanced at the beautiful economy of this health-giving stream—the aorta of the metropolis:

> The splendid Thames, with all the strength of life,
> Its boldest beauty and its sweetest breath,
> Peopled with such a world of love and strife!
> Upon whose borders grandeur gathereth
> Its hundred monuments of fame and pride,
> And the link'd sweetness of fair nature's charms,
> Whose lovely landscapes peep into his tide,
> And fold their sapphire beauty to his arms!

It is now time to turn to the countless productions of art, wealth, and industry, which span the current, or cluster on the shores of this majestic river:

> Oh, what a group of glory doth he take
> Where five grand bridges span his river bed,
> From Westminster to London! Dreamers wake
> From no more stately vision than is spread
> In that wide range of regal power and pride;
> A splendour unapproached—unmatched—immense!
> The imperial city by its golden tide,
> Vast to the eye and wondrous to the sense!

THE BRIDGES.

THE earliest mention of a bridge over the Thames at London occurs in an Icelandic narrative of a battle fought there between the Danes and Saxons, in the year 1008, when there was a wooden bridge with turrets and roofed bulwarks. This rude structure was, however, pulled down in the contest, but was rebuilt before the invasion of Canute in 1016. The statement that the first bridge was built by the priests of St. Mary Overy's church must, therefore, be regarded as a monastic legend. The above wooden bridge was swept away by the river in 1091: it was rebuilt, but burnt down in 1136 by a fire, which laid the City in ruins from St. Paul's to Aldgate. It was again rebuilt of timber in 1163, by Peter, Curate of St. Mary Colechurch; the same architect who, in 1176, began the first London Bridge of stone, which was not finished till 1209; this bridge being somewhat to the west of the old timber one, which was close to the site of the present Botolph Lane. The chronicles of this stone bridge, through nearly six centuries and a quarter, or from its completion in 1209 to its removal in 1829, form, perhaps, the most interesting episode in the history of London. It was, indeed, a "world of wonders:" first, it was said to be built upon wool-packs, from its cost having been chiefly defrayed by a tax upon wool; next, in the centre of this bridge of 20 arches and 926 feet length, was the famous chapel and crypt of St. Thomas à Becket, used for divine worship down to the Reformation; then, in the 16th century, was set up Nonsuch House, entirely of wood, pegged together. But we can only mention how traitors' heads were stuck upon the towers and battlements of the bridge-gates; how its lines of houses were swept away by fire, and its piers and arches by the icy torrent beneath; and how the engine for supplying the City with water, erected at the London end of the bridge in 1582, became improved to a triumph of hydraulic mechanism, displaced only in 1822. The removal of the houses was commenced in 1757: they terrifically overhung the bridge on both sides, in most places hiding the arches, so that the rude piers only could be seen. In modern times, the bridge was famous for its gay shops; and hence, "fine as London Bridge" became a vulgar comparison. The scenes of fire and siege, insurrection and popular vengeance, of national rejoicing (as at the Restoration), and of the pageant-victories of man and death, of fame or funeral—it were vain for us to attempt to chronicle. At length, the venerable structure fell into decay, but the Londoners superstitiously opposed its removal:

> London Bridge is broken down,
> Dance over my lady's grave.

After a century and a half of paring and patching the crazy old fabric, at about 180 feet west of it was erected a magnificent bridge, with 5 vast elliptical arches—a triumph of engineering and architectural skill. The foundation-stone was laid in 1825, and the finished bridge was opened in 1831; the cost of the structure and its approaches nearly reaching two millions. The old bridge was not entirely removed until the year 1832, when the bones of the builder, Peter of Colechurch, were found beneath the masonry of the chapel, as if to complete the strange eventful history of the antique structure.

Although attempts to obtain another bridge across the Thames, besides that designated "London," were made in the several reigns of Elizabeth, James I., Charles I. and II., and George I., it was not until the year 1736, (10 Geo. II.,) that Parliament authorised the building of a second bridge, namely, that at Westminster, on the site of the ancient Roman ferry. This bridge is the only one built across the Thames, with caissons; it contains nearly double the stone employed in building St. Paul's Cathedral; and its entire history has been related recently in the Illustrated London News.

Ten years after the opening of Westminster Bridge, was commenced that at Blackfriars, then a noble specimen of art; but, owing to its inconvenient declivity, and the friable nature of its stone, this bridge has lately been altered and repaired at an expense of upwards of £300,000. The removal of the balustrades, and the substitution of a plain parapet, have altogether spoiled its architectural beauty.

Vauxhall Bridge, of iron and granite, was next commenced, in 1811. In the same year, was begun Waterloo Bridge—dignified by Canova, as "the noblest bridge in the world;" and by Baron Dupin, as "a colossal monument worthy of Sesostris and the Cæsars." Its level road-way is the perfection of bridge building: its cost was upwards of a million of money. The lovers of peace must, however, regret that, in naming his fine work of art, no better designation could be found than one to perpetuate the recollection of the most sanguinary conflict of modern times.

To our mind, the finest view of the metropolis is to be enjoyed in the calm of a summer morning, on Waterloo Bridge, rather than on Westminster Bridge, where the exquisite lines of Wordsworth are stated to have been composed:

> Earth has not anything to show more fair:
> Dull would he be of soul who could pass by
> A sight so touching in its majesty:
> This city now doth like a garment wear
> The beauty of the morning; silent, bare,
> Ships, towers, domes, theatres, and temples, lie
> Open unto the fields and to the sky,
> All bright and glittering in the smokeless air.
> Never did sun more beautifully steep
> In his first splendour valley, rock, or hill;
> Ne'er saw I, never felt, a calm so deep!
> The river glideth at its own sweet will:
> Dear God! the very houses seem asleep,
> And all that mighty heart is lying still!

Southwark Bridge, of iron, cast at Rotherham, in Yorkshire, was next commenced, in 1814. Such is the expansion and contraction of the metal in this bridge, that the arches rise and fall about one inch within the usual range of atmospheric temperature.

We subjoin, in a tabular form, the relative proportions of the above six London bridges, with other particulars, upon the authority of Mr. Britton's valuable work on the Public Buildings of London:—

A seventh bridge is in progress, and is shown completed in our Engraving. This bridge, on the suspension principle, will be a marvel of modern mechanism. At about 100 yards from each bank of the Thames, are built two elegant stone piers of Italian design, over which will be carried chains supporting a pathway for foot passengers only, from Hungerford Wharf to the Belvidere Road, Lambeth.

The entire length of the bridge suspended on chains will be 1,342 feet 6 inches—that is, the centre span or arch, 676 feet 6 inches; those on the side 333 feet each. The total weight of iron is between 700 and 800 tons, and the estimated cost, including the approaches, is £110,000. Its centre span alone is nearly 100 feet greater than the entire of the Menai-bridge; 274 feet greater than the centre span of Hammersmith-bridge; and above three times as great as the centre arch of Southwark-bridge. Indeed, with the exception of the wire bridge at Fribourg, in Switzerland, it will be by far the largest suspension bridge in existence.

As a means of communication, may be noticed here

from Wapping to Rotherhithe, measuring 1200 feet, beneath the river, at the depth of 63 feet. It consists of a double brick archway, each wide enough for a single carriage way and a footpath, and lit with gas; the approach at each end being by a vast circular shaft, with a spiral roadway. The entire work was executed in about 9 years of actual operation; though the first boring was commenced in 1826, and the Tunnel opened in 1843; the cost of the Tunnel itself being about £446,000. Seven lives were lost in its execution; whereas, nearly 40 men were killed in building the new London-bridge. As an exhibition, the Tunnel has been very attractive, and as a marvel of modern science, it is known throughout the civilised world: it is the work of Sir I. M. Brunel and Son; and the perils and difficulties of its construction would fill a volume. An outline of its history will be found in No. 48 of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

It is now time to glance more especially at that portion of the Thames which is designated

At this point lies the Greenland or Commercial Docks (230), occupying about 49 acres, of which four-fifths are water; accommodating 350 ships, and warehousing 50,000 tons of merchandise. Adjoining, on the south, is the East Country Dock, an area of 6½ acres. The private warehouses in this locality are vast, indeed: thus Scott's granary, near Rotherhithe, is said to be the largest in the world, and covers an acre of ground.

THE PORT OF LONDON.

First, as to situation: Sir John Herschel, in his excellent Treatise on Astronomy, felicitously observes: "It is a fact, not a little interesting to Englishmen, and, combined with our insular situation in that great highway of nations, not a little explanatory of our commercial eminence, that LONDON occupies nearly the centre of the terrestrial hemisphere."

The latitude of the centre of the dome of St. Paul's Cathedral, which stands nearly in the centre of what is strictly the City of London, (and occupies the centre of the accompanying Panoramic Picture), is 51° 31' 47·59"; and the longitude is 5' 48·2" W. of Greenwich. The latitude of Greenwich Observatory (to the extreme east of the Picture), according to the determination of Mr. Airy, the Astronomer Royal, is 51° 28' 38·07".

London has, for centuries, been styled "the Great Emporium of Nations," its commerce having extended to every region of the globe. It is, however, peculiarly the chief seat of British commerce with India and China; and the marvel of modern times, as "the metropolis of the most intelligent and wealthy empire the sun ever shone upon, and of which the boast is as of Spain of old, that upon its dominions the sun never sets."

No situation could be more happily chosen than that of London: though 45 miles from the sea, from its position on the Thames, it enjoys all the advantages of an excellent sea-port. Had the town been built lower down the river, it would have been less healthy, and more exposed to hostile attacks; and had it been placed higher up, it would have been deprived of the important advantages of a deep-water harbour.

It is, indeed, impossible that London should ever have attained to anything like her present extent, but for her command of internal and external navigation: while, however, the first gives her an easy communication with most parts of England, the latter opens to her a ready access to all the great markets in every other part of the world; so that should our manufactures prosper, the metropolis may increase its colossal magnitude for centuries to come.

It would not be difficult to quote many eloquent tributes to the commercial grandeur of London: but we shall content ourselves with the following, by Baron Charles Dupin. "The metropolis of the empire," says this illustrious savant, "incloses within it the most frequented port of any in the world. It is its naval commerce which alone has rendered London the most populous and the most opulent of all the capitals of Europe. Vessels of every country display their flags on the Thames, even in the very middle of this immense city. Nevertheless, the British flags alone surpass in number those of all the other nations united. The inhabitant of London is with reason proud, when he beholds the fleet of merchantmen which daily arrive from the sea, or fall down the river: the latter to export the products of the national industry; the former to import the productions or the treasure of foreign countries. Nor can he contemplate these immense movements without acknowledging, that commerce and the empire of the sea have been the causes of the riches and grandeur of his native city."

The Port of London, as actually occupied by shipping, extends from London Bridge to Deptford, a distance of nearly four miles; the river varying from 290 to about 350 yards in breadth. Our Engraving, however, extends far beyond this point, to Woolwich. The whole course is divided as follows, into Reaches, in a chart constructed by Capt. Bullock, R.N., quoted in Mr. Cruden's valuable work:

The characteristics of the River and the Town upon its banks, above and below (London) Bridge, differ very materially. Above bridge, the south bank is mostly appropriated to trade and manufactures; whilst the opposite shore boasts some fine architectural piles and embankments; but the wharfs thicken as we approach London bridge. The state of the River, too, is altogether different from that below bridge. Instead of a gradual descent of its bed of about six inches per mile, and of a low water line, sometimes level, sometimes inclining slightly towards London, or towards Sheerness, the fall of the bed of the River from Westminster Bridge to the Upper Pool, immediately below London Bridge, is not less than 13 feet, being 6 feet 6 inches per mile; and the face of the low-water line is 2 feet 6 inches. So great is the obstruction offered to the flood-tide by the elevation of the bed of the River from London Bridge to Westminster Bridge, that the increased rise of tide at London Bridge, above the level at Sheerness, is lost again at Vauxhall, where the rise of tide corresponds nearly with that at Sheerness, and where the high water frequently does not even attain the level of high-water at London bridge. This bank, if it may be so called, has been attributed, in a great degree, to the effect of the drain formed by Old London Bridge; and its gradual removal by the agency of the River itself, has been adverted to in all the inquiries connected with the subject. "That the tendency of ages would be to bring the level of the Thames above London Bridge to the level of what it is below London Bridge," is an opinion of Smeaton's often quoted, and, in subsequent Reports, confirmed; and Mr. Telford estimated that the cost of providing against the effects produced on the Thames by the rebuilding of London Bridge, would exceed £100,000. We gather these important facts from a letter from Thomas Page, Esq., to the Earl of Lincoln, in the Appendix to the First Report of the Commissioners for improving the Metropolis, 1844.

The River below bridge, and that portion of London connected with the port and shipping, differ so much from that above bridge, as to constitute one of the most distinct divisions of the metropolis. It embraces on the northern side of the river, a district extending eastward from Tower Hill, and comprising Wapping and Ratcliffe Highway, Shadwell, Limehouse, Poplar, and Blackwall; and on the other side, commences with Tooley-street, and comprehends Rotherhithe, and all along the river to Deptford. As a general summary of the capabilities of the River from London downward, it is navigable for large ships, and, gradually widening, at Sheerness, it becomes a large estuary five miles broad. The depth of the river, too, ensures London a considerable advantage as a shipping port. Even at ebb-tide, there are 12 or 13 feet of water in the fair way of the river above Greenwich; the mean range of the tide at London Bridge is about 17 feet; of the highest spring tides about 22 feet. Up to Woolwich, the river is navigable for ships of any burden; to Blackwall for those of 1400 tons; and to St. Katherine's Docks for vessels of 800 tons; still, the navigation is intricate and difficult. Above bridge, such has been the deepening of the bed of the river since the removal of Old London Bridge, that near one of the piers of Westminster Bridge, it had lowered 3 feet from 1829 to 1836. By this accession of tidal water above bridge, an improved depth might have been expected in the Pool, where, however, very little has been gained; the removal of the bed from above having been followed by a certain deposit in the Pool.

Throughout its tidal course, as the principal approach to London, and the chief seat of its traffic, the Thames presents an imposing spectacle of national wealth and industry. About one-sixth of the whole shipping of the empire belongs to the Port of London:—in 1840, 4,513 British, and 2,215 foreign, vessels were engaged in the foreign trade; 1,006 in the Irish trade; 8,970 colliers; 11,643 coasters, and 3,588 fishing vessels; forming a total of 31,935 vessels, and a tonnage of 4,135,233, without including that of the fishing vessels. The number of steam-vessels employed in 1839, was 2,144, amounting to a tonnage of 563,567; and of these, 2,000 were British.

We next quote the number of ships and their tonnage, in 1843, in comparison with the two other principal ports of the kingdom.

	British.		Foreign.
	Ships.	Tons.	Ships.	Tons.
London	4,589	1,022,550	1,633	295,121
Liverpool . . , . .	2,6[illegible]	691,707	1,014	417,621
Newcastle	1,076	244,605	1,148	137,356

Annexed are the gross receipts of Customs Duties collected at the following ports, during the year ending Jan. 5, 1844:

London	11,354,702
Bristol	996,750
Hull	525,418
Liverpool	4,121,522
Newcastle	494 524

Again, official returns show that the payments into the Exchequer by the Custom House of London amount to as much as the net receipts of all the other custom-houses in Great Britain and Ireland.

The Port Dues are received by the Corporation of London; and in one year, 1833, they amounted to £108,608 9s. 9¾d., of which only £34,243 13s. 11½d. was net profit to the Corporation. These duties are too numerous to specify; but the duty upon coal, culm, and small coal, of 8d. per ton, imported into the city of London, produced, during the ten years ending 1840, an average annual sum of £76,000; the duty of 4s. per ton, or 2s. per pipe, on wine, produced, during a similar period, an average sum of £3,651. The whole system teems with abuses; for nearly the entire sum raised is levied chiefly on the food and fuel of the metropolis, merely to defray the expences of the City jurisdiction over the traffic in the river Thames; and the Corporation officers have given testimony, in their evidence before the Port of London Committee, in 1836, that not one farthing has been appropriated to the improvement of the Port.

The River is, however, protected by an admirable system of Police, established in the year 1798, and merged into the Metropolitan Police in 1839. Before the existence of a River Police, and the erection of Docks on both sides of the River, it was computed that one-tenth of the cargo of every vessel brought into the Port of London was stolen, and men amassed enormous wealth by this wholesale plunder: the revenue officers connived with the gangs of well-armed river pirates, and the numerous receiving-houses along the shores completed the scheme of universal depredation.

Execution Dock at Wapping, the name of one of the outlets of the River, preserves the memory of many a tale of murder and piracy on the high seas; for, here used to be executed all pirates and sailors found guilty of any of the greater crimes committed on ship-board. Opposite Blackwall, too, we remember to have seen the gibbets, on which the bodies were left to wave in the wind.

With all the advantages of the improved system of police, it is, however, to be regretted that the loss of life upon the Thames, by collision of vessels, and other accidents, is of frightful amount; 500 persons being annually drowned in the River, and one-third of the number in the Pool.

The main accessories to the grand commercial system of the port of London are its capacious Docks, to be noticed hereafter. They chiefly adjoin the north bank of the River; and strange as it may appear in contrast with the success which has followed their formation, these several Docks are the works of the present century; the Parliamentary Bill for the first constructed Docks (the West India) having been passed in 1799; and they were opened in 1802.

The scene which presents itself to the stranger in his passage through the Pool is a far better subject for the painter's art, than for the descriptive pen: apparently interminable forests of masts extend on both sides of the channel, which "the crowd of ships from all quarters of the globe, of colliers, coasters, steam-boats, and river craft, renders it difficult for the harbour-masters to maintain." The variety of the forms of the vessels must strike every beholder; for here we see the dashing steamer, and the gay wherry, in contrast with the almost aboriginal fishing-boat; the picturesque barge and the majestic Indiaman; the rakish schooner, the clumsy coaster, and the graceful brig. But, the great feeder of the life of the Thames is its there being no port in the kingdom which has profited more than London through the application of steam to navigation. It is now some 30 years since the first steam-boat left the metropolis for Richmond; the next for Gravesend, in January, 1815; and in the same year was established a Steam-boat Company between London and Margate. In course of time, the Gravesend steamers superseded the sailing-boats, with decks, which, in the year 1737, had displaced the ancient boats with tilts; and, on the Margate line, the steamers, in like manner, superseded the sailing "hoy." In one of these steamers, the Eclipse, built in 1840, the passage from Deptford to Margate was made in four hours and a half, then the greatest speed ever accomplished on British waters. Such was the commencement of the Steam Navigation of the Thames, which now exceeds that of any other river in the world. Probably, the next step that gave a wonderful impulse to this new system of transit, was the construction of wharves, where steam-packets might come alongside, and passengers land and embark, without using the diminutive London wherries, previously employed for these purposes. This improvement originated with Sir John Hall, the secretary to the St. Katherine's Dock company, who first saw his plan consummated on the 9th of April, 1830, by the embarkation of 400 passengers at the wharf in front of St. Katherine's Dock, in the Harlequin steam-packet, for an excursion to the Nore.

No accurate amount of the number of this class of ships that enter and leave the Port, can be given. Steam passage boats pass and repass at all hours during the day, between London and Greenwich and Woolwich; and above Bridge, others start every quarter of an hour during the day, from London Bridge and Westminster. To Gravesend, boats go at various times during the day; and in summer, there are several departures and arrivals during the day to and from Margate and Ramsgate. Between London and Calais, Boulogne, Antwerp, and Rotterdam, steam-vessels are passing almost daily in summer, and frequently in winter. With various ports in England, Scotland, and Ireland, a constant intercourse is kept up in the same manner.

The fame of London steam-boats and London engines has spread all over Europe; and the ship-builders, iron steam-boat makers, engineers and boiler manufacturers on the Thames, are as busy on its banks as are the steam-vessels on its waters. The latter have become the most important highway in the kingdom, and, perhaps, in Europe: it being calculated that at one time there are frequently 10,000 persons going up and down the river in steam-vessels, inclusive of those proceeding to and from the Continent; and in one season, the vessels of a single Steam-boat Company have carried more than two millions of passengers!

The two largest steamers built on the Thames were the British Queen and the President, both constructed at Limehouse; the extreme length of the former being 275 feet; and of the latter, 268 feet. These stupendous vessels cost the British and American Steam Navigation Company, £90,715 each; interiorly, they were two floating palaces, so superb were their fittings. The British Queen has been sold to the Belgian Government; but the fate of the President, which sailed from New York in March, 1841, remains to this day a melancholy mystery; she had made but nine voyages. Both these vessels were of wood, now almost superseded by metal; so that the building of iron steamers at Blackwall and the Isle of Dogs, has become a very important branch of manufacture. Probably, the smallest iron steamer, is the Jane, built by Blaxland, of Greenwich: she is only 26 feet long, with 5 feet beam; her burden is less than 3 tons, and her steam-power less than one horse.

The vast increase in the number of Thames steamers has led to the construction of several Piers for embarkation and debarkation, some of which have been removed as obstructions to the navigation of the River. The most noticeable pier is that which projects from about the centre of the west front of the Southwark bridge, the communication being from the bridge path, down flights of covered steps, which has a somewhat picturesque effect.

SPORTS ON THE THAMES.

The everlasting Thames, that floweth on,
  With history shining through it from the past;
Full of fine themes for mind to dwell upon,
  And make the swelling soul more grand and vast!
With memories of love, and death, and hate,
  Lurking around it—darkening in its deep—
And brighter pomps and pageantries of state,
  Gleaming through ages that have gone to sleep.

The olden recreations on "the noble Thames" are of great celebrity. Fitzstephen tells us of the ancient Londoners fighting "battles on Easter holidays on the water, by striking a shield with a lance:" there was also a kind of water tournament, in which the combatants standing in two wherries rowed and run one against the other, fought with staves and shields. In Gower's time, the Sovereign was rowed in his tapestried barge, probably the first royal barge upon the Thames; and upon this great highway, Richard II, seeing the good old rhymer, called him on board the royal vessel, and there commanded him "to make a book after his hest," which was the origin of the Confessio Amantis. At this period, a portion of London Bridge was moveable, so that vessels of burden might pass up the river, to unload at Queenhithe and elsewhere; and stairs, water-gates, and palaces studded both shores. At this time, too, boats conveyed passengers with truss or farthell, for two-pence each, from London to Gravesend.

The landing-places on the Thames appear to have been even less changed than the thoroughfare itself; for in the account of the penance of Eleanor Cobham, Duchess of Gloucester, in 1440, we find named Temple bridge (stairs), the Old Swan, and Queenhithe; and in the earliest maps of London, are Broken Wharf, Paul's Wharf, Essex Stairs, and Whitehall Stairs; all which exist by the same names, to the present day.

In the 15th and 16th centuries, most of the nobility, who resided on the banks of the Thames, kept their barges; but between Westminster and the Tower, and the Tower and Greenwich, the Thames was especially the royal road. In 1454, John Norman was the first Mayor of London who rode to Westminster; and the pageant has been kept up to the present day, through nearly four centuries.

"In the time of Elizabeth and the First James," says Mr. Knight, "and onward to very recent days, the north bank of the Thames was studded with the palaces of the nobles; and each palace had its landing-place, and its private retinue of barges and wherries; and many a freight of the brave and beautiful has been borne, amidst song and merriment, from house to house, to join the masque and the dance; and many a wily statesman, muffled in his cloak, has glided along, unseen, in his boat, to some dark conference with his ambitious neighbour. Nothing could then have been more picturesque than the Strand, with its broad gardens and lofty trees, and embattled turrets and pinnacles. Upon the river itself, busy as it was, fleets of swans were ever sailing; and they ventured unmolested into that channel which is now narrowed by vessels from every region."

Early in the 17th century, Howel numbers among the river glories, "forests of masts which are perpetually upon her; the variety of smaller wooden bottoms playing up and down;" and the "stately palaces that are built upon both sides of her bank so thick." Of "the smaller wooden bottoms," Stow computes that there were in his time, 2000; that there were 40,000 watermen upon the rolls of the Company, and that they could furnish 20,000 men for the fleet. But somewhat later, in 1630, the river had its own poet, one John Taylor, "literally a Thames waterman, working for his daily bread;" and right gratefully does he sing:

But noble Thames, whilst I can hold a pen,
I will divulge thy glory unto men:
Thou in the morning, when my coin is scant,
Before the evening doth supply my want.

The theatres and other places of amusement were at Bankside, and there being no bridge but that of London, the passage by boats must have been immense in these days of the Drama's glory. Taylor knew Ben Jonson; and Mr. Knight, in the spirit of Shaksperean idealism, surmises that the Water-poet "probably had the good fortune to ferry Shakspere from Whitehall to Paris garden." But, Taylor's trade was spoiled by the introduction of coaches; the theatres were swept away at the Restoration, and dirty wharfs took the place of trim gardens on the river-bank. Alack! but one solitary monument of the water pageantry of these days has endured to our time: this is Inigo Jones's celebrated water-gate, (at the bottom of Buckingham-street,) formerly belonging to York House, the palace of John Villiers, Duke of Buckingham: the gate is of Portland stone, and is one of Inigo Jones's finest works; on its pediment are the arms of the founder. Probably, the last relic of this going by water to places of amusement on the banks of the Thames, was the journeying in small boats, to Vauxhall Gardens, which have, to the present day, their "water-gate." Such seems to have been the practice from our earliest notice of Vauxhall, in Addison's exquisite account of his visit to the Gardens in company with Sir Roger de Coverley, in the Spectator, May 20, 1712; and this continued to be the favourite mode of locomotion in 1737, when the author of a Trip to Vauxhall thus describes his visit with two ladies:—

Lolling in state, with one on either side,
And gently pulling with the wind and tide;
Last night, the evening of a sultry day,
We sail'd triumphant on the liquid way,
To hear the fiddlers of Spring Gardens play.

Great quantities of fruit were formerly brought to the London market by the Thames. Steele describes a boat trip from Richmond, in an early summer morning, when he "fell in with a fleet of gardeners," and "landed with ten sail of apricock-boats at Strand bridge (stairs,) after having put in at Nine Elms, and taken in melons." In these days, the fruit is mostly conveyed to market in waggons.

Steam-boats, piers, and bridges, have spoiled the trade of the watermen in our time, just as coaches did in Taylor, the Water-poet's days, some two centuries since. This change in the prospects of an industrious class of men has been so severely felt as to induce a number of benevolent persons to establish an Asylum for Decayed Watermen. The Thames watermen have, however, lately set up small steam-boats of their own, which have been very successful. All boats plying for hire upon the river must be licensed by the Watermen's Company; the number of free watermen is supposed to be between 4000 and 5000; and the number of boats licensed to carry passengers was 2,728, on January 1, 1836.

Few of the Londoner's opportunities of escaping from the brick-and-mortar Babel are more inviting than the passage up the Thames, from London Bridge, by one of the little steam-boats. The coup d'œil has been thus vividly painted in "The Silent Highway," in Knight's London: "What a gorgeous scene is now before us! The evening sun is painting the waters with gleaming flames; the cross upon the summit of that mighty dome of St. Paul's shines like another sun; churches, warehouses, steam-chimneys, shot-towers, wharves, bridges—the noblest and the humblest things—are all picturesque, and the eye, looking upon the mass, sees nothing of that meanness with which our Thames banks have been reproached. In truth, this juxta-position of the magnificent and the common fills the mind with as much food for thought as if from London Bridge to Westminster there was one splendid quay, curtaining the sheds and coal-barges, and time-worn landings which meet us at every glance. The ceaseless activity with which these objects are associated renders them separately interesting. We see the goings on of that enormous traffic which makes London what it is; and whilst we rush under the mighty arches of the iron bridge, and behold another and another, and another spanning the river, looking as vast and solid as if they defied time and all the elements; and also see wharves on the one bank, although the light be waning, still populous and busy, and the foundries, and glass-houses, and printing-offices, on the other bank, still sending out their dense smoke; we know that without this never-tiring energy, disagreeable as are some of its outward forms, the splendour which is around us could not have been. * * * * We still see the admixture of the beautiful and the mean, but in another form. The dirty Whitefriars is the neighbour of the trim Temple. Praised be the venerable law which has left us one green spot, where trees still grow by our river side, and which still preserves some relics of the days that are gone! Another bridge, perhaps the noblest, is passed; and the turrets and pinnacles of Westminster are spread before us, with the smart modern mansions that have succeeded the old palatial grandeur of the seventeenth century. The sight is not displeasing, when we reflect that the ground upon which once stood some dozen vast piles, half house and half fortress, is now covered with hundreds of moderate sized dwellings, filled with comforts and even luxuries unknown to the days of rushes and tapestry, into whose true sanctuaries no force can intrude, and where, if there be peace within, there is no danger of happiness being disturbed by violence without."

Let us now glance at the comparatively few pageant glories of the river which have been spared to our utilitarian age. First, are the state-barges of her Majesty, one of which, built more than a century since, is a curious craft. Next is the Admiralty barge, in which the Lords of the Admiralty make occasional excursions. These barges, when manned by rowers in scarlet state liveries, have a very superb appearance, more especially when the gilding and highly varnished timbers of the barges are set off by the brilliancy of a summer sun. They are, however, but rarely used in comparison with the barges of the Lord Mayor and the City Companies, who have maintained this aquatic state for four centuries.

Still, the earliest account that we have of the aquatic pageantry of the Mayor is in Hall's description of the coronation of Anne Boleyn, in the year 1533; when the Mayor and citizens accompanied Anne from Greenwich to the Tower, in their barges garnished with banners and streamers, and arras and rich carpets, each barge having its "minstrelsy." There were, likewise, in the procession, barges full of ordnance, and dragons and grotesque monsters, and wild men casting fire, and making hideous noises. Here, then, we are furnished with a good idea of the ancient annual civic procession to Westminster, for the presentation of the Mayor. In the water pageants of the reign of James I., too, we find sea-chariots and artificial islands upon the river, crowned dolphins, figures of Neptune and Amphitrite, the Thames and attendants; all which were afterwards carried in the show by land. The spirit of the old water pageants has, however, long since departed, the barges alone being spared to our day. Certain companies still maintain their barges, and that of the Lord Mayor is very superb: the head and stern are richly carved and gilt, and upon the deck is a sort of pavilion, decorated with Corinthian columns and griffins' heads, superbly carved and dight with gold; and the gay craft, attended by the Companies' barges, all decorated with emblazoned banners, makes up a very splendid flotilla upon Lord Mayor's and other excursion days. Upon the latter occasions, his lordship and the civic authorities proceed up or down the river, to hold Courts of Conservancy, or in "swan-upping" (i. e., taking up and marking the City swans); and the day concludes with a luxurious banquet, at a river-side tavern, or in a spacious barge, maintained for these unbounded hospitalities.

The last "princely pageant" on the Thames was at the opening of the new London Bridge, by William IV. and Queen Adelaide, on August 1, 1831; when their Majesties, attended by the Corporation, proceeded in superb state barges, and partook of a banquet upon the new bridge; the river between which and Southwark Bridge, was covered with the richly gilt barges, and a fleet of steamers and wherries, all freighted with gay company, and presenting a scene of splendour vieing with the magnificence of olden Venice.

The maintenance of the aquatic civic state is costly, it is true, but it may have its sweet uses. We find the Lord Mayor's state barge to have cost, in 1807, £2,579 17s. 1d. The Water Bailiff is the leading personage of the aquatic suite, and is one of the Esquires of the Lord Mayor's Household: he has a salary of £500 a-year, and a shallop, and eight men, for state occasions. The Lord Mayor has also in his suite a Barge-master, and 32 City watermen. These are serious items in this age of sweeping municipal reform.

The existing sports on the Thames, though devoid of pageantry, have a healthful influence upon the Londoners. They consist of rowing, boat-racing, and yachting, or sailing, throughout the summer and autumn; by clubs, including many of our young nobility and gentry of fortune; numbering several members of the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, and London; the scholars of Westminster, St. Paul's, and other academic foundations.

Boat-racing takes place both above and below London Bridge. The prizes are generally what are, therefore, termed "wager-boats;" and the oldest wager is that rowed for annually on the 1st of August, from the Swan at London Bridge, to the Swan at Chelsea: the prize is a Waterman's coat and silver badge, purchased from a fund bequeathed by Thomas Dogget, the comedian, who died in 1721, for the purpose of commemorating the accession of the House of Brunswick (August 1, 1714). Regattas upon a more extensive scale take place above Putney Bridge; the prizes being gold and silver cups. The Championship of the river is a post of great mark amongst the Thames men, who have long maintained their superiority over the watermen of several other large rivers; they having been victors several times at the regattas of Havre, Newcastle, Chester, Liverpool, &c. The finest wherries are mostly built on the south bank of the river, immediately above Westminster Bridge, where is the great rendezvous for the members of the Thames clubs.

The Thames has occasionally been the scene of eccentric feats, which it would here be impossible to chronicle. Among them, we find that in July, 1776, a man safely crossed the river in a butcher's tray, from Somerset-stairs, for a wager, upon which feat there was depending £14,000. Some four years since, one Scott, an American diver, leaped from the parapet of Southwark and Waterloo Bridges into the river beneath, which was nearly full of floating ice; but the poor fellow killed himself by hanging from a scaffold upon the latter bridge. Now and then, a theatrical clown navigates the river in a washing-tub, drawn by geese; and displays of fireworks are sometimes given upon the river-bank, as the finale to a courtly fête. Then, there are wonderful stories of mermaids, sharks, porpoises, and other strange fish—all "very like a whale"—leaving their ocean sire to pay their respects to London-bridge.

Sometimes, by a freak of nature, the tide falls very low, and by a very high wind, the river is blown out, i.e. the bed is here and there left dry from shore to shore. Then, many a frolicsome wight "walks across the Thames," in the hope of "setting it on fire."

Once or twice in a century, a sort of rude carnival is got up on the face of the river; this being a dainty device of man to make the lightest of a natural calamity, when the river is, in common parlance, frozen over: as, between December and February, 1434-35; for the same duration (the Great Frost), 1739-40; again, between Christmas-day and Jan. 29, 1762-63: Dec. 10 and Jan. 13, 1788-89; and in January, 1814. On most of these occasions was held a "Frost Fair," whereat booths were erected, swings and shows set up, and printing-presses made to commemorate the event. But the reader had better consult a spirited engraving of this Siberian fête, from a sketch by Luke Clennell, in No. 138 of our Journal.

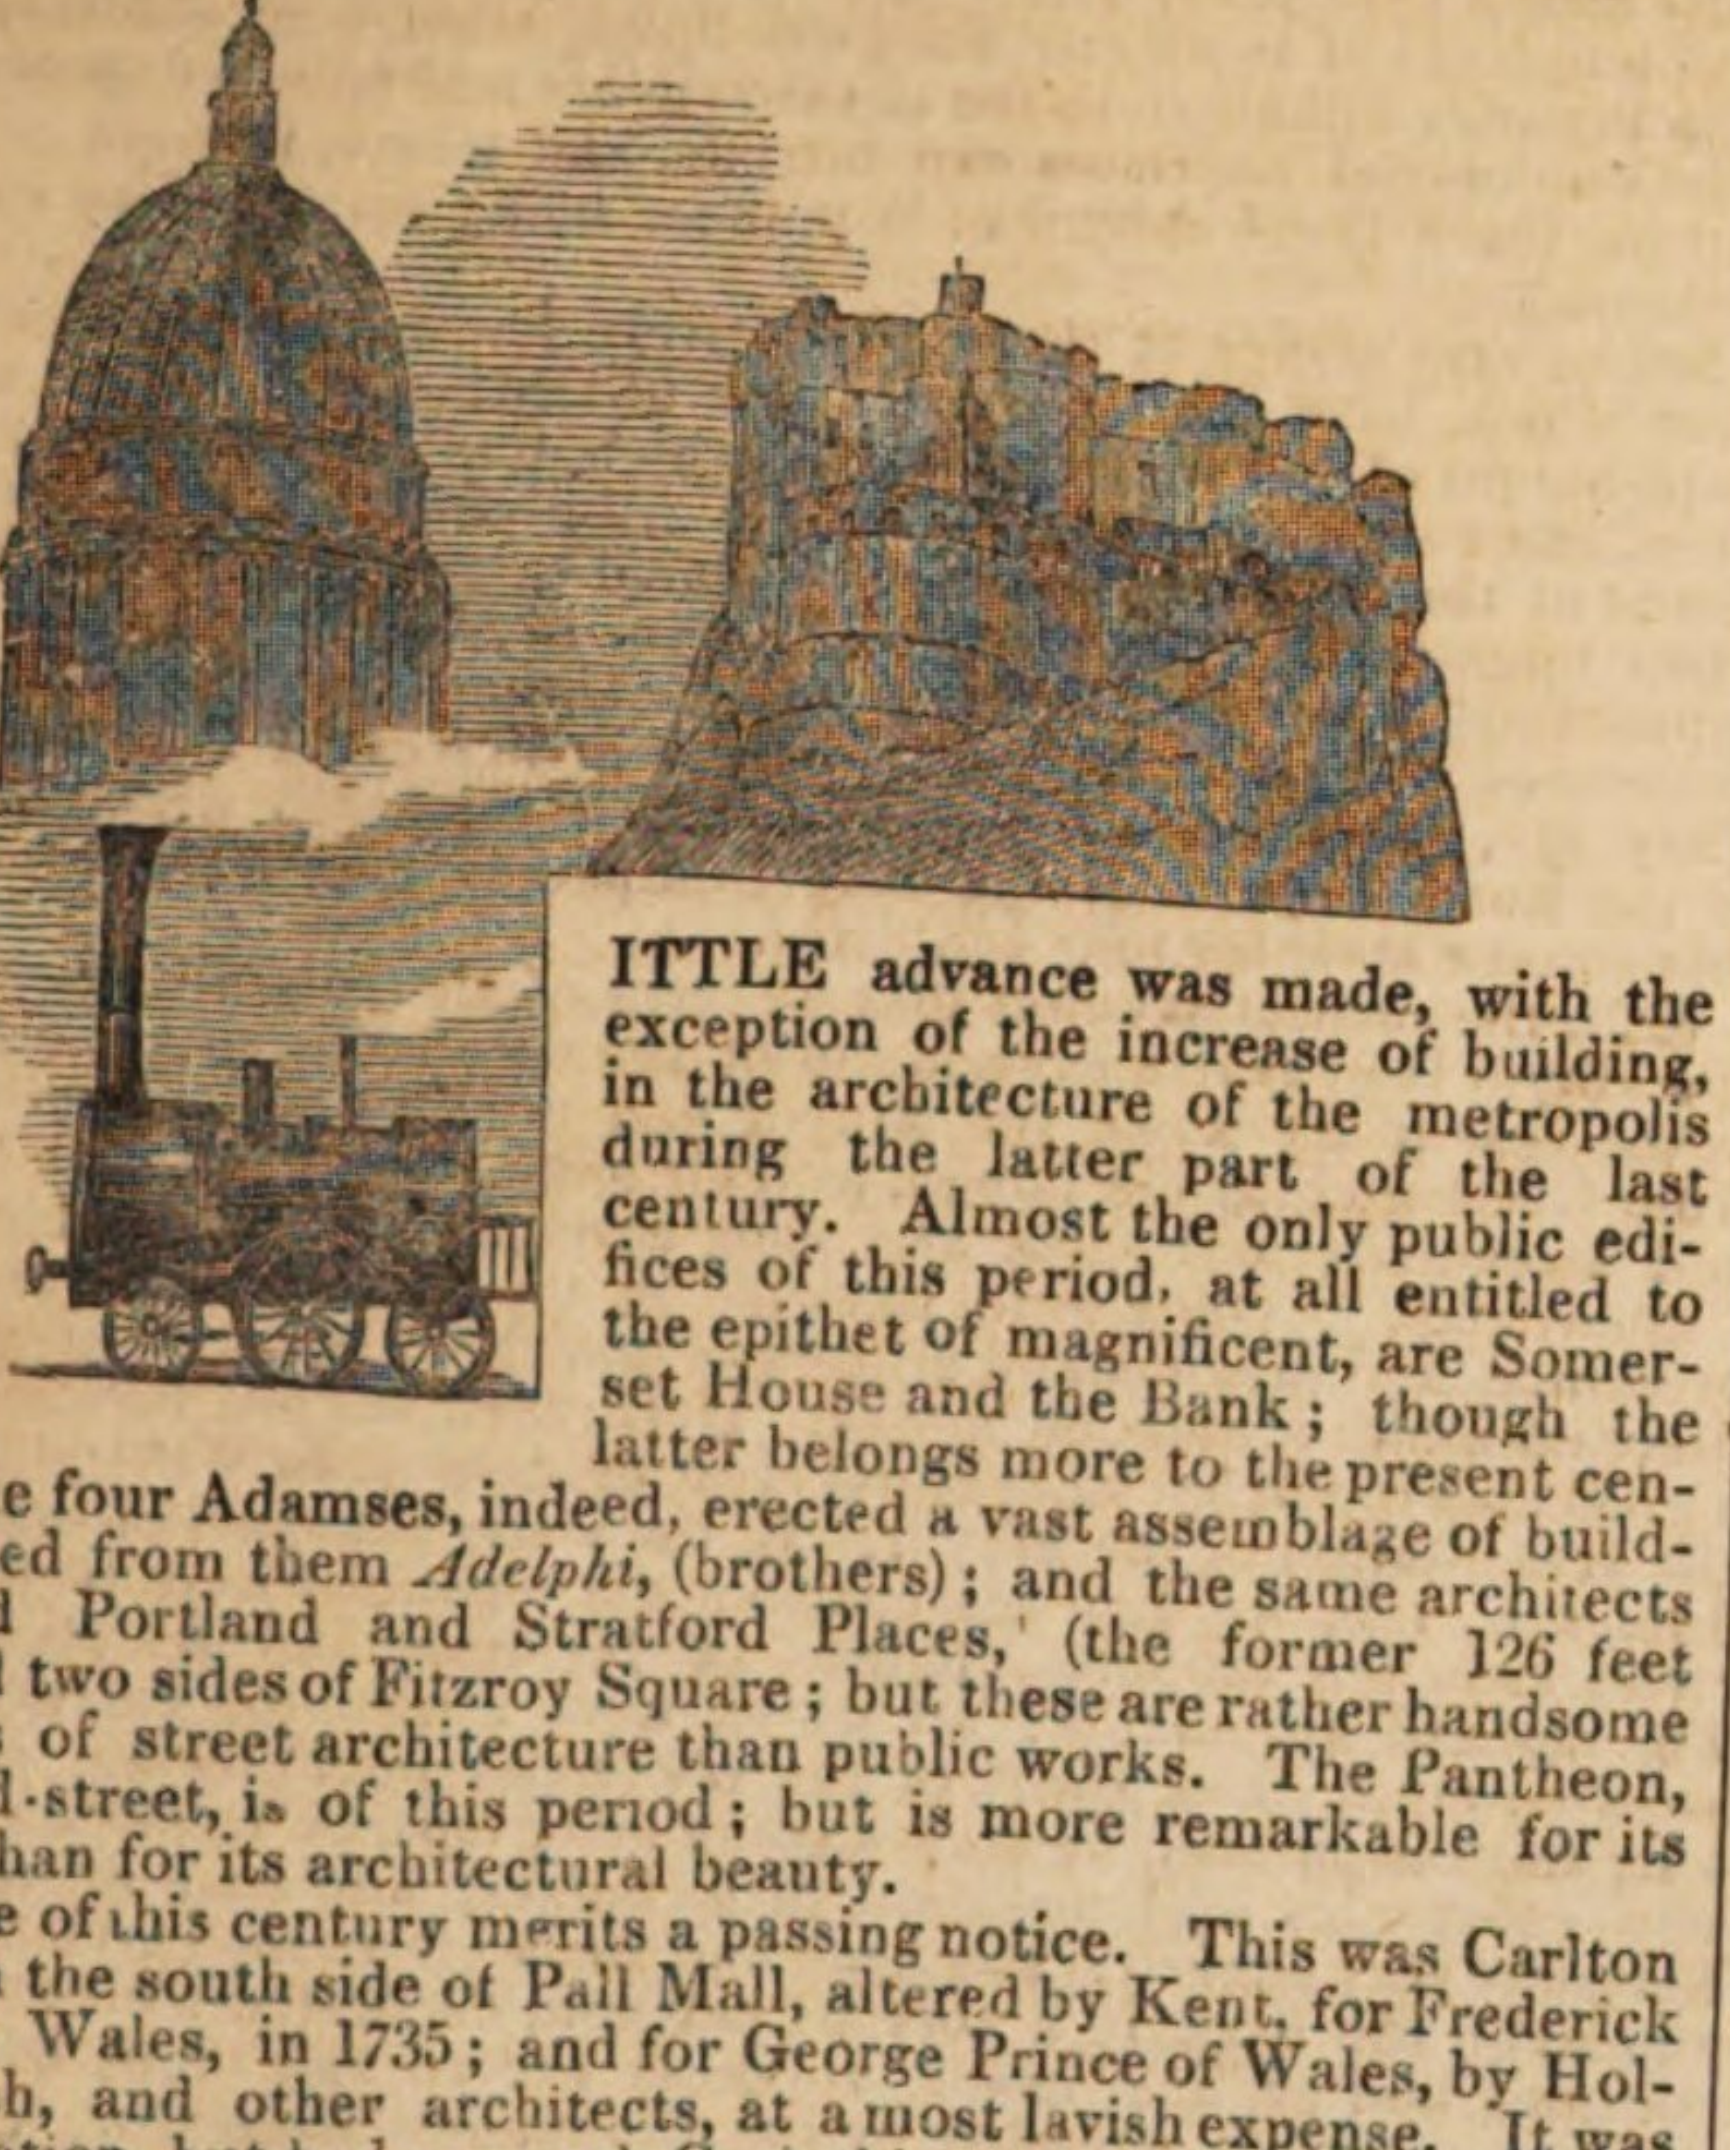
With a recapitulation of its main features, we conclude our survey of the Thames itself.

The very bold reach made by the River, in its course from Westminster, through London and Southwark, to Limehouse, adds greatly to the effect of the prospect from the water or from either of the bridges. The Thames, below bridge, is absolutely crowded with shipping of all nations:—

> The ancient, silver-watered Thames, whose tide
> Rolls riches, and whose banks are fringed with gold;
> Wealth's honour, virtue, vanity, and pride,
> Fling shadows on its stream;—its great arms fold
> Forests of masts, and scores of nations all
> Are clasp'd in its embrace, as though it own'd
> The right to keep all Argosies in thrall,
> And the world's commerce on its waters throned!

But the populous appearance of a City, by no means terminates at the Tower; for the suburb of Wapping unites with the outskirts of Stepney and Limehouse, by means of numerous houses and its large church, and covers the shores of Middlesex and Essex as they unite. On the opposite side of the river, Rotherhithe almost incorporates itself with Southwark, and stretches out to Deptford within the borders of Kent. Between the mouth of the river Lea, and that chain of populous villages which form the outskirts of London, on this side, a very extraordinary compass is made by the Thames, almost enclosing a flat, named the Isle of Dogs. Opposite to this level, where the Ravensbourne descends from Lewisham, the spires of the Deptford churches, and the magnificent Hospital at Greenwich, backed by its well-wooded park, grace the Kentish shore with great splendour; above which the elevated ground of Blackheath displays its villas and clusters of houses, commanding fine views over London, and across the Thames, towards Essex. The distance of objects on the river-bank, by its numerous windings, is very deceptive to the eye: thus, by water, Blackwall is nearly 8 miles from the City, although less than half that distance by land. From this point, the river makes another sweep to reach Woolwich, and flows on, encompassed more and more by marshes, in a broad stream with frequent windings to the sea.

LONDON IN THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.



LITTLE advance was made, with the exception of the increase of building, in the architecture of the metropolis during the latter part of the last century. Almost the only public edifices of this period, at all entitled to the epithet of magnificent, are Somerset House and the Bank; though the latter belongs more to the present century. The four Adamses, indeed, erected a vast assemblage of buildings, named from them Adelphi, (brothers); and the same architects completed Portland and Stratford Places, (the former 126 feet wide,) and two sides of Fitzroy Square; but these are rather handsome specimens of street architecture than public works. The Pantheon, in Oxford-street, is of this period; but is more remarkable for its vastness than for its architectural beauty.

A palace of this century merits a passing notice. This was Carlton House, on the south side of Pall Mall, altered by Kent, for Frederick Prince of Wales, in 1735; and for George Prince of Wales, by Holland, Nash, and other architects, at a most lavish expense. It was a low elevation, but had a superb Corinthian portico, and a screen of graceful design. The entire pile was taken down in 1828; when the Corinthian columns, being fine exemplars of the order, were reserved, and now form a redeeming feature (the portico) of the National Gallery, in Trafalgar Square. The site of the palace and gardens is now occupied by the United Service and Athenæum Club-houses, the York Column and a terrace of palatial mansions bearing the name of "Carlton."

The first great improvement of the 19th century was the building of Russell Square, (about 1803,) one of the largest areas in the metropolis, being nearly 700 feet square. It occupies the site of the gardens and ancient town mansion of the Dukes of Bedford.

Whatever may have been the metropolitan improvements projected at this period, their progress was, doubtless, checked by the renewed war with France. The buildings of the large parish of St. Mary-le-bone, however, continued to increase: it is 8¼ miles in circuit, and, till within the last 70 years, two-thirds of this vast area were chiefly pasture-fields; whereas, it is now covered with 14,169 houses. The rate of population is as follows:—in 1801, 63,982; in 1811, 75,624; in 1821,—96,040; in 1831,—122,206; and in 1841,—138,164. The borough of Mary-le-bone, however, includes the parishes of Mary-le-bone, Paddington, and Pancras, containing 293,100 inhabitants—"a population equal to that of most capitals, and in intelligence and wealth not inferior to any on the globe."

In 1812, was commenced the cutting of the Regent's Canal, at Paddington, which was completed in 1820: it proceeds north-eastward round the northern half of the Regent's Park, through Camden Town, under Islington, and the New River, and thence onward, by Stepney-fields, into the Thames, at Limehouse; its entire length being 8 miles 6 furlongs.

To the taste of George the Fourth we are unquestionably indebted for two of the most extensive improvements of this period—the relaying out of the Regent's Park, and the building of Regent-street. The former appears to have been contemplated since the year 1793; but, it was not until 1809, that Mr. Nash, the architect, began to frame his plan: it is nearly circular, with a small circle or "Ring," within which is the garden of the Royal Botanic Society; and at the north end of the Park is the garden of the Zoological Society. The area of the park is tastefully planted, and laid out with a lake and islets, and a few superb villas. Along the east, south, and west sides are splendid terraces and other ranges of buildings; the north side being open to the beautiful uplands, Primrose-hill, Highgate, and Hampstead. Altogether, this is one of the best examples of landscape-gardening and picturesque architecture in Europe; and has been very properly named after its royal patron—the Regent's Park.

In 1816, was commenced, under the same illustrious auspices, the splendid avenue, Regent-street, by which an architectural communication was opened from the Regent's Park, by Portland-place, through nearly a mile of street, to Pall Mall, subsequently extended to St. James's Park.

The houses in this magnificent street are from the designs of Nash, Soane, Repton, Decimus Burton, and other architects; and for extent and variety of architectural display, it is unparalleled in Europe. The origin of the plan, however, belongs to Mr. Nash; and one of its greatest merits is the avoidance of a common-place elbow, by the classical introduction of "the Quadrant," with its stately cast iron columns and beautiful sweep of lofty elevations. This unique contrivance may be best seen from the gallery of the York Column.* Nevertheless, no man of genius has been so lampooned as the originator of the above improvements: even his ingenious expedient of coating brickwork with Roman cement, in close imitation of stone, has been turned into epigram:—

> Augustus at Rome was for building renowned,
> And of marble he left what of brick he had found;
> But is not our Nash, too, a very great master?—
> He finds us all brick, and he leaves us all plaster.

The following tribute to Nash's genius is but late justice:—Whether the stranger traverses the splendid line of Regent-street, the Quadrant, and Portland-place, until he reaches the Regent's Park, beautifully disposed, and laid out in walks and groves, ornamented with sheets of water, dotted with elegant villas, and encircled with rows of houses of noble elevation, from classical architectural designs; or takes his way from Waterloo-place towards Somerset House, and sees before him streets, and places, and arcades, occupying the sites of the filthiest courts imaginable, and finds himself in front of the splendid church of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, able to admire its beauties, because cleared away from the wretched dwellings by which it was surrounded;—we think his first inquiry will be—to whose taste, genius, and enterprise, are these improvements owing? He will be answered by being told that they are all attributable to the genius, energy, and talent of Mr. Nash, to abuse and ridicule whom was the fashion of the time in which he lived. This is the best answer to the senseless cry raised against him by those whose enmity arose from their jealousy of the estimation in which he was held by the munificent monarch, in whose regency and reign these wonderful changes in this part of the metropolis were effected.

With two exceptions, all the London theatres were built in the present century; one excepted theatre (the Italian Opera-house) was so altered by Nash and Repton, in 1818, as to be, in appearance, a new edifice.† Covent Garden Theatre, the earliest production of Sir R. Smirke, and almost the first specimen of the Grecian Doric style in the metropolis, was built in 1808-9, upon the site of the old theatre, burned down in the first-named year: it has a splendid portico, copied from the Temple of Minerva, at Athens, and the principal front extends 220 feet. It is, indeed, a classic temple worthy of the last age of the Drama.

The sister theatre, Drury Lane, was burnt within five months of the destruction of Covent Garden: it was rebuilt, in 1811-12, by Mr. B. Wyatt, partly from the great theatre at Bordeaux, supposed to be the best in Europe for accurate sound; but it has no external architectural beauty. The rebuilding of the Haymarket Theatre, by Nash, in 1821, has already been mentioned: it has a finely-proportioned Corinthian portico. In 1834, was rebuilt the English Opera House, or Lyceum, with an elegant Corinthian portico, by Beazley; who subsequently built the St. James's Theatre. These are the only theatres noticeable for their exterior architecture; but the Princess' Theatre, in Oxford-street (fitted in 1839), has an interior of unsurpassed richness in the renaissance style.

The vast increase of the metropolis within the present century is, in some degree, recorded by the names of the additions themselves, which indicate so many towns. Thus, we have, on the north, Kentish, Camden, and Somers Towns; the two former being long links in the connexion of the metropolis with the sister villages of Hampstead and Highgate. Still more direct is the junction of the old village of Islington by Penton*ville*. North-east are Clap*ton*, Dals*ton*, and Homer*ton*, hamlets of the old parish of Hackney; and Hox*ton*, a suburb of ancient Shoreditch; these members, with Whitechapel, forming great portion of the Tower Hamlets, (villages within the jurisdiction of the Constable of the Tower), now grown so populous as to return two members to Parliament; an importance also granted by the Reform Bill, to the vast borough of Finsbury, of which Moorfields may be regarded as the ancient nucleus. Eastward of Hackney, however, the district has been, in some measure, spread this Briareus-like spread of bricks and mortar; and here Government is at this moment laying out about 290 acres, as Victoria Park, for the people. It need scarcely be added that Bethnal Green, east of Shoreditch, has entirely lost its rural aspect; as Spital*fields*, nearer the metropolis, had in the previous century. In like manner, Stepney has been joined to the town, though its Green, and old church carry us us back to the 14th century. The rapid increase of houses in this district, from Mile End Old and New Towns to the Thames at Blackwall, is a consequence of the vast Dock accommdation—all the growth of the present century: indeed, this fact is well indicated in the name of one of its leading lines—the Commercial Road.

Crossing the Thames, to the south-east, we find Greenwich, a vast parliamentary borough of nearly 30,000 souls, though still retaining much of its antique character. Deptford, through its ship-building docks and storehouses, has proportionally increased; but, in this district, there remains a greater extent of garden and meadow land than elsewhere in the environs; the site, from its lowness, being ill adapted for building. The boundary of this rurality, where still exist Willow Walk and Grange Road, is the well-built line of the Kent Road, leading to Peckham New Town.

To the south-west, Lambeth has risen to a parliamentary borough, with the hamlets of Brixton (a raw material named bricks town,) Kenning*ton*, Stockwell, and Vauxhall. This district has doubled its population since the last Census; one important item being a new parish of 30,000, consequent upon the erection of Waterloo Bridge and its meanly-built approach, Waterloo Road. Within our recollection, all the triangular space between Westminster Bridge Road and Blackfriars Road, except the river frontage, was a Marsh, not forgetting Pedlar's Acre. Kennington is, however, an olden manor, and had its royal palace till the time of Hedry VII.; but its Common is now an oasis among modern bricks and mortar.

Newington, adjoining Southwark on the west, is an offshoot of Walworth; and from its lying by the roadside to London-bridge, has far outgrown its parent. Meanwhile, Camberwell, beyond Walworth, has grown to a parish of nearly 40,000, and with its hamlets of Dulwich and Peckham, contains a vast number of handsome villas; here, within the present year, has been completed one of the largest churches of the present century; and another, of beautifully embellished character, at Herne Hill. Clapham, westward of Camberwell, was commenced building in the last century.

St. George's Fields have long since disappeared from the maps, and are now covered with buildings. Here are three noble establishments: the Philanthropic Society, for the reform of the children of vice: the School for the Indigent Blind, an extensive Tudor pile, built in 1834-7; and the royal Bethlehem Hospital (1812-15), 569 feet in length, and the best regulated institution of its class in Europe. The site of these palaces of philanthropy was, in the last century, the scene of low dissipation: how good and great is the mutation: and here, on the very focus of the "No Popery" Riots of 1780, is building a vast cathedral-like church for the Roman Catholics of the metropolis,—a striking indication of the advanced liberality of our age.

Returning to Middlesex, by Vauxhall-bridge, we reach a district where the hand of improvement is busy at this moment; though it hsould not be forgotten that George IV. purposed razing the whole space between St. James's Park, and Vauxhall-bridge-road and the Thames, and laying it out into spacious streets, crossing each other at right angles.

Chelsea remains an antique-looking river-side suburb, with its old patched-up church; though the present century has added (1820) a pointed church of considerable merit. Nor must we forget the magnificent Hospital: how characteristic is it of the British nation, that at the two extremes of its metropolis should be a palace-home for those who have so nobly contributed to its glory—the Hospital for Sailors at Greenwich, and at Chelsea for Soldiers.

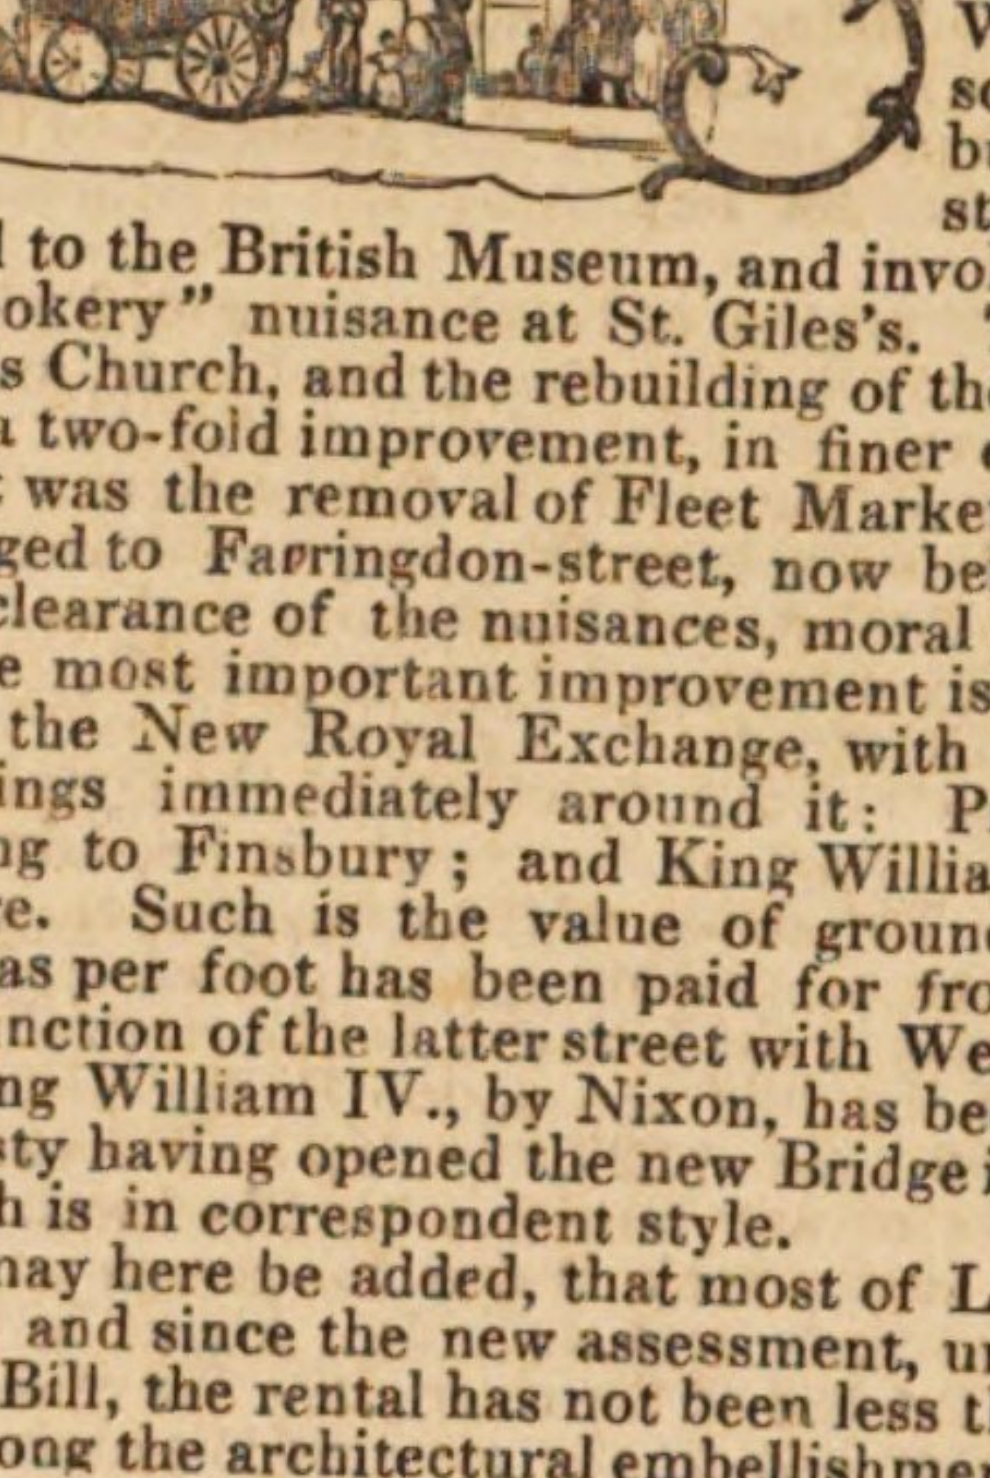
Kensington, too, retains its old fashion, borrowed from its heavy brick palace; the fine gardens of which have been much improved. At Brompton, between Kensington and Chelsea, a new town for the opulent and well-to-do is fast rising upon the old garden-ground north of the Fulham-road; and handsome squares and terraces, like London out-of-town, are already completed.

The removal of the Court to Buckingham Palace in 1830 gave considerable impetus to the improvement of Pimlico; although, a city of palatial mansions had already been commenced upon "the Five Fields," as we have already mentioned. Here are Belgrave Square, 684 by 637 ft.; Eaton Square, 1637 by 371 ft.; a graceful crescent; and several fine streets. The ground-landlord of this rapidly improving estate is the Marquis of Westminster, already reputed to be the wealthiest noble in the kingdom.

Crossing the Knightsbridge-road, we enter Hyde Park, by the new Albert Gate, flanked by two lofty mansions; and facing the north side of the Park, is Hyde Park Terrace, a range of magnificent mansions, fronted by gardens. In the rear lies a town or rather city of squares, crescents, terraces, and noble streets, of first-class houses, and a spacious church—all built within the last ten years. The increased value of this property may be estimated by the fact, that a plot of land, which in the early part of the last century was let for £12 a-year, now produces a rental of £12,000; and the manors of Paddington and Westbourne (the site of the above estate), which, at the Dissolution, produced but a trifling sum, will shortly return to the See of London a rental of £50,000 per annum.

Proceeding westward, by "the Uxbridge Road," from Hyde Park Corner through Bayswater to Notting Hill, the road is flanked with well-built houses, commencing with Connaught Terrace; and, on the western verge of Kensington Gardens, is forming a new thoroughfare to Kensington Queen's Road, on which are building several detached villas in the striking Italian style, with ornamented parapets, campanili, and prospect-towers.

The extension of the Edgware Road by lines of Grecianized villas; and the erection of an entire district, Portland New Town, with lines of tasteful villas, north-west of the Regent's Park, will complete our hasty détour of the extension of the metropolis in the present century.



STREET improvements of this century may next be glanced at; when this portion of our Key will be as complete as the allotted space will allow.

The widening of the west end of the Strand, by clearing away a large block of houses opposite Northumberland House, and a knot of courts and alleys around St. Martin's Church, was, indeed, an admirable continuation of the improvements at Pall Mall East. A great portion of the north side of the Strand was rebuilt, some new street formed, and two Hospitals erected. The Strand approach to Waterloo Bridge, with a handsome line of houses, has proved but a commencement of a fine street, to be continued northward to the British Museum, and involving the disappearance of the "Rookery" nuisance at St. Giles's. The removal of Old St. Dunstan's Church, and the rebuilding of the same, at some distance back, was a two-fold improvement, in finer edifice, and widened roadway. Next was the removal of Fleet Market, the name of the site being changed to Farringdon-street, now being continued northward, with the clearance of the nuisances, moral and physical, of Saffron-hill.

The most important improvement is, however, that which radiates from the New Royal Exchange, with a fine area, and some tasteful buildings immediately around it: Prince's and Moorgste-streets leading to Finsbury; and King William-street approaching London Bridge. Such is the value of ground in this locality, that seven guineas per foot has been paid for frontage in the latter street. At the junction of the latter street with Wellington-street, a noble statue of King William IV., by Nixon, has been appropriately placed; his Majesty having opened the new Bridge in 1831. The Southwark approach is in correspondent style.

It may here be added, that most of London is built on long leasehold; and since the new assessment, under the Poor Law Amendment Bill, the rental has not been less than £7,000,000.

Among the architectural embellishments of the Town itself are but two Arches, such as are the pride of the great Continental cities. These are the arch at Buckingham Palace, and that at Hyde Park Corner: opposite the latter is an elegant screen of fluted Ionic columns, the principal entrance to Hyde Park. There are likewise only two Arcades, of any architectural pretension: the Burlington, in Piccadilly; and the Lowther in the West Strand, the latter a very graceful design.

Of Statues there are fewer than might be expected in a country producing so many illustrious men: but they are costly memorials, a fine equestrian bronze statue being estimated at from £8,000 to £10,000.

Club-houses, as architectural piles, are altogether of the present century. In St. James's-street, Crockford's, the Alfred, and the Conservative, altogether eclipse the plain brick club-mansions of the last century. The Conservative, just completed by Basevi and S. Smirke, is one of the richest pieces of architecture in the metropolis. Pall Mall is fast assuming a patrician air from the number and vastness of its club-houses: in these, the choice Italian style is most successful, as in the Reform and Travellers', by Barry; the former adapted from the Farnese Palace at Rome. The Grecian club-houses are also much admired; the Athenæum, by D. Burton, has a fine bas relief freize, the only specimen in London.

Of Market-places, three important specimens have been built within 15 years. These are Covent Garden, of little ornamental merit; Hungerford, from the model of a Roman market-place; and Farringdon, west of Farringdon-street, in the Italian style.

Cemeteries (burial grounds planted with shrubs and flowers), are suburban introductions of very recent date, to supersede the deleterious practice of burying in churches and churchyards in the town. The largest and first established cemetery is that at Kensal Green, on the road to Harrow. There are others—at the foot of Highgate churchyard, the most picturesque yet formed; at Earl's Court (West London), with showy architecture; at Stoke Newington; at Norwood, Nunhead (Peckham), and elsewhere. The Kensal Green Cemetery had long to contend with the objection to bury in these planted grounds, as assimilating to the Roman Catholic observance; but, this overcome, the cemetery is fast filling, and contains several costly monuments of admirable design. Here was buried H.R.H. the Duke of Sussex, in 1843.

Gas-lighting has now been adopted for 35 years; but, so great was the difficulty of introducing gas into common use, that the first Gas-light Company fitted up and supplied shops with gas free of expense, in order to show its superiority, to the public. The first public building lit with gas was Westminster Bridge, in 1814. For lighting London and its suburbs, there are now employed 18 gas-works, 12 companies, and 2,500 persons; the capital employed exceeds £2,800,000; there are about 180,000 tons of coals used annually, 1,460,000 000 cubic feet of gas made, supplying 134,300 private lights, 30,400 public lights: and half a million of money is annually netted by the several companies. For the morality and order of the metropolis, this new light has been of incalculable benefit. The Bude and Boccius lights have been recently introduced experimentally for street lamps; but oil lights are now very rarely seen.

Pavement.—The streets of London were not paved at the end of the eleventh century. In 1315 and 1353, writs were issued by the King for the repair of the road between Temple Bar and the palace at Westminster. Holborn and other streets were first paved in 1417, and many more in the reign of Henry VIII. It is curious to observe that after many ages of imperfect paving, we have returned to the plan adopted by the old Romans in their roads. The new pavement of Holborn is based upon broken granite instead of loose earth, and grouted in with concrete just as the upper layer of the Roman road was lain upon rubble, rough stone, or broken pottery, as may be seen in the streets of Pompeii.

* The reader will, doubtless, recollect that we have already presented him with a splendid view of the Improvement of Western London, in the Large View, published with the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, in January, 1842; to which Print, "London and the Thames" forms an appropriate companion.

† The other exception is Sadler's Wells Theatre.

Macadamization, or paving with small broken granite, paving with multiform blocks of wood, and the laying of footways with asphalte, are novelties of our times.

The Police System was introduced into the metropolis (except the City), and the Nightly Watch superseded in 1829, when so unpopular was the measure that it was the cause of many street riots. The entire force now consists of about 3400 individuals, including officers; their district from Brentford to the river Lea; and from Highgate to Streatham and Norwood. The City police force numbers 501 individuals.

Sewers.—There are no means of ascertaining the aggregate length of the sewers throughout the circuit of 10 miles from the Post-office; those under the City are about 15 miles in extent, but from only a small portion of the drainage of the metropolis.

Railways.—There are ten termini in the metropolis, or suburbs Birmingham, Eastern Counties, Blackwall, Greenwich, Dover, Croydon, Brighton, South Western, Great Western, and West London; most of which are shown in the View.

We now proceed to a more direct detail of

The Picture;

HARACTERISING, in the manner of a catalogue raisonnée, the principal objects denoted in the appended OUTLINE KEY; each of which is indicated by the figure within brackets — thus: St. Paul's Cathedral [104]. The reader need not be reminded that we have already drawn the main characteristics of the River Thames itself and its Bridges, as well as of the vast Town, its history and progress to its present magnitude.

For convenience, we shall sub-divide the Picture as follows:—

VAUXHALL TO WESTMINSTER BRIDGE.

In the foreground are part of the ancient suburb of Lambeth (16), and Lambeth Church and the Tudor Archiepiscopal Palace (37): the latter has been enlarged and restored at the expense of the present Primate; and is alike a monument of his good taste and piety. The Great Hall (now the Library), is one of the finest apartments of its class.

To the right is Astley's Amphitheatre (38), rebuilt last year, the former theatre having been burnt down in the previous year; the present being the fourth theatre erected upon this site.

A theatre of this century (the Brunswick), built in seven months, in Goodman's Fields, may be mentioned here: it was opened Feb. 25, 1828, and performed in only three nights; for during a morning rehearsal, on Feb. 28, the whole pile fell to the ground, by which 10 persons were killed, and several seriously injured. It was built at the cost of £25,000, and had the most characteristic theatrical façade in the metropolis. It occupied the site of the Royalty theatre, at the opening of which, in 1787, Braham, the vocalist, first appeared. In the same locality, in 1728, was built "Garrick's Theatre," where the English Roscius drew his best audiences.

Leftward, the eye turns to Vauxhall Bridge (15); next to Sloane-street, Chelsea (61), a sort of professional town; and to the Horse Guards Barracks, at Knightsbridge (5), and the Palace of Kensington (4), the birth-place of our beloved Queen. Belgrave-square (7) is next in the view; beyond it Hyde Park (3), 380 acres: and northward, the church lately erected for this magnificent locality: for which, it is gratifying to add, the large sum of £8000 was subscribed in a few weeks. The Railway to the extreme left, is a portion of the Great Western Line.

The Regent's Park (17) contains 372 acres, and its terraces and canal, 80 acres; the tumulus in the horizon is Primrose Hill (19), the long-maintained free ground of the Londoners; to the right is the Colosseum (18), thoroughly refitting, the vast picture of London restored, &c.; the building, generally, resembles the Pantheon at Rome. Lower is Trinity Church (20), one of the best of Soane's churches; and next, All Souls (34), which well nigh extinguished the architect, Nash. Of the splendid Regent-street (33), we have already spoken.

At Hyde Park corner, Apsley House (21), cased with stone, about fourteen years since, was thus converted from a mean brick building to a very palace. (23 and 22) are the entrances to Hyde and the Green Parks, the latter 56 acres; (10) is the Palace Garden, and (12) Buckingham Palace, with all its faults a superb pile; though Waagen, the German critic, thinks "it looks as if some wicked magician had suddenly transformed some capricious stage scenery into solid reality." The cost of the marble arch (a very blank imitation of the antique) was £50,000; and 10 000 guineas for the superb gates and railing—the gates the finest in Europe. To the left is the Royal Mews (11), where the state carriage may be inspected.

Drop we down to a less agreeable object, a pentagonal prison, the Penitentiary (14) at Milbank, reminding one of the towers of the French Bastille. St. John's (13) is one of Queen Anne's churches, designed by Archer, but often attributed to Vanbrugh, and sometimes compared to an inverted dining-table, with the four legs and castors in the air!

Here we reach three of the finest objects in the view· the New Houses of Parliament (26 and 27), completed; the river frontage 800 feet, the massive Victoria Tower at the west end, and the Clock Tower eastward:—

The Senate-house! how bravely it doth rise
  Upon the river brink—a noble sight:
Not Wisdom's shrine of mind for centuries,
  But a new Phœnix full of life and light!

And as the waters flow beneath its walls,
  And catch their shadows in the silver stream,
May Truth's fine echoes greet them from its halls,
  And patriot virtue kindle, glow and gleam!

Adjoining is Westminster Hall (28), 238 feet long, and 68 feet wide, the largest apartment, without columns, in England; but at Padua is a hall 300 feet long by 100 feet wide. The carved roof at Westminster is of oak, and not of chesnut, as generally stated. Westminster Abbey (25), despite Wren's Italianised Gothic towers (102 feet high), is to Britons the most interesting edifice in England.

The Abbey! 'tis a plile to fill the gaze,
  And shut out meaner objects from the sight;
Memories of men who made the world's amaze
  Rise with it: it has past and present light;
Its lordly beauty hath a sacred air—
  A temple stemming Time and all his waves!
But the soul thinks of genius buried there,
  And God's great spirits in their treasured graves.

St. James's Park (29) contains 87 acres; its beautiful landscape-garden can be seen well from the palace windows; and the sovereign, when seated on the throne, may, by a slight turn of the head, enjoy a magnificent coup d'œil of St. Paul's and old London. At one angle of the Green Park is Sutherland House (24), or rather Palace, for such it would have been styled in other times. Nearly adjoining is St. James's Palace (30), externally an unsightly pile, but containing the most convenient suite of state rooms in Europe: they have lately been superbly refitted.

WESTMINSTER TO WATERLOO BRIDGE.

Westminster Bridge is now the oldest bridge across the Thames at London; about midway between which and Waterloo Bridge (122) is a Suspension Bridge, unfinished (54). In the foreground (Pedlar's Acre), there is little to notice except the lion on the Brewery (116), and the Shot-tower (118). The latter, Mr. Hosking, the architect, considers finer than the Monument: both are cylindrical in shaft, but the Monument is crowned with a square abacus, and the Shot-tower by a bold cornice, following the outline of the tower. "The greater simplicity and consequent beauty of the latter is such as to strike the most unobservant." This is a good lesson in "how to observe."

Reverting to the left, is (40) the classic pile of the Board of Trade and Privy Council Offices: the front in Whitehall, with its beautiful columns from the Campo Vaccino, at Rome, is fine; but the Council Chamber is a very gem. The Horse Guards (41), though built by Kent, and the Admiralty (43) are tasteless piles; and the redeeming edifice of the locality is Inigo Jones's Banquetting Hall (42), opposite. The York Column (31) is a poor imitation of Trajan's column, but is utterly devoid of its magnificence and grandeur: our column and statue are 137 feet high. Of (46) the beautiful Italian Opera House, and (47) the Haymarket, one of Nash's best porticoes, we have already spoken. In the distance (35) lie the New Road, and (36) Hampstead.

Northumberland House (53), one of the most magnificent of the town mansions of our nobility, is a fine specimen of the architecture of the time of James I.; it was built by Bernard Jansen, a Flemish architect; or, according to some, by Miles Glover; and Inigo Jones had a share in some additions: it is kept in splendid repair; the lion on the central parapet is the crest of the Percys.

What can be said for Trafalgar-square, the Nelson Column, and the National Gallery (44, 45, 48), but that the finest site in London has not been made the most of; that the column and statue are 177 feet high, but the bas-reliefs for the pedestal are not yet executed:—

Behold, anent Art's palace, near a church
  Of most surpassing beauty, and amid
Statues of kings, a pillar! no research
  Need peer it out, for it will not be hid:
Up in the broad day's lustre doth it stand,
  A column raised to dear and dazzling fame,
Mantling with pride the bosom of the land,
  And stamping glory there with Nelson's name;

The National Gallery, 461 feet in length, is scarcely equal to the Royal Mews, which it displaced: still, it cost but little more than the arch at Buckingham Palace, and the beautiful columns for the portico were borrowed from Carlton Palace. St. Martin's Church, by Gibbs (50), is a satisfactory relief: the spire was struck by lightning in 1842, and its repair cost £1000, paid by the Phœnix and Sun Fire Insurance Offices; the vane is 6 feet 6 inches high, and 5 feet long.

Hungerford Market (52) has a characteristic river front; and the Adelphi Terrace (55) may serve as a model for the Thames Embankment Committee; it commands, perhaps, the finest architectural view of London obtainable. The Adelphi Theatre (56) and Exeter Hall (61), have each equally characteristic fronts; one is allowably fanciful, and the other severe Grecian; the Great Hall is 90 feet broad, 138 long, and 48 high, and will hold 4000 persons. Some what to the right is the English Opera House (60), with an elegant portico, in the new street, in a line with Waterloo Bridge. Of Covent Garden (57), and the Theatres (58, 59), we have already spoken.

St. Giles's-in-the-Fields (63) has a tower and spire 160 feet high; and St. George's, Bloomsbury (62), by Hawksmoor, is surmounted by George I., an eccentricity which has often caused the merit of the edifice to be underrated; the portico is magnificent, and the tower, in position, original. A little northward is the British Museum (64), now re-building by Smirke, in severe, substantial style. In the distance is the populous district of Camden Town (65).

WATERLOO TO BLACKFRIARS BRIDGE.

The bridges have been elsewhere detailed:—

Fond memory need not stratch her gaze afar
  To grasp two heroes in her wondering view;
There, the tall pillar tells of Trafal*gar*,
  And here—the stately bridge—of Waterloo!

The Shot-tower (20), to the left, is memorable as having been burnt several feet at the top, a few years since, with magnificent effect. On the opposite bank, Somerset House, built by Chambers (79), is altogether, a most satisfactory edifice, though it cost more than half a million sterling: the river-front is 800 feet in length, and the terrace, one of the finest in the world: the depth to the Strand front is 500 feet; the masonry throughout is admirable, the sculptural details very elaborate, and the interior splendid; the eastern wing King's College (80), was only completed in 1834:

No more a palace, yet it seems to rise,
  And in palatial grandeur stand apart
From meaner structures, with a giant size,
  And dark walls buried in the river's heart!

Gibbs' elegant church of St. Mary-le-Strand (81) was the first built of Queen Anne's churches; and eclipses its neighbour, St. Clement's, (82), though its lofty tower and steeple, 116 feet high, are also by Gibbs.

Opposite this church, on the south side of the Strand, is the office of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS (83), in the rear of which, by two machines, driven by a steam-engine of 6-horse power, &c., this journal is printed, sometimes at the rate of 2000 impressions within the hour. It may be some gratification for readers at a distance to identify, in our Large Print, the spot whereon it has been engraved.

Temple Bar (84), built by Wren, in 1670-2, next appears; and further east, is the new Tudor Church of St. Dunstan-in-the-West (86), by Shaw, with a lantern, resembling the famed Boston tower: it is 130 feet high; the body of the church is octagonal, and handsomely fitted. The house to the west is a copy of the street architecture of the reign of James I. Opposite lies the Temple, with its beautiful round church, just restored at a vast expense; its Hall, a fine specimen of its kind; and its pleasant gardens (85) on the Thames bank. Eastward is Trinity Church, Gough-square (87), an Anglo-Norman structure, by Barry, with a tower 80 feet high. Beyond it is Wren's church of St. Andrew, Holborn, with a square tower, 110 feet high, very finely situated. Returning to Fleet-street, is one of Wren's master-pieces, St. Bride's Church, with a tower and steeple of varied beauty, 226 feet high, and a fine peal of 12 bells. Between these two churches lies Farringdon Market (94).

Lincoln's Inn Fields (76), in its dimensions compared with the base of the Great Pyramid of Egypt, is: L. I. F., 821 feet by 625 feet—Pyramid, 764 feet on each side; so that the area of the latter is greater by some thousand square feet. On the east side of "the Fields" Mr. Hardwick is building a vast Tudor pile (77), containing a fine Tudor Hall and Library for the Society of Lincoln's Inn, to whom belong Stone Buildings (78).

North of Holborn lie Gray's Inn (71) and Furnival's Inn (72): to the former has lately been added a beautiful Library, &c., and it has a fine Elizabethan Hall; the latter Inn is entirely of this century. To the left is the Sessions House, Clerkenwell Green (90), a building of considerable merit; and, close by, is St. James's Church (91), by Carr, with a lofty tower and spire. Clerkenwell (100) is an ancient district, but its history may be read on the parish pump. Between it and St. Andrew's (89) is St. Peter's, Saffron Hill (90), a Tudor church, by Barry. In the middle distance is the Scotch Church, Regent-square (69), with two lofty pinnacled towers, which are very conspicuous in views of London. To the left is St. Pancras, New Road (68), with a classic lantern tower, 168 feet high, and one of our most embellished exteriors. Just beyond it is the vast terminus of the London and Birmingham Railway (67), with a pure Grecian Doric propylæum, by Hardwick, 72 feet high; the columns, 154 feet, 2 inches, are loftier than those of any other building in the metropolis.

Two prisons (73), Cold Bath Fields House of Correction, and the Pentonville Model Prison (74), merit a passing notice; the latter was completed in 1843, and has been fully described in this journal. Copenhagen House (75), to the left, is one of the oldest suburban taverns.

BLACKFRIARS TO SOUTHWARK-BRIDGE.

The foreground is the commencement of Bankside, with its wharves and factories; among which rises the new church of St. Peter (163), a neat Early English structure. On the opposite river bank lie several of Wren's churches: St. Andrew of the Wardrobe, with a square tower, 86 feet high; St. Bene't's, Thames-street (115); St. Mary Somerset (124); St. Nicholas Cole Abbey (127), with a steeple, 135 feet high; Allhallows, Bread-street (126), with a decorated tower 86 feet high; St. Michael, Queenhithe (133), with a tower and spire 135 feet high, and for a vane a ship that will hold a bushel of wheat; St. James's, Garlickhithe (135), with a tower 98 feet high; St. Mary Aldermary (134), Bow-lane, in the florid Gothic style, with a tower 135 feet high, built at the expense of one individual, Henry Rogers, Esq.

We now come to one of Wren's masterpieces, St. Mary-le-bow, Cheapside, (132) founded on a Roman pavement; with a tower and beautiful spire, and dragon vane 10 feet long; the spire is of ingenious and scientific construction, and its entire height is 225 feet. Two other churches by Wren, St. Lawrence Jewry (130), and St. Michael Bassishaw, (129); the former has a gridiron vane (St. Lawrence's emblem), and the steeple is 130 feet high; the interior is rich Corinthian. St. Alban's, Wood-street (128) in the later pointed style, has a tower 92 feet high.

Another of Wren's churches, St. Sepulchre's (95), was a showy pinnacled tower, but a finely groined porch of much greater beauty. Beyond it is the area of Smithfield Market (96), with St. Bartholomew's Hospital (97), and the Saxon and Norman Priory Church of St. Bartholomew the Great, one of the most ancient in the metropolis, it having escaped "the Great Fire."

Christ's Hospital (99), with its noble Hall, rebuilt by Shaw, lies to the right; and next is Christchurch, Newgate-street (101), by Wren, where the Spital Sermons are preached: it has a passage beneath the tower, which, with the steeple, is 153 feet high.

Newgate (103), has greater architectural merit than is commonly thought. In front of this prison, criminals have been executed since 1783, before which the executions took place at Tyburn. In 1785, within ten months, no fewer than 96 persons were executed by "the New Drop" at Newgate! Thank Heaven, times are changed. In a line with Newgate are the Old Bailey Courts; the gigantic ventilating cowl on which is 15 feet diameter, weighs nearly 2 tons, and the point of the vane arrow 150 lbs. To the right of the prison lies Newgate (meat) Market (103). Here we may glance at the Fleet Prison (93), which we hope soon to see taken down.

St. Paul's Cathedral (104) requires a volume of description. (See Dugdale's folio.) The dome is Wren's finest specimen of construction. it is 145 feet in diameter, the lantern weighs 700 tons, and the height from the ground to the top of the cross is 340 feet. The crypt beneath is entire. It has been said that St. Paul's has its Painters' Corner, just as Westminster Abbey has its Poet's—so many artists being buried in the former. St. Paul's was completed in 35 years, yet cost less than has been expended on the restoration of Windsor Castle, or the building of Waterloo Bridge: Wren received for his services only £300 per annum.

From whatever point this majestic church is viewed, we cannot fail to be struck with its fine geometrical proportions, and to be impressed with its grandeur and beauty:

St. Paul's! fine edifice! the spirit's pause
  Of silent wonder is thy trophy now:
Mighty, majestic temple of God's laws!
  Grand as the thought upon a giant's brow!
Marvellous monument! too great for Time
  To clasp or crumble as he wrecks the world;
And rising o'er, as from a throne sublime,
  The morning mists that round thy form have curl'd!

Oft have we gazed on thee at early day,
  And seen thy presence burst as from a cloud,
When the sun came with his most golden ray,
  And melted off the darkness of that shroud!
And then, when forth thy living splendour spread
  In its full majesty, the ground we trod
Seem'd hallow'd by thy shadow, and we said,
  "This is a temple worthy of a God!"

In the rear of St. Paul's is the new French Protestant Church. Opposite is the General Post Office (106), St. Martin-le-Grand, built by Smirke, in 1823-29: it has a frontage of 390 feet, and three porticoes—the central one hexastyle, from the Temple of Minerva Polias, at Athens: for utility, strength, and beauty, this is, perhaps, the finest structure in the metropolis. In the rear of the Post Office, (105) is Goldsmiths' Hall, designed by Hardwick, in the Italian style, and the most magnificent of the City Halls: the interior is very gorgeous, and comports well with the opulence of this ancient Company, whose funds have not, however, been misappropriated in re-building their Hall.

Three churches next merit notice: 1. St. Giles's, Cripplegate (108), built in the pointed style, about 1595, and containing a peal of 13 bells: here rest Speed and Glover, the antiquaries; Fox, the martyrologist; and, above all, John Milton, clarum et venerabile nomen. 2. St. Luke's, Old-street-road (110), one of Queen Anne's churches, built by Dance, with a singular fluted obelisk stone spire. 3. St. Thomas's, Goswell-street, a recent Anglo-Norman church. To the right is St. Luke's Lunatic Hospital (109), built by Prof. Dance, in 1782, "as characteristic of its uses as that of Newgate," by the same architect.

In the horizon lies Islington, with its lofty spired old church (112); and to the left the busy City Road, with the gay Eagle Tavern (113).

SOUTHWARK TO LONDON BRIDGE.

The lofty building west of the Southwark Bridge, on the Middlesex bank, is Hambro' Wharf, a good specimen of a carriers' and railway agents' depôt, whence goods are forwarded daily to all parts.

The Southwark foreground of the picture is the continuation of Bankside, more than half of which, in width, is occupied by the vast brewery of Messrs. Barclay and Perkins (164), covering several acres, including the site of the famed Globe Theatre. The premises, with their quadrangle of stables and sheds, cooperage and carpenters' shops, engine-houses, malt-lofts (for 20,000 quarters), brew-houses, and storehouses, with vats the height of small houses, is "a complete town:" it is by far the largest establishment of the kind in the world, and is frequently visited by foreigners of distinction: the consumption of malt in one year at this brewery, has been 106,345 quarters.

To the left is the magnificent church of St. Mary Overie (165), from the tower of which Hollar drew his famed "View of London." We have already referred to the early history of this priory church: it was restored at the close of the 14th century; and here were tried some of the martyrs of the next century. The church has been restored, and part rebuilt within the last thirty years, at a cost of not less than £80,000: its plan is cruciform, and at the east end is the ladye-chapel (167). In this repair, only the fine tower, 35ft. square, and 150 ft. high, with the choir and ladye-chapel, have been restored—the excellent work of George Gwilt: the transepts have been altered, and the nave rebuilt, in very incongruous taste: the latter is now used as a disttrict church from the choir. Here lie Gower, the poet; Bishop Andrews;

Shakspeare's brother, Edmond; and "Philip Massinger, a stranger." The tower contains a musical peal of 12 bells. The restored altar-screen must not be forgotten. To the left of the church are some fragments of the ancient palace of the Bishops of Winchester; among which is a circular window, beautiful even in ruin.

The large house south-west of London Bridge is a fine hotel (166), the roof of which has been oddly compared to dish-covers. At the opposite end of the bridge is the new Fishmongers' Hall (169), by Roberts, the third Hall of the Company built nearly on this site. The style is Ionic, and the river front is somewhat imposing. Here is said to be preserved the identical dagger with which Sir W. Walworth (a Fishmonger) stabbed Wat Tyler. The dagger was, however, quartered in the City arms long before Walworth's time, and is intended for the sword of St. Paul, the patron saint of the Corporation.

Several of Wren's churches may be noticed here: (158) St. Clement's, Eastcheap, with a spire 88 feet high; (154) St. Peter's, Cornhill, with a key, the emblem of St. Peter, as a vane; (153) St. Michael's, Cornhill, with a tower imitated from that of Magdalen College, Oxford, 130 feet high; (151) St. Mary Abchurch, with a cupola painted by Thornhill, and a tower and spire 140 feet high; (150) St. Swithin's, against which is placed the Roman milliarium, within a case, by Wren—the tower and spire are 150 feet high; (136) St. Michael Royal, Thames-street, with a spire and tower 90 feet high, and a beautifully-carved altar-piece, by Gibbons; (138) St. Antholine, Watling-street, with an oval dome, and a steeple 154 feet high; (137) St. Mary, Aldermanbury; (143) St. Margaret, Lothbury, with a tower and spire 140 feet high; (152) Allhallows, Thames-street, with a finely-carved oak screen, and a tower 86 feet high; and (159) St. Benet's, Gracechurch-street, with a tower and spire 149 feet high.

Next the Mansion House (146) is St. Stephen's, Walbrook, famous all over Europe as Wren's master-piece, but of late contumaciously neglected. The magnificent insulated pile (145) is the New Royal Exchange, by Tite, already illustrated and described, from the grass-hopper vane to the tesselated flooring, in our journal. The portico is the finest work of the kind in London, and the edifice is altogether an honour to the City, and one of the noblest monuments in the metropolis. In the area, before the portico, is Chantrey's equestrian statue of the Duke of Wellington. The insulated buildings northward are the Bank of England (144), in decorating which Soane revelled in classic antiquity and florid fancy. South-eastward are the Sun and Alliance Insurance Offices, exquisitely embellished; and onward, in Threadneedle-street, is the Hall of Commerce (155), with a beautiful frieze; (156) the South Sea House is, externally, blank brickwork, but has within a handsome court-yard and Doric colonnade. The Wesleyan Conference Hall (157), and the London Tavern (160), "open to any one," complete our survey in this direction.

In the distance lies Finsbury, with the Romanized Circus (141); the large Square (140); Finsbury Chapel (148); Catholic Chapel (149): and the London Institution (142), the latter a capacious structure, by Brooks. In the left distance lie the Armoury and Ground of the Hon. Artillery Company, a voluntary corps of armed citizens, and the Sovereign's body-guard upon royal visits to the City.

Two edifices of this section remain to be noticed: (131) Guildhall, with its tasteless façade, though it possesses one of the best sites in London for architectural effect; and (147) the London and Westminster Bank, Lothbury, by Cockerell and Tite, with a most characteristic exterior, and an interior arrangement considered unique: the Town bank is the entire height of the building, 59 feet 6 inches.

We have scarcely referred to our Metropolis in comparison with other European capitals, on which, however, it will be better to quote the opinions of a travelled and highly accomplished German tourist:—

> This town is really immeasurable; and though, perhaps, there is no one point so beautiful and so rich as the Pont des Arts, in Paris, or the exit from the Linden, in Berlin; yet, on the other hand, fresh masses and rows of houses, palaces, shops, &c., continually arise before you. The number of coaches and equipages far exceeds all that can be seen in other cities; and you are led to think something extraordinary is going on in this or that street, whereas it is only the daily customary routine. That so many human beings can live together in such a space, carry on their occupations, and procure food, seems, in spite of all explanations, a miracle, and indicates a pitch of civilization, compared to which the latifundia are at best but grazing-grounds and sheep-walks All the continental capitals are capitals of one country only; London is the capital of Great Britain, and of so many other countries beside; and it is, at the same time, the greatest commercial city in the world. In this union of metropolitan and commercial city, lies its peculiar character—its exhaustless principle of life and increase. Madrid, Paris, Rome, Vienna, Berlin, &c., are capitals, and act only as such; they are not, from their very position, power, and industry, also essentially commercial cities. Petersburg has some resemblance with London, but is far from being equally favoured by climate and situation.

LONDON BRIDGE TO GREENWICH.

Before we leave the bridge, let us remind the reader that from its eastern parapet, the Port of London is best seen; for, here a vast forest of masts rises with picturesque effect upon the broad haven of the Thames. Then, may be seen flags of almost every nation on the globe: the clumsy and grotesque, though bright and gaudy craft of the lubberly Dutchman; the taut-rigged Yankee; the piratical Spanish lugger; the smart Frenchman; the rakish Mediteranean trader; the dingy collier; the dashing steamer; the Kentish hoy; the splendid free-trader; and the stately Indiaman; and a host of other vessels of various countries and classes. This scene extends for a space of more than four miles, comprising the Upper, Middle, and Lower Pools, and a portion of Limehouse Reach.

In the foreground are two of the noblest institutions of the metropolis—St. Thomas's Hospital, (190) founded by the amiable Edward VI., and now rebuilding; and Guy's Hospital, (193) the bequest of a worthy bookseller, of which we have no parallel in our days. St. Olave's Church, (189) was, in part, destroyed by fire in 1843, but has just been handsomely restored. St. Thomas's Church (192) has a square brick tower.

The joint Termini of the Greenwich, Croydon, Dover, and Brighton Railways, are an extensive pile; and the Dover terminus, in the Italian style, has a picturesque campanile. The lines of railway are (227) Greenwich; and (228) the Brighton, Croydon, and Dover: the Surrey Canal (229) flowing beneath the arches of both lines.

Churches are thickly interspersed through this commercial and manufacturing locality; so distinctive a feature of the English character is religious observance. Thus, we find two churches in Bermondsey, a very hive of industry; one of them (233), is, in part, ancient. Next is a Catholic Chapel and Convent (232), the latter carrying us back to the days of olden Bermondsey, and its monastic celebrity. Just below is the church of St. John, Horsleydown (235), with its columnar tower: this district, according to Stow, was once a noted grazing ground for horses. On the bank of the Thames is Rotherhithe Church (231); and immediately above (237) is an indication of the line of the Tunnel beneath the Thames, already noticed.

Within the reach of the Thames lies the Royal Arsenal at Deptford 225), and one of the Deptford churches (226). Immediately off the former, lie two Charities, which, we trust, may be long kept afloat: (223) the Marine Society's School-ship; and the Dreadnought Hospital Ship (222). The first is the Iphegenia frigate, and the second (98), a relic of Trafalgar, "The Seaman's Hospital, for sailors of all nations. By the following report of patients relieved in this Hospital to January, 1834, it appears that almost all varieties of the human race may be seen in the Port of London: Englishmen, 11,878; Scotchmen, 2551; Irishmen, 2220; Frenchmen, 88; Germans, 304; Russians, 182; Prussians, 409; Dutchmen, 83; Danes, 359; Swedes, and Norwegians, 582; Italians, 127; Portuguese, 182; Spaniards, 72; East Indians, 148; West Indians, 402; British Americans, 253; United States, 405; South Americans, 55; Africans, 130; Turks, 7; Greeks, 13; New Zealanders, 18; New South Wales, 9; South Sea Islanders, 79; Chinese, 12; born at sea, 50.

We soon reach Greenwich, with the church of St. Alphage (221), and the magnificent palace-hospital (220), founded by King William III., in 1694, on the site of a royal palace, for aged and disabled seamen: the grand river-front is 865 feet in length; the Great Hall cost for painting, £6,685; it contains a fine collection of pictures of naval subjects, presented by George IV.

The Royal Observatory, Flamstead House (219), in the Park, was built by order of Charles II., upon the site of an ancient tower, by Wren. In the distance lie Blackheath (218), and the dockyard and town of Woolwich.

In the Thames Reach, opposite Greenwich, lies the isthmus called the Isle of Dogs (224), with an interesting history. It is said to have been the place where Togodumnus, brother of Caractacus, was killed in a battle with the Romans. It is said to be named from Edward III. having kept his spaniels and greyhounds there, and not corrupted from the Isle of Ducks; a chapel, or hemitage, stood here in the 15th century. This isle is reckoned one of the richest spots of ground in England; it not only raises the largest cattle (in Stow's time sold at £34 each), but the grass restores distempered oxen. Across "the Isle" are the City Canal (236), and the West India Docks (214), extending from Blackwall to Limehouse: These are the most extensive docks in the world. They will admit 650 vessels of from 250 to 500 tons; and the entire area occupied by the docks and warehouses consists of more than 295 acres, mostly enclosed by a lofty wall, 5 feet thick. When originally opened, such is the extent of the Import Dock, that although the water was admitted at an average rate of 800 gallons per second, the space was not filled to the required depth, about 24 feet, for ten hours. In the warehouses and sheds, 148,563 casks of sugar, 70,175 barrels and 433,648 bags of coffee, 35,158 pipes of rum and Madeira wine, 14,021 logs of mahogany, and 21,250 tons of logwood, besides other merchandise, have been deposited at one time.

The East India Docks, at Blackwall (215), consist of an import dock, 1410 feet in length and 560 in breadth; and an export dock, 780 feet in length, and 520 in breadth, both being about 30 feet deep: here is a cast iron wharf, 750 feet in length, in which more than 900 tons of iron have been used.

Four churches may be next noticed. (206) St. George's-in-the-East, one of Queen Anne's churches, begun by Hawksmoor. It is in an original and massive style, and the spire, or tower, is eminently picturesque. (207) is Ratcliffe Highway; (208) St. Paul's, Shadwell, erected at the expense of Thomas Neale, in 1656; (209) St. John's, Wapping, east of the London Docks, built in 1790; (210) St. Anne's, Limehouse, built by Hawksmoor, is of singular but picturesque construction, with a very original tower, supporting four angular turrets, and a more lofty one in the centre. The three remaining churches of St. Ann, at Stepney, Bow, and Poplar, are fair average structure.

The line of the Blackwall Railway (201), constructed upon arches, will readily be perceived, as will its Terminus (178) at London-street. The Eastern Counties Line is denoted by (217). In the horizon (205), is the populous district of Bethnal Green, where two additional churches have lately been completed. Spitalfields Church (194), by Hawksmoor, has a peal of eleven bells, and a massive steeple, 225 feet high; it was greatly injured by fire in 1836.

Returning to the River, we find the London Docks (200), at Wapping, comprise above 400 acres, and cost about four millions sterling. The great Tobacco Warehouse will contain 24,000 hogsheads of tobacco, and covers nearly five acres of ground; and the east vault has an area of nine acres. St. Katherine's Dock (198), planned by Telford, occupy twenty-four acres, the site of St. Katharine's Church and Hospital (rebuilt in the Regent's Park), and 1250 houses: ships of 800 tons burden can enter the principal lock, at any tide, a desideratum first accomplished in this dock. The warehouses are five and six stories high, and supported on cast-iron columns, 3 feet 9 inches diameter, and the quay pavement is of cast-iron. The goods can be taken at once into the warehouses from the ships, by huge cranes and other machinery. The greatest advantages of these Docks is, that they are formed almost amid the offices of merchants, and the shops of tradesmen, within view of London Bridge. Baron Dupin speaking of the visits to the wine vaults, observes "Lights are distributed to the travellers who prepare to visit these cellars, as if they were setting out to visit the catacombs of Naples, or of Rome."

In this locality is Wellclose-square (199), near which the newly-built Brunswick Theatre fell in the year 1828.

Westward lies the Tower of London (185) with an area, within the walls, of 12 acres and 5 poles, and the circuit outside the ditch 1052 feet. The oldest portion is the keep, or White Tower, built late in the eleventh century; its walls are from 8 to 11 feet thick. The Grand Storehouse of Arms, north of the White Tower, was entirely burnt on the night of October, 1841, and has not yet been rebuilt. In the same year was completed a new jewel-house for the Regalia.

The Tower was used as a Royal Palace, and a state prison, for five centuries and a half or from the reign of Stephen to that of Charles II., who last held his court here. It has also been used to our time as a prison.

Tower Hill, i.e., the open ground adjoining the Tower, was first used as a place of execution in the reign of Richard II. The last person executed here was the Rebel Lord Lovat, on March 18, 1747. The bodies of the greater number of persons executed here are interred in the church of St. Peter, within the Tower, which is a parish of itself.

A restoration of the Tower is projected; in which the Storehouse will be rebuilt in appropriate castellated style; the principal towers restored; the modern unsightly buildings cleared away; and the entrance much improved; the moat has been for some time drained, and the banks planted with evergreens, and tastefully laid out.

The next river-side structure is the Custom House, the fifth erected: the first was built in 1385; the second about 1559, on the spot where the present building stands; this was destroyed in the Great Fire, and rebuilt by Charles II. In 1718, this was also burnt; and being rebuilt, remained till 1814, when it was likewise destroyed by fire: it it was again rebuilt, and opened in 1817. In 1825, the foundation gave way, and the whole centre was taken down and rebuilt. "The Long Room" is 186 feet 5 inches in length, and 60 feet in width. The whole length of the building is 489 feet, and the width 107: it accommodates upwards of 600 clerks, and nearly 1000 tide-waiters and servants. Count Tallard once observed that nothing gave him so true and great an idea of the wealth and greatness of this nation, as seeing "the multitude of payments made in a morning in the Long Room of the Custom House." The noble quay is one of the few public walks of the metropolis. The entire cost of the Custom House, including £196,554 for the reparation, amounted to the vast sum of £845,272, or to nearly £100,000 more than the cost of St. Paul's Cathedral.

Billingsgate (184), has been a quay, if not a market, for eight and a half centuries. It has, however, progressed with the times; for, the market, formerly a miserable collection of wooden sheds, penthouses, and benches, has been constructed in a neat style; and the manners of its frequenters are so modified as to entitle them to be termed "the ladies of the British fishery." The market is held daily, except Sundays, when, however, mackerel are allowed to be sold.

Of course, in so luxurious a capital as London, the consumption of fish by the rich and middle classes is very great, as are fluctuations in price: the earliest supply of mackerel has been sold at 7s. per fish, or 40 guineas for the first boat-load, the second boat-load has produced only one-fourth of the above sum; and later in the season, mackerel have been sold at Dover at 60 for a shilling! Formerly, boats were kept back by contrary winds: in spite of which they are now towed into the market by steam-tugs. Salmon is brought up by the Scotch steam-boats in little more than forty hours, by which means, and the fine season, in 1841, the weekly supply of salmon from Scotland to Billingsgate, was 1000 boxes per week, and the price 6d. per lb. Lobsters are principally brought from Shetland and Norway, to the number of 1,904,000 in a year; and Turbot from Holland, 97,958. Eels are brought, principally from Holland, and whole cargoes are daily sent up the river, to be eaten as Thames or Kennett eels, at Richmond, Eel-pie Island, &c.; Cod-fish were formerly brought from the Dogger Bank, but they are now obtained by going no further than the Lincolnshire and Norfolk coasts, and even between that and London. Large cod have been sold at one shilling each; but, in the high season, a fine fish has been sold at the west-end for a guinea and a half and two guineas! Periwinkles are brought from as great a distance as the Frith of Forth.

Over against Billingsgate, is the Coal Exchange, where are disposed of the greater portion of the 2,000,000 tons of coals annually consumed in the metropolis. In the same locality, in Mark-lane, is the New Corn Exchange (180), a pleasing architectural composition, by George Smith; erected in 1827, consisting of a receding hexastyle Grecian Doric portico, bearing the imperial arms of the United Kingdom, with agricultural emblems, and an inscription: adjoining is the Old Corn Exchange.

A group of churches, by Wren, are next to be noticed: (172) St. Magnus was in the line of road with Old London Bridge, the eastern pavement passing beneath its tower: the octagonal lantern-cupola and spire are a pleasing composition: it has a gilt bracket clock, which cost £485. Miles Coverdale was once rector of this parish; and in 1837, the parishioners set up a tablet to his memory. St. Margaret Pattens, Rood-lane (173), has a lofty tower and spire, 198 feet 2 inches high. St. Dunstan's-in-the-East (174) has a spire supported on a tower, 20 feet wide, by four flying arches, the whole taken from St. Nicholas Church, Newcastle. Wren's nave has been taken down and handsomely rebuilt. St. Andrew Undershaft (175), at the south-east corner of St. Mary-Axe and Leadenhall-street (architect unknown), was named after the May-pole, or shaft, annually set up before it, and this was higher than the tower and campanile, which are 90 feet.

Nearly opposite the latter church, is the East India House (176), by Jupp, with a handsome hexastyle Ionic portico, the tympanum filled with characteristic sculpture, by Banks: the Museum is open gratuitously to the public. St. Catherine Cree Church (177), by Wren, also in Leadenhall-street, is in a mixed style, and has a tower 92 feet high. St. Olave, Hart-street (179), Crutched-friars, is of considerable antiquity, having escaped the Great Fire, as did Allhallows Barking (181), at the east end of Tower-street. In 1639, the vicar was charged with setting up images and a cross, and the letters I. H. S. in this church; and it is remarkable that the chancel was not entirely expurgated. The funeral brasses and tombs are very interesting: Henry Howard, Earl of Surrey, Archbishop Laud, and Bishop Fisher were buried here, after their execution on Tower Hill.

In parting with Wren's multitudinous churches, it would be almost ungrateful not to say a little as to the genius which has so largely contributed to bristle our view of London with spires.

In the buildings of Wren, we are invariably struck with his devotion to proportion. In this respect, his theory and practice went hand in hand; for in his first tract (Parentalia, p. 351), he says: "There are natural causes of beauty. Beauty is a harmony of objects,—begetting pleasure by the eye. There are two causes of beauty, natural and customary. Natural is from Geometry, consisting in uniformity (that is equality) and proportion. Customary beauty is begotten by the use of our senses to those objects which are usually pleasing to us for other causes, as familiarity or particular inclination breeds a love to things not in themselves lovely. Here lies the great occasion of errors; here is tried the Architect's judgment: but always the true test is natural or geometrical beauty."

Many of the metropolitan steeples are exemplars of the most perfect architectural composition, or that which forms one immense pyramid of decoration, consisting of many minor subservient pyramidal masses: such are the steeples of St. Mary-le-Bow, St. Bride's, and those of all the others of Wren's churches. The diagonal outline of the spire of St. Dunstan's-in-the-East is likewise a fine exemplar.

Again: Mr. Godwin, in his work on "The Churches of London," well observes:—"When we consider the great number of steeples which Wren erected in London, all of them dissimilar for the most part, and many of them strikingly so, remembering too that the style which the spirit of the time, and his own predisposition caused him to adopt, is not in the least calculated for the purpose, we see at once the difficulties he had to contend with, and are better able to appreciate the skill with which he overcame them."

On Tower Hill is the Trinity House (182), a handsome stone-fronted building, by S. Wyatt, the office of the Trinity Corporation: it is enriched with sculptured medallions of royal portraits, light-houses, and nautical genii. Nearly opposite is the Royal Mint (197), eastward of the St. Katherine's Dock offices: it is of Roman and Grecian architecture, by Johnson, the entrances by Smirke. All the coinage of the United Kingdoms is now executed within these walls, by very complex machinery. Within three years, 1837 to 1840, the total value of the moneys coined here, was as follows, viz.: gold coinage, £4,612,762: (in 1840, however, there was no coinage of gold whatever); silver coinage, £847,981; and copper coinage, £14,336; making altogether the sum of £5,475,079.

In Aldgate, at Duke's-place, is the elegant Jewish Synagogue, by Davis, completed in 1838; it is in the Italian style, and has an open loggia of three arches resting upon Tuscan columns. The interior eclipses our modern churches in architectural show: the profusion of marbles, stained glass, gilding, and brass-work, velvet, &c., is very superb. St. Botolph, Aldgate (187), built in 1744, is a bold and massive brick structure, with a lofty spire, on a rusticated tower. In this direction lies St. Mary, Whitechapel (195), which has anything but the appearance of a metropolitan church; next are the Whitechapel Road (203), and the Pavilion Theatre (204).

Our détour is now well nigh complete; though we have left one of London's most celebrated memorials for our leave-taking: "the Monument on Fish-street Hill" (171), built by Wren, upon the site of the church of St. Margaret, to commemorate "the Great Fire;" though we have not space to detail how the record of the event has been inscribed upon the pedestal by one party, effaced by another, then restored, and finally, obliterated altogether. The height of the Monument from the pavement is 202 feet (30 feet higher than the column of Antoninus): it is of the Italo-Vitruvian Doric order, and stands on a Palladian pedestal, of 21 feet square, the plinth being 27 feet: the lower diameter of the shaft is 15 feet, and it incloses a staircase of 345 black marble steps. it contains 28,126 feet of solid Portland stone, and cost £14,500. The view from the gallery is very impressive—"that sea of house-tops, with St. Paul's, and countless other churches and public buildings rising up from its surface as from so many islands." The column has acquired a melancholy celebrity from six suicides having been committed here during this century, by persons throwing themselves from the gallery, which, in 1842 was enclosed with cage-like iron-work, to prevent the recurrence of such catastrophes. On the night after laying of the first stone of London Bridge, the upper portion of the Monument was illuminated; and we have been told that the triple gilding of the crowning vase of flames cost, a few years since, £120! Defoe, by the way, quaintly describes the Monument as "built in the form of a candle," the top making "a handsome gilt flame like that of a candle.

At the Adelaide Steam Wharf (170) we take leave; and now,—

Away, away the river stretches on,
  Far amid woods of masts to fields of green—
Spots far and famed through many an age agone,
  And we have loved and painted every scene.
The poet's wing may furl, nor care to fly,
  Or his muse linger by some lonely part;
But all is compass'd by the painter's eye,
  And register'd within our Map of Art!

SESSIONAL SYMPTOMS.

EVERY sign of the beginning of the end of the session is distinctly visible; the indications of the period so desired by all parties—by the Ministers who represent her Majesty, and by the members who represent the people—are abundant, decisive, and not to be mistaken. We have before spoken of a fatality that overtakes measures that are still left pending, about the first week of July. It is a legislative epidemic, periodical in its visits, unvarying in its effects, and this week has set in, as Canning once said of the English summer, " with its usual severity."

There are two ways of getting rid of business; one is by talking as little and doing as much as possible : this is the mode pursued by men in the City. The other is by talking much, doing a little, deferring a good deal, and altogether dropping the rest. Business is thus, at least, disposed of, though it is not done; but it is the method practised at Westminster. The much talk is a symptom of the early part of the session, when time does not press, and grouse shooting is a long way off. The deferring measures is partly a consequence of the talk aforesaid, and begins about the middle of legislative sitting; the dropping measures altogether is the last and fatal symptom which shows that its days are numbered. Soon after its appearance, dissolution supervenes; and many an elaborately-drawn measure sinks into " mere oblivion." That symptom has appeared this week.

On Monday evening Sir Robert Peel stated to the House of Commons the measures the Government intend to proceed with, and those they intend to abandon. The list of failures is rather longer than most people could wish, especially those sanguine spirits who are always expecting Parliament to do " something." It includes the Ecclesiastical Courts Bill, the Irish Registration Bill, the Irish Municipal Bill; the decision on the County Courts Bill is postponed for a week, when it will in all probability receive the coup de grace.

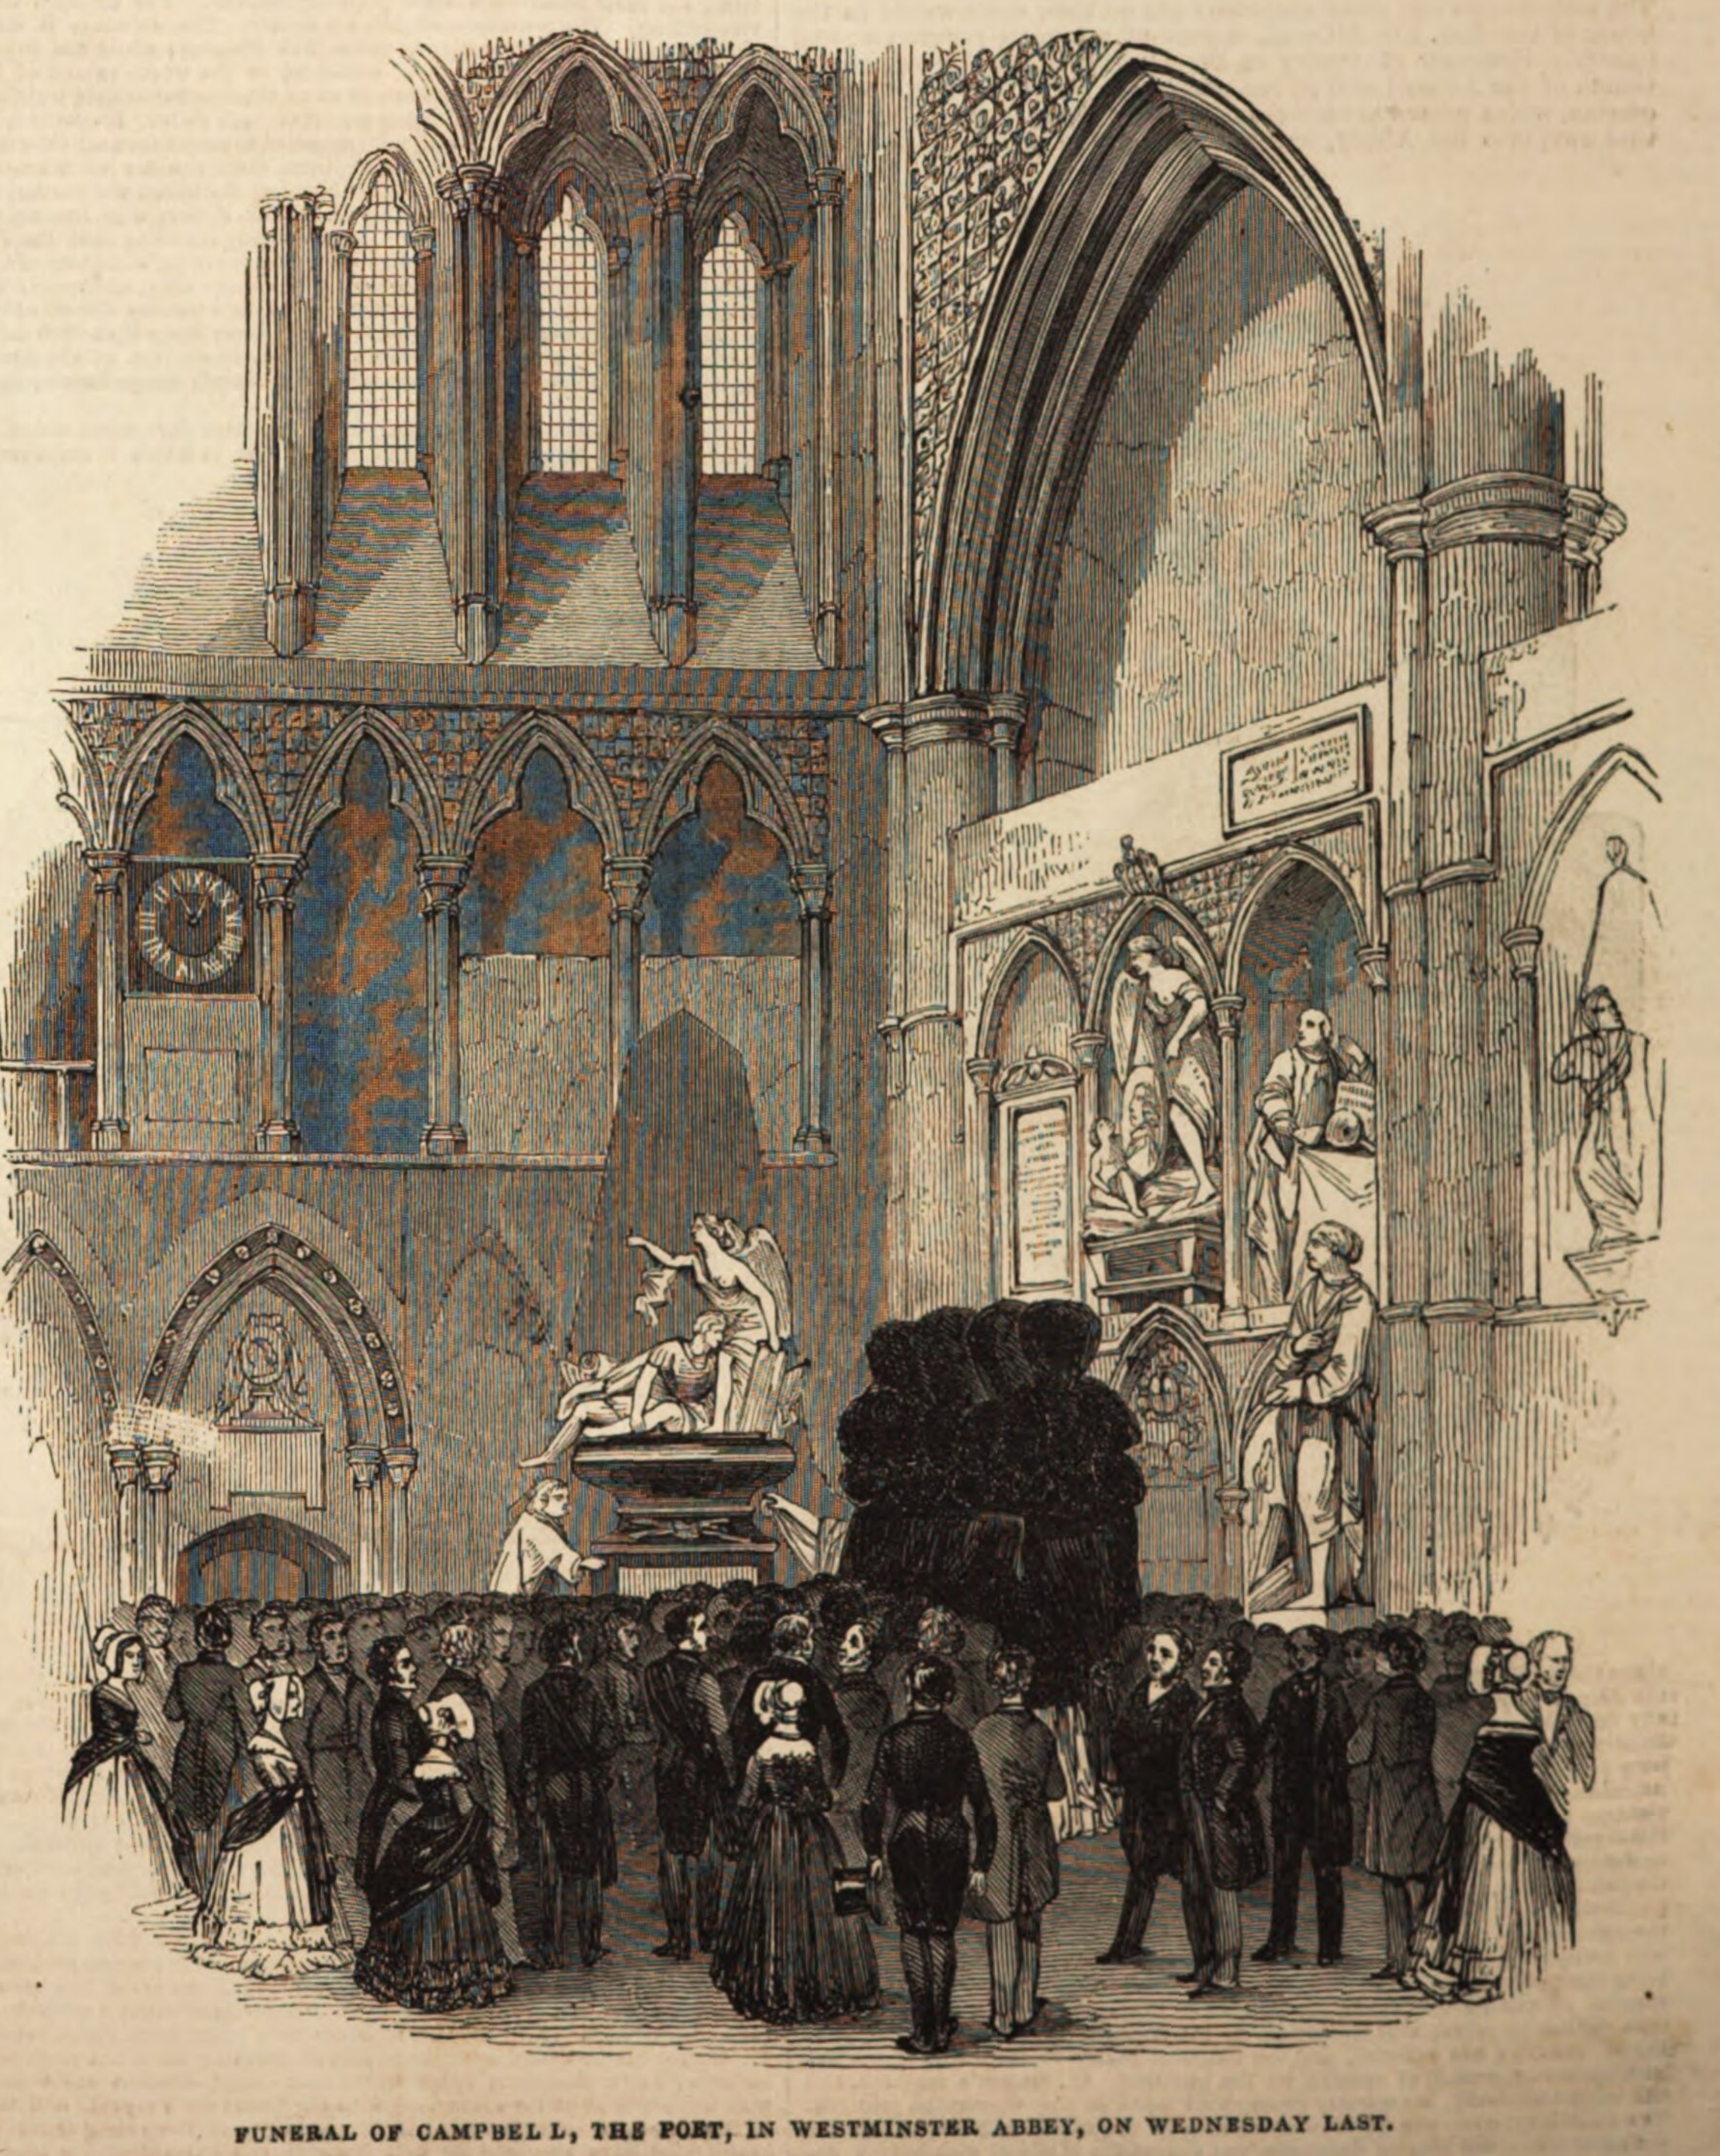
The Superior Courts, Common Law Bill, and the Small Debts Bill, are not in the charge of the Government; but if the Ministry cannot carry through its measures, it is not likely an independent member will be able to do so.

The Poor-law Bill is not yet completely abandoned; the Government has still some hopes of proceeding with it. The hope, we fancy, must be something mingled with fears.

Now, looking at what the Parliament has done—and, be it said, undone—during the present session, at the scarcely disguised command of the Ministry, we are safe in saying that the Government is strong enough to carry through almost any measure it really intends or truly wishes to carry. With what facility Sir R. Peel has effected his settlement of the Bank Charter! How easily the Chancellor of the Exchequer reduced the Three-and-a-Half per Cents. The alteration in the Sugar Duties was carried against the strong opposition of the friends of the Ministry, which was saved by the votes of those who usually oppose it. Determination and perseverance in the face of difficulties carried the Government through; Sir R. Peel screwed his courage to the sticking place, and did not fail. It was the same with the Factory Bill. Not even a majority against them could drive the Government to the course it did not mark out for itself; Lord Ashley, if not outargued, was outnumbered. Both on the Factory question and the Sugar Duties Bill, the House of Commons reversed its own decisions, at the instance of the Ministry. How determined, too, was the support it gave to Lord Lyndhurst's Dissenters Chapel Bill, which passed both houses in the face of opposition out of doors, which, on some occasions, has been found too powerful to be disregarded. We may fairly suppose, then, that, having done so much, the Government might have done more. It had only to will that a certain thing should be done, and it was effected; all that is not done, therefore, must be considered exactly that which it did not wish to do.

Every one must remember the sarcastic reviews that Lord Lyndhurst used, in the days of the Whig Ministry, to give of that Government's sins of omission, of its failures and shortcomings, at the close of every session. He was then in Opposition, he is now in office; but his skill in criticising the deficiencies of his opponents has not enabled him to infuse the ability of producing results into his friends. The Government of which Lord Lyndhurst is a member is open to the same reproach that he, with such damaging effect, used to cast upon its predecessors. And among the measures abandoned, virtually or actually, are some which the Lord Chancellor himself either actually supported or did not oppose. Where is Lord Cottenham's Bill for the Abolition of Imprisonment for Debt? Dragged from the light of day into the darkness of a Select Committee by the twin measure of Lord Brougham, who would rather see a bad law disgrace the Statute Book for ever, than permit any one but himself to have the credit of reforming it. Where is the County Courts Bill? Stopped in its progress by the loss of Lord Cottenham's bill; for it was at first delayed, in consequence of the more comprehensive measure of the Ex-Chancellor rendering the more local enactment in many points unnecessary: thus one evil creates another.

There is no doubt that much of this delay and disappointment as to the carrying through of proposed measures, is unavoidable is a Legislative Assembly; it is one of the evils that must be submitted to for the sake of the compensating good arising from free discussion—an advantage that would be but ill exchanged for all the celerity that the machinery of an absolute power, fixing every thing by an ukase, or a decree, could afford. That the evil is in some respects unavoidable, seems proved from its existing alike under two Governments, so differently circumstanced, as those of Sir R. Peel and Lord Melbourne. The Whig Ministry had a bare majority in the Commons, and a united and powerful opposition; while in the Lords it could scarcely carry a single measure: it, therefore, did nothing. The present Government has an overwhelming majority in the Commons, where the opposition to it is broken and divided; while in the Lords, it has the powerful support of the Duke of Wellington, and Lord Lyndhurst, and the good will, in the main, of the majority of the Peers. Yet, strange to say, the strong Government does almost as little as the weak one. There are so many events, beyond the control of a Ministry, giving rise to discussions it cannot prevent, that some expenditure of time is inevitable. But the mischief is in a great degree to be attributed to the Ministry not pressing its own measures forward at the early part of the Session, when the greater number of nights are occupied, we will not say wasted, in discussions on every imaginable subject. We think it possible to combine the advantages of free and full discussion with a greater dispatch of business, provided the Government would attempt less, know with more certainty its own intentions, and exhibit a little more determination and earnestness as to all the measures they take in hand. It is possible to talk and work at the same time, but no example of the double process is furnished by the Session of 1844.



FUNERAL OF CAMPBELL, THE POET, IN WESTMINSTER ABBEY, ON WEDNESDAY LAST.

FUNERAL OF THE POET CAMPBELL, IN WESTMINSTER ABBEY.

Farewell! farewell, with kindred ashes mix'd,
Thy worldly home is now for ever fix'd,
Poet! amongst some mighty ones of old,
Who sleep around thee 'neath the marble cold!

But is it death-still aye throughout the pile—
Does it not happen in the moonlit aisle
That spirits from their tombs disporting rise
And join their fancies in strange colloquies?
Can they who caus'd us, now to hope—then fear,
Again to smile—or weep the pensive tear—
To laugh outright at Wit and Humour's play,
Or steal our sense by Harmony away—
Can these all mixed, in mute communion lie?
Do they not sometimes have ghost-revelry,
And at the midnight pace the inscript floor
With heedless merriment of earth once more?

Alas! 'tis silence all—the monuments
Are only emblems of the deep, intense,
And lasting sleep of those who are enshrin'd,
Once quick with various qualities of mind,
But now all equal in the silent dust
As e'en to be the king and peasant must!

Farewell! thou classic bard of hope, and song
Of many-minstrel touch! Time will prolong
Thy memory through yet unheard-of years,
And make it, dimm'd but by the Muses' tears,
A star to gaze on, like thy own sweet theme,
A thing to love and cherish in the dream
Of Life's dull sleep, until the hour be nigh
When all shall merge into Eternity!

Sleep, gentle Spirit! 'neath the Abbey wall,
Nobles and statesmen—Poets wept thy fall—
But up on high thine was a welcome death,
For now Heav'ns quire has gain'd more tuneful breath! W.

The funeral of no public character since that of the late Mr. Canning, has excited so much interest in the public mind as that of the poet, Thomas Campbell, which took place on Wednesday last in Westminster Abbey. We speak not of royal funerals, which are of course an exception, and such an exception as afford no contradiction to our assertion when speaking of subjects. Thomas Campbell was known to all who like delight in pursuits above mere animal gratification; a patriot, a poet, a scholar, and a gentleman. It was no wonder then that a host of men of all ranks and parties—of literary men, of artists, and of friends, who knew and estimated his virtues whilst living—flocked to his funeral, and by their presence gave the last testimony of what they were capable of their respect to his virtues, his genius, and his philanthropy.

It was wisely chosen that the remains of the author of the "Pleasures of Hope," should find their long and last home in Poets' Corner, and that the dust of the greatest poet of these days should mingle with the kindred dust of the great poets of earlier times.

The plate which accompanies this description of the funeral will be viewed with interest by thousands of persons, and it will be creditable to their good feeling as well as to their good taste to sympathize with the sentiments which have led us to present it to our readers and subscribers.

The mourners, who were anxious to pay the last tribute of respect to departed worth, assembled in the Jerusalem Chamber, which is an ancient room, well known in the annals of English history, situated on the north side of the Abbey, in an angle formed by the south aisle and the cloisters of that venerable edifice. The corpse, which had been landed last week from Boulogne, and which was brought to London, and deposited at the house of Mr. Ives, the undertaker, in Holborn, for a few days, was removed to a small apartment in the Abbey, called, we believe, the "Room of the Spirit," on Saturday last, and all the preparations for the solemn occasion duly made. The pall-bearers and chief mourners put on their sable weeds in the house of the Rev. Mr. Milman, a poet of no small reputation, and formerly Professor of Poetry in the University of Oxford, now a Canon of the Abbey; and at ten minutes to twelve o'clock, the procession, which passed at once from the Jerusalem Chamber, by a private way, into the Abbey, and not as some of our contemporaries have erroneously stated through the Great Western Door, took its way to Poets' Corner along the south aisle of the Abbey in the following order:—

The Rev Mr. Milman, the officiating minister.
The coffin, covered with a large black pall, supported by The Duke of Argyll
Lord Brougham
Lord Aberdeen
Lord Campbell
Lord Stangford
Lord Morpeth
Lord Dudley Coutts Stuart
Lord Leigh, and
Sir Robert Peel
All of whom wore scarves and hatbands.
The Chief Mourners.
Mr. Alexander Campbell, Mr. Whiss (nephews of the deceased), in crape scarves and hatbands.
The Executors,
Dr. Beattie and Mr. W. Moxen.

Mr. J. Richardson, Mr. W. Ayrton, the Rev. C. J. Hassells, and Mr. E. Moxon, wearing silk scarves and hatbands; and after these the great body of the mourners, walking two-and-two, amongst whom we observed:—

Sir J. C. Hobhouse, Bart., M.P.; Sir J. Hanmer, Bart., M.P.; Major-General Sir J. Macdonald, K.C.B.; Sir P. Shelley, Bart.; the Right Hon. T. B. Macaulay, M.P.; R. M. Milnes, Esq., M.P.; B. Disraeli, Esq., M.P.; the Right Hon. R. Sheil, M.P.; Emerson Tennent, Esq., M.P.; R. Christopher, Esq., M.P.; J. G. Lockhart, Esq.; the Rev. W. Harness; the Rev. A. Dyce; W. S. Ayrton, Esq.; H. Smith, Esq.. Brighton; Dr. J. Johnson; Sir P. Laurie; the Rev. Dr. Croly; W. Jerdan, Esq.; Mr. Pettigrew, Mr. Semple (of Boulogne), Dr. C. Holland, Mr. G. Daniell, Sir J. Ross, Dr. Vivian, &c. A deputation from the Literary Association of Poland, of which the deceased poet was the founder, was also present, consisting of the Chevalier B. de Wreicinski, Colonel Tcyermer, Captain Kleceryneski, M. Kizmean, M. Olizarowski, and Count Grabowski: one of whom carried a small portion of earth from the grave of Kosciusko, near Cracow, which was cast into the grave of Mr. Campbell, and will mingle with the dust with which he is covered.

The service was read in a more than commonly expressive manner by the Rev. Mr. Milman; and certain it is, that those who attended appeared, and, no doubt, were more than usually affected by the solemnity of the occasion, and by the recollection of him to whom they came to pay their final testimony of veneration. After the Epistle of St. Paul, ending with the words, "For as much as you know that your labour in the Lord is not in vain," the organ pealed forth its solemn notes, and then the corpse was lowered into the grave, and the clergyman concluded the ritual of the burial service.

After the whole of the ceremony was finished, the procession returned to the Jerusalem Chamber, and after a few minutes most of the mourners retired.

The public were admitted at the door in Poets' Corner, and were allowed to take their places behind the railings used to keep the body of the church clear on public solemnities.

The coffin was very plain—black cloth, with gilt nails—and the following inscription, being all the decoration of the last narrow tenement of a great man:—"Thomas Campbell, LL.D., author of 'The Pleasures of Hope.' Died 15th June, 1844."

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Paris, July 2.

MOROCCO.

An extraordinary courier, who left Perpignan on the 29th of June, brings the following important intelligence:—

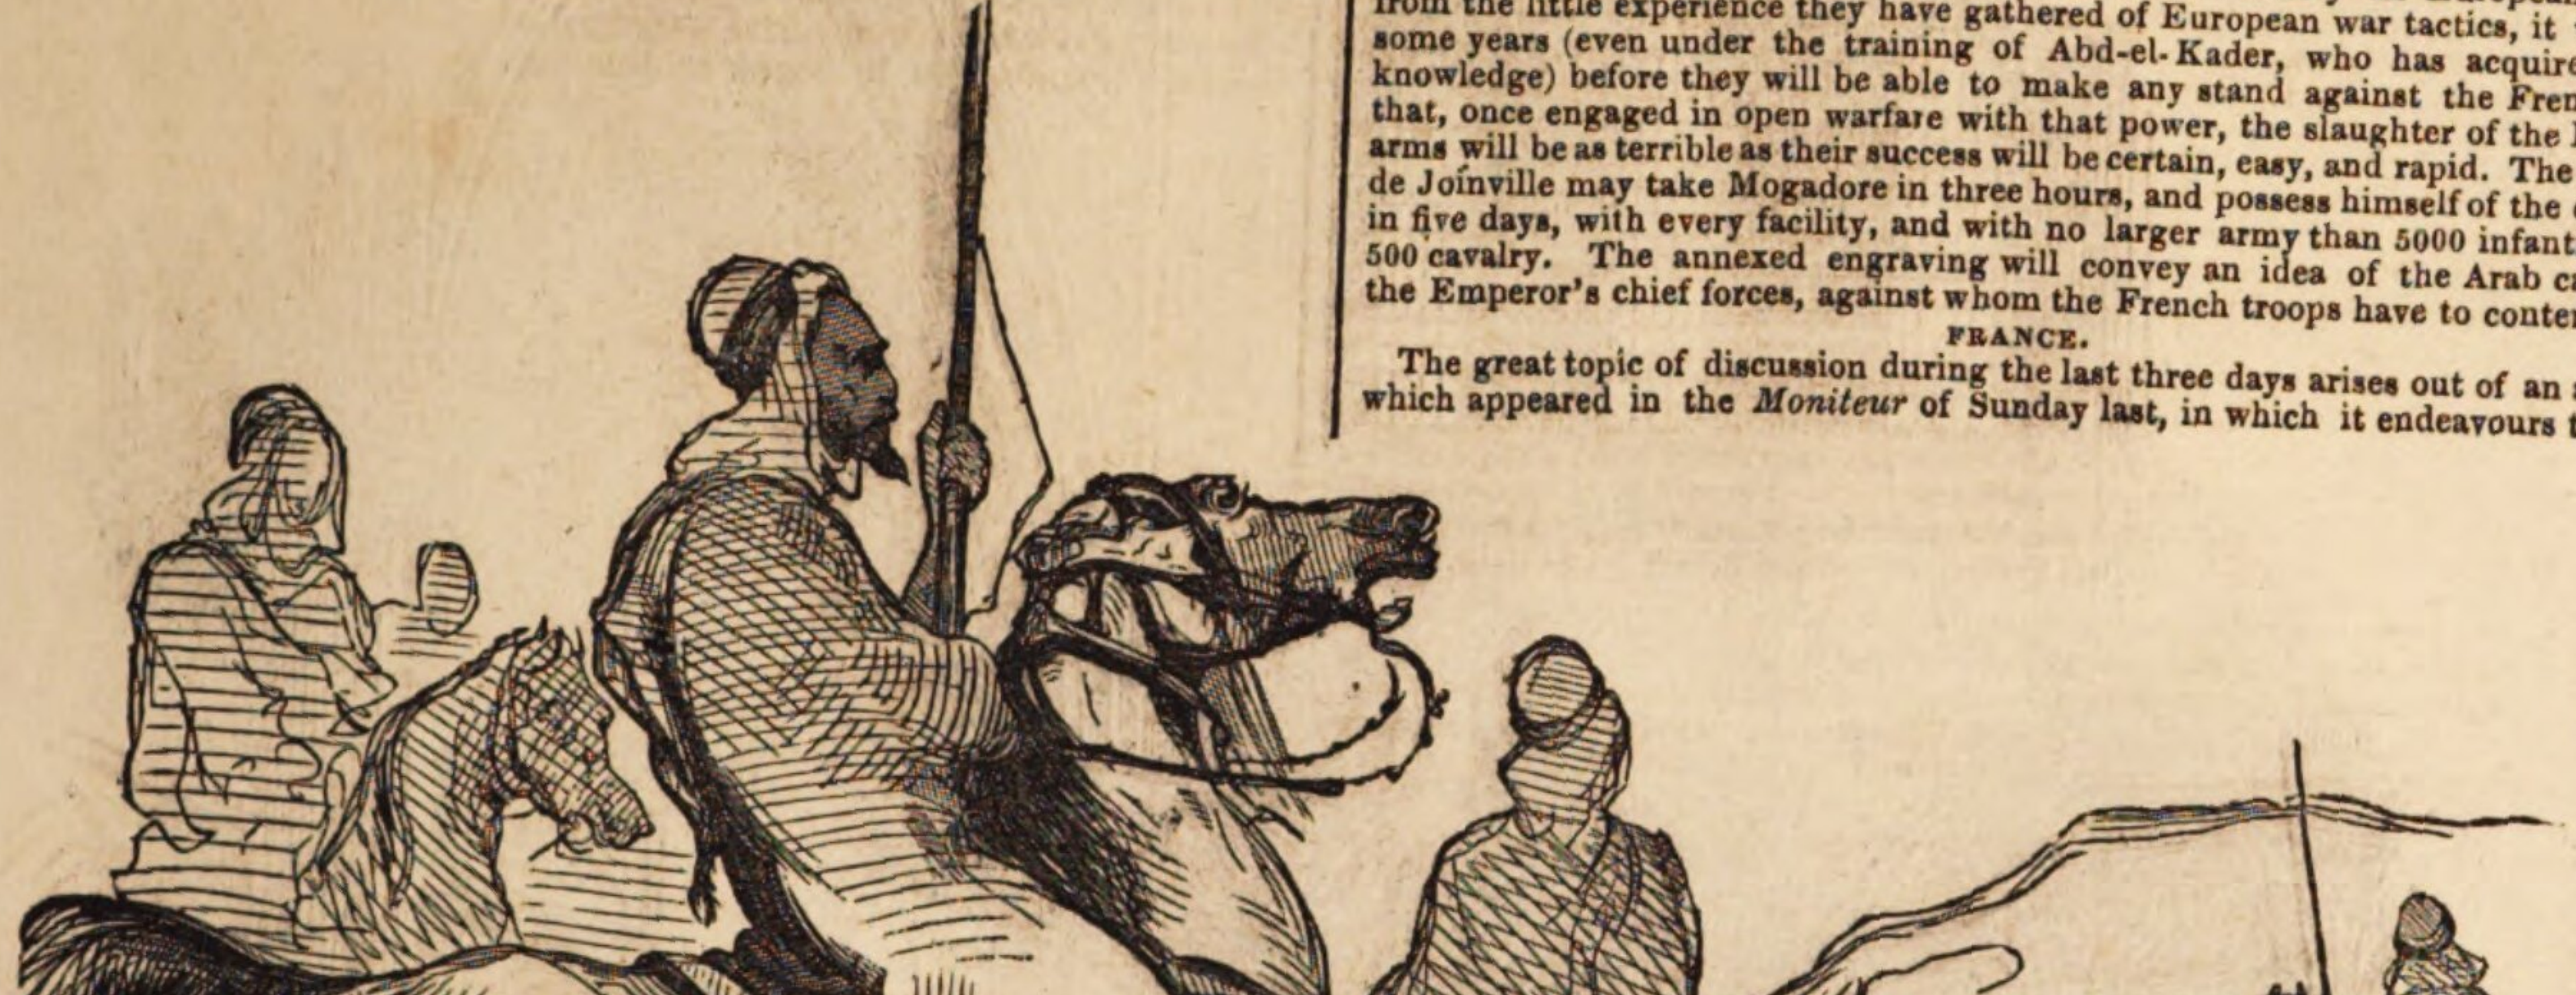
"The Emperor of Morocco has rejected the ultimatum of the Spanish Government.

"The Emperor has equally rejected the proffered mediation of England.

"The four Spanish Ministers now at Barcelona will return to Madrid at the end of this present week."

The impression produced by the news of the Emperor's obstinacy, in the best political circles, is, that France must have recourse to most decisive measures. France and Spain, it is concluded, are equally set at defiance, and England barred from interference.

The Emperor of Morocco has not a part in his dominions that might not be taken by a frigate and two bomb-vessels in less than four hours. His army is a farce, and their mode of warfare perfectly childish. The national finances are very trifling. The munitions of war are scanty. The ordnance is dangerously useless, and the art of gunnery is worse than Chinese; while the population of the country is but in proportion of one-third to the whole extent of the dominions, and of them the Emperor could at no time gather or hold together 100,000 fighting men, and these comprising a host of such ill-fed, ill-clothed, ill-armed ragamuffins as a man might well be "ashamed to march through Coventry with." From their bigoted habit of excluding from their country all Europeans, and from the little experience they have gathered of European war tactics, it will be some years (even under the training of Abd-el-Kader, who has acquired this knowledge) before they will be able to make any stand against the French, so that, once engaged in open warfare with that power, the slaughter of the French arms will be as terrible as their success will be certain, easy, and rapid. The Prince de Joinville may take Mogadore in three hours, and possess himself of the capital in five days, with every facility, and with no larger army than 5000 infantry and 500 cavalry. The annexed engraving will convey an idea of the Arab cavalry, the Emperor's chief forces, against whom the French troops have to contend.



WAR IN MOROCCO—ARAB AND MOORISH CAVALRY.

FRANCE.

The great topic of discussion during the last three days arises out of an article which appeared in the Moniteur of Sunday last, in which it endeavours to disabuse the public mind of the impression that the private means of the King of the French are not so large as they have been represented; and more especially that they are sufficient to afford a pretext for withholding from his children dotations from the state. Beside borrowing money on his title-deeds, his Majesty has frequently been compelled to have recourse to the liberality of Madame Adelaide, his sister—a state of things which, as the Moniteur remarks, is at variance with the principles of justice and sound policy, as well as opposed to the dignity of the Crown. This being naturally regarded as the precursor of a new dotation bill, a discussion arose on the subject in the Chamber of Deputies, on Monday. M. Guizot being asked if the Ministry took upon itself the responsibility of the article in the Moniteur on the dotation question, replied in the affirmative; but added, that as there were amongst his own party persons who thought the time for the discussion inopportune, the Ministry would not bring the measure forward until they should have reason to be confident of its success. A motion was made for passing to the order of the day, at the same time expressing regret that the article in the Moniteur should have been published; but this was resisted, and the Chamber passed to the order of the day without any expression of opinion on the question. M. Guizot's remarks, and the subject generally, are warmly commented upon in the Opposition journals. The Constitutionnel, and the Courrier Francais in particular, reprobate, in the strongest terms, the idea of dotations, and charge the Ministry with having debased the house by bringing the subject forward.

In the Chamber of Peers on Monday Count Molé announced that in consequence of the attacks which had been made upon his motion elsewhere, he deemed it necessary to withdraw his name from all railroad projects. He condemned in strong terms the amendment of M. Cremeux, which disqualifies all peers and deputies from taking part in the administration of railways, and blamed the Government for having allowed a principle so injurious to railway enterprises to pass without remark or animadversion. The Montpelier and Nismes Railroad Bill was then passed by a majority of 95 to 51.

The feeling against the application for dotations is almost general. The real friends of the King think that the article in the Moniteur was most unwise and ill-timed; but it is now well known that it was not advised by the Cabinet.

SPAIN.

We are in receipt of letters and Madrid journals of the 26th ult. arrived this morning. They furnish us with another instance of the respect paid to personal liberty in Spain by the constitutional Government. An artist has been arrested and thrown into prison for engraving on the heads of canes a portrait supposed to be that of Espartero. The Globo publishes a letter from Paris, asserting that M. Guizot has protested against the idea of hurrying on a marriage for Queen Isabella; but a Barcelona letter states that Count Bresson has been charged with the negociation for a marriage with the Count de Trapani, and to proceed to Naples almost immediately. If the accounts of the young Queen's state of health that have appeared be well founded, she has something else to think about at present than marriage.

Senor Cayetano Cardero, the former political chief of Badajos, had been arrested, and was to be transported to the Canary Islands. He is believed to have been connected with an extensive conspiracy against the Government, which had recently been discovered in the provinces. There is nothing new from Barcelona.

GREECE.

Letters from Athens of the 20th ult. announce that Russia had acknowledged the constitutional Government of Greece.

PORTUGAL.

The Peninsular and Oriental Company's steamer, Montrose, Captain Samuel Lewis, arrived at Southampton on Monday afternoon, at one P. M., from the Peninsula. Her dates of departure are as follows:—Gibraltar, June 23; Cadiz, 24; Lisbon, 26; off Oporto, 27; Vigo, 28.

It was reported the day of her departure from Gibraltar that a severe battle had been fought between the French and Moors, on the 15th, and several since that date; many are stated to have been killed on both sides.

The Minister of Justice, M. Sousa Azevedo, had tendered his resignation, and it was said that the Queen refused to accept it. His reason for so doing, it appears, is, that the decree for the collection of taxes, which, as an extraordinary measure, was the act of all the ministers jointly, was issued, not only without his concurrence, but even without his knowledge, so much so that it was only after it had been published in the Diario do Governo, with the names of all his colleagues appended to it, that his own signature to the original was applied for.

The Constitutional Charter has now become a mere farce—a name and nothing more. The Chief of the Lisbon Police takes it upon himself, contrary to all law, to prohibit the publication of the Opposition papers, and finding that in despite of his interdict, the editors still contrive to circulate them to some extent, he applies to the Minister of Foreign Affairs, who, without the least ceremony, orders the Postmaster General to stop the transmission of the obnoxious journals through the Post-office; and yet this is the state of things which the papers in the interest of the Government are constantly lauding, and placing in favourable contrast to the frankly-avowed absolutism of former times.

Mr. John Alfred Tozer is still confined in the Castle of St. George, and, in gross violation of his privileges as an Englishman, has not yet been placed under the jurisdiction of the British Judge Conservator. The Government recently attempted to compromise the matter by offering to set him at liberty if he would promise to say no more about it, but he has spurned the offer and continues to demand a fair trial.

This is strong presumptive proof of his innocence, and, assuredly, if ever any one was entitled to compensation, Mr. Tozer is so, for the outrageous treatment he has received at the hands of the Portuguese Government.

TURKEY.

Our letters from Constantinople reach up to the 12th ultimo. On the previous day the Sultan had returned from his trip, and was received with as many honours as if during his absence he had been fortunate enough to conquer a vast and wealthy country. Salutes of guns, volleys of musketry, began as soon as his steamer hove in sight, and continued in one thundering roll for a full hour, until he had safely landed at his palace at Begler Bay. The Grand Vizier, the ministers, and all the high grandees of the capital, were on the wharf to receive and welcome him. Salutes were repeated at noon, at Ikindi (the afternoon prayer), at sunset, and at Yatsi (the evening prayer). The city and the banks of the Bosphorus were illuminated at night, fireworks were let off, the sounds of music and mirth burst forth from every konak, and all was joy and exultation. The poets, too, have been making sonnets on the occasion, the last line or two lines of each recording the date of the event. The ministers display their zeal in servile homage to their young Sovereign, who is lauded out of his senses, and made to believe that the wishes of the people are all concentrated in his own individual comfort and contentment. It was hoped that during his late voyage he would have seen that the glitter of his capital is not to be found in the provinces, where crumbling hovels are witnesses to the mal-administration of a government which squanders millions in vain show, whilst it neglects public works which would tend to advance the prosperity of the country.

The Turkish fleet, under the command of the Capudan Pacha, was at Mytelene, and was to set out for Syria immediately after the arrival of the steamer Esseri Djedid.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Monday.

The Sugar Duties Bill was read a second time, and the Appellate Jurisdiction Bill went through committee.

Earl Powis moved the third reading of the bill for preventing the Union of the Sees of Bangor and St. Asaph.—Lord Vivian thought the people of North Wales were indifferent to the question as to whether these Sees should be united or otherwise.—The Bishop of Bangor denied that any such iudifference existed.—The Duke of Wellington said her Majesty had not given her assent to this bill, nor were Ministers prepared to advise that the royal assent should be given. If, under such circumstances, their lordships should suffer the bill to go down to the House of Commons, he hoped that in the latter house such amendments would be made as to preserve the machinery of the bill for uniting those Sees, which would be in a great measure repealed by the present bill.—Lord Monteagle said that this bill, if passed, would stand in the way of that provision for the working clergy contemplated by the ecclesiastical commissioners; and he, therefore, moved that it be read a third time that day six months.—The Lord Chancellor expressed a doubt as to whether he could put the question upon a bill which so directly affected the rights of the Crown, and suggested the propriety of appointing a committee to search for precedents.—Considerable discussion followed, and at length Lord Canterbury moved the adjournment of the debate, with a view to the appointment of the committee suggested by the Lord Chancellor.—The Earl of Powis wished to have the bill read a third time, and referred upon the question that the bill do pass.—After some further discussion, the motion of Lord Canterbury was agreed to, the debate was adjourned, and a committee to search for precedents appointed.

Their lordships then adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Monday.

After the presentation of a large number of petitions, Sir R. Peel intimated that it was the intention of the Government to persevere with the Bank Charter Bill, and to carry one, not yet introduced, for the regulation of future joint-stock banks; also, to persevere with the Poor Law Amendment Bill, the Railways Regulation Bill, the Savings Banks Bill, the Presbyterian Marriages Bill, and some others, to which they did not anticipate much opposition. Upon the County Courts Bill they would reserve themselves until after the decision of the House of Lords on the subject of imprisonment for debt. It was not intended to proceed with the Irish Registration Bill beyond the second reading, nor with its companion, the Irish Municipal Corporation Bill. Neither was it intended to go on with the Ecclesiastical Courts Bill. A bill would, however, be introduced respecting the jurisdiction of the house in contested elections, in accordance with the recommendation of the committee on that subject.

On the motion for the second reading of the Irish Registration Bill, Mr. Duncombe objected to its proceeding as being a useless waste of time, now that it was announced that the bill was not to be passed during the present session.—A discussion ensued, in which Lord Eliot, Mr. Sheil, Mr. Bernal, Mr. Shaw, Mr. M. J. O'Connell, and Lord Palmerston took part; after which Sir R. Peel said he had no wish to press the second reading of the bill against the general feeling of the Irish members.—After some further discussion the house proceeded with the other orders of the day.

The Unlawful Oaths (Ireland) Bill, after some discussion, went through committee, as did the Prisons (Scotland) Bill, and the house adjourned at half past eight o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Tuesday.

The adjourned debate on the Bangor and St. Asaph Bishoprics Bill was postponed to Monday next.

The Earl of Radnor presented a petition from Lyneham, in Wiltshire, praying for a repeal of the Corn-laws, and originated a discussion on it, in which Lord Methuen, the Duke of Richmond, the Duke of Cleveland, the Earl of Stradbroke, the Duke of Beaufort, Lord Ashburton and Lord Beaumont, took part. The point in argument was whether or not the rate of wages rose and fell with the price of food.

The Marquis of Clanricarde gave notice that on Thursday, he should put a question relative to the dismissal of Mr. Cornelius O'Brien from the magistracy of Ireland.

Lord Campbell, owing to the absence of the Lord Chief Justice, again postponed his Law of Libel Bill until Friday.

The Earl of Dalhousie moved the third reading of the Sugar Duties Bill, and stated to their Lordships the principles upon which the Government proceeded with respect to the regulations. He combatted at considerable length the various objections which had been urged against the measure while it was in the House of Commons, and expressed his opinion that it was the best measure that could be adopted, both for the interests of the consumer and the general benefit of the country.—Lord Monteagle condemned the course pursued by the Government, in not at once settling this question instead of bringing forward a temporary measure like the one before the house, which left every one interested in the subject in a state of uncertainty. He also objected to the bill, because it would occasion great fluctuation in price, making, as it did, the supply of sugar to this country dependant upon the laws of other countries.—Lord Brougham, in reference to some observations of Lord Monteagle, imputing either delusion or hypocrisy to those who had supported the bill on the ground of its tendency to discourage slavery, said that he wholly differed from his noble friend in his theory; he also dissented from the most part of his facts, and entirely differed from him in all his conclusions.—Earl St. Vincent contended that if a sufficiency of free labour had been supplied to the West Indies, the necessity for this bill would never have arisen.—The Earl of Radnor thought it a great hardship on the West India proprietor that he was not allowed to refine his sugar before sending it to this country. The bill took a step in the right direction, and, perhaps, as great a step as could be taken in the first instance.—Lord Ashburton said such a bill as this was necessary to insure cheapness to the consumer, and considerable advantage to the revenue.—After a few observations from the Marquis of Lansdowne, the Earl of Dalhousie shortly replied, afterwhich the bill was read a third time and passed.

Their lordships then adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Tuesday.

On the motion of Mr. Gladstone, an alteration was made in the standing orders relating to railways, by which subscription contracts entered into before the session of Parliament in which the particular Railway Bill was introduced are in future to be held valid.

Mr. Wallace moved an address, praying her Majesty to appoint a commission to inquire into the conduct of the Judges who presided at the assizes held in the city of Glasgow in the month of May last, and especially into the the circumstances attending the trial of Alexander Walker, accused of a felonious assault.—The Lord Advocate opposed the motion as uncalled for and unnecessary.—Mr. Wallace in his reply stated that as usual, whenever he brought any case before the House with respect to the conduct of his countrymen, he never received any assistance from that House. (A laugh.) He believed that Mr. Muir had been most improperly snubbed by the Lord Justice Clerk, and he had no doubt, if the Learned Judge had been at the bar, instead of being on the bench, Mr. Muir would have pulled his nose. (Great laughter.) The House then divided, when there appeared—

At the earnest request of Sir R. Peel, several gentlemen who had precedence gave way, in order to permit Mr. Duncombe's motion on the subject of the opening of letters in the Post-office, to be brought on. Mr. T. Duncombe then moved for a select committee to inquire into a department of her Majesty's General Post Office, commonly called "The Secret or Inner Office," the duties and employment of the persons engaged therein, and the authority under which the functions of the said office are discharged, with power to the committee to report their opinion to the House, upon the expediency of making alterations in the law under which the present practice of opening letters is carried on. The Honourable Member entered into startling statements as to the mode and extent of the practice, both with respect to foreign and home correspondence, all which, he said, he was prepared to prove if the committee were granted. The letters of the foreign Ministers, he asserted, were examined, and during the disturbances of the year 1842, a commission of three individuals had been sent down to the manufucturing districts, with instructions to examine all suspected correspondence. Nay, the Honourable Member even went the length of saying that the mail bags were frequently sent to the secret office, and that there the letters contained in them were opened wholesale.—Sir James Graham rose immediately. and having acknowledged that since he was last questioned on this subject it had assumed a very serious aspect—that in fact it had become an important question between the people and the Government—stated his determination now to speak out the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. Though he would have endured the obloquy cast on him, even though it should crush him, rather than injure the public service; and though he had endured much, after the votes and speeches of Lord John Russell, Lord Howick, Sir George Grey, and Mr. Macaulay—all men conversant with official duties—in favour of Mr. Duncombe's former motion for inquiry, he now felt himself relieved from his late reserve, and felt bound to confess that he believed it to be impossible to maintain the power confided to him longer without a full inquiry. Now, therefore, without the slightest sacrifice of duty, either to the Crown or to the country, he could, and he would, indulge his own feelings, as well as his sense of public duty, by becoming a party to a most searching inquiry into the state of the law, and the practice under that law, from the earliest time to the present moment. As he had nothing to conceal, he proposed to go before a committee and state everything he had done down to the present moment. He hoped that his colleagues would also appear before the committee and his predecessors in office, in order that there might be a full and entire investigation. He hoped that the inquiry would also extend to the manner in which this power had been exercised by Lords Lieutenant of Ireland, to whom it was intrusted by the Act as well as to the Secretary of State for the Home Department.—Sir J. Graham, in accordance with this determination, proposed that the committee should be a secret one, invested with the amplest powers, and that their investigation should commence with the least possible delay. The following gentlemen, five being those who usually vote against the Government, and four who generally support them, to be the committee of nine, viz.:—Lord Sandon, Mr. H. Drummond, Mr. T. Baring, and Sir W. Heathcote, of the Ministerial side of the house; Sir C. Lemon, Mr. Warburton, Mr. Strutt, the O'Conor Don, and Mr. Ord of the Opposition. To this committee the right hon. bart., who spoke throughout under deep feelings, said he was willing to submit his character and conduct for the most full and searching inquiry, and he confidently hoped to defeat the attempt that had been made to crush him. He moved his proposition as an amendment to Mr. Duncombe's motion.—Mr. Sheil desired that some gentlemen, learned in the law and accustomed to extract evidence, should be added, one on either side.—Sir G. Grey urged the propriety of delaying the nomination of the secret committee until the names should be canvassed.—Mr. Labouchere approved of the secret committee, and also of the determination to exclude from it all lawyers.—Sir R. Peel said he rejoiced at the appointment of this committee, "as it would afford a fitting opportunity for obtaining full and proper information on the subject of this most invidious power." The acts done had been done with the cognizance and under the authority of the whole Government, and the whole Government, and not the Home Secretary individually, were responsible for them. Lawyers had been specially excluded from this committee, because it was feared that if they were nominated squabbles about the construction of the statutes might arise, and an unsatisfactory termination of the labours of the committee would be the result. As the inquiry was to be followed up by full disclosures, and as it was intended that the Post-office authorities should undergo examination, a secret committee instead of a select committee was indispensable for the public service.—Lord J. Russell justified his vote for Mr. Duncombe's former motion, on the ground that Sir J. Graham had then denied every information. He did not regret the course which he had taken on the former occasion, or the excitement which prevailed, because the result was that they were to have an inquiry. He, however, agreed that this should be a secret committee, because the purpose they all had in view would be better answered than by an open committee. He also agreed that the names had been properly selected, and, so far as he was concerned, he should be happy to state all he knew, although there were others who could give better evidence than him.—Mr. Wakley said this secret committee was a most extraordinary mode of satisfying the curiosity of the public. It was said that when certain characters fell out, honest men came by their own; and as Sir James Graham defended himself on the plea that he was no worse than his predecessors, he was glad that the quarrel between the late and the present Government had brought about the present intended inquiry, which, however, he feared would end in a managed report, vindicating the perpetuation of this most odious power.—After some observations from Mr. M'Geachy and Mr. Wallace, Mr. Macaulay denied that he had made a mere personal attack on Sir James Graham, who, in refusing all information when first asked for, had drawn a distinction between himself and his predecessors in the Home-office. He should be surprised, indeed, if the committee were to report otherwise than that the law required extensive alteration, as being a power, the advantage of which was not at all commensurate with its evil and insecurity.—Mr. Williams, as a security to the public, proposed that Mr. Hume and Mr. Duncombe should be added to the committee.—Mr. Curteis said the public were indebted to Mr. Duncombe and the press for directing attention to this power, which ought not to be possessed by any Government.—Some conversation arose in settling the precise terms of the amendment (the original motion having been withdrawn), but Sir James Graham having assured the house that he wished a full investigation, the following form was agreed to:—"That a committee of secresy be appointed to inquire into the state of the law with respect to the detaining of letters in the General Post-office, and to the mode in which that power has been exercised, and that the committee should have power to send for persons, papers, and records, and to report the result of their inquiry to the House."—It having been discovered that Mr. H. Drummond had practised at the bar some twenty years ago, the name of Mr. W. Patten was substituted for his. With this exception the committee, as proposed by Sir J. Graham, was nominated, after an unsuccessful attempt made to add Mr. Duncombe's name, which was rejected by 128 against 52.—Five of this committee are to constitute a quorum.—Mr. Mackinnon submitted a motion for the appointment of a committee to inquire into the clashing opinions of the several reports on prison discipline, and to recommend some uniform and satisfactory system.—After a short discussion, the hon. member withdrew his motion.

Some unopposed bills were advanced a stage, and the house adjourned, at twelve o'clock, to next day at noon.

HOUSE OF LORDS—Wednesday.

The house did not sit.

HOUSE OF COMMONS—Wednesday.

The House of Commons met at twelve o'clock. Some discussion took place on the motion for going into committee on the Joint Stock Companies Registration and Regulation Bill, which was opposed by Mr. Hawes and Mr. Hayter; but eventually the house went into committee, and the first clause was agreed to. The second clause led to a considerable discussion, which was terminated by a motion that the Chairman should report progress, and ask leave to sit again.—Agreed to.

The Smoke Prohibition Bill was postponed until next session.

The Customs Duties (Isle of Man) Bill went through committee.

The Linen, &c., Manufactures (Ireland) Bill was read a third time, and passed.

Mr. Sergeant Murphy moved that the house should, on Tuesday next, resolve itself into a committee to take into consideration the Act 17 and 18 Car. II. c. 7, intituled "An Act for Provision of Ministers in Cities and Corporate Towns, and making the Church of St. Andrew, in the Suburbs of the City of Dublin, presentative for ever," with a view to the repeal of so much thereof as relates to the payment of ministers in corporate towns in Ireland.—Lord Eliot said that he had, in conjunction with the Attorney-General for Ireland, endeavoured to devise some plan to relieve the rate-payers from this burden, but they had not as yet been able to adopt any specific plan which could be submitted to Parliament. Under these circumstances, and as the hon. and learned gentleman proposed no plan of his own, he hoped the house would not assent to the motion, although the law as it now stood did inflict considerable injustice.—While the discussion was proceeding, an attempt was made to count out the house, but it failed, and soon after a division was called for. The gallery was cleared, but it appeared that, after strangers were withdrawn, a rush of Opposition members into the house took place, and the Ministerial benches being very thin, the Ministers allowed the motion to be carried without a division.

The house then adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Thursday.

The Royal Assent was given on Thursday, shortly before four o'clock, by Commission, to the following Bills:—The Sugar Duties Bill, the Vinegar Duties Bill, the Slave Trade Treaties Bill, the Gold and Silver Wares Bill, Forestalling Abolition Bill, the Night Poaching Bill, the Assaults (Ireland) Bill, the Limitation of Actions (Ireland) Bill, the Salisbury and South-Western Branch Railway Bill, the Chester and Holyhead Railway Bill, the Shoreham and Chichester Railway Bill, the South Devon Railway Bill, the South-Eastern Railway and Folkestone Harbour Bill, the Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Stornaway Railway Bill, the Sheffield Gas Bill, the Manchester Warehousing Bill, the Manchester Police Bill, the Nottingham Canal Bill, the British Society Incorporation Bill, Liverpool Fire Prevention Bill, and various turnpike, drainage, estate, naturalisation, and other Bills.—The Commisioners were the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Lord Chancellor, and Lord Wharncliffe.

After the Commission their lordships resumed the arguments in the case of the Queen v. O'Connell and others.

Their lordships re-assembled for parliamentary business at five o'clock, when the Lord Chancellor took his seat on the Woolsack.

Notices were given by the Earl of Minto and the Marquis of Clanricarde to put questions to Government with regard to the war in Africa.

The Earl of Radnor then moved for a committee of their lordships upon the subject of opening letters by the Government and the Post-office.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Thursday.

After the presentation of a number of petitions on various subjects, the house passed to the order of the day for the third reading of the Bank Charter Bill.—Mr. Wodehouse moved the insertion of a clause with regard to legal tenders, but there being a technical informality, it was subsequently withdrawn.—Another amendment, proposed by Mr. Turner, to clause 9, was also withdrawn.

Sir J. Graham then moved that the house do resolve itself into Committee on the Poor Law Amendment Act. A long and interesting discussion ensued, in which Lord J. Russell, Col. Wood, Lord Sandon, Mr. Wakley, Mr. Borthwick, and others joined.—At a late hour Mr. Ferrand moved the adjournment of the debate.—This was opposed by Sir R. Peel, who said that if the debate was adjourned, the bill must be given up.—Lord J. Manners complained of the conduct of the Government in bringing in the bill at so late a period, and then refusing them the opportunity of discussing it.—After a few words from Lord Stanley, Mr. B. Cochrane, and Mr. Borthwick, the house divided on Mr. Ferrand's amendment, when there appeared—

The house again divided on the main question, and the committee was carried by 199 to 19.

The house then adjourned at a quarter to two o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Friday.

In answer to a question from the Earl of Minto, with regard to the affairs of Morocco, the Earl of Haddington said, that her Britannic Majesty's Government had sent to Morocco such forces as they thought the circumstances required, and with regard to every other station, they had such forces ready as were necessary for the protection of British interests.

Lord Campbell then moved the third reading of the Law of Libel Act Amendment Bill. The purpose of the bill is to extend the provisions of the act proposed last session as to private libels and slander, and Government prosecutions for the same offences, by admitting defendants to prove the truth of allegations as a justification.—The Lord Chancellor opposed the bill.—Lord Brougham advocated the measure.—After a speech from Lord Denman against the bill, most of the Opposition peers left the house, and on the division, the measure was thrown out by 33 against 3.—The house adjourned at half-past eight.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Friday.

The house met at four o'clock. Some petitions were presented, and a new writ moved for Birmingham to elect a representative in the place of J. Scholefield, Esq., deceased. At five the house went into committee on the Poor Law Amendment Bill, and continued so until twelve o'clock, when the other orders of the day were entered upon, and the house adjourned at a quarter to one o'clcok.

THE NEW HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT.

According to the promise made to our readers, we resume the analysis of the evidence given before the Select Committee of the Lords on the above subject.

The Earl of Shaftesbury presided on the second day's sitting, the 26th of April last, and the first witness examined was Lord Sudeley, who was, as we have already stated, a member of the committee.

His lordship stated that, having been one of the Commissioners appointed to select the designs sent in for the new Houses of Parliament, and, having concurred with the other commissioners in giving the preference to Mr. Barry's, he had made it his business to master all the details of the plan, connected with the House of Lords, and the offices belonging to it. But he admitted, in justice to Mr. Barry, that it never was their "idea, expectation, or wish," to restrict him closely to that plan, which they conceived capable of improvement and modification; and while they did not intend that alterations should be made without reference to them for approval, he could not take upon himself to say that those improvements were expected to be submitted to them severally for inspection, for they had been out of office from the time they had made their report.

The noble lord then read some extracts from the testimony given before a Committee of the House of Commons, by himself and the other Commissioners, to show in how far their united opinions of the excellence of Mr. Barry's design as a general one coincided, but that they also thought it susceptible of various improvements in detail.

As a proof that some portions of the original plan were not approved of, and called for alteration, he instanced a pillar, round which the royal carriage was to drive, after entering the tower from the west, before stopping for the Sovereign to alight at the staircase at that side, and thence it was to depart by the southern gateway. Now that arrangement had been considered objectionable, on account of the length of the royal equipage, and he had urged it to Mr. Barry as such. Mr. Barry seemed not to agree in opinion with him; but, however, he found that that part of the plan had been altered in the present building, and he approved of such alteration. But what he thought was, that, considering the great addition made to the area of the original plan, as much had not been made of the increased space as might have been.

It was at this portion of his lordship's evidence that he explained that the observations which he was making had reference to the plan published in this journal. We have already given the question and answer at length; but it will be more explanatory just to recapitulate them briefly as follows:—

Then your objection to what has been done, is not that there has been alteration, but that that alteration, considering the increase of area, has not been sufficiently effected to accomplish the purpose?

Yes. I object to the present plan, because I think it is not nearly so good a plan as the one before you,* and secondly, I object to it, because the Architect has not carried out his own idea in the best possible manner. But, perhaps, I had better now explain the second plan, taken from the Illustrated London News, and which is now being carried into execution.

The noble lord then proceeded to detail the course proposed for the royal cortège by the present plan. The royal carriage was now to drive through the Victoria Tower, and under the Queen's Robing-room into the royal court. Her Majesty was set down at the left, and ascended a flight of nine steps to the first landing, then ascends three more to the second, and turning to the right, had to mount a second flight of twenty-six steps to the lobby, thence through the Victoria Gallery to the Robing-room, after which, she had to pass through the Victoria Gallery again into the House of Lords. Now, his objection was to every part of the plan except the Tower, which he admitted was much improved. But he particularly reprobated the stairs, as consisting of so many steps unbroken by a landing.

His lordship then entered into a minute detail of his objections to the internal arrangements of the present plan. In the centre of the lobby was a pillar for groining the ceiling, which being exactly opposite the staircase would be in the way of the Peers' approach. What struck him as principally objectionable, was, that everything appeared to be sacrificed to the Victoria Gallery. The Queen's Robing-room was removed from the back of the throne; a continuous roof was now necessary (contrary to the original plan, by which the House of Lords wasi ntended to be higher than the surrounding buildings) from the House of Lords to Little Abingdon-street; thereby causing an obstruction of light and air; the house could not be lighted, if deemed necessary, at one end; a passage north, east, west, or south, could only be had through the Victoria Gallery, which it would be necessary to keep heated and lighted all the year round. Mr. Barry's conception about this gallery might be very well if the building was intended only for the Fine Arts, but he conceived that they were for other purposes, and, however the Fine Arts might be called in for its embellishment, he did not think that any architectural arrangement should be sacrificed for their display. In his opinion the original plan had been all recast. There had been something like a gallery in the original plan, but the present was too short for one in proportion to its width, and too wide for a hall; in fact it was neither one thing nor another. There were no corridors in the present plan from one end of the house to the other along either side of the gallery, which was in the old plan, and the want of which was a great objection to the new.

Here the noble lord begged to suggest a remedy for the inconvenience which he conceived to exist in the design at present carrying out, and produced a plan, showing by what means he proposed effecting a change. It contemplated reducing the Victoria Gallery to the dimensions of 100 feet by 45; thereby making it a hall instead of a gallery, and making the ascent to the House more gradual by introducing two additional landings.

The noble lord concluded his testimony by expressing his regret that the present investigation should have only taken place at the eleventh hour; but though, if the contemplated changes should take place, it would be necessary to pull down a portion of the masonry already set, the expense of such a thing could hardly be deemed worth any consideration, where they were expending nearly a million of money. It was, however, a great pity, from the advanced state of the works, they were placed in the position, that they should either put up with what they considered a defect in the plan, or pay the cost which its removal might occasion.

Mr. Barry was then called, and on being questioned touching the alterations above adverted to, maintained that none had taken place in the leading features of the original plan, those which had been made being only in the details; and with respect to those he had consulted no one, nor had he any direct authority for them; but they had been effected, upon his own judgment, with a view to the general improvement, beauty, and convenience of the internal arrangements. He contended that although the staircase might have been different from that in the original plan, it was much improved in the present, and he gave examples of staircases of greater length and height, and number of steps, in various celebrated palaces on the Continent, where one flight was continued without any landing. With respect to the Robing-room, as he had been given to understand that inconvenience would arise from the Sovereign proceeding a distance under the weight of heavy robes, there would be no difficulty in getting a Robing-room closer to the Throne.

He is then called upon to produce the original instructions he received for the dimensions of the House of Lords, and the various offices, chambers, and apartments connected with its business; and having accordingly handed in a copy of those instructions, containing a detailed statistical account of all the different apartments and other conveniences required, with the height, length, and width of each arranged in a tabular form, and stated that those were the only instructions he had received, the witness is ordered to withdraw, and the committee adjourned to the following Monday.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

Accident by Lightning.—On Monday evening, during the storm, the lightning struck the clock of St. Clement's Church, in the Strand, and sent the minute-hand, which was at ten minutes past six o'clock, back five minutes, when it stopped; the flash passed down the steeple, and crossed the street, where Mr. Cadman, the umbrella manufacturer, who was standing at his door, received a severe shock on the legs, which nearly felled him to the ground. At the same time a shower of sand and small pebbles descended on the houses in Cambridge-street, Hyde Park-square, thus corroborating, in a great degree, the truth of the phenomenon described as having taken place at Liverpool during the previous week.

Escape of a Soldier from the Strong-room in the Tower.—On Sunday night last, Thomas Hodges, a private in the Scots Fusilier Guards, made his escape from the strong-room attached to the barracks in the Tower. He was under sentence of sixty days' confinement, for disobedience of orders, and is believed to have been in possession of a quantity of valuable jewellery which had been stolen from a gentleman named Studly, at North Brixton, by his servant, who was transported for the offence at the last Old Bailey Sessions. The girl was taken into custody in the Tower, while on a visit to Hodges, who was seen several times, by his comrades, with jewellery and a number of sovereigns, after that occurrence. He was taken into custody and examined at Union-hall, but discharged for want of evidence. Since then he has been tried by a court martial, and sentenced to sixty days' confinement. He contrived to get a suit of private clothes on Saturday, and was seen in possession of a diamond ring, and about twenty sovereigns. He is supposed to have gone to Hereford, and a handsome reward is offered for his apprehension. He is about six feet high, well made, light complexion, and sandy hair and whiskers; aged twenty-six.

Accident on the River.—On Wednesday morning, about half-past two o'clock, a man named Jacob Allwood, the master of the Diver, a ballast steam engine and vessel, lying nearly off Hungerford-market, his wife, and two other females, embarked in a boat at the wharf opposite, for the purpose of going on board, when the boat upset, and the whole party were immersed in the water. The crew of a Thames police-galley saved two of the women, and conveyed them ashore in a deplorable condition, and a police-constable of the F division, named Smith, saved Allwood, but his wife was drowned.

Fire in Oxford-street.—Late on Wednesday night a fire of somewhat an alarming character broke out in the extensive range of premises known as Stratford House, situate at No. 161, Oxford-street, in the occupancy of Messrs. Taylor and Morel, jewellers and dealers in fancy goods. The flames were first discovered by a man in the mews at the back of the premises, by perceiving flames raging in the second floor. An instant alarm was raised, and in the course of a few minutes a great body of the D division of police were on the spot, as well as the St. Marylebone parish engine. That part of the premises where the fire originated was, with its contents, destroyed, the adjoining apartments much damaged by fire and water, and the ceilings underneath greatly damaged by water. The upper floors are also discoloured by smoke and heat. The precise cause of the fire is unknown, but the supposition is, that it was caused through a cat having crawled under the kitchen fire-place, and her coat becoming ignited, then ran underneath the bedding in the second floor. Fortunately the whole of the valuable property in the lower part of the premises is uninjured, and the business of the firm will not in the least be retarded. The loss is fully covered by insurances in the Sun and Guardian Fire-offices.

LAUNCH OF THE BRAGANZA STEAMER, AND THE KESTREL YACHT!

On Monday last West and East Cowes were the focus of unusual gaiety and attraction, occasioned by the sending afloat of two splendid vessels: the Braganza of Southampton, one of the large steamers belonging to the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Company; and the R. Y. S. yawl, Kestrel, belonging to the Earl of Yarborough, Commodore of the Royal Yacht Squadron; both of which vessels having been, some months back, hauled up on adjacent slips, for the purpose of undergoing extensive alterations.

The ceremony drew hundreds of pleasure-seeking visitors from Southampton, Ryde, and Portsmouth, and the morning steamers brought over a number of passengers, who, from the fineness of the weather, had resolved on making a holiday. The shores of the Medina, on both sides of the river at "the Ferry," and every spot from whence a sight could be obtained, were crowded with spectators, and the river in the immediate vicinity covered with boats with fashionables, amongst which we observed several belonging to the Royal Yacht Squadron.

Our engraving shows "the Launch," sketched from the opposite shore of the Medina, at the period when the Braganza was making her way along the inclined plane, returning to that element where she had previously distinguished herself; introducing also the extensive premises of the Messrs. White, shipbuilders, West Cowes; and the adjacent slip, belonging to Mr. Hausen, on which the Kestrel is observed, previous to being launched.

The Braganza has been lengthened 30 feet in midships, and her dimensions are now as follow:—

Length aloft, from the inner part of the main stem to the fore part of the sternpost		188 5-10 feet
Breadth amidships		24 8-10 "
Depth of hold in midships		18.6 "
Engine-room in length		57. "
Total tonnage (as follows), ..		855.852-3500 tons.
The hull	794.957
Poop	60.3395
		855.852-3500
Deduct engine-room ..		284.1925
Register tonnage ..		570.2427-3500

She is now a splendid model, commanded by Captain James Down, her former commander, and we understand is to be employed between London and Constantinople.

Precisely at eleven o'clock this superb steamer was turned off, amid the cheers of thousands, and her gradual and steady progress towards the river was truly majestic. She was fully rigged, and dressed out in a gorgeous attire of flags and signals. On reaching the middle of the stream, the anchor was let go, and she was moored until the following day, when she was taken in tow by the Iberia steamer, and conveyed to Southampton, where she will receive her boilers.

At noon, the Kestrel was launched from the adjacent slip. This vessel was built by Mr. Joseph White, at East Cowes. She has undergone some alterations; her stern has been shortened, and a cutwater, with the figure of a kestrel, added, together with a standing bowsprit; and, although on the whole she is a fine vessel, we do not think that the alteration forward has added to her beauty. She now has the appearance of being one of "the olden time."

On Wednesday, at noon, the foundation-stone of the new Steam Frigate Dock, which is being constructed at this port, on the premises of Messrs. White, was laid by the senior of that firm, Mr. Thomas White, in the seventieth year of his age, unaccompanied by the pomp usual on similar occasions. It will be a dry dock, capable of taking in the largest steam-vessel afloat, without the necessity of unshipping the paddle-wheels. Already above two-thirds of the soil (a stiff lias) has been excavated, and the whole dock piled in; and, when viewed from the interior, the excavation resembles the hold of a great floating monster. It is expected the dock will be completed in November next. This additional accommodation in the port will greatly benefit the place, and its contiguity to the Royal Mail Steam Packet Station at Southampton.

At the conclusion of the ceremony of laying the stone, the proprietor drank the following pithy toast:—"May the dock answer the purpose for which it was intended, and may it reward the honest endeavours of many generations;" which was responded to in a bumper, and with the long and loud cheers of the persons present. In a bottle beneath the stone were deposited various coins of the realm, and many little statistics relating to the port, and the causes which gave rise to the work.

THE TAYLOR INSTITUTE, OXFORD.

In our account of the Grand Commemoration at Oxford, we promised an engraving of this handsome edifice. It has been erected from the bequests of Sir Robert Taylor, the architect, and of Dr. Randolph; the one for the study of modern languages, the other for a picture and statue-gallery; and the funds have been appropriated by the authorities to a structure intended to serve both purposes. The portion allotted to the Taylor Institute, from the designs of Professor Cockerell, is shown in our illustration. The entire building occupies the angle of St. Giles' and Beaumont streets, the east front wing (the Taylor Institute) facing the former. The entire site is about 260 by 100 feet; but about 150 by 70 feet is given up to a raised terrace between the wings, and the centre building is set back to the depth last mentioned. Externally, this middle building has a tetrastlye Corinthian portico, carried up as high as the wings, and rising above the parts on each side of it, which last in height correspond with the order introduced into the wings, and here continued as antæ, forming four in the columns on either side of the portico, with as many windows below, and niches above them. The most striking features in the wings are the large arched windows in the second tier; which, besides having a projecting balcony, are recessed, and are carried up quite through the entablature of the Ionic order. The raised court, or terrace between the wings, to which the ascent is by a wide flight of steps facing the portico, is a pleasing novelty: the cornice and roof of the wings produce a fine effect.

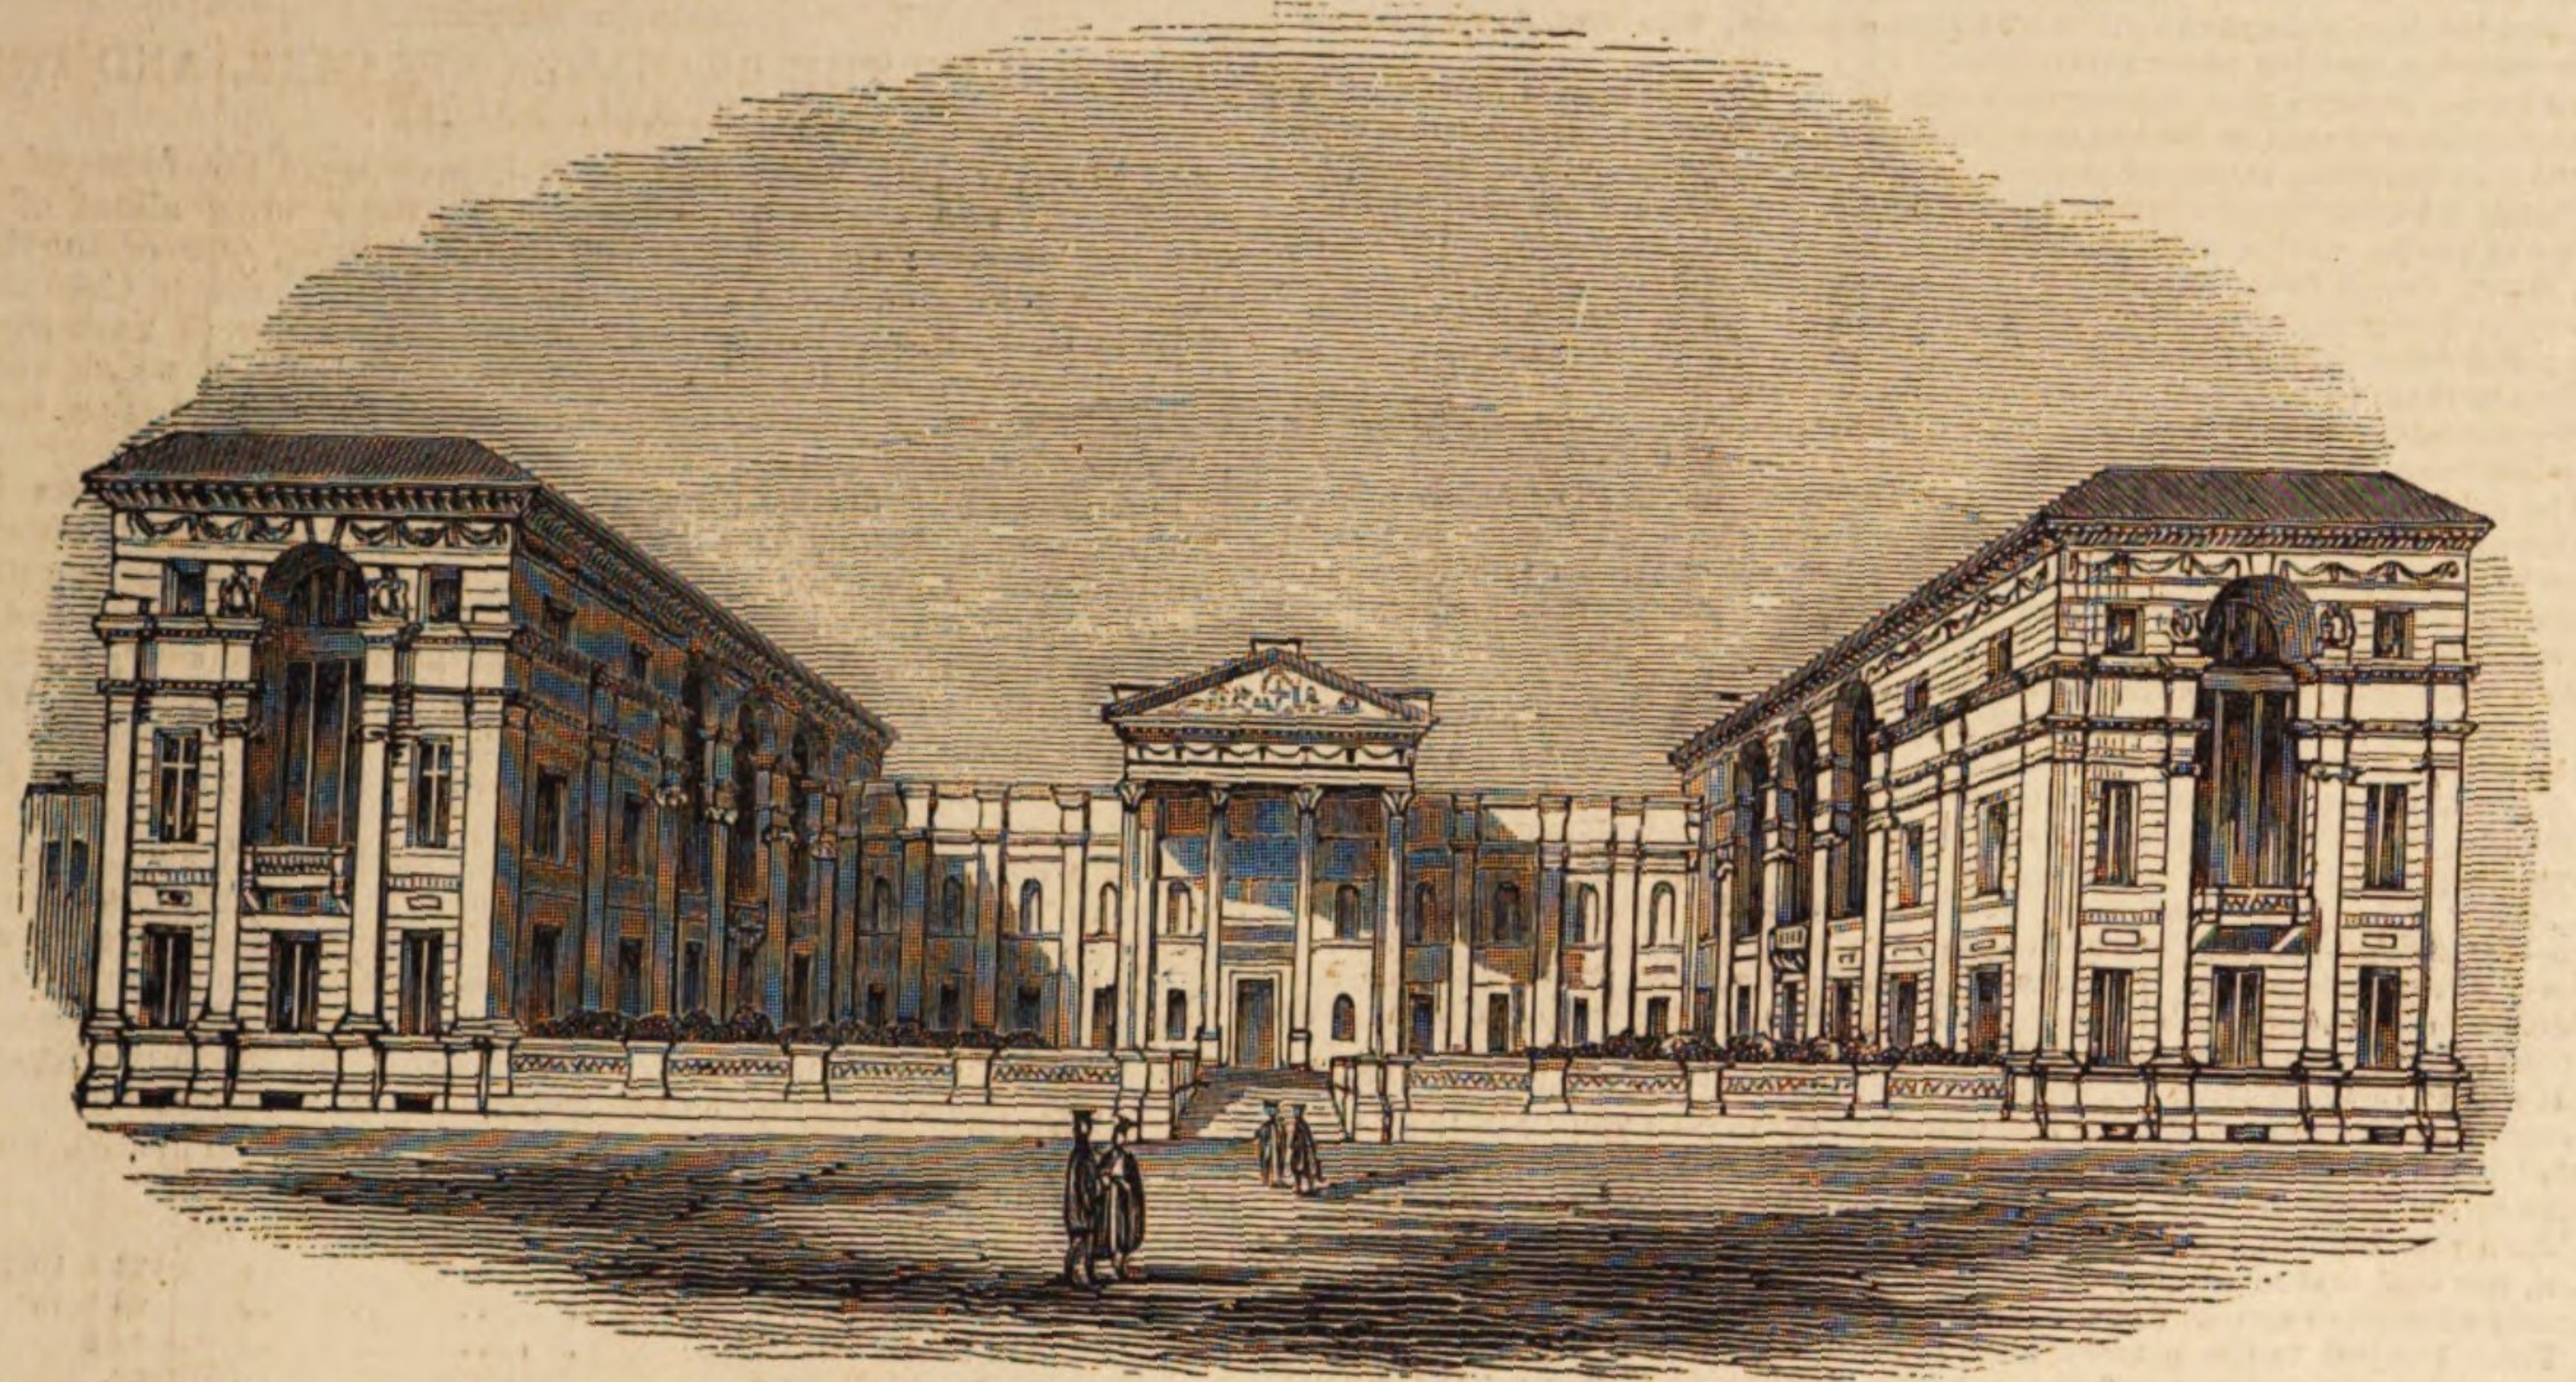
The Taylor building will contain the Curator's residence, six lecture rooms, and a library, forty feet cube.

It is to be hoped that some portion of the entire building will be appropriated as a museum of specimens of sculpture and architectural decoration of the middle ages, which should be arranged chronologically. Oxford may be termed a sort of architectural museum in itself; but nowhere, except at the sister University, could a gallery of the kind suggested be more desirable, inasmuch as it would tend to promote a feeling for the beauties of our ancient architecture among those destined for the church, and likely to have influence in the preservation or restoration of our ancient ecclesiastical edifices.

Meanwhile, considerable interest has been excited at Oxford by the University having in convocation rejected the new statute for the cultivation of modern languages at the Institute, on account of the weak and inefficient scheme for its regulation. The capital is £60,000, and a magnificent foundation like this, will, it is hoped, be not frustrated by injudicious parsimony.



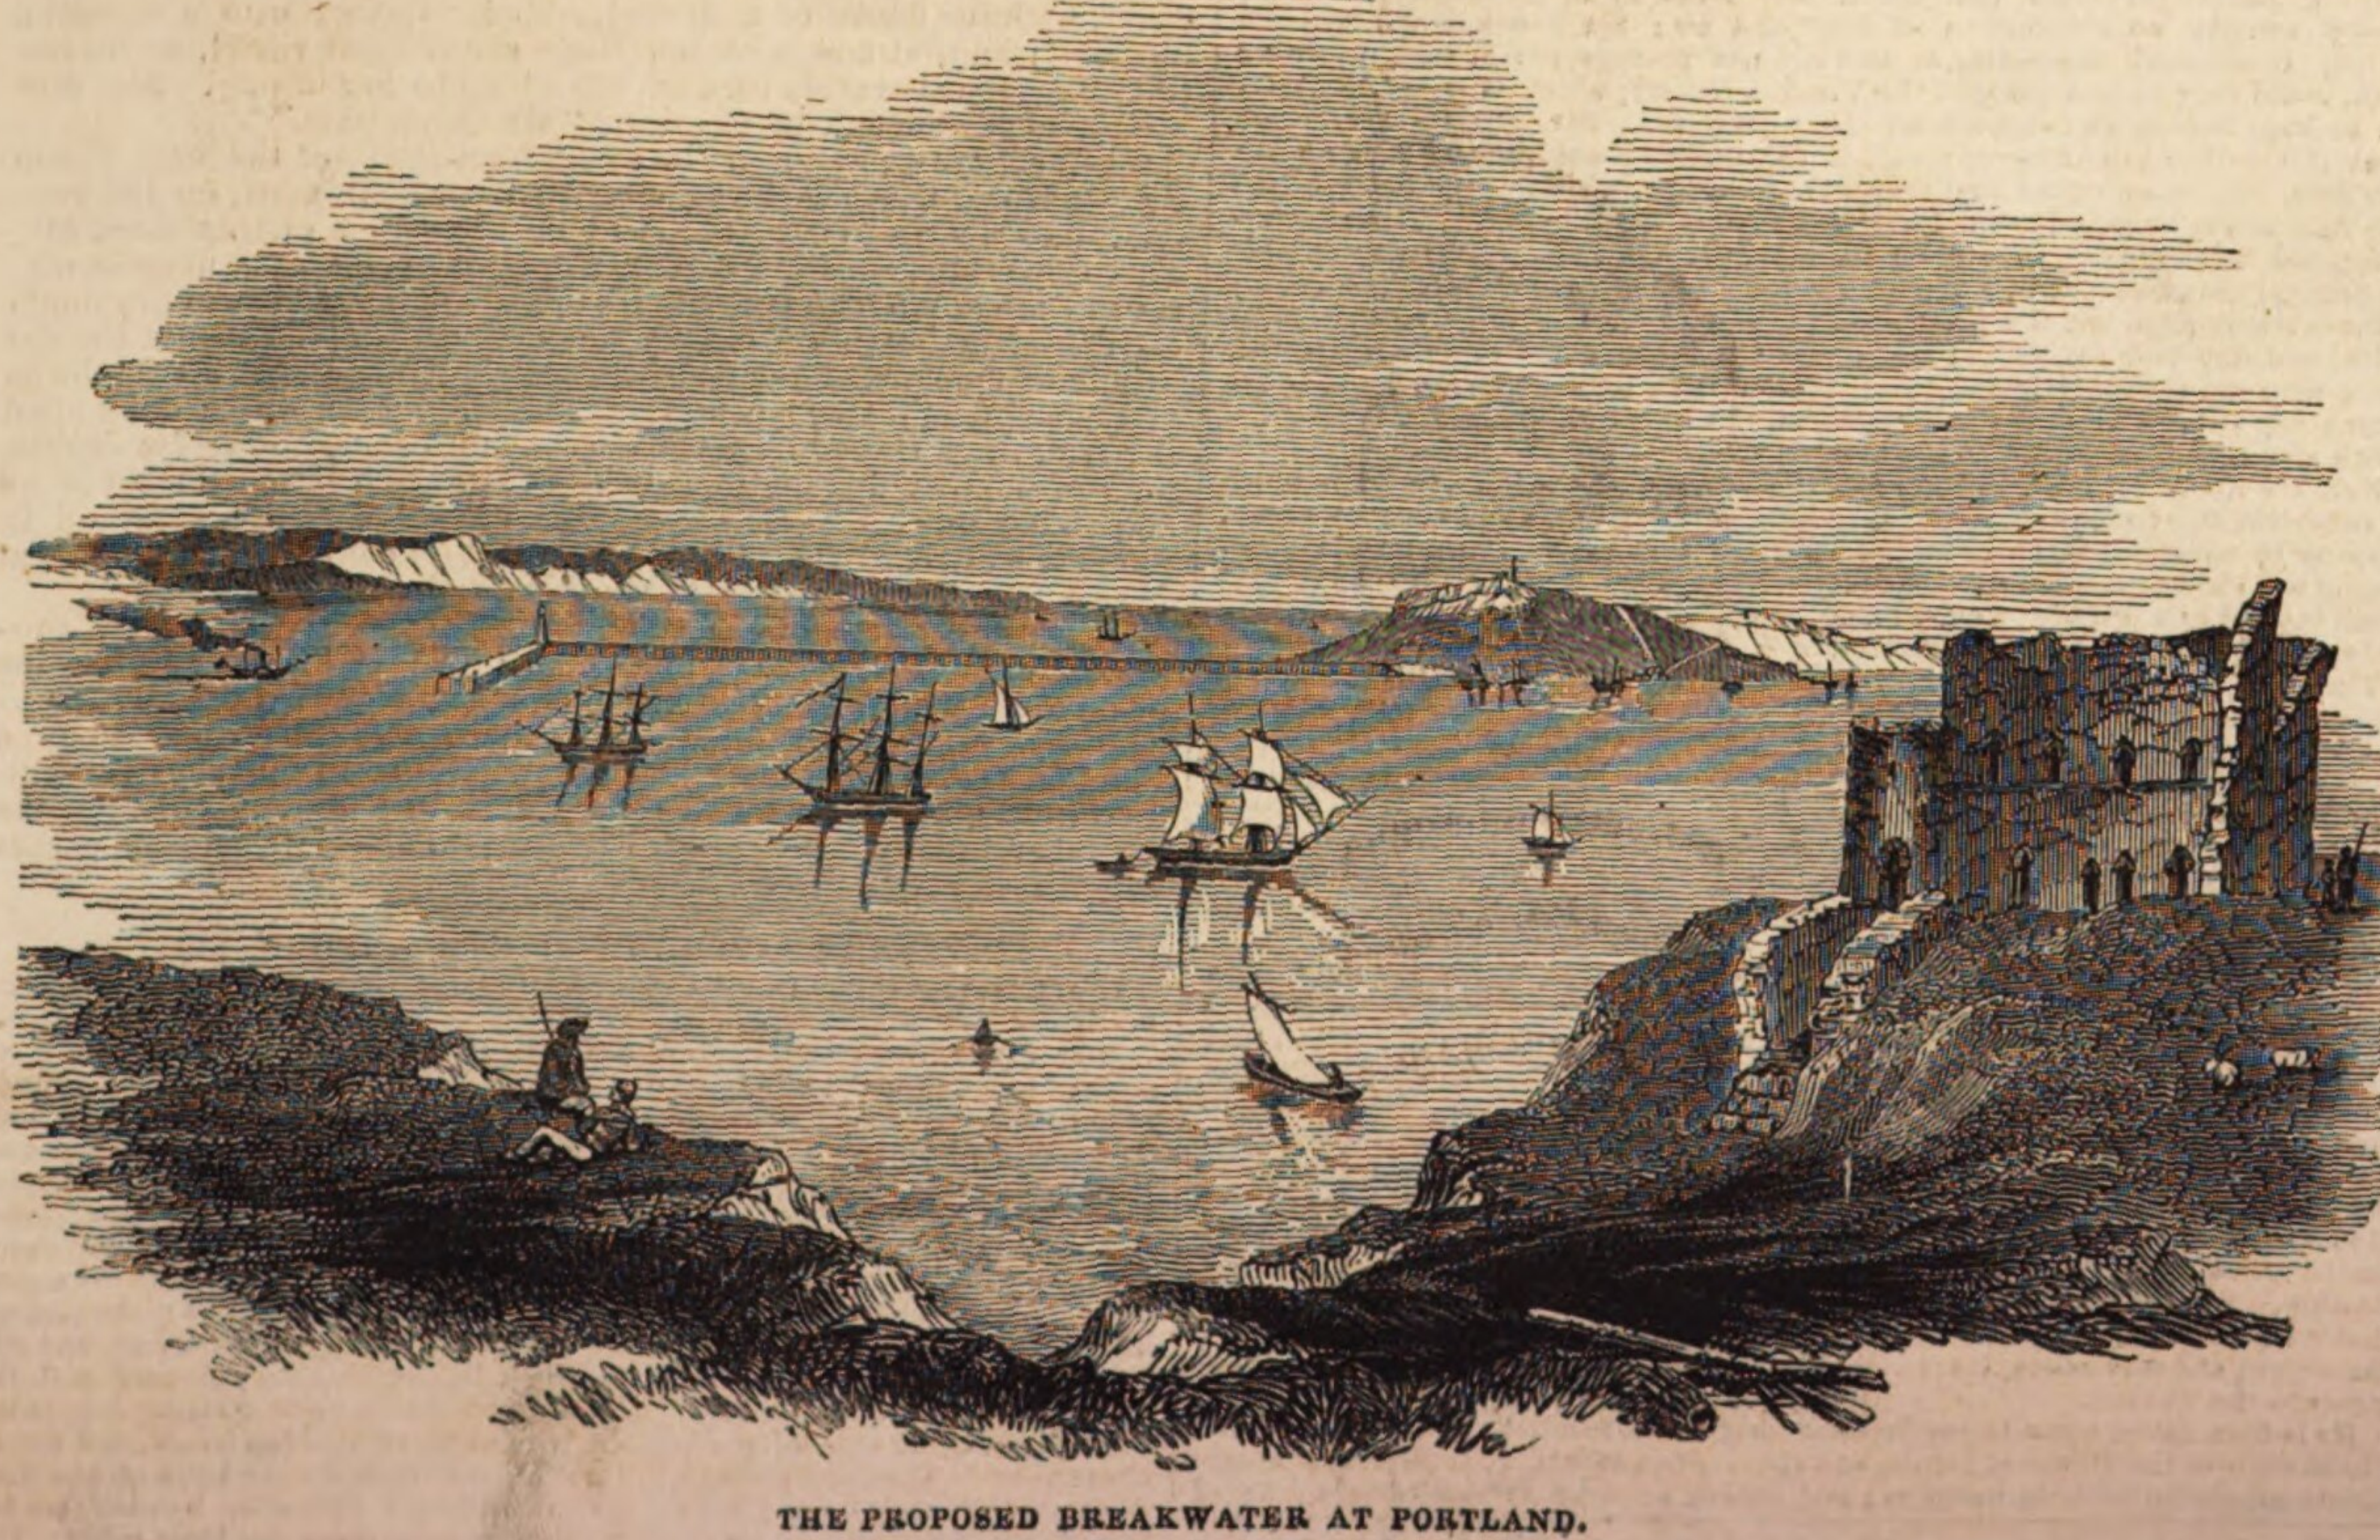
THE TAYLOR INSTITUTE, OXFORD.

ASYLUM HARBOUR FOR PORTLAND ROADS.

The Harbour of Refuge Commissioners having just completed a careful survey of Weymouth Bay and Portland Roads, and having examined all those who offered themselves and were qualified to afford the necessary information, the Commissioners are fully impressed with the natural advantages presented to their notice for forming a Breakwater in Portland Roads, capable of affording shelter and protection to the shipping and maritime commerce of England, of being a counterpoise to Cherburgh (from which Portland is only distant sixty miles), and St. Malo, and situated about midway between Portsmouth and Plymouth. In their visit to Portland, the commissioners were forcibly struck with the economy that would be attendant on the erection of a Breakwater here—large quantities of stone, already quarried, and now only encumbering the land, and of no value, seeming to invite the undertaking, and the owners would, no doubt, be glad to see it removed. This stone (the roach) being in large pieces of from ten tons and under, is admirably adapted for the construction of a Breakwater; and we congratulate the town and neighbourhood upon the prospect of this great and important national undertaking being carried into effect.

We quote this statement from the Dorset Chronicle. It is now more than probable that the Breakwater proposed by the late Mr. John Harvey, so far back as 1813, will be constructed. The work in its progress would be of vast advantage to the neighbourhood, since it would afford employment for five or six years to many thousands. Mr. Harvey's plan proposes that the Breakwater extend from the north-east point of the Isle of Portland, to a distance of about two miles and a quarter, which would secure a safe anchorage, and form a roadstead of four square miles in extent, situated only twenty-one leagues north of Cherburgh; and would prove the most complete shelter, during all winds, in the British Channel.

The excellent anchorage in Portland Roads, consisting for the most part of strong blue clay, with scarcely any tide, is too well known and appreciated by mariners, to require any comment; a fleet of sixty sail of the line would be in perfect safety during every vicissitude of winds and weather, and be enabled to go to and from sea at discretion. There are numerous springs of excellent water contiguous to the proposed Breakwater, sufficient for the use of the whole British Navy, if required.



THE PROPOSED BREAKWATER AT PORTLAND.

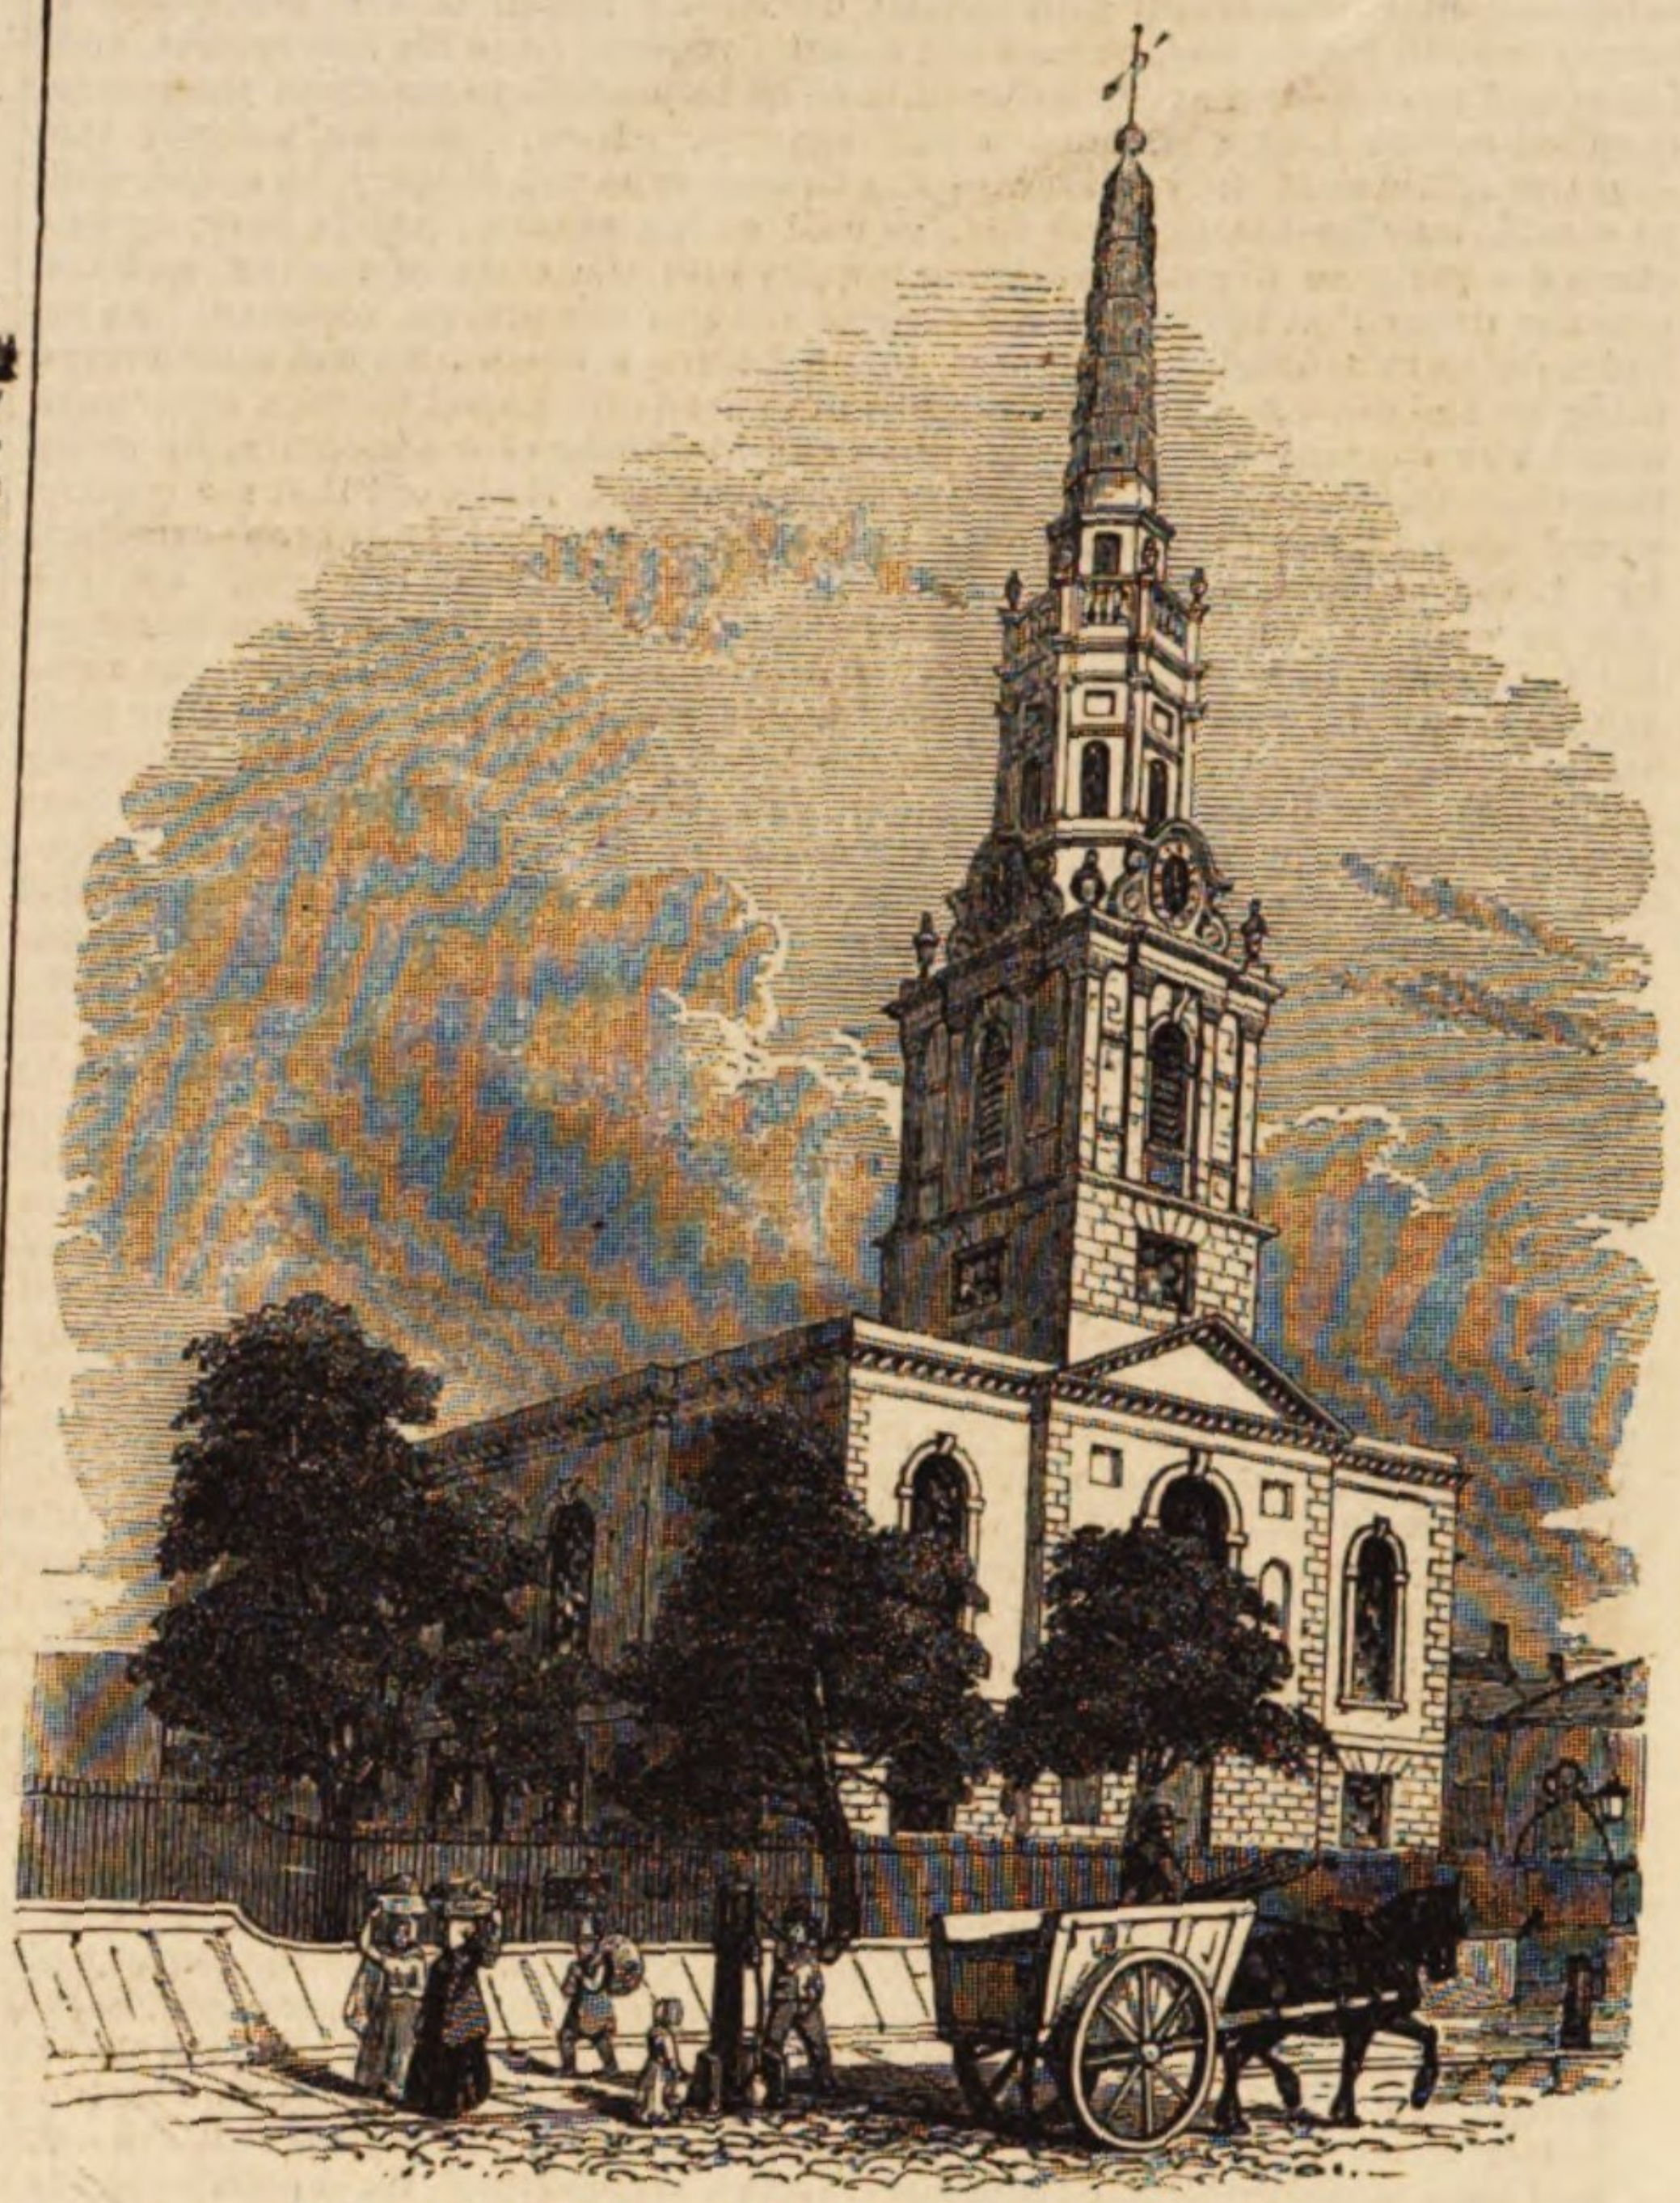
By extending the Breakwater 2¼ miles, it would completely shelter Weymouth Pier, Harbour, and Bathing-place, when it blows hard from the south-east. The point of termination will then be on the remains of the wreck of the Abergavenny; and it is important that a vessel may, from that point, clear Portland with the wind at south-east, without making a tack; a position to be more readily gained by vessels working up to it under the lee or shelter of the Breakwater.

The stone for this great work may be obtained gratis, and there are in one mile of quarries no less than 20,000,000 tons of stone already prepared: this being the upper, or cap stone, which must necessarily be removed in order to obtain the finer stone suitable for building. The quarries are upwards of 300 feet above the sea level, so that by railways, or inclined planes, the stone might be conveyed to the water side without either engines or horses. The expense of the proposed Breakwater is estimated at £600,000.

CHURCHES OF THE METROPOLIS.—No. XLVI.

ST. GILES'S-IN-THE-FIELDS.

Many a reader may start at the adjunct of "in the fields," to the dedicatory name of this metropolitan church; and the surprise is natural enough when we recollect that the structure is situated on the south side of the High-street, St. Giles's, probably one of the narrowest roadways in this overgrown city. For the information of such persons, however, it may be as well to premise that the name of the church receives its addition from the circumstance of being formerly in the fields, and to distinguish it from the Church of St. Giles's, Cripplegate. This parish was anciently a village of the same name, and its church is supposed to owe its origin to the chapel which belonged to the hospital founded about 1117, by Queen Matilda, consort of Henry I., for the reception of leprous persons belonging to the City of London and the county of Middlesex. In 1354, Edward III granted this hospital to the Master and Brethren of the order of Burton, St. Lazar, of Jerusalem, in Leicestershire, for certain considerations for which it became a cell to that order, till the general dissolution of religious houses by Henry VIII. who, in 1545, granted it to Lord Dudley. Soon after this period, the chapel or church was made parochial; and on the 20th of April, 1547, William Rawlinson was instituted rector.



CHURCH OF ST. GILES'S IN THE FIELDS.

The ancient church being very small, and much dilapidated, was taken down in 1623, and a church of brick was erected in its stead. This also became in its turn too small and inconvenient, when the inhabitants applied for an Act of Parliament to enable them to rebuild it; accordingly, the old fabric was taken down in 1730, and the present very handsome edifice was erected and completed in 1733; this being the third church built upon the site.

Mr Elmes, in his diligently compiled "Topographical Dictionary of London," attributes the design to Gibbs; but the following statement is more circumstantial:—"It is curious that this edifice, which has given to Flitcroft his reputation, should be attributed, in the Report of the Church Commissioners to the House of Commons, to Hawksmoor, who, they say, expended £8605 7s. 2d. upon it; but there is no doubt but Walpole, and the View, published in 1753, are correct in ascribing it to Flitcroft, who was, probably, employed by Gibbs, and not by the Commissioners."—Knight's "London."

The church is built of Portland-stone, as are also the tower, and the tall and graceful spire, which are 160 feet high to the vane. The interior is 75 feet in length, exclusive of the recess for the altar, and 60 feet in width: it has a waggon-headed ceiling, and is divided into nave and aisles by fluted stone Ionic columns, which assist the main walls in carrying the roof. The effect of the entire composition is more than usually chaste and beautiful.

A new entrance-gateway, of considerable beauty, has, within these 40 years, been erected from the designs of William Leverton, Esq., in which is introduced an ancient piece of sculpture, of more curiosity than beauty, representing the last judgment. This work was taken from "The Resurrection Gate" of the old church, which had also many rich monuments, one of which, to Sir Roger L'Estrange, the well-known loyalist and writer, still remains. Andrew Marvel was also buried here, "A man in whose reputation the glory of the patriot has eclipsed the fine powers of the poet." St. Giles's also preserves the ashes of Chapman, the translator of Homer; and Flaxman, the truly great sculptor, was buried here on December 15, 1826, his body accompanied to the grave by the President and Council of the Royal Academy. For once, an inscription speaks simple truth; we read here, "John Flaxman, R.A., P.S., whose mortal life was a constant preparation for a blessed immortality: his angelic spirit returned to the Divine Giver on the 7th of December, 1826, in the 72nd year of his age.'

There is a peculiarly interesting circumstance connected with his death, told by Allan Cunningham, in his "Lives of the British Sculptors," (Page 359), which we cannot resist the temptation of transcribing. He says "the winter had set in, and, as he was never a very early mover, a stranger found him rising one morning when he called about nine o'clock. 'Sir,' said the visitant, presenting a book as he spoke, 'this work was sent to me by the author, an Italian artist, to present to you, and at the same time to apologise for its extraordinary dedication. In truth, sir, it was so generally believed throughout Italy that you were dead, that my friend determined to show the world how much he esteemed your genius, and having this book ready for publication, he has inscribed it 'Al Ombra di Flaxman.' No sooner was the book published than the story of your death was contradicted, and the author, affected by his mistake, which, nevertheless, he rejoices at, begs you will receive his work and his apology.' Flaxman smiled, and accepted the volume with unaffected modesty, and mentioned the circumstance, as curious, to his own family and some of his friends." This occurred on Saturday the 2nd of December, when he was well and cheerful; the next day he was taken suddenly ill with cold, and on the 7th was dead.

We perceive, with great satisfaction, that a subscription is in progress for a statue of Flaxman, but we are not aware of its destination.

In the churchyard, too, is the tomb of the Pendrells, who aided in the escape of Charles II.; and, a few years since, was revived the custom of decorating this tomb on Restoration Day (May 29), with branches of oak, in commemoration of Pendrell's loyalty and attachment to the "unkingship."

In the tower is a clock, the dials of which are illuminated at night with gas; this being, if we remember rightly, the first improvement of the kind introduced into the metropolis.

The church is a rectory, in the County and Archdeaconry of Middlesex, in the diocese of London, and the patronage of the Lord Chancellor. The present rector is the Rev. J. E. Tyler, who was instituted in 1826. He is the author of a recondite treatise on Oaths, and a life of Henry V., blending the research of the antiquary with the accomplishment of the scholar.

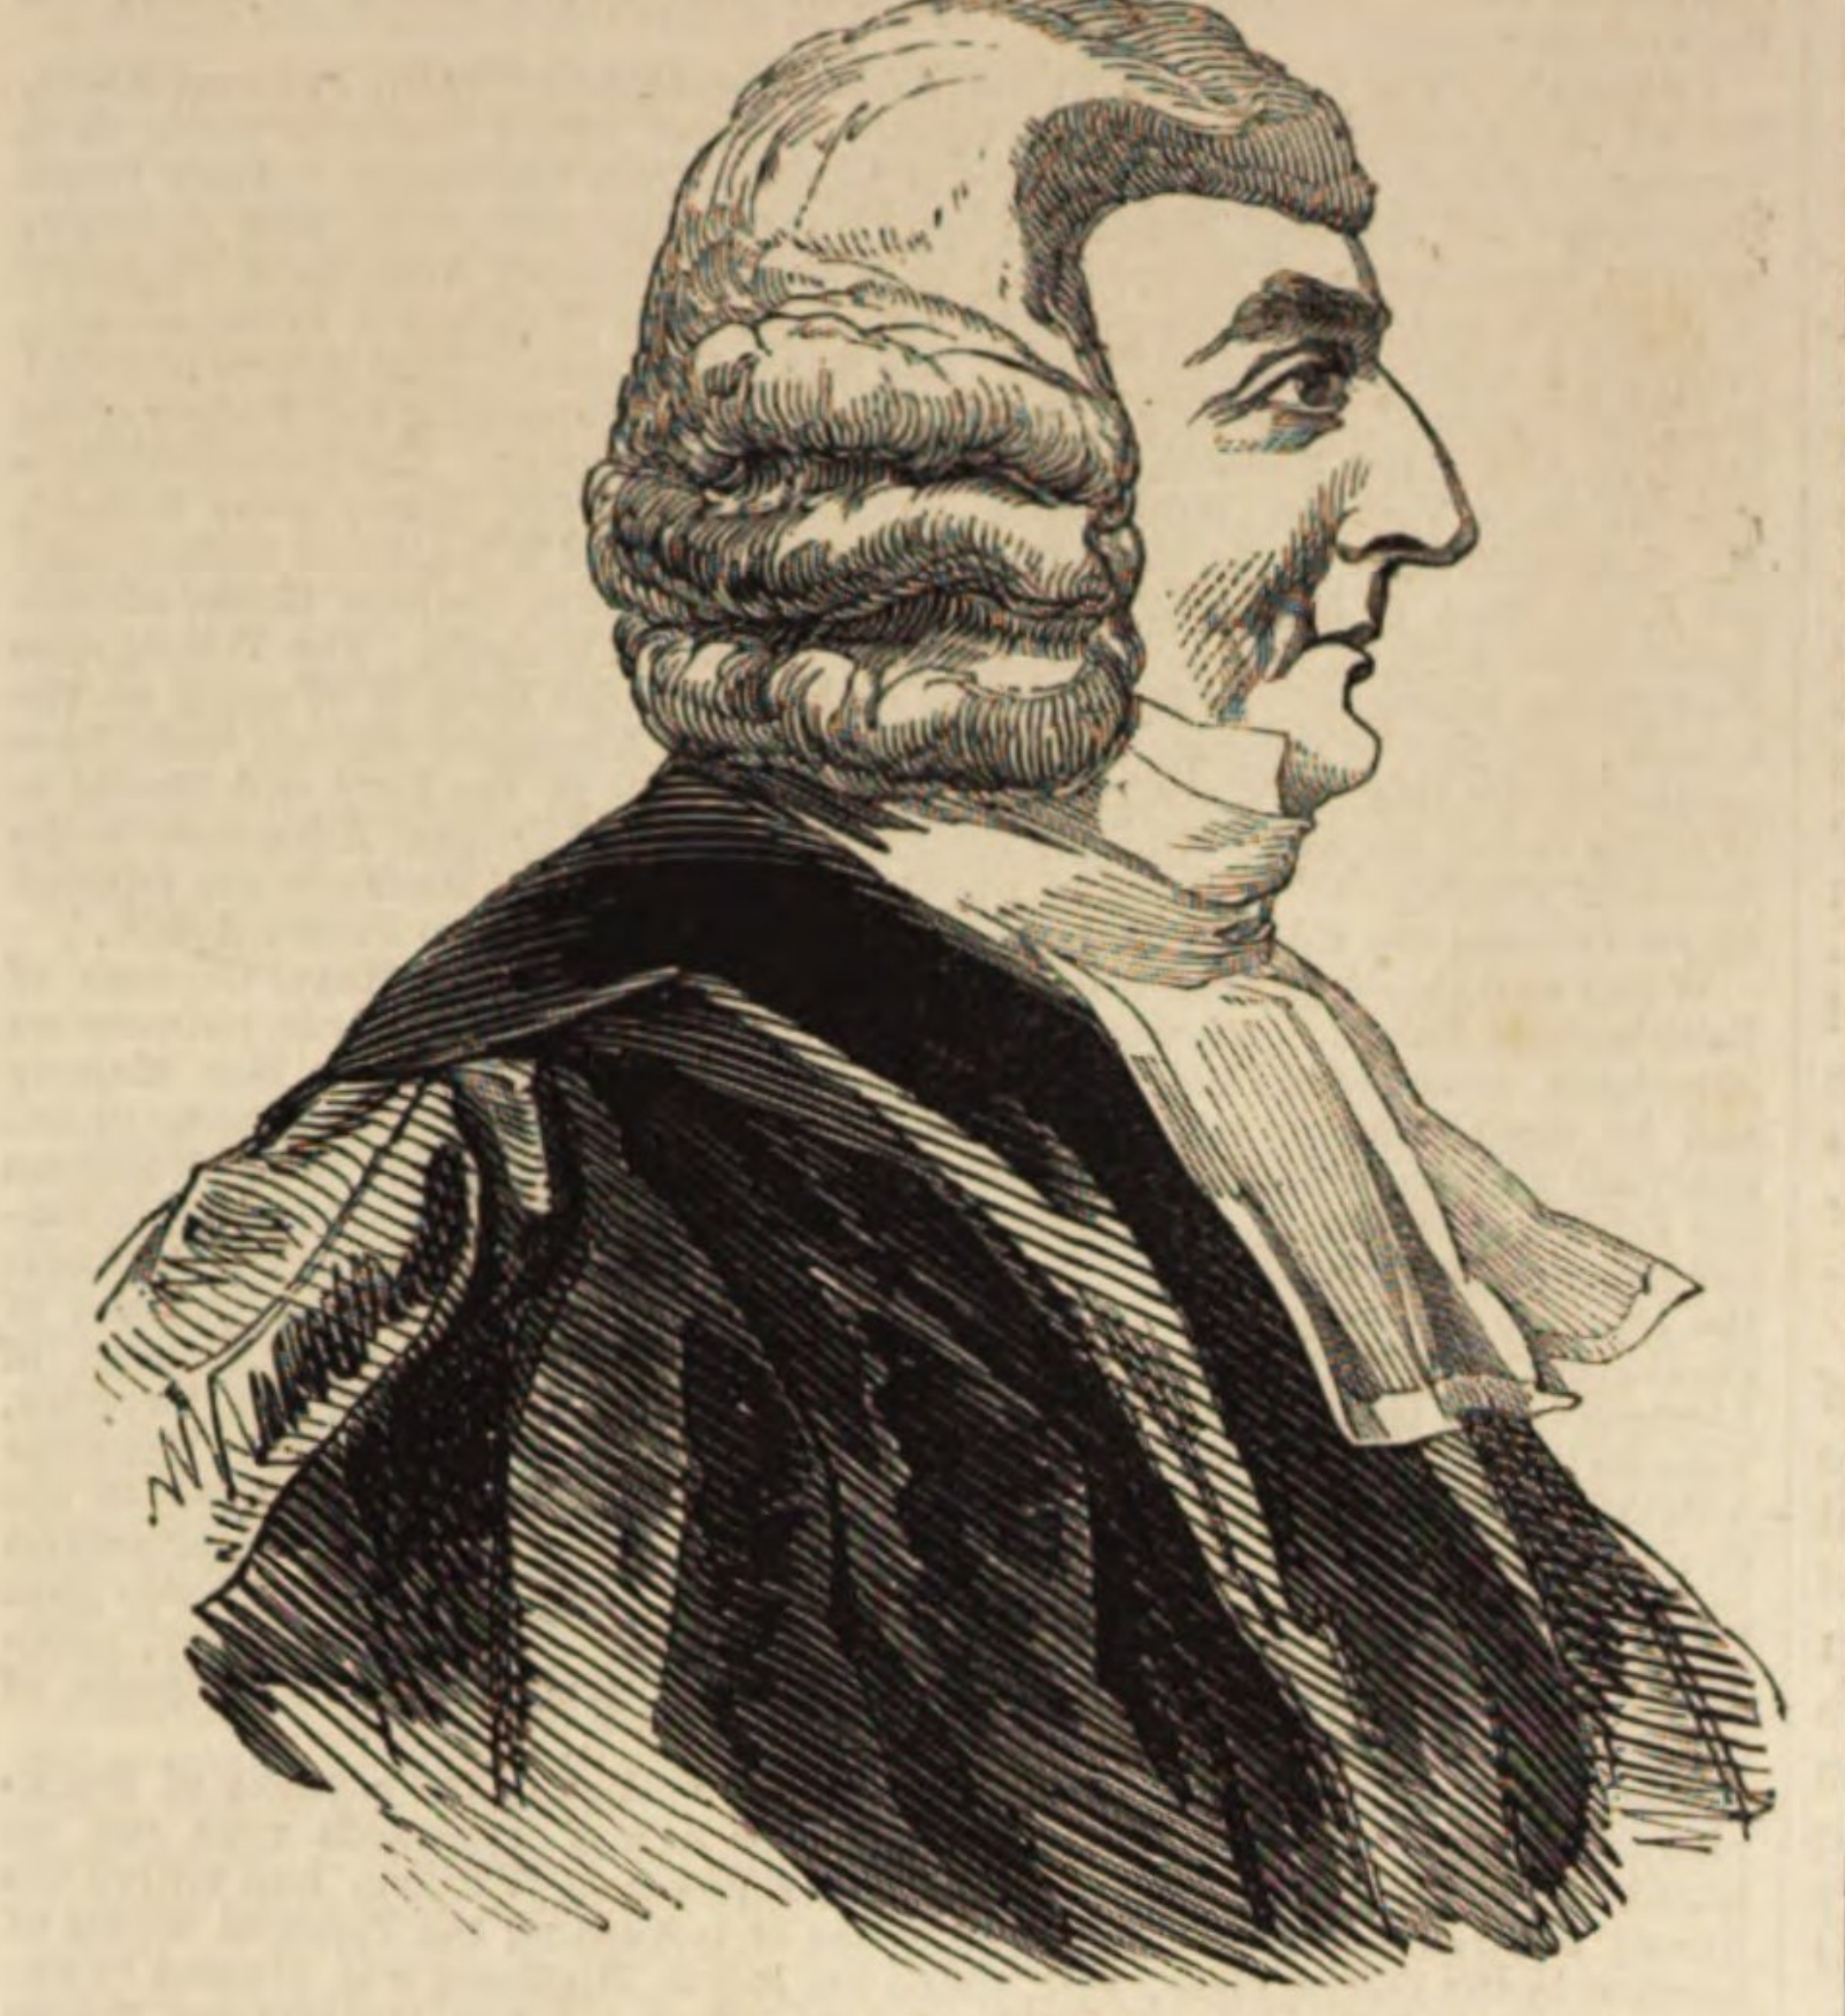
Although the church is very capacious, it is altogether inadequate to the spiritual wants of the parish; and the excellent Rector has been very instrumental in raising funds for the erection of another church, the first stone of which was laid a few weeks since. Of the superstructure, cleverly designed by Ferrey, we shall shortly present our readers with an engraving.

It was in front of the site of St. Giles's Church that Sir John Oldcastle, Lord Cobham, was so savagely burnt during the reign of Henry V., his early friend. The phrase, "St. Giles's Bowl," will remind many of the custom that formerly prevailed here of giving every malefactor on his way to Tyburn a bowl of ale, as his last worldly draught. Thus is the site associated with the fierceness and coarse spirit of bygone ages; and probably the most grateful relics are the trees in the churchyard, which carry the mind's eye back to "the fields." The illuminated clock and the wood pavement of the roadway, are unquestionably of our own time.

PARLIAMENTARY PORTRAITS.—No. XXII., XXIII.

LORD DENMAN, CHIEF JUSTICE OF THE QUEEN'S BENCH.

The name of Denman is one of the greatest of those that figure in the political and legal history of the present and past age. He was early on the stage of public life; he has continued on it long, and he has won the honour and respect of all parties throughout his career. In him the learning of the lawyer has not deadened freedom and independence of thought in the man; nor has the exalted station he has attained caused him to forget or hold in light esteem the rights and privileges of the people. This he has proved on many occasions, in his decisions from the judgment seat, which was never, we believe, filled by a man in whose uprightness and integrity there was a more universal and absolute confidence. But his exertions are not confined to the bench.



LORD DENMAN.

In his place in Parliament he is not an unfrequent speaker, and it is on account of the part he has taken in the debate in the Lords on the management of the Post-Office that we give him as one of our Parliamentary Portraits. His speech on that occasion was a severe denunciation of the system; and the censure he threw on Sir J. Graham, though couched in temperate language, was nevertheless strong.

Lord Denman is now sixty-five years of age; he seems to have borne with less injurious effect than might be expected the wasting toil of his laborious office. He was created a peer in 1834, having previously sat in the House of Commons as Sir Thomas and Mr. Denman. He was, with Lord Brougham, the advocate of the unfortunate Queen of George IV.; he filled the office of Solicitor-General to her Majesty. His exertions for his client were so well remembered, that, it is believed, they excluded him from the Bench during the life of George IV., but, on the accession of the Whigs to power, under William IV., he was made Attorney-General, and then Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench.

T. S. DUNCOMBE, ESQ., M.P.

Mr. T. Duncombe is well known as the Parliamentary advocate of popular rights and personal grievances. In bringing forward both of them, he has on many occasions met with more success than could have been anticipated for one who holds extreme political opinions, and who is not attached very closely to any one section of the house as a party man. He owes his success partly to personal qualities, such as earnestness and boldness of speech, but more to the ability with which he chooses his ground of attack, never bringing forward a case that is either untenable or badly supported by evidence, and more than all, perhaps, by the great knowledge he has of the forms of Parliament, and the skill and tact with which he uses it. He is almost the only member of whom it can be said that he has beaten Sir R. Peel on points of precedent and parliamentary practice. In the first session of the Peel Ministry, when its power was yet unshaken by internal divisions, he defeated it on a motion with respect to the right of petition on the Income-tax Bill. But his efforts have been rather exceeded by his late exertions in bringing forward the affair of the opening of letters by the Secretary of State. In this matter it must be admitted that he got hold of a famous grievance, one in which he enlisted on his side a great amount of public feeling, not by any means confined or limited by party or partisan spirit. He has carried the question through with his usual ability. From briefly refusing all explanation and inquiry, the Government have been brought to furnish something like the first, and to grant the latter by the means of a committee; it is a secret one, indeed, but it is still a concession. Mr. Duncombe has great personal advantages; his features are handsome, his voice good, his bearing bold, manly and unaffected, and (what is not altogether without its effect) his style of dress is unexceptionable. The frank bonhommie of his manner when addressing the House, combined with the power of giving hard hits, of the effect of which there is no mistake, make the honourable member for Finsbury a favourite on his side of the House, while he is not disliked by the other. Having before given a sketch of the honourable member—(See the Illustrated London News, for July 30, 1843)—we do not think it necessary to add more than the following details:—Thomas Slingsby Duncombe is the eldest son of Thomas Duncombe, Esq., of Copegrove, near Boroughbridge. His father is brother of the first Lord Feversham. He sat for the borough of Hertford for several Parliaments previous to 1832, in which year he was unseated by Lords Mahon and Ingestre, under the influence of the Marquis of Salisbury. Their election was afterwards declared void. He has represented the Metropolitan borough of Finsbury since 1834: at the present moment he may be called the most popular of the Metropolitan members.

BUCKINGHAM PALACE.—THE YELLOW DRAWING-ROOM.

Waagen, the acute German critic, said of Buckingham Palace, "it looks as if some wicked magician had suddenly transformed some capricious stage scenery into solid reality." Thus far of the exterior. Mrs. Jameson, speaking of the interior, says: "George the Fourth had a predilection for low ceilings, so all the future inhabitants of the Pimlico Palace must endure suffocation; and, as his Majesty did not live on good terms with his wife, no accommodation was prepared for a future Queen of England."

The superb saloon represented in our engraving, will, we think, gainsay the last quoted opinion. It shows "the Yellow Drawing-room," the most superb of the entire range of rooms that occupy the western or garden front of the first story, and the northernmost in the suite. Its height is 32 feet, and its form nearly square: it has a lofty cove, richly gilt, and ornamented with heraldic shields. In the frieze is a series of sculpture, in relief, by Pitts, descriptive of the origin and progress of Pleasure, namely, Love Awakening the Soul to Pleasure—the Soul in the Bower of Fancy—the Pleasure of Decoration—the Invention of Music—the Pleasure of Music—the Dance—the Masquerade—the Drama—the contest for the Palm—the Palm resigned—the Struggle for the Laurel—the Laurel obtained. There is so much classic beauty in these designs, that we regret to see the continuation broken by the introduction of medallion portraits, even though they be of royal and illustrious personages.

But the main beauty of the apartment lies in the harmony of colour adopted for its draperies, &c.; namely, a series of shades of yellow, ranging almost from brown to green. Thus, the walls are hung with figured yellow silk, and the window draperies are of similar costly material; as are the sofas, chairs, seats, &c. The effect is truly elegant; and we remember the like success in the principal drawing-room of the Reform Club House in Pall-Mall.

The floor of the Yellow Drawing-room in the Palace is bordered with satin and holly wood, inlaid with devices of rose and tulip wood, which ingenuity it were pity to hide even with the choicest productions of the loom.

Upon the walls are portraits of royal personages; and at each end, and above the chimney-piece, are placed superb mirrors. The chimney-piece is of exquisitely white marble, sculptured by Westmacott. The furniture of the room is truly sumptuous; and the assemblage of vases filled with flowers, clocks, bronzes, inlaid tables, cabinets, &c., in exquisite taste. To quote a contemporary, "All that luxury can desire, or skill and wealth accomplish, to make this apartment magnificent, in the ordinary modes of obtaining magnificence, is to be found here in an extraordinary degree.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 6, 1844.

The Post-office business has raised a greater storm than the Home Secretary at all anticipated. The first surprise of the public has changed to a deeper feeling, and from one end of the country to the other so unanimous have all parties been in denouncing the practice, that even Sir James Graham has, to some extent, yielded to the force of public opinion. The narrow majority of 44, and the part taken by the members of the late Government, have also told on the Ministry; and the explanation that was at first refused, and that somewhat cavalierly, is conceded now in the shape of a Secret Committee of the House of Commons, that is to inquire both into the law of the matter, and the practice.

There is evidently a good deal at stake on the question. Sir James Graham confesses that he cannot stand up under the load of obloquy that now rests upon him; he must remove some of it, or he must sink under it; and that he may throw some share of it from his own shoulders to those of his predecessors, of all parties, is his object in granting the inquiry. He says, or implies, that whatever he has done has been done by others; he uses the old and everlasting defence of political men and political parties in England—the tu quoque. It is an effective defence as far as the recriminating parties are concerned, but it is no answer to the complaints of the third and greater party that stands between the two, and suffers occasionally from both. The people are just as averse to having their letters opened by a Lord J. Russell or a Marquis of Normanby as by a Sir J. Graham. Politics ought to be kept out of consideration with respect to an act that is a violation of the principles of common morality, which is a breach of the law of the land and a suspension of the Constitution of the kingdom, by the command of power under the shield of official impunity. Sir J. Graham seems to think that the conduct of the Oppositiom has fixed a sort of personal stigma upon him in the affair. It cannot be denied that the Whigs have small cause for forbearance when their old associate, changed into their bitterest opponent, lays himself open to attack. But we do not believe that Lord J. Russell would have ventured to denounce in another the very identical practices he had, in the same office, authorised himself. Dwelling in a glass-house he would scarcely have been so imprudent as to throw stones, knowing pretty well that he must bring his own fabric about his ears. We may take it for granted that former Home Secretaries have ordered the detention and opening of letters; but we may take it for granted also, that it was done for the advantage of our own State, not at the mere instigation of Foreign Powers. Had explanation been asked of them, it would, moreover, have been given, at least as to the principle on which they proceeded, as in the case of the celebrated Sir R. Walpole, when questioned on the same subject. The great mistake of Sir J. Graham was so obstinately refusing any information at first, only to be driven afterwards into conceding much more than was asked. He refused to give the slightest explanation of the principle he had adopted; Parliament murmurs, the press expose, and the people become indignant, and on the third discussion Government is compelled to concede an inquiry not only into the facts of the case, but the law, which it is not improbable will undergo considerable modification.

On this occasion, as on the former discussions, the weight of argument and the tendency of the debate are directly against the Home Secretary and the Post-office. The bulk of the Ministerial party have thought it quite an official question, to be fought out between the holders of office and Mr. Duncombe. Most of them gave their votes to the Government, but did not feel called on to give their advocacy; that is, not in the political bond. To give their votes is their duty, but to speak is more a matter of feeling and conviction; the votes were given, though not without many exceptions, but the advocacy was withheld, except by Lord Brougham among the Peers, and his double, or shadow, Mr. Roebuck, in the Commons. The manner in which the latter gentleman defended the Government was rather curious. He always does things in a two-handed manner; if he interpose between two contending parties, it is generally to say something bitter of both; neither of them is quite in the right, nor wholly in the wrong. Thus nothing can be stronger than his condemnation of the practice which all parties denounce:—

> He was sure that when the people of England understood what was the nature of the power exercised under the Post-office Act, and likewise when the proceedings which had taken place at the Post-office were laid bare, that moment was its destruction sealed. Such a power was not necessary toward the safety of the country, or even, he would say, of the world. It was only used to gratify base and malignant passions, or to serve the most disingenuous purposes, nor could it be of any use whatever to a Government resting on the affections of the people.

Now to ordinary minds it would seem that a power "not necessary to the safety of the country," and which was "only used to gratify base and malignant passions," could not be too strongly denounced by all right thinking men. But here is Mr. Roebuck's wrath poured on the denouncers of the abuse, and his sympathy, shed like balm, on the official functionary who committed it:—

> He begged to assure the right hon. baronet that he sympathised most sincerely in the feelings which he had expressed as to the manner in which he had been dealt with in this matter. Public indignation had been called down upon a public officer, whose only offence was that of following exactly in the footsteps of his predecessors in office; and that sense of indignation had been created out of doors by all the vile arts of the daily press, which he did not hesitate to designate as the foul instrument by which all manner of vileness had been poured upon the right hon. baronet's head. He would not honour one more than another of these detestable and despicable channels of private information by naming it.

We learn through these same "detestable and despicable channels"—it being among the "vile arts of the daily press" to make known such matters—that these remarks were received with "loud laughter;" so we should imagine; and that laughter must have been caused by some feeling not far removed from contempt. In the affairs of life there is no separating the act from him who does it; the doer must be responsible for the deed. We have it on the best and highest of all authorities that offences must needs come; but it is added, also, "Woe unto them by whom they come." By this mode of dividing the system from the men who carry it out, the most atrocious crimes against society might be justified, if any one in office were only allowed to plead the practices of his predecessors as a defence of his own. Men have not allowed the judicial cruelties of former ages to grow into precedents, neither will they allow official espionage in the present to become one. It is the duty of every age to improve on the past, and leave society better than they found it, or, at all events, not to leave it worse; and in this matter we seemed retrograding. But the discussions, the vote, the granting of the committee, have, we hope, given the system a check.

We regret to see, by a letter in the Times, that much wanton damage has been done to the statues and columns of the ruins in Windsor-park; some have been thrown down and others mutilated. It is such conduct as this that compels the exclusion of the public from many places to which they would otherwise be freely admitted. It is lamentable, too, that a very few individuals are sufficient, by their misconduct, to bring a reproach on all: they are exceptions to the general rule, but unfortunately these exceptions oblige precautious to be taken that look a mistrust of all.

The public occasionally hear strange things, but very few were prepared for one portion of the foreign intelligence of the week, which states the poverty of Louis Philippe! It has been generally believed that he was one of the most wealthy monarchs of Europe, having, in addition to the Civil List, the family property of the Orleans branch of the Bourbons, while the wealth of the Prince de Condé is inherited by the Duc d'Aumale. The statement of the insufficiency of the fortune of the King is said to be put forth in order to prepare the way for procuring a "dotation" from the State for some of his children yet unprovided for. The Opposition papers are in a blaze on the subject, and there seems much probability of the plea being not very favourably received by the French people.

THE REVENUE.

The Quarter's Revenue has been made up till yesterday, and presents a favourable aspect. In the important department of Excise, there is an increase on the quarter of £85,479, and on the year of £420,073. In the Customs there is an increase of £312,029; the Stamps and Tax department is nearly the same as in the corresponding quarter of last year. There is a small increase in the Post-office returns; but there is a slight deficiency on the quarter as compared with the corresponding quarter of last year, under the head of Miscellaneous Taxes, in consequence of the remittances of silver from China coming into the account of last year, and the remittances recently received in this country not coming into the revenue account until next quarter.

THE COURT AND HAUT TON.

The Queen and Prince Albert left Buckingham Palace, in an open carriage and four, at twenty minutes past three o'clock on Saturday afternoon, escorted by a party of Lancers, for Claremont. Their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales and the Princess Royal were in the next carriage.

Sunday.—The Queen and Prince Albert, the ladies and gentlemen of the Royal suite, and the houschold, attended divine service at Claremont. The Hon. and Rev. C. Leslie Courtenay officiated. In the evening her Majesty and the Prince took an airing in an open pony phaeton.

Monday.—In the morning her Majesty and Prince Albert walked on the lawn in front of Claremont, and also promenaded in the gardens. His Royal Highness Prince Albert, attended by Major-General Sir Edward Bowater, afterwards rode out on horseback. The Prince returned to Claremont at two o'clock. In the afternoon the Marchioness of Douro left Claremont for a drive in an open carriage. The Royal Family were taken their accustomed daily airings in Claremont Park. Sir Robert and Lady Gardiner had the honour of joining the Royal dinner-party.

Tuesday.—The Queen and Prince Albert, accompanied by the Princess Royal, arrived at Buckingham Palace, at twenty minutes before twelve o'clock, in a carriage and four, escorted by a party of Lancers, from Claremont. Their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales and the Princess Alice were in the next carriage; and the Marchioness of Douro (Lady in Waiting), Colonel Arbuthnot (Equerry in Waiting), and Major-General Sir Edward Bowater (Equerry to Prince Albert), occupied another carriage and four. His Royal Highness Prince Albert presided in the afternoon at a meeting of the Commission for Promoting and Encouraging the Fine Arts in the Rebuilding the Palace of Westminster. The Commissioners present were Viscount Palmerston, Lord Ashburton, Mr. Henry Gally Knight, Mr. Benjamin Hawes, Mr. George Vivian, Mr. Thomas Wyse, Lord Mahon, and the Right Hon. T. B. Macaulay. The Prince arrived at Gwydyr House shortly before three o'clock. The meeting broke up at six o'clock. The Viscountess Jocelyn has succeeded the Marchioness of Douro as the Lady in Waiting on the Queen; the Earl of Morton and Captain the Hon. Alexander Nelson Hood have succeeded the Earl of Warwick and Captain Meynell as the Lord and Groom in Waiting to her Majesty. Colonel Buckley has relieved Colonel Arbuthnot in the duties of Equerry in Waiting to the Queen; and Colonel Bouverie has relieved Major-General Sir Edward Bowater as Equerry in Waiting to Prince Albert.

Wednesday.—The Queen and Prince Albert walked in the Royal Gardens of Buckingham Palace. His Royal Highness Prince Albert afterwards rode out on horseback, attended by Colonel Bouverie, Equerry in Waiting. Her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert did Sir George Hayter the honour to inspect his picture in progress, representing the christening of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, in St. George's Chapel, Windsor. The Queen had a dinner party at Buckingham Palace. The company consisted of her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester, their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, the Duchess of Buccleuch, the Marquis of Granby, the Earl of Liverpool, the Countess of Westmoreland, the Earl and Countess of Beverley, Viscount and Viscountess Palmerston, Lady Georgiana Bathurst, Baroness Ahlefeldt, Sir Martin Archer Shee, and Baron Knesebeck. The band of the Grenadier Guards attended at the Palace during dinner, and performed several pieces. The band was conducted by Mr. Creaton. Her Majesty afterwards gave a concert, which was performed in the grand saloon. The picture gallery, green drawing-room, and other state apartments were opened for the reception of the visitors.

Thursday.—The Queen and Prince Albert walked in the gardens of Buckingham Palace. His Royal Highness Prince Albert afterwards rode out on horseback, attended by Colonel Bouverie, Equerry in Waiting, and visited the Surrey Zoological Gardens for the purpose of inspecting the Pictorial Model of London in the Olden Time, with which his Royal Highness was pleased to express himself very much gratified. In the afternoon her Majesty and Prince Albert took an airing in an open carriage and four. The royal dinner party at Buckingham Palace included the Duke and Duchess of Norfolk, the Duke and Duchess of Beaufort, the Marquis of Granby, Lord and Lady Ernest Bruce, Lord Forester, and General the Hon. Sir William Lumley.

The Duchess of Kent.—Her Royal Highness will return to this country on Monday next, on the morning of which day she will embark at Ostend on board the Princess Alice, Dover mail packet, Master Commander L. Smithett, who is ordered to Ostend on the 7th to be in readiness. The Princess Alice will land her Royal Highness at Woolwich.

The Queen Dowager.—Her Majesty Queen Adelaide is expected to return to this country, from visiting her illustrious relatives at Meiningen and Weimar, about the 20th of the ensuing month. It is a gratification to be enabled to state that the last letters from Germany assert the complete health of her Majesty.

Married, on Wednesday, at St. George's, Hanover-square, by the Rev. Lord Wriothesley Russell, Lord Alexander George Russell, youngest son of the late Duke of Bedford, to Anne Emily, youngest daughter of the late Sir Leonard Worsley Holmes, Bart., of Westover, Isle of Wight, in the presence of a numerous circle of relatives and friends. After the ceremony, the happy couple preceeded to Woburn Abbey, the seat of his Grace the Duke of Bedford.

A Cabinet Council was held on Tuesday at the Foreign Office. The Ministers present were Sir Robert Peel, the Duke of Wellington, the Lord Chancellor, Lord Wharncliffe, the Duke of Buccleuch, the Earl of Aberdeen, Lord Stanley, Sir James Graham, the Earl of Haddington, the Earl of Ripon, the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Sir Edward Knatchbull, and Lord Granville Somerset. The Council sat an hour.

It is now definitively arranged that her Majesty and Prince Albert, with the royal infants, and the court, will leave Buckingham Palace for the season, on Wednesday next.

The King of Saxony.—On Sunday evening last, the King of Saxony, attended by the Baron Gersdorff and suite, in two open travelling carriages and four, arrived at the Royal Hotel, Weymouth. On Monday morning early, his Majesty took a walk on the beautiful esplanade; and again, after breakfast, his Majesty, previous to leaving, walked as far as the marine villas on Greenhill, when his carriages, which had been ordered to wait at the end of Brunswick-buildings, being ready, his Majesty and suite took their departure on his western tour, intending, as it was understood, to visit Lyme Legis, for the purpose of geological investigation, to which interesting science his Majesty is said to be much devoted; and a finer field for the exercise of a scientific taste does not present itself in the United Kingdom than the cliffs and lias surrounding Lyme Regis. On Tuesday the King arrived at Elliot's Royal Hotel, Devonport, from Torquay. Quite unexpectedly, on Wednesday, his Majesty, in a private dress, with one or two attendants, came into the dockyard in Admiral Sir David Milne's carriage. The gallant Port Admiral, and Major General Hon. H. Murray and Captain Murray, his son and aide-de-camp, met his Majesty at the establishment, and proceeded with him round the yard. After this the King proceeded to the residence of the Admiral Superintendent, Sir S. Pym, K.C.B., where he cordially returned thanks for the kind attention shown to his Majesty by the officers of the departments of the dockyard—Captain Burgman; Mr. Lumsdale, the Master Attendant; Mr. Edye, the Master Shipwright; Mr. Jessop, the Storekeeper, &c. His Majesty and suite, on leaving the dockyard, went, with the Port Admiral, Sir D. Milne, to his official residence, where the royal party lunched.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

Deputation of Railway Directors to Sir Robert Peel.—On Monday a deputation of directors from most of the railways waited upon Sir Robert Peel, for the purpose of laying before the right honourable baronet their views on the subject of the ministerial measure respecting the railways of the kingdom. The right honourable baronet received the deputation with great courtesy, and listened with attention to their case, which was laid before him at considerable length. A long conference ensued, in which the directors enlarged on the objectionable character of the whole measure, both in its principle and details, and concluded by expressing a hope that, at the present late period of the session, the bill would be postponed. Sir Robert Peel declined acceding to the request of the deputation for a postponement until next session.

The New Sugar Duties Bill.—We have authority to state that a British Consul has been appointed for Manilla, and that he will proceed to his destination by the July mail; and also that arrangements have been made, which will take effect immediately after the arrival of that mail in the East, under which there will be, in the three ports of Java to which foreign vessels have access—namely, Batavia, Samarang, and Sourabaya—persons duly authorised to certify the origin of Java sugar in the manner required by the Sugar Duties Bill now before the House of Lords.

Sale of the Library of the late Duke of Sussex.—On Monday, at one o'clock, the sale of his late Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex's library commenced in the auction-rooms of Messrs. Evans and Sons, 93, Pall-mall. The attendance was very limited, and the prices the books fetched were remarkably low. Before the sale commenced a rather strange scene took place between Mr. Evans, sen., and the well-known Captain Ackerley, who, it appeared, caused to be inserted in one of the Sunday papers an advertisement to the effect that the sale would not take place, as some of the books were the property of the public, and had been stolen from the palace. On Mr. Evans coming into the auction-room he asked the Captain if he was the author of the advertisement. The latter did not answer. Mr. Evans commenced the business by stating the title of the first lot; upon which, Captain Ackerley rose and handed him a paper, saying, "That is my protest, sir. I protest against the sale proceeding."—Mr. Evans: Don't interrupt the business, sir.—Captain Ackerley: I have only done my duty, sir, in protesting.—Mr. Evans: You are a madman; and if you don't behave yourself I shall send for a constable.—Several voices cried "Turn him out."—The Captain (addressing the persons present): Mind, I caution you; any persons purchasing these books render themselves liable to an action (laughter, during which the Captain retired.) The number of lots disposed of during the day was 197; the majority consisting of Bibles and portions of Scripture in Hebrew; and the proceeds of the day amounted to £270 8s. It was stated that the Hebrew books disposed of were to be sent to Jerusalem.

Licensed Victuallers' Asylum.—On Tuesday, the half-yearly court of this corporation was held at the Bridge-house Hotel, the Governor in the chair. Mr. Jones, secretary and solicitor to the corporation, read the report of the committee for the past six months, from which it appeared that the domestic and financial affairs of the asylum were in a prosperous state, and that the inmates of the 101 houses attached to the asylum were enjoying all the comforts that age or infirmity in adversity could desire.

Licensed Victuallers' School.—The annual dinner of the friends and subscribers to this benevolent institution took place on Wednesday, in the theatre of the White Conduit House Tavern. About 1200 persons sat down at table. Mr. Wigram (of the firm of Reid and Co.) was in the chair. The chairman, in a brief and eloquent address, adverted to the great good that had been done by the establishment of the school, and impressed upon the company that they were bound, both by interest and duty, to afford it every assistance in their power. Numerous toasts were proposed, and the party broke up at an early hour. A very large amount of subscriptions was collected during the evening.

The Wellington Statue in the City.—A meeting of the committee was held on Tuesday, at which Sir Peter Laurie protested that his sole reason for intruding himself into the Mansion-house on the day of fixing the statue was his anxiety for the honour of the presence of the King of Saxony, that the event might be recorded in the annals of the corporation.

Royal Botanic Society, Regent's Park.—This Society's third and last exhibition of plants and flowers for the season took place on Tuesday. The weather, though sufficiently cloudy to guard from excessive heat of the sun, so cleared up after the stormy gusts of rain and hail as to enhance the pleasures of the promenade, and afforded to the company as they ranged over the grounds an agreeable surprise that the effects of the storm should have been so quickly obliterated. It is but just to state, as we have before had occasion to do, that the arrangements for viewing the plants were admirable, the tents spacious, commodious, and well-ventilated. The bands of the three cavalry regiments—the Horse Guards Blue, the First Life Guards, and the Second Life Guards, met upon the occasion, and played choice selections of music.

The Convicts Barber and Fletcher.—The following document has been published as coming from Fletcher. Barber and he are both on board the convict ship Agincourt, lying off Woolwich, and will sail on Tuesday next for their destination. The witness, whose name is appended to the paper, is said to be an officer of the convict vessel:—"28th June, 1844.—I solemnly declare that, to the best of my knowledge and belief, William Henry Barber had no guilty knowledge that the will of Anne Slack was a forgery, or that it was otherwise than a legitimate and proper matter of business; as such it was introduced by me to him, as stated in my first examination at the Mansion-house. And I further declare that, to my knowledge and belief, he had no guilty knowledge of either of the cases which have recently formed the subject of indictment. I make this declaration with no other motive than to do an act of justice to Mr. Barber as far as lies in my power.—Joshua Fletcher.—Witness, Matthew Henry Cuttris."

COUNTRY NEWS.

Bolton.—Dreadful Accident and Loss of Life.—We regret to state that a dreadful accident occurred at the linen factory of Mr. Alderman Brookes, at Bolton, on Monday, attended with a considerable loss of life. It appears that the factory, which was built about twelve years since, close to the river Crole, and adjacent to St. George's Church, in that town, was at full work, when the boiler of one of the engines suddenly burst, and buried the whole of the work-people, consisting of males and females, in the ruins. The force of the explosion is said to have been tremendous, and to have torn away the roof, and the principal portion of the floors and walls. The authorities were speedily upon the spot, so also were some thousands of the inhabitants; and as soon as the extent of the catastrophe had been ascertained, workmen were employed in clearing away the ruins, with the view of discovering the dead, and ministering to the necessities of the wounded. It was impossible, in the hurry and confusion of the moment, to ascertain how many were employed in the factory at the time. Some said 50 and others 100; but from the fact that a wounded person was not discoverable in any part of the ruins, it was feared that the whole of the unfortunate inmates must have met their deaths simultaneously. Some idea may be formed of the extent of the building, from the fact that it covered nearly two acres of ground, including, of course, the yards and out-offices. It contained two engines, one at each end of the works; one of 50, and the other of 60 horse power; and it was, as we have said, the bursting of the boiler attached to one of those engines that caused the dreadful explosion in question. The extent of the injury by the explosion of the steam-boiler at the linen-mill of Mr. John Brooks, is now ascertained. Three persons have perished by the calamity. Bridget Hart, who was the first person discovered amongst the ruins, died at her house in Newport-street, this morning, leaving a husband and three children. She was returning from the yard to the mill, when the explosion took place, and thus met her melancholy end. James Swift, an elderly man, was found dead. He has left a wife and four children. He was employed in a drying-room over the boiler-house, and must have been thrown into the air with the materials of the building. James M'Donald, of Dale-street, was also employed in the drying-room, and met the same fate as his companion Swift. He was a young man and has left a wife in a state of pregnancy. He had only gone to wrok at the mill that morning with his brother William, who was also much mutilated, but is expected to recover. James Rigg, the mechanic. George Brinscow, the fireman, and the others who were injured, are also considered out of danger. This morning workmen commenced taking down the chimney and the end of the mill over the engine house. There were nearly six hundred hands employed in the establishment, who are thus thus thrown out of employment, but, we are happy to say, that three hundred or four hundred of them are expected to be at work again in about a fortnight, there being two other engines at the other end of the mill, which will keep a considerable portion of the machinery going. An inquest will be held on the bodies of the deceased, when some light will, most probably, be thrown upon the cause of this calamitous accident.

Cirencester.—A public meeting of the shareholders and supporters of the Agricultural College was held at Cirencester on Monday, to receive the report of the committee of management. Earl Bathurst occupied the chair. The attendance was numerous and influential. Dr. Daubeney, of Oxford, was amongst the number. The report was satisfactory. It is intended to hold a public meeting at Southampton in aid of the scheme, on the occasion of the great annual meeting of the Agricultural Society of England taking place in that town. A farm of about four hundred acres, nearly a mile from Cirencester, on the road to Stroud, called Port Farm, belonging to Earl Bathurst, is to be the experimental farm for the intended college.

Gallant Conduct of a Boy.—On the 27th ult. a little boy, named Birch, while playing at Bootle, near Liverpool, fell into the water, when his brother, seven and a-half years old, plunged in, and rescued him.

The Worcester Tragedy.—Death of the Murderer.—To our former report of the horrible tragedy at Worcester last week, we have now to add the final catastrophe. On Friday Jabez Hooper was considered much better, and the surgeons in attendance closed the horrible wounds in his throat. Next morning, however, he was considerably worse, and unfavourable symptoms supervened in the course of the day, until the evening, when he died. He continued rational during Friday, but at one time got out of bed and approached the window of his room. He was, however, at once stopped by the police officer, and placed in bed. During the day he expressed an earnest desire to know the result of the coroner's inquest, but this was most properly concealed from him until he should be in a fit state to receive the intelligence. On the day of his death the prisoner betrayed slight aberration of intellect. The deceased prisoner formerly kept a general provision shop at Abberley, about eleven miles from Worcester, on the Ludlow road, and is respectably connected. About twelve months ago he removed to Worcester, and was living at his brother's house when the murder was committed. There does not appear to have been the slightest ill-will subsisting between him and his brother's family; and as to the allegation of the prisoner's insanity, we may say that, although it is positively affirmed that he has betrayed symptoms of mental aberration after indulgence in intoxicating liquors, nothing of the kind was apparent a few hours before the committal of the horrid deed which has hurried two mortals unprepared into the other world. The remains of the poor child were buried on Friday afternoon, in the presence of a large concourse of spectators.

IRELAND.

Lord Heytesbury succeeds Earl de Grey as Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. He is expected in Dublin on the 15th inst. The following appointments have been announced:—Mr. A'Court, at present of the Chief Secretary's Office, Dublin Castle, to be Private Secretary to Lord Heytesbury; Capt. Bowles, brother to the gallant admiral lately on the Irish station, to be Comptroller of the Household, vice Major Parker of the 1st Life Guards; Capt. Willis, Gentleman Usher (son-in-law of Sir William Gossett), succeeds to the Mastership of the Horse, vice Capt. Williams, formerly of the 7th Hussars; Lords Francis Gordon, Charles Ker, and Sir William Don, will be retained as Aides de Camp. It is generally understood that the foregoing are the only changes contemplated in the household.

The weekly meeting of the Repeal Association, which was held, as usual, on Monday, in the Conciliation Hall, presented an equally crowded appearance as on any of the previous Mondays since the incarceration of Mr. O'Connell and his fellow-martyrs. Valentine Maher, Esq., M.P. for Tipperary, was called to the chair. The Repeal rent for the week amounted to upwards of £2,000.

It is stated on the authority of the Limerick Chronicle that Sir Richard de Bourgho, Bart., of Castleconnell, abjured the Church of Rome, and embraced the Protestant faith, at Castletownroche Church, county Cork, on Sunday se'nnight.

The corporation of Dublin have chosen Mr. Arabin (a liberal Protestant) to fill the office of Lord Mayor during the ensuing year. It was proposed to re-elect Mr. O'Connell, but the honourable and learned gentleman declined the honour.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

The Affghan Massacre.—A handsome tablet has been erected in Alverstoke Church, near Gosport, to the memory of the officers and soldiers of the 44th Regiment who fell in the Affghan war, over which hangs the colours of that ill-fated regiment. The following is the inscription:—"Sacred to the memory of Colonel T. Mackrell, A.D.C. to her Majesty; Major W. B. Scott, Captain T. Swaine, Captain R. B. M'Crea, Captain F. R. Leighton, Captain T. Robinson, Captain F. C. Collins, Lieutenant W. H. Dodgin, Lieutenant W. G. White, Lieutenant W. G. Wade, Lieutenant H. Cadett, Lieutenant S. Swinton, Lieutenant F. J. C. Fortye, Lieutenat A. W. Gray, Paymaster T. Bourke, Lieutenant and Quartermaster R. B. Hallahan, Surgeon J. Harcourt, Assistant Surgeons W. Balfour, and W. Primrose, and 645 non-commissioned officers and soldiers of the 44th Regiment, who fell upon the field of battle in the disastrous Affghan war of 1841 and 1842. They sank with arms in their hands unconquered, but overpowered by the united horrors of climate, treachery, and barbarous warfare; their colours saved by Captain J. Souter, one of the few survivors, hang above this stone, which is erected to their memory by the officers of the 44th Regiment.—June, 1844." "And if thy people Israel be put to the worse before the enemy, because they have sinned against Thee; and shall return and confess Thy name, and pray and make supplication before Thee in this house; then hear Thou from the Heavens, and forgive the sins of thy people Israel."—6th chapter of the 2nd book of Chronicles, 24th and 25th verses.

Launch of the Retribution.—The launch of the Retribution Steam-frigate took place on Tuesday last at two o'clock, at Chatham Dock Yard. The assemblage of persons present was not so great as on previous occasions of a similar kind, which may be accounted for by the wetness of the morning. Among those present were:—Vice Admiral J. C. White, commander-in-chief in the Medway; Captain Martin of the Camperdown; Captain Fisher, superintendent of Sheerness yard; Captain Sherriff, superintendent of Chatham yard; Commander Burton, of the Poictiers; Sir F. Smith, commanding Royal Engineers; Lord A. Fitzclarence; Sir W. Symonds, Surveyor of the Navy; and the heads of the local department. Miss Phillimore, the daughter of Dr. Phillimore, had the honour of performing the ceremony of christening. Her armament, it appears, will consist of 10 pieces of ordnance, that is two 8-inch guns of 112 cwt. each, four 8-inch guns of 65 cwt. each, and four 32 pounders, of 25 cwt. each. We believe this is smaller than at first intended. She has eight ports on a side, besides the bridle port. Her intended load, draft of water is 18 feet forward and 18 feet abaft, and the height of the midship port from the water is to be 6 feet 6 inches. The centre of the engine shaft is to be 10 feet above the water; the diameter of her paddle-wheel is to be 35 feet. Her rigging consists of two masts only; the foremast is square rigged, and the mainmast has a boom mainsail and gaff topsail.

Promotions.—Mates:—George Hancock (1840) from the Excellent, for his proficiency in naval studies; and William L. Partridge (1839) of the Dido, to the rank of lieutenant.

Appointments.—Lieutenant:—Alfred Fairman (1829) to the Warspite, taking passage to the Mediterranean in the Sydenham, vice George Goldfinch (1st) invalided.—Second Master, George S. Hall, of the Sydenham, acting master of the Geyser.

Lights on the Coast of Norway, &c.—The following has been received at Lloyd's, from the Hydrographic Office, dated the 18th June, 1844:—"The Norwegian Government has given notice that the following lights will be established in the course of the present year:—1. Two fixed lights on the island of Udsere, in lat. 50 18 N., and long. 4 53 30 E., visible from 18 to 20 miles distant. 2. Two fixed lights on Store and Little Torunger Islands, at the entrance to Arendahl, in lat. 58 24 N., and long. 8 53 E., visible from 18 to 20 miles. 3. A fixed light on the island Sundvigsoden, on the western side of the Channel to Arendahl, in lat. 58 25 40 N., and long. 8 52 10 E., visible from 10 to 12 miles. In order to prevent any of the above lights from being mistaken for those of Marköe and Lindersnoes, on the south point of Norway, the light of Marköe will be discontinued on the 1st of July next."

Her Majesty's Theatre.—We do not remember ever having such a combination of excellence as that announced for Puzzi's benefit for Thursday. The very élite of the first talent in Europe will, on this occasion, be drawn into one focus. The best works of the two first Italian modern writers are to be presented, supported by artistes who have earned the greatest fame. Anna Bolena, the best opera seria of Donizetti, with Lablache, Moriani, and Grisi. Signora Guiseppina Risetti, from the Italian Opera, at Vienna, will make her first appearance in this country as Jane Seymour. Tho second act of Rossini's "Guillaume Tell" is to be given, with the powerful aid of Mdme. Persiani, Lablache, Fornasari, and Mario. And in the ballet Ellsler and the Cerito will perform. The beneficiaire will delight his patrons with a solo on the horn.

Harrow School: Speech Day.—The examinations for scholarships having been postponed to the present term, it was found advisable to have only one speech-day (Thursday last), when the company was very numerous. The speeches were excellently delivered. Among them, perhaps Day, Grant, Chitty, and Long might be selected for special commendation. Day's "Parabasis" from "The Knights" of Aristophanes was given with genuine comic humour, chastened by correct taste. The five annual prize recitations were interspersed with the speeches. Grant was pre-eminent with the triple honours of his Latin Alcaïcs, his Greek Iambics, and his Greek prose for the Hope prize. Day was the successful competitor in Latin hexameters; Chitty in Latin prose for the Peel medal. A sixth prize for Latin composition has lately been founded.

The St. Marylebone Savings' Bank.—Deposits in the year ending yesterday show a considerable advance upon the previous year: 1843, £305,383; 1844, £340,509.

POSTSCRIPT.

Saturday Evening.

The Queen and Prince Albert took their usual early walk yesterday in the gardens of Buckingham Palace. The Hereditary Grand Duke and Duchess of Mecklenburgh Strelitz paid a visit to the Queen in the afternoon, at Buckingham Palace. Prince Albert presided at a meeting of the Fine Arts Commission at Gwydyr House. Sir R. and Lady Peel had the honour of dining with her Majesty.

We understand the removal of the Court from Buckingham Palace to Windsor Castle has been postponed until Wednesday or Thursday next at the latest. Her Majesty will have a large dinner party on Monday next, at the Palace, which, it is expected, will close the royal banquets in town for the present season.

Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Cambridge arrived at Dover on Thursday, at 12 o'clock, and was accompanied by Baroness Ahlefeld and Baron Knesebeck. Her Royal Highness went to Worthington's Ship Hotel, to await the arrival of her daughter, the Duchess of Mecklenburgh Strelitz. At two o'clock the Grand Duke and Duchess of Mecklenburgh Strelitz, landed from her Majesty's steam-packet the Princess Alice, Captain Smithett, at the Admiralty-yard, where a guard of honour of the 68th Regiment was in waiting. Colonel R. Jones and Captain Merces, R.N., were also in attendance. Captain Mercer had the honour of escorting the Grand Duchess to the Ship Hotel. After dining, the Royal personages set off for London by the half-past four o'clock train.

The Lord Mayor and the Lady Mayoress gave a most splendid ball and supper, at the Mansion House, on Wednesday night. There were upwards of three hundred and fifty guests.

Several of the Cabinet Ministers visited Sir Robert Peel on Friday morning, at the residence of the right hon. baronet in Whitehall-gardens.

The Governor and Deputy-Governor of the Bank of England, and Mr. Higham, as Commissioner for the Reduction of the National Debt, had a meeting on Friday morning with the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in Downing-street.

Post-office Committee.—The secret committee appointed to enquire into the regulations of the Post-office, met on Friday morning at twelve o'clock in the Committee-room, No. 14. Sir James Graham was in attendance during the whole morning, but nothing transpired as to the mode of proceeding which the committee intended to adopt.—The committe, (the only one sitting to-day) met again this morning at twelve o'clock, and proceeded with the inquiry. Sir James Graham was again in attendance.

Justice to Ireland.—This day a numerous meeting of Irish noblemen and gentlemen was held at the Freemasons' Tavern, Great Queen-street, for the purpose of establishing an association for the mutual advantage of the Irish of all classes, &c. The Marquis of Clanricarde presided, and was supported by several noblemen and gentlemen. The noble chairman having addressed the meeting and explained its objects, expressed his views in favour of the design, and having concluded, Mr. Emerson Tennent, M.P. for Belfast, proposed the first resolution. He observed that the formation of an association, such as contemplated, was much desired, and much required. He had only to refer to the fact of the Scotchmen, resident in London, having their association—the Welshmen having their association—and he also found that the natives of the principal English counties had their associations. It was therefore to be confidently hoped that an association would be found in which all Irishmen would cultivate their respective opinions and ideas irrespective of religion or politics. He hoped that all political or religious differences would subside. After some further remarks, Mr. Tennant concluded by proposing a resolution to the effect that an association, such as referred to, should be formed. General Caulfield seconded the resolution, which was carried. Resolutions were then proposed by Lord Castlereagh, Lord Trimbleston, Mr. E. Grogan, M.P., Captain Taylor, M.P., Sir D. Norreys, M.P., Hon. G. O'Callaghan, late M.P., &c. &c. A committee was named to carry out the object. It was announced that the subscription would be but £2 per annum. After some further resolutions in accordance with the objects, the meeting was dissolved. The total subscriptions received were £136. It is here that the meritorious stranger may look for friends without disappointment; it is hither that the honest sufferer may come with a certainty of finding gentlemanly sympathy and prompt relief. The advantages of such a society are so obvious and so numerous that our wonder is that the first step had not been taken years ago.

Adult Orphan Institution.—Yesterday the annual meeting of this most excellent Institution, which has for its object, the education, clothing, and nurture through life, of the orphans of clergymen, and officers in the army, navy, and marines, was held at the Institute, in St. Andrew's-place, Regent's-park, the Right Hon. the Earl Manvers, in the chair. The Rev. Thomas Bowdler, the Secretary, read the report, which, after expressing the healthy state of the inmates, &c., stated, that the number of wards at present were 35, 9 being the orphans of clergymen; 14, of officers in the army; 9, of officers in the navy; and 2 in the Royal Marines. Since the opening of the Institution, 206 orphans had been clothed, fed, instructed in dancing, music, &c., to fit them for governesses—61 being the orphans of clergymen, 72 of officers in the army, 73 of officers in the navy, many of whom were now in good circumstances. The finance account stated, that the donations for the last year had been £372 10s., and the contributions £320 9s.; the whole of the receipts being £2418 12s. 4d. The disbursements had been £2115; the house expenses being £719 16s. 7d., and the salaries £700. The balance in hand was £303 19s. 4d. The company inspected the rooms and gardens of the building, and seemed much pleased with the cleanliness of the young women who were parading the grounds.

Death of Mr. Scholefield, Member for Birmingham.—We regret to announce the death of this gentleman, which took place at his residence in Manchester-buildings, at three o'clock on Thursday afternoon. The deceased gentleman was in the 70th year of his age.

Fairlop Fair.—Yesterday was a regular Fairlop day; it rained in torrents, and the beautiful forest of Hainault was like a swamp; the donkeys were almost as numerous as the visitors, but the unfavourable weather saved the poor animals from many a hard blow, as few persons availed themselves of a ride. There were nearly 400 donkeys saddled and bridled in the forest, and of these 120 passed over London Bridge on their way to Fairlop at an early hour in the morning. Their taskmasters, the Gipsies, who always congregate in considerable numbers at Fairlop fair, and a few higlers, formed the majority of the company assembled; the dramatic companies of the various theatrical booths appeared in a woful plight; the jokes of "Mister Merriman" fell harmless, terrific broadsword combats passed unnoticed, scarcely a good audience could be assembled during the whole day, and the drinking booths were almost deserted. Those amphibious vehicles, the boats rigged out like ships, and mounted on carriages, each drawn by six horses, gaily decorated with ribbons, made their appearance as usual at the fair, according to annual custom. One of them contained the blockmakers of Wapping, in their holiday gear, and the other the watermen of the same place. Their wives followed in open carriages. As they entered the fair a band of music, which accompanied them, struck up; and, on passing over the spot where the gigantic oak once stood, the band played the "Brave Old Oak." A body of the K division of police were in attendance to prevent gambling and protect the visitors, but the rain made their task a very easy one.

Attempted Murder in a Shooting Gallery.—This day (Saturday) a young man of respectable appearance, 22 years of age, who gave the name of the Hon. William Ross Tuchet, was brought up at Bow-street, before Mr. Twyford, charged with shooting at Thomas Smith, a gunsmith, at 288, High Holborn, with intent to murder him. The prisoner seemed perfectly unconcerned by his situation, and had spots of blood upon his clothes. From the evidence of the wounded man's son, it appeared that about half-past twelve that day, the prisoner came into the shooting gallery at the back of the shop, and inquired whether he could have a few shots with a pistol at the target? Witness's father replied that he could, and immediately proceeded to load a brace of pistols. He then gave them to the prisoner, who, after the second shot, observed, that the triggers pulled very hard. Witness's father said he could set the hair-triggers if the prisoner wished, on which the latter said he did not want them to go off so easy as that, and would shoot with them as they were. On receiving a pistol for the third shot, the prisoner, without saying a word, turned round, and while Mr. Smith was loading another pistol, with his back towards him, he fired the pistol at him, and wounded him in the loins. The wounded man immediately exclaimed, "Good God, I am shot through the back," and then turning to the prisoner, asked him what he did it for, but he made no answer. The prisoner smiled at the time he fired the shot. A policeman was immediately fetched, to whom the prisoner said, that he was tired of his life, and had shot Mr. Smith on purpose, as he wished to be hanged. The prisoner also repeated the same words to Mr. Smith's son, adding that he bore no animosity to his father. He was then removed in custody to the station-house, and Mr. Smith was carried to St. Bartholomew's Hospital, when it was discovered the bullet had lodged in the right side of his back, and that great danger existed.—The prisoner, in answer to questions from Mr. Twyford, said, "What the witnesses have told you is perfectly true. I did it on purpose, because I wished to be hanged, as I am treated very badly, and am very unhappy. I am a single man, and have plenty of money. I live in lodgings by myself, at 26, Weymouth-street, Portland-place.—Mr. Twyford remanded the prisoner for a week.—Late in the day it was discovered that the prisoner was the brother of Lord Audley.

Destructive Fires last Night.—Last night a fire of a very alarming and destructive character, and which was well nigh attended with fearful loss of life, broke out in the premises known as Grange-house, Bermondsey, the property of Mr. Owen. At the time the flames burst forth, Mr. Owen, with his family and servants, were up, and employed in different parts of the premises; but such was the rapidity with which the fire spread, that they had not sufficient time to make their escape down the staircases. Fortunately, several persons were quickly at the scene, and, having procured ladders, Mrs. Owen was dragged through one of the windows, and lowered into the garden. The rest of the inmates were also rescued, and without receiving personal injury. The engines arriving, water was soon obtained, and the engines were set to work, but so fiercely did the flames extend, that they for some time defied the utmost exertions of the firemen, and room after room fell a sacrifice. When the roof fell in, the flames rose to an immense altitude. Towards half-past ten, owing principally to the exhaustion of all combustible material, the firemen got the mastery of the conflagration. The valuable stock of furniture, &c., was either consumed or rendered worthless by the action of the fire.—Scarcely had the firemen succeeded in extinguishing the disastrous fire at Bermondsey, than intelligence was received of another conflagration having broken out in Whitechapel. Thither several of the brigade and West of England engines were despatched, when it was ascertained that the upper part of the spacious range of premises belonging to Mr. Fryett, pawnbroker, carrying on business at 16, Whitechapel-road, immediately opposite the church, was in flames. The fire originated in the stores among a valuable assortment of pledges. The damage done is very considerable.

Attempted Murder.—On Thursday afternoon the neighbourhood of Redcross-street, Southwark, was thrown into great excitement by the report that a woman had murdered her husband. The unfortunate sufferer, Mr. Samuel Johnson, arrived home to dinner from Billingsgate-market, at which place he is a salesman, when he found his wife inebriated, and no dinner provided for him or his family. He remonstrated with her for her conduct, and was about to leave the house, when his wife, in a state of frenzy, seized a table-knife and stabbed him in the back of the head, just below the scalp. He was taken to Guy's Hospital, where it was ascertained that the knife had entered with great force between the nape of the neck and the skull-bone, against which it had struck, and that little hopes were entertained of the man's recovering. The wife was taken into custody.

The Convict Dalmas.—Dalmas has received a reprieve during pleasure, which is tantamount to remitting the capital punishment. Dalmas will remain in Horsemonger-lane prison for another month, and it will then be decided whether he is to be transported for life or sent to Bedlam as a lunatic. We understand it is the opinion of Drs. Sutherland and Monro that he is subject to such violent passions when in the least provoked, that he cannot be considered n any other light than that of an insane man.

ARRIVAL OF THE ROYAL MAIL STEAMER THAMES.

Southampton, Saturday Morning.

The above steamer, Lieut Philip Hast, arrived from the West Indies this morning, at half-past four o'clock. The dates of departure of the Thames are, from Tampico 24th of May, Vera Cruz June 1, Demerara 4th, Jamaica 8th, Havannah 9th, Grenada 10th, Nassau 13th, St. Thomas 14th, Barbadoes 18th, Bermuda 20th. Among the passengers is Major Hill, of the 1st West India Regiment, who is the bearer of important dispatches from the Governor-in-Chief of the Leeward Islands.

The Illustrious, line-of-battle ship, had been sent by the Admiral to Havannah, it was said, to demand an explanation respecting the imprisonment of several British subjects on account of the late disturbances in the island, as well as all free coloured British subjects having been peremptorily ordered off the island of Cuba, to the ruin of many of them.

Colonel Thompson, the American Commissioner, who had arrived in Mexico with, it was said, important dispatches concerning the annexation of Texas to the United States, was to have left Mexico on the 28th of May, and his place was taken in the diligence for Vera Cruz, but on the morning he was to leave an order was sent from the Mexican Government that his fare should be returned to him, as no answer could be given to the dispatches, of which he was the bearer, until the arrival of Santa Anna in Mexico, who would certainly arrive on the 3rd of June, our informant having left him at his hacienda of Encero, near Jalapa, on the 31st May, on his way to the capital. The 5th of June was fixed for the extraordinary meeting of Congress, and at that meeting it was said that Santa Anna would demand additional powers, to enable him to treat with the United States and Texas on the subject of annexation, which had created the greatest possible excitement among all classes in Mexico.

A report was current that the United States' Government had offered five millions of dollars to Mexico, as the price of its acquiescence in the proposed plan of annexation.

Much excitement prevailed among the English, in consequence of an English gentleman named Lloyd, having been shot through the arm by one of the sentinels on duty at the palace, for no other cause than his walking on the pavement before the palace—a walk not prohibited to the Mexicans. Our minister, Mr. Bankhead, had with great promptitude interfered, and the soldier, as well as the officer on guard, had been placed in arrest.

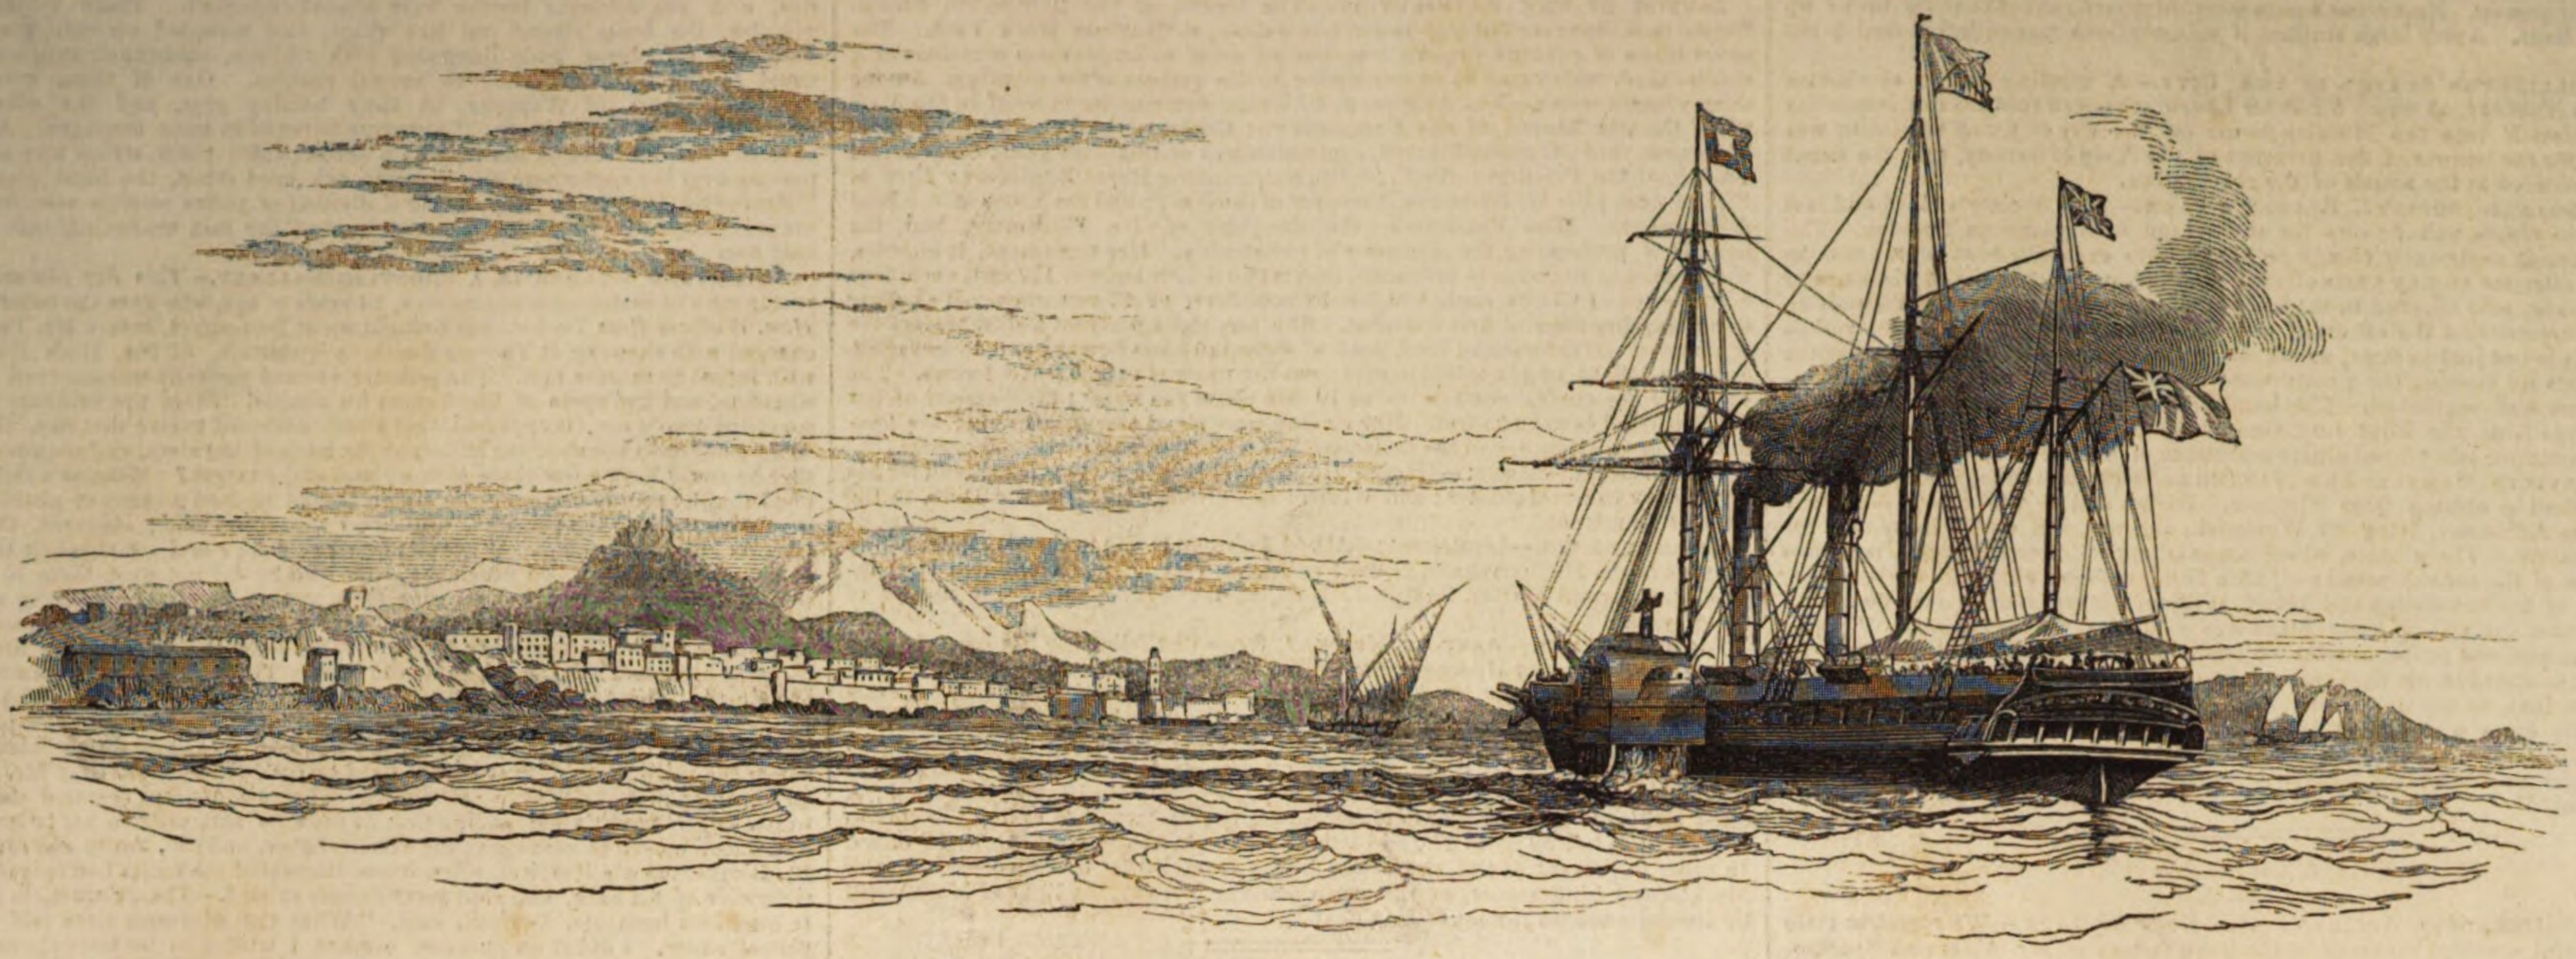
Riots in Dominica.—Serious disturbances have taken place in this island, originating in opposition, on the part of the black population, to the census which was ordered to be taken on the 3rd of June, and which they imagined to be a preliminary step to re-establishing slavery. So foolish an idea must be ascribed to the circumstance of there being in the island some hundreds of refugee slaves from the French islands, whose fears were excited by being called upon to give their names. The negroes collected in considerable numbers, assaulting the enumerators and commissioners, and severely beating the magistrates who hastened to give their assistance in explaining the meaning of the census. In the neighbourhood of the town of Roseau, martial law having been proclaimed in the island, the tumults soon ceased, the people being awed by the presence of an armed force; but in the distant parts of the island, where this could not be so soon done, the mob made use of their power to sack several houses; ultimately, being opposed by the militia, they dispersed. About 100 persons were in gaol, on the departure of the packet, waiting their trial. The Governor of the Leeward Islands, Sir Charles Fitzroy, had arrived in her Majesty's ship Inconstant, Capt. Freemantle, and it was supposed martial law would cease immediately. About eight of the insurgents were killed and wounded. Two hundred men of the Royals were dispatched from Barbadoes, under the command of Lieut.-Col. Archer, on the news reaching that island.

Hayti.—The ex-President Herard, finding himself deserted by his troops, embarked at Port au Prince for Jamaica on the 1st of June, on board her Majesty's ship the Spartan, Hon. Capt. C. Elliott. The Government of Guerrier was daily consolidating, and giving much satisfaction to all classes. Hostilities with the eastern portion of Hayti had been suspended, and negotiations opened for an amicable adjustment of their differences.

Acaan had submitted to the Government, but his followers had committed some acts of plunder at Aux Cayes. The property, however, of foreigners had been respected. The French admiral was at Port au Prince with a frigate and two other vessels of war.

Entry of Marshal Bugeaud into Morocco.—Dispatches were received by the French Government on Wednesday, announcing the entry of Marshal Bugeaud into the town of Ouchda, on the 19th ult., without a shot being fired, the Morocco troops having evacuated the place two days before. A Moorish Chief had asked previously for a conference with the Marshal, and appeared disposed towards a pacific arrangement. At this period, however, the Marshal had not received instructions from his Government, acquainting him with the views of the Cabinet, nor was he aware of the fact of the departure of the Prince de Joinville with the fleet under his commad.

THE OVERLAND INDIAN MAIL.



THE MAIL PACKET FROM ALEXANDRIA, OFF MARSEILLES—THE INDIAN MAIL ON BOARD.

The arrival of the Overland Mail, on Tuesday morning last, suggests the fitness of this opportunity of perfecting our details of this complete postal arrangement.

We have described in former numbers the course of the Indian Mail from Bombay to Marseilles, together with views of some of the more remarkable localities in the passage of a newspaper express from Paris to the Times office in London. Since that period, the subject has grown to be one of greater importance; the states of Hindostan have become more essential to the welfare of the home country; China has been added to our commercial empire; and the course of trading adventure on the coasts of Burmah, Japan, and many wondrous places of the Orient seas, have combined to give all Post-office arrangements with these immense territories a degree of surpassing interest. The flight of the Indian Mail is, in truth, a wonder of the day: thousands follow its course for pleasure or instruction; and even the Governor-General, throwing off the customary solemnity of a state march, has at last ventured to take the post passage to Calcutta. For these reasons, we have felt ourselves bound to gratify the public with some additional information on the subject; and accordingly, at great expense, we have prepared them a complete series of views of the more important agents used in the transmission of "The Mail" from Egypt to London. These engravings almost describe themselves; and, being consecutive in their arrangement, will call for little additional matter to make both them and the intermediate steps of the mail journey intelligible to the untravelled reader.

The India Mail—comprehending all the mails from the departments of the East—is made up at Bombay. It consists of bundles of letters, so packed, in strong iron boxes of about two feet by one and a half in depth, securely bound and sealed in solder, as wax would be melted by the heat of the climate; these boxes are stamped with a crown, and the words, "GENERAL POST OFFICE—India Mail." The number of these boxes varies from thirty to forty, or more; together, they constitute the Mail. The boxes, sealed and numbered, are put on board a powerful steamer, and sent direct to Suez, at the head of the Red Sea; then they are transmitted across the Desert in light carts, to Cairo, where they are shipped on the canal, and towed, or steamed, according to circumstances, to Alexandria, where the race against time and tide in reality commences. They are mostly shipped by one of the magnificient steamers in the service of the Oriental Steam Navigation Company, and carried, viâ Malta, direct to Marseilles. At this port, the papers for France are delivered, and an abstract of the Indian news drawn up for the instant information of the French and English Governments. This abstract is sent by telegraph to Paris and thence to Boulogne by a one-horse "Malle-poste." Our cut exhibits one in ordinary use. In France, the telegraph usually occupies the top of a church tower. On reaching Boulogne, the "abstract" India Mail express, bearing on its envelope the significant words, "Tres Pressé" is placed on board a steamer—or, in extreme cases, a sailing smack—and forwarded, with all possible speed, to Folkestone. In approaching this port the vessel hoists a signal of the "Mail," called a "whiff," or pennon tied at the end in a knot, to give notice to the harbour-master and the railroad authorities, to have all things in readiness to speed it on its flight to the metropolis; but if the coast be made during the night, a red light under her bows and a white light at the mast-head are the only signals given. The answer to these signals, from the pier-head, is made by a double white light, as shown in our engraving. The passage by steam vessels has varied from 2 hours and 40 minutes to 14 hours; and by sailing vessels, from 3 hours and 55 minutes to 48 hours. The South Eastern Railway Company hope, however, to be able to send the Mail by their new steamers in, at most, 1 hour and 45 minutes. Immediately on the Mail signal being observed, the railway harbour-master, the indefatigable Mr. Faulkner, makes the necessary arrangements for its reception. If it be high-water, these are simple and common-place enough, as the despatch has merely to be landed and sent by the mail omnibus to the station, a journey of about a mile, performed—amid the shouts of the company, who usually assemble in great numbers to welcome its arrival—at the breakneck pace of twenty miles an hour. But if it be low-water, the weather rough, and the time night, a scene of exciting adventure ensues. A galley—a long clear-water boat, manned by some eight or more stout fellows, under Mr. Faulkner's command—is launched from the beach, and sent off to the approaching vessel. On reaching it, a large blue light is fired, and in the glare of its ghostly fume, the captain of the steamer descends, bearing the express, and is immediately rowed to the shore, when, if it be dark, and a heavy surf rolling, a number of fishermen are usually posted with flambeaus to light them through the breakers. On landing, the express is committed to Mr. Faulkner, who carries it to the train.

The Abstract Mail having thus escaped the perils of the water, and reached the Folkestone station in safety, is placed in the carriage of a special train, which is usually in waiting a period—more or less—of three days, for its arrival, and, despatched in less than two hours to the metropolis. On these occasions, the transit of a train on India Mail service, is indicated to all the railway servants by a broad white board placed during daylight in front of the engine; and, at night by three white lights in the same situation.

Several of these expresses, from one to half-a-dozen, will sometimes arrive in the course of as many hours, to be sent in the same "special" manner to London. The Times, the Herald, the Chronicle, the Government, the Stockbrokers, have often their separate expresses. Each of these despatches costs the parties upwards of £100 from Marseilles to London:—£50 from Marseilles to Boulogne, £35 for the voyage, and £25 for the special train.

The Abstract of the Mail usually anticipates the Mail itself by about two days. While the "heads" of the intelligence have been progressing at the rate we have described, the iron boxes of details, packed in a hearse-like coach, called by the estafettes a "fourgo," has been dragging its comparatively slow length along, at the rapid pace of sixty-three hours from Marseilles to Boulogne, on reaching which it is shipped on board the mail packet, and sent direct to Folkestone, and thence by rail to London; but formerly—we believe even to the arrival of the present Mail—it was sent to Dover, and despatched by coach to London, a proceeding attended with the loss of at least ten hours.

The Railway Company have just placed, in conjunction with the Folkestone Station, two iron steam-boats, the Princess Mary and Princess Maud, by each of which the passage to Boulogne is performed within two hours; and the Company are not without hope that the time of transit may be reduced to an average of one hour and an half.

THE OVERLAND MAIL.

INDIA AND CHINA.

We have received, in anticipation of the Overland Mail from Bombay, letters and papers from all parts of our Indian empire.

The latest dates are from Bombay to the 20th, and from Calcutta to the 11th of May; from Macao to the 10th, and Hong Kong to the 8th of April. The mail from England of the 6th of April, had reached Bombay on the 12th of May.

The principal intelligence brought by the Indian mail of the 20th of May relates to the state of the Punjaub, which appears now to be more distracted than ever. A bloody fight is stated to have taken place on the 7th of May, between Heera Singh, the present Prime Minister, and the party of the sons of Runjeet Singh, who are opposed to him, led on by Ittur Singh, a chief of considerable influence. In September last, when Ajeet Singh had murdered the then King, Shere Singh, and the Prime Minister, Dhyan Singh, he was himself slain in a fight with Heera Singh, who avenged the death of his father, Dhyan, by ordering all the family of Ajeet to be butchered. One boy of nine years was allowed to live, and an uncle named Ittur, or Utter Singh, escaped into the Sikh States, protected by the British. After seven months' residence, he went back on the 30th of April, and joined the party under Cashmeera Singh and Peshora Singh, both sons (though of minor rank) of old Runjeet Singh. They proceeded to attack Heera Singh, and a bloody conflict took place, in which Heera was said to have been wounded. Ittur Singh was considered by some of the partisans of Heera as being supported by the British, and they therefore have threatened to invade the territories of the latter, to revenge themselves on those who had countenanced the proceedings of Ittur Singh.

The threatened movement of the notorious Ackbar Khan on Peshawur had not taken place. The position of his father Dhost Mahomed, was by no means satisfactory; his age, his infirmities, and the complicated state of the affairs of Cabul would, it was thought, induce him to resign his sovereignty into the hands of Ackbar.

The news from Scinde extends to the 16th of May. Sir Charles Napier was busy in making preparations for the meeting of the Beloochee chiefs, which was to take place on the 24th of May, when it is said that upwards of 17,000 of them would attend, each having an unarmed attendant. Thirty thousand men assembled to deliberate would present an odd appearance. It was supposed that Sir Charles had some important measure to propose to their attention. In Upper Scinde, where General Simpson (who was to be succeeded by General Hunter) commanded, nothing remarkable had occurred. Preparations were going on for the purpose of putting down the freebooters under Beeja Khan, who had acquired new strength in consequence of the unsuccessful attempts made by the force under Captain Tait and Lieutenant Fitzgerald to storm Poolajee, as mentioned last month.

The Bengal troops had arrived at Sukkur, where they were making arrangements for locating themselves. General Hunter was expected there from Ferozepore.

Great expectation was entertained respecting the meeting of two large corps of troops, which are to be collected towards the months of August and September on the Sutledge; the one to the west to be commanded by General Sir Charles Napier, and the other, near Ferozepore, by Sir Hugh Gough. The latter statement might be doubted, as it was said that the presence of the Commander-in-Chief was required at the Council Board at Calcutta. It seems, however, more likely that either this gallant general or Sir Charles Napier will attend the movements of the Governor-General, who was, it was reported, on the eve of going from Calcutta to the north-western provinces, and who would reach Meerut in September. The disturbed state of the Punjaub is calculated to hasten the movements of the British Indian armies in that direction. The attempts lately made to corrupt the fidelity of the British sepoys, and the large sums sent to Ferozepore and its vicinity (£170,000), have excited a strong wish for punishing the unprincipled chiefs of Lahore. The large force of 80,000 men was therefore ordered, and it was thought Lord Ellenborough and Sir C. Napier would undertake the conquest of the Punjaub, the former as a diplomatist and a politician, and the latter as a general.

In Gwalior there were intrigues fomented by the Queen Dowager against the British and the Regent established there; but a caution and a threat had been given her on the part of the Supreme Government. Tranquillity prevailed in the capital, and the people were satisfied, for an excellent police had been arranged there by the British officers. The ancient capital of Candeish, called Burhanpore, had been ceded to the British, and was taken possession of by the troops from Mhow and Asserghur. The occupation of it by the British is satisfactory to its inhabitants, as it was going to ruin under the Mahratta yoke.

One of the freebooting chiefs of Boghilkund has had his castle levelled to the earth, and is himself a prisoner, in consequence of his refusal to obey the orders of the Supreme Government, and to restore some plunder which he had taken from some merchants, British subjects, who were travelling through the country. This decided act of the British authorities is highly acceptable to the ryots and tradesmen, who are delighted when these petty tyrants are punished for their robberies and insolence.

The other parts of India were tranquil, and expected to be so during the rainy season.

Admiral Sir W. Parker was at Madras on the 11th of May, when he was fêted by the inhabitants.

The large native-made piece of ordnance which was found some years ago at Kurnoul has been shipped on board her Majesty's ship Cornwallis, and was to be removed to England. It weighs upwards of eight tons.

In Bombay there was a discussion going forward respecting the conduct of the native justices, who had not exerted themselves to procure the arrest of a man named Aloo Paroo, against whom evidence had been discovered to prove his being implicated in the burning of the five ships from that harbour during the last two years, and also of his being connected with the gang of pirates, smugglers, &c., discovered in 1843.

The news from China comes down to the 26th of March, but it adds nothing to the facts already known.

Further intelligence had been received at Bombay from China, just before the departure of the mail, by way of Calcutta. It is to the 10th of April, but is still destitute of political news. Malwa opium was said to have declined very materially in price in consequence of its inferior quality.

The mail from Bombay was brought to Suez by the Hon. East India Company's steamer Cleopatra, which arrived there on the 16th ult., with 40 passengers. The Peninsula and Oriental Company's steam-ship Hindostan reached Suez on the following day with upwards of 100 passengers, having left Calcutta on the 11th of May.

The Great Liverpool steamer, which had only reached Alexandria on the 19th, from Southampton, was to leave again on the 21st, on her return voyage, with a full complement of passengers.

Sir Henry Hardinge was expected at Alexandria on the 21st ult.

One case of plague had occurred at Alexandria.

The following extract is taken from the Bombay Monthly Times of the 20th of May:—

"Considerable alarm prevailed at Shikarpore, in consequence of the return of Captain Tait and Lieutenant Fitzgerald with a force of 800 men, which had been repulsed at Poolajee, and were followed by the enemy back tocamp."

Scinde.—"The Belochees having come down to plunder the country round Shikapore, had destroyed several villages within a few miles of our camp. Captain Tait, with six hundred irregular horses, and Lieutenant Fitzgerald, with two hundred of the camel corps, had gone out in quest of them, and having crossed the desert, proceeded till very near the entrance of the Murree hills—the scene of so many of our misadventures in 1840. The enemy were here in considerable force, and had taken refuge in the strong fort of Poolagee. An attempt was made by Lieutenant Fitzgerald to blow open the gate with powder-bags and storm the town. The first operation was unsuccessful, the leading man carrying the gunpowder having been killed on his way towards the gate. The fire from the walls was found so hot that our troops were compelled to retire—the enemy following them the whole way back to camp, a distance of 70 miles. The coast being thus clear, the Belochees proceeded with fresh alacrity to renew their forays, and to strip the unprotected country round Shikarpore of everything that could be carried away."

THE RUNNING REIN CASE.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

(Before Baron Alderson and a Special Jury.)

WOOD v. PEEL.

This trial having been appointed for Monday last, the court, immediately on its opening, was crowded to excess. Several sporting men of celebrity were in attendance.

The Earl of Stradbroke, the Hon. Mr. Byng, Sir Gilbert Heathcote, the Baron De Tessier, the Hon. Charles Greville, and other distinguished individuals, sat upon the bench. Lord G. Bentinck sat close to the counsel for the defendant.

Mr. Cockburn, Q.C., Mr. James, and Mr. Lush, appeared for the plaintiff; and the Solicitor-General, Mr. Wortley, Q.C., and Mr. Martin, for the defendant.

At a few minutes before ten o'clock Mr. Baron Alderson took his seat upon the bench, when the following gentlemen were sworn of the special jury:—Joseph Bowman (foreman), Isaac Haywood, Charles W. Moore, Frederick Bryant, Charles J. Cotteril, Robert Bentley, Richard Williams, William Cotes, Thomas A. H. Dickson, John T. Miller, Edward Antrobus, and Henry Watson.

Witnesses on both sides were ordered out of court. On application to the Bench, Lord George Bentinck was, however, permitted to stay, as were also the Baron De Tessier and Sir Gilbert Heathcote.

Mr. Lush having stated the pleadings,

Mr. Cockburn said, the question was, whether a horse called Running Rein, which won the Derby at the last Epsom Races, was a colt foaled in 1841, whose sire was The Saddler, and whose dam was Mab. When they recollected what the Derby was—the amount of the stakes, and the number of people, grave senators, lawyers, and others, who took an interest in it—it would easily account for the importance that was attached to the present issue. The plaintiff had to contend with individuals of great weight and station, who had very large bets depending on the result of the action, and who, therefore, were indefatigable, and not over-scrupulous in their efforts to defeat him. The question, however, was a very simple one. It was not one of opinion, nor of science, but of fact. Indeed, it was a plain question of identity. The horse in question won the race—won it gallantly. This done, Colonel Peel, the owner of the second horse, objected to the stakes being paid over to the owner of Running Rein, and claimed them for himself, as the owner of Orlando. According to the ordinary rules of the Jockey Club, Colonel Peel, having objected to the age of the horse, was bound to prove the disqualification to the satisfaction of that club. But Colonel Peel did not do this, but took refuge under the power of the law, thus throwing on the plaintiff the onus of proving the birth of the horse.

Baron Alderson.—The plaintiff himself undertook that; he chose his own position.

Mr. Cockburn.—And did not shrink from it. The proper qualification of the horse—its actual identity—should be fully proved, not by one witness, but by a whole host. The learned counsel then proceeded to state the pedigree of the horse, and after detailing the facts which he proposed to substantiate in evidence, concluded by saying that surely the transaction was straightforward enough; and yet because some suspicion attached to certain transactions of Goodman with regard to other horses—and because certain noblemen and gentlemen (as they called themselves) had bet to an enormous amount against the horse, Mr. Wood was now attempted to be robbed of his gains. He spoke not of Colonel Peel—not he; no, there was an honest man; but let other gentlemen, and one or two certain noblemen, get into the witness box—let them dare to do it, and he would turn them inside out. (Laughter.) Why many of these people—members, ay, and high members too of the Jockey Club—he could prove, laid, heavily, enormously, against Running Rein at the very time they were preparing a case to dispute his qualification. A day or two before he ran, Lord George Bentinck, Mr. Bowes, and Mr. John Scott, signed a protest against Running Rein. The stewards adopted the usual rule of the Jockey Club, and appointed a time for receiving evidence as to the identity of the horse; and they determined that he was prima facie qualified to run. He did run, and he won the race. It was objected that the stakes should be given up, and further inquiry was to be instituted. Mr. Wood again prepared for it; but Colonel Peel refused to go into it, but offered to abide by the arbitration of a barrister. This Mr. Wood declined, in his (Mr. Cockburn's) opinion most properly. At the same time he could not but regret that the sanctity of a court of justice should be desecrated, and its ermine sullied by contact with the foul practices of a race course. He ventured to say that many members of the Jockey Club had made bets against the horse at a time they intended to protest against him if he lost, and if they dared to enter the witness-box he would turn them inside-out. (Laughter.)

Plaintiff's witnesses were now called.

Thomas Lofthouse, of Norton, deposed to the birth of the foal at Cobb's, in May, 1841. He said it was two or three days old when he saw it, of a bay colour, all the legs black, and clear of white. It had a few white hairs on its forehead, but no star. He saw her two or three times a day, and knows King, of Norton; the colt and its dam remained three or four months in the paddock.

Cross-examined.—It was a smart little foal. He was not sure that Saddler had a star. He never noticed that the off fore-foot was turned out, though he observed that all the feet were black.

Re-examined.—Many white hairs constitute a star. The mother had none.

John Kitching.—In 1840 I went to Cobb's, at Norton, and remained there three years. Knows the mare. She had a foal, and remained a week in the stable. The mare and foal were then taken to Sutton House paddock, till it was bought at the instance of Stebbing. He looked after it there and in the hay-house. It was a bay foal, having black legs, and was not particularly broad in the ears. Robert Sponton took it to King's stables, near Sutton House. He is a training groom. He went with Allen to Lord George Bentinck's lodgings, and thence, with his valet, to Kent. His lordship came next day with another gentleman, and by them he was taken before the stewards of the Jockey Club, where he made his statement. Lord Stradbroke went with him to the stable, and showed him the horse, which he at once knew, and said so. He did not talk with any one of Goodman.

Cross-examined.—I am twenty next January. Left Cobb last Martinmas. The horse in question has black legs and feet. I have resided with Mr. Gill, the plaintiff's attorney, for nearly a month, in Addington-street, Hampstead-road. I have done nothing since the Derby. I have been at Mr. Glen's, baker, Regent-street. I have not given up my situation at York. [A letter being handed him, he read it to himself, and declared the handwriting to be his.] Mr. Glen has not promised me a situation. I do not expect £100 if the action is won. I wrote that letter to pacify my father.

Baron Alderson.—That may be the Yorkshire method of pacifying a father; but it is as bad to act a lie as to tell one.

Henry Stebbing, training groom of Hambledon.—I knew that Cobb had a foal in 1841. I saw him in Cobb's paddock, with a donkey. Watson was sent for him. I gave Wise £28 to pay for him. Watson took him to York. He is of a bay colour, has black legs, clear of white, and a few white hairs on the forehead. I saw him at York, in January, 1842. My brother James was there. He put the colt in a railway box, and went to London. I could expect it to grow into such a horse as Running Rein. I bought him for Mr. Goodman.

Cross-examined.—I am much accustomed to horses. Goodman employed him at Newmarket. I tore the letter that enclosed the payment. It was a late foal; had a white pastern, and I did not observe that its off fore-foot turned outwards.

Re-examined.—Goodman had several horses.

Wm. Wise.—In January, 1841, Stebbing's servant went to Cobb's about the foal which he had seen. It was of a bay colour, black legs, clear of white, and had a few white hairs on the forehead. It was to be sent to John King's.

Baron Alderson here said, it would be highly proper for the horse to be seen, especially by the jury.

Mr. Thesiger said he had been refused to see it.

Mr. Cockburn.—Your lordship shall presently see under what circumstances it was refused.

His lordship advised that the horse should be in readiness to be viewed to-morrow.

Robert Sponton.—In January, 1841, I was in Cobb's service. Witness then described the history of the foal about the time of its birth. It has black legs, clear of white, a little white hair on the forehead, and its hind heels much cracked.

James Stebbing.—Lives at Hambledon with his brother Henry. In January, 1842, he was at York, and going to London. I came to York with him from Thirsk. I saw the foal at the Derby station. When we came to Euston-grove we were met by a man or a lad. The colt was taken next day to some stables in Foley-place. I should have entered him as a bay horse; some would have entered him as bay or brown, from their anticipation of a change of colour. It had four black legs, and no white that he knew of. Saw him running at Newmarket in October, 1843. The foal I saw was likely to grow into such a horse as Running Rein.

John Andrews.—In December, 1841, I was in the service of Mr. Fowlis, a country gentleman, attending some of his hunters then standing at Cobb's. He saw the foal, and gave a description of it similar to the preceding one.

Daniel White.—In 1842, I was employed at Joseph's stables. I went to Euston-square station for a foal. He remained at Foley-place two nights and a day. I saw him the next day, and took him to Mr. Pearl's, Milton-street, Dorset-square. In September, I saw him at Bean's, at Finchley. I fetched him from there and took him to Goodman's, in Foley-place, and thence to Haynes's stables, Langham-place.

Cross-examined.—Mt. Joseph is brother-in-law to Mr. Goodman, who sometimes uses his stables. Mr. Joseph keeps no book. I gave the note to Bean. George White went with me. I do not know that Bean had a chesnut filly.

Re-examined.—I met George White, who told me he was going to fill a situation at Paris.

James Wilson Pearl, lives in Milton-street, Dorset-square. On the 20th of January, 1842, a man brought Goodman's boy for the colt. He remained till the 30th. Bean, of Finchley, fetched him away. I saw him every day. He was a little bay foal, having black legs, clear of white. I have every reason to believe that the horse I saw at Epsom was the same. Bean's paddock adjoins the road.

Wm. Bean lived at Finchley in 1842. Goodman applied to me to allow his foal to run in my paddock. On the 30th of January, 1842, I saw him at Pearl's. He remained with me till the 24th of September. During his stay with me he met with an accident, in endeavouring to enter an adjoining field. In so doing he knocked off some hairs from his forehead and near fore leg, between the knee and arm, and broke some of his skin. I saw him at Newmarket in October, the year after. It struck me that it was the same colt I saw afterwards in training with Smith at Epsom. I never had any other colt. I was not at home when the message came for him, but was going to London, and met him on the road. I gave my order, and he had the colt. The colt was gone when I returned.

Cross-examined.—I have been a horse-dealer for 30 years. In business I have not been prosperous, having been twice bankrupt, and twice insolvent. In my first bankruptcy, I cannot say whether my creditors ever received a dividend nor can I say as much respecting my second bankruptcy. No account was ever given, nor was there a creditor who applied to me. Mr. Hammond is my assignee. I don't remember ever having asked him to advance me £75 on the order of Allen in my favour to that amount, and that that order arose from a dishonest transaction by me. I do not remember any transaction with Allen, but I do remember one with Kingscoat. I will not swear that I ever told Hammond that Kingscoat owed me money, that he was away, but would soon return, and in the mean time asked him for money. I will not swear that I paid part of this money, and have left the rest unpaid till this day.

His Lordship here told the witness, that he ought to be able to swear to these points one way or the other; but it was impossible to get other than guarded and qualified answers from the witness.

The above are the principal witnesses examined in behalf of Mr. Wood. Others were equally minute in tracing the horse through town, and down to the time he won the Derby. The facts were exactly as Mr. Cockburn had related. Among these witnesses were the Baron de Tessier, John Derly, James Love, Rayner, Drewett, Hitchcock the horse-breaker, and Smith the trainer. A certain period in the course of the evidence rendered it necessary to advert to the actual inspection of the horse.

Baron Alderson said that if evidence could be afforded which should go to show that the examination of the horse's mouth was an infallible criterion, he would assuredly call the serious attention of the Jury to it. If, on the other hand, it was a fallible criterion, he would then tell them either to dismiss it altogether, or to be guarded in the application they should make of evidence thus obtained. In the meantime he earnestly recommended the counsel to consider the question in their evidence, as the course he had adopted was, evidently, the only fair and rational method of proceeding.

Mr. Cockburn would have no objection to show the Gladiator colt, when his indicæ were first pointed out. But he would not undertake to show him to witnesses beforehand, who, he was afraid, would be but too ready to take advantage of their knowledge to his detriment.

Baron Alderson put the case of a bill of exchange as a parallel one. Nobody ever thought of objecting to show it, if any doubts existed as to a signature, until the hand-writing had been first described. He saw no sensible difference in the cases as to identity.

Mr. Cockburn submitted that there was no analogy in the cases. If the Gladiator colt had been seen by the other side, it could be easily described; but if he was shown before description, there were plenty of persons to be got to come into court and swear to his identity with any horse.

There was some clapping and stamping in the body of the court as the learned counsel made this observation; but it was speedily repressed by the learned Judge commanding the court to be cleared. He did not, however, enforce this order, but he lectured the offenders very severely upon their indecent conduct. The case then proceeded.

The Solicitor-General said the Gladiator colt was four years old, if he was right; and, if the other side was right, Running Rein was only three. It was important that persons of skill should have an opportunity of examining the horse to settle that question.

The case for the plaintiff having closed,

The Solicitor-General rose to address the jury in behalf of Colonel Peel, the defendant. Having commented upon the sudden and unexpected termination just put to the plaintiff's case, he proceeded to remark upon the different parts of the evidence by which it was supported. He then laid the defendant's case before the jury, in which he intended to show that Running Rein, the winner of the late Derby race, was not the real Running Rein, but a fraudulent substitution of a horse which was foaled by a mare once in the possession of Sir Charles Ibbotson. He would show that this Running Rein was formerly called Maccabeus, and in that name had been entered at several races.—The learned counsel's speech occupied a large portion of the advanced part of the day, and went into details which showed where the two horses were at the various epochs to which the attention of the jury had been called.

It was six o'clock when the Solicitor-General concluded his address to the Jury; and the bar and the spectators evidently appeared anxious that the case should be adjourned: but the Learned Judge decided upon hearing some of the evidence for the defendant, on the ground that as the trial would necessarily go into the next day, it was important that as much should be done as possible. The following witnesses for the defendant were therefore called and examined:—

Lord Stradbroke, examined by Mr. J. S. Wortley: Was one of the stewards of the Jockey Club last year. He remembered the race on the 4th of June, when Running Rein beat Cremolin at the Newmarket meeting. Cremolin was the property of the Duke of Rutland. The race was for two-year-olds. The Duke made an objection after the race that the winner was three years old. The stewards were Mr. Byng and Mr. Greville. An arrangement was made that the case should be heard at the Houghton Meeting. An application was made to examine the horse's mouth. The stewards met and heard the case, and Mr. Goodman examined two or three witnesses to prove Running Rein was only two years old; the Duke of Rutland produced only one—the boy Kitchen. It was arranged that the boy and a veterinary surgeon, named Barrow, of Newmarket, and Mr. Wetherby, the secretary, should be taken to Goodman's stables. The horse was in a loose box; Kitchen looked at the horse, and said at first he thought it was the horse, and then that he believed it was. It was then proposed that Mr. Barrow should examine the horse's mouth—he is a person of high character, but Goodman objected positively to it, and gave them to understand he would resist by force. He said his legal adviser had advised him not to permit the horse's mouth to be examined. They then returned to the rooms where the stewards met, and he (Lord Stradbroke) reported the result to the meeting. The stewards were of opinion that though the Duke of Rutland had not proved his case, it was one of suspicion. Goodman was told by him (Lord Stradbroke) on the part of the stewards, that the horse should never be allowed to run again at Newmarket unless he permitted the examination of his mouth. The horse had not since run at Newmarket.

By Baron Alderson—In forty-nine cases out of fifty the mark of the mouth had been stated to be an erroneous test; but lately he had understood it to be reduced to a certainty.

Messenger, the stud-groom to Sir Charles Ibbotson, and Mr. Hayward, the land agent, deposed to the marks of the Gladiator foal sold to Goodman.

George Wharton, groom to Sir Charles Ibbotson, examined by Mr. J. S. Wortley, proved that he took the colt in question to the Masborough station, on the North Midland Railway, on the 17th of September, and delivered him to Mr. Goodman, who went off the London way.

Cross-examined by Mr. Cockburn—Knew Mr. Goodman by sight very well. It was the day after one of the Doncaster races he took the colt to the station.

Charles Wetherby, examined by Mr. Martin—Was Secretary to the Jockey Club, and kept, with his clerks, the books for Epsom and Newmarket nominations. There was an entry in his books of the entry of Gladiator, in the name of Watson, for the Derby of 1843. That horse was afterwards entered as Maccabeus for the Liverpool Cup, in 1843; the entries closed on or before the 2nd January, 1843. Both entries were in the handwriting of the witness's clerk. There was forfeit of £5 paid for the Liverpool Cup, which was paid in Goodman's name by a Mr. Moffam, in the presence of Goodman. It formed a portion of £45 over-due stakes paid on Goodman's account, to permit his horse Dr. Phillimore to run, in accordance with the rules of the club.

Joseph Farrell, examined by Mr. Martin—Was clerk to the stewards of the Epsom races. Goodman entered his bay colt Maccabeus for a sweepstake of £5, with fifty sovereigns added, in April, 1843. The colt ran in that race, carrying 7st. as a three-year-old.

Cross-examined by Mr. Cockburn—Captain Flathooker was a bay horse.

Mr. Wetherby, re-examined by Mr. Martin—Running Rein was first entered for a sweepstakes of 50 sovereigns to run at Newmarket First Spring Meeting, 1844. The next entry was for the Derby; it was made at Newmarket on or before the last day of the July meeting, 1842. The third entry was for the Second October Meeting at Newmarket, 1843, for the 2000 guineas Clearwell Stakes, to be run for in the spring of 1844. He was also entered for a 50 guineas stake at the Abingdon Mile, in October, 1843. The horse did not run at the Houghton Meeting. The meeting took place on the Thursday after the decision of the stewards alluded to by Lord Stradbroke.

The Court then adjourned until the next morning.

TUESDAY.

Long before the time appointed for resuming the trial, on Tuesday morning, Westminster Hall was crowded with individuals connected with the sporting world; and when the doors of the Court of Exchequer were opened, the rush to gain admittance was terrific. In a moment every place appropriated to the public was filled, and it was with the greatest difficulty that the ushers of the court, with the assistance of several police-officers, could keep the crowd from occupying the barristers' benches.

The Duke of Rutland, the Earl of Stradbroke, Baron De Tessier, Lord G. Bentinck, and other noblemen and gentlemen were in the court at the time of commencing business, and were accommodated with seats on or near the bench.

Before the business commenced, Baron De Tessier asked Lord George Bentinck to come and speak to him. His lordship was heard to say, "I am a witness in the cause, and cannot hold any conversation with you until the trial is over." Baron Tessier then asked Col. Peel to have a few minutes' conversation with him, which Col. Peel acceded to, and in a few minutes afterwards it was rumoured that Mr. Wood intended to give up his case, and withdraw the record.

Mr. Baron Alderson, on taking his seat on the bench, at ten o'clock, asked the name of the first witness counsel intended to call.

The Solicitor General.—Mr. George Worley is the first witness, my lord.

Mr. Cockburn said, after what had fallen from his lordship yesterday he was placed in a difficult situation as to the production of the horse.

Baron Alderson said—Mr. Cockburn, surely you must be anxious to produce the horse.

Mr. Cockburn felt that it was his duty to produce the horse for the inspection of the jury, and in that opinion his learned friends and the plaintiff fully concurred; but Mr. Wood assured him, the horse had been taken away without his sanction, approbation, or knowledge, and that, having traced it to the place to which it had been first removed, he went there for the purpose of getting possession of the horse, but he was there informed that it had beea again removed to some other place.

Mr. Baron Alderson.—Why do you not then apply to the police to apprehend the persons so acting, on a charge of horse-stealing? If they were tried before me on such a charge, I would transport them as sure as they are born. (Laughter.)

Mr. Cockburn said no doubt it was an offence which could be so punished, but the only question in which he (Mr. Cockburn) was concerned, was what course he should adopt after what had fallen from his lordship yesterday respecting the production of the horse, for he felt that it would be vain to strive against the effects which must be produced by the non-production of the horse after those remarks; and he had Mr. Wood's assurance that it was not in his power to produce the horse.

Mr. Baron Alderson.—It was for the learned counsel to decide on the course which he should adopt. The case as it now stood was purely a question of fact for the jury to decide. There was a case in the old books in which a poor boy who had found a diamond took it to a jeweller, who kept it. An action was brought to recover the value of the diamond, and as the jeweller refused to produce the diamond the jury found that it was a diamond of the first water, and he (Baron Alderson) thought they had found justly. Up to a certain point this case was perfectly clear, namely, up to the period at which the horse was delivered to Hales, and the question was, did Cobb's colt go from Hales's to Bean's, and subsequently become Running Rein.

Mr. Cockburn was quite willing to do whatever his lordship pleased.

Mr. Baron Alderson.—Do whatever you please.

The Solicitor-General said, as far as they (the counsel for the defendant) were concerned they were quite ready to go on and prove their case.

After a short pause it was resolved to proceed.

Mr. George Worley called, and examined by Mr. J. S. Wortley.—Farmed his own property at Sewell, in Northamptonshire. Was at Doncaster races in 1841. Saw Mr. Goodman and Mr. Henry Higgins. Mr. Higgins said something about buying a colt. Got home the day after the St. Leger was run for. A few days afterwards received a colt from Mr. Higgins; it was a kind of a blood-coloured bay colt—a bright bay colt. Received a pedigree shortly afterwards. Had no white about him; no white dot on his forehead, but he might have had a grey hair or two between his eyes. He was in custody from Sept. 20 to the end of January. Was at the last Derby race. Saw the horse called Running Rein at Epsom, got down and looked at him; had no doubt that it was the same horse as I had seen in my paddock. Saw Mr. Higgins there; rode up to the course from the town with him. Also saw Mr. Goodman there. When the horse was at witness's he was in a paddock, and was a lively spirited horse. He had an accident, having hurt himself between the knee and the arm of the near leg. It would leave a scar. Could not be otherwise. The horse has the scar now. The flesh was lacerated a good deal. Had seen Higgins about him. He was christened at the house of witness. He was got by Gladiator, and at first he was to have been called Prize Fighter, but Lord Chesterfield had a horse of the same name. Higgins then looked in a book and proposed that he should be called Spartacus—he found that name in a book (laughter); but he was afterwards called Maccabeus.

Baron Alderson.—He did not find that name in a book; or at least in any book he was likely to look in, I suppose? (Much laughter.)

The witness was shortly cross-examined by Mr. Cockburn, but nothing material was elicited.

Mr. George Odell was next called, and examined by Mr. Martin.—I am a horse-dealer at Northampton. I know Henry Higgins and Mr. Worley, of Sewell. I recollect seeing a bay colt at Mr. Worley's early in October, 1841, and in November. Mr. Worley showed me the horse; he was a bay colt, a very good-looking one; he had black legs. He was fifteen hands high, well made, and a good-looking colt, with a good head, and rather strongly made in his hind parts. I went to Mr. Worley's several times subsequently, and saw the colt almost every time that I went there. I saw a cut above the near knee. I aftrewards saw him at Northampton—at the Vigo stables. Henry Higgins lodged there. The last time I saw him was as late as April. He was led about by Mr. Higgins's man, who is now dead. I know a paddock at Northampton of which Mr. Markhorne had the letting. Saw the colt there enter in the spring of the year 1843. He continued in this paddock until the latter end of the summer. He had a fresh accident there on the same leg, but a little lower down on the side of the knee. I was at Epsom at the last Derby; went with Mr. Worley there; saw the horse called Running Rein at Epsom. That was the same colt I had seen at Northampton. I will swear it. It had both the marks on the leg.

Mr. Baron Alderson.—Now, if we could see the horse, that would prove the case. Who keeps him away? It is quite childish to act in this manner.

Mr. Cockburn here rose, and said he had just received a note from Mr. Wood's solicitor, stating that that gentleman was now convinced that he had been deceived, and he (Mr. Wood) begged to assure the Court that he had not bought the horse until he had passed through what he thought a sufficient ordeal.

Mr. Baron Alderson.—No; there is nothing to show the contrary.

The case was accordingly given up on behalf of the plaintiff, and the record withdrawn.

Mr. Cockburn wished to state that he had received a communication from Lord George Bentinck, couched in terms of perfect courtesy, and which were, indeed, perfectly unexceptionable in every point of view, in which his lordship complained that he (Mr. Cockburn) had not put him into the witness-box, and given him an opportunity of disproving the charges of tampering with some of the witnesses, and with feeding, clothing, and holding out pecuniary promises to them. He had made these charges in conformity with his instructions; and, although his lordship was not ostensibly a party to the case, he (Mr. Cockburn) had thought it better to open with these matters, that his learned friend, the Solicitor-General, might know the course he intended to take.

Mr. Baron Alderson did not think any explanation was necessary. He hoped learned counsel would always, without hesitation, in matters in which they were instructed, have no scruples in stating that which they deemed to be proper, however high in rank or station the persons may be upon whom they had to make these observations. This had been the practice and privilege of the bar from time immemorial, and God forbid that it should be otherwise now.

Mr. Cockburn said that it was only due to his lordship to say that he did not complain, but, on the contrary, expressed his high sense of the value of the privileges of the English bar.

Baron Alderson.—I am quite sure nothing has been said by you that could give ground for a charge of impropriety in the conduct of your case.

Mr. Wortley (second counsel for Col. Peel, the Solicitor-General having left the court.) There is no complaint of the kind made by us, my lord.

Baron Alderson.—Oh, no; no ground for it. Lord George Bentinck was most anxious to work out the truth. Nothing more can be said.

Mr. Wortley.—No person feels more than Lord George Bentinck the value of the liberty of the English bar. I may add, however, that the fullest refutation would have been given to the instructions of my learned friend Mr. Cockburn, and to every insinuation that has gone forth to the prejudice of my noble friend, but for the abrupt termination of this trial. But for this circumstance, every charge, or supposed charge even, against Lord George Bentinck, would have been fully and clearly contradicted.

Mr. Baron Alderson, addressing the jury, said—It is now my duty, gentlemen, to tell you that the verdict must be given for the defendant, and you will therefore proceed to give a verdict to that effect. I must tell you, gentlemen, that this case has produced in my mind a deep feeling of sorrow and disgust. Since the opening of the case a most atrocious fraud has been proved to have been practised, and I have seen with great regret gentlemen associating with persons much below themselves in station. If gentlemen would associate with gentlemen, we should have no such practices. But if gentlemen will condescend to race with others below their station, they must expect to be cheated.

[The remarks of his lordship were delivered with much warmth, and in a most emphatic manner, and produced quite a sensation in the Court.]

The jury immediately returned a verdict for the defendant; and thus ended this case, so interesting and important to the sporting world at large, and which decides the Derby stakes.

THE IRISH STATE TRIALS.

HOUSE OF LORDS—THURSDAY.

WRIT OF ERROR.—THE QUEEN V. O'CONNELL AND OTHERS.

On Thursday their lordships met at ten o'clock, to hear the arguments of counsel in support of the writ, or rather writs of error, brought by Mr. O'Connell and the other traversers against the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench in Ireland.

Long before the time of their lordships meeting a great number of persons had assembled in the lobbies of the house, anxious to obtain admission.

The following counsel appeared on behalf of the plaintiffs in error:—Sir Thos. Wilde, Mr. M. D. Hill, Q.C., Mr. Fitzroy Kelly, Q.C., Mr. Sergeant Murphy, Mr. Peacock, Mr. J. W. Smith, Mr. Lahee, Mr. Close, Sir Colman O'Loghlen, and Mr. Crampton.

Counsel for the Crown.—The Attorney-General (Sir W. Follett), the Solicitor-General (Sir F. Thesiger), the Attorney-General for Ireland (Mr. Smith), and Mr. Waddington.

There were a number of peers present, amongst whom we noticed all the law lords, who had a conversation together before business commenced. The following judges were in attendance:—Lord Chief Justice Denman, Lord Chief Justice Tindal, Mr. Baron Parke, Mr. Baron Alderson, Mr. Justice Patteson, Mr. Justice Coltman, Mr. Justice Williams, and Mr. Justice Maule.

When counsel had been called in,

The Lord Chancellor, addressing Sir Thomas Wilde, said—For whom, Sir Thomas, do you appear?

Sir Thomas Wilde.—I have the honour to appear, my lord, as counsel for Mr. Daniel O'Connell.

The Lord Chancellor.—Does any one appear with you for Mr. O'Connell?

Sir Thomas Wilde.—Yes, my lord; Mr. Peacock is with me: and I think it right to state to your lordships that as separate writs of error have been presented, all the traversers are represented by different counsel, in whom they place confidence. The writs contained many different points, and it was, therefore, arranged that each should be argued separately.

The Lord Chancellor.—Well, if that is so, I suppose when we come to the reply that you will reply on the whole case?

Sir Thomas Wilde.—No, my lord; I cannot undertake to promise that.

The Lord Chancellor.—Then we shall have at least three replies, and I wish you to recollect that the judges go the circuits on Wednesday next; and, therefore, if the arguments in this cause are not finished before that day, it will be impossible for the house to give judgment this session. I make the remark (said his lordship) for the advantage of the plaintiffs in error. Had you not better (inquired his lordship) consult with the other couesel, and consider whether you should not reply on the whole case.

Sir Thomas Wilde.—I do not think, my lords, that it would be satisfactory to the traversers, if their counsel had not separate replies.

After some further conversation, the Lord Chancellor said it would be better to discuss at another time whether or not the Attorney-General had a right to reply on the whole case.

Sir T. Wilde then said he had the honour to appear for Mr. O'Connell, in support of the writ of error, praying their lordships to reverse the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench in Ireland. Several errors had been assigned, all of which it would be his duty to call their lordships' attention to. The learned counsel then, at great length, stated the nature of the proceedings in Ireland, and, after remarking on the different meetings at which Mr. O'Connell and the other traversers attended, said it had not been proved in evidence that the parties had conspired to meet for an illegal purpose, and that was necessary to support an indictment for conspiracy. Vast numbers of persons assembled at Epsom and Doncaster Races; but surely no charge of conspiracy could be substantiated.

The Lord Chancellor.—Sir Thomas Wilde, you are aware that the allegation in the indictment is, that the parties convicted had conspired for an unlawful purpose; that certainly was a question of law, for no acts of violence followed the meeting.

Sir Thomas Wilde said, he should contend that the meeting was not proved to be illegal.

The Lord Chancellor.—Suppose certain individuals agree to call together large assemblies of the people for the purpose of attempting to alter the Constitution as by law established, would not that be an illegal act? That was the question which the house had to decide.

Sir Thomas Wilde.—My lord, certainly that is the question, but he should contend that the party for whom he appeared had only exercised a constitutional right in calling meetings to petition Parliament for real or supposed grievance.

Lord Brougham.—Suppose half the people of England were to assemble at the instigation of a few individuals, say on Salisbury Plain, for the professed purpose of obtaining and demanding an alteration of the laws—would not such a meeting be considered dangerous and illegal?

The Lord Chancellor.—If parties said, Let us assemble in such large numbers that the physical effect will be to obtain a change in the Constitution, would not that be illegal? The question was, whether the meetings and language used were unlawful.

Sir Thomas Wilde then proceeded with his address. He contended that if any conspiracy existed it was not sufficiently defined in the indictment to constitute a legal offence.

The learned gentleman concluded his argument at five minutes to five o'clock, and the further hearing of the argument was adjourned till Friday morning at ten o'clock.

FRIDAY.

Their lordships again assembled on Friday morning, at ten o'clock.

The attendance of peers was much less numerous than on the previous day.

The Law Lords and the Judges present were the same as those in attendance on Thursday.

At a few minutes after ten counsel were called in, and Mr. Peacock proceeded with his address on behalf of Mr. O'Connell.

When Mr. Peacock had concluded, Mr. M. D. Hill followed on behalf of Messrs. Steele and Barrett, and had not concluded when their lordships adjourned.

The further hearing of the argument was adjourned till next day.

THIS DAY (SATURDAY).

The house met again this morning at ten o'clock. There was a very thin attendance of peers, and but few persons in the strangers' gallery.—Mr. Hill resumed his address, and concluded his argument at half-past twelve o'clock.—Mr. Fitzroy Kelly, Q.C., followed on behalf of Mr. John O'Connell, Dr. Gray, and Mr. Ray.

In the course of the morning the Lord Chancellor and Lord Brougham suggested the necessity of bringing the arguments to a close on Monday, as it would require one day to consider the judgment to be given.—Sir Thomas Wilde, and the other counsel for the traversers, thought it would be impossible to close the arguments on Monday.—The Lord Chancellor: Well, you are aware that the judges have appointed Wednesday to commence the circuits, and which cannot now be postponed; therefore, if the arguments are not brought to a termination by Monday night, the whole case must of necessity be adjourned until next session.

FASHIONS FOR JULY.

(Abridged from "Berger's Ladies' Gazette of Fashion.")

CHAPEAUX AND CAPOTES, the close form still prevails for. Some have appeared a little shorter at the ears than they were early in the season. Trimming the interior of the brims with ribbon increases in vogue. Some are merely trimmed with a simple bouquet, composed of a sprig of flowers or fruits; others with a mixture of satin and ribbon. Capotes of white gros de Naples, trimmed with moss roses or bouquets of Persian lilac, are very fashionable.

ROBES are still generally made in the pelisse form. The most favourite trimming is the Passementerie byrinthe. The materials are muslins, balzarines, barèges, and other half-transparent materials, and silks, which present a beautiful and almost endless variety. Cambric or muslin robes, with the corsage en Elouse, are getting into vogue. Coloured gros de Naples, and white barège robes, with deep flounces, are still in favour for evening dress.

SCARFS are decidedly in the ascendant. Mantes are next in favour. The favourite materials are lace, and soie camelion, trimmed with lace. Embroidered muslin Canezous are also in vogue. The Canezou Victoria is the most novel.

CAPS.—The round form is still in favour. They are made shorter at the ears, and trimmed very lightly.

Coiffures of hair are not so much in vogue as usual. In fact, caps have nearly superseded them, and have placed them in a decided minority. Among the prettiest Coiffures are those composed of coques of ribbon, which encircle the hind hair and terminate in a knot, with long ends falling on one side.

Fashionable Colours are the same as the last. White and green, however, are increasing in vogue.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

> Why should a man, whose blood is warm within
> Sit like his grandsire cut in alabaster;
> Sleep when he wakes, and creep into the jaundice
> By being peevish? SHAKSPEARE.

Why, indeed, unless he cannot help himself, which was pretty much the condition of the metropolitan man of spirit and enterprise during the last se'nnight. To practical downright sporting there has rarely been within the bills of mortality so dull a week as that now ended; in its theory, perhaps, there never was one so pregnant with interest and matter of account. On Monday last, in the Court of Exchequer, came on for settlement the issue which has lately paralysed with amazement and dread every member of the racing world. For that day the Running Rein case was set down; and at an early hour Mr. Cockburn rose for the purpose of opening it on the part of the plaintiff, Mr. Wood, owner of the celebrated horse that won the Derby. After hitting right and left at Lord George Bentinck, "according to his instructions," he proceeded to state that the question the jury were assembled to try was "whether the horse called Running Rein, was a colt foaled in 1841, whose sire was the Saddler, and whose dam was Mab." To prove this, he called no less than eighteen witnesses, several of whom swore point blank to the fact of the animal's identity, and subsequently passed through such an ordeal of cross-examination as would have horrified the echoes of the Old Bailey. Monday closed with the Solicitor-General's speech on the part of the defendant. Tuesday opened with the examination of a few most respectable persons for the defence, who most clearly and emphatically contradicted every assertion made by the witnesses of the previous day, and established the fact, past the possibility of doubt, that the horse which ran for, and won the Derby, as the three-year-old colt, Running Rein, by the Saddler, out of Mab, was a four-year-old called Maccabeus, bred by Sir Charles Ibbotson, by Gladiator, out of his Capsicum mare. Previous to the proof, however, the learned judge, Mr. Baron Alderson, distinctly stated, that nothing would satisfy him but the production of Running Rein to the jury, a proposition with which on Monday the plaintiff's counsel appeared to acquiesce; but on the following morning they broadly stated it was not possible for that desire to be complied with, "inasmuch as the horse had been stolen out of his stable, and conveyed no one knew whither!" This clenched the case—one of the most infamous ever dared to be introduced into a British court of justice. The nest of scoundrels by whom the fraud was concocted were associated together for the purpose—the systematic purpose—of running horses older than the age specified for the events they engaged them in. This they did last year at the Epsom Spring Meeting, where they ran Gone-Away, an Irish four-year-old, hired of Mr. Ferguson, as the identical Simon Pure, Maccabeus, at three-year-old weights. They will be forthwith indicted for conspiracy, and the public will see with astonishment the name of at least one seemingly respectable tradesman of London, a man of substance and credit, included in the list of vagabonds. "Auri sacra fames!" What indeed will you not induce men to perpetrate?

The great bout at Cricket, Kent against England, commenced on Monday, at Lord's, and terminated on Wednesday, after the players' imminent risk of being drowned on the spot, on the first day; a water-spout took it into its head to burst over the ground just in the nick of the fun—when everybody was there. Such a catastrophe has not been witnessed since the days of Deucalion. The score terminated with 172 for Kent, and 156 for England. The science displayed was a theme of general eulogy. There was a little more cricket during the week, and a little boat-racing at Erith, but neither of a character to call for details of them.

Thursday being the first public day at Tattersall's since the verdict in favour of Orlando for the Derby, the Subscription-room was better attended than it has been on a Thursday since Epsom Races. There was little, if any, business done, the matter of interest being the announcement by the Stewards of the Jockey Club, that the Derby settling is fixed for Monday next. It will be far from a good one. The partial settling pending the trial was a most inconvenient proceeding. Already its effects have been felt. On Monday next more than one crash is likely to come of it.

TATTERSALL'S.

MONDAY.—The all-absorbing Running Rein cause being set down for trial this day, the attendance at the Corner was confined to the select few who were unable to obtain admission into the Court of Exchequer. Reports of the progress of the plaintiff's case were received in the course of the afternoon, and up to a certain point it bore so favourable an aspect, that 3 to 1 on Orlando was the highest offer; the trainer's evidence, however, was so complete a break down, that 4 and 5 to 1 were afterwards laid, and the Orlando party evidently booked it "a certainty." On the Goodwood events, the St. Leger, and the Derby of 1845, some betting took place, at the following averages:—

THURSDAY.—The "Ring" is rapidly recovering from the damper thrown upon it by the Running Rein conspiracy; not even the strong observations made by Baron Alderson, in his summing up, having had the effect of preventing that association of the great and small, without which, betting round would soon die a natural death. In proof of this, the room was well attended to-day, and although the Epsom settling has yet to take place, business to a considerable amount was transacted on all the great stakes now in the market, the St. Leger, in the amount and importance of the investment, taking a decided lead. Before we give the prices, we should state, with reference to the late trial, that the members of the Jockey Club, and others interested in the respectability and process of the Turf, intend to show their sense of the great service Lord G. Bentinck has rendered it, by detecting, exposing, and defeating the most disgraceful fraud ever attempted, by presenting him with a piece of plate. The subscription, which is limited to £25, and open to all, already amounts to some hundreds, and will, we doubt not, be worthy the occasion.

GREAT FOOT RACE.—The great foot-race between William Jackson, the American Deer, and Thomas Maxfield, the North Star, which has created much speculation of late in the pedestrian circles, came off on Monday, in the grounds of the Rosemary Branch Tavern, Peckham. The match was for £50 a-side; the ground selected three miles. Betting was 5 to 4 on the American Deer. The men were prepared for the race when "the pitiless pelting of the storm" induced them to defer it until the rain somewhat abated. TheDeer won easily.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

The salmon fisheries in Scotland and in the North of England, this season, are unusually full of fish, large quantities of which have, during the last fortnight, been taken, as may be inferred from the fact that in the markets fine large salmon are selling at the reasonable price of 7d. and 8d. per lb., and salmon trout as low as 4d. and 4½d. per lb. of 14 ounces.

Macready, who has of late been playing at New York to good houses, is expected to return home either at the end of the present month or early in August, after an absence of about 12 months.

The clear profit of the late ball given for the benefit of the Polish refugees, after payment of all expenses, exceeded one thousand pounds. Last year the ball at Willis's for the same purpose, produced about £600 only.

On Tuesday afternoon, about three o'clock, the low neighbourhoods on the banks of the Thames were completely inundated by the encroachment of the tide, which was unusually high. The cellars and kitchens in Bankside, Tooley-street, and Wapping, were completely filled, and furniture washed about in all directions.

It is stated that in consequence of the alteration required in the business of the Bank by the new Charter, no less than 90 additional clerks wil have to be taken on.

The Orleans Railroad Company is establishing the electrical telegraph between the passengers' station at Paris and the warehouse for goods and the workshops at Ivry.

Russia has acknowledged the representative regimen established in Greece. The greater part of the Hellenic papers highly commend this step.

News has been received at Trieste, from Corfu, that 40 Italian refugees, among whom were D. Moro and the brothers Bandiera, naval officers embarked in the night of the 12th ult., in a Neapolitan or Roman vessel, with the intent of landing on some point on the coast of Italy. It was believed that they had steered their course towards the coast of Calabria. Subsequent accounts state that the insurgents had been attacked and defeated, and that the insurrection is at an end.

The annual distribution of prizes to the students of the East India Company's College at Haileybury was attended as usual by a deputation from the Court of Directors.

Operations for sinking a new colliery at Seaham Park, by a wealthy company, on the estate of the Marquis of Londonderry, have been commenced. This colliery will be on an extensive scale, and, should it be successfully won, will probably be one of the most important and profitable in the county of Durham.

A public meeting, convened by the High Bailiff of Westminster, was held in Covent-garden, on Monday, for the purpose of petitioning Parliament to liberate Mr. O'Connell and the other State prisoners. There were between two and three thousand persons present.

The exhibition of the works of art, which had been forwarded to the Commissioners of the Fine Arts by the aspirants for the distinction of embellishing by their genius the new Houses of Parliament, was opened on Saturday for a private view by special invitation.

The commercial letters received from the United States and Canada by the steamer on Saturday are, apart from party politics, generally of a favourable complexion. The President's message has excited the utmost astonishment throughout the country.

The number of persons embarking and disembarking at Boulogne and Calais, from and for England, during the week ending the 27th of June, was—At Boulogne, 2109; at Calais, 469: total, 2578. The number at Boulogne, during the corresponding period of last year, was 1125: thus showing an increase this year of 984.

Wednesday's sale of the Duke of Sussex's library was highly interesting, and was numerously attended. The great attraction of the day was the splendid "Biblia Sacra Latina," two vols. folio, called the Mazarine copy, from first having been discovered in Cardinal Mazarine's library, by the eminent biographer Debure. It is the first edition of the Holy Scriptures, and the first book executed by the inventors of printing in moveable metallic types, at Mentz, by Guttenburg and Faust, in 1450-55. After much spirited bidding it was knocked down to Mr. Leslie, for £190.

In the case of Sam Gray, under sentence of transportation from Ireland, which was brought before the House of Lords on a writ of Error on Monday last, a question has been propounded by the Lord Chancellor, for the opinion of the Judges, and until an answer is sent in, all further proceedings are for the present suspended.

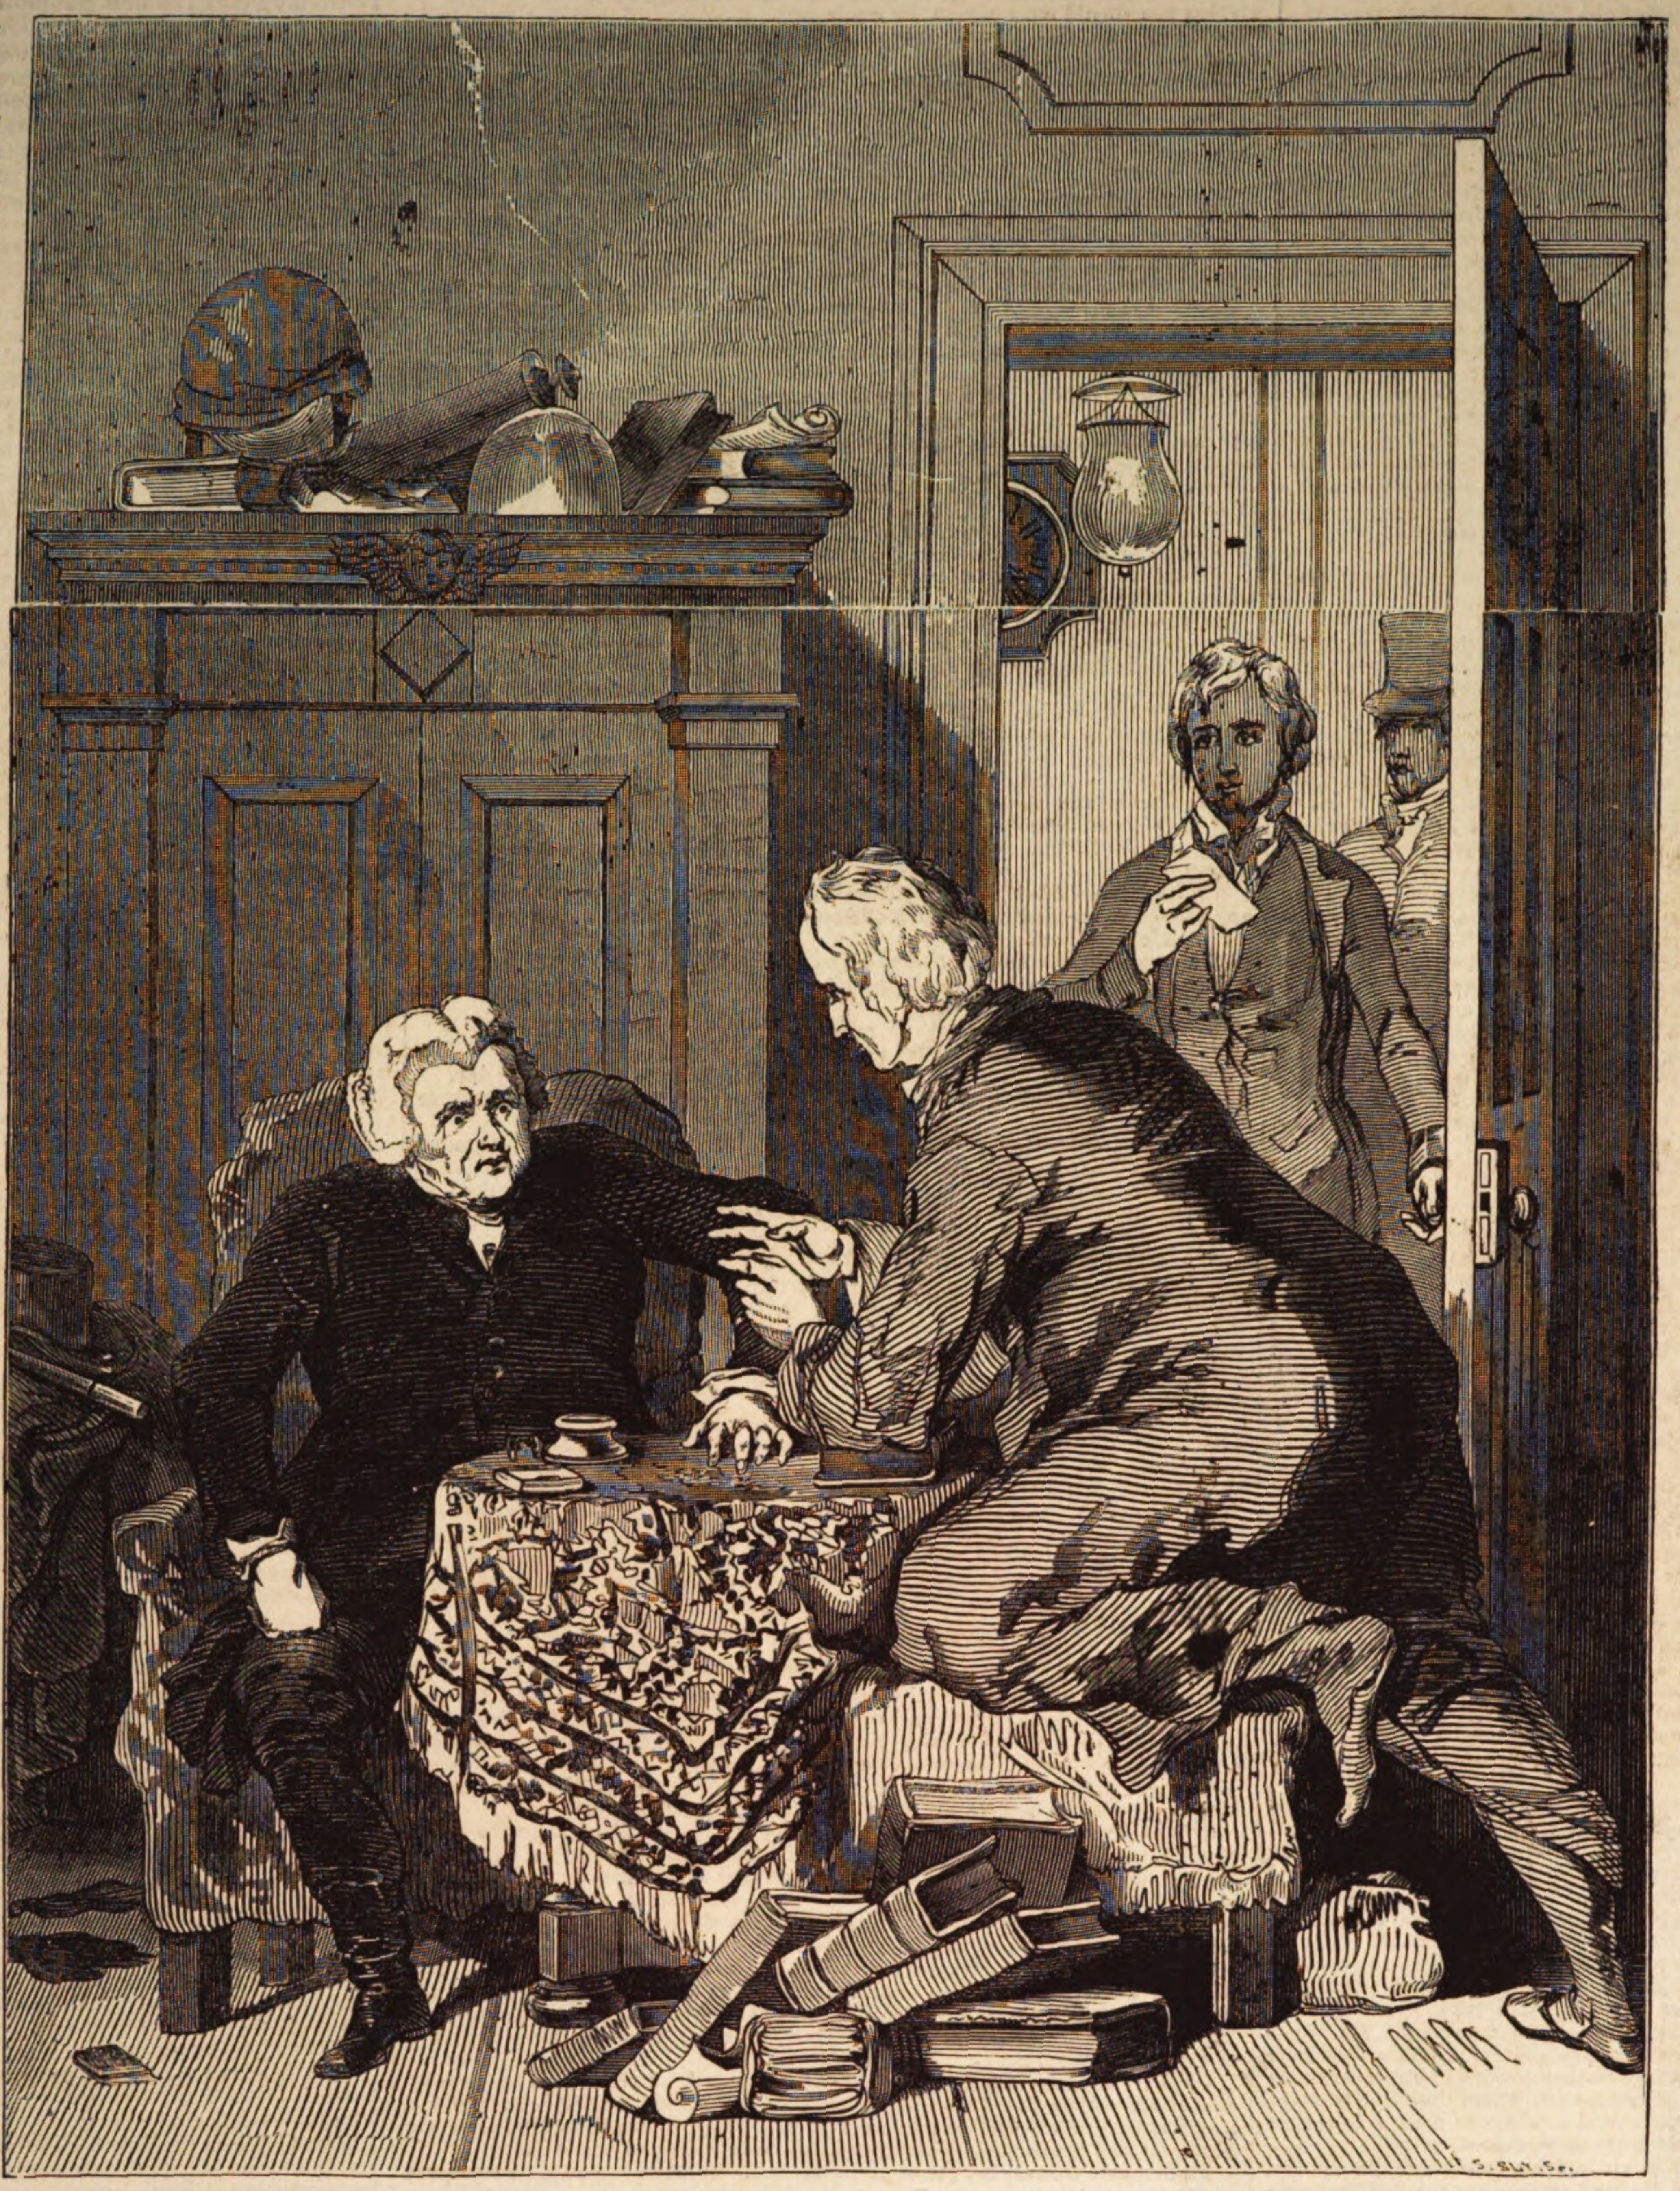
Mr. Peel, eldest son of the Premier, has gone to Lisbon, and from thence by Cadiz and Gibraltar to Madrid, where we learn he is appointed Secretary to the British Embassy, under his Excellency Mr. Henry Bulwer Lytton. It is said Mr. Peel will remain for two years in Spain.

A field of rye was cut at Marsons Lafitte, in the neighbourhood of Paris, on Tuesday last. The Paris papers say that there is no instance of so early harvest for upwards of 25 years.

FINE ARTS—THE ROYAL ACADEMY EXHIBITION.

THE WHISTONIAN CONTROVERSY. FROM A PICTURE BY MULREADY, R.A., IN THE ROYAL ACADEMY EXHIBITION.

To quote ourselves, this is "one of the most beautiful cabinet pictures ever painted: it has all the finish of Teniers, is full of character, and perfect in the details, as well as the general treatment." It is a masterly illustration of Goldsmith's exquisite "Vicar of Wakefield," representing the famous dispute on Monogamy, in Chap. II., or Whiston's tenet, that it was unlawful for a priest of the Church of England, after the death of his first wife, to take a second. The disputants are the Vicar and his friend, a rosy-gilled, portly parson of the old school, Mr. Wilmot, whose daughter, Arabella, the Vicar's son is about to marry. It will be recollected that the Vicar having completed a tract on his favourite subject of dispute, which he looked upon as a masterpiece, both for argument and style, he could not, in the pride of his heart, avoid showing it to his old friend, Mr. Wilmot, as he made no doubt of receiving his approbation; but not till too late he discovered that he was most violently attached to the contrary opinion, and with good reason; for he was at that time actually courting a fourth wife. This, as may be expected, produced a dispute, attended with some acrimony, which threatened to interrupt the intended alliance; but on the day before that appointed for the ceremony, the Vicar and Mr. Wilmot agreed to discuss the subject at large. Who can forget the admirable description of the contest?—"It was managed with proper spirit on both sides. He asserted that I was heterodox, I retorted the charge; he replied, and I rejoined." The picture represents the moment, "when the controversy was hottest," just as the Vicar is about to be called out by one of his relations, who advises him to give up the dispute—at least till his son's wedding is over. Then the sequel:—"How," cried I, "relinquish the cause of truth, and let him be a husband, already driven to the very verge of absurdity. You might as well advise me to give up my fortune as my argument." "Your fortune," returned my friend, "I am sorry to inform you, is almost nothing. The merchant in town, in whose hands your money was lodged, has gone off, to avoid a statute of bankruptcy, and is thought not to have left a shilling in the pound. I was unwilling to shock you or the family with the account till after the wedding; but now it may serve to moderate your warmth in the argument; for I suppose your own prudence will enforce the necessity of dissembling, at least till your son has the young lady's fortune secure." "Well," returned I, "if what you tell me be true, and if I am to be a beggar, it shall never make me a rascal, or induce me to disavow my principles. I'll go this moment and inform the company of my circumstances; and as for the argument, I even here retract my former conversions in the old gentleman's favour, nor will I allow him now to be a husband in any sense of the expression."



THE WHISTONIAN CONTROVERSY, FROM THE PICTURE BY MULREADY, R.A., IN THE EXHIBITION OF THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

Mr. Mulready had somewhat anticipated this picture in one of his admirable illustrations of the handsome edition of Goldsmith's most popular work: it is the head-piece to Chap. II., but it merely contains the figures of the disputants, and there is a material difference in the accessories. In the painting, the treatment is skilfully elaborate, and evinces great thought. The earnest eloquence of the Vicar, who, in his animation, has started from his seat, and, kneeling with one knee on the chair, and leaning forward with one elbow across the table, and with the fingers of one hand pressed against the other—is all inimitably depicted; as is the patient but obdurate manner of the other disputant, who has resolved not to admit conviction. The hands of both the controversialists are wonderfully expressive, and perfect; and the details of the books, the furniture, and, above all, Turkey table-cover, are matchless realities, equal to those of the best masters of the Dutch school. The picture, we are happy to learn, is a commission from Sir Thomas Baring.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The last concert for the season was given at the Hanover-square Rooms, on Saturday last, and was both numerously and fashionably attended. The programme presented some interesting particulars; but why does the highly-talented Miss Kate Loder re-set what has been already so beautifully done by Donizetti, namely, the introduction to the opera of "L' Elisir d' Amore"? or was it done to follow the example of the patron of the Academy, who, some years ago, put new music to the libretto of "The Siege of Belgrade," affecting not to know what had been selected and composed for it by Storace? Mr. Sterndale Bennett's pupils (Miss E. Bendixen and Miss Compton) acquitted themselves admirably in Dussek's elegant duet for two pianos, and Mr. Watson, notwithstanding that unpleasant accident of breaking a string during his performance, evinced great ability and promise of more, as a violinist. Brizzi is getting up in voice as well as in musical reputation; he sang the canzonetta "Bell raggio di Luna" (composed by the Earl of Westmoreland) with great sweetness and expression. Amid all the florid modern harmony, Bennett's madrigal came out in all the beauty of pastoral simplicity, which only poet-musicians can achieve in their compositions: the parts flowed

> Confluently like streams determined on
> With purpose to same end.

It was delicious, and was encored, a good proof that the most charming style of composition in the world—the old English madrigal is—as beloved now as ever, after all our importations. Mr Vandenhoff, the tragedian, has been appointed professor of elocution to the Academy.

"THE HELLESPONT."

This almost Lilliputian specimen of naval architecture has already been noticed in our journal. It is now lying in St. Katherine's Docks, where its diminutive proportions are very attractive. It is entirely without paint, but has a very gay appearance, as if constructed of satin-wood and mahogany. It has lately arrived from the Bermudas, and is said to be the smallest vessel that has ever performed such a voyage; being only 40 tons burden, and is exceeded in size by many of our Thames barges.

The principal employment of the Bermudians, by the way, is building vessels, which are generally small, swift, and very durable, being constructed of cedar; they are likewise noted for their graceful little boats; and on Ireland Island large sums have been expended, in order to render it a strong port for a naval and military depôt. Their fame for building vessels is of some antiquity; for when Sir George Sommers was driven upon the Bermudas, in 1609, on his voyage to Virginia, he and his party made their way thence to their original destination in two small cedar-built vessels, constructed by his men; and that in which Sir George embarked, did not contain an ounce of iron, except one bolt in the keel.

THE BANK CHARTER.

As the different enactments of the Bank Charter Bill come into operation at different periods, we think we shall render a useful service to our readers by specifying the date of the commencement of the operation of each enactment.

1. The division of the departments of the Bank of England takes place "upon the 31st day of August, 1844.

2. All persons may demand notes for gold at £3 17s. 9d. per ounce, "from and after the 31st of August, 1844."

3. Bank of England exempt from stamp duty "from and after 31st August, 1844;" Bank to allow £180,000 per annum, from the same date.

4. No new bank of issue to be allowed "from and after the passing of this act."

5. Existing banks of issue to give notice to the commissioners of stamps and taxes of their claim to issue to the extent of their average issue during the 12 weeks preceding the 27th April—such notice to be given "within one month next after the passing of this act."

6. No bank to issue upon an average of four weeks a higher amount than that allowed by the commissioners "after the 10th day of October, 1844."

7. A return of the name of every bank, and of every partner in each banking firm or company, shall be made to the commissioners of stamps and taxes "on the 1st day of January in each year, or within 15 days thereafter."

8. The agreements that have been made between the Bank of England and the bankers named in schedule C shall cease and determine "on the 31st day of December next."

9. The compensation of one per cent. to such banks shall cease "on the 1st day of August, 1856."

10. Any banking company in London, or within 65 miles thereof, though the number of partners exceed six, may draw, accept, or indorse bills of exchange "from and after the passing of this act."

11. The exclusive privileges of the Bank of England shall continue until the expiration of "12 months' notice, to be given after the 1st day of August, 1855."

ANTI-GRAHAM WAFERS.

(From Punch.)

DEDICATED TO THE HOME SECRETARY, AND POLITELY PRESENTED TO HIM BY THOMAS SLINGSBY DUNCOMBE, ESQ., M.P.

We have published this day, at our office, price—but we will not appeal to the sordidness of our readers—a sheet of emblematical devices, with mottoes, for Sir James Fouché Graham, which, from the peculiar appropriateness of their sarcasm, backed by the extraordinary adhesiveness of their gum, are adapted to stick to the Home Secretary for life.

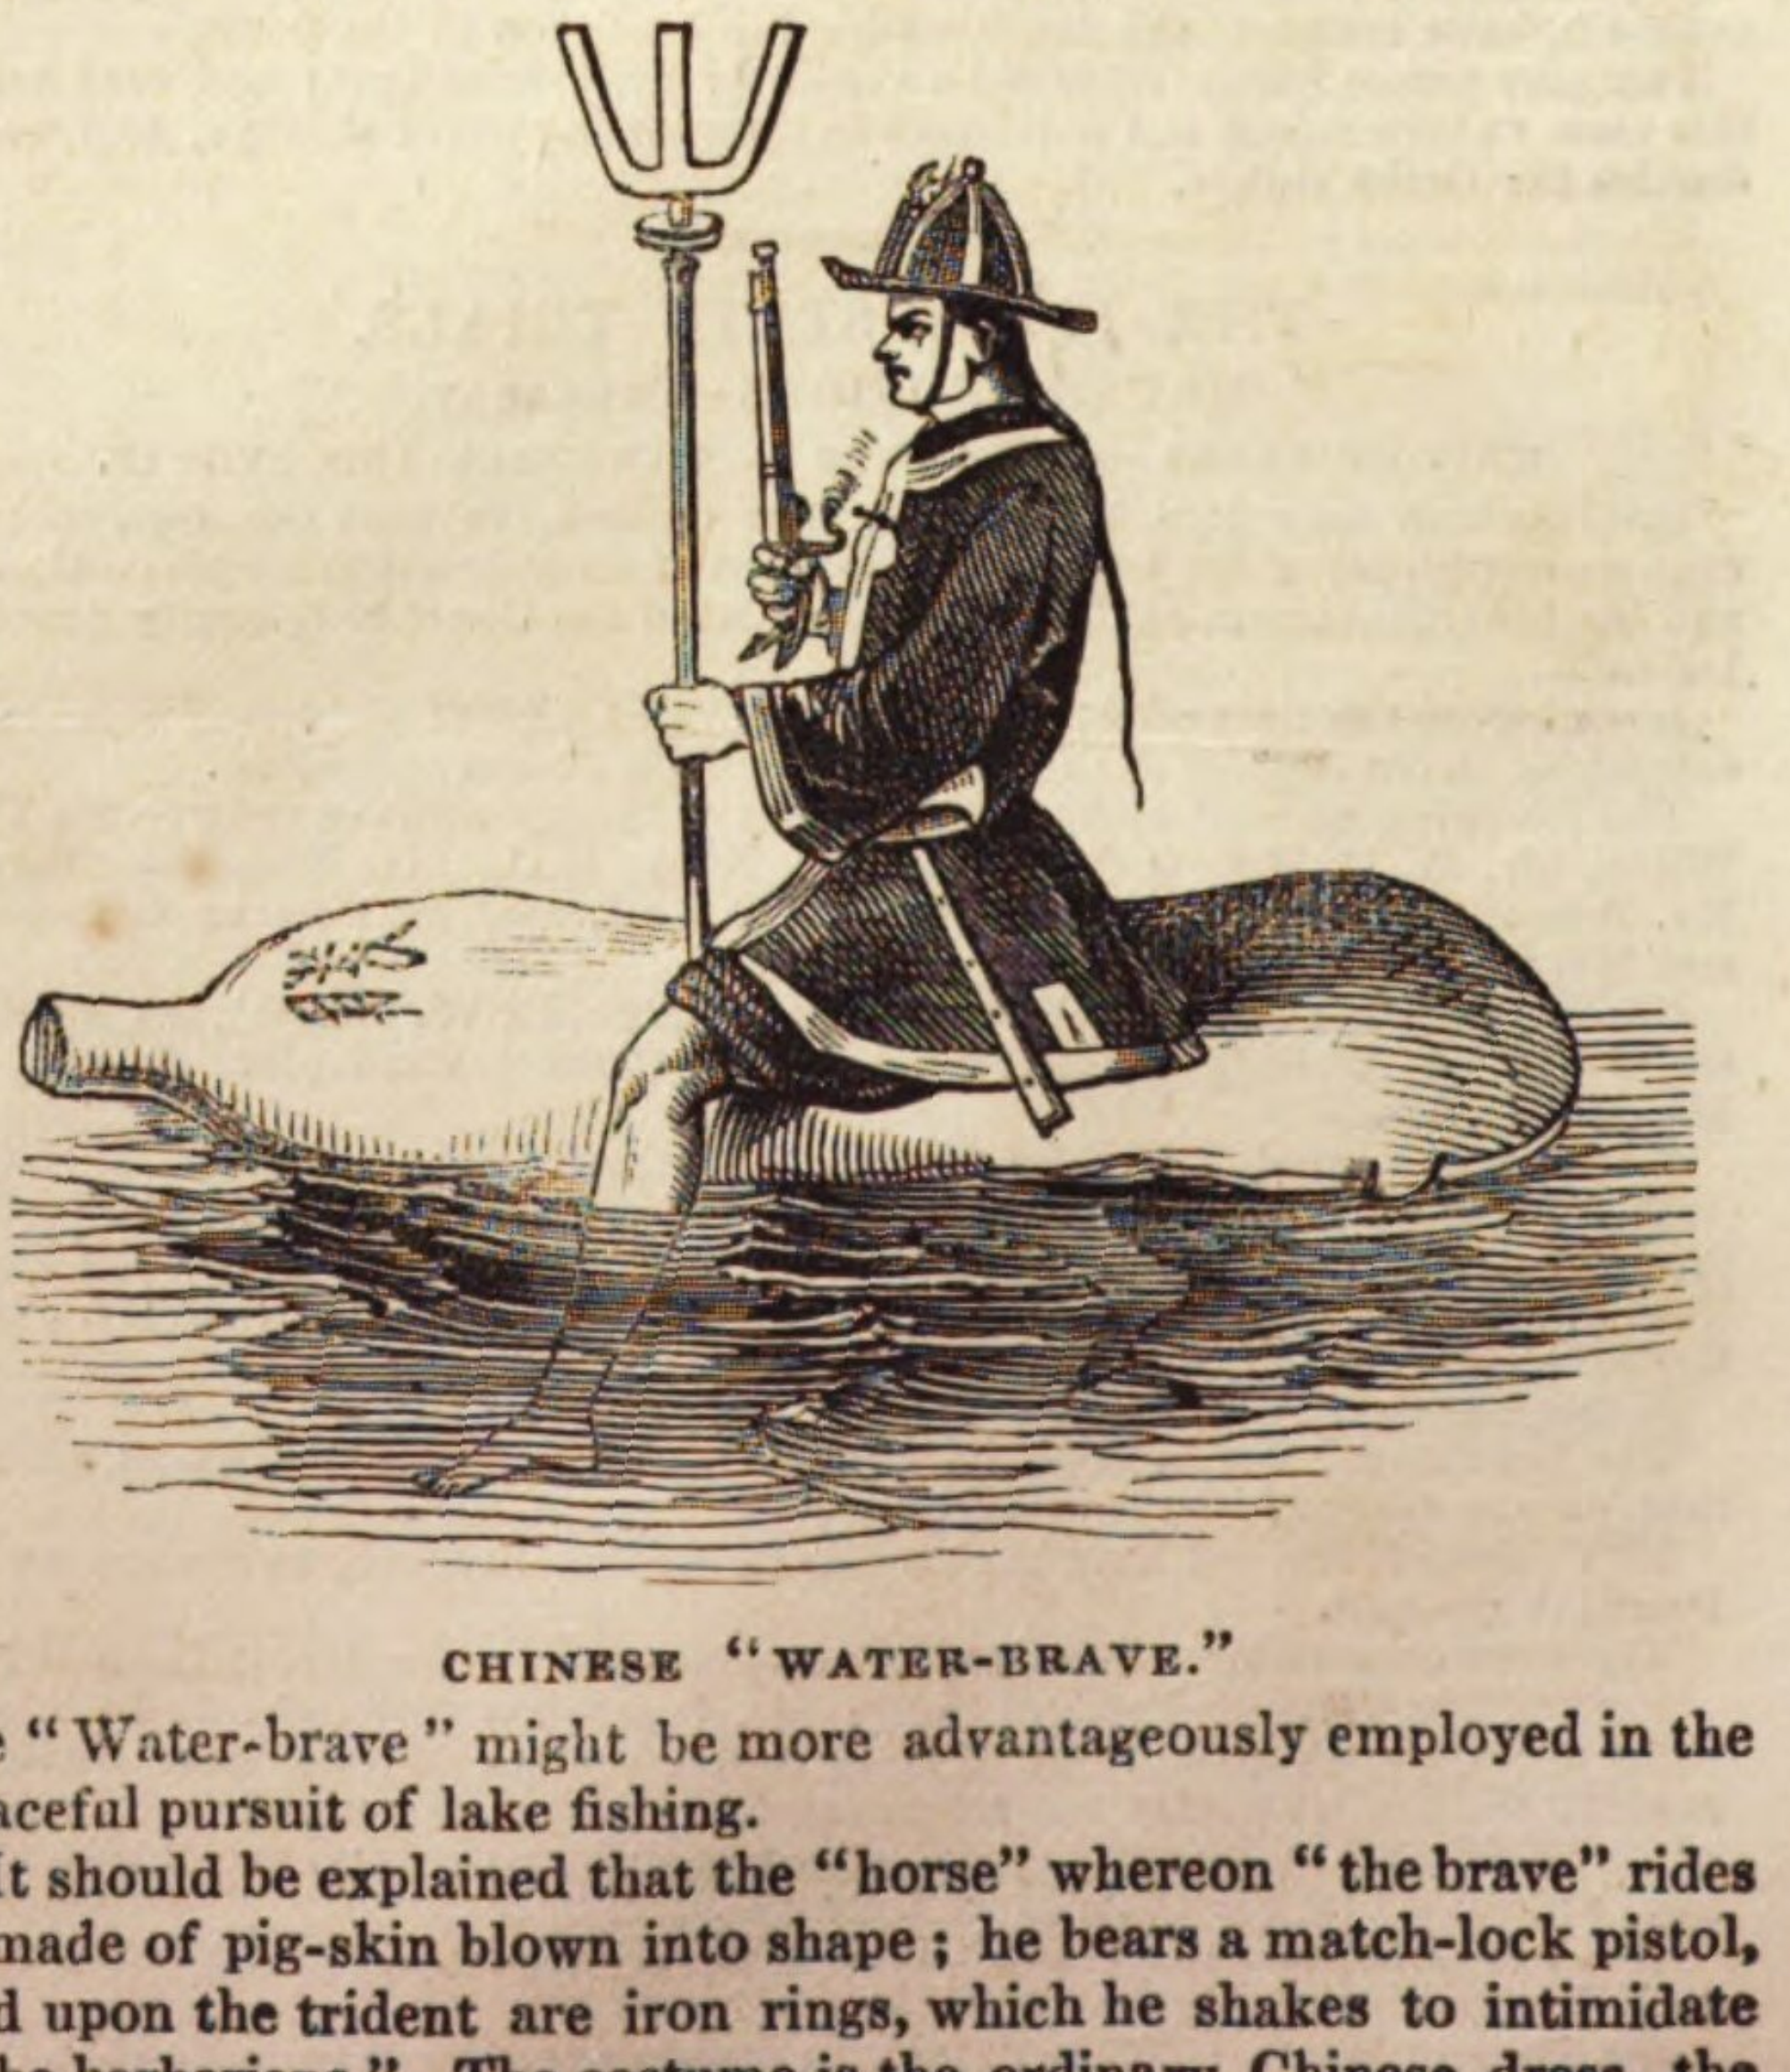
We have also just dotted off a good stinging envelope, which we intend to hold up as a mirror to Sir James Fouché Graham's very bad nature.

The following are some of the devices and mottoes:—

DEVICE.	MOTTO.
A blunderbuss on full cock......	I hope the contents will reach you.
A black lobster................	Not to be red without getting into hot water.
A manacle.....................	I trust this will come to hand.
A clenched fist	Should this meet your eye.
A bee	Touch my wax, you'll feel my sting.
A soda-water bottle............	If opened, a noise will follow.
Crocodile with mouth open	You're welcome to the inside.
A fox	You'll be run down, if you break cover.

CHINESE WATER-BRAVE.

A very interesting item has just been added to the popular "Chinese Collection," at Hyde-park Corner. It has been received direct from China, and is a "Water-brave," with all his warlike accoutrements, and is believed to be the only specimen of the kind ever brought to England. The Water-brave is a soldier mounted upon a large hollow body, and armed with a trident weapon, &c., a fit antagonist, it was thought, before the late encounter, to cope with British seamen; but, by this time, we suspect the Chinamen must be satisfied of their sorry contrivance to withstand those who are accustomed to "rule the waves;" whilst it is altogether unworthy of a people who have been the authors of three of the most important inventions or discoveries of modern times—the art of printing, the composition of gunpowder, and the magnetic compass. Nevertheless, it has been suggested that the "Water-brave" might be more advantageously employed in the peaceful pursuit of lake fishing.



CHINESE "WATER-BRAVE."

It should be explained that the "horse" whereon "the brave" rides is made of pig-skin blown into shape; he bears a match-lock pistol, and upon the trident are iron rings, which he shakes to intimidate "the barbarians." The costume is the ordinary Chinese dress, the trousers being tucked up.

There's not a stone remaining there,
A relic of that fine old hall;
For strangers came the sport to share,
And bade the stately structure fall!
But now, if fortune proves my friend,
And gives me what may yet remain,
In that dear spot my days to end,
I'll build a mansion there again.

NEW MUSIC.

THE SEAMAN'S BRIDE; the words by Mr. THOMAS FRICKER, the music by HENRY FARMER. J. Williams, Cheapside.

The melody of this song is not very remarkable, except in a passage where the words "mirth and glee" and "boundless sea" are saddened and confined by an union with a needless and unconnoted minor phrase. The progressions and harmonies at bars 1 and 2, page 3 (and repeated in the second verse), are against all rule. The second portion, or half, of bar 1, ought to be the harmony of 6-4, and the consecution of the fifths between it and bar 2 on the same page is intolerable. By some mistake the authorship of this ballad was, in our last, confounded with that of "The Sailor's Bride;" the notice, however, had nothing to do with the error.

THE GIPSY CHILD. Ballad. The Words by H. LOVELL, Esq. The Music by N. J. SPORLE. Williams and Son, Cheapside.

A pretty flowing melody in design, but faulty in execution: the harmonies (?) which occur in each verse at the words "Gipsy child" are not only wrong but intolerable.

LA MOSCOVIE. Quadrille Nouveau, composé et dedié à Miss Woodhead par Elise Launitz. J. Williams, Cheapside.

A quadrille nouveau would certainly be a novelty in these days; in the present production we can see nothing but that grace and (for this style of music) correctness which belong to fifty thousand other productions of a similar kind.

THE BEAUTIES OF THE OPERA. Part I. "La Giselle." London: D. Bogue.

This is an interesting and curious publication. It contains an outline memoir of that charming danseuse Carlotta Grisi, and a poetically written description of the Ballet of "Giselle." It is, to use its own words, a feuilliton, in which "engraving comes to illustrate the text, and the text the engraving." There is a portrait in this number of Grisi (which alone would recommend it to all persons of taste), besides a number of wood-cut illustrations of the ballet, executed in a first-rate style of art. We would advise, however, the author of the highly-wrought descriptive narrative to restrain his muse a little. The "Advertisement" which comes at the end of the "libretto," would have rendered Nat. Lee ten times more mad than he ever was, could he have lived to read it. What does the author mean by "the golden or silver notes of a male or female singer?" We confess ourselves to be at a loss!

I COME TO SCENES OF EARLY DAYS; ballad. Written by J. A. PAGE, Esq.; composed by F. H. S. PENDLETON. Smith, Liverpool.

There is a pretty sentiment in the words of this ballad, which has been rather well expressed. Bars two and three of the symphony might have contained a better figure with more correct harmony, namely, had the bass been a third higher. The composer should not have made a trisyllable of the word "alter'd." The progression at bars twelve and sixteen of the melody is not good, but altogether it is a pleasing composition.

PAULINE POLKA. Composed by A. DE LENONCOURT. Mrs. James Rae, Berners-street

It is said that "La Polka" has been introduced to the weather-cock Parisians by a certain Maitre de danse politique, on the same principle that Napoleon ordered the dome of the Invalides to be gilt, namely, to make the vane of the French mind veer from something "grave to gay." Be that as it may over the water, the serious heads of Englishmen have been turned by this dance. The music to this Polka is another of the eternal "ringing the changes" on a few chords, which, if it had no ancestor or rival, might claim some notice for melody and grace.

VALSES ROYALES D'ANGLETERRE. For the piano-forte. Composed by EDWARD PAGE. Jefferys and Co., Frith-street, Soho.

This collection consists of fifty-five waltzes, besides introductions and codas, in eleven books, which occupy close upon one hundred pages! Mr. Page must have an imperfect notion of the value of our pages or space, to think we could give a distinct notice of each particular valse. We, however, have looked them all over (not overlooked them), and found many passages of grace and beauty constructed upon the Strauss and Lanner models. Thirteen more books of waltzes are promised on a similarly extensive scale! We suspect this is a national rising on their part against the recent and successful invasion of the Polkas. But the Valse, after all, is no more English than the Polka. In truth, Mr. Page is an inexhaustible writer in this style of composition; he is the Lopez de Vega of valse libretti.

SONGS FOR THE NURSERY. Nos. 1 to 7. Composed by Miss BROUNCKER. Willis and Co., Lower Grosvenor-street.

We do not much incline to Nursery Rhymes, or Stories, but we must congratulate the fair composer on having introduced some simple and pleasing music into that hitherto squalling locality. No. 2 ("The Lullaby,") is extremely sweet and soft. No. 3 ("The Witches") is good, but above the comprehension of a "babby." No. 4 ("Hark! the Dogs") contains a spicy bit of satire at the close (clothes?) No. 5 ("The North Wind") is extremely pretty and affectionate. No. 6 we do not like, as it familiarises Cockney pronunciation in his rhymes, and No. 7 is inferior to the old song of "Who killed Poor Robin?" but altogether, although we do not like to see puerilities coupled with any Art, Miss Brouncker has produced a series of melodies and arrangements which even adult musicians may approve.

THE DEATH OF ABEL. An Oratorio composed by GEORGE PERRY, the words from the Scriptures and Gesner's Poem. Lee, Albemarle-street.

To write or invent an oratorio is about the most serious task or undertaking for which a composer can possibly prepare his genius. The requisites for such a performance are many and various. In the first place, he must have a deep and poetical sense of the matter or subject he takes in hand—his judicious taste in the first instance must have selected, and in the second, his genius and learning must attire it in appropriate musical costume. How often have we seen the most sacred themes dressed up in the garbs of orchestral buffoonery on one hand, and on the other, cowled into monkish and unamiable severity by a love for obsoleteness and ignorance! The real treatment, like Truth, lies between—and though we have often heard cathedral music highly, nay, as solemnly effective on the stage as in the church, when descriptive of some holy ceremony, we have, au contraire, listened in the fane to sounds as profane as we ever heard in a vaudeville theatre. The mighty Handel seems to be the only one deeply imbued with the awful sacredness of his themes.

The subject of the present oratorio is felicitously chosen: "The Death of Abel," the first tragedy of the earth—the scene in which it is laid—its dramatis personæ and time of action, could not fail to suggest to a composer's mind some noble thoughts, and Mr. Perry has caught the inspiration of his theme most happily in many instances, and poetically as well as musically (two terms which should never be apart) bodied it forth. Leah's invocation to Cain is full of tenderness and simple beauty. The duetto between the brothers, "I tremble," has much of the Handelian strength about it, and the quartetto, "O praise the Lord," is very graceful and smooth. The recitatives are highly expressive and well and characteristically accompanied. The choruses exhibit the contrapuntal knowledge of a maestro, although perhaps the fulness of their parts is not continuous enough throughout. Handel could embroider on the same ground a hundred times over without concealing or disfiguring his first pattern. With this objection, they are well constructed. The fugue "For who has any strength," is very excellent—the double augmentation at pages 92, 93, is highly effective. The concluding chorus, also, "The Voice of the Lord," is admirably worked up: in fact, the only fault we find with our countryman's work (of which we should be proud) is the too frequent iteration of a vocal phrase by the orchestra. This may be unheeded for a time, but once it lays hold of your attention, it becomes ennuyant to an intolerable degree. Half of those instrumental echoes might be omitted without injury to the sense or rhythm, but, on the contrary, with great benefit to the general effect of this truly talented composition. We advise all lovers of good music to hear it the next time it is performed at Exeter Hall.

MODEL OF VENICE.—A concert will be given on Monday, at her Majesty's Theatre, for the benefit of the proprietors of the Model of Venice, the ingenuity of which has hitherto been but indifferently recognised by the public. For the above occasion, Mr. Lumley has liberally granted the free use of the concert-room, and the most distinguished artistes of the establishment have, in like manner, accorded their eminent services gratuitously.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

On Tuesday night, Moriani made his second appearance, and met with increased success in the part of Edgardo, in Donizetti's "Lucia di Lammermoor." On Wednesday he sang at the Palace, and enchanted the ears of royalty.

On Thursday (for the benefit of Grisi), the opera of "Otello" was produced, with a cast which was never before equalled. Grisi, as Desdemona, Mario as the Moor, Fornasari as Iago, Corelli in the hitherto neglected part of Rodrigo, and the mighty Lablache as Elmiro.

The opera of "Otello," is one of Rossini's noblest conceptions; it abounds with musical science, mixed with poetical feeling, and perhaps was never so magnificently represented as on Thursday last. All the prominent beauties of the opera came out magnificently; the trio, "Ti parla l'amore" was beautifully sang by Grisi, Corelli, and Lablache. The quartetto leading into the finale of the first act was all that the nicest ear could exact. Mario was delightful in Otello: he was perhaps a little more like Romeo than the Moor, but he was, notwithstanding, very delightful.

Moriani again appeared in a portion of the "Lucia di Lammermoor," and, relieved in some degree from his hoarseness, delighted the house once more.

We cannot say more than we have already said about the superlative excellence of the ballet department.

HERR DÖBLER.—This magician without magic, this modern Breslau, took his leave of London, for the present season, on Monday last.

THE MARKETS.

MARK-LANE, Friday.—Since Monday we have received a full average time-of-year supply of English wheat, the quantity of which on offer to-day was tolerably good. Although the attendance of buyers was somewhat numerous, the demand was in a very sluggish state, and prices had a downward tendency. Foreign wheat was amending, and might have been purchased on easier terms. For all descriptions of spring corn, the supplies of which were by no means large, we had a very dull sale, and in almost every instance the currencies were somewhat easier.

ARRIVALS.—English: Wheat, 4160; barley, 350; oats, 4620. Irish: wheat, —; barley, —; oats, 2530. Foreign: wheat, 11,120; barley, 4880; oats, 10090 qrs. Flour, 4210 sacks; malt, 2710 qrs.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 44s to 53s; ditto white, 54s to 61s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 40s to 49s; ditto white, 48s to 56s; rye, 28s to 36s; grinding barley, 26s to 27s; distilling ditto, 25s to 28s; malting ditto, 34s to 36s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 60s to 62s; brown ditto, 58s to 60s; Kingston and Ware, 60s to 63s; Chevalier, 64s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 18s to 20s; potatoe ditto, 22s to 25s; Youghal and Cork, black, 21s to 22s; ditto white, 22s to 23s; tick beans, 26s to 32s; old ditto, 27s to 32s; grey peas, 31s to 35s; maple, 31s to 35s; white, 35s to 40s; boilers, 36s to 38s per quarter. Town-made flour, 50s to 53s; Suffolk, — to 40s; Stockton and Yorkshire, 38s to 40s, per 28 lbs. Foreign.—Free wheat, 48s to 58s; Dantzig, red, 48s to 61s; white, 60s to 68s. In Bond.—Barley, 19s to 20s; oats, new, 12s to 16s; ditto feed, 11s to 15s; beans, 15s to 19s; peas, 23s to 25s per quarter. Flour, America, 21s to 23s; Baltic, 21s to 23s per barrel.

The Seed Market.—For linseed and for cakes we have had a steady demand, at full prices, but all other kinds of seeds have been a mere drug.

The following are the present rates:—Linseed, English, sowing, 50s to 60s; Baltic crushing, 25s to 37s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 26s to 38s; hempseed, 28s to 35s per quarter; coriander, 15s to 20s per cwt.; brown mustard seed, 12s to 18s; white ditto, 10s to 12s; tares, 4s to 4s 6d per bushel; English rapeseed, new, £25 to £26 per last of ten quarters: Linseed cakes, English, £10 10s to £11; foreign, £7 5s to £7 15s; rapeseed £5 5s to £5 10s per ton; canary 58s to 66s per quarter.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 8d to 8½d; of household ditto, 6d to 7½d per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Averages.—Wheat, 55s 9d; barley, 34s 0d; oats, 22s 9d; rye, 35s 0d; beans, 38s 0d; peas, 36s 1d.

Six Weeks' Averages that govern Duty.—Wheat, 55s 8d; barley, 31s 10d; oats, 21s 1d; rye, 33s 6d; beans, 36s 3d; peas, 34s 1d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 17s; barley, 7s; oats, 6s; rye, 9s 6d; beans, 6s 6d; peas, 8s. 6d.

Tea.—The stock of tea in bond in London, on the 1st instant, consisted of 30,916,000 lbs, against 27,870,000 ditto at the corresponding period in 1843. By private contract very little is doing, yet prices are steadily supported.

Sugar.—For all descriptions of sugar we have to report an inactive inquiry, yet the importers are firm at late rates. The supplies on hand are now much larger than last season.

Coffee.—In Ceylon coffee very little is doing at late rates, good ordinary being quoted at 50s. per cwt. Jamaica, and most other kinds of coffee, met a slow enquiry.

Rice.—This article is flat, yet prices are mostly supported. The public sales have been by no means extensive.

Rum.—We have a very steady sale for rum, at full prices, proof Leewards selling at 2s 2d to 2s 2½d.

Provisions.—In consequence of the increasing arrivals, Irish butter has given way from 1s to 2s per cwt. Cork and Limerick is now selling at 72s to 74s; and Waterford, 73s to 74s. Foreign butter is a mere drug, and the turn lower. The bacon market is steady, but all other kinds of provisions hang heavily on hand.

Tallow.—This article is steady, at 41s 3d to 41s 9d for P.Y.C. on the spot, and 42s 6d. for forward delivery.

Oils.—Linseed oil is in request, and prices are well supported. Other oils are quite as dear.

Coals.—Adair's, 19s 6d; Ord's Redheugh, 16s 6d; Townley, 17s 6d; Hotspur, 20s 6d; Hilda, 22s; Hetton, 24s; Adelaide, 24s; West Tees, 22; Staveley, 16s; Elgin, 19s per ton.

Hops.—The accounts from the plantations being by far more unfavourable than even those of last week, the demand here for all kinds of hops is active, at prices fully equal to those quoted in our last report. Sussex pockets, £6 to £6 10s; Weald of Kent do., £6 10s to £7; Mid Kent do., £7 to £10; do. bags, £7 to £8 10s; East Kent do., £7 to £9; Choice do., £10 to £12.

Wool.—We have to report a decided improvement in the demand for all kinds of wool, the value of which is somewhat on the advance.

Potatoes.—Old potatoes have become dull in sale on easier terms. New ones are in request, at 8s to 16s per cwt.

Smithfield.—In to-day's market the numbers of beasts on offer were only moderate, yet the beef trade was in a very sluggish state, at, in some instances, a decline of 2d per 8lbs. There were on sale, 12 beasts from Holland, and 70 horned and polled Scots from Aberdeen. The supply of sheep was tolerably good, yet the mutton trade rated somewhat active, at full prices. In lambs a good business was doing, and Monday's quotations were well supported. Although the numbers of calves were very extensive, the veal trade was somewhat brisk, at full currencies. In pigs, little was doing, yet previous rates were supported. Milch cows moved off steadily, at from £16 to £19 each.

Per 8lbs., to sink the offal:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 2s 4d to 2s 8d; second quality do 2s 10d to 3s 2d; prime large oxen, 3s 4d to 3s 6d; prime Scots, &c., 3s 8d to 3s 10d; coarse and inferior sheep, 2s 6d to 3s 2d; second quality ditto, 3s 4d to 3s 6d; prime coarse woolled sheep, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; prime Southdowns ditto, 3s 10d to 4s 0d; large coarse calves 3s 4d to 4s 0d; prime small ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 4d; large hogs, 3s 0d to 3s 6d; neat small porkers, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; lambs, 4s 0d to 5s 0d. Suckling calves, 18s to 28s; and quarter old store pigs, 16s 0d to 20s each. Beasts, 567; cows, 175; sheep and lambs, 12,150; calves, 469; pigs, 309.

Newgate and Leadenhall.—Although the supplies of meat on sale to-day at this market were but moderate, the demand for all descriptions was inactive, on the following terms.—Per 8lbs by the carcass:—Inferior beef, 2s 2d to 2s 4d; middling ditto, 2s 6d to 2s 8d; prime large ditto, 2s 10d to 3s 0d; prime small do., 3s 2d to 3s 4d; large pork, 2s 6d to 3s 6d; inferior mutton, 2s 6d to 2s 8d; middling ditto, 2s 10d to 3s 2d; prime ditto, 3s 4d to 3s 8d; veal, 3s 0d to 4s 0d; small pork, 3s 6d to 4s 0d; lamb, 4s 0d to 5s 0d.

COMMERCE AND MONEY.

On the Royal Exchange, last foreign post day, the supply of bills drawn on foreign nations, although unusually large, was not equal to the demand, and a fall in the rates of the foreign exchanges was the necessary consequence. This change in money prospects is purely the effect of the considerable importations, which are now in progress, of all descriptions of agricultural produce from abroad; and should these imports continue to the same extent during the remainder of the season, they may have an unfavourable influence in the money market. Indeed, already is the interest on loans of money becoming gradually higher, and so likewise are the rates of discount charged for cashing Bills of Exchange. On the English Stock Exchange, however, no scarcity of money is, at all events, as yet apparent, although little inclination to invest money in the Consols, or in any other description of our public securities, has been shown by the capitalists since our last publication. Prices are, however, fairly supported by purchases, made for the Court of Chancery, and for different public bodies; and, as the floating stock in the market was scarcely ever smaller in its amount, it is justly presumed that little chance at present exists of any decline occurring in their present quotations.

As the interest on money advances, so likewise does the value of the shares of the London Banking Associations. The proprietors of the Union Bank of London are particularly sanguine of a farther improvement soon occurring in their property, and they therefore ask higher prices than the monied interest at present is willing to pay. The same feeling exists, but perhaps not to the same extent, amongst the proprietors of the London and Westminster and of the London Joint Stock Banks, for higher annual incomes are expected to be drawn from all of them.

To railway property, also, the attention of capitalists continues to be directed, and this channel for the investment of spare monies is still a favourite one with the public. Birmingham Stock has reached 222, and will be higher when the differences with the Grand Junction are finally arranged, an event which is expected speedily to take place. Edinburgh and Glasgow and the Great Western are also saleable at their late high quotations. The deduction of the dividends is the reason for their prices appearing to be lower. On the whole, matters remain in a sound and healthy state in this department of the money market.

On the Foreign Stock Exchange the usual amount of transactions has been again done, although in prices but little alterations can be quoted. Spanish bonds are still an object of attraction for speculators. The dividends having been paid, prices have recovered a portion of their late depression. Duch stock, of all descriptions, is also again higher, and so are Belgian bonds. The securities of Austria and of Russia continue to command very high prices. In various descriptions of American goods, likewise, a good deal of business has been again done at prices fully as dear as we last quoted them.

POLKA MATINEES, 16, Manchester-square.—Mrs. JAMES RAE has the honour of announcing to her Patrons and Friends, that she has REMOVED from 50 A, Berners-street, to 16, MANCHESTER-SQUARE. Mrs. Rae's Réunions for the exclusive practice of the Polka and Valse being sanctioned and honoured with the greatest success, will be continued every FRIDAY MORNING, from Two to Five o'Clock. Mrs. James Rae's Academy for Dancing and Exercises (so many years established under the most distinguished patronage), and hitherto held at the Hanover-square Rooms, will in future be continued at her Residence, where terms and particulars may be ascertained.—Private Lessons daily; also Families Attended at Home.

BEFORE LEAVING TOWN, Ladies should not neglect a real opportunity to Purchase the Spring Novelties at quarter price.—DISON (who acknowledges with gratitude the patronage he has received this short season) has reduced the prices of his remaining fancy stock of mantles, capes, canezoux, collars, &c., in lace, muslin, and tarlatans, to half their original price, and in some instances, where the articles are out of condition or passé, to a third their cost, in order to effect a total clearance before the close of the season. Ladies will likewise do well to lay in a stock of cambric pocket handkerchiefs, as an immense saving is made by purchasing these articles from DISON, who maintains a first-rate reputation for excellent fabrics, as well as cheapness. Address, DISON, principal Laceman to her Majesty, No. 237, Regent-street.

HOBY'S IMPERIAL BLACKING.—GEORGE HOBY begs to call attention to his Celebrated Blacking, which gives a lasting polish, equal to patent leather, causing boots and shoes to be much more durable and soft, and alleviating the pain arising from corns and tender feet. Sold wholesale in bottles, at 1s., 1s. 6d., and paste at 6d.; in London, 48, St. James'-street; Edinburgh, DUNCAN and Co., 59, Princes-street; Dublin, HODGES and SON, 16, Westmoreland-street, &c., &c.

LOSS OF TEETH SUPPLIED, without Springs, Clasps, or Wires; Loose Teeth Fastened; and Filling Decayed Teeth with Mineral Marmoratum.—Mons. LE DRAY and SON, SURGEON DENTISTS, 42, Berners-street, Oxford-street, continue to restore Decayed Teeth with their celebrated Mineral Marmoratum, applied without pain, heat, or pressure, preventing and curing the Toothache, and rendering the operation of extraction unnecessary. They also Fasten Loose Teeth, whether arising from age, neglect, the use of calomel, or disease of the gums. Incorrodible Artificial or Natural Teeth, of surpassing beauty, to match in colour and shape those left in the mouth, fixed, from one to a complete set, without extracting the roots, or giving any pain, at the following charges:—A single tooth, 10s; a set, £5 5s. Arranged on the most approved principles, and restoring perfect articulation and mastication. At home from Ten till Six. N.B.—Removed from 60, Newman-street, to 42, Berners-street, Oxford-street.

WATCHES, CHRONOMETERS, and CLOCKS.—Mr. HARRIS, Chronometer-maker to the Hon. East India Company (nearly 50 years Hatton and Harris, of Cornhill), having retired from business, Mr. R. WEBSTER will SELL the remainder of his superior and extensive STOCK, at his late residence, 76, CORNHILL, considerably below the original manufacturing cost. The Stock, which has been added to by the introduction of a few articles by the finest makers in London, consists of forty new and second-hand Marine Chronometers, Gold and Silver Pocket Chronometers, Marine and Pediment Barometers; Duplex and Lever Watches, in Gold and Silver Cases; superior small flat horizontal Gold and Silver Watches, for Ladies and Youths, worthy of attention from the low prices; two Regulators; Musical, Quarter, and Balance Clocks for Carriages; Timepiece Dials for Counting-houses and Kitchens; several ornamental Drawing room Clocks, at very low prices. Purchasers will be referred for attention and regulation to one of the oldest houses in London, whose guarantee will be given for the correctness of performance and superior manufacture of the work. The premises being to let, the Stock must shortly be removed.—The LEASE to be SOLD.

Apply, late HARRIS, 76, Cornhill.

READ AND JUDGE FOR YOURSELVES OF THE EFFICACY OF PARR'S LIFE PILLS:—

IMPORTANT TESTIMONY of an Old Man in his 77th year, received by Messrs. MOTTERSHEAD and Co., Manchester, and forwarded to the Proprietors of PARR'S LIFE PILLS.

I, THOMAS BARLOW, gratefully testify to the great benefit I have derived by taking PARR'S LIFE PILLS. I had been out of health for many years; sometimes unable to work, and on the sick-club. I had a bad complaint at the stomach, with a violent cough, and at various times was under different medical men, including the noted Dr. Newbold, of the Chorlton Dispensary; but my case seemed hopeless, as they none of them could cure, or give me much relief, and I had no hopes left of being better on this side the grave; however, quite unexpected, the deliverer came at last (Old Parr's Recipe). I got a box of his Pills and found immediate benefit from the first box, and continued them for several months with increased good until this time, and now I feel myself wonderfully well, and am strong in body, have a good appetite, and though in my 77th year, I am able to get my own living in the employ of Mr. Mee, farmer, Withington (as a farm labourer). I am satisfied that my recovery is to be ascribed entirely to the restorative qualities of PARR'S LIFE PILLS, and as a proof of my great age, subjoined is a copy of my baptismal register.

BAPTISM, 1767.—THOMAS, Son of JAMES and MARTHA BARLOW, of Hale, Cheshire, was Baptised the 27th day of November, in the year of our Lord 1767.

From the Parish Register—F. BOWDON.
Signed—JOHN BALDWIN, Vicar.

This and hundreds of other cases of decided cures, attested on the highest authority, and already published, occupy upwards of 150 pages of letter-press. These Testimonials are published periodically, and may be had on application at any respectable medicine vendors. The cures in many instances were effected after all other means had failed, and they thus establish the claims of PARR'S LIFE PILLS in being considered the best medicine in the world.

CAUTION TO THE PUBLIC.—Beware of Spurious Imitations of the above medicine. None are genuine unless the words "PARR'S LIFE PILLS" are in WHITE LETTERS on a RED GROUND, engraved in the Government Stamp, pasted round each box; also the fac-simile of the signature of the Proprietors, "T. ROBERTS and Co., Crane-court, Fleet-street, London," on the directions.

A NEW DISCOVERY.—NO MORE SUFFERING FROM CORNS or BUNIONS.—AGENTS required all over England, Ireland and Scotland, for the sale of this wonderful remedy, which immediately enables the greatest sufferer to walk with the most perfect ease and comfort. MADDEN'S Registered PATENT KNIFE CLEANER meets with the most extensive and distinguished patronage, and is now established as an article of utility. Its cleanliness, simplicity, and efficacy, combined with the advantages of removing all the dirt and noise, the saving of time, and the preservation of the knives insure universal favour. MADDEN'S KNIFE CLEANER, price 15s., may be seen and tried at the office, 14, George-street, Adelphi.

EAU de COLOGNE, 10s. per case of six, or 2s. singly, which, since its first preparation, in 1709, has maintained an undisturbed supremacy over all other distilled compounds, can be had genuine, as prepared from the original recipe, by application to H. BREIDENBACH, 88, Park-street, Grosvenor-square, and manufacturer at Cologne. This Eau de Cologne is no spurious imitation of Farina's, but the genuine article itself, and as such defies all competition.

STOOPING of the SHOULDERS and CONTRACTION of the CHEST are entirely prevented, and gently and effectually removed in Youth, and Ladies and Gentlemen, by the occasional use of the PATENT ST. JAMES'S CHEST EXPANDER, which is light, simple, easily employed outwardly or invisibly, without bands beneath the arms, uncomfortable constraint, or impediment to exercise. Sent per post, by Mr. A. BINYON, 40, Tavistock-street, Strand, London, or full particulars on receiving a postage stamp.

GOWLAND'S LOTION.—This elegant preparation, an original formula of the late Dr. Gowland, for all IMPURITIES OF THE SKIN, continues to maintain a repute commensurate with its specific properties of speedily eradicating every species of eruptive malady, discoloration, &c., and of preserving and enhancing the beauty of the complexion by a congenial action upon the skin, as perfectly innocent as it is agreeable and efficacious. "ROBT. SHAW, London," is in white letters on the Government Stamp, without which none is genuine. Prices, 2s. 9d., 5s. 6d., quarts, 8s. 6d. Sold by all Perfumers and Medicine Vendors.

HANWELL COLLEGIATE SCHOOL, Middlesex.—Principal, the Rev. J. A. EMERTON, M.A., Curate of Hanwell. Parents and Guardians desirous of selecting a School in a healthy situation, combining the intellectual advantages of a collegiate course with religious instruction, moral and physical training and parental care, may obtain Prospectuses by a personal or written application to the Principal, or by letter, pre-paid, to the Rev. T. T. Walmsley, D.D., Rectory, Hanwell; J. D. Macbride, Esq., D.C.L., Principal of Magdalene Hall, Oxford; or to J. A. Paris, Esq., M.D., Dover-street, Piccadilly, President of the Royal College of Physicians.

SO great has been the wonder occasioned by a Mechanical Figure we have exhibited, to prove, by practical illustration, the elasticity and perfect adaptation to the neck, of our invention, the ALBERT or PATENT ELASTIC CRAVAT, which is admitted to be as superior as different to the old and almost obsolete Cravats made of bristles, India-rubber and starched materials, &c., that, mirabile dictu, crowds of persons have so surrounded the Manufactory, as to prevent the usual work in our shops below the window in which the figure is exhibited.—F. HUGHES and CO., Anatomical Mechanicians, 247, High Holborn. P.S.—Let the public exclaim, Veni, vidi, and vici bad habits.

A LUXURY FOR WARM OR WET WEATHER.

BERDOE'S SUPERIOR LIGHT SUMMER FROCKS, WATERPROOF.—An extensive variety of the above in NEW and greatly improved materials (in lieu of the unsightly rubbish made by Slopsellers), now ready, guaranteed to exclude any rain whatever, and confidently recommended to those who regard a respectable appearance, or wish to avoid disappointment and vexation. FIRST-RATE CLOTHING of every description, upon the lowest terms possible, consistent with true economy and ultimate satisfaction.

W. BERDOE, TAILOR, WATERPROOFER, &c., 69, CORNHILL (north side.)

DENTAL SURGERY.—EXTRACTION SUPERSEDED.—MESSRS. MOSLEY, Surgeon Dentists by appointment to his Majesty the King of Hanover, 32, Haymarket, St. James's, in announcing that they may be consulted daily, as usual, beg to invite attention to their method (peculiar to their own practice) of FILLING DECAYED TEETH. Teeth, however badly decayed, or however large the cavity, FILLED WITH GOLD, enabling the patient to masticate with perfect ease, and rendering extraction unnecessary. Their terreous artificial teeth fixed without wires of any kind, or extraction of stumps, are not only quite indestructible and unchangeable in colour, but being of every shade natural to the original, may be worn from one to a set, without the slightest difference in shape or colour. Loose teeth fastened without ligatures and rendered perfectly firm.—OBSERVE, 32, Haymarket.

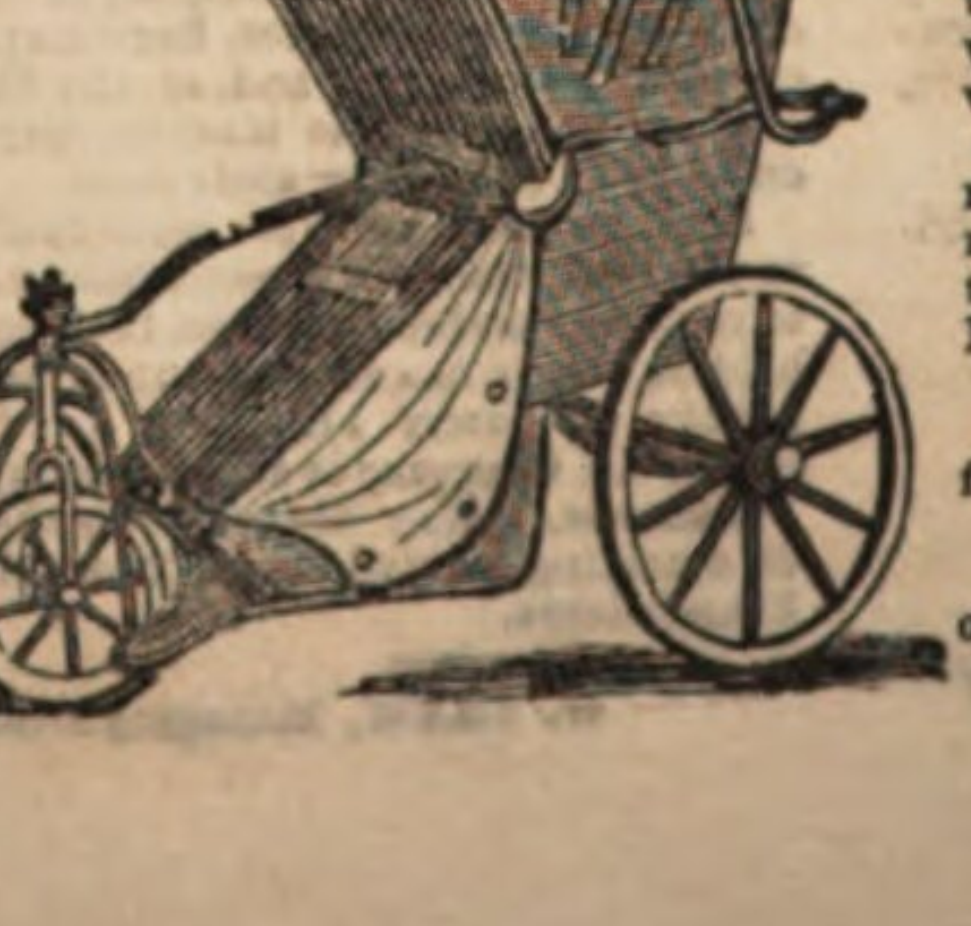
IMPORTANT to FAMILIES FURNISHING.—A considerable saving can be effected in the purchase of Furnishing Ironmongery, by visiting the PANKLIBANON IRON WORKS, 58, Baker-street, Portman-square, where may be inspected the most extensive STOCK of IRONMONGERY GOODS in the Kingdom, consisting of kitchen cooking utensils, German silver wares, drawing-room stoves, shower and vapour baths, ornamental iron work, garden implements, japanned water cans and toilette pails, best Sheffield plate, kitchen ranges, fenders and fire-irons, tea trays, ornamental wire-work, flower-stands, table cutlery, &c. Every article being marked in plain figures, at the lowest possible price, will fully convince purchasers at this establishment of the great advantage resulting from Cash payments, as the Proprietors warrant every article of the very best manufacture.—THORPE, FALLOWS, and CO., 58, Baker-street, Portman-square.—A liberal allowance to merchants and captains.

MOURNING—Court, Family, and Complimentary.—The Proprietors of the London General Mourning Warehouse, Nos. 247 and 249 Regent-street, beg respectfully to remind families whose bereavements compel them to adopt mourning attire, that every article (of the very best description) requisite for a complete outfit of mourning may be had at their establishment at a moment's notice. Widows' and Family Mourning is always kept made up; and a note descriptive of the mourning required, will ensure everything necessary for the occasion, being sent (in town or country) immediately. Ladies requiring Silks—either Satins, Satin Turcs, Watered or Plain Ducapes, and Widows Silks, are particularly invited to a trial of the new Corbeau Silks introduced at this house, as they will be found not only more durable, but the colour will stand the test of the strongest acid, or even sea water. Black and Grey, and Fancy Mourning Silks of every description. The Show Rooms are replete with every novelty that modern taste has introduced in mourning millinery, flowers, collars, head-dresses, bugle berthes, trimmings, &c. &c.—The London General Mourning Warehouse, Nos. 247 and 249, Regent-street, near Oxford street.—W. C JAY, and Co.

SAILING UNDER FALSE COLOURS!!!—The BRITISH COLLEGE OF HEALTH hereby cautions the Public against the numberless Pills sold under fictitious names and titles, which have sprung into existence since Mr. MORISON'S Work appeared. The parties who put forth such Pills (sailing under false colours), take the name of some eminent person not in existence, and then most fraudulently make extracts out of Mr. Morison's Work, which they put into their bills, in order to obtain a sale for their pills. It is, therefore, against such a nefarious practice that Messrs. MORISON deem it their duty and interest to warn the Public, being determined that the Hygeian Theory of Medicine, as introduced by JAMES MORISON, the Hygeist, shall not be made a vehicle to such fraud and imposture. MORISON and CO., Hygeists.

British College of Health, Hamilton-place, New-road, July, 1844.

N.B. We would advise the Public, should they feel inclined to patronise such Pills, to be cautious in making inquiries as to who the Proprietors of such medicines really are. The practice of adopting the Hygeian theory with an inefficient or improper medicine, of course tends to bring that theory into disrepute.



INVALID CARRIAGES.—To be DISPOSED OF, a number of Out-of-door and In-door Wheel Chairs, constructed especially for the comfort of Invalids, comprising the plainest as well as the most expensive builds, Second-hand, as well as new. INTERESTING TO LADIES.
To Messrs. ROWLAND and SON, 20, Hatton-garden, London.

Percy-place, Landport, Portsmouth, April 4th, 1844

Gentlemen,—I think it but an act of justice to inform you of the benefit I have derived from the use of your admirable Macassar Oil. About six months ago I found my hair getting daily more weak and thin, and much discoloured from a practice I had adopted of wetting it continually; fearing that I should lose it entirely. and hearing of the efficacy of your Macassar Oil, I have for some time past constantly used it, and the result is, that my hair is now perfectly restored and much improved in appearance and colour, having become thick, dark, and glossy; it also curls freely without the use of paper, which it never did before. To all my friends I have warmly recommended your Macassar Oil as an excellent restorative and preservative for the hair. As I have an objection to see my name in print, I beg you will not publish it; but you are at liberty to show this letter, or make any other use you please of it, and refer applicants to me, if necessary, in proof of the efficacy of your Macassar Oil.

Your obedient servant, * * * * * * * * * *

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL preserves and reproduces the Hair; prevents it from falling off or turning Grey; changes Grey Hair to its Original Colour; frees it from Scur and Dandriff, and makes it beautifully soft and curly.

Ask for "ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL." All others are FRAUDULENT COUNTERFEITS.

HAIL-STORM DEPARTMENT.

ADVANTAGES OF INSURING IN THIS OFFICE.

An actually subscribed Capital of £500,000, secured by 1,963 shareholders, whose names and addresses are enrolled according to Act of Parliament.

Insurances effected in one sum.

Division of profits amongst the insured every third year.

All losses, whether total or partial, paid in full, as soon after the occurrence as the valuation can be completed.

No average clause, so that the sufferer will be certain of receiving the full amount of his loss, to be settled as in the case of loss by fire.

Premium Sixpence per acre for Wheat, Barley, and Peas; Fourpence for Oats, Beans, Turnips, and Potatoes.

Glass in hothouses. greenhouses, or private houses, 20s. per cent.

The surplus profits, after paying an annual dividend of £4 per cent. to the shareholders, and providing for a reserved fund, will be divided every third year between the shareholders and the insured.

Detailed Prospectuses may be obtained at the office, or will be forwarded, post free, upon application.

The usual commission to Solicitors.

The Directors of this Institution by no means wish to interfere with any other Office; but as the General Hail-storm Insurance Institution, Norwich, has announced rates lower even than those charged by this Institution last year, they do not feel that they are going too far in calling public attention to the comparative positions of both Offices.

ROYAL, FARMERS' AND GENERAL, FIRE, LIFE, AND HAIL-STORM INSURANCE COMPANY.	GENERAL HAILSTORM INSURANCE COMPANY, NORWICH, (Not the Norwich Union Insurance Office.)
Empowered by special Act of Parliament.	No Act of Parliament.
Subscribed capital, £500,000.	Nominal capital, £100,000.
Number of shareholders, registered, 1963, with names and addresses according to Act of Parliament.	Number of shareholders, not announced. Query, what number, their mames and addresses?
Four years' experience.	No experience.
Rates based upon the above-mentioned experience, but, if found too high, A RETURN WILL BE MADE EVERY THIRD YEAR.	Rates not founded on experience; and too low to meet losses on an average of seasons.
NO AVERAGE CLAUSE.	AVERAGE CLAUSE.
Full liability to the extent of £500,000.	Limited liability, confined to shares taken, however few.
Power given by the Act of Parliament by which parties insured may sue the the Company, in the name of the Managing Director, Secretary, or any one of the Directors.	No power to sue the Company in the name of the Managing Director, Secretary, or any one of the Directors; and, as the Shareholders are unknown, the insurers may have a difficulty in recovering their loses.
Shareholders, if sued, can recover contributions from their co-Shareholders.	Purchasers of Shares are individually liable to the £100,000, and if sued, have no power to recover contributions from their co-Shareholders. ANY CLAUSE INTRODUCED INTO A POLICY TO LIMIT LIABILITY IS INVALID unless the Company is empowered by Act of Parliament, giving Shareholders the power of obtaining contributions from their co-Shareholders.

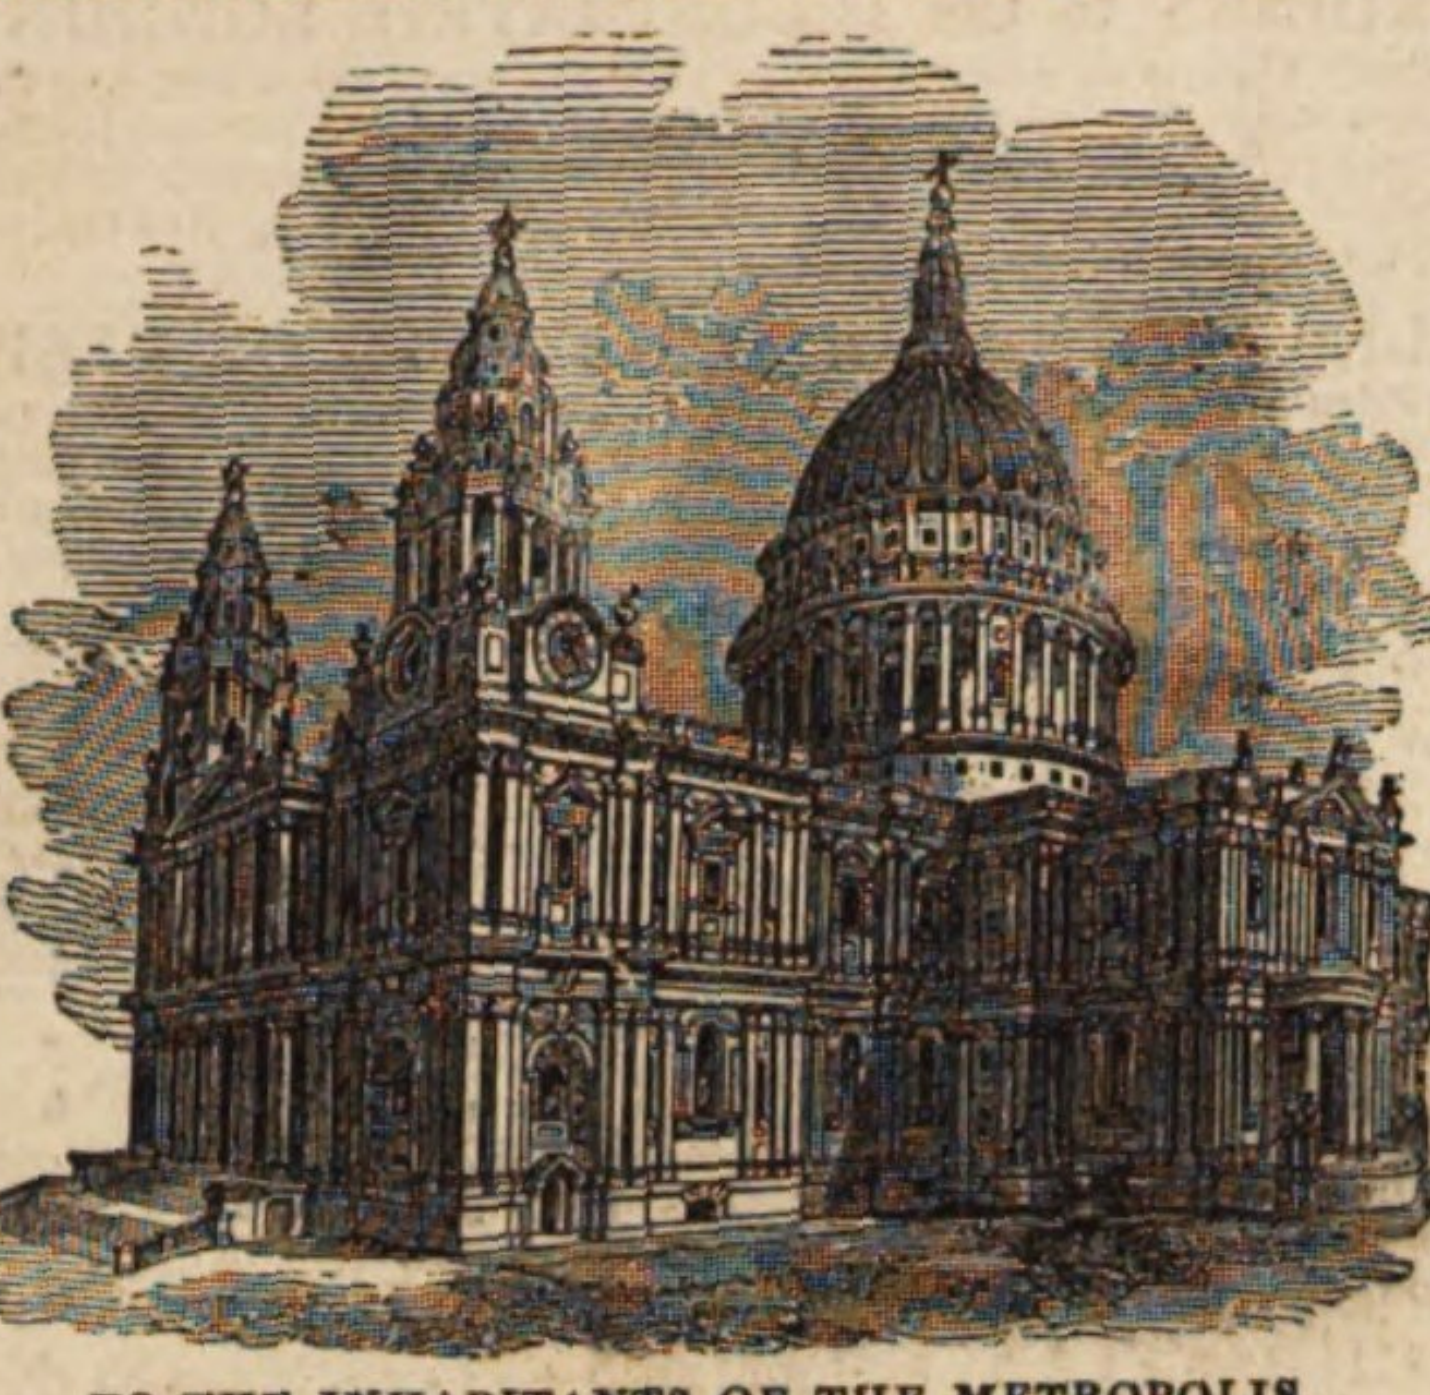
DAKIN AND COMPANY NUMBER ONE, ST. PAUL'S CHURCHYARD.



TO THE INHABITANTS OF THE METROPOLIS,
THE NOBLEMEN, GENTLEMEN, AND FAMILIES, THROUGHOUT THE UNITED KINGDOM.

TEAS.—On the 22nd of June, 1844, we opened the Extensive Premises, Number One, St. Paul's Churchyard, for the purpose of selling TEAS, COFFEES, SPICES, &c. On occasion of our doing so, we are anxious that the advantages we hold out, and the system generally, on which our business will be conducted, be clearly understood. It will be found, like all that is great and good, to be plain and simple, being divested of mystery, and made perfectly clear and manifest to all; and we will convince you, not by specious arguments, but by truth stamping our assertions, and our assertions being borne out by our actions, that it is the interest of all who want Good and Pure Teas to purchase from us. We will first establish the fact that we will sell none but Good Teas; secondly, we will pledge ourselves to keep none but Pure Teas; and thirdly, the prices of our Teas shall be on a scale of liberality hitherto unequalled.

Firstly, then, "We will sell none but Good Teas." We have capital to purchase good Teas; we have been long celebrated for our ability in discriminating good Teas; we have an anxious desire to select good Teas; we have an inflexible determination to supply good Teas; and we have, beyond all these powerful motives, our best interests to consult in selling good Teas.

Secondly, "We will pledge ourselves to keep none but Pure Teas," and we would particularly desire attention to this fact, the vast importance of which our subsequent remarks will clearly show.

We feel called upon, in justice to the inhabitants of this great Metropolis and the Kingdom at large, to subjoin the following statistical account of Three Millions Four Hundred and Seventeen Thousand Nine Hundred and Fifty Pounds of trash, dignified by the name of "Tea," that has been purchased at the tea auctions in Mincing-lane, and after passing through various hands, has at length reached the canisters of the retailer, and finally the teapot of the consumer.

Three hundred and fifty-seven thousand three hundred pounds, at one penny per pound,
Three hundred and ninety-five thousand five hundred pounds, at twopence per pound,
Six hundred and sixty-one thousand six hundred and seventy pounds, at threepence per pound,
Seven hundred and thirty thousand nine hundred and eighty pounds, at fourpence per pound,
Five hundred and seventy-seven thousand one hundred pounds, at fivepence per pound,
Four hundred and seventy-seven thousand pounds, at sixpence per pound,
Two hundred and eighteen thousand four hundred pounds, at sevenpence per pound
Have been sold from Jan. 1st 1843, to June 1844.

Add to these prices, two shillings and twopence farthing per pound (the duty payable to Government), and you will at once perceive the original value of these "Teas." To stay this gigantic evil, and to protect you from this long-hidden grievance, shall be our study, and, with your co-operation, will be our privilege. Our position in the markets enables us at once to possess ourselves of the best Teas imported; and we fearlessly assert that the prices of our Teas, coupled with the excellence of their quality, "shall be on a scale of liberality hitherto unequalled." We bring to our undertaking proved experience, discriminating judgment, and inflexibility of resolve. With integrity to uphold us, we pledge ourselves, by well-directed energy, untiring industry, and unvarying courtesy, to merit the patronage we now solicit.

Forty to fifty chests of different sorts of fine and rare Teas will be always open for inspection in the Upper Rotunda, where ladies and the heads of large establishments may make their selections, and give their orders apart from the ordinary bustle attendant on business.

COFFEES.

The following are the characteristics:—

JAVA.—An excellent Coffee, some of it fine, being full and mellow; an increasing supply from this island is probable, and very desirable. It is a Coffee well adapted for the consumers in this country. Its importation, however, into the English Markets has not been extensive, in consequence of restrictions imposed by the Dutch Government. The annual production of Coffee in the island is estimated at about One Million of Bags, of about one cwt. each. Price, 1s. 1d. to 1s. 6d. per pound.

CUBA.—This Coffee is chiefly fine, and also well adapted for the consumption of this country. Price, 1s. 3d. to 1s. 8d. per pound.

PORTO RICO.—The quantity of Coffee imported from this island is comparatively limited, but the quality of it is useful and good. Price, 1s 1½d. to 1s. 4d. per pound.

LA GUAYRA.—The removal of high protective duties has induced enterprising and intelligent individuals from England, to greatly improve the quality of this Coffee. A considerable portion of the supply, the last two or three years, has been sufficiently fine to come into competition with some of the finer qualities of Colonial Coffees. Price, 1s. 1½d. to 1s. 8d. per pound.

MOCHA.—This Coffee has for many years been very justly held in high estimation, the best qualities of it possessing a fulness and mellowness, particularly suitable to the English palate. It is to be hoped that the encouragement given, by the recent favourable measures of the Government, to the extension of the consumption of such an excellent beverage, will tend greatly to increase the importation of this favourite description. Price, 1s. 5d. to 2s. per pound.

JAMAICA.—This Coffee has been brought to a higher state of perfection than the Coffee of any other country. The best descriptions are particularly strong and fine flavoured; but there are a variety of qualities imported from this island, and great care and judgment are necessary in the selection. Price, 11d. to 2s. per pound.

CEYLON.—This is the most interesting and promising of all our Colonial Possessions. The cultivation of the Coffee-plant is rapidly extending, and some of the best qualities are already brought to a high state of perfection. Price, 9d. to 1s. 8d. per pound.

There are, in addition, importations of Coffee from Sumatra, Padang, Batavia, St. Domingo, Havannah, Brazil, Costa Rica, Berbice, Demerara, Dominica, Malabar, &c., too unimportant to describe, all of which, however, we supply.

The article of Coffee has for some years past attracted the attention both of the late and present Governments, their object being to benefit the public by introducing it at a cheaper rate. Mr Labouchere, the President of the Board of Trade in the late Government, devoted considerable time in endeavouring to alter the anomalous laws which existed in regard to Coffee, but strong opposing interests at that period prevented him from carrying his good intentions into effect. Sir Robert Peel, with great determination, notwithstanding the powerful interests arrayed against him, at once reduced, in his celebrated Tariff, the duty on Foreign Coffees from 1s. 3d. to 8d. per pound; and the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in his financial statement during the present session, announced a further reduction to 6d. per pound, saying, "It is most important to extend the use of a beverage which is a great luxury to all classes, and which, in addition, is found to supersede other beverages detrimental to health."

As the honour of being the first to afford the public the full benefit of these philanthropic measures has fallen upon ourselves, we confidently call upon her Majesty's Ministers, Noblemen, Statesmen, and all who desire to see the liberal intentions of Government carried out, and who wish to enjoy, in its greatest purity, so nutritious a beverage as Coffee, to confer on us their valuable support.

We have dwelt thus particularly on Teas and Coffees, not because these articles will be pre-eminently distinguished for their goodness and cheapness beyond Spices, &c., but as a mirror to show forth our system of business.

We have taken our Premises in the centre of the World's great Metropolis; we have endeavoured in every way to render them commodious, convenient, and comfortable; but we shall at all times be obliged to any friend who will enable us to amend whatever may be amiss—to right whatever may be wrong—to rectify, alter, and improve, as may be thought desirable.

Our site, as before mentioned, is No. 1, ST. PAUL'S CHURCHYARD, corner of Ludgate-street, a position with which all the inhabitants of this great city must be familiar, being also well known to the innumerable concourse of strangers who daily visit St. Paul's, and whose patronage, one and all, we earnestly invite.

We anxiously solicit the Noblemen, Gentlemen, and the Public at large, in the Country, as well as London, to profit by our undertaking; and we pledge ourselves that all Orders, accompanied by a respectable Reference or a Money-order, shall receive our prompt and careful attention.

It now only remains for us to invite you, in return for having consulted your comfort, convenience, and advantage, to do us the favour of testing our assertions.

Your obedient servants, DAKIN and COMPANY,

TEA MERCHANTS, No. 1, ST. PAUL'S CHURCHYARD.

⁂ Our Vans will deliver Teas, Coffees, &c., within 8 Miles of St. Paul's, in all directions.
June 17 1844.

A CHOP or STEAK COOKED in FIVE MINUTES WITHOUT TROUBLE or EXPENCE! or a DINNER COOKED WITHOUT LIGHTING a FIRE.—Gentlemen going abroad, Captains, Emigrants, Families living in apartments, Bachelors, and Pic-nic Parties, should visit the LIGHT-HOUSE, 201, Strand, where may be seen the greatest variety of curious and portable Apparatus for Cooking, and every domestic purpose, &c. &c. The original and only Manufactory for the best instantaneous lights. JONES and Co., LIGHT-HOUSE, 201, STRAND.

INCOME WITHOUT RISK.—The LONDON GENUINE TEA COMPANY, Established November 5, 1818, at 23, Ludgate-hill, are now filling up their list of Agents; and persons desirous of such an appointment, by which many have derived considerable incomes, without risk, during the last twenty-six years, are requested to apply to the Company, at their Warehouses, 2, Laurence Pountney-hill, London.

REFORM your TAILORS' BILLS.—Fashionable DRESS COATS, 38s. and 47s. 6d.; frock coats, silk facings, 42s. and 50s.; new pattern summer trousers, 10s. 6d., or three pair for 30s.: splendid summer waistcoats, 7s., or three for 20s.; suit of livery, 63s.; ladies' elegant riding habits, 63s. and 84s.—DOUDNEY and SON, 49, Lombard-street (established 1784), celebrated for good and cheap boys' clothing.

GOOD TEAS, in 6lb. bags, or small chests of 35lb., at 2s. 10d., 3s. 4d., and 3s. 10d. per lb.; Young Hyson 3s. By the change of wind millions of pounds of tea have arrived, and the merchants, consequently, accept lower prices. The above being trade quotations, families will find that they save considerably at each year's end by constantly dealing with the East India Tea Company.—Offices, 9, Great St. Helen's Church-yard, Bishopsgate-street.

CHASTON'S PATENT INDIA RUBBER ELASTIC CORN PLAISTERS are generally admitted to be the most unique and best to eradicate either Hard or Soft CORNS. From their elastic quality, they can be worn with perfect ease, however tight the boot or shoe fits the foot. Invented and sold by B. CHASTON, Chemist, Watton, Norfolk. N.B.—On receipt of thirteen postage stamps (free), a box will be forwarded (also free) to any part of the Kingdom.

EMPLOYMENT.—Persons having a little time to spare, are apprised that Agents continue to be appointed in London and Country Towns by the EAST INDIA TEA COMPANY, for the sale of their celebrated TEAS (Offices, 9, Great St. Helen's Churchyard, Bishopsgate-street). They are packed in showy leaden canisters, from an ounce to a pound, with the prices and weight marked on each packet, and but little trouble is occasioned by the sale; the license is only 11s. per annum, and many, during the last nineteen years, have realised considerable incomes by the Agency, without 1s. let or loss. Application to be made (if by letter, post paid) as above.

THE BEST ENGLISH WATCHES.—A. B. SAVORY and SONS, Watchmakers, 9, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank, request the attention of purchasers to their stock of London-made PATENT LEVER WATCHES, which are manufactured by themselves in their own house. In silver cases, with the detached escapement and jewelled, the prices are four and a half guineas, six, and eight guineas each; or in gold cases, 10, 12, 14, and 16 guineas each. The very large stock offered for selection includes every description, enabling a customer to select that which is more particularly adapted to his own use.

NEW PATENTS.—BROCKEDON'S IMPROVED STOPPERS.—This important Invention, a Substitute for Corks and Bungs, has, by new and Great Improvements, become a pure, imperishable, and perfect means of preserving, for any length of time, Wine, Beer, Spirits, &c. They are cheap and easily applied, and the appearance which they now have of fine Cork has removed the prejudice against their former dark colour. Also, DECANTER STOPPERS, to keep Wine which is in daily use in perfect condition.—C. MACINTOSH and Co., 19, Walbrook, London, and 22, York-street, Manchester.

WOLLASTON'S PATENT GELATINE, for immediately making Jellies or Blanc-mange, being quickly dissolved in boiling water. It is of equal strength with the finest Russian Isinglass, and perfectly free from any unpleasant taste or smell, requiring less flavouring than any other preparation of Gelatine or Isinglass, being a perfectly pure, colourless, and soluble substance. For Jellies it will not be found necessary to use eggs, as passing through a flannel bag is sufficient. Invalids will find this a very nourishing and valuable restorative, from the great facility and readiness with which it is used, and not being liable to become sour so soon as isinglass.—Manufactured and Sold by EDWARD L. WOOLLASTON, Dover; and retailed by all respectable Druggists, Grocers, and others, at 8s. per pound.

FOR STOPPING DECAYED TEETH.—Price 4s. 6d. Patronised by her Majesty, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent. Mr. THOMAS'S SUCCEDANEUM, for Stopping Decayed Teeth, however large the cavity. It is placed in the tooth in a soft state, without any pressure or pain, and will remain firm in the tooth for many years, rendering extraction unnecessary, arresting the further progress of decay. All persons can use Mr. Thomas's Succedaneum themselves with ease, as full directions are enclosed.—Prepared only by Mr THOMAS, Surgeon-Dentist, 64, Berners-street, Oxford-street. Price 4s. 6d., and can be sent by post. Mr. THOMAS continues to supply the Loss of Teeth on his new system of Self-adhesion, without springs or wires. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation whatever. At home from Eleven till Four.

TO LADIES.—ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, for the SKIN and COMPLEXION. This Royally Patronized and universally adopted Specific is composed chiefly of extracts from the most rare flowers and herbs of an eastern clime, and perfectly free from all mineral admixture. It exerts the most soothing, gentle, cooling, and purifying action on the skin; and most effectually dissipates all Redness, Tan, Pimples, Blotches, Spots, Freckles, and other Cutaneous Visitations. The radiant bloom it imparts to the Cheek, and the softness and delicacy it induces on the Hands, Arms and Neck, render it indispensable to every toilet. It affords immediate relief in cases of Sunburn, Stings of Insects, or incidental Inflammation. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle, duty included.

CAUTION.—Many Shopkeepers vend the most spurious trash under the title of "Genuine" Kalydor, containing mineral astringents utterly ruinous to the complexion, and by their repellant action endangering health. It is therefore imperative on purchasers to see that the words "ROWLAND'S KALYDOR" are on the Wrapper; and A. ROWLAND & SON, 20, Hatton Garden, engraved (by Authority) on the Government Stamp affixed on each bottle. ⁂ All others are Fraudulent Counterfeits!

SUPERIORITY AND ECONOMY IN YOUNG GENTLEMEN'S DRESS.
"That only is cheap which is excellent."—Athenæum.

THE SUFFOLK FIRES.

Whatever may be hereafter discovered to be the cause of the evil, it is certain that the crime of incendiarism still prevails among the peasantry of the agricultural district of England that lies almost the nearest to the largest and wealthiest city of the world. When it first exhibited itself, it was thought to be the outbreak of political feeling; but that opinion has long been abandoned as untenable; the excitement of the two years preceding the Reform struggle has long since passed away; the farm labourers are now far more anxious to obtain Bread than the Franchise, and more desirous of escaping the inside of the Union-house than gaining the privilege of entering the Polling-booth. But still the dreadful symptom continues; of that there has been no abatement; and while it does continue there can be no doubt of the existence of a fearful mass of discontent and suffering, goading on to crime. The worst of the evil is, that what are the faults of a system are revenged as if they were the acts of individuals: laws oppress or produce oppression, and the result is only seen in the blazing stacks and barns of individuals, most of whom had but little share in making the laws, and are compelled by position to be the instruments for carrying them out. It is a hard case, certainly, when the law thrusts on a man an office that exposes him to the hatred of those he dwells among, and who wreak their hatred by that revenge which has been called a sort of "wild justice," and is certainly as blind and undiscriminating as the more legitimate Justice of mankind is represented to be. We perceive by the reports from the seat of agricultural discontent, that a large number of the fires have occurred on the property of farmers and gentlemen holding the office of Poor-law Guardians, and as to many of whom, it is stated distinctly that they are kind-hearted men and good masters, giving as much employment and as high wages as any persons in their neighbourhood. But they are the officers of a bad law, and that neutralises all estimable personal qualities.

We are beginning, thanks to the exertions of the Press, to get a clearer idea of the causes of this unhealthy and deplorable state of things, and in acknowledging its efforts, we cannot take a fitter opportunity of giving a short estimate of the immense advantages we possess in an engine of inquiry that combines close investigation of causes with the power of spreading far and wide the results it arrives at. It is only by the union of the two powers that opinion can be created.

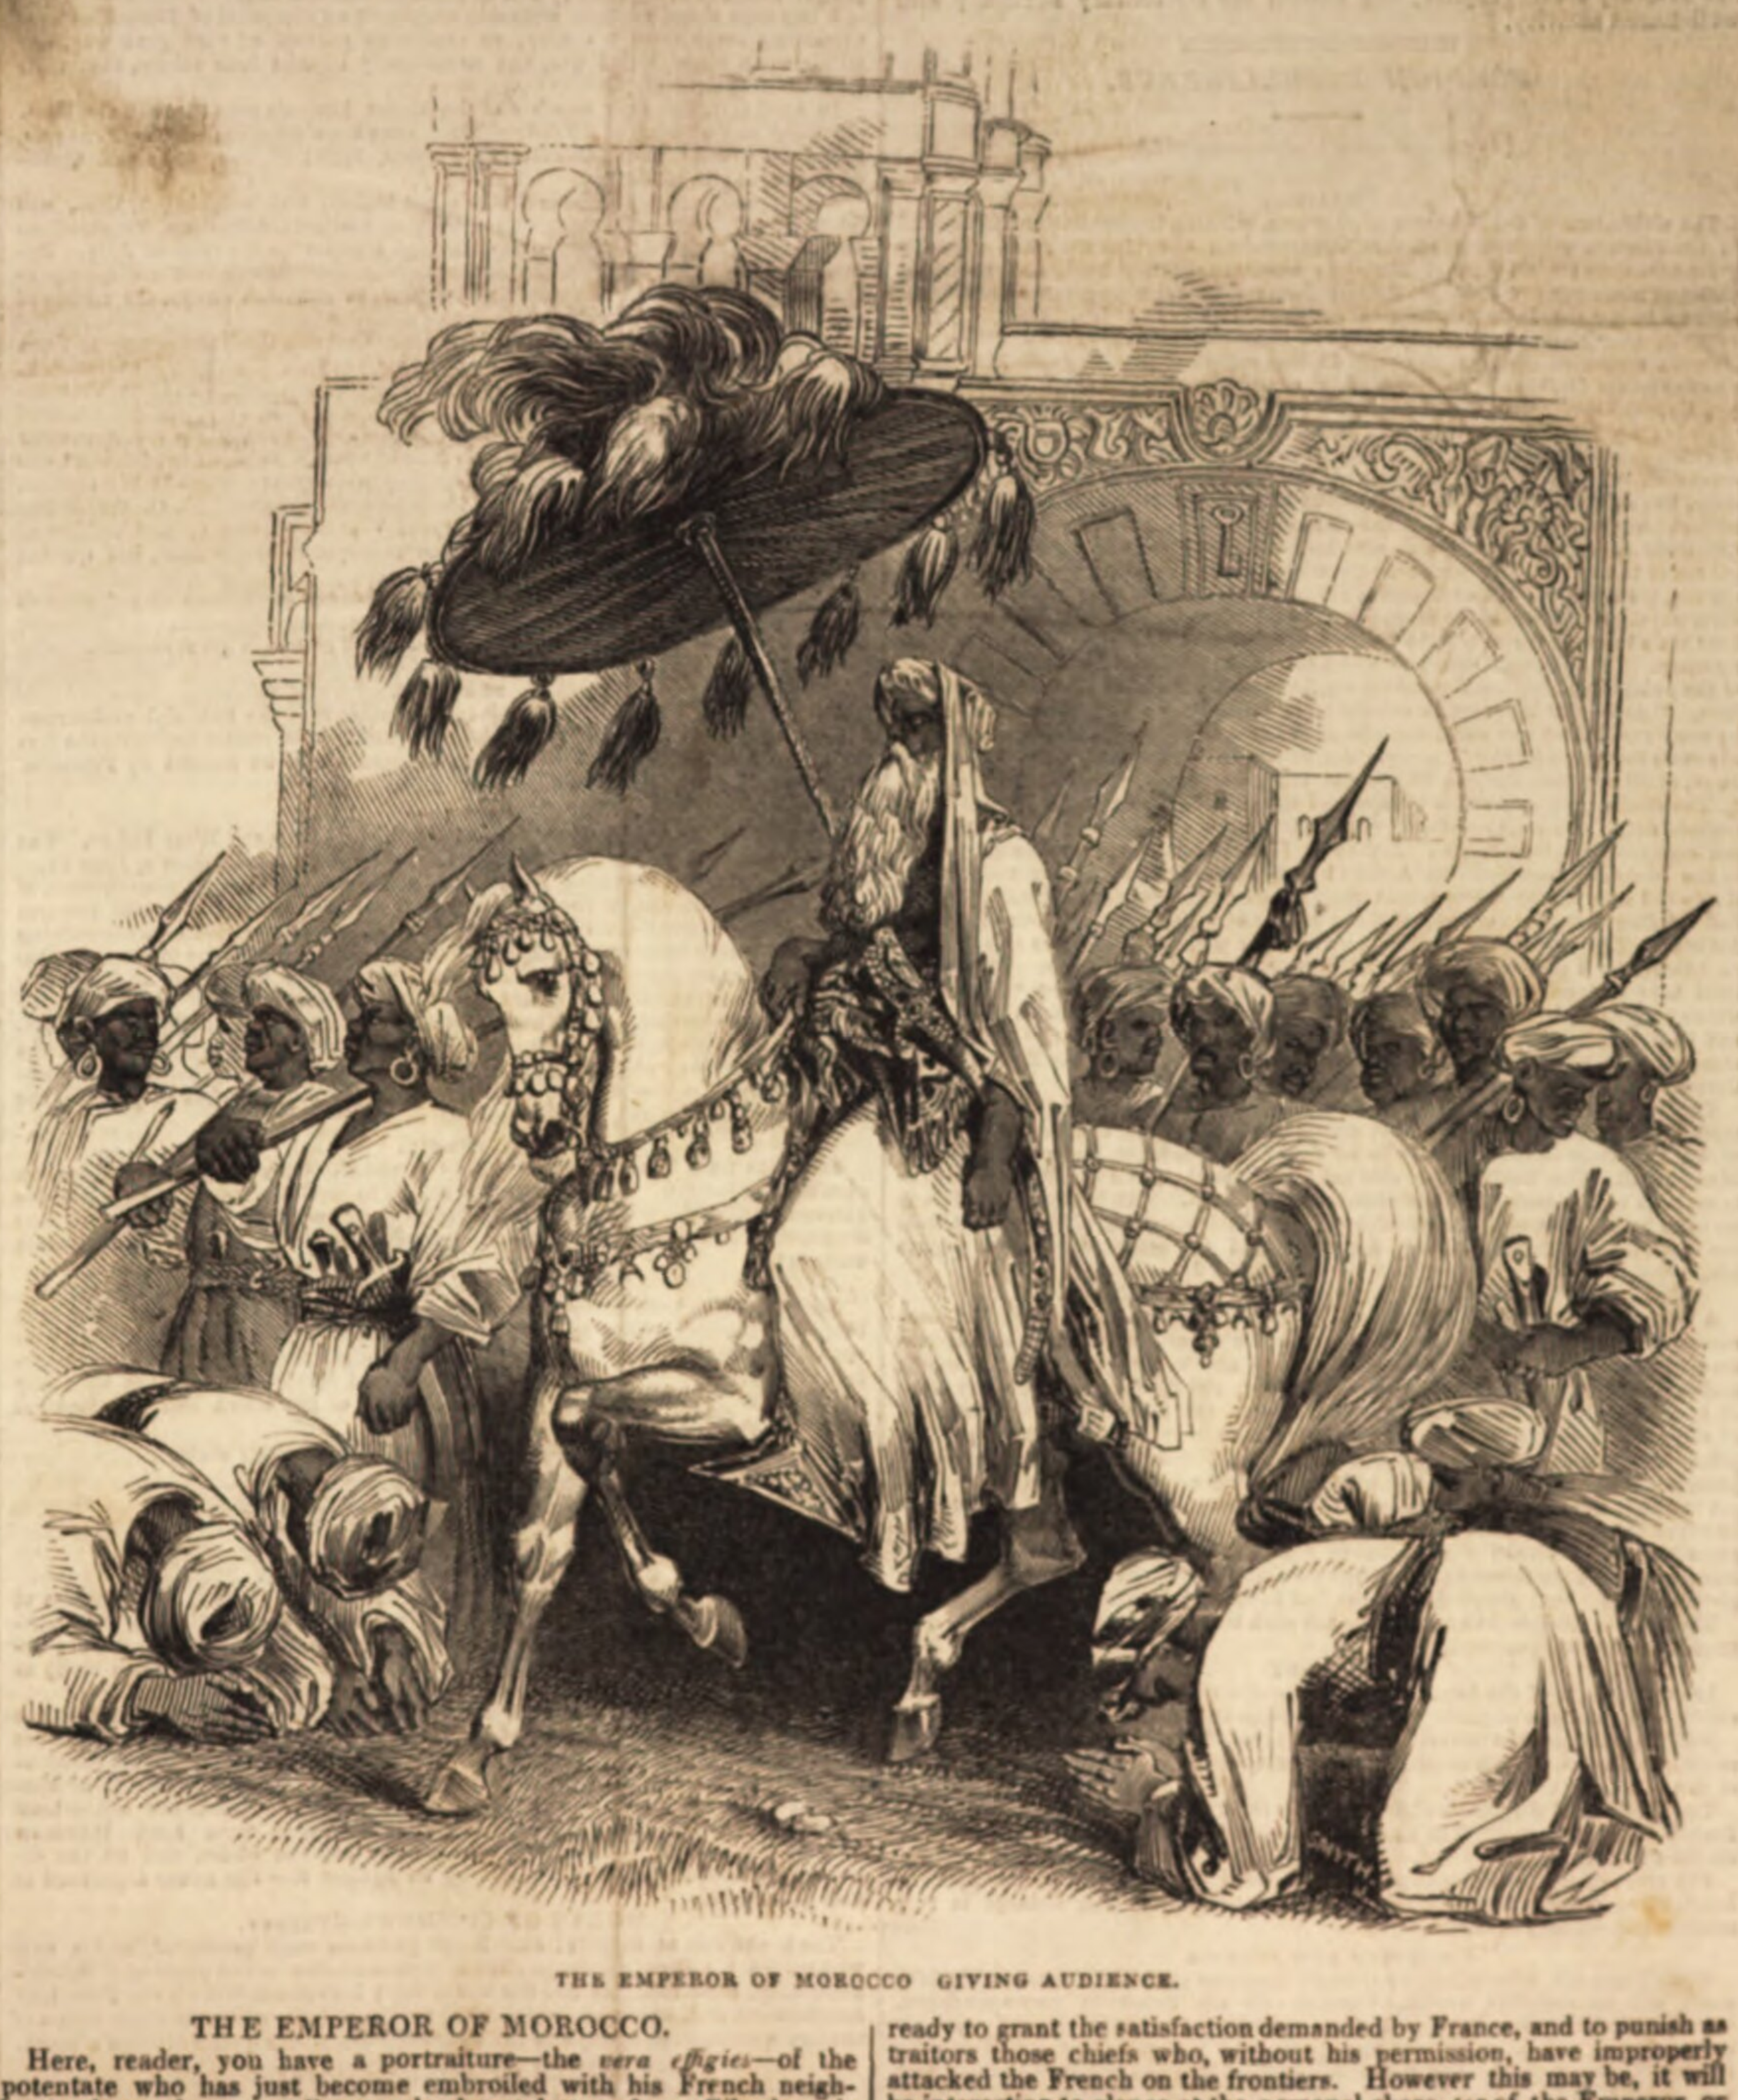
But when we consider the number of abuses exposed, and of evils detected by the influence of the press, one gloomy reflection at least comes over us—how many more abuses—how many more evils—grew, flourished, and oppressed mankind, when that power did not exist—and long after it existed, indeed—but when it was monopolised by learning, and not yet applied to the affairs of daily life?

The time when it was so applied can be scarcely fixed; the power developed itself gradually; its capabilities were not at first perceived, nor could the eyes of men recognise the forest that was hidden in the cup of the acorn. But as soon as men do feel its vast powers, and put them in operation, the disappearance of the mists of night before the beams of the morning sun is scarcely less rapid and not more complete than the vanishing of the tyrannies and oppressions of the earth before the increase of information and discussion. A slight glance at the past and the present will be enough to satisfy the reader of the justice of the assertion.

The modern press disseminates facts, which are events, and promulgates opinions, generally conclusions, of which those events are the premises, or comments on the public conduct of the public men by whom those events were influenced. Where every reader is more or less of a critic, and has access to more sources of information than one, the facts must be correctly stated and the conclusions drawn rationally, or at least with a show of reason; errors and mistakes are unavoidable, and there is occasionally some allowance to be made for the colouring given by party feeling, but wilful perversions of fact are, we believe, in the respectable portion of the press, both daily and weekly, of rare occurrence.

Under a despotic government such an engine could not exist; the system of Russia, for instance, is one of utter secrecy; it is not allowed even to circulate the intelligence of ordinary events. The most dreadful calamities may occur, attended with great loss of life, but they would scarcely be heard of beyond the immediate spot where they occurred. The Marquis de Custine states that at one of the grand fêtes of the Emperor, a large number of peasants were drowned in crossing a lake, almost in sight of the revellers, but it was forbidden to converse about it! What a strange proceeding would a coroner's inquest appear to those brought up under such a system!

The Imperial power being there considered all-sufficient for the remedy of evils and disasters, it is deemed superfluous for the people to know anything of the affairs of the community. Here we see the exact reverse of this state of things; the "ordinary channels of information," as they are called in Parliamentary language, are often so much better instructed than the Government, that the Executive is compelled to adopt a line of action by the force of that public opinion which has been created by the Journalist. When the riots of "Rebecca" first startled the country, they seemed inexplicable to that great mass of Englishmen who know about as much of the state of South Wales as they do of Tartary. The revelations of the Times in some degree explained the matter, and proved that the Welch farmers had really something to complain of. The result, after months of riot and tumult, was a Commission of Inquiry, and we have just had brought into the House of Commons, a bill to cosolidate the different Turnpike Trusts of South Wales, and place them under a control that will prevent both the abuses of the local boards and the discontent they occasioned. We have another instance of the salutary power of the press in the exertions of the same paper with respect to the state of the peasantry of Suffolk and the eastern part of England. There was a general idea as to the cause of these fires, that they were the reckless acts of ignorance driven wild by want. But we have now a clearer notion of the matter, and it has at least been proved that in one point the new Poor-law has been strained beyond its intention, and used illegally and oppressively. Those labourers who refused to accept work at any price an employer chose to offer—in many cases too little to support life—were refused relief at the poor-house because they could not produce a ticket signed by these employers, on the production of which the relief depended. Sir J. Graham has in his place in Parliament declared this practice illegal, and we have no doubt steps will be taken to suppress it. Here is one good result, the forerunner we hope of others, which will testify as this has done to the good effect of "inquiry." More attention than usual has been this week turned to these statements, by a very extraordinary explosion of feeling from a peer—Lord Wodehouse—in the Lords, on Monday evening. He declared that all the statements were calumnies, and sneered somewhat at "gentlemen of the press—as they call themselves." Yet the correspondent of the Times did no more than make known the mournful fact that a kind disposition and all the qualities of a good master give no exemption from the ravages of the midnight fire-raiser; the inquiry, as far as the Times was concerned, had closed, but in consequence of Lord Wodehouse' rather intemperate attack the public is to have, it seems, a special report on that district with which his lordship is more particularly connected.



THE EMPEROR OF MOROCCO GIVING AUDIENCE.

THE EMPEROR OF MOROCCO.

Here, reader, you have a portraiture—the vera effigies—of the potentate who has just become embroiled with his French neighbours, but who, according to the latest letters from Gibraltar, is ready to grant the satisfaction demanded by France, and to punish as traitors those chiefs who, without his permission, have improperly attacked the French on the frontiers. However this may be, it will be interesting to glance at the personal character of the Emperor, or Sultan, as he is styled by travellers, upon whose conduct in this affair probably rests, in some degree, the peace of Europe.

Muley Abderrahman, then, the Emperor, is between fifty and sixty years of age, robust, and of active habit, but of brutal and cruel character, whilst he possesses a more despotic power than any other even of Mahometan potentates. He is not even held in check by a mufti, an ulema, or even a council or divan. He is supposed to possess a divine character, and to be superior to all law.

Yet, this monarch must pay respect to long-established usages and institutions; must not invade the domestic privacy of any of his subjects; and must even give public audience four times a week to administer justice to all who may apppeal to him from the cadi, or local governor. On these occasions he appears on horseback, in the superb state shown in our engraving, in an open interior court of the palace. He is mounted on a snow-white stead, which, with arched crest and measured steps, is moving majestically under his Sheerefian burden. The colour of the horse is supposed to indicate his Sublime Highness's humour; for white is the symbol of peace and goodwill; black, that of hatred and war; chesnut, that of displeasure, &c. The bridle and head-trappings are superb, being of green silk richly embroidered in gold, wherein is portrayed the sacred emblem of Solomon's seal; and in the hollow of the neck is a small pouch of scarlet leather, wherein is held a portion of the earth of the holy Dreer's tomb; and by its side, in strange conjunction, the polished tooth of some enormous boar, an infallible remedy against the evil eye. The saddle, which reposes on a housing of orange damask, is quilted in green, having a poitrel and girths of the stoutest silk, interwoven with gold thread. The ample stirrups are of massive gold, beautifully chased.

The Sultan's simple dress forms a striking contrast with the richness of his horse-furniture. He wears a caftan of white kerseymere, with the Moorish girdle of white leather, embroidered with pale blue silk, fastened by a plain silver buckle. A muslin turban with the silk tuft of royalty, crowns his Imperial head; and over this hangs gracefully, in full broad folds, a transparent haik of the finest fabric of Fas. His legs are equipped in boots of white morocco leather, curiously worked in devices with silk thread. Above his head is borne a very large umbrella, which is in Morocco to this day the ensign of royalty, and still continues to be in various nations of the East. The suitors prostrate themselves on the ground, and the entire scene of barbaric state is accurately shown in our illustration.

The Sultan's favourite mode of gaining the objects of his ambition is by poison. It appears that he poisoned Solyman Abderrahman, his predecessor and cousin; and a letter from Tangier, published in the Algerie, states, that since the accession of the present Emperor to the throne of Morocco, he has before his eyes the crime by which he ascended it. The fear of poison incessantly presents itself to his imagination. No one can approach him except his son; he alone is permitted to serve him, and he must first taste each dish. Sidi-Mohammed, the Sultan's eldest son, was for some time the guardian of his father, but it is now his youngest son, Monly Ali, who fills that office. These two sons are born of the same mother, an Englishwoman, called in the language of the country Rahmouna. Sidi Mohammed, the presumptive heir to the throne, is a man of about 36 years of age. His blue eyes and fair hair betray his semi-Britannic origin. He replaces his father on all important occasions. It is said that he commanded the Moroquin troops at the battle of Lalla Magrania on the 30th of May. He had for a long time maintained a direct communication with Abd-el-Kader, whom he encouraged in his resistance to the French. The Moroquins assert that but for him the ex-Emir would have made his submission several years since. Every time that a letter arrived in Abd-el-Kader's camp from the Prince of Morocco it gave rise to great rejoicings.

We may here mention two interesting works in connexion with the present position of France and Morocco, which have just been issued. These are a reprint of Mr. Hay's very interesting account of Western Barbary, in Murray's "Colonial and Home Library;" and a Map of the North Coast of Africa, including Morocco and Algiers, with the Coast of France and Spain. In the latter, the publisher, Mr. Wild, her Majesty's Geographer, has shown his customary accuracy and well-timed activity.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Paris, July 9.

SPAIN.

The ultimatum of the Emperor of Morocco, refusing the mediation of England in his dispute with Spain, reached Barcelona on the 27th ult., and caused a great sensation; a Council of Ministers was immediately held, and the most vigorous measures decided on. Amongst others, orders were given for the Solurano to follow the Isabella war steamer to the coast of Africa. On the 7th of July the four Ministers who had come to Barcelona left for Madrid. General Narvaez remained with the Queen. It was reported that General Mazarredo was to replace Narvaez as Minister of War, and that General Oraa was to be the new Captain-General of Madrid. The tone of the Madrid press on the Morocco affair is truly ridiculous. The Castellano says it is astonished that "this Captain of Pirates should venture to be insolent towards the nation which for so many years dictated laws to the whole world, and which, whatever may be its present state, has sixteen millions of inhabitants, and, in the late war, humiliated the hitherto unconquered eagles of the first captain of the age." The Echo de Comercio is more reasonable; it asks how the money is to be found for the expences of the war? This pertinent question the Ministers will find it difficult to answer, for a country whose finances are in such a state that to avoid the immediate payment of some of its most pressing debts the Government agrees to give 1000 reals in stock for every 350 reals of debt, should only think of war as a last resource. I may as well here give you a few of the articles for the reorganization of the public finance promulgated by royal decree on the 26th of June, at Barcelona. "Article 1. The credits arising from advances to the Government shall be converted into 3 per cent. consols, at the rate of 1000 reals of stock for every 350 reals recovered by the treasury. An account shall be made up to the 30th of June, of all interests due, which interest shall be added to the capital. Article 2. The drafts drawn upon the receivers of revenues beyond sea, the floating centralised debt, and bills special in virtue of the law of 29th of March, 1842, are not comprised in this decree. Article 3. In case any of the parties interested in the contracts mentioned in Article 1 shall refuse to accept this conversion, they shall wait till the Government shall have laid the matter before the Cortes, and the Cortes shall have regulated the means of repaying them their advances. Article 4. The sinking fund shall immediately prepare certificates transferable to bearers for 3 per cent. stock to be applied for this conversion. This stock shall bear interest from the 1st of July next, whatever may be the date at which they shall be delivered to the parties interested." Articles 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10 merely regulate the mode of conversion. Article 11 says, "At the next session the Government shall submit the provisions of the present decree to the Cortes."

The interior of the country is, to outward appearances, tranquil, but I am most confidently informed that vast conspiracies are afloat, and that at the head of an Espartero insurrection are to be found such men as Colonel Primm and Mendizabal. The Carlists are also actively at work—their agents overrun the mountains of Catalonia, and the whole of La Mancha. The health of Isabella is far from being satisfactory, and although not in immediate danger, great fears are entertained that at no very distant period she must retire from public life.

ITALY.

A letter from Smyrna of the 9th says, "that the Italian refugees had succeeded in engaging in their revolutionary plans a certain number of Austrian seamen, and even the son of Admiral Bandeira and a son of Admiral Paulucci, and some officers. Their design was to seize on the Austrian cruisers and some of Lloyd's steamers, and with them to put into the ports of the Adriatic and of the Mediterranean, to excite the populations to revolt. The measures of the police caused the project to miscarry. A certain Miciarelli, who had been compromised in the events of 1831 had been sent to Smyrna to watch the refugees. He got intimate with them, entered into the plot, and even organised it, and then betrayed the fools who trusted him." A letter from Venice, of the 24th June, reports, "that several Italian refugees, amongst whom was the son of Admiral Bandeira, had been taken by an Austrian vessel, and carried into Trieste. It was given as certain that Admiral Bandeira had been placed on half-pay."

The town of Palestrina has been visited with three shocks of earthquake; fortunately no person perished.

GERMANY.

In consequence of the improved service of the steam-packets, letters are now only thirty-six hours on their way from London to Cologne.

Notwithstanding the elevated dues paid for Russian passports, there have never come into Germany so many Russians, particularly of the higher classes, as this year.

The Duchess of Angoulême left Goritz on the 27th ultimo for the Chateau of Frohsdorf, near Vienna. The Duke de Bordeaux was expected at the Chateau on the 4th instant.

The crops of more than 100 farmers have been destroyed in the commune of Landighem, Eastern Flanders, by a violent hail-storm. The damage is very considerable—nearly £10,000.

MOROCCO AND ALGERIA.

Great hopes are entertained by General Bugeaud that the dispute with Morocco will be amicably settled, founded on the following correspondence. "From Marshal Bugeaud to El Guennaoni, June 17, 1844.—In all your preceding letters you accuse us of having violated your territory, of having infringed the law of good fellowship which reigned between us, which means that you attribute to us all that has been done, and that we have nothing to reproach you with. I am not habituated to these diplomatic artifices, I go straightforward and candidly to the point. We wish for nothing that belongs to you, but we desire that you should no longer receive Abd-el-Kader and afford him succour; reviving him when he is almost exhausted, and then sending him forth anew against us. This is the war which you have carried on against us for the last two years. We desire that you will cause to retire to the western inner parts of the empire, La Deyra, the chiefs who have served Abd-el-Kader; that you cause to be dispersed the regular troops, the Goum and Asker; that you admit no more the tribes who migrate from our territory, and that you immediately send away those who have taken refuge with you. We bind ourselves under the same obligations towards you, if any such occasion should arise. On these conditions we will be your friends, we will favour your commerce and the government of Moley Abd-el-Rahmin as much as it shall be in our power. If you wish to act contrary to this, we shall be your enemies. Answer me immediately, and without evasion, for that I do not understand." "From El Guennaoni to Marshal Bugeaud Jan. 18.—I have received your letter and have understood its contents. Know that I cannot approve of misunderstanding between us even although the provocation should be on your side. But we cannot go back upon what has passed, for to God belongs the directions of all things. You say that you are disposed to friendship and peace. So are we, and besides I have not received permission to go to war. We must not, therefore, on either side, regard as an inexcusable grievance such or such a fact contrary to peace, so long as friendship shall exist between us, and maintain our old conditions which were established by our ancestors, and have been respected by their descendants. God does what he chooses and desires. I will not in any way depart from these conditions; on the contrary, by their execution will be confirmed friendship, peace, and the happiness of our people."

The dispatches of Marshal Bugeaud, dated the 24th and 27th do not announce any new fact of much importance. In the letter dated Djenuia-el-Ghazoonat, he states that Abd-el-Kader had returned to a distance of seven or eight leagues from Ouehda, after having performed a razzia upon the tribe of the Hamiames Cheragas, on the pretext of their having refused to follow him.

The Pluton steamer arrived on the 23rd ult., before Tangiers, with despatches for the Consul of France, and the same day left for Oran to join the Prince de Joinville. At the moment of her departure from Tangiers, the Consul-General of England at that place was preparing to set out for Larrache Mogador, and Morocco. It was generally supposed that the journey of the Consul related to the affairs between Spain and Morocco, and that at the same time he proposed to recommend to Muley Abderrhaman, to employ all his authority to put an end to the armed incursions of his subjects on the other side of the French frontier.

FRANCE.

The Dotation question is at an end; it will not be presented to the Chambers, but unfortunately the Opposition and Legitimists have made it the pretext for many unpleasant disclosures.

The Moniteur has just published the general results of the commerce of France, during the year 1843. If they be compared with those of preceding years, it will be found that commerce was more active in 1843 than in 1842, but not so much as in 1841. The general commerce, which had amounted to 2082 millions in 1842, and 2186 in 1841, was 2178 in 1843. The imports in 1843 have exceeded what they were during the two preceding years, but the exports were only 992 millions, in place of 1065, which they reached in 1841. The exportations of wines and brandies have gradually fallen off. The export of silk tissues, which had risen to 161 millions in 1841, amounted to only 128 millions in 1843. The exports of cotton have come down from 104 millions to 82. It is only the exports of woollen tissues which have presented an increase, as from 64 millions in 1841, to 79 millions in 1843.

Admiral Turpin, the Maritime Prefêt of Toulon, has been appointed to succeed M. Leray in the command of the naval station of the Levant.

M. Charles Lafitte has been again returned as Deputy for Louvier; he had 331 votes, his opponent only six.

We continue to receive distressing accounts from various parts of France, particularly the south, of the damage done by the recent storms. In many places the crops are laid by the heavy rains to such an extent, that little hope is entertained of saving them. The electric fluid fell on Saturday at Batignolles (suburb of Paris), and killed three persons and a horse.

The following are the number of passengers and the amount of receipts of the Paris railways during the month of June:—

	Passengers.		Receipts.
Saint Germain..................	132,508	..	133,599f.
Versailles, Right Bank..........	165 928	..	196 903f.
——— Left Bank............	103,4 0	..	117 551f.
Orleans and Corbeil	148 258	..	645 289f.
Rouen	76,245	..	679 921f.

The Havre Regatta, under the patronage of the Prince de Joinville, will take place on the 28th and 29th of the present month. There are to be six races each day, the prizes for which amount to 7200 francs in money, and 500 francs in plate. Boats of every country will be permitted to contend.

A few days since, as some workmen employed on the canal of Marseilles were extracting stone from a quarry, an enormous portion of rock gave way, and falling upon them, killed five, and so seriously injured four others, that their lives are despaired of.

In April last, the daily number of legitimist journals sent through the Post-office did not amount to 10 000. They were thus divided:—Echo Français, 2230; La France, 1110; Gazette de France, 2793; Nation, 485; and Quotidienne, 2705; in all 9325.

A sturgeon, measuring seven feet eight inches, and weighing 275lbs., was lately caught in the river Loire, at Bellevue, opposite St. Sebastian. Preparations are being made for illuminating the Champs Elysées for the fêtes of July. Pyramids are to be raised at certain distances from the Place de la Concorde up to the Barrière de l'Etoile, on which will appear, in coloured lamps, the names of all the departments of France.

We have little fresh in the musical circles. Carlotta Grisi has recovered from her serious indisposition, and will re-appear towards the end of the month. Eugéne Garcia has been engaged for the Opera Comique. Pauline Viardôt-Garcia is expected in Paris, from Vienna, about the 8th of July. The celebrated Louis Spohr arrived in Paris last week. Anna Thillon made her re-appearance at the Opera Comique in Cagliostro. The benefit of Taglioni produced 21,000 francs. Madlle. Sabine Heintetter is singing with great success at Wiesbaden. Dreyschock has quitted the banks of the Rhine for Prague. M. G. Preyer has been named Director of the Conservatory of Vienna. Donizetti, the brother of the celebrated Maestro and leader of the musique to the Sultan, has quitted Constantinople for Vienna.

Two new German operas have been brought out at Brunswick; "Pino di Porto," by George Müller, and the "Substitute," by Wernthal. At Weimar, the "Emancipation of Women," by Chelard, has met with great success.

PORTUGAL.

Accounts from Lisbon, to the 2nd instant, state that the financial embarrassments of the Government have increased so much as to render probable the formation of a new Ministry, which it was thought would be headed by Palmella. There is no other political news.

WEST INDIES.

The royal mail steam-packet Thames has arrived from the West Indies. The new dates are—Jamaica, June 6; Barbadoes, June 8; St. Thomas's, June 14.

Much excitement prevailed among the English at Mexico, in consequence of an English gentleman, of the name of Lloyd, having been shot through the arm by one of the sentinels on duty at the Palace, for no other cause than his walking on the pavement before the Palace—a walk not prohibited to the Mexicans. Our Minister, Mr. Bankhead, had with great promptitude interfered, and the soldier, as well as the officer on guard, had been placed in arrest.

There have been some disturbances of a serious character at Dominica, originating in opposition, on the part of the black population, to the census which was ordered to be taken on the 3rd of June, and which they imagined to be a preliminary step to re-establishing slavery. About 100 persons were in gaol, on the departure of the packet, waiting their trial.

BRAZIL.

Accounts from Rio to May 12 bring the speech of the Emperor of Brazil on opening the session. The topics relate chiefly to local matters. The speech also announces that the rebellion in Rio Grande is not entirely suppressed, but that an amnesty had been granted to all concerned in the Paulo and Minas Geraes outbreaks.

UNITED STATES.

Accounts have been received from New York to the 17th ultimo. The only subject of interest relates to the Philadelphia riots. The Grand Jury had presented their report relating to them. Their origin they attribute to the imperfect manner in which the laws had been executed by the authorities of both city and county. They returned 161 true bills out of 200 which had been brought before them.

The money market is described to be in an unsatisfactory state.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Friday.

In answer to a question from the Earl of Minto, with regard to the affairs of Morocco, the Earl of Haddington said, that her Britannic Majesty's Government had sent to Morocco such forces as they thought the circumstances required, and with regard to every other station, they had such forces ready as were necessary for the protection of British interests.

Lord Campbell then moved the third reading of the Law of Libel Act Amendment Bill. The purpose of the bill is to extend the provisions of the act proposed last session as to private libels and slander, and Government prosecutions for the same offences, by admitting defendants to prove the truth of allegations as a justification.—The Lord Chancellor opposed the bill.—Lord Brougham advocated the measure.—After a speech from Lord Denman against the bill, most of the Opposition peers left the house, and on the division, the measure was thrown out by 33 against 3.—The house adjourned at half-past eight.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Friday.

The house met at four o'clock. Some petitions were presented, and a new writ moved for Birmingham to elect a representative in the place of J. Scholefield, Esq., deceased. At five the house went into committee on the Poor Law Amendment Bill, and continued so until twelve o'clock, when the other orders of the day were entered upon, and the house adjourned at a quarter to one o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Monday.

The Bishop of Exeter, in allusion to the Charitable Bequests Bill, stated some objections to the eleventh clause, on the ground that it would recognize the jurisdiction of the Pope, and would thus be contrary to the oath of supremacy.—Lord Wharncliffe seemed to admit that this would be the effect of the clause, and therefore postponed the second reading till Tuesday next, the 16th, in order that he might have the opportunity of considering the clause.

Lord Wodehouse complained of some statements which he alleged to be calumnious, which insinuated that several yeomen of Norfolk and Suffolk had, by their severity in the administration of the Poor-law, been the cause of the late incendiary fires in those counties. Lord Wodehouse eulogised the individuals in question, and said it was impossible to name men who were more beloved by every class. The noble lord, in an excited tone, appealed to the "gentlemen of the press," as he said they called themselves, and invited them to go with him to the poorhouse. He added that he should like to put questions to every individual pauper, and to hear the answer which would be given. Then there would be an exposure of these infamous scandals by those base and infamous calumniators—for they deserved no other name—for there never had been anything more base and calumnious than the last accounts which had been brought forward in this way. If they would do him the favour to meet him, he would put these questions, and they would see that the Poor-law was well administered, and that the labourers would tell them that they are better off under the present than they were under the old law.

It was ordered that a message be sent to the Commons, requesting that Lord John Russell and Sir James Graham should be allowed to attend the Lords' Committee on the Post-office, and leave was given to Lord Melbourne to attend the Commons' Committee.

Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Monday.

Mr. Sheil and Sir C. Napier successively put some questions to Sir Robert Peel upon the subject of the occupation of Algiers by the French, and the recent dispute between the latter government and the Emperor of Morocco.—In answer to Mr. Sheil, the right hon. baronet made an explanation, which indeed has been given before, that the Earl of Aberdeen had never said he had no "objection" to make to the occupation of Algiers by the French, but that the expression was, that he had no "observation" to make. Sir R. Peel also said, that the British Consul at Algiers did not remain there under exequatur from the French Government, but that he had precisely the same authority as when Mr. Sheil was Vice-President of the Board of Trade. In reference to the dispute between France and Morocco, Sir R. Peel denied that the Emperor of Morocco had refused all mediation. He said he should not disclose whether the Government intended to increase the naval force in the Mediterranean; but he added, that there never was a period when England could make a greater naval demonstration in a very short time, should it be considered necessary. Whenever the Government thought it desirable to increase our naval force, it would make a proposition with that object to the House of Commons.

The rest of the night was occupied with a discussion upon the Government Railway Bill. An ineffectual attempt was made to postpone the order of the day for the second reading, after which, Mr. Gladstone, in moving it, argued upon the necessity of giving the Government the power of interfering with railways, an interference which was advocated by the committee. Mr. Gladstone explained that the bill did not, as some supposed, give the Government the power of purchasing the future railways, but merely enabled directors of them to make bargains with the Government. At present, the public paid to the railways between £5,000,000 and £6,000,000 sterling, and in a few years the amount would probably be £15,000,000, and when there was such an amount involved, it was surely desirable that the Government should have the means of interposing.—Mr. Entwistle moved as an amendment that the bill be read a second time that day six months.—In the course of a discussion which ensued, Colonel Sibthorp, who supported the bill, repeated some of his accustomed diatribes against railways, which he said he hated as much as he did pickpockets and commissioners. Colonel Sibthorp also explained that he did not mean last Friday night to convey the idea that he had withdrawn his confidence from the Government generally, but only from Sir James Graham, in regard to the Poor law Bill. Colonel Sibthorp admitted, that although he advocated this bill, he was not partial to the general measures of the President of the Board of Trade, which he called the Board of Free Trade. Ultimately, the debate upon the bill was adjourned till Thursday. The house sat till half-past one o'clock in the morning.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Tuesday.

The business to-day was unimportant.

The Bank Charter Bill was read a second time, with the understanding that the discussion should take place on the third reading.

The Bishop of Exeter withdrew his Bill for the Protection of Young Females, the Duke of Wellington having intimated that the Government would perhaps take up the subject of the bill next session.

Adjourned at a quarter to seven.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Tuesday.

The house met to-day at twelve o'clock.

The Militia Ballot Suspension Bill, the Stock in Trade Bill, and the Turnpike Acts Continuance Bill, were read a third time and passed.

The Solicitor General moved the second reading of the Sudbury Disfranchisement Bill.—Mr. M. D. Hill, Q.C., was then heard against the bill. He contended that sufficient grounds had not been shown for the disfranchisement of a whole community.—The Solicitor-General gave his opinion that Mr. Hill had not made out a case which could justify the house in refusing to assent to the bill.—After some discussion it was read a second time.

At the evening sitting Mr. Christie brought on the often agitated question of the Danish claims. His motion, for an address to her Majesty on the subject, was, as usual, resisted by the Chancellor of the Exchequer.—On a division, however, the motion was defeated by a majority of four only, the number in its favour being 68, and against it 72.

Mr. Liddell brought the subject of dog-stealing under the consideration of the house, and moved for a committee to inquire into the prevalence of the offence.—Sir James Graham consented to the committee principally on the ground that this was the month of July.

Mr. Hume attempted to submit a motion respecting the constitution of the Royal Academy, but, as he was proceeding, the house was counted out at eight o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Wednesday.

The house did not sit.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Wednesday.

The house again assembled at twelve o'clock, and much business was transacted, although of an unimportant character.

The Three-and-a-Half per Cent. Exemptions Bill was read a third time and passed, as was the Vagrants Removal Bill.

The Joint Stock Companies Regulation Bill, and the Joint Stock Companies Remedies-at-Law, &c., Bill, went through committee.

Mr. Hume took occasion to condemn the course pursued in counting him out on the previous evening, and characterised it as an "ungentlemanly" act.—The Speaker: The hon. member will please to withdraw that expression.—Mr. Hume: Well, Sir, unhandsome act, then. (Laughter.) So long as we were talking about dogs the house was not counted, but when I came to talk about men, it was counted directly. I shall bring forward my motion on going into committee of supply.

Some discussion ensued on the Field Gardens Bill, which is based on the recommendations of the committee on allotments, and proposes to create a machinery for appropriating to the labouring population portions of land, to be cultivated for their own use.—The bill was read a second time, and was ordered to be committed on Wednesday.

On the proposal that the house should resolve into committee on the Actions for Gaming Discontinuance Bill (the measure for suspending the further progress of the qui tam actions against certain leading members of the turf), Mr. Christie proposed that Mr. Russell, in whose name the actions were brought, should be heard by counsel against the bill. This motion having been negatived, Mr. Christie moved that the bill be committed that day six months.—This amendment elicited a discussion upon gambling generally, and some reference to the late trial.—Captain Berkeley said he could easily understand and fully feel the obloquy which attached to those who had been concerned in transactions recently exposed; but as a member of the committee he must say, the house would have been relieved from all difficulty in this case, if they had heard from themselves the reasons which had induced parties to bring these actions. He felt some reluctance that such heavy penalties as had been named should go into the pockets of such characters, although the noble lord opposite (Lord G. Bentinck) had gallantly set them at defiance, and declared he would not screen himself under this bill. For himself, he would say he would rather that a son of his should go to the common hazard-table than be induced to take up the art of "book-making," and enter into all the chicanery and dirty work that must ensue to those who meddled with such transactions.—Col. Peel made the following explanation in reference to the emphatic remarks made by Baron Alderson in the Running Rein case. He said, the expressions made use of by a learned judge on a late occasion, that "if gentlemen associated and betted with blackguards they must expect to be cheated," had been quoted in the course of this debate, and if that learned judge meant by "associating" keeping company in the usual acceptation of the term, the observation was a most unfortunate one. For himself, he could say that he had never seen any of the parties referred to in the late case until they entered the court; and, as to their meeting him in a public place, he could as soon prevent that as their walking over Westminster-bridge. (Hear, hear.) It was because his noble friend (Lord G. Bentinck) had not not mixed himself up with those parties—because he did not associate with them—because he had been exerting himself with an ability only equal to his success—that he had been made the subject of a most unfair and unjustifiable attack. The Gallant Colonel then condemned the conduct of Mr. Gibson in holding communication with Mr. Russell.—Mr. Gibson defended himself, and said his only object was to elicit the truth.—Lord G. Bentinck repeated the accusation, and entered into some particulars. He said, that of thirty-four writs which had been served, declarations had been delivered against only two individuals, and one of them was a gentleman of the name of Hill, for penalties amounting to £12,000, in consideration of a bet of £20,000 to £3000, alleged by the plaintiff in the action to have been laid by him against a horse, "Gaper," which belonged to him (Lord G. Bentinck). The noble lord used some expressions in regard to Mr. Gibson, whom he accused "of associating with persons who had robbed their own uncle's hell." These expressions excited some commentary from hon. members.—Mr. Christie's amendment was negatived, and the bill passed through committee.

Upon the order of the day for the committee upon the Sudbury Disfranchisement Bill being read, Mr. Blackstone complained of the late period of the session at which the bill was brought forward, and mentioned the cases of Harwich, Nottingham, &c., in which, he maintained, bribery as flagitious as that at Sudbury had been committed. He moved, as an amendment, that instead of disfranchising the borough, the right of voting should be extended to the adjacent hundreds.—Captain BERESFORD seconded the amendment, and was supported by Mr. COCHRANE. In Nottingham no less than £12,000 had been expended at one election, and yet upon proof that £250 had been spent among 8000 electors in Mr. Walter's behalf, that gentleman had been unseated. This was a most monstrous case; and upon the grounds on which Mr. Walter had been deprived of his seat, every member of the house might, he believed, be declared unduly elected.—The SOLICITOR-GENERAL entered into another defence of the bill. On a division, only one vote was recorded for the amendment, and thirty-seven for going into committee. The bill was committed immediately.

The LORD ADVOCATE then rose to move for leave to bring in a bill to diminish the expense of feudal investitures in Scotland, when Mr. HUME, perhaps by way of reprisal for the course adopted towards him on the previous evening, remarked that there were not forty members present. The house was counted, and the fact being as Mr. Hume suggested, an adjournment took place at a quarter before twelve.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

Lord SANDON appeared at the bar with a message from the Commons, praying their lordships to allow the Earl of Fortescue to attend and give evidence before the Postage Committee of the House of Commons.—Leave given.

A number of petitions were then presented for and against the Dissenters' Chapels Bill.

Earl POWIS intimated, that as the Duke of Wellington had stated that her Majesty's consent to his bill for preventing the consolidation of the Sees of St. Asaph and Bangor had not been obtained, and as the report of the committee was adverse to his, he should withdraw the bill.—The Bishop of SALISBURY recommended her Majesty's Government to reconsider this question. He very much regretted that the noble earl had been compelled to withdraw this bill, for he felt that if it had been passed it would have been found to be a very beneficial measure. He trusted, however, that the Government would in the next session of Parliament introduce a bill themselves upon this subject.

Lord MONTEAGLE then brought forward his motion with respect to the management of pauper lunatics in Ireland. After some discussion he withdrew it, on the assurance of Lord Wharncliffe, that the Government would take the matter into consideration. Their lordships adjourned at nine o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS—THURSDAY.

Mr. T. DUNCOMBE presented a petition from Mr. Mazzini, stating that he had been informed that certain accusations were likely to be brought against him before a Secret Committee of that House then sittting upon the subject of opening letters. He felt it due to himself to state that he was prepared to repel any charge which might be brought against him, and he hoped that if such charges should be brought against him, that he would be allowed to be examined before the Committee.

The Assessed Taxes Composition Bill, and the Colonial Postage Bill, were read a third time, and passed.

The adjourned debate on the Railways Bill was next proceeded with. Mr BRIGHT insisted that the object of Mr. Gladstone's long speech was to disguise instead of to explain the intention of the bill. The principle sanctioning the purchase of railways was a most erroneous one, and although Mr. Gladstone had stated that this power was not given to the Government, he (Mr. B.) was certain that the bill was intended to confer it. Mr. Bright then remarked upon the admirable management of railways, which establishments he said were conducted on a better system than any Government establishment. Another objection involved a point of great political consequence. He meant the influence which Government would have if it monopolised railways. Some railway companies paid immense sums to their servants, and if all this influence fell into the hands of the Executive Government, would it not affect the freedom of the constituencies of those places through which the railroads passed? In illustration of his argument, Mr. Bright mentioned the case of a railway guard at Kendal who had been taken from his duty that he might vote for the Government candidate. He should certainly support the amendment.—Lord SEYMOUR defended the provisions of the bill, and combated some of the objections of Mr. Bright.—Mr. BERNAL and Mr. COLQUHOUN opposed the bill.—Mr. CHARLES BULLER and Mr. GISBORNE also spoke strongly against the measure.—Sir R. PEEL then addressed the house, and from the tone of his speech it appeared that the Government was willing to make considerable modifications in the bill; the second reading, though put to a division, was carried by 196 to 98. It is to be committed on Saturday,

The Report on the Law Courts (Ireland) Compensation Bill, was received.

The Turnpike Trusts (South Wales) Bill was read a second time.

The report on the Horse Racing Penalties Bill was received, after a smart personal discussion, and the house adjourned at half-past one.

THE IRISH STATE TRIALS.

THE WRIT OF ERROR.—O'CONNELL AND THE REPEALERS.

The House of Lords met again on Saturday to hear the argument of Counsel on behalf of the plaintiff in error in the O'Connell cause. Very few lords were present. The arguments turned chiefly upon technical legal points.

Mr. F. Kelly addressed the House on behalf of Mr. O'Connell, Mr. Ray, and Dr. Gray. He contended that the jury had found three offences where only one was charged, and also complained of the direction of the learned judge, which was the very reverse of that of Baron Rolfe in the case of Mr. Feargus O'Connor. Mr. Kelly proceeded to say it was clear that the traversers had been found guilty of a greater number of offences than the Grand Jury had directed them to be put upon their trial for. Here a man was convicted of two conspiracies as to which he had never been put upon his trial—as to which he had never pleaded—as to which the jury had no power to give an opinion. With respect to the findings, they could not return one and reject another. They must stand together or they must fall together. Each, taken respectively, was good as a count—all, taken together, were good as counts—but on them the parties were brought in guilty of too much. When Mr. Kelly had concluded, the further hearing of the case was postponed till Monday.

MONDAY.

On Monday Mr. Kelly resumed his argument. He submitted that every count in the indictment was bad, but particularly the sixth and eighth. These terms, he contended, were too general to constitute a legal offence: for, in order to constitute a legal offence of conspiracy, it must be expressly alleged that the conspiracy was for some unlawful object, and if for an unlawful object the object must be shown to be unlawful, and not merely called so, or described as such; or at least it must be shown that the intention was to obtain an object, whether lawful or unlawful, by means which must be shown to be unlawful. When Mr. Kelly had concluded, the Attorney-General addressed their lordships on the part of the Crown. The learned gentleman cited various cases in refutation of the argument used by the counsel in support of the writ of error, and said that where there were different counts and a general verdict the judgment would not be erroneous, although some of the counts turned out to be defective. Supposing that the second count was defective for want of venue, the judgment would be the same, for the first count, being good, would support the judgment though the second count would not.—Lord Campbell: Suppose the second count had been for a perjury, and that it was defective either by omitting something material or for want of venue, would the same reasoning apply?—The Attorney-General: Yes, my lord: it is quite impossible to make any distinction.—The Attorney-General then maintained that the sentence was no question for a Court of Error, and argued for some time in support of the finding of the jury. The Attorney-General was much exhausted during his address to the house, and an adjournment till Tuesday took place in consequence of this circumstance.

TUESDAY.

On Tuesday morning their lordships met again as a Court of Appeal, and the Attorney-General concluded his argument in support of the conviction. Mr. Smith (the Attorney-General for Ireland) then followed on the same side, but the arguments were so purely of a legal character, that a recapitulation of them could not be interesting to the general reader. Mr. Smith finished his speech in the evening after the House of Lords had adjourned.—Sir Thomas Wilde requested permission to address the Court in reply, without appearing in his legal costume. He always experienced considerable inconvenience from wearing his wig.—Lord Denman remarked, that this indulgence was generally conceded to Sir Thomas Wilde.—The Lord Chancellor: I wish the same indulgence could be extended to me. This is not to be taken as a precedent Sir Thomas; and what you curtail from your wig is not to be added to your argument. (Laughter.)—Sir Thomas Wilde was followed by Mr. F. Kelly, and the proceedings were adjourned till Wednesday.

WEDNESDAY.

On Wednesday Mr. F. Kelly continued his argument at considerable length. The Lord Chancellor then said he had prepared several questions, which he, in conjunction with his noble and learned friends, wished to submit to the consideration of the Queen's Judges. The Lord Chancellor here handed the questions to Lord Chief Justice Tindal. The following is an accurate copy of them:—

"The attention of the judges is requested to the record and proceedings hereafter subjoined, with reference to the following questions:—

"1. Are all, or any, and if any, which of the counts in the indictment bad in law, so that, if such count or counts stood alone in the indictment, no judgment against the defendants could properly be entered upon them?

"2. Is there any, and if any, what defect in the finding of the jury upon the trial of the said indictment, and in entering of such finding?

"3. Is there any sufficient ground for reversing the indictment, by means of any defect in the indictment, or of the finding, or entering of the findings of the jury upon the said indictment?

"4. Is there any sufficient ground to reverse the judgment by reason of the matters stated in the pleas in abatement, or any of them, or in the judgment upon such pleas?

"5. Is there any sufficient ground for reversing the judgment on account of the continuing the trial in the vacation, or of the order of the Court for that purpose?

"6. Is there any sufficient ground for reversing the judgment on account of the judgment of the Court overruling and disallowing the challenge to the array, or any or either of them; or of the matters stated in such challenge?

"7. Is there sufficient ground to reverse the judgment by reason of any defect in the entry of continuances from the said trial to the 15th day of April, regard being also had to the appearances of the defendants on the said last-named day?

"8. Is there any sufficient ground to reverse or vary the judgment on account of the sentences, or any, or either of them, passed on the respective defendants, regard being had particularly to the recognisances required, and to the period of imprisonment dependent on the entering into such recognisances?

"9. Is there any sufficient ground to reverse the judgment on account of the judgments in the assignments of error coram nobis, or any or either of them, or of the matters stated in such assignments of error, or any or either of them?

"10. Is there any sufficient ground for reversing the judgment by reason of its not containing any entry as to the verdicts of acquittal?

"11. In an indictment consisting of counts A, B, C, where the verdict is guilty of all generally, and the counts A B are good, and the count C is bad, the judgment being, that the defendants, for the offences aforesaid, be fined and imprisoned, which judgment would be sufficient, in point of law, if confined expressly to counts A and B, can such judgment be reversed on a writ of error? Will it make any difference whether the punishment be discretionary, as above suggested, or a punishment fixed by law?"

Lord Chief Justice Tindal said, on behalf of himself and the other Judges, he had to request that their lordships would allow them time to consider the questions which had been submitted to them.

The Lord Chancellor.—Certainly. You are entitled to all reasonable time.

The Attorney-General for England said, on the part of the Crown he had the right of final reply, but he should not avail himself of it on the present occasion. He only mentioned the matter, that no precedent might be drawn from it.

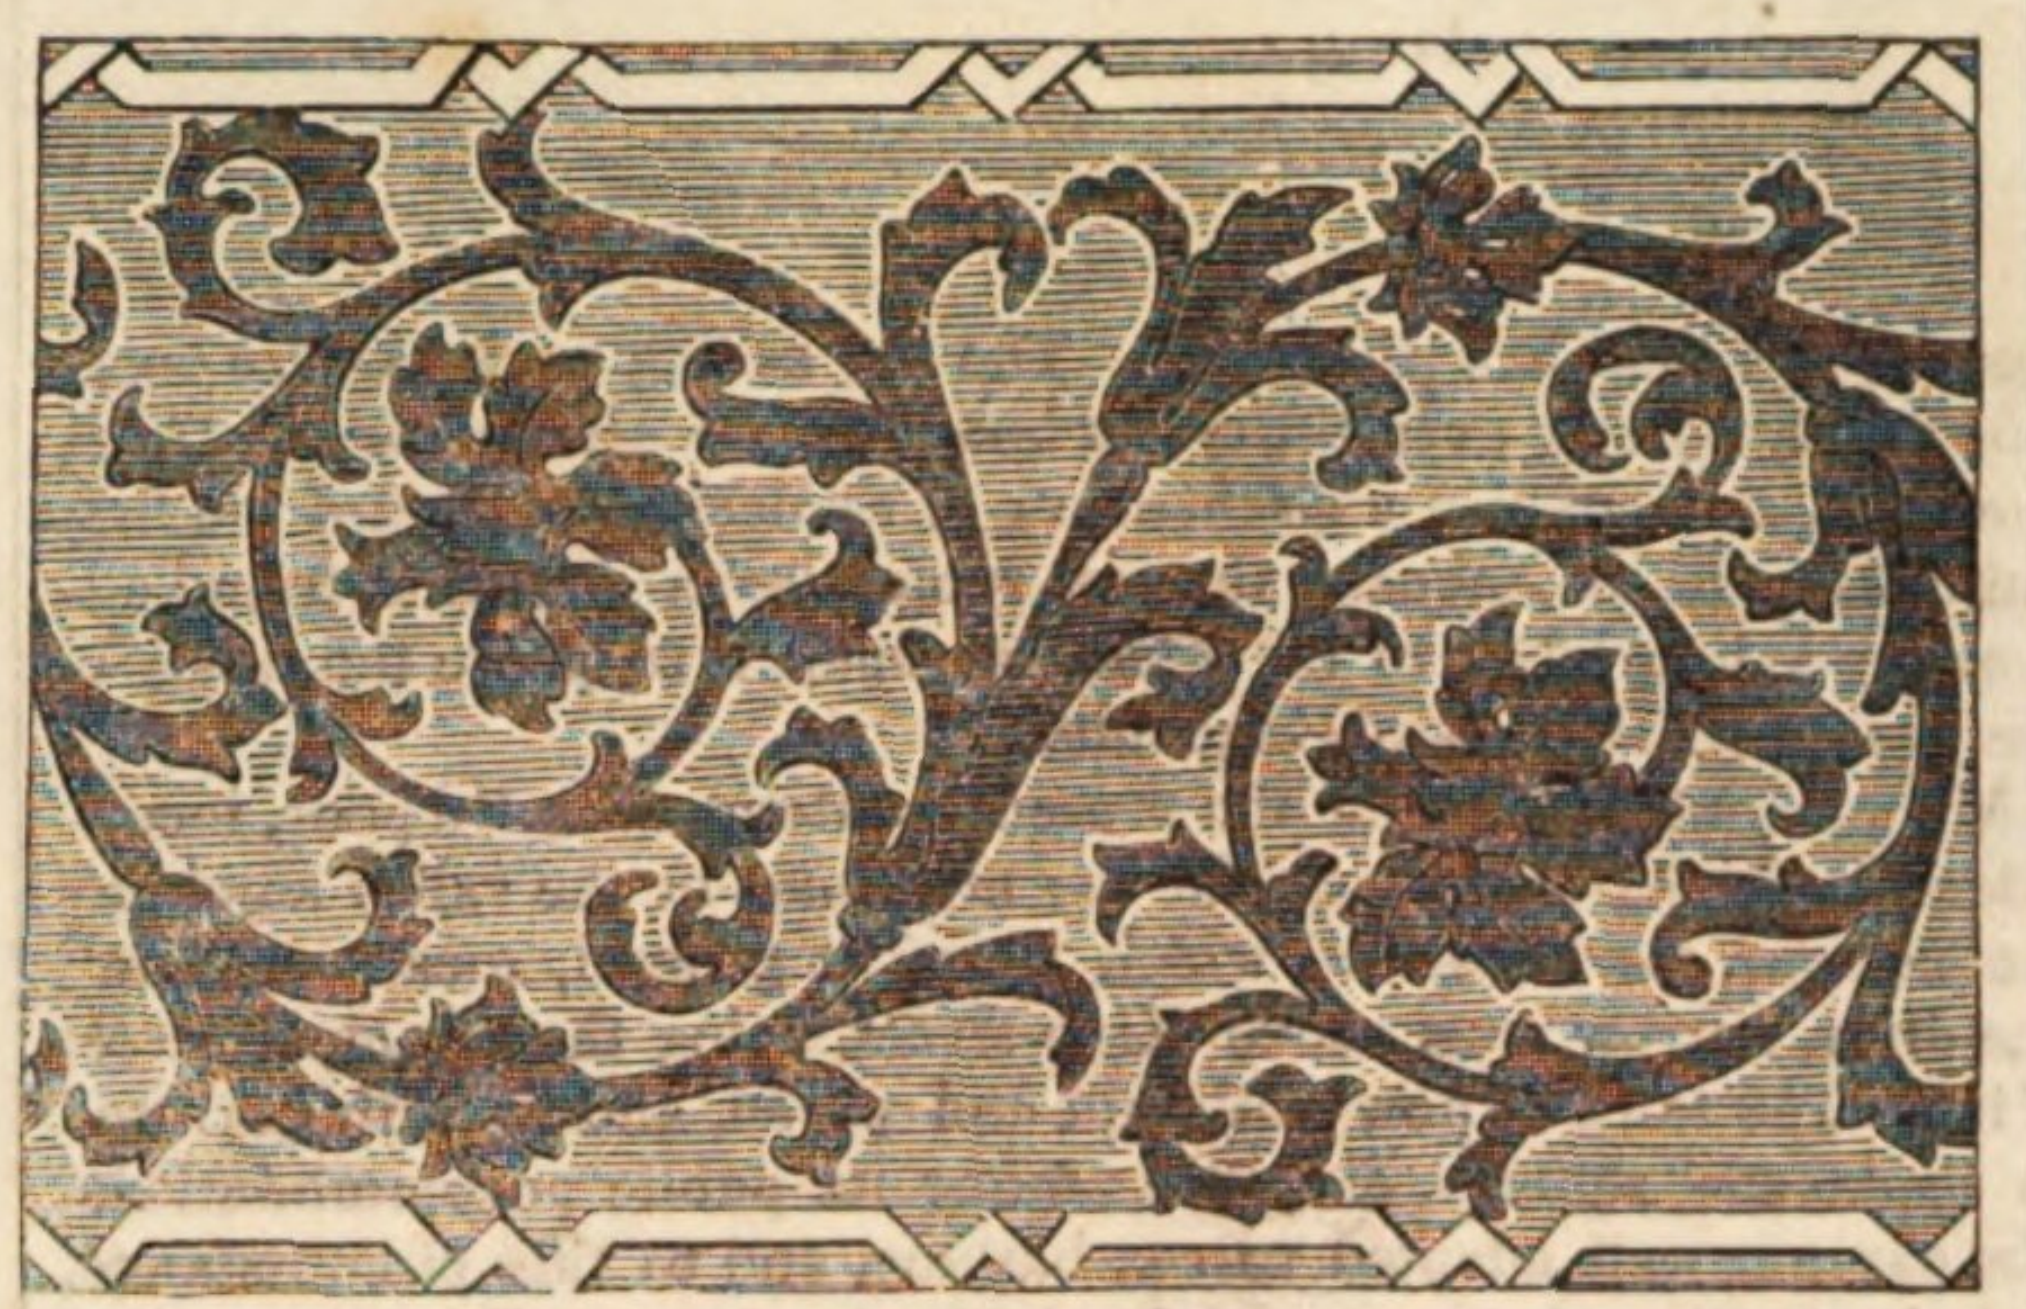
The house then immediately adjourned. It having been erroneously stated in the morning papers, that the judgment would be given on Thursday morning, great numbers of persons went to the house, and much disappointment was experienced by them on learning that the decision was postponed for the present.

THE GOVERNMENT SCHOOL OF DESIGN.

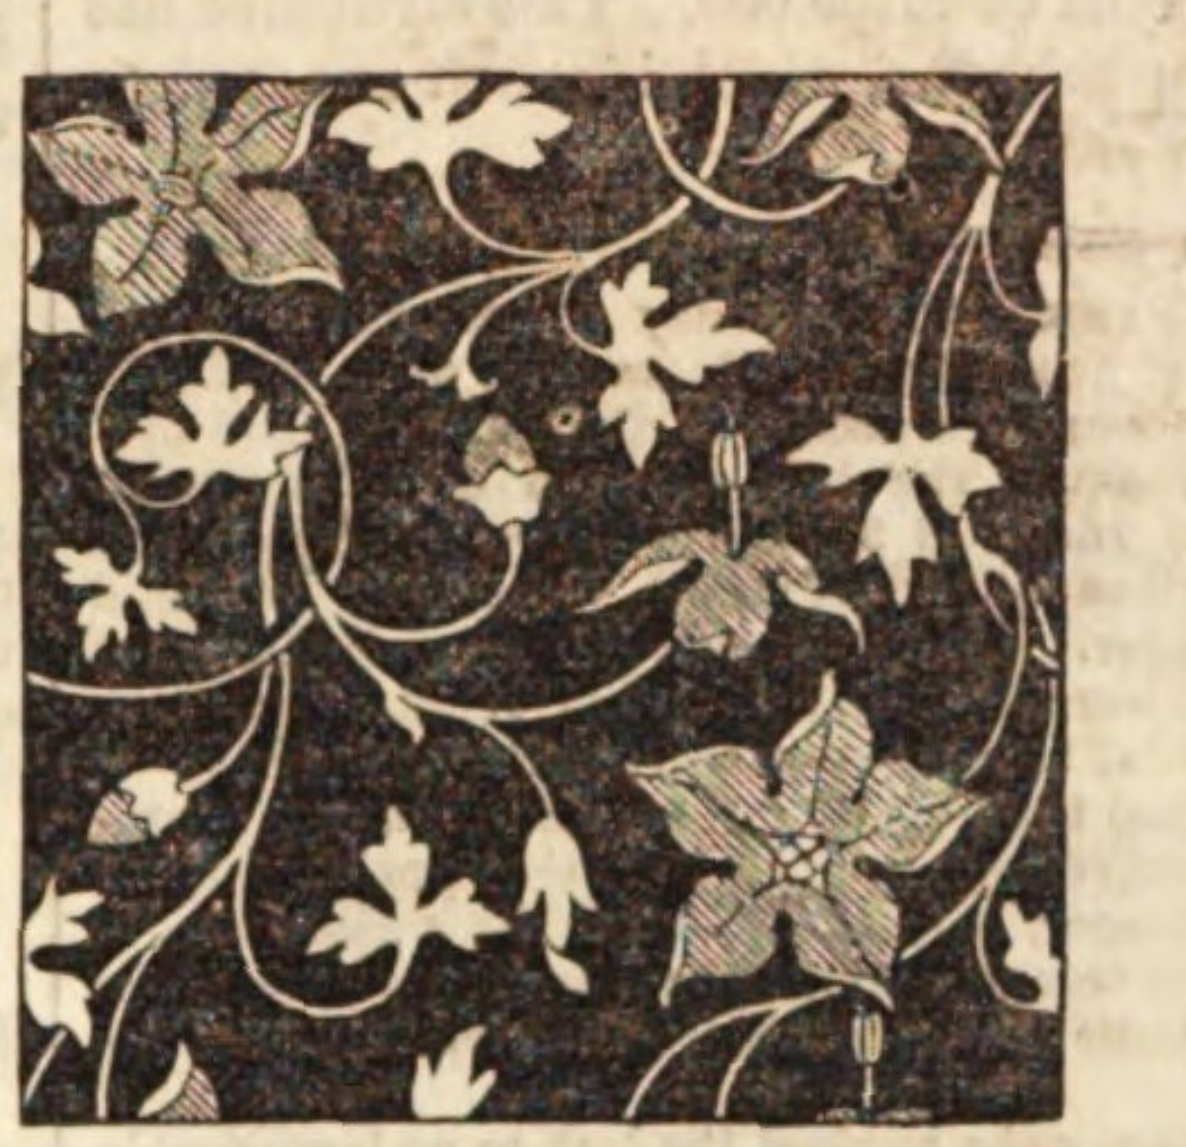
On Wednesday the annual distribution of prizes of the Spitalfields branch of the Government School of Design, took place at Crosby-hall, Bishopsgate-street. The ceremony appeared to excite considerable interest. The Marquis of Normanby, on taking the chair, expatiated on the advantages which the school was calculated to confer, and expressed his gratification at the great increase in the number of pupils. The Rev. W. Stone read the annual report, which showed that since the last report of the committee the amount of attendance has increased to a degree which has rendered it necessary to provide more convenient accommodation for the students. The total number of pupils in attendance during the month of April, in the present year, was 238, which exceeds by 122 that reported in the same month of the preceding year. The report also showed that through the liberal exertions of Richard Durant, Esq., and a numerous body of silk-merchants and brokers, a fund has been created amounting already to £450, the interest of which is to be appropriated annually to the distribution of prizes to meritorious students.

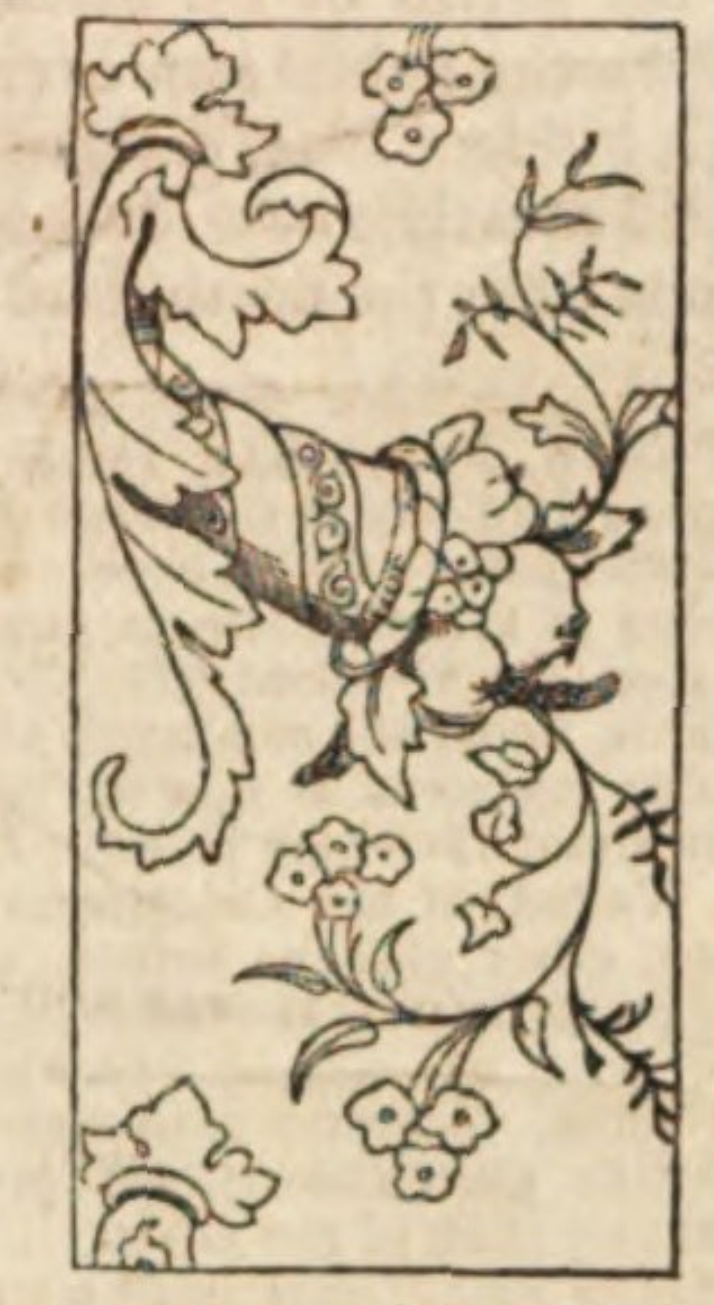
When the prizes had been distributed by the Marquis of Normanby, several resolutions connected with the objects of the school were agreed to. Mr. Dillon, in proposing one of them, expressed an opinion in which we are disposed to concur, that the superiority of French workmen in regard to patterns, is not so much to be attributed to any superiority of talent on their part, as to the greater degree of encouragement afforded by the French Government to such institutions.

We have not space for the entire list of prizes, but have engraved three of them.



No. 1.—Charles Slocombe, for the best design for a 600 cord figured silk garment, £2 2s. 0d. This pupil, aged twelve, is the son of a Spitalfields weaver.





No. 2.—Joseph Bridges, for the second best design for a 600 cord figured silk garment, £1 1s. 0d. This pupil, aged twelve, is also the son of a silk-weaver, has been two years in the school, and had no knowledge of drawing when he first entered.

No. 5.—Henry Cole Soper, for the best design for a parasol border, £1 1s 0d. This pupil, aged fourteen, is the son of Mr. H. Soper, silk manufacturer, Spital-square; he has been in the school two years.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

RIGHT OF BILL BROKERS TO RAISE MONEY UPON COLLATERAL SECURITIES.—A case has been tried in the Court of Exchequer, Acraman v. Cooper and others, which involved an important question to the commercial world. It was an action of trover, to recover £10,300, the alleged value of the scrip receipt for 300 shares in the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company. The defendants, who are bankers, claimed a lien upon the scrip for advances made upon this and other securities, deposited with them by Colls, Thompson, and Co., the plaintiff's bill brokers. A verdict was returned for the defendants, thus marking the opinion of the jury, that the bankers had a right to recover their advances, but, at the same time, they gave an intimation that they considered it a dangerous practice for the mercantile world to raise money upon collateral securities, while the original securities were still running.

THE CLAIM OF SIR AUGUSTUS D'ESTE TO THE DUKEDOM OF SUSSEX.—The House of Lords sat in a Committee for Privileges on Tuesday and gave their judgment on the claim of Sir Augustus D'Este to the Dukedom of Sussex. Chief Justice Tindal read the opinion of the Judges, which was to the effect that no marriage of any branch of the royal family was valid unless the consent of the Crown was previously obtained, and as this was not the case with the marriage of the Duke of Sussex with Lady Augusta Murray, the judges were of opinion that the claim of Sir Augustus D'Este to the Dukedom of Sussex should not be allowed. The House of Lords affirmed the opinion of the Judges, and rejected the claim of Sir Augustus D'Este.

ALDERMAN GIBBS AND THE PARISH ACCOUNTS.—At the Rolls Court on Monday argument was heard on an information at the instance of William Frederick Rock, on behalf of himself and other the inhabitants of the parish of St. Stephen's Walbrook, London, against Michael Gibbs and others, praying for an account of all money, stock, and personal estate, vested in Gibbs in trust for the parish, and of all sums received by him, and his application of the same. Alderman Gibbs admitted that he had received the amount, and a decree was made as prayed.

SUSPENSION OF A CERTIFICATE FOR TWELVE MONTHS.—In the Court of Bankruptcy on Tuesday, in the case of T. W. Palmer, the bankrupt's application for a certificate was opposed on the ground that he had carried on business as a broker without a certificate and without having taken the necessary oath. Also upon the ground that he had made purchases to a large amount when in a state of insolvency. The Court, thinking the allegation proved, suspended the certificate for twelve months.

POLICE.

REVIVAL OF MONOMANIA.—A gentlemanly-looking young man, the Hon. William Ross Touchet, has been examined at Bow-street on a charge of shooting Thomas Smith, a gunsmith, at 288, High Holborn, with intent to murder him. Alfred Smith stated that he resided at 288, High Holborn, and was assistant to his father, a gunsmith. About half-past twelve o'clock on Saturday last, the prisoner came into the shooting gallery at the back of the shop, and inquired whether he could have a few shots with a pistol at the target? Witness's father replied that he could, and immediately proceeded to load a brace of pistols. He gave them to the prisoner, who, after the second shot, observed, that the triggers pulled very hard. Witness's father said he could set the hair-triggers if the prisoner wished, on which the latter said he did not want them to go off so easily as that, and would shoot with them as they were. On receiving a pistol for the third shot, the prisoner, without saying a word, turned round, and while Mr. Smith was loading another pistol, with his back towards him, he fired the pistol at him, and wounded him in the loins. Witness's father immediately exclaimed, "Good God, I am shot through the back," and then, turning to the prisoner, asked him what he did it for, but he made no answer. The prisoner smiled at the time he fired the shot. Mr. Smith contrived, with witness's assistance, to walk up stairs. On witness descending to the shooting gallery, he found Mr. Touchet in the custody of a policeman, who told witness that the prisoner had said he was tired of his life, and had shot Mr. Smith on purpose, as he wished to be hanged. The prisoner also repeated the same words to witness, adding, that he bore no animosity to his father. He was then removed in custody to the station-house, and Mr. Smith was conveyed to Bartholomew's Hospital, where it was discovered that the bullet had lodged in the right side of his back. Witness saw the prisoner about three months ago at his father's shooting gallery, when he had some shots at the target. On examination by Mr. Twyford, the prisoner admitted that he did the deed on purpose, and repeated that it was because he wished to be hanged. He was treated very badly, he said, and was very unhappy. It was not for want of money. The prisoner, who resides at 26, Weymouth-street, Portland-place, is the younger brother of Lord Audley. The surgeon at Bartholomew's Hospital pronounced the wound to be a dangerous one.—Mr. Twyford remanded the prisoner.—[These instances of monomania, as it is styled, are really alarming. But a few months since the public were deeply excited by the deplorable death of Mr. Drummond, but as the man who committed the act was pronounced to be insane, the perpetrator escaped punishment. Still more recently, Dalmas, whom a jury pronounced guilty of murder, has been reprieved, and we are told that it was solely upon the ground of his insanity. It is to be remembered, however, that his insanity has not been proved by the intervention of a jury, as in the former case. It is far from our desire to excite prejudice, but, to say the least, when insanity assumes such a shape as to be dangerous to her Majesty's subjects, it does seem time either to come to some more perfect definition of the law, or to provide some means of restraining persons who are, or affect to be, insane.]—We have also to record another instance of an offence committed by a person labouring under this mania. At Worship-street, on Monday, a Mr. Grove was charged with having committed a violent assault upon two constables on the Eastern Counties Railway, because they would not allow him to endanger his life by walking along the rails. The defendant admitted the charge, but behaved in a very incoherent way. Mr. Bingham told the defendant that if it were proved he was labouring under a delusion when he committed the act, it would be his duty not to punish him. Acting in conformity with this view, the magistrate detained the defendant till his friends could be apprised of his situation. When the defendant was removed from the office, he wrote a letter to Sir R. Peel, in which he said he would serve her Majesty faithfully, if she would give him the Colonelcy of the Grenadier Guards.—[Mr. Bingham may be correct in his view that the law will not punish persons who commit crime while labouring under a delusion; but we cannot help thinking it would be highly desirable for the Legislature to take some steps to compel the friends of such deluded people to take care of them, on the principle that "prevention is better than cure."]

COUNTRY NEWS.

BIRMINGHAM ELECTION.—There are three candidates in the field to supply the vacancy caused by the death of Mr. Scholefield, viz., Mr. Spooner, a Conservative, and Mr. Sturge, and Mr. Scholefield, son of the late member, in the Whig interest.

ACCIDENT AT LEWES.—On Tuesday morning a young man named Garnham, in the employ of Messrs. Wood, brewers, overbalanced himself whilst at work, and fell into a copper of boiling liquor nearly seven feet deep. Assistance was immediately procured and he was extricated from his perilous situation, but in a dreadfully scalded condition. The poor fellow expired at four o'clock in the afternoon.

THE EXPLOSION AT BOLTON.—After an inquiry, which lasted three days, the jury returned the following verdict:—"We are unanimously of opinion that the death of James Swift, Bridget Hart, and James M'Donald, was caused by an explosion of the steam-boiler at Mr. Brooks's mill. That the said boiler exploded from the pressure of the steam being too great; and that George Branscombe has caused the explosion. We are also of opinion that due care has not been used in the general superintendence of the steam engines and boilers." George Branscombe was thereupon committed to take his trial for manslaughter.

MURDER IN BUCKS.—On Monday a murder was committed at the village of Bow Brickhill, near the town of Newport Pagnell, Buckinghamshire. The victim was a man named Joseph Leach, and the supposed perpetrators of the horrid deed are two young men named Joseph Keen and William Stephens, both belonging to the same neighbourhood, who have absconded, and for whose apprehension warrants have been issued,

INCENDIARISM IN ESSEX.—On Wednesday week an incendiary fire took place on a farm called Lindridge, the property of S. M. Raymond, Esq., and occupied by Mr. Chinery. A barn, stabling, byres, and sheds, were destroyed. The barn contained a large quantity of wheat. The women joined the men while they worked the engines to extinguish the fire. This crime appears to have been committed because Mr. Chinery used a dressing-machine on his farm, and is a maker of machinery.

DREADFUL SUICIDE BY A FRENCHMAN IN LIVERPOOL.—On Monday morning, a Frenchman, named Felix Em, committed suicide in one of the state-rooms of the barque China, in which vessel he had taken his passage from Liverpool for Quebec, by shooting himself through the head with a loaded pistol. The deceased seems to have been a man of higly respectable appearance in dress and manner. He had a short time since arrived in Liverpool from Genoa; and at the time he was found weltering in his blood, two bags, containing doubloons and other coin, of the value of £1000 were discovered upon his person.

THE PITMEN AND THE COALOWNERS.—The Pitmen of the North appear determined to continue the strike, for we find by the Tyne Mercury, that an immense meeting, consisting of upwards of 20,000, took place on Monday, on Shaden Hill. They were perfectly peaceable. Resolutions were agreed to deprecating the monthly agreements of the masters, and pledging themselves to continue the contest until their just claims are acceded to.

MURDER AND ATTEMPTED SUICIDE AT MANCHESTER.—On Sunday night a murder and attempt at suicide took place under circumstances of an extraordinary character. A labouring man, named Thomas Stew, was paying his addresses to Alice Nolan, a factory girl about twenty-eight. On Saturday night last, they met at the house of a friend, when Stew told her he had bought the ring, at which she seemed displeased, and said she would not be married yet, as he had not consulted her. On Sunday they again met at the same house, took tea together, and left to go home about nine o'clock. In the interval Stew was in great excitement. He had borrowed a razor which he said was to shave with. It appears that on their way home he took the poor girl down a back street to a vacant piece of ground called "Shaws' Brow," and whilst talking to her, he took out the razor and nearly severed her head from her body. He then went back to the house of the friend singing and making a loud noise, and on reaching the door cut his own throat. He is not expected to survive. An inquest was summoned on the body of the poor girl, but was adjourned for further evidence.

CONFESSION OF MURDER.—At the Lincoln Assizes, held in March, 1843 Elizabeth Joyce was indicted for poisoning her step-son, William Edward Joyce aged 16, at Boston, on the 17th September, 1842, by administering arsenic to him which she had purchased under the pretence of poisoning mice. After the examination of several witnesses, Mr. Baron Gurney stopped the case, because the indictment charged the prisoner with administering poison to "William," instead of to "William Edward" Joyce. At the July Assizes, Mrs. Joyce was again arraigned, when much evidence was heard, and after an able defence the jury returned a verdict of "Not Guilty." The husband felt so confident of his wife's guilt, that on her liberation he refused to live with her, and she has been for some time in Boston Union-house, where she is now suffering from severe illness. On Monday last (probably under the fear of approaching death) she made a full confession of her guilt in the horrid deed for which she has been twice arraigned at Lincoln.

TRIAL OF THE RIOTERS AT LEEDS.—This extraordinary trial has terminated, having occupied four days of the borough sessions, and twice as long as the other 36 cases put together. Twice the Court sat until between ten and eleven o'clock at night. Of the military, four were found guilty and eight not guilty; of the civilians, four were found guilty and three not guilty. The sentences on the former were different periods of imprisonment; of the latter, one was fined £4, the others were sentenced to short periods of imprisonment.

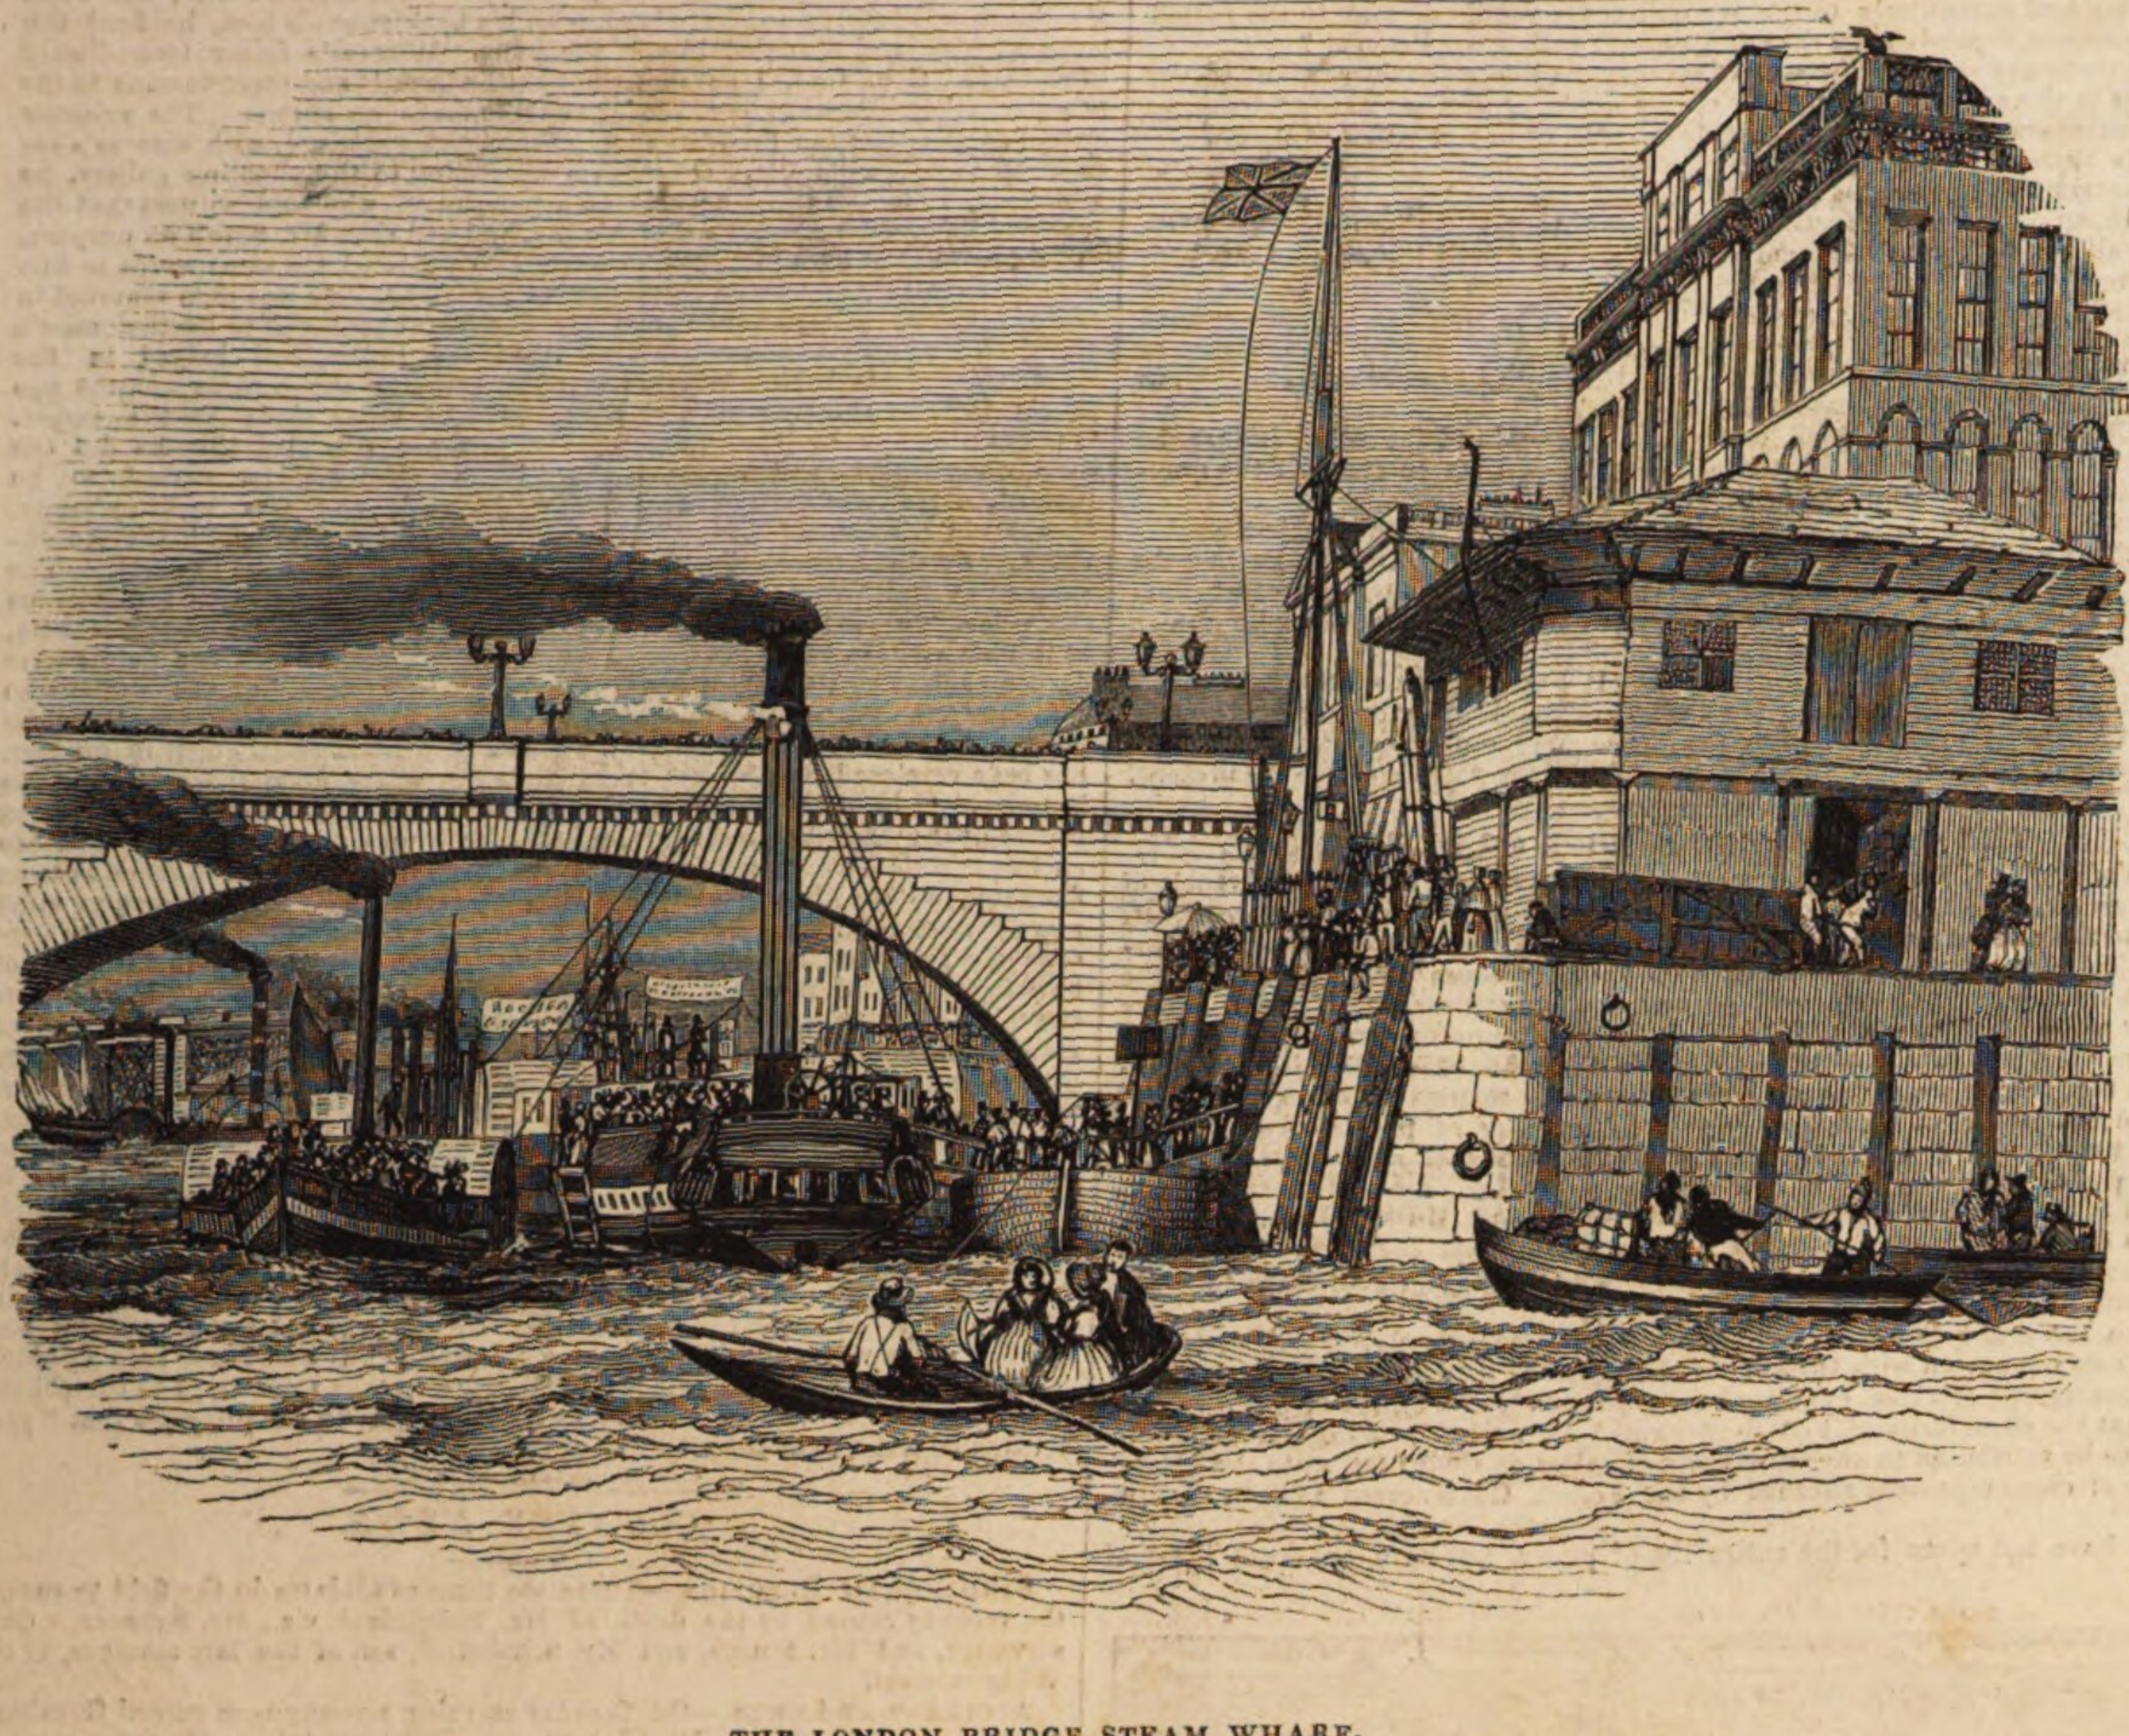
IRELAND.

At the close of the meeting of the Repeal Association, held at Dublin on Monday, the weekly return of the rent was £2136. This was the sixth weekly return of a similar large amount, since the incarceration of Mr. O'Connell.

A SECOND STATE PROSECUTION.—According to the Irish papers, an indictment is to be preferred at the next Limerick Assizes, against the proprietor of the Limerick Reporter, for an article in which the writer calls upon the people to purchase arms and register them. After giving this advice the article concludes thus:—"With arms in your hands you will more effectually plead for your rights; and if persecution should proceed further in its career (and it must either advance or retreat), you will have those means of self-defence which the constitution has provided. A nation unarmed is a nation of slaves, to be trodden down by a military despotism. And what Government, we ask, coul resist the demand of a nation thus unanimous and armed for her rights?"

STEAM-BOAT ACCIDENT.—It was very generally rumoured in town on Monday, that a steamer, which left Derry on Saturday, for Belfast, having on board a large number of ministers of the General Assembly, had met with an accident on her passage, attended with loss of life. The fact, we believe to be, that the steamer (we have not ascertained her name) left Derry on Saturday for Belfast, and on her passage down Lough Foyle, when nearly abreast of Moville, the boiler burst with considerable noise. One man on board, a seaman belonging to the vessel, was severely injured; but, with this exception, we are gratified to learn that no other casualty of consequence occurred. The vessel was brought to Moville, where she remains, and the passengers returned to Derry.

ANOTHER DREADFUL MURDER.—The Cork Reporter gives an account of another revolting murder, which took place a few nights ago. A man named William Coleman, residing at a place called Mayfield, between Cloyne and Ballycotton, was found mangled in his bed in a most shocking manner, his head being literally smashed to pieces with a pickaxe. An inquest has been held, and a verdict of Wilful Murder returned. No person has yet been arrested, but there are strong suspicions involving some near relatives of Coleman's.



THE LONDON BRIDGE STEAM WHARF.

STEAM NAVIGATION OF THE THAMES.

There is no port in the kingdom which has profited more than London through the application of Steam Navigation. A great number of the steam-vessels that arrive and depart, carry passengers only, and are, therefore, not required to make entry at the Custom-house; and with regard to such as carry goods, no distinction is made between them and sailing-vessels, for which reason, no accurate account of the number of this class of ships that enter and leave the port can be given.

The spirited scene represented in the engraving—the Steam Packet Wharf at London-bridge—may be regarded as the main focus of this extensive means of transit. The number of arrivals and departures at this spot during the day, is truly astonishing; and at the present high steam season, is a constant source of attraction. The vessels are of all degrees of tonnage; and from thence and the adjoining Fresh Wharf, and Cox and Hammond's Quays, steamers start for Greenwich, Woolwich, Sheerness, Gravesend, Herne Bay, Margate, Deal and Dover, Calais, Boulogne, and Ostend, and other places. Although the width of the river is here nearly 700 feet, the constant arrivals and departures occupy a considerable portion of this extent.

Little more than thirty years have elapsed since the Thames was first navigated by steam, and that experimentally. We find it stated, that in 1812, a Mr. Lawrence constructed a steam-boat at Bristol, which he brought to London to ply on the Thames for passengers; but such was the clamour raised against him by the Company of Watermen, that he was compelled to return with his steamer to Bristol: others soon succeeded, and in twenty years the Thames was ploughed by 100 steam-boats.

The London-bridge wharf is one of the handsomest and most convenient constructions of its class on the Thames; and the bustling crown, with one of the beautiful arches of the bridge, as a framework for our engraving, is a very picturesque scene. Indeed, comparatively few Londoners are aware of the effective scene, especially when viewed from the river.

London-bridge Wharf is the main point for the Herne Bay and Margate steam-boats. It is curious to turn to the statistics of Steam Navigation to this favourite watering-place. It appears that the first steamboat, the Thames, 90 tons, left London for Margate in 1815: in 1817, the fares were 11s. and 15s. each person. The passage was then made in ten or twelve hours, whereas it is now effected with ease in less than half that time. The old sailing packets were occasionally thirty and even thirty-six hours on the same passage. And, such was the popular apprehension of explosion on board the first built Margate steamboats, that we remember a scientific friend addressing a long letter to the Times newspaper, to prove the safety of the new triumph of man's ingenuity.

Margate, almost within the present century, was "a poor, inconsiderable fishing-town, built for the most part in the valley adjoining the harbour, the houses of which were, in general, mean and low; one dirty, narrow lane, called King-street, being the principal street of it." The town is now well built and paved, and lit with gas: and an esplanade, squares, &c., are among its public accommodations. The shore is well adapted to sea-bathing, and to this circumstance, and the facility of communication with the metropolis, by means of steam-vessels, must be attributed the rapid increase in the population of the parish of St. John, which amounts to about 11,000. Nor, among the public improvements of Margate, must we forget the stone pier, 900 feet long, erected at a cost of £100,000. This structure has added greatly to the utility of the harbour, which is much exposed to winds from the north-east.

GRAND FIELD-DAY IN HYDE PARK.—On Monday there was a grand brigade field-day in the large space of ground generally used on such occasions in Hyde-park. The troops on the ground consisted of the 1st and 2nd battalions of the Coldstream Guards, making the full strength of that distinguished corps—about 980 men; the 2nd and 3rd battalions of the Grenadier Guards, under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Grant. The first battalion of this regiment is now at Winchester. Including the bands of both, there were about 1500 men present, and all were under command of Lieutenant-Colonel Walton, of the Coldstream Guards, a gallant officer, who, in addition to many other glorious scenes, witnessed that of Waterloo. The Duke of Cambridge, Colonel of the Coldstreams, arrived on the ground at the appointed time. The Duke was mounted on a grey charger, and was attired in the regimentals of the corps. A grand review of all the troops stationed in London or adjoining, will take place shortly, and preparations are now being made very extensively in anticipation of the affair.

"How long," exclaimed a tradesman, as he applied the lash to an incorrigibly bad apprentice, "how long will you continue to serve the devil?" "Not more than three months sir—my indenture will be out then."

AMERICAN REFINEMENT.—The New York Herald says, "In extra polite circles the night mare is now termed 'the nocturnal horse of the feminine gender.'"

Call not the grey hairs of age the snows of winter—call them not the frosts of time! They are white—spring-blossoms, betokening the Eternal spring-time of Heaven.—American Paper.

HAPPINESS.—Happiness! that glorious crown which all the jewels of the world cannot enrich; which studded with the diamonds of the heart, can receive no additional lustre from such paltry things as power, or wealth, or station.

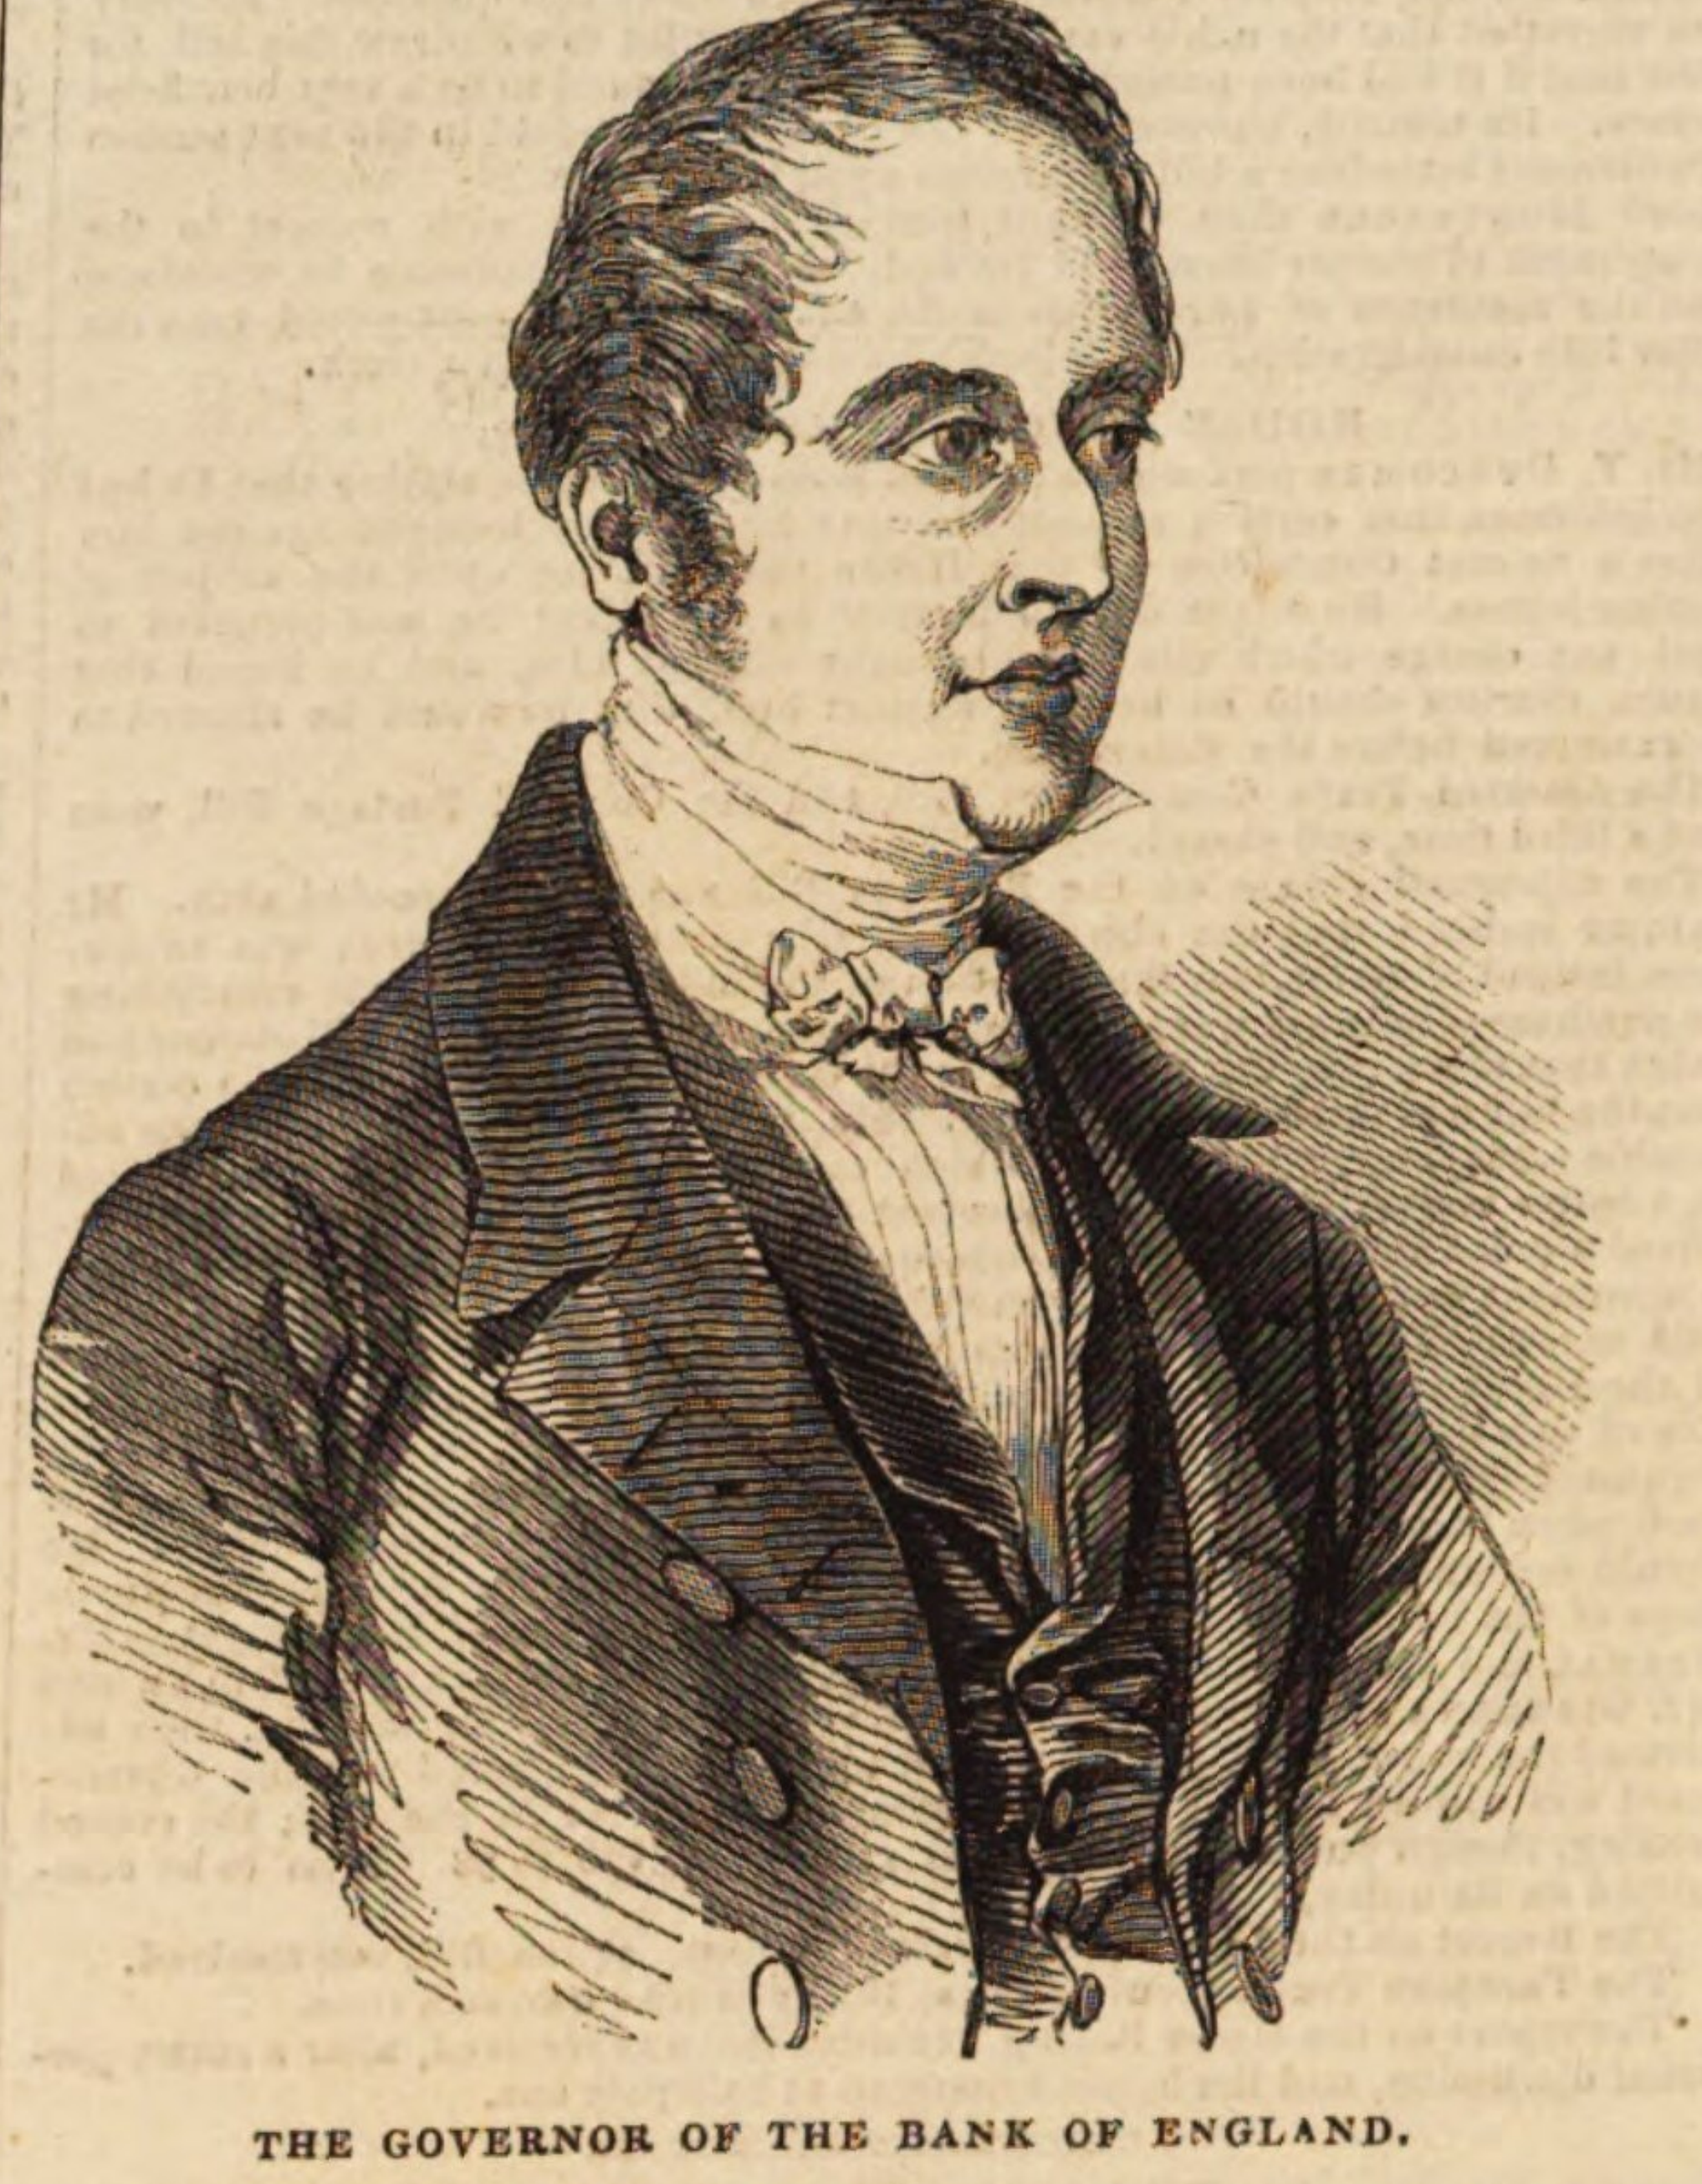
NEWSPAPER

WILLIAM COTTON, ESQ., GOVERNOR OF THE BANK OF ENGLAND.

This excellent gentleman has recently acquired additional public importance from his connection with "the Bank Charter," now under discussion in Parliament.

Mr. William Cotton is the third son of Mr. Joseph Cotton, for many years a Director of the East India Company; and Deputy-Master of the Trinity House. He is also a grandson of Dr. Cotton, of St. Alban's, of whom such honourable mention is made by the poet Cowper. Mr. W. Cotton was born in London, in 1786. In 1827, he joined the firm of Huddart and Co., and enjoyed the advantage of a long friendship with Capt. Huddart, of which distinguished philosopher and mathematician Mr. Cotton has contributed a brief memoir to the Transactions of the Royal Institute of Civil Engineers.

In 1822, Mr. Cotton became a Director of the Bank of England; Deputy-Governor in 1841; he has served two years as Governor, and has been requested to continue in office in consequence of the negociation for the renewal of the Charter. His eldest brother, Mr. John Cotton, was last year Chairman of the East India Company; so that the two brothers were, at the same period, at the head of two great Corporations of the City of London.



THE GOVERNOR OF THE BANK OF ENGLAND.

Mr. W. Cotton is distinguished for his extensive acquaintance with practical science; and, last year, he invented a very ingenious machine for weighing sovereigns, and separating the light ones from those of standard weight. This machine is so delicate, that it detects a variation of the 12,250th part of the weight of a sovereign; and the invention is declared to be one of the most satisfactory instances of automaton labour.

NEW MUSIC.

FORGET THEE! Ballad. The Words by the Rev. J. MOULTRIE, M.A. &c., the music by J. CALVERT. Cramer, Beale, and Co.

A graceful flowing melody, but there is some incongruity between its rhythm and that of the words. The dragging of the monosyllable upon a dotted crotchet, quaver and crotchet, which so frequently occurs throughout, produces a painful effect: besides there is some very loose grammar in the words, as the following lines will show:

> If this thou call'st forgetting
> Thou indeed shall be forgot!

I NEVER CAST A FLOWER AWAY. Cavatina composed by JOHN CALVERT. Cramer, Beale, and Co.

The only objection we have to this cavatina is the indecision or uncertainty of its accent. The composer may probably have intended this as a beauty; but there is as much rhyming in music as there is in poetry, and when the observance of it is neglected, the ear is seriously offended. The notation after the two pauses on page 3, is, with respect to time, rather strange and defective.

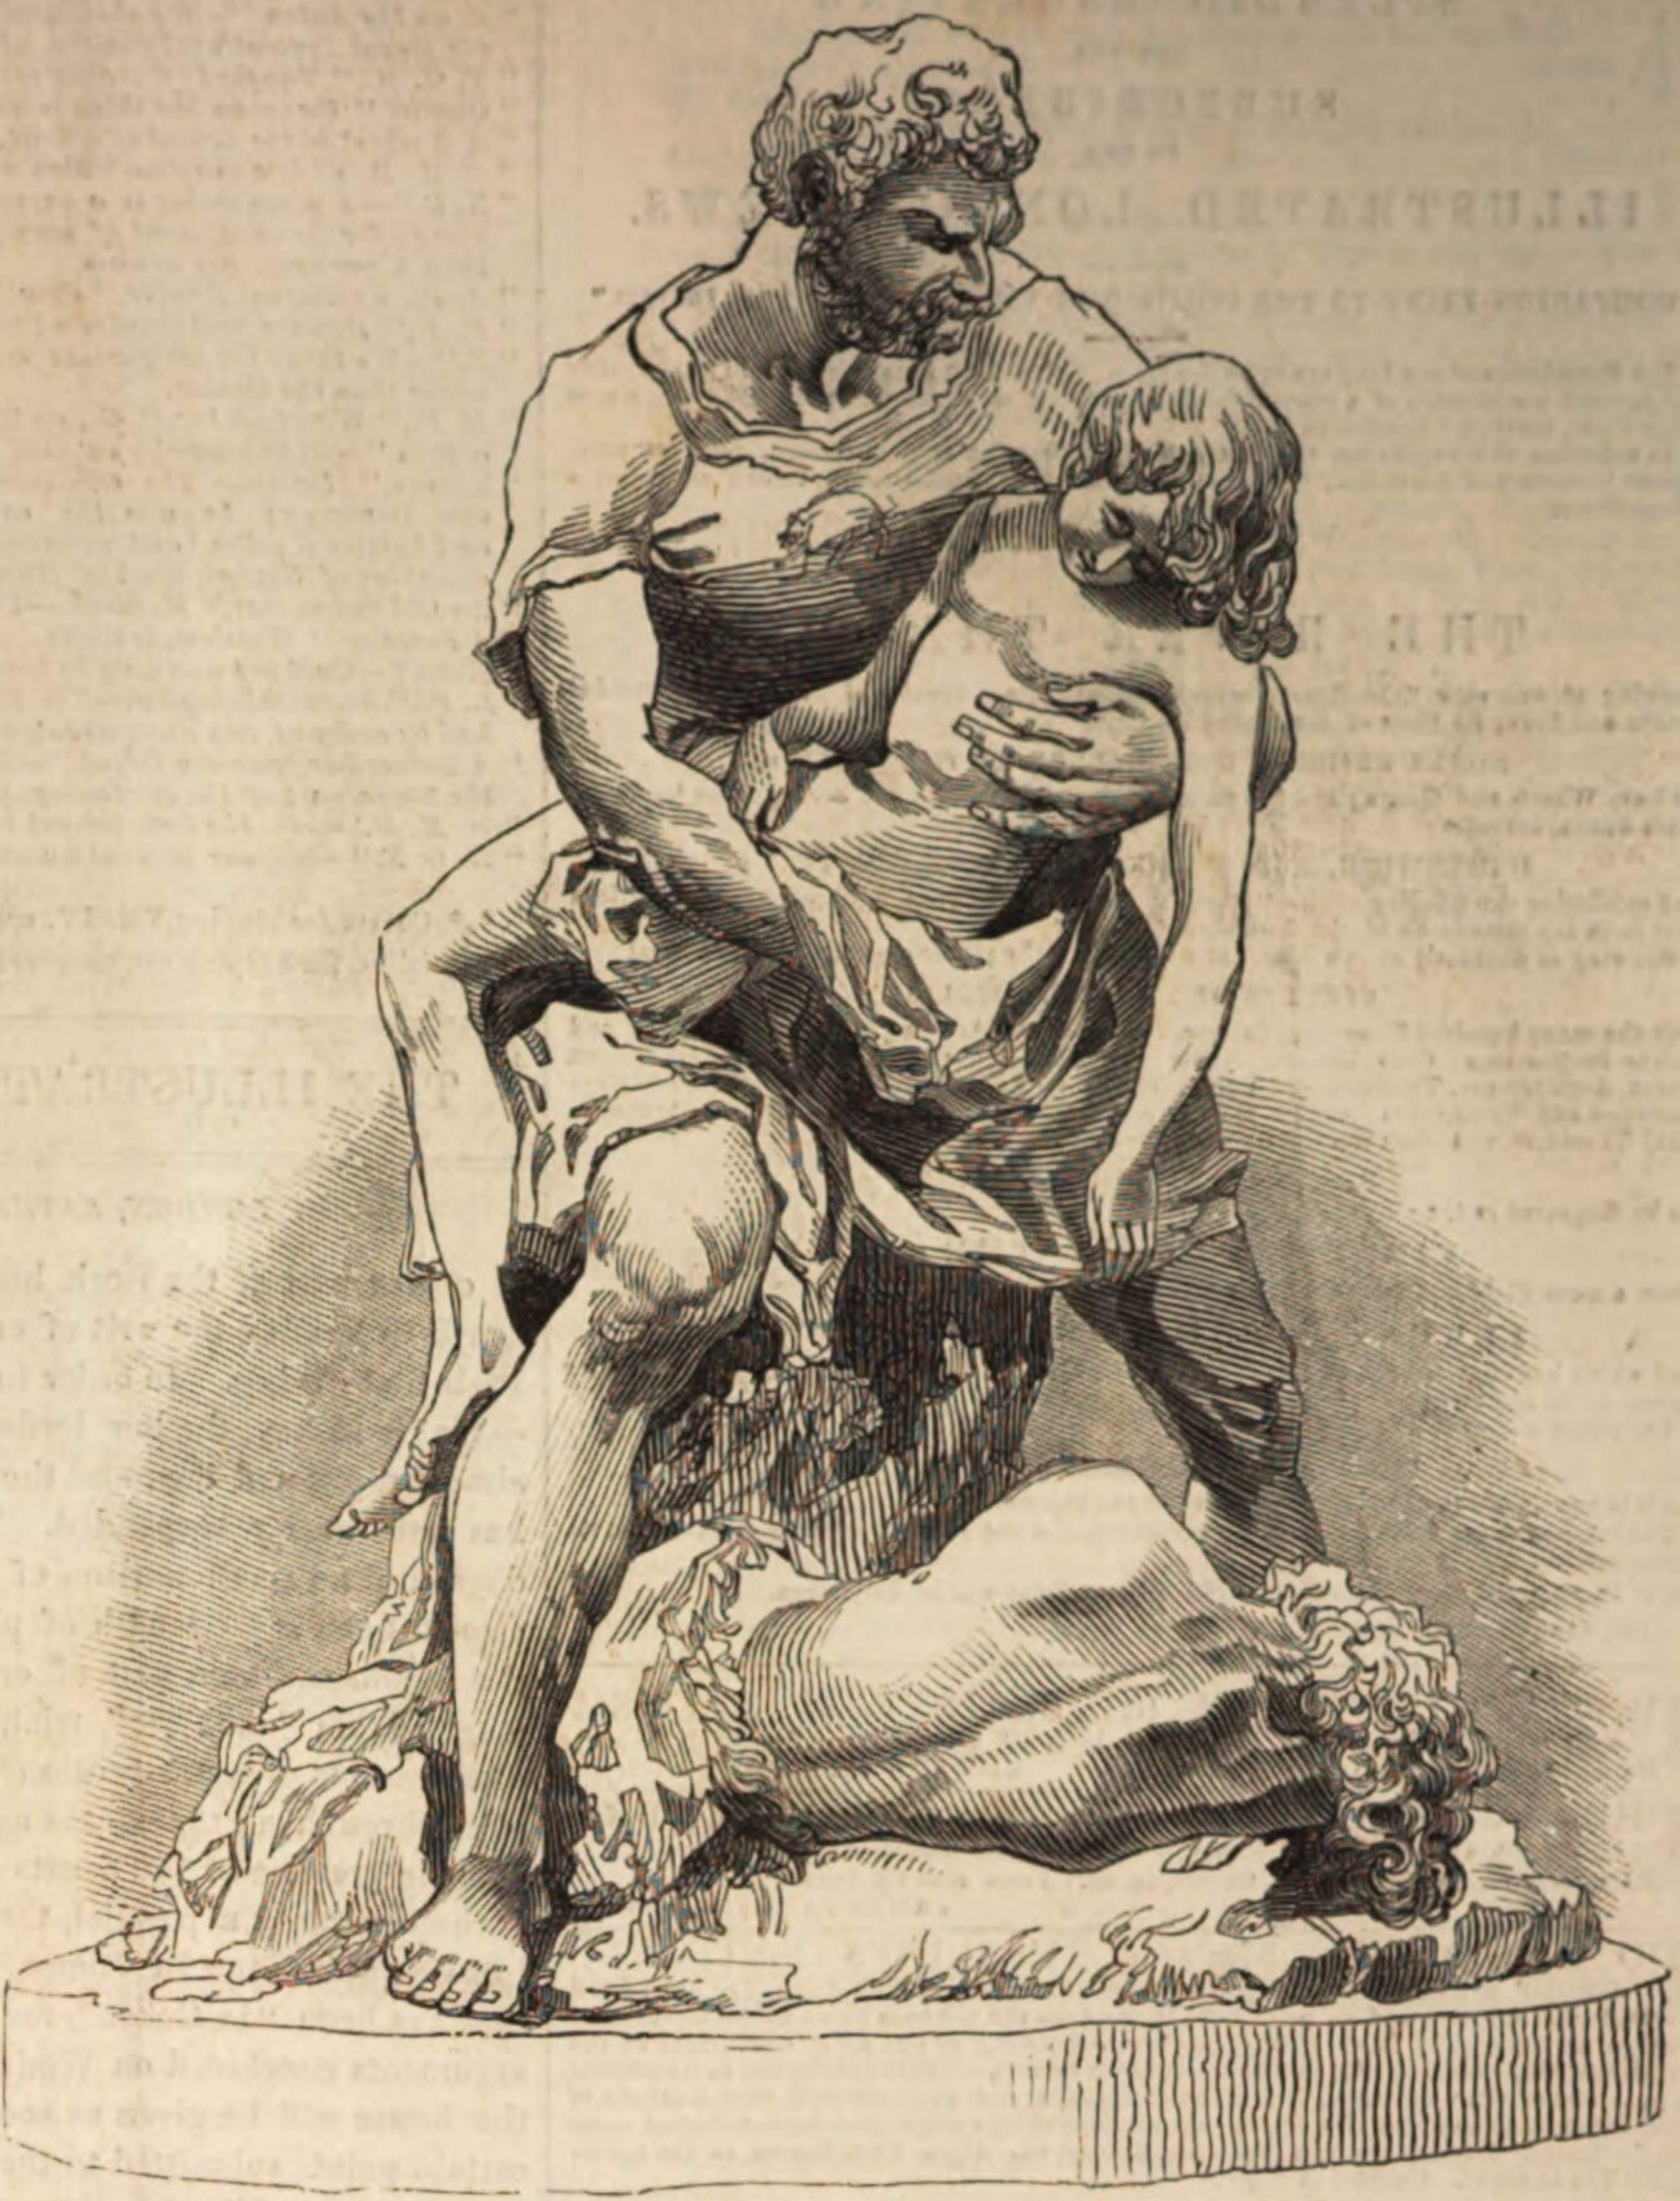
CARACTACUS BEFORE CLAUDIUS CÆSAR.



THE BURIAL OF THE PRINCES IN THE TOWER.

THE EXHIBITION AT WESTMINSTER HALL.

The Exhibition of "Works of Art sent in, pursuant to notices issued by her Majesty's Commissioners on the Fine Arts," is daily attracting crowds to Westminster Hall. The effect on entering this vast apartment is strikingly beautiful; and, as the thoughtful spectator advances up the floor of the Hall, and looks upon its walls decorated with cartoons and frescoes, and the double row of statues that divides the apartment into two aisles, perchance his mind's eye may be carried through the vista of nearly eight hundred years, or from the aspirations of British art in the nineteenth, to the crudities of Anglo-Norman civilizations in the eleventh, century—the latter being the period of the foundation of the Hall itself.

The catalogue comprises about 100 specimens of sculpture, and 84 frescoes, cartoons, and oil-paintings. We do not intend to travel by the record, but to confine ourselves, for the present, at least, to the subjects here engraved.

First is a frescoe of extraordinary merit, 3 feet 11 inches wide, and 8 feet 2 inches high, executed by Richard Redgrave. The subject is termed in the catalogue—

"Loyalty: Catherine Douglas barring the door with her arm, to withstand the assassins of James I. of Scotland." "Unattended even by a body guard, and confiding in the love of his subjects, James was residing within the walls of the Carthusian Monastery at Scone, which he had founded and endowed. Graham, of Strathearn, seized the occasion, and brought down a party by night to the neighbourhood. Seconded by traitors within, he gained possession of the gates and interior passages. The King's first intimation was from his cup-bearer, William Straton, who, on leaving the chamber in which the King and Queen were at supper, found the passage crowded with armed men, who answered his cry of alarm by striking him dead. The noise reached the royal chamber, a rush of the assassins followed, and Catherine Douglas, one of the Queen's maids of honour, springing forward to bolt the door of the outer apartment, found the bar had been clandestinely removed: with resolute self-devotion she supplied the place with her naked arm." This is one of the most vigorously executed of all the frescoes in the exhibition.

The second subject is a fine group of sculpture, by J. D. H. Browne—

"Caractacus before Claudius Cæsar;" wherein the British chief reproves the Roman conqueror with the memorable words: "Though you may wish to rule all, it does not follow that all will submit to slavery." (See "Annals of Tacitus," Book 12.)

The next subject, a truly classic production, by James Legrew, is—

"The Last Prayer of Ajax," impersonated, the lines from Sophocles, (Potter's Translation):—

"Oh, Jove! thou father of my ancestors!
First let me crush this wily juggling foe,
And the two chiefs that, with imperial power,
Command the Grecian host, then let me die."

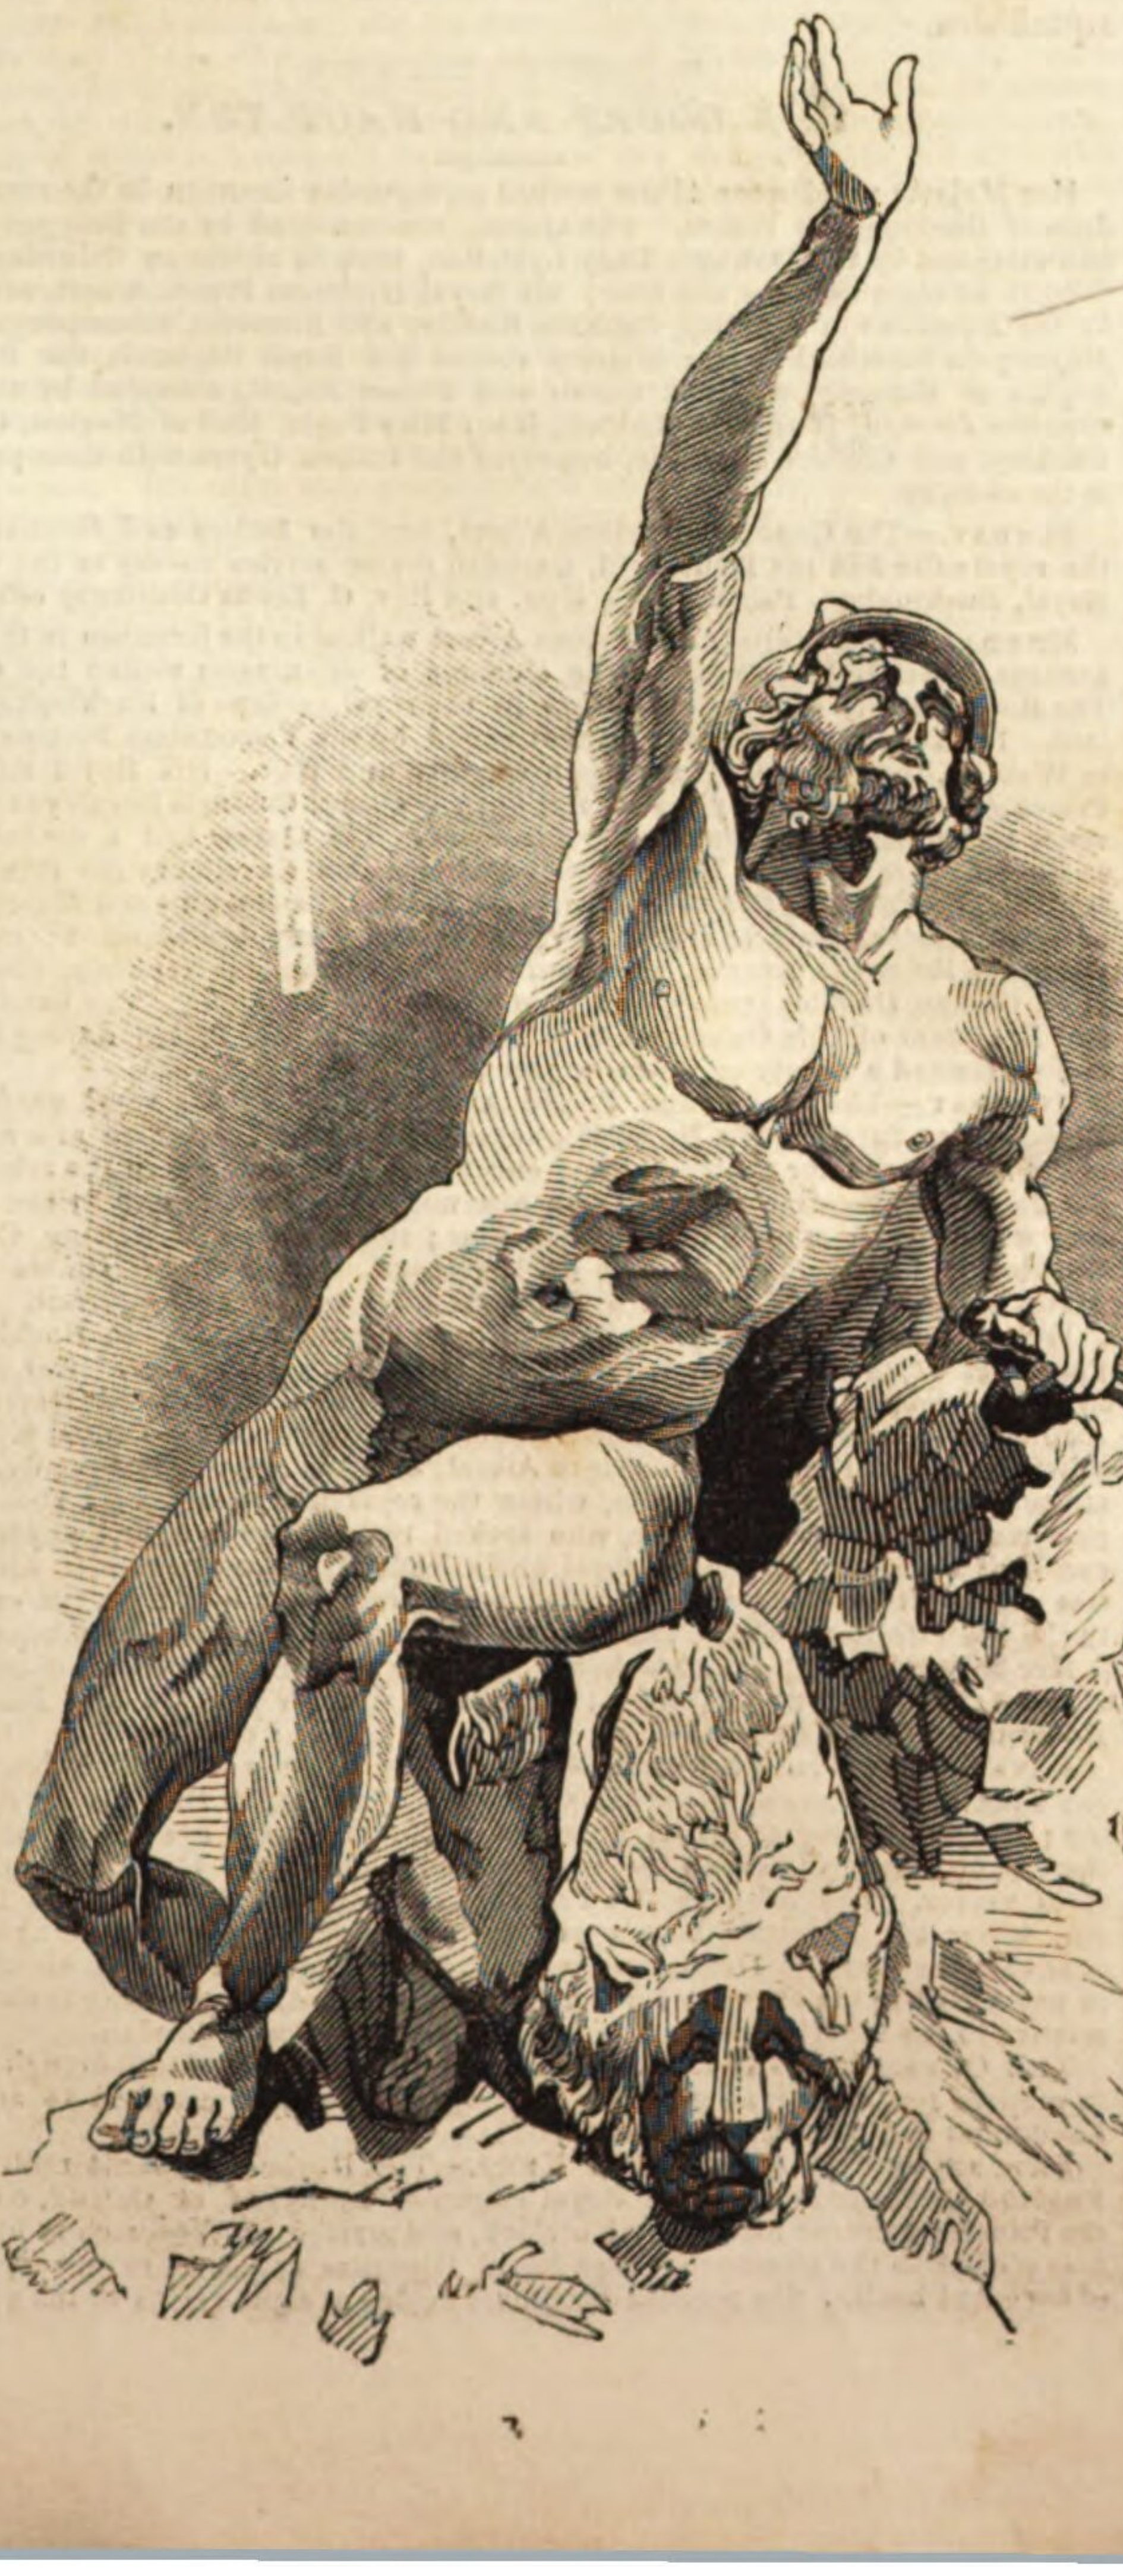
The fourth subject is a finely executed group by H. C. Shenton, jun.:—

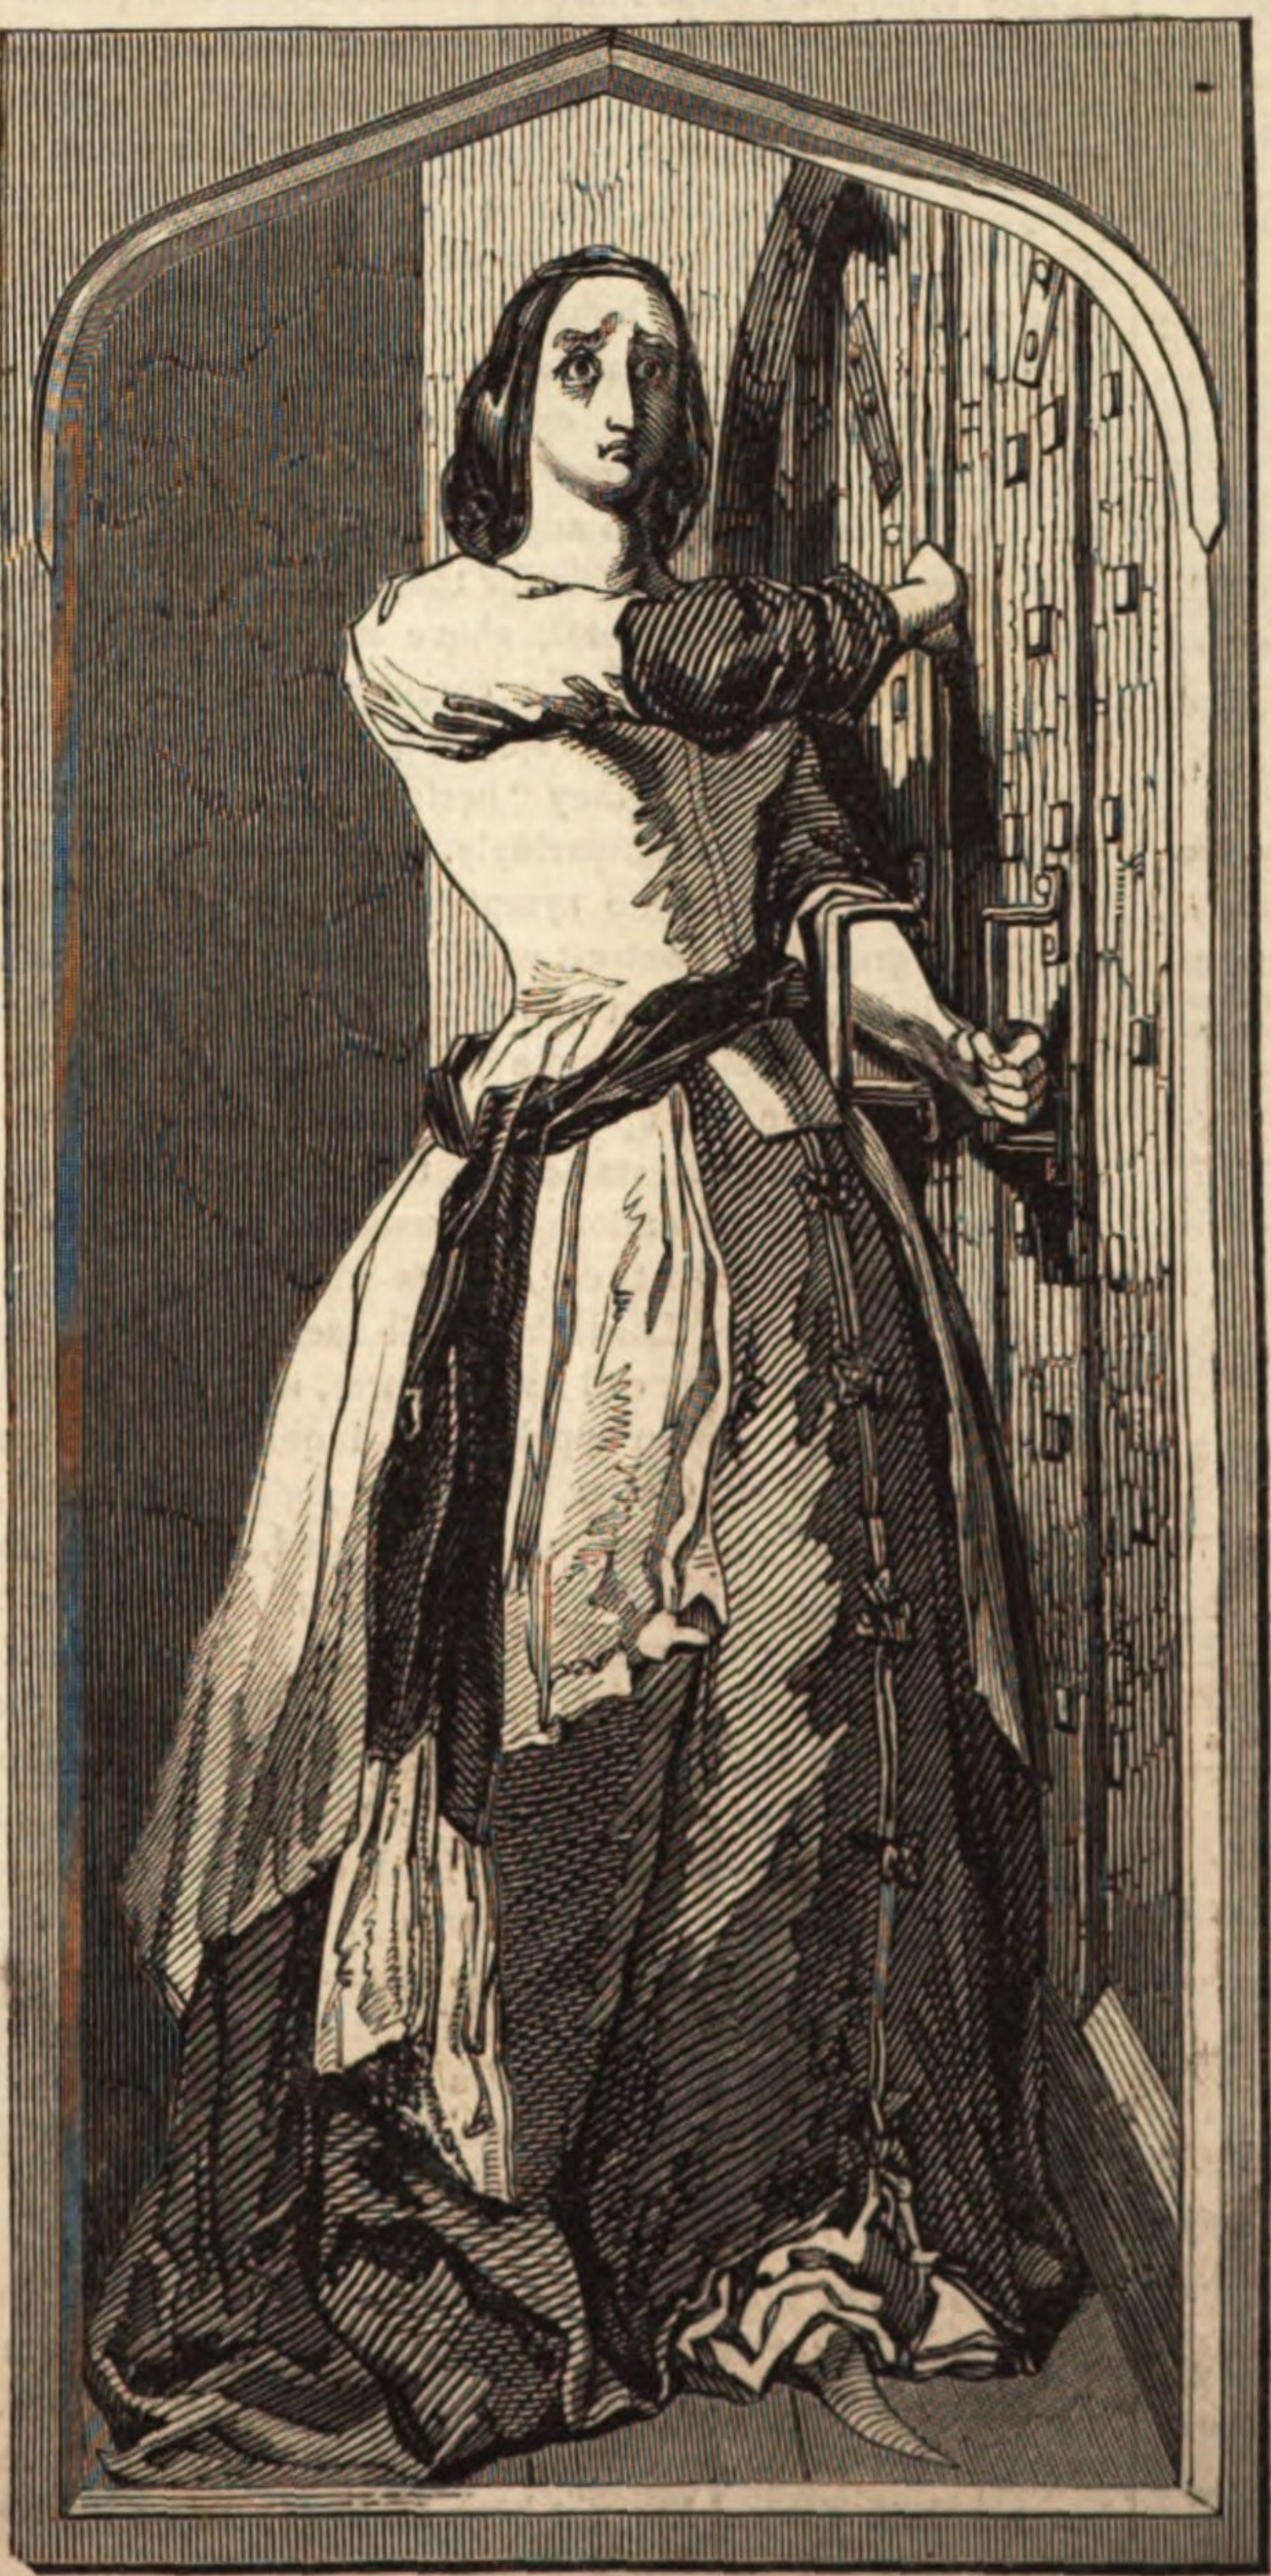
"The Burial of the Princes in the Tower of London."

"The tyrannous and bloody act is done;
The most arch deed of piteous massacre,
That ever yet this land was guilty of.
* * * *
* * We smothered
The most replenished sweet work of nature
That, from the prime creation, e'er she framed."

Vide Shakspeare's Richard III., Act 4, Scene 3.

The fifth and last subject is a characteristic figure of "A Falconer," by John E. Carew; it is, altogether, a production of great merit.





LOYALTY: CATHERINE DOUGLAS BARRING THE DOOR, AT SCONE.

COMPANION PRINT TO THE COLOSSEUM VIEW OF "LONDON IN 1842."

The Proprietors of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS have great pleasure in announcing the forward preparation of a most Superb Engraving, as a companion to their celebrated large Print, entitled "London in 1842."

In selecting this engraving, they are convinced that the subject chosen, from its paramount interest and attraction, will meet with universal approbation. It will represent a Magnificent showing at one view "the Royal-towered Thame;" its "Forests of Masts;" its crowded Docks and Port; its Fleet of Steamers; its its busy Wharfs and Quays; and the various objects of interest and beauty upon its immediate banks, including and exhibiting the winding of the "Silver Thames" through the mighty mass of buildings that form the metropolis of the Commercial World.

THE RIVER THAMES,

GREENWICH, AND ITS SUPERB PALACE-HOSPITAL;

Showing as distinctly as in a Map, yet with beautifully picturesque effect, the several

with the many hundred Churches, Palaces, Columns, and Arches; Government Offices, and Public Institutions; Club Houses, Noble Mansions, and Palatial Homes; embellished Street Architecture, Terraces, and Villas; Theatres; Railways; Parks and Public Walks; Factories and Warehouses; and, in short, a perfect Picture of the Vast Extent, Architectural Character, and Most Recent Improvement, of the

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 13, 1844.

A GREAT part of the week has been occupied by the House of Lords in hearing the writ of error moved by the traversers in the Irish State Trials. In order to expedite the affair, their lordships—that is to say, the law lords—assisted by the Judges, have sat almost night and day, and the legislative business of the house has been nearly suspended. The arguments have occupied six days, and no small portion of some of the nights of those days also! Such is the length of pleas on dry points of law, to which the arguments on a writ of error are confined. This is the last stage of this "monster" trial, which has given the world at least one example of a prosecution and a defence prolonged on both sides through all the mazes and intricacies that the statute book and the practice of the courts allow. As a criminal process, it is perhaps without a parallel, though in point of endurance it sinks into insignificance in comparison with many a Chancery suit that has been "in Court" for the better half of a century. The arguments concluded on Wednesday afternoon. The decision of the house will be given as soon as the opinion of the Judges on certain points submitted to them is made known: as these learned persons were obliged to leave town immediately after the close of the case, to attend their several circuits, an interval of some days may take place before the final decision that shall "end this strange eventful history" is made known. We believe the whole contest has been watched with that kind of interest that attaches to an exhibition of great skill on both sides, and less has been thought of the main questions involved, than of the personal and professional qualities of the parties engaged. It is almost impossible for any one who has not good legal knowledge to give an opinion on a long and dry legal controversy. Our own impression of the argument is, that the pleading of Sir Thomas Wilde was refined, subtle, and seemingly strong in many parts; whether it was sound or not, must be left to the legal authorities of the land to decide. He was most ably seconded by Mr. Fitzroy Kelly, who dealt more in technicalities, and less in general principles, than his leader. The reply of Sir William Follett was in some degree marred by the disadvantage of labouring under severe illness; it was not without difficulty he appeared at all; every facility was of course given him, and that the effort to make himself heard might not be too exhausting, the arrangements of the house were altered; the table at which the Judges sat and the chair of the Lord Chancellor were brought close down to the bar in order to diminish the distance and lessen the exertion. His weakness did not induce him, however, to slight his task or evade any point of the case he had to meet, and his reply was remarkable for that quality which distinguishes the present Attorney-General, above most lawyers—its extreme lucidity and distinctness. He compressed his arguments into something like a reasonable space; but as to some of the other advocates, we do think they "bestowed their tediousness" on the house a little too unsparingly. A most patient hearing was, nevertheless, given, and no symptom of haste or ill-temper was visible—a gratifying contrast with the scenes that were enacted from the judgment seat in the good old times of Coke and Jefferies, when political cases were before them. An impression has gone abroad, founded upon some conversational observations, that some doubt is entertained on the count of the indictment which charges a combination to cause the construction of tribunals to settle disputes between parties without having recourse to the Courts of Law. Lord Campbell seems to think that it is very much like what we call Law Reform, and that on the same grounds, the Commission appointed to inquire into the operation of the Ecclesiastical Courts would be indictable! But, as we have before said, nothing can be predicted, on an argument, of the legality or illegality of any one count of an indictment.

In another case that has created some interest, the House of Lords has this week given its decision. It has rejected the claim of Sir Augustus D'Este to the Dukedom of Sussex. The Royal Marriage Act has proved an obstacle too great to be got over; nothing could be more fully established, according to the ordinary laws of this country, than the marriage of the Duke of Sussex with Lady A. Murray, but it was a marriage in contravention of the provisions of that act, and so far it was an illegal one. The defect has been fatal to the claim; but the decision was accompanied by a declaration from the Court, that "a most grievous wrong" had been done to the mother of the claimant.

THE attempt of the Government to subject Railway Companies hereafter to be formed to the control of the Executive, through the Board of Trade, has not been very favourably received. The management of those establishments in which the Government has absolute control has not been of so superior a kind—so free from faults and abuses—that it furnishes any inducement to place more power in its hands than it has already. If it could not prevent the frauds of the Custom-house officials, nor discover the mal-practices of the Exchequer, it is not very likely that it would be either very clear-sighted, or very attentive to the immense mass of business that comes under the superintendence of the Railway Companies. Private enterprise and private capital have formed and perfected a system of transit unequalled for celerity and safety in the annals of the world; to private supervision, then, may very well be left the management of the system thus created. The railway interest has become a very strong one in the house; and it may be necessary for the Board of Trade to watch carefully that it does not obtain any undue advantages; but against any attempt to obtain undue control by the Government the railway interest seems well able to protect itself. Some of the Conservative party are connected with railways; and as private and personal questions very generally neutralize political partialities, they have on this question abandoned the Government, and voted against it. The question, however, is not yet settled.

IT is a pity that when efforts are made in the right direction they are not made at the right time, and are thus virtually defeated from the impossibility of discussing them properly, or carrying them out effectually. A bill, having a most excellent object, has just been brought into Parliament, but at such a time that there is not a chance of its getting through the house. We allude to the Field Gardens Bill, brought in, on Wednesday, by Mr. Cowper. The title is rather an affected one. Why not call it at once an Allotment Act, or by any name that better expresses its purpose, which is to let small portions of land to labourers for cultivation? All the evidence we have seen as to this subject proves the advantages arising from this system. At present it is adopted partially, and, as it seems, capriciously, depending on the will of a landed proprietor here and there, who may happen to have become convinced of the policy of giving the peasant some tie to bind him to the soil, and keep him at least one degree above that stage of destitution in which energy becomes paralysed by despair. But a partial and uncertain adoption of a good principle can never effect any general improvement; and any attempt to put it into operation on a wider scale deserves encouragement. We subjoin the main provisions of the bill, as stated by Mr. Cowper himself, merely stating that our approbation of them is not quite so unqualified as that which we are prepared to give to the object of the Act. The machinery appears to us too complex for so simple an object:—

> The bill provided for the election of a Field-garden Board. This Board should not have compulsory, but merely discretionary powers. The calculation was, that a fourth of an acre of land should be given to each person. The Field Garden Board was to consist of four persons, two of whom were to be chosen by persons rated above £10 a-year, and two by persons rated under £10 a-year. The officiating clergyman was to be ex officio a member of the Board. The election was to be for three years, but the Members of the Board were qualified to be re-elected at the expiration of that period. The Board would have the power of drawing upon the poor-rates for as much as would be necessary to defray the rent of the land; but they would at the same time be required to give good security for the repayment of that money. Should any of the occupiers of their field garden be in arrear for more than a month, they could, by a process specified in the bill, be compelled to pay. Whenever any inclosure act was passed, this Board would have the right to demand a certain quantity of land, for the purposes of this bill, upon a valuation. The land was not to be given up absolutely. The rent was to be paid to parties whom the Commissioners might appoint.

The elective constitution of the Board, and the drawing on the rates, are both objectionable features, and will retard the progress of the scheme rather than promote it. It is pleasing, however, to see that such questions as these force their way into discussion, even in the midst of measures for the protection of lap-dogs, and discussions of qui tam actions, gambling transactions, and racing squabbles.

THE COURT AND HAUT TON.

Her Majesty and Prince Albert walked on Saturday forenoon in the royal gardens of Buckingham Palace. The Queen, accompanied by the Princess Royal, and attended by the Dowager Lady Lyttelton, took an airing on Saturday afternoon in an open carriage and four; his Royal Highness Prince Albert, attended by the Equerries in Waiting, Colonels Buckley and Bouverie, accompanying her Majesty on horseback. Her Majesty visited her Royal Highness the Princess Sophia at Kensington. The Queen and Prince Albert, attended by the Viscountess Jocelyn, Hon. Miss Liddell, Hon. Miss Paget, Earl of Morton, Colonel Buckley, and Colonel Bouverie, honoured the Italian Opera with their presence in the evening.

SUNDAY.—The Queen and Prince Albert, and the Ladies and Gentlemen of the royal suite and the Household, attended divine service to-day in the Chapel Royal, Buckingham Palace. The Hon. and Rev. C. Leslie Courtenay officiated.

MONDAY.—Her Majesty and Prince Albert walked in the forenoon in the royal gardens. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester visited the Queen. The Royal Family were taken airings in the royal gardens of Buckingham Palace. In the afternoon her Majesty, attended by the Viscountess Jocelyn, Lady in Waiting, took an airing in an open carriage and four. His Royal Highness Prince Albert, attended by the Equerries in Waiting, Colonels Buckley and Bouverie, accompanied her Majesty on horseback. The Queen had a dinner-party at Buckingham Palace. The company included his Excellency the Prince Castelcicala, the Marquis and Marchioness of Exeter, the Marquis and Marchioness of Westminster, Lady Lyndhurst, Viscount and Lady Marianne Alford, Lord and Lady Robert Grosvenor, the Lord Mayor, le General Avitabile, the Right Hon. George Dawson Damer, and Captain Francis Seymour. The band of the 2nd Regiment of Life Guards were in attendance at the Palace during dinner, and performed a variety of favourite pieces.

TUESDAY.—The Queen and Prince Albert walked in the royal gardens of Buckingham Palace. His Royal Highness Prince Albert presided at a meeting of the commission for promoting and encouraging the fine arts in the rebuilding the Palace of Westminster. In the afternoon her Majesty and Prince Albert took an airing in an open carriage and four; the equerries in waiting, Colonels Buckley and Bouverie, attending on horseback. His Royal Highness Prince Albert honoured Mr. Thorburn with a sitting, for a full-length portrait.

WEDNESDAY.—Her Majesty held a Privy Council to-day at Buckingham Palace, at which Prince Albert and all the Ministers were present. Her Majesty in Council was pleased to declare the Right Hon. William Lord Heytesbury, Lieutenant-General and Governor-General of that part of the United Kingdom called Ireland. Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the infant royal family, in the afternoon, left town for Windsor, where the royal party arrived at about half-past six o'clock. Her Majesty, who looked remarkably well, and appeared in excellent spirits, returned the loyal and affectionate salutations with which she was greeted by the hundreds of persons who were assembled from the entrance to the town up to the Castle gates, in the most affable and gracious manner.

Her Majesty, the Queen, has been pleased to send the munificent donation of £50 to that excellent institution, the Association for the Aid and Benefit of Dressmakers and Milliners.

ROYAL VISITS TO BRIGHTON.—We believe there is very little doubt that the King of the French intends to visit her Majesty some time during September; and as the long-talked-of purchase of Norris Castle has been abandoned, there is no place so likely as the Pavilion to be chosen for the reception of the royal visitor. The King of the French has been expected for some time at Eu, where his Majesty's horses and carriages arrived several days ago. We hear that the Duke of Devonshire is awaiting the King's arrival at his château, to pay a visit to his Majesty, for the purpose, it is said, of receiving instructions relative to the King's intended visit to our most gracious sovereign.

THE QUEEN DOWAGER.—Orders have been received at Marlborough House to prepare for the reception of her Majesty, who is now expected to arrive in London on Saturday, the 27th inst.

RETURN OF THE DUCHESS OF KENT.—The Duchess of Kent returned to England on Wednesday. Her Royal Highness embarked at Ostend, on board the Princess Alice, at half-past six o'clock, and arrived at Woolwich at half-past four o'clock in the afternoon. Her Royal Highness appeared in the enjoyment of excellent health. She reached Frogmore Lodge at eight o'clock in the evening.

The King of Saxony.—On Sunday his Majesty the King of Saxony, attended by his usual suite, visited the city of Bristol, and proceeded to the Bath Hotel, Clifton. His Majesty, after attending divine service, went to view the various beauties of Clifton, and was particularly struck with the romantic grandeur of St. Vincent's rocks. On Monday morning he proceeded to view the steam-ship Great Britain, on board which his Majesty was received by the Right Worshipful the Mayor (Mr. W. L. Clarke), Captain Claxton, R.N., Mr. T. R. Guppy, Civil Engineer; and Captain Elton, by whom his Majesty was conducted through every portion of the ship, which excited the most marked commendations from the royal personage. His Majesty then proceeded to Leigh Court, the seat of Mr. P. J. Miles, which has been so often visited by royalty.

We understand that preparations have been made at Windsor Castle, in anticipation of the event which naturally excites great interest, and her Majesty's health is such that its occurrence may be expected within a very short interval.

On Monday afternoon the Duchess of Buccleuch gave a princely fete champetre at Montagu-house, at which above 1200 personages of rank congregated, including the leading members of the corps diplomatique, and distinguished foreigners visiting this capital.

The Marquis and Marchioness of Waterford have left town for Hamburg.

On Tuesday morning Lord Charles Wellesley, son of the Duke of Wellington, was married to the Hon. Miss Pierrepoint, at St. George's, Hanover-square. The Duke arrived with his son at eleven o'clock, and a distinguished company, after the ceremony, partook of a dejeuner à la fourchette at Apsley House.

The Duchess of Leinster gave a ball on Wednesday evening, at the noble duke's mansion, in Carlton House-terrace, on which occasion the whole suite of saloons were, for the first time, thrown open for the reception of one of the most distinguished assemblies which have congregated during the season. Their royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, accompanied by the Hereditary Grand Duke and Duchess of Mecklenburgh Strelitz, were present.

On Wednesday, the Dowager Duchess of Bedford gave her fourth grand fête champetre for the present season, at Bedford-lodge, Campden-hill, on which occasion her grace was honoured with the presence of her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester, his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, and about 600 members of the aristocracy.

Lord and Lady Brougham entertained the Duke of Wellington, Lord and Lady Ashburton, Countess of Essex and Lady Amelia Capel, Countess of Westmoreland, Earl and Countess of Mornington, Hon. A. Capel, Mr. Repton, Hon. Cecil Forester, Sir P Crampton, Miss Copley, and a large party, at dinner on Monday last. Lady Brougham had a select party afterwards.

Blenheim Palace.—The infant Earl of Sunderland, the first born of the Marquis and Marchioness of Blandford, was baptized at the palace chapel, Blenheim, last week. The Marchioness of Londonderry presented the child at the font, who was named George Charles, the names of his paternal and maternal grandfathers. Besides the sponsors, there were also present the Duchess of Marlborough and Lady Louisa Spencer Churchill, Lady Caroline Stewart, Lord A. Churchill, and Lord Seaham. The font, richly embossed silver gilt, was presented by the Marquis of Londonderry to the infant earl, his first grandson.

The Earl and Countess of Cardigan have arrived in Portman-square from Ireland, and are expected to remain in town for three weeks before going to Deene Park, Northamptonshire.

We hear that Lord Claude Hamilton, the member for Tyrone, is about to be married to Miss Proby, the daughter of General Proby.

G. Bellairs, Esq., of Leicester, has had the Stockerton estate, Leicestershire, bequeathed to him by the will of Messrs. W. and N. C. Stevenson, of Stamford. The value of the real and personal estate of the deceased gentleman is supposed to be £230,000, of which £96 000 is left in numerous legacies, and the residue to the Rev. P. Wilson, rector of Newmarket; Rev. H. Bellairs, rector of Bedworth; and James, George, and William Bellairs, Esqrs., sons of Mr. A. W. Bellairs, formerly a banker of Leicester.

Sir Robert Peel's son has arrived at Lisbon on his way to Madrid, and has been received by the Queen of Portugal with great cordiality. Her Majesty made him an offer of one of her carriages during his stay at Lisbon, but he politely declined to accept it.

A Cabinet Council was held on Monday at the Foreign Office, which was attended by all the Ministers. The Council sat three hours.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

Oxford.—The following gentlemen have been elected Probationary Fellows of Wadham College:—Rev. J. G. Shephard, Henry King, Rev. Richard Congreve, scholars of that society. J. L. Capper, Postmaster of Merton, F. M. Nicholls, and H. Weare Blandford, Commoners of Wadham College, were elected scholars. J. F. Mackarness, Postmaster of Merton, has been elected Fellow of Exeter. Henry Hayman and James Henry Eld, scholars of St. John's, admitted actual fellows, and Arthur Knox, educated at Tunbridge School, elected and admitted scholar.

Sidney College, Cambridge.—Edward Spencer, B.A., has just been elected a foundation fellow of this society, and the Rev. Hugh Fowler, M.A., on the Blundell Foundation. Charles Gutch, B.A., has been appointed Mathematical Lecturer of this society.

At a convocation holden at Durham, on Wednesday, the following members of Cambridge University were admitted ad eundem:—Hon. and Rev. John Grey, Trinity; Thomas C. Smyth, St. Catherine's; Rev. J. L. Walton, Trinity.

The Rev. Henry Wilkins Norman, B.A., Fellow of New College, Oxford, has been appointed to the curacy of Kingston Seymour, Somersetshire.

On Monday, the new chapel of St. John's, Firbank in the county of Westmoreland, was consecrated by the Lord Bishop of Chester, in the presence of a numerous congregation.

Consecration of a New Church at Tunbridge.—On Tuesday morning, the Lord Bishop of Rochester consecrated a new church at Hildenbrough, a hamlet of Tunbridge, in the presence of a large number of clergymen and gentlemen. The church is dedicated to St. John the Evangelist.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

The New Royal Exchange.—The ground between the eastern front of the New Royal Exchange, and the rear of the houses in Finch-lane, is being now built upon by the direction of the trustees of Magdalen College, to whom the property belongs. There will be a line of houses from Cornhill to Threadneedle-street, for which purpose the church of St. Benet Fink will be pulled down, the living of which it is said will be transferred to a church which will be erected on the site of what was formerly Cripplegate workhouse, Moor-lane. In excavating for the foundation of the new houses, at a depth of about twelve feet, a large quantity of common Roman and of Roman tessellated pavement was found. This noble edifice is rapidly approaching completion, and at present no obstacle is apprehended that will delay its being opened beyond the early part of September. The Gresham Committee have not as yet appointed the day, although preparations are going on to celebrate the event, so as to render the ceremony of an imposing and interesting character, it being clearly understood that her Majesty, accompanied by her august consort, will honour the city of London by opening it in person. The exact arrangements have not been as yet determined.

Post-office Committee.—The Secret Committee on the Post-office met again on Thursday at twelve o'clock, Lord Sandon, Chairman. The Earl of Aberdeen, we understand, was the first witness examined.

Association of Irishmen.—The meeting to which we alluded last week to form a society to promote social and intellectual intercourse among the Irish, took place on Saturday last, at the Freemasons' Tavern. The Marquis of Clanricarde presided. Mr. Emerson Tennent, M.P., who moved the first resolution, remarked, that whilst the Welsh and the Scotch, and even numerous counties of England, had each some point of reunion, Ireland was without the enjoyment of any such association of her resident natives in the Metropolis. He observed that multitudes of young Irishmen of genius and education came to seek for employment in England, and yet could hardly calculate upon any assistance from their own countrymen. With a view, therefore, of promoting the association of Irishmen with one another, a society was now proposed, the members of which would meet together for social and literary purposes. It was proposed that there should be at least one or two conversaziones during the session, at which an opportunity would be afforded of exhibiting the works of Irish artists of every branch—of Irish painters and Irish sculptors, to be enlivened by Irish music; but it was not intended to exclude the English from these reunions. At present it was not intended to form a club, but Mr. E. Tennent expressed a hope that one day their association would be formed on that footing. It was very properly provided that there should be no exclusion on account of religious or political grounds. Resolutions were agreed to for forming such an association, to be called the Irish Society, with a view to remedy the present estrangement of Irish gentlemen. In the evening, about seventy gentlemen who had been present, dined together, and pledged themselves to give every assistance to the society. A great many noblemen and gentlemen have promised to unite in the same object. Such a society is much wanted. The Irish have too long been estranged from each other, and it is now to be hoped that a social and cordial union will be formed among them, and will be productive of such good effects that, at least, no one will ever dream of the repeal of such an association. It is lamentable that intelligent and enlightened men should be excluded from social intercourse because religious differences may have existed between them, or, as Mr. Tennent humorously observed, "because they differed as to the proper discriminating duty between brown, clayed, and white sugar," and we feel real pleasure at the prospect that this exclusive system is about to be reformed altogether.

The Newsvenders' Annual Dinner at Highbury Barn Tavern.—The annual dinner of persons employed by the dealers in newspapers was on Monday held at the Highbury Barn Tavern. At one o'clock about 200 boys dined, and were regaled with a very substantial dinner. At about four o'clock 300 persons sat down to dinner, the repast being graced by the presence of the wives and children of many of the members of the society. The total number of persons who dined at the tavern was 529. The grounds of the tavern were thrown open to the guests, and the disciples of Discobolus were pre-eminent in the display of their skill at the classical game of quoits.

A meeting of the Catholic community of the metropolis took place at the Music-hall, Store-street, on Tuesday night, to prepare an address of sympathy to O'Connell and the other State prisoners. An address, couched in flattering terms, was agreed to, but the meeting was very thinly attended.

Mortality in the Metropolis.—It appears from the official table of mortality that the number of deaths, from all causes, registered in the week ending Saturday, the 6th inst., was 871.

Dalmas.—Since the arrival of the reprieve, Dalmas has been exceedingly cheerful, but has abstained from making the slightest allusion to the dreadful crime of which he stands convicted. His daughters have for the present discontinued their visits, and we believe, through the influence of the reverend chaplain, and the kindness of some friends, have been placed in respectable situations. The conduct of these young women has been praiseworthy in the extreme, and has gained for them the pity and esteem of all those with whom they have come in contact since the occurrence which threw them in an unprotected state upon the world.

The Attempted Murder in Holborn.—Mr. Smith, the proprietor of the shooting-gallery, 288, High Holborn, who was shot by Mr. Touchet, the brother of Lord Audley (of which the particulars are given in the police report) is still in the hospital, and in a very precarious state. The ball entered close to the spine, and about the centre of the back, without touching a vital part. As yet the surgeons cannot trace the ball, although they made every effect to do so, for the purpose of extracting it. Notwithstanding the shock Mr. Smith sustained by the wound, he was enabled after receiving it to walk, with the assistance of his son, to the cab that conveyed him to the hospital. He is in his fiftieth year, and has a wife and two sons. Lord Audley is incessant in his attentions to Mr. Smith. Besides the hospital surgeons, his lordship's own medical men daily attend him, and his servants enquire after him twice or three times a day. As regards Mr. Touchet, no reason can be assigned for the murderous attempt.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

The Warspite, 50, Captain Wallis, was the only ship of war at Gibraltar on the 22d June, but an imposing force was proceeding to that point for the effectual protection of British interests.

The Collingwood, 80, Captain Eden, flag-ship of Rear-Admiral Sir G. Seymour, will go out of harbour in a few days, and be available for any service required. She will not proceed to the Pacific until the middle of August.

The Amazon, razée frigate, and Vernon, 50, both at Sheerness, are ordered to be prepared for commission. It is reported the President, 50, at this port, is also to be got ready.

Vice-Admiral Sir W. Parker is shortly looked for in the flag-ship Cornwallis, 72, Capt. Richards Letters from her, of the 10th April, report the belief that she would reach England about the end of July, and proceed to Plymouth to be paid off. The cases of sickness which prevailed on board at Hong Kong had entirely disappeared. She was at Madras at the above date, under refit, and replenishing provisions and water for the homeward voyage. It was thought she would remain a fortnight at the Cape.

The St. Vincent, 120, Captain Rowley, was hurried away from Spithead on Monday, by Admiralty orders, to join the squadron assembling at Gibraltar for the purpose of closely watching the movements of the French Admiral. The Camperdown, 104, Captain Martin, arrived here on Monday from the eastward; she came into this harbour on Tuesday evening to be paid off.

The Queen, 110, Captain Sir Charles Sullivan, is still in commission in the harbour, and can be sent to sea on a short notice. Her present orders are to be paid off all standing.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The fair week, at the close of which we write, lavish in gorgeous weather, was also rife with good things for such as have their pleasure in flood and field. To give the latter the precedence in our catalogue, we come to speak of the turf—whose chief event was the July meeting at Newmarket. Since the great increase, both in consequence and numbers, of the provincial meetings, those at the metropolis of racing have been on the decline. Of the seven there held annually, three—the Second Spring, the July, and the First October—are on their last legs. That to which this notice applies was not the shadow of a shade of its former self The first day produced a single race! and what more had we a right to expect? The town was full of horses, but not such as people thought it prudent to expose to the casualties of Fifty Pound Plates, with the prospect before them. Another fortnight brings us to Goodwood—that El Dorado of the turfite—where one stroke of fortune decides his fate for a year at the least. As a sample of a Two-Year-Old Stake, let us take the Ham, with its 42 subscribers at 100 sovereigns each. With its half forfeit this will very probably be worth £3000; and then the Gratwicke, for three-year-olds, 100 sovereigns, half forfeit, with 66 subscribers! Here for a walk over there would be £3250!——a fortune, by Jupiter Olympus! But this is enticing us wide of Newmarket. The July Stakes—the only affair of any account of the meeting, so far as regards any possible effect on coming events—was won by Old England, beating three miserable reps, not worth the gear they ran in. The élite of the racing circle was present; and the exercise-grounds, during the morning promenades à cheval, were alive with coursers of price; but the present sport terminated, and "left no mark." In cricket, too, the current se'nnight was below its recent averages.

Better things await us on the flood. The Royal Thames Yacht Club Match for a hundred guineas Cup, presented by Captain Cocksedge, was sailed on Wednesday, and in spite of an untoward commencement—in a stark calm—it was as exciting a finish as ever was witnessed. Half-a-dozen of the Club's best clippers started, but very soon the contest was left to a pair—Lord Alfred Paget's Mystery and Mr. Wilkinson's Phantom. This rakish pair kept together like a couple coquetting through the Polka all the way down to Coal-house Point, and all the way back again to Greenwich, the Phantom winning by some seven minutes, though the lowest in tonnage of the six. This club is remarkable for its class of wager-boats, restricted to cutters of 25 tons: in fore and aft vessels of that class it is unrivalled in the world. The best of the rowing was that exhibited at the Duke of Buccleuch's fête, on Monday, at Montagu House. It had one great drawback, however, and that was, the insertion, in the conditions of the matches, of the old custom of "fouling." This unfair and unseemly practice has been discontinued by the amateur clubs, and it does no credit to the professionals.

To the business returns of racing—from the official sources some matters of interest were announced. The first of them was the fact of a testimonial being about to be presented to Lord George Bentinck for his services in exposing the intended robbery disclosed in the celebrated Running Rein case. The subscriptions are near £600 already, and no doubt they will be greatly increased. The plate won by Running Rein in October at Newmarket, has been awarded to the Duke of Rutland; and it is said there are hopes of justice being done to the conspirators jointly and severally concerned in the horse—or rather the horse which purported to be him. The evidence published in the last number of the Sheet Racing Calendar, in which he was allowed to start for the Derby, discloses a tissue of unfact—to use a courteous figure of speech, rarely to be seen in a similar shape.

TATTERSALL'S.

Monday.—The subscribers mustered in large numbers this afternoon, with the intention, we presume, of proceeding with the "settling." They must have been wofully disappointed; for in all our experience we cannot call to mind an occasion to which the term was so grossly misapplied. Many were present who had not the means, and not a few who possessed the wherewithal, but lacked the disposition to pay; others did not condescend to show at all, amongst whom were two or three whose station in society must, we take it, free them from the suspicion of being either unwilling or unable to meet their engagements. In the absentee class we must include some half-dozen individuals who may be fairly pronounced "hopeless." Of course this untoward state of affairs has awfully crippled the ring, and is not calculated to encourage "book-making" on future events. Of the little business transacted we subjoin the averages:—

Thursday.—There was an average meeting this afternoon, but nothing was done towards improving the "settling," and so little on the races to come, that the alterations were confined to the Liverpool Cup, for which The Era rose to 5 to 1, and The Poor Soldier 8 to 1. The closing quotations were as follow:—

Lord Exeter's Deodora	(Mann.)	4

WEDNESDAY.

A miserable day's sport was preceded by the sale of the late Mr. Thornhill's two-yr-olds and yearlings.

The racing attracted but a small attendance, and may be described in half-a-dozen lines:—

The Town Plate of £50; for two-yr-old colts, 8st 7lb; and fillies, 8st 3lb. Last mile and a distance of B.C.

Duke of Bedford's Glen Fishie	(Robinson.)	1

Lord Chesterfield's f by Hornsea	(Nat)	1
Lord Albermarle's Tisiphone		2
Duke of Grafton's Sister to Canadian		3

Richard Cricket, Seakale filly, and Queen of Cyprus also ran.—Won by a head.

The Thames Yacht Club.—The boats which form the squadron of this club, or rather that portion of them which usually contest for the prizes, sailed on Wednesday for a silver-gilt cup, presented by Captain Cocksedge, and of which the value intrinsically was much beyond what is usually given on occasions of this sort. At a quarter past eleven the start took place, from Greenwich, in the following order. There was no wind, and it was only the tide which could float the boats down to the accustomed point. The start was thus:—Phantom, 1st; Mystery, 2nd; Gazelle, 3rd; Enigma, 4th; Gnome, 5th; Champion, 6th. The boats, after floating down the river as far as Coal-house Point, rounded the buoy in the following order:—Phantom, 17 minutes to four, P.M.; Mystery, second; and the rest in good places. The want of wind, and the state of the atmosphere, rendered this a very dull and tedious match.

Cricket.—The Marylebone Club and the County of Hants, with Pilch and Good.—This match excited considerable interest, and occupied Monday, Tuesday, and part of Wednesday. Lord's was very well attended. The odds, which had been in favour of the Marylebone Club, on Monday morning were much increased on that eleven so soon as it was intimated that Box was unable, in consequence of the indisposition of his wife, to come up. Another player, Good, was substituted. The first innings was well fought for; whilst the Marylebone scored 118, their opponents made 90. In the second hands, however, the former completely ran away with the match. Everything was against the country eleven. The Marylebone having won the toss, went in first, and scored 118. The Marylebone, in the second innings, fetched 175, and won by 140 runs.

The Running Rein Dispute.—A day or two ago Mr. Janson, the landlord of the Fir Tree, in Whitechapel, went to Lambeth-street to ask Mr. Norton's advice respecting this affair. It appears that a Derby Sweep had been established at his house, and not well understanding the decision of the Court of Exchequer, the parties who had drawn Running Rein, insisted upon receiving the money, on the ground that that horse had come in first, and threatened an action. Mr. Norton told the applicant that he doubted whether the threatened action could be brought after the decision of a judge and jury, there being such things as verdicts for the defendants, and plaintiffs being saddled with enormous costs. He advised the applicant to pay the money to the holders of Orlando, only taking care to receive a guarantee from the parties that they would hold him harmless.

It is reported that Running Rein has been destroyed to prevent any further discoveries.—Morning Post.

At a general meeting of the Jockey Club held on Saturday last, it was resolved:—"That it being now proved that Running Rein was three years old when he ran for the Two-year-old Plate at Newmarket, Crenoline must be considered the winner of that race, and that the Duke of Rutland is entitled to the Plate.—That the thanks of the Jockey Club are eminently due, and are hereby offered to Lord George Bentinck, for the energy, perseverance, and skill which he has displayed in detecting, exposing, and defeating the atrocious frauds which have been brought to light during the recent trial respecting the Derby Stakes.—That it is the opinion of this meeting that no publication of the proceedings of the Jockey Club should be made without the consent of the stewards."

On Tuesday the 23d annual scullers match by eight free watermen of the parishes of Wapping, Shadwell, and St. George's-in-the-East, for a new skiff and sundry other prizes, was contended for in four heats. The distance rowed was from off the St. Katharine's dock entrance and round a vessel moored below New Crane-stairs, twice each heat. The fourth, or grand heat for the new skiff, lay between Joseph Church, Hermitage-stairs (yellow), and Richard Jackson, Wapping New-stairs (green), Church being the favourite. At starting Church took the lead and kept it a considerable distance. Jackson being close behind, both men displaying excellent science. When half the distance had been rowed, Jackson headed Church, and won by nearly four lengths.

A boat-race for a purse of 60 sovereigns, presented by the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch, took place on Monday, and was won by F. Lett, of Lambeth (crimson).

THE WAVERLEY BALL.

The object of this truly superb ball, was to raise a fund in aid of the general subscription for completing the beautiful Gothic monument in course of erection in the city of Edinburgh, to the memory of Sir Walter Scott; an engraving of which appeared in No. 46, of our journal.

It is difficult to name the identical person with whom the idea originated of embodying in a fancy ball the characters of that great novelist and poet; but to whoever the credit is due, we have only to say, the most sanguine expectations must have been surpassed by the gorgeous and brilliant spectacle the arena of Willis's Rooms presented on Monday night. The object of the promoters of this magnificent assembly has been fully gained. There were between 1200 and 1300 persons of rank and distinction at the ball; no less than 1438 tickets were actually entered, so that upwards of £1000 will pass into the exchequer of the committee.

In an early stage of the arrangements, the Ladies Patronesses were unanimous in their desire to limit the issue of vouchers; but, owing to the extensive demand, it was judged almost a necessity to increase the original number named by 500. On Monday afternoon, vouchers could not be procured for either love or money.

The carriages began to set down company at both entrances to the rooms, at nine o'clock, and there was an uninterrupted succession of arrivals until after one. The arrangements for the reception of the company were admirable.

On this occasion it was necessary, however, to increase the ordinary accommodation in order that the personal comfort of all present should be ensured. The supper-room on the ground-floor was appropriated for dancing, and the staircase leading from that room to the ballroom above was suitably decorated with exotics, &c., and access was gained with the greatest facility to both rooms. The grand ball-room had rows of raised seats arranged at the east end, covered with crimson, exclusively for the use of the Ladies Patronesses, and those beauties of our nobility who were to take part in the fancy quadrilles. The five costly chandeliers, and the girandoles, from which the room was illuminated by hundreds of wax lights, were tastefully ornamented with roses and camellias. In the supper-room an extended table was supplied with the choicest refreshments, and two rooms up stairs were set apart for refections of a lighter description. Several of the rooms, as well as the staircases, were abundantly embellished by flowering plants and exotics.

The Ladies Patronesses were conducted to the "Card-room." The Tea-room was the locale for the congregation of the ladies and gentlemen taking characters in the Waverley quadrille (the Marchioness of Londonderry's) so that not the slightest confusion arose.

The Duchess of Gloucester arrived at ten o'clock, the leading Ladies Patronesses advancing to meet her Royal Highness.

The Duke of Cambridge, attended by Major Stephens, came shortly after his Royal sister. The Royal Duke wore the uniform of Colonel of the Coldstream Guards, and the riband of the Order of the Garter. The Hereditary Grand Duke of Mecklenburgh Strelitz arrived at eleven.

By half-past ten, the Ball-room was crowded to excess. After Tolbecque's powerful orchestra had played the National Anthem, the folding doors of the Tea-room were thrown open, and the procession advanced in the following order, the annexed programme setting forth the names and assumed characters of the Marchioness of Londonderry's monstre quadrille, the leading attraction of the evening:—

Deplanque, the Master of the Ceremonies, having gained the desired room for the dance, Tolbecque's band brought forward an exquisite quadrille, composed by that artist expressly for the ball, denominated the "Waverley Quadrille," and dancing commenced.

The following position was taken up by the quadrille:—

Heart of Mid Lothian
The Black Dwarf
Count Robert of Paris
Bride of Lammermoor
The Monastery

Lord of the Isles
Marmion
Fortunes of Nigel
The Pirate
The Abbot
The Talisman
Rob Roy
Lady of the Lake
Rokeby
Woodstock

Ivanhoe
Lay of the Last Minstrel
Old Mortality
The Bridal of Triermaine.

The Betrothed
Fair Maid of Perth
Peveril of the Peak
Anne of Geierstein
Legend of Montrose

The fancy quadrilles of Lady Caroline Sandford and the Hon. Mrs. Leicester Stanhope were next danced in succession. They were most effective in all respects, but want of space prevents us from giving the lists.

The Duke of Cambridge and Duchess of Gloucester remained for these quadrilles, and then retired, the intense heat of the room, no doubt, accelerating their departure. The Hereditary Grand Duke of Mecklenburgh Strelitz left about the same time.

The Duke of Wellington, as usual at all the balls he now attends, retired early. On leaving the staircase, the noble and gallant Duke was asked his opinion of the ball as a spectacle. His Grace's answer was brief, but to the point—"It is the most beautiful ball I ever saw."

The Ladies Patronesses, after the three fancy quadrilles were finished, demanded a Polka from the orchestra, and then descended to the supper-room, where Scotch reels and country dances were gone through, an extra band being stationed there.

Dancing was prolonged until five o'clock in the morning, no less than twenty-six sets having been danced in the principal ball-room.

The dresses of the Waverley quadrille were scrupulously correct; and it is due to the Marchioness of Londonderry to remark that to her ladyship's exquisite taste in costume are attributed the above accuracy, as well as the success of the entertainment generally. All who remember the Marchioness's magnificent costume ball (the Court of Queen Elizabeth), at Holderness House, some years since, will appreciate her ladyship's influence in the Waverley "gathering." In many respects the dresses were equal, if not superior, to those worn at the Queen's bal masque.

Our engraving glances at the magnificent assembly, which may be said to have included all the leading personages of rank and distinction. The dresses were as various as they were superb: and even the very names of the great Novelist's productions will suggest the fitness of this statement. We are happy to record that the raising of a memorial to his genius will be extensively aided by means so pleasurable as the Waverley Ball.

FINE ARTS.

EXHIBITION OF THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

This year Edwin Landseer may be said to have assumed a new and higher style. The neat finish and elaborate handling of his well-known pictures have given way to a breadth, boldness, and free generalisation of manner which indicates an extraordinary advance in the ideal greatness of his art. Of this change (which we have not yet seen noticed) the pictures before us are remarkable specimens. In one of them we see an "Otter Speared" surrounded by a host of its natural enemies (with a portrait of the Earl of Aberdeen's favourite otter-hound), ready to avenge their instinct in his blood. This is a marvellous picture, painted in the rich, splashing, but most graphic style of Snyders. In the second we have a jealous stag, of the elk family, who, sniffing on the gale the approach of a rival lover, prepares, by "inly ruminating on the coming danger," to take the first, and fatal, advantage of his adversary. This picture is full of the poetry of art—that great power which invests the most trifling events in the great drama of Nature with interest, or even sublimity. The sensation of intense cold conveyed by this picture is very extraordinary. The white mountainous horizon is admirably relieved by the deep sky, spangled with stars, and the entire scene reminds us of Byron's "clear, but oh! how cold." The deep shadow of the elk is very effective, and the wintry desolation of the entire scene leaves upon the spectator an impression which not readily passes away. Other pictures by the same artist exhibit even more strongly the peculiar ability of which we have spoken.

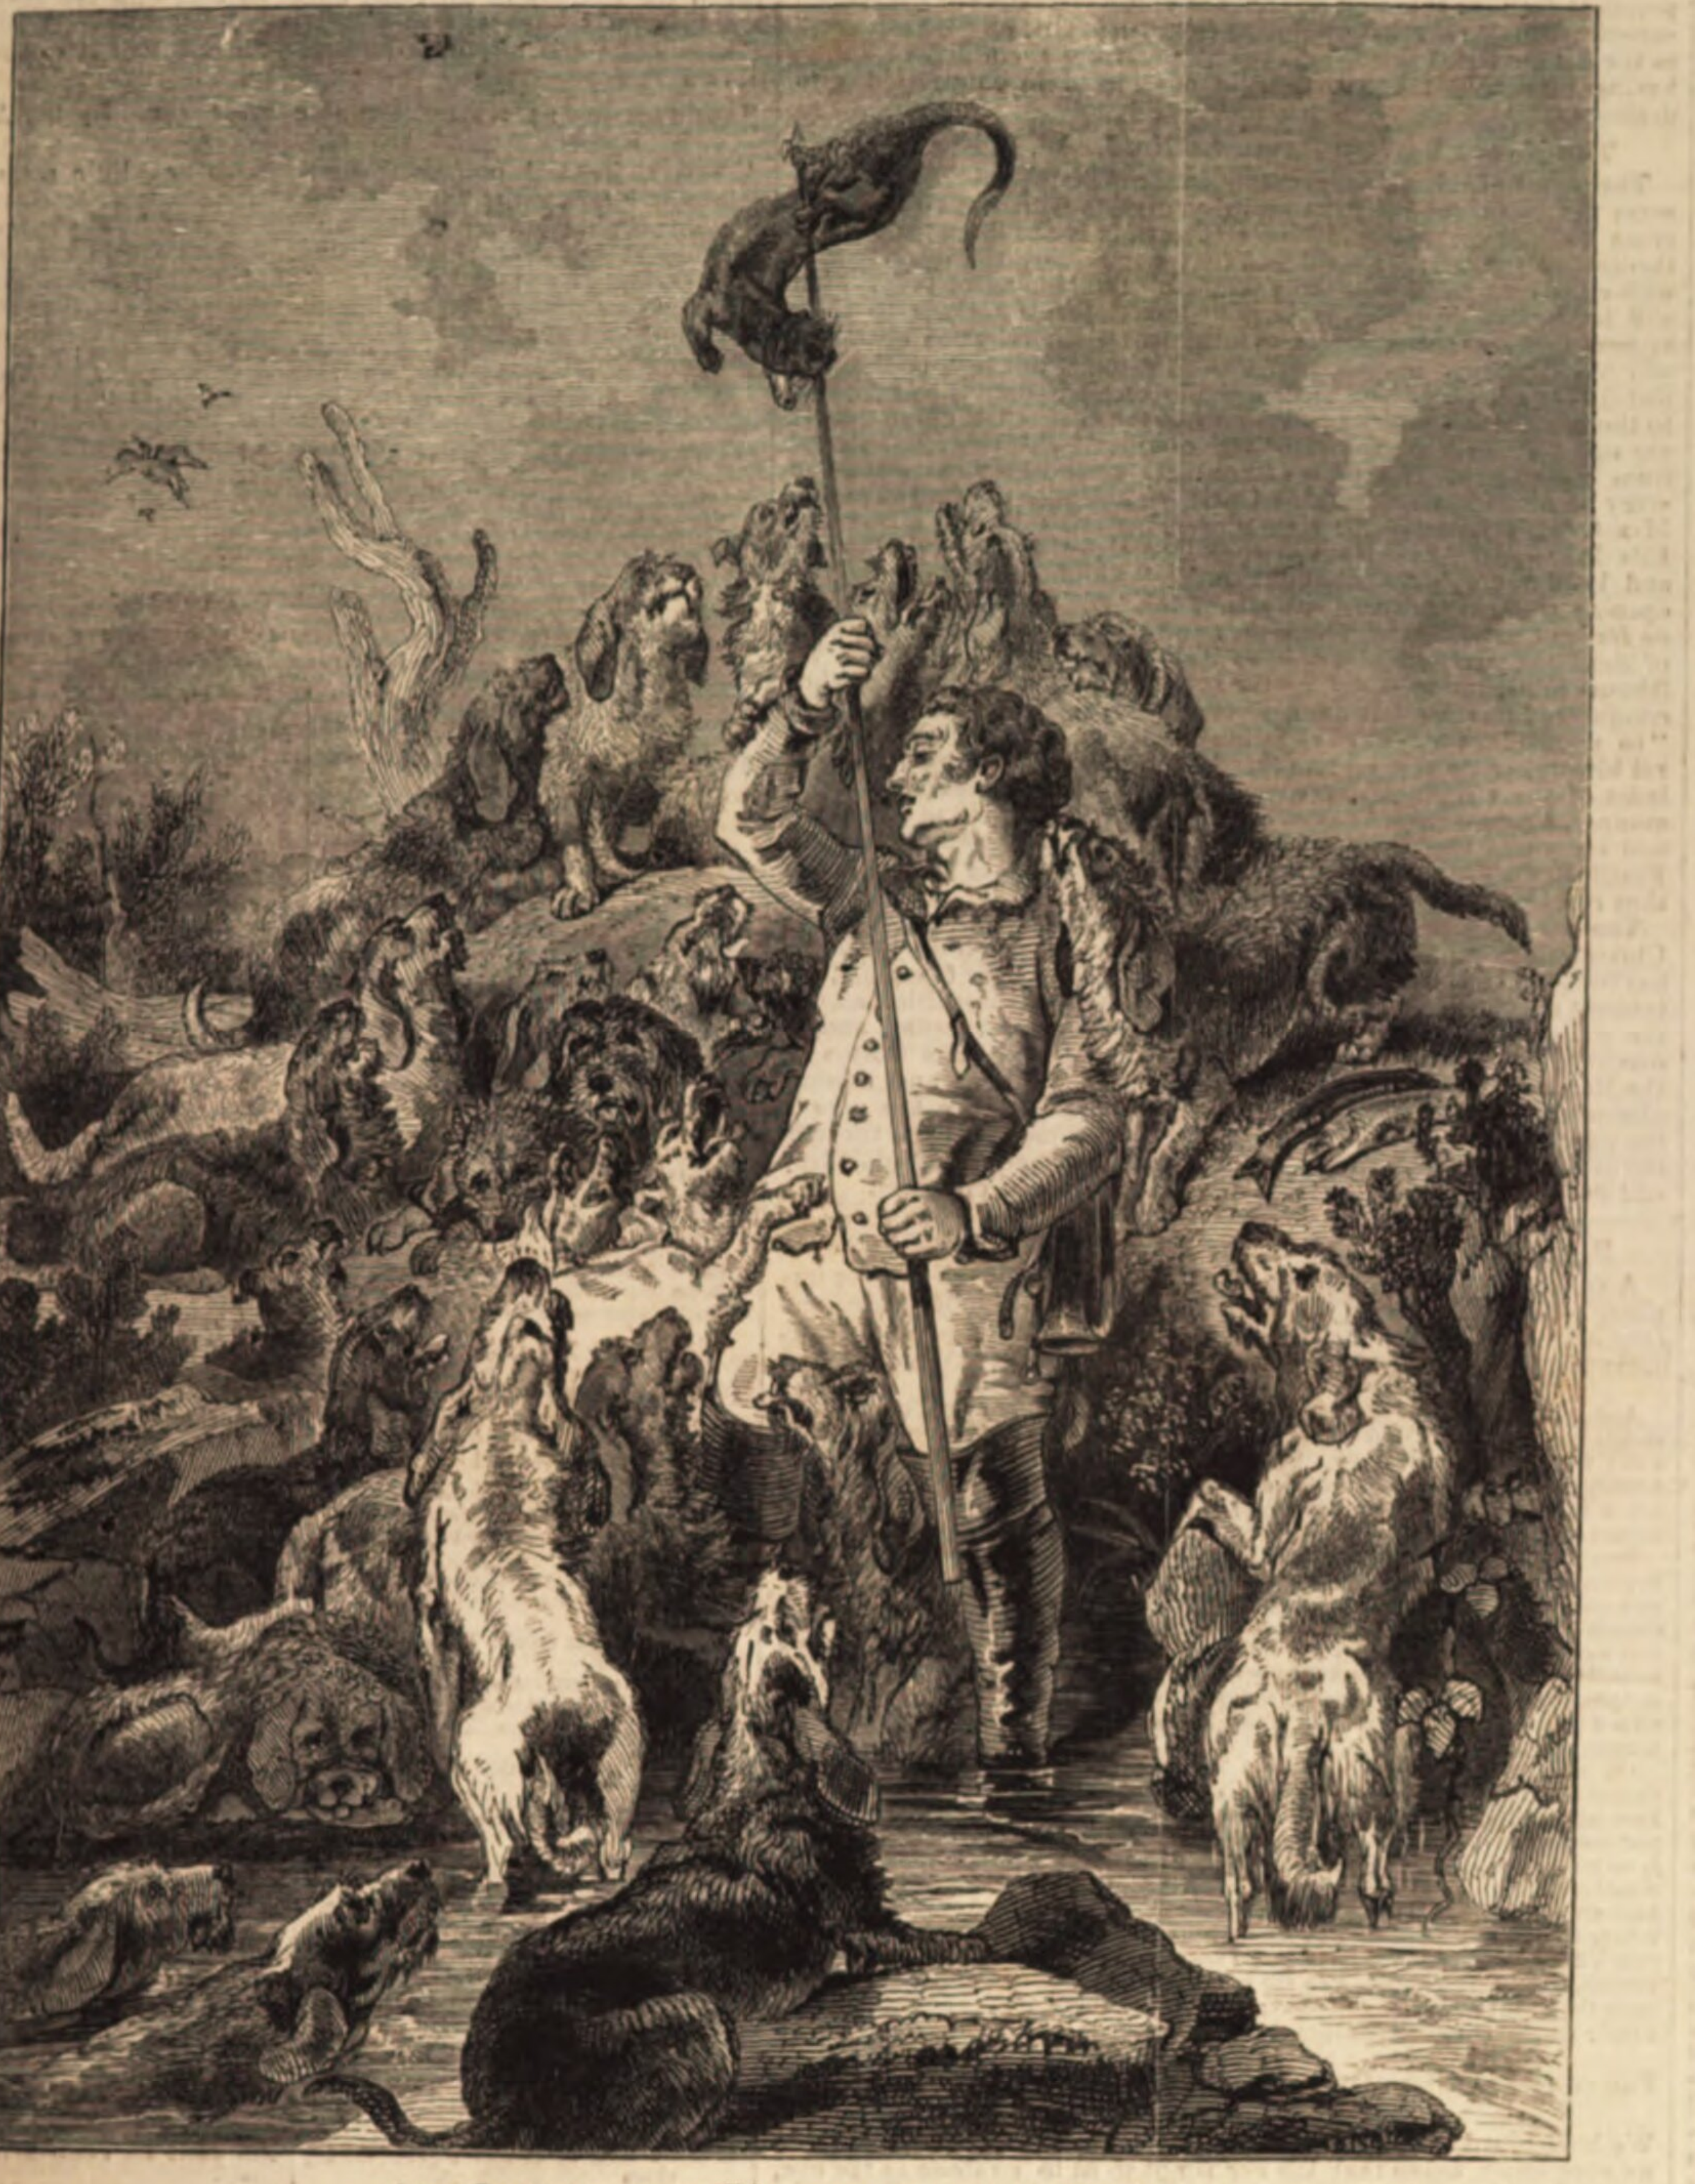
The Government and the Fine Arts.—On Saturday last, there was a sale of valuable pictures at Messrs. Christie and Manson's. Mr. Eastlake upon this occasion purchased, on account of the Government, "The Judgment of Paris," a splendid picture, by Rubens, for which no less than four thousand guineas were given. This picture is remarkable for the brilliancy and transparency of the flesh. The back ground is most richly coloured. For the other picture—a Guido—"Lot and his Daughters," the liberal sum of sixteen hundred guineas was paid. This picture possesses a grandeur of design and an intensity of expression never exceeded. Both these treasures were placed in the National Gallery on Monday, and excited much attention.

The last-received American papers say that the Polka dance had just been introduced into New York, and that it is extremely popular with a portion of the citizens from its near association with the name of one of the Presidential candidates (Polk).

A Rival to Lord Rosse's Telescope.—A New York paper states that a vessel is shortly expected from Bremen with an immense telescope, which has been manufactured in that country for the National Observatory at Washington. Some idea of its magnitude may be formed when it is known that it is contained in fifteen boxes, three of which are sixteen feet in length. The telescope that is now in use at the observatory, was manufactured by the same opticians, and though not half the size of the one on its way to this country, is of great power.



"THE OTTER SPEARED."—PAINTED BY E. LANDSEER, R.A.

The Magnetic Telegraph.—The New York papers contain some curious particulars of the transmission of intelligence between Washington and Baltimore, 34 miles, by the magnetic telegraph. A large number of gentlemen were present to see the operations of this truly astonishing contrivance. Many admitted to the room had their names sent down, and in less than a second the apparatus in Baltimore was put in operation by the attendant in Washington, and before the lapse of a half-minute the same names were returned plainly written. At half-past eleven o'clock, a.m., the question being asked "What the news was at Washington?" the answer was almost instantaneously returned—"Van Buren stock is rising." It was also asked how many persons were spectators to the telegraphic experiments in Washington? The answer was "sixteen;" after which a variety of names were sent up from Washington, some with their compliments to their friends in Baltimore, whose names had just been transmitted to them. Several items of private intelligence were also transmitted backwards and forwards, one of which was an order to an agent in Baltimore not to pay a certain bill. The electric fluid proved too slow, for it had been paid a few minutes before.

Post-office Espionage.—The excitement respecting the opening of letters at the post-office is by no means diminished, and as so much public curiosity has been created on the subject, it may not be amiss to give the following amusing anecdote from the Scotsman. It may also serve as a hint to Secretaries of State disposed to favour the practice.—"Some years ago," says a correspondent, "in conversation with the late Sir Robert Liston, I asked him the reason of all the public dispatches to our ambassadors being sent by special couriers. He said that it was because every dispatch sent by the ordinary post was opened at the Foreign office—and he told me that when he was Secretary at Madrid, our ambassador one day sent for him, gave him a copy of a dispatch from our Secretary for the Foreign Department, evidently written by a Spaniard, and desired him to go to the Minister and ask an explanation of the letter containing the dispatch having been opened. When Sir Robert gave the copy to the Spanish Minister, he without saying a word, rang a bell, and when his Secretary appeared, the Minister gave him the copy, and said in a very angry tone—'How, Sir, could you be so stupid—give the gentleman his dispatch,' and then bowed Sir Robert out of the room." Another Scotch paper also contains a reasonable intimation on the subject. It says "On Thursday last, a Criminal Court was held by Sheriff Jameson, when Ann Troup, daughter of James Troup, manufacturer and postmaster, Strathmiglo, was charged at the instance of the Procurator Fiscal of the county, with having, on or about the 8th of May last, opened a post letter, which had been posted a short time previously by a young man, an inhabitant of the village. She pleaded guilty to the charge, and was sentenced to pay a fine of £5, or to be imprisoned in Cupar gaol for sixty days."—It is noticed as a curious coincidence, that Lord Ellenborough has recently been performing the same character of Post-office spy in India, where he is alleged to have commenced a system of secret letter opening at the Post-office, in order to discover who are the correspondents who send animadversions upon his acts to the public newspapers.

Railways in Italy.—The railroad between Turin and Genoa, with two branches between that city and Milan, has obtained the royal sanction. By this road, and those being laid down in the Lombardo-Venetian kingdom, the north of Italy will be covered with railroads uniting all the principal towns of this portion of the Italian peninsula.

A New Guano Island.—The ship Leo has arrived at the port of Berwick with a complete cargo of guano from Chincha, or the Bug Islands. The captain states that he loaded his vessel (about 426 tons) in 48 hours, the guano lying as thick as 300 feet; and that, had it not been for the trouble of stowing, it might have been done in four or five hours. The Bug Islands are three in number, about fifteen miles off Pisco, in latitude 14 degrees 23 minutes S., longitude 76 degrees 13 minutes.

The Loss of the Manchester.—The body of Mr. Smith, of Drogheda, wrecked in the ill-fated Manchester, has been picked up; and also the body of a man, supposed to have been one of the crew. The wreck has gradually disappeared, by the breakers washing over it and and destroying it.

Cannibalism.—A letter from Akaroa, in New Zealand, dated January 28, states that the Mahouris, a tribe of Zealanders, have killed thirty English of the colony, and eaten them. They showed the heads of their victims in triumph. Among them was that of Captain Wakefield, a distinguished inhabitant of Port Nicholson.

A Marvellous Shower.—We have heard of its raining cats and dogs—a phenomenon of rare occurrence—but according to the Halifax Guardian of Saturday last, frogs were rained during the late thunder storm, at the bleaching premises of Messrs. Watson, Oates, and Simpson, Crimple, near Knaresborough. During the prevalence of the storm, small frogs in abundance actually fell from the aerial regions! The Guardian adds, that notwithstanding the improbability of this relation, it can be attested by several of the workmen who witnessed the fact.

The Girls.—They think of Hymen and can't help sighing. When their lovers forsake them they can't help crying. They sit at the window and can't help spying. Into private matters they can't help prying. To get each a beau they can't help trying. When together their tongues they can't help plying. At the mirror they can't help twisting, and turning, and trying. They screw up their corsets, bring on the consumption, and can't help dying.—American paper.

A Good Swallow.—A proof of the voracity of the cod may be adduced from what follows:—One was caught at Invergordon last week, in the stomach of which was found a silver-handled pen-knife in the best state of preservation, the carving on the handle being of beautiful workmanship in silver, and not at all injured by its encasement in the belly of the fish.

A Parallel.—"By gosh, Pompey," said a nigger to a brother goggle-eyed black—"You should see what I hab bought, sich a splendacious perticular walking-stick—him so fine, him nearly walk alone." "What de debil wunderful about dat, Massa Cato, for I can tell you I hab got at home a black teapot what runs."

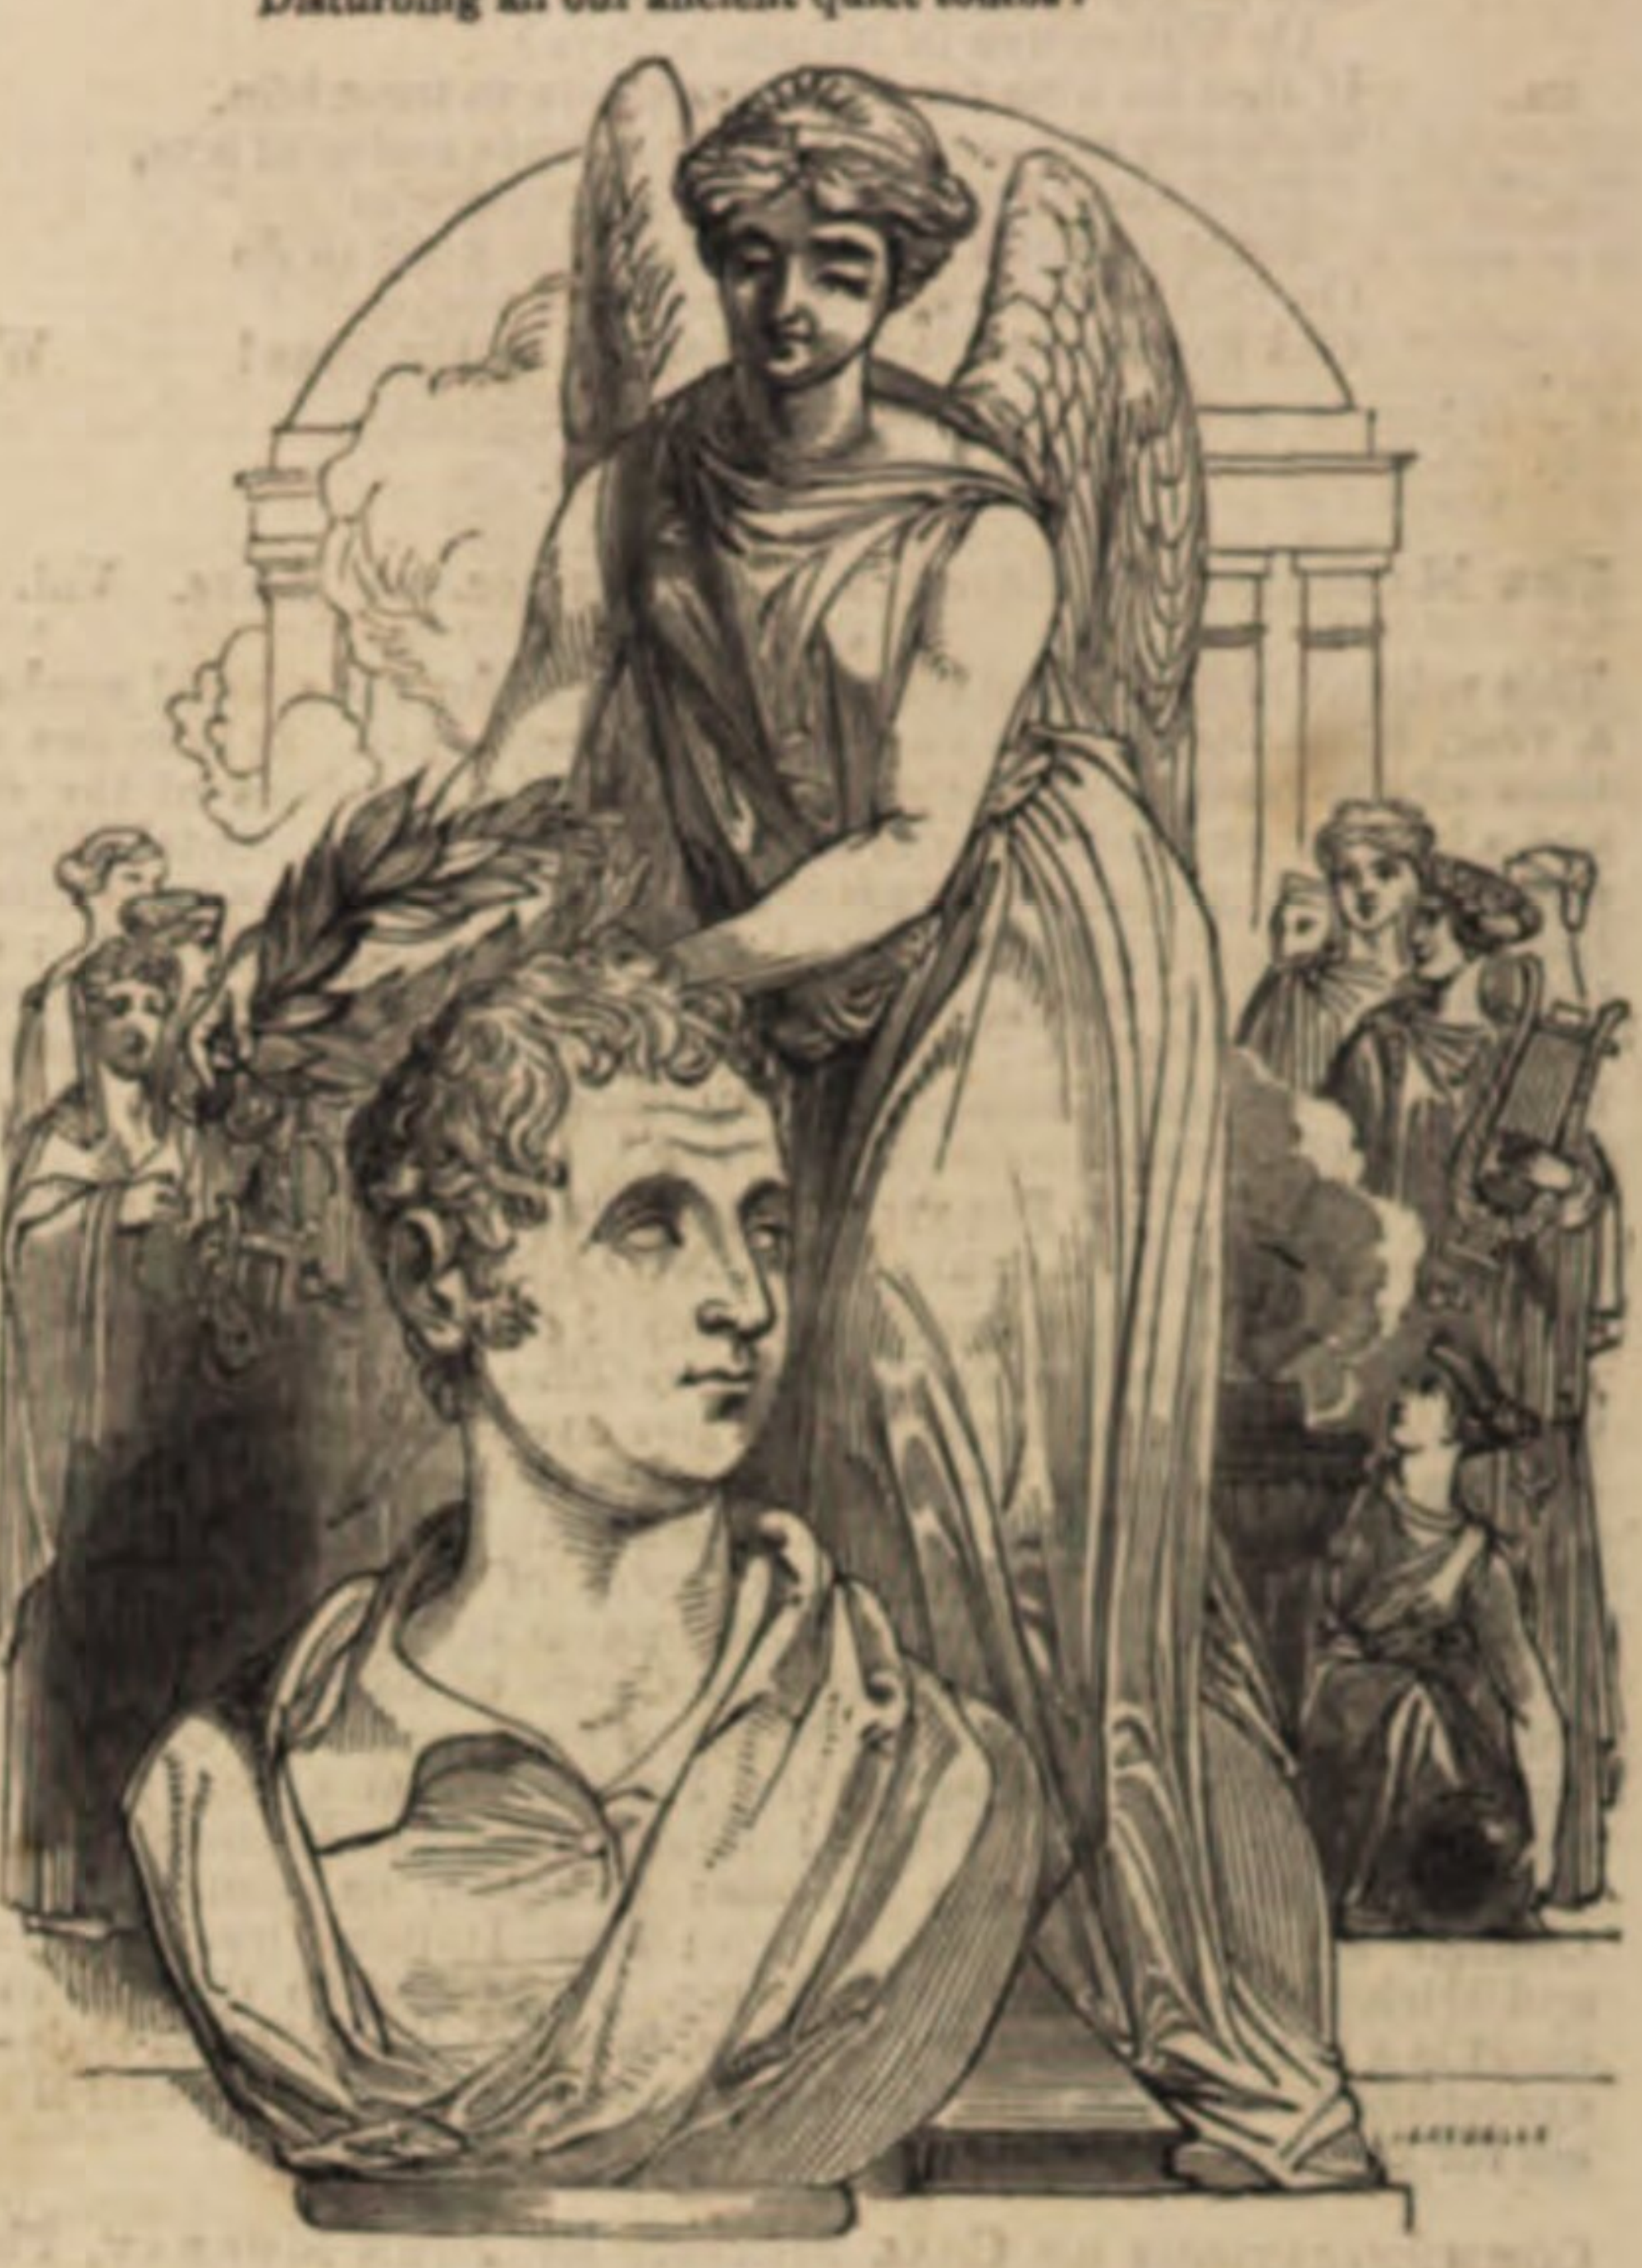
THE POET'S GRAVE!

A DRAMATIC RHAPSODY.

Scene: The Interior of Westminster Abbey, by Moonlight.

Chorus of Enshrined Spirits.

Why hold ye here this Feast of midnight Mirth
Disturbing all our ancient quiet tombs?



(Semi-Chorus.)

See! through the glimmering distance something comes,
A Stranger from the Earth!

(A Spectre appears.)

It is the Bard of Hope whose gentle smile
Lights his own footsteps through the aisle!

Chorus.

Then hail him, hail! since 'tis to greet
A kindred shade that here we meet;
We'll not repine to break our rest
When Campbell comes to be our guest!
"Immortal amaranth" is wreath'd
  Around his head—he's doom'd to be,
  Like us, of Mind's eternity!
A Poet's breath he always breath'd!
Wake! Handel, wake! and let the organ's swell,
With strains undying, this our welcome tell!

First Voice.

When in the lap of Poesie
I was a babe, I chanc'd to spy
A starre, precursor of the morn,
Gentilly lighting every thorn
That had a dew-drop to reflect
The beauty of its mild aspect!
I ne' had English to bestowe
Upon its name, but now I knowe
'Twas Hope, for here its Genius comes
With self-same light to gild our tombs!

Second Voice.

Certes, I would have held on my swete sleepe,
  Un'customed to the duties of the morn:—
But waking up, I have no cause to weepe,
  Now that I finde Death's minister hath shorn
One of Dan Phœbus' sunniest locks and sent
  The golden ringlet heere to deck our graves—
A laurel branch with many a tear besprent
  It doth appear, and high around there waves
That scarfe of beautye which the clouds put on,
  Hope's symbol—the mixt rainbow, whose blent hues
So softly paint the circuit of the sonne
  Wide-arch'd across the eastern sky when dews
Of evening weep to see his early fall:—
  Welcome, Great Poet! to our Sacred Hall!

Third Voice.

Substance, not semblance of that alchymy
By which strange things unite in harmony,
While to the future did thy Muse intend
Fond Memory behind, a faithful friend,
Follow'd and wept a consecrating tear,
Embalming thee with us for ever here!

Fourth Voice.

Ye old Cathedral aisles,
  On whom new lustre's shed
By this unsent-for Poet's smiles,
  Lay his head
By those kindred spirits He
Rival'd so in witchery
Of magic, spell-wrought Poesy!

Chorus.

Sleep! gentle shade!
  Within thy honour'd Tomb!
The wreath that Fame bestow'd on Thee
Is doom'd to live eternally—
  It cannot fade,
    For every Muse has bid it ever bloom!

(The Moon becomes obscured—Silence and darkness fill the Abbey walls.)

FRENCH PRESUMPTION!

AN IMPROMPTU.

Incipit optare, et totis Quinquatribus optat.

The Prince de Joinville longs to have a shot
  At our old British tars he says:—
Has he the Shannon's Chesapeake forgot
  Or Villeneuve in Nelson's days?
If that he wish for something rare to treat him,
We'll boy not man our herring boats and beat him,
  Bind him then afterwards apprentice to
  Some collier's mate to teach him what to do
On that proud element which but obeys
Old England's Flag as Sovereign of the Seas! W.

LITERATURE.

The Magazine of Science and School of Arts. Vol. V. Brittain.

This volume contains the collected numbers for the several weeks of a year, illustrated with upwards of 200 wood-cuts. It inlcudes notices of the leading inventions and scientific novelties of the day, and a host of new facts in natural history and experimental philosophy, artistical processes, ornamental manufactures, and the arts of life. The work is soundly edited by Mr. G. Francis, F.L.S.; and the information is popularly conveyed: perhaps, the best feature of the magazine is its great number of processes and practical instructions in the operative arts. It is published at such a rate as to be a marvel of cheapness.

Pocket Chart of Foreign Architecture. By Archibald Barrington, M.D. Bell.

In this chart, the exemplars are arranged chronologically, so as, by a pictured representation, to show the relative antiquity of the architecture of different nations; and to give examples of the Grecian and Roman orders, and of the several styles of architecture which have successively prevailed in various countries. Thus, as Egyptian specimens, we have portions of the temples of Tentyra and Latopolis, one of the Carnac obelisks, a Memnonium statue, and the colossal head of the Sphynx; as Indian, the Caves of Elephanta; as Celtic and Cyclopean, Carnac, Stonehenge, Abury, and Kits Coty House. The Grecian is represented by the Parthenon, at Athens; the Roman, by the Arch of Trajan; Byzantine and Romanesque, by Churches at Ancona and Worms; Pointed, or Gothic, by the Church of St. Ouen, at Rouen; and Italian, by the Gondi and Michaellozzi Palaces at Florence. Appended to the key to the chart is a list of buildings in London, in which the different styles are exemplified Altogether, this must be regarded as a very useful little aid for the inquiring traveller.

Communications on Coal Mines. By John Murray, Ph.D. Hamilton, Adams, and Co.

This pamphlet contains a series of sensible letters, addressed to the South Shields Committee for investigating the causes of Accidents in Coal Mines. The topics are the "After-damp, and its remedies; scientific instruments; ventilation; safety-lamps; and a substitute for gunpowder, in blasting coal." There is, likewise, a Supplement of useful hints on warming and ventilating churches, and other public buildings. Dr. Murray's unwearied scientific benevolence deserves honourable mention; and this production of a few pages is a portion of his wisdom-tempered scheme.

Factories and the Factory System. By W. Cooke Taylor, LL.D. How.

This well-timed brochure may serve to enlighten "the plain country gentlemen" of a certain house upon "that form of industrial organization which is usually called 'The Factory System,'" which, however, it neither attacks nor defends; but it explains what its nature is, and what are its results. The question is, at this moment, of paramount importance; and, as Dr. Taylor's is not a partisan pamphlet, but has been drawn up from parliamentary documents and personal examination, its circulation will, doubtless, effect great good.

A Guide to Life Assurance. By A. Young. Groombridge.

A pamphlet, containing the origin and progress of the system of Life Assurance, its working and benefits, with directions for effecting a policy—matters of considerable importance in a community of saving habits, such as are the English people.

Remedies Suggested for some of the Evils which constitute "the Perils of the Nation." Seeley and Co.

We have little faith in state doctors, even when regularly "called in;" and crotchety schemes upon paper are not a whit less valuable in our sight. The present volume, however, of nearly 500 pages, appears by its goodly store of facts illustrating the author's position, to be worthy of careful examination. It is divided into two sections—the State of the Nation and Remedies Suggested. The author sets out by showing the vast wealth and capability of the country, whilst the great bulk of the population is immersed in misery and disaffection. He next aims to prove the root of the evil to be the neglect of the Bible, and the setting up of the writings of political economists instead; the growth of the evil to be the idolatry of wealth and money-making; and the evil in its fruit, to be selfishness and oppression, as shown in our agricultural, factory, and trading districts. The remedies suggested are the restoration of God's Word to paramount authority; church extension and national colonization; the lightening of the labour-market; the cottage allotment system; improvement of the dwellings of the poor; amelioration of the New Poor Law; and the advancement of morals. In the latter, the state of the marriage law, beer and gin shops, cigar shops, neglect of Sabbath observance, and railway travelling on Sundays, come in for the author's several animadversion. Nevertheless, he does not probe the wound and leave it to heal of itself; but he suggests a remedy, which, with his recapitulation, fills one hundred pages. Of course, the examination of their soundness would far exceed our limits; but, we repeat that the book is well stored with facts and authorities, so that the reader may judge how far the author's inferences are correct. Usually, books of this class are made up of opinions unsupported by other than the writer's ipse dixit, and accordingly of little worth.

Records of Israel. By Grace Aguilar. Mortimer.

These "Records" consist of two tales "of a people of whose modern history so little is generally known, that the word Jew is associated only with biblical and ancient recollections, or as connected with characteristics, feelings, and spiritual incitements, wholly distinct from those which relate to man in general." The first is a story of the celebrated Edict of 1492, made at the instigation of the inquisitor, Torquemada, by which from half a million to eight hundred thousand unconverted Jews were banished from Spain; this being the heaviest affliction which had befallen the Jews since the destruction of their Temple, and final dispersion. In the second tale, of 1755—"The Escape"—the incidents and actors are taken from the history of the Jews during their secret existence in Portugal and Spain. The author is evidently of the people whose cause she so zealously and gracefully advocates in this little volume; and, as its general object is to correct some vulgar errors concerning Jewish feelings, faith, and character, we hope the work may be extensively circulated.

A Brief Historical Account of the Castle and Manor of Sudeley, Gloucestershire. Okell, Tewkesbury.

In No. 99 of our journal appeared a view of Sudeley Castle, with some descriptive details, which appear to have been borrowed, by a Correspondent, without acknowledgment, from the little work before us. This explanation is due to its author; and we are pleased to gather from him that not only is the castle being architecturally restored, but the walls are to be re-hung with tapestry, the windows refilled with ancient stained glass; and some very interesting additions to the pictures have been made from the celebrated Strawberry Hill collection. The "brief account" is carefully compiled, and is indispensable to the visitor of taste to Sudeley.

Spring Buds, Summer Flowers, Autumn Leaves, and Winter Hours. By Samuel Shepherd, F.S.A. Hatchard and Son.

A small volume of poems and sonnets, written at various periods during the space of thirty years; and now published under distinguished patronage, to which, by their religious and moral tone, they are entitled.

The Hand-Book to Paris. Eighth Edition, Enlarged. Strange.

The great merit of this guide is, that it contains much practical information upon matters likely to be serviceable to the traveller in France; and, as the author has lived in that country more than 20 years, and gone over the ground which he describes at least fifty times, his little volume is entitled to special mention.

Electrical Experiments. By S. Francis, F.L.S. D. Francis.

This is a cleverly arranged collection of some five hundred experiments in the science of Electricity, assembled from various accredited sources, as well as from the author's own practice; he having been accustomed to make all his own apparatus, and to lecture on natural philosophy, for many years. His treatise is stated in the preface to contain more experiments and illustrations than any other work upon the subject; and all the facts that are known with certainty, relative to frictional electricity. When we consider the importance of electricity during the last few years, and its daily increasing attractiveness in explanation of the most stupendous phenomena, we need scarcely recommend this work to the reader's attention: it is neatly printed, and liberally illustrated with wood-cuts.

A Treatise upon the Practical Drainage of Land. By Henry Hutchinson. Houlston and Stoneman.

Draining, as one of the first principles of Agriculture, has, of late years, excited considerable attention, both as to its importance and the mode of executing it. The volume before us is the work of a practical drainer: it is well arranged in sections treating of the several varieties of drainage. that on Boring Artesian Wells, or "bore-holes," as the author terms them, is very striking, from the utility of boring having been as yet but very little considered in connection with drainage.

The North British Review. No. I. W. P. Kennedy.

The object of this new appearance in the "Periodical" field is "to meet the increased intelligence, in connexion with the strong religious feelings of the age." Nevertheless, it is not intended to be a theological journal: "no subject that can occupy the interest of a well-cultivated mind will be excluded. But topics of every kind will be treated by individuals accustomed to view them in their highest relations; and papers of a more strictly religious character will be frequently introduced," though without advocating the distinguishing peculiarities of any particular sect, and merely by referring to those great principles upon which all the evangelical communions are agreed. Such are the principles of this new Review, just issued from Edinburgh. Its table of contents presents a most attractive array of first-class subjects, as Cuvier—Ethiopia—the Corn Trade—Mrs. Grant's Letters—the Crusades—Tractarian Poetry—Domestic Life in Sweden—Sewell's Christian Morals—the Policy of Party—and Lord Jeffrey's contributions to the "Edinburgh Review." The opening paper contains an analysis of the brilliant Eloge Historique de Baron Cuvier, by M. Flourens, Secretary to the French Academy of Sciences, and includes a brief history of the life of Cuvier, his labours in natural science, and the splendid discoveries to which they conducted him: for, "it was reserved for Cuvier," says the reviewer, "to show that the laws of classification, and the philosophy of natural history, could rest on no other foundation but an intimate knowledge of the structure and organization of natural bodies. In this manner, Comparative Anatomy became the handmaid of Zoology; and on these two sciences did Cuvier erect the new scicnce of Fossil Remains, which has itself become the basis of Geology, and thus revealed to us so many wonders."

The second paper is a resumé of Major Harris's Journey to the Christian Court of Shoa, in Abyssinia. The article on the Crusades has for its text-book Michaud's celebrated Histoire des Croisades, the interest of which has been resuscitated of late by a disposition among the writers of La Jeune France to applaud the Crusades, and to overawe the suffrages of all history against them. The Poems of the Rev. Mr. Faber and Lord John Manners, "ardent and accomplished disciples of the Oxford school of theology," are the pegs of the paper on Tractarian Poetry; and Miss Bremer's novels, those of the article on Swedish life. The concluding paper on Lord Jeffrey and the Edinburgh Reviewers is a sparkling piece of criticism.

Facts and Fancies. By George Godwin, F.R.S., &c.

A volume of gracefully written tales and sketches, as its title implies, alternating fiction with truth; replete with good, taste, and forming a very pleasing acquisition for the drawing-room table. Here is a specimen:—

POMPEII.

And this is Pompeii? Magnificent desolation! Before me, in solemn majesty, stands the Temple of the Goddess Fortune; behind me lies that which was once a city, lifeless and motionless—a body without a soul. The noonday sun blazes fiercely in the heavens; the world is up and stirring, but here it is still as night; not a bird, not a thing of life is there to break the melancholy, sepulchral silence.

Two thousand years ago, a countless multitude occupied this place, full of life, hope, and joy—possessing the same powers, prejudices, and passions which now rule us; nay, on this very step may Cicero have stood, surrounded by listening crowds; who have all perished, leaving little save these stones to tell of the things that were. I feel awe-stricken and heart-sick; and dare not to move, lest my own footfall should make more dreadful the stillness which exists. Whence comes this sickness, this involuntary yearning of the heart? It is from sympathy with those who are as I must be: it is from innate knowledge of mine own evanescent nothingness.

On a heap of rubbish at my feet lies a small ring, which once perhaps bedecked the finger of some proud Pompeian dame! that little worthless bauble has here lain buried, while twenty generations of the rich and miserable, the virtuous and the bad, have passed from off the earth. That is unimpaired; of them there is no trace; the elements which composed their bodies have entered into other combinations, and their original form is lost. Stay! In nature nothing is or can be destroyed; it may be changed by commixture in proportion and in appearance; it may be now as air and then as water; still the same particles are in being, and ever will be until the end. Here then I see consolation; their minds (whether in heaven, whether in paradise with the houri, or whether animating some other form upon the earth) must also still exist; and those whom I have deplored are not dead; they have merely changed their dwelling-place.

French—Spanish—German—Italian—&c., without a Master. Gilbert, Paternoster-row.

We have heard of hand-books to the Continent without a guide, but we very much opine that the ear is not so fit to go alone as the eye, or we should not have so much patois in every language all over the earth. What becomes of the phrases, "Castilian purity," "Parisian accent"—"lingua Toscana in bocca Romana," if, like one bird learning another's song, the ear be not the informant of the peculiar music or harshness of a language? Moreover, no language possesses all the sounds of all others, and therefore it is vain to attempt their description by any visual combinations. The Spanish j for instance, to represent which there is no equivalent sound in our language; and the Englishman is referred to another pronunciation of which he knows nothing at all. With this exception, the works in question are admirably conceived, and will serve as capital companions to even a little oral instruction.

Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress Converted into an Epic Poem. By C. C. V. G. Shields and Son, Parsonstown.

This paraphrase has been undertaken at the suggestion of the late Dr. Adam Clarke, in his "Postscript to a Life of John Bunyan." The Doctor was of opinion that "The Pilgrim's Progress would be more generally read, and more abundantly useful to a particular class of readers, were it turned into decent verse. The whole body of the dialogue and description might be preserved perfect and entire; and the task would not be difficult, as the work has the complete form of an epic poem, the versification alone excepted. But a poet, and a poet only, could do this work; and such a poet, too, as is experimentally acquainted with the work of God on his own soul." Whether C. C. V. G. possesses these high qualifications may be a matter of dispute. Here is a specimen:—

Then saw I in my dream, while thus they speak,
A miry slough the scene's fair prospect break;
Sunk in the middle plain its slime appear'd,
They mark'd it not until its banks they near'd:
This slough was nam'd Despond, and suddenly
Amid its mire, our trav'llers struggling lie;
There wallowing, begrim'd with mud and dirt,
And grievously by gathering perils girt;
Christian, by reason of the load he bare,
Began to sink, o'ercome by dread despair;
Then Pliable, with taunting tone of woe,
Cried, "Neighbour Christian, where, pray, art thou now?"
"Truly I know not," Christian meekly said,
While troubled thoughts oppress'd his heart and head.

The book is, certainly, a curiosity in its way: the paraphrase is preceded by a Life of Bunyan, by R. H. Wetherell, Esq.; and the volume concludes with a Key to the Pilgrim's Progress, by the paraphraser, in which he notes: "It is a curious fact, and one not generally known, that a complete design of a Pilgrim's Progress is to be found in Lucian's 'Hermotimus:' it is not to be imagined that Bunyan could have seen it there, from the limited educational advantages he possessed; yet the obvious allegory occurred to his mind, unschooled as it was, in a similar arrangement with that suggested by Lucian."

Thoughts on Duelling, and its Abolition. Nickisson.

A well-timed pamphlet, recommending, as the only possible, effectual step to prevent Duelling—"the establishment of a Court of Honour, for the trial and cognizance of those affairs for which gentlemen now demand of each other satisfaction; one which will give them an opportunity of appealing to their peers, to judge whether their conduct or that of their antagonist has been that of a gentleman, or unworthy of a gentleman, instead of having to appeal, as at present, to the pistol-barrel." Still, the writer thinks Government must act as the central power.

The Hand-book to Gibraltar. By an Old Inhabitant. Cowie.

A guide-book to the Rock of Gibraltar, with lithographic illustrations, is a true sign of these locomotive times. The powers of steam have, indeed, enlarged our sphere of observation. "Steamers," says our hand-book writer, "run to Spain and Portugal; and the Rock of Gibraltar, being restored to its former dignity of a city, and possessing, for the first time, a bishop (there are now two), with a cathedral, tempts our metropolitan to become a cosmopolite, to undergo the horrors of an eight days' voyage, with the advantage of seeing both Lisbon and Cadiz." The country is well described in the Hand-book; and all the information that a tourist can require, is here very neatly given.

Backgammon: its History and Practice. By the Author of "Whist." Bogue.

A smart, ironical preface, ushers in this neat little manual of the "brave winter's sport," teeming with "the dainty delicacies of Kenny Meadows' pencil—each design a little history." The author divides his subject into Preliminary, History, Instructions, Chances, Technicalities, and Laws; and each chapter is as lively and rattling as the box and dice itself. Here is a humourous outline of the game:—

Backgammon has always been a fireside, a domestic, a conjugal game; it is not so abstruse as to banish conversation on general topics; it does not, like chess, or love, or art, or science, require the entire man, whilst the ever-recurring rattle of the dice keeps the ear alert and the attention alive; it has often been found an anodyne to the gout, the rheumatism, the azure devils, or "the yellow spleen." Pains and physicians, alms and law suits are forgotten when—

The quick dice
In thunder leaping from the box, awake
The sounding gammon.

THE POET'S PRINCELY POWER.

VERSIFIED FROM A LITERAL FRENCH TRANSLATION BY G. FLETCHER, AUTHOR OF "CLAUDINE'S CROSS," "ADELPHIAN LYRICS," &c.

Within my heart a sweet voice gladly sings;
  All things seem smiling 'neath the "old roof-tree."
Though home is humble, to the rude wall clings
  Ivy, and clothes it with embroidery
Richer than braids the royal robe of kings;
  And all is fair, for man hath left me free
The chattering sparrows come with restless wings,
  To break my rest. I from my pallet flee;
And to the sun look forth with gladsome eyes,
Seeking the clime where Fancy's pictures rise.

On buoyant wing my thoughts bear me afar;
  Though poor, a palace I can have, and gold.
Ye sordid, take the coin that peace doth mar!
  No ducats in my coffers can be told:
Yet wealth is mine—vast, as my domains are;
  No miser e'er in such profusion roll'd.
And thou, bright phantom, in my dreamy car,
  Oh, Happiness! thy form I dare enfold:
Awake, thour't gone—flitting far away—
Life's butterfly among its flowers at play.

A lord complain'd to me: his splendid halls
  Brought no sweet slumber to his fever'd brow.
I said—"The spirit that your mind enthralls
  Is vanity; self-love doth bind ye now:
'Humble your heart!' the voice of Nature calls."
  Thron'd in my car, I see, from its bright prow,
A mansion fair, with shining marble walls;
  And richer than the lordling's 'tis, I trow;
In'aid with gold; in cunning carving drest;
In that fine home I take my lofty rest.

Over my rustic guise my dreams have thrown
  An emp'ror's robe. Many a costly gem,
More priceless than enwreaths a monarch's crown,
  Is glitt'ring in my regal diadem.
Go, watch your treasures—tell the ingots down—
  Ye gold-bought crew! I scorn you, and contemn
Your mammon-lust. A king e'en, or a clown,
  I coldly pass: what is my pow'r to them,
When in my car I pass the world's bleak strand
O'er the cloud-bridge that leads to Fancy's land?

A traveller said, "Come, friend, aboard my bark;
  The curtain, which your pow'r undraws, but shows
A little sky; your scenes are dull and dark."
  "Not so," quoth I. And, at my spell, arose
Tagus and Nile—Alpine glaciers stark—
  Etna's red gulf, which fountain-fires disclose—
My spirit saw. Swift as the soaring lark,
  Icebergs I view; or where the South-breeze blows.
The cage is here; yet on the unseen wind,
The mind-bird glides, chainless and unconfin'd.

In dream-car thron'd—white sails and moving sands
  Float by, 'mid earth's four quarters far and wide:
I the Antilles seek, where, rock-grown stands
  The fragile lienes; the humming-bird, wing'd pride
Of shore of Ind pass, with its rosy lands—
  A swallow's fleet career; and now doth glide
Asia's green palms; anon, the varied strands
  —Egypt and Araby—where hot winds ride
An arid march. Yet there sweet valleys lie
Behold, how fair! how rich the vermil sky!

For me, each country and each clime is fair:
  My bird's gold tinted wing I paint at will;
The petals of my flowers; th' insect rare,
  That dwelleth in its leaves. Mine is the skill
To sculpture rocks; silver'd, beyond compare,
  My glaciers rise; torrent or fairy rill
Leap at my word; I warm the Eastern air
  With purple light; its sun my pow'r doth fill.
Yea, in the strength of my caprice, I hold
The globe itself, and form it to my mould.

A lover, scornful, cried—"Love flies your dream!"
  "Not so," I said; "I have a nymph divine;
Fresh as sweet May; pure as th' flower-kiss'd beam
  Of Spring's young time: a gentle love is mine:
My spell hath fram'd her; giv'n the sapphire gleam—
  Her star-lit eye's soft ray. At my incline
The angel came; no lover e'er cou'd deem
  A brighter idol thron'd on Beauty's shrine.
I am a Raphael, on whose easel's drawn
A chaste Madonna, holy as the dawn.

The pink's soft satin stains her lily face—
  Pure her complexion, as her sinless mind;
Her crown and veil are modesty and grace.
  Though she was beautiful—oh, womankind
Ne'er took a fairer shape!—yet still a trace
  Of perfume to the bud, remain'd behind:
She lack'd a heart. As in a Parian vase,
  A grain of incense thrown—thus I combin'd
Love with her soul. She was, without that dow'r,
A lifeless statue, or a sceatless flow'r.

Mine is the wealth of worlds: the poet's gaze
  Makes him the master of a boundless home.
Fancy is prodigal: with its bright rays
  It paints the trees more green; the river's foam
Yields liquid crystal: where th' enchanter strays,
  How fair the city! Now the palace dome,
Gold-tinted, shines! Oh, grant me length of days,
  With Fancy for my guest! still let her come
And rule my thoughts! Reality is cold;
And where she dwells the reign of Fancy's told.

London, May, 1844.

Re-opening of York Minster.—York Minster was re-opened on Friday week, after having undergone a complete restoration. The Very Rev. W. Cockburn, D.D., the Dean, preached on the occasion.

There is now residing in an almshouse at Leek, Staffordshire, a woman named Widow Hargreaves, formerly of Endon, in the 87th year of her age, who is cutting a complete new set of teeth.

A Post-office Pie.—The Stamford Mercury states, that a day or two since a gooseberry pie was sent through the Post-office. For the sake of those who ate it, we hope that Sir James had no finger in it, the Home Secretary having, just now, not the cleanest of hands.—Punch.

The Brazilian Tariff.—According to the Manchester Guardian, a copy of the new Brazilian tariff has reached town, although it has not been officially promulgated, and it is stated that it will cause a very large increase in the duties on all the principal articles of export from this country. It is pretty generally known, that the duties levied on articles of British manufacture, at the present time, though nominally at a uniform rate of 15 per cent., amount in reality to 21 per cent. ad valorem, but, by the tariff proposed, these duties will vary in amount; those articles which constitute the bulk of the exports from this country will be subjected to duties, varying from 30 to 60 per cent. ad valorem, which will, no doubt, have a very serious effect upon British commerce. For this result we have only to blame the restriction which our own laws have placed upon the trade ot Brazil, by prohibitory duties upon her staple articles of produce.

A New Comet.—The discovery of a new comet, in the constellation of Hercules, was announced on Tuesday at the sitting of the Paris Academy of Sciences. It is slightly nebulous, but the observations appear to have been as yet imperfect. At the same sitting, M. Gautier gave an account of some new observations of the spots on the sun's disk. He is of opinion that the years in which the greater number of these spots exist, are sensibly colder than when they are comparatively few in number.

Arrangement of Time.—It is a wise arrangement to divide the day into sections, and to allot a given time to every occupation. By this method, every duty would have the proper time allotted to it, and there would be no fear that one which afforded pleasure would be followed to such a length as to leave no time for another which might be regarded as less agreeable.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

On Thursday night last that old and deserving favourite of not only the musical public, but also of a large circle of private friends, Puzzi, il primo corno del mondo, took his benefit at this house, and if we were to judge by appearances, a benefit in the full sense of the word it was. The opera was "Anna Bolena," with the magnificent cast of Anna Bolena, Grisi; Henry VIII., Lablache; Percy, Moriani; the page, Smeaton, Favanti; and Jane Seymour, by a Signora

Giuseppina Rosetti, from the Grand Opera at Vienna, who, if she be not first-rate, is a singer of very distinguished physical and cultivated powers. Her aria in the second act was very brilliantly executed, and her duet with Grisi deserved the highest praise. Moriani sang divinely in the part of Percy, particularly in the duet with Grisi in the second act, and the trio with her and Lablache. The impersonation of Henry, by this last mentioned truly great artiste, is beyond all eulogy. He seemed to have stepped out of an old Holbein frame. The beneficiaire played his delightful Fantasia on Bellini's beautiful quartetto, from the "Puritani," "A te o cara," and another tema from the "Lucia." Next came the second act of "Guillaume Tell," with Persiani and Mario, the whole winding up with "La Vivandière," forming altogether one of the most delightful evening's treats that could be enjoyed by musician or accomplished amateur. A word en partant to Mr. Lumley; let him select a more civil list of box-keepers, or correct the manners of those in his present employ. The house was crowded to excess.

It is said that Mr. Webster, of the Haymarket, is about selecting a play from the rejected of those sent in by the competitors of the prize comedy, £500. Bets are 20 to 1 that Webster will select a play far superior to "Quid pro Quo."

According to the American papers, Mr. Macready has realized about 40,000 dollars by his engagements in that country; and it is likely that he will double the amount before he leaves, making his 80,000 dollars in less time than Fanny Elssler made hers.

The Attempt to Create a Disturbance at her Majesty's Theatre.—The two individuals who a short time since caused a disturbance by distributing bills at her Majesty's Theatre, with a view to force Mr. Lumley to engage Signor Salvi, having consented to pay £50 each to stop proceedings, the lessee has kindly consented to do so on condition that the money shall be distributed to ten different hospitals to be named by him.

Quid Pro Quo.—A brief correspondence has taken place between Mr. C. Mathews and Mrs. Gore on the subject of the allotment of the characters in this comedy. Mr. Mathews having stated that Mrs. Gore had expressed her regret that there was no part in the comedy which she could offer to Mrs. Mathews, and that Mrs. Gore had suggested that Miss Julia Bennett should play the character originally assigned to herself. The fair authoress in her answer considers the letter of Mr. Mathews confirmatory of the statement in the preface that he had refused the part offered to him, on the plea that he was too old for it. Mrs. Gore adds rather naïvely, and probably by way of quid pro quo for the letter, that perhaps the same reason determined Mrs. Mathews to decline the part marked down for her.

Angling Extraordinary.—On Thursday last as Mr. Padwick, son of Henry Padwick, Esq., solicitor, was angling in a pond, near Horsham, he hooked a small roach, which was instantly seized by a perch, and the two were as quickly swallowed by a jack. After some considerable trouble, the three were safely brought to land, and exhibited as a great curiosity to many persons.

The Model of Venice.—This beautiful work of art has been purchased by Mr. Tyler, the enterprising proprietor of the Surrey Zoological Gardens, where it is to be exhibited, and where, no doubt, it will prove an attractive feature.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

Campbell, the poet, has left all his personal property to his niece, Mary Campbell. Among it is the copy of a portrait of her Majesty, sent to him by the Queen herself; and the silver bowl presented to him when Rector of the University of Glasgow. The personal property was sworn under £2000. The testator states in his will, that he makes no provision for his son, because he will be entitled to a certain sum of money on the testator's decease, which he deems a competent provision for him.

A letter dated Van Diemen's Land, Feb. 14, and addressed to a party in Bath, states that the writer, who has frequent opportunities of hearing of Frost, Williams, and Jones, says they are all well in health and spirits; and, owing to recent alterations in the convict system, are now at liberty, in the colony, and are consequently free to dispose of their labour as they please.

A letter from Florence of the 26th of June informs us that Prince Jerome Buonaparte has precipitately left that city, after long occupying one of the finest palaces of Florence, where he formerly held a sort of court. The Prince's sudden departure is ascribed to financial embarrasments which it is impossible for him to overcome at this moment. The Marchioness has not accompanied him.

At the present time passengers are actually being conveyed from Newcastle to London, by steam-boat, at the rate of two shillings per head.

The Bristol and Gloucester Railway (77½ miles in length) was opened throughout on Monday morning, and the event was marked with the usual demonstrations of rejoicing. By the opening of this line the inconvenience which has been hitherto experienced from the disseverance of the chain of railway between the west and the north of England is obviated.

A cat was last week thrown down a coal-pit at Whitehaven by some cruel and mischievous person, and was afterwards found at a depth of 96 fathoms as well as if nothing had happened.

The Customs receipts at Liverpool, for the month ending the 5th instant, have been the greatest ever known, the amount having reached half a million sterling; and that, notwithstanding the great reduction which has taken place in the duties upon timber, turpentine, and other important articles, and the entire abolition of the duties on exports. The receipts at Liverpool for the first half of the present year have exceeded £2,150,000 sterling, or nearly one-fourth of the entire Customs of the whole empire for the same period.

On Monday afternoon, a special train on the South Western Railway arrived at the terminus, Nine Elms, containing nine tons and a half of Sysee silver, which had been brought from Portsmouth. The above specie is part of the money agreed upon by the Chinese government to be paid to this country for the ransom of Canton, and arrived at Portsmouth a few days ago in her Majesty's ship Childers. The specie was conveyed to the Mint.

The boy Jones, who became so notorious by secreting himself in Buckingham Palace, has, it appears, been playing his pranks at sea. He has for some time been on board the Warspite as a first class boy. During last month, while the ship was between Tunis and Algiers, there was the exciting cry of "A man overboard!" The life buoy was let go, which blazed away with a steady beautiful light, and dropped considerably astern immediately. The cutters were lowered after a little confusion, and pulled for the buoy, where they found no less a person than Master Jones, who was holding on with one hand, and dashing the sparks (arising from the port-fire) from his face with the other. As they approached he sung out—"Here I am, look lively." They quickly succeeded in getting him into one of the boats, the other taking the buoy in tow. It was believed that he jumped overboard for the purpose of seeing the life-buoy light burning.

The convicts, Barber and Fletcher, sailed on Monday from Woolwich, with upwards of 300 convicts, on board the Agincourt, for Norfolk Island. Previous to his departure Barber wrote a long letter to the Times, reiterating his innocence in the most solemn manner, and expressing his regret that his counsel did not call all the clerks of his house to submit every paper connected with his case. Had this been done, he says, and if other parties who had transactions with him had been examined, they would have proved facts raising the strongest possible presumption against his being a guilty participator in the frauds.

The Madras East India ship, Captain Kitching, took fire on Monday night at Deptford, and very considerable damage was done to her. The origin of the fire is unknown; some attribute it to spontaneous combustion amongst the Government stores in the fore-hold.

Recently intelligence has been received from Sydney, Cape Breton, concerning the loss of the Sir George Prevost, emigrant ship, on a reef of rocks to the westward of Gaberus, and but for the moderate state of the weather it might have terminated in a fearful sacrifice of human life, the ship having upwards of 160 souls on board. Happily, however, the crew were all saved.

The following gentlemen have been appointed Queen's counsel:—John Hodgson, Esq., Charles Stewart Whitehurst, Esq., Wm. J. Alexander, Esq., Robert Charles Hildyard, Esq., and James Parkes, Esq.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

The Hon. Miss Caroline Boyle, niece to the Earl of Cork, and Maid of Honour to the Queen Dowager, had a miraculous escape from drowning a few days ago, at Allarston, the Earl's seat near Frome. Miss Boyle was on a pleasure excursion on the lake, and when pushing off among some willows she lost her footing, and fell from the boat where the water was 16 feet deep. Miss Boyle clung to the boughs. Miss Warburton, her companion, threw her the end of an oar from the shore. Miss Mary Boyle, who had been waiting the arrival of the tow-boat, at the further end of the lake, alone unmoored the boat, and assisted by Miss Warburton, succeeded in dragging in the half lifeless lady just as her strength was giving way and her hands were relaxing their hold.

Steam-Boat Collision.—On Tuesday evening, about seven o'clock, another steam-boat collision took place on the river Thames off the residence of the Archbishop of Canterbury, by which the lives of many were placed in the greatest jeopardy. It appears that the Pink, Chelsea boat, was proceeding up the river with the tide, when, by some means or other, she ran into the side of the Daylight iron boat, and the crash was tremendous. Nothing could exceed the alarm of the passengers, the females especially, but the captain of the Daylight successfully exerted himself in making for Lambeth stairs, when the passengers were removed to another vessel, the Moonlight, for the completion of the voyage.

Drunkenness and Death at Fairlop Fair.—Sunday evening, Harriet Milwood, a middle-aged female, who with her husband kept a large toy stall at Fairlop fair, and who had been in the habit of going to different fairs to follow the same occupation, drank to such excess as to become much intoxicated. Her husband and herself had, in consequence, some words, when the latter declared she would stop on the ground no longer, and managed to get into a light cart for the purpose of going home. When about to drive away, her husband, who had suffered much from her conduct during the evening, exclaimed with much fervour, "I wish you may break your neck before you get home." The wretched woman took no notice of the observation, nor did she make any reply, but she had not driven away more than 200 yards, when she tumbled out of the vehicle, and falling with considerable force on her head, actually broke her neck, and in a few moments was a corpse.

Furious Driving.—On Tuesday afternoon two young women, named Ann Jones, the wife of a mariner now at sea, and Mary Wilson, a sempstress, of No. 6, Gower's-walk, Whitechapel, went out for an afternoon's walk; and, after remaining some time in Old Stepney churchyard, they left for the purpose of returning home, and had just reached the remains of King John's Palace, on Stepney-green, about 100 yards from the Cemetery, when a horse, driven at a furious rate, and which was drawing a cart along the road, knocked them both down close to the curb-stone, and the off-wheel passed over the body of Mrs. Jones, and killed her on the spot.

Frightful Occurrence.—On Tuesday afternoon Ellen Anderson, one of the female servants of Mr. Locke, of 140, Sloane-street, fell from the parapet of the house into the area, and was so seriously injured, that death is likely to ensue. It is stated that she was making her way to the next house on a visit to one of the servants there, as she had frequently done before.

Sudden Death on the Croydon Railway.—On Wednesday evening, Mr. Joseph Payne held an inquest at the Green Man Tavern, Tooley-street, on the body of Mr. Thomas Anthony Fenton, aged eighty, of Finchley Park, Ripley, Surrey. It appeared that deceased had come to London by the Croydon train on Tuesday morning, and he was returning at twenty-minutes to five P.M., and had just taken his seat in a first class carriage with two of his sons. As the train began to move, his sons observed him lean forward, and on a closer inspection discovered that he had become suddenly indisposed. They caused the train to be stopped and deceased was conveyed from the carriage to a waiting-room, and Mr. Clarke, a surgeon, was sent for. On his arrival he pronounced deceased dead, most probably from the rupture of some blood vessel, caused by over-exertion at his advanced time of life.—Verdict, "Natural death."

Explosion on the Brighton Railway.—Great excitement prevailed at the Brighton terminus on Monday, by the non-arrival of the last train from London, and after the lapse of about half an hour a pilot engine was dispatched up the line to ascertain the cause. It appears that when near the Hayward's Heath Station, one of the tubes of the boiler burst, and the train was enveloped in steam. A messenger was dispatched up the line for an engine, but before he returned the pilot from Brighton arrived, and propelled the train for the remainder of its journey, after a delay of an hour. No one was injured by the explosion.

THE MARKETS.

Corn Exchange.—Although the arrivals of English wheat up to our market this week have been by no means extensive, we have to report a very inactive demand for all descriptions of that grain. The best samples have, however, mostly sold at previous rates, but the value of other kinds has suffered an abatement of 1s per quarter. Of foreign wheat the imports continue moderately good, while the amount of business doing in it is small, at barely stationary prices. Malting barley has supported its value, but grinding and distilling sorts have given way 1s per quarter. Although the receipts of malt have been rather limited, that article has sold heavily, though offered at a reduction of from 1s to 2s per quarter. The supplies of oats being more than adequate to meet the wants of the dealers, we have to report a further decline of from 6d to 1s per quarter in the quotations. Beans have sold heavily, at 1s per quarter less money. White peas are quite as dear, but grey and maple qualities are 2s lower. Flour very dull, but not cheaper.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 46s to 54s; ditto white, 53s to 61s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 44s to 52s; ditto white, 44s to 54s; rye, 31s to 33s; grinding barley, 27s to 28s; distilling ditto, 31s to 32s; malting ditto, 32s to 34s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 59s to 60s; brown ditto, 57s to 60s; Kingston and Ware, 62s to 64s; Chevalier, 64s to 65s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 20s to 22s; potatoe ditto, 23s to 25s; Youghal and Cork, black, 19s to 21s; ditto white, 19s to 21s; tick beans, 29s to 31s; old ditto, 38s to 40s; grey peas, 31s to 33s; maple, 33s to 34s; white, 35s to 38s; boilers, 38s to 39s per quarter. Town-made flour, 45s to 48s; Suffolk, 38s to 39s; Stockton and Yorkshire, 37s to 38s, per 280 lbs. Foreign.—Free wheat, 58s to 61s; Dantzig, red, 50s to 56s; white, 56s to 61s. In Bond.—Barley, 23s to 24s; oats, brew, 17s to 19s; ditto feed, 14s to 17s; beans, 24s to 28s; peas, 28s to 29s per quarter. Flour, America, 24s to 25s; Baltic, 24s to 25s per barrel.

The Seed Market.—Owing to the favourable state of the weather, the business doing, in all kinds of seeds, is small, at barely late rates.

The following are the present rates:—Linseed, English, sowing, 54s to 60s; Baltic crushing, 40s to 42s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 41s to 43s; hempseed, 35s to 38s per quarter; coriander, 15s to 20s per cwt.; brown mustard seed, 17s to 20s; white ditto, 10s to 13s; tares, 4s to 5s 0d per bushel: English rapeseed, new, £28 to £30 per last of ten quarters: Linseed cakes, English, £9 15s to £10 10s; foreign, £5 15s to £7 0s per 1000; rapeseed cakes, £5 0s to £6 0s per ton; canary 55s to 58s per quarter.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 8d to 8½d; of household ditto, 6d to 7½d per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Averages.—Wheat, 55s 8d; barley, 34s 5d; oats, 22s 11d; rye, 35s 0d; beans, 38s 2d; peas, 36s 6d.

Six Weeks' Averages that govern Duty.—Wheat, 55s 8d; barley, 32s 6d; oats, 22s 5d; rye, 34s 1d; beans, 36s 11d; peas, 34s 11d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 17s; barley, 6s; oats, 6s; rye, 8s 6d; beans, 6s 6d; peas, 8s. 6d.

Tea.—During the whole of the week this market has ruled extremely inactive, owing to the recent large imports, and prices of most descriptions are on the decline. The stock is now about 4,000,000 lb. larger than at the corresponding period in 1843.

Sugar.—For all kinds of sugar—the supply of which in warehouse is very extensive for the time of year, we have to report a very dull inquiry, and, in some instances, the rates are 6d per cwt. easier.

Coffee.—Although the quantity of coffee offering is rather extensive, a fair amount of business is doing, and prices are about stationary.

Provisions.—The market for Irish butter has again ruled heavy, at a decline of quite 1s per cwt. Corks and Limericks have sold at 72s to 74s, and Waterfords 73s to 74s per cwt. landed. For forward delivery nothing is doing. Foreign butter is a mere drug, and 1s per cwt. lower. Prime Holstein may be had at 74s to 76s per cwt. Bacon moves off slowly at late rates. Mild cured sizeable is held at 47s to 48s landed; while stale and inferior parcels may be had at 41s to 45s; and heavy, 41s to 43s per cwt. All other kinds of provisions meet a dull sale at late rates.

Oils.—This market is firm in general, and prices are firmly supported.

Tallow.—For most kinds of tallow we have a steady demand at full prices. For forward delivery several parcels have sold at 42s 6d to 42s 9d per cwt. The stock is now nearly 2000 casks less than in 1843.

Hops.—The accounts from the plantations being rather more favourable than of late, the hop trade is in a sluggish state at almost stationary prices.

Wool.—Although the imports of wool continue large, and several public sales are declared, the demand by private contract is rather active at full prices.

Potatoes.—The season for old potatoes being now nearly closed, those qualities are a dull sale at barely late rates. New potatoes sell steadily at from 8s to 15s per cwt.

Coals.—Holywell Main, 23s; Ord's Redhugh, 18s; Old Pontop, 18s 6d; West Wylan, 22s; Gosforth, 24s; New March, 22s; Braddyll's Hilton, 25s 6d; Hilton, 25s; Russell's Hilton, 25s per ton.

Smithfield.—For the best old Downs we have had a steady demand, and prices have been well supported. In all other kinds of stock a limited business has been doing at barely previous rates. Beef from 2s 4d to 3s 10d; Mutton, 2s 6d to 4s; lamb, 4s to 5s; veal, 3s 4d to 4s 4d; and pork, 2s 4d to 4s per 8lbs., to sink the offals.

Newgate and Leadenhall.—For the time of year our supplies of slaughtered meat have been good, yet the general demand has ruled steady at our quotations. Beef from 2s 2d to 3s 4d; mutton, 2s 4d to 3s 8d; lamb, 4s to 5s; veal, 3s 4d to 4s 4d; and pork, 2s 4d to 3s 10d per 8lbs by the carcass.

COMMERCE AND MONEY.

The Money Market has remained in a very quiet state since our last publication. There is still great abundance of capital unemployed, but at the same time profitable channels for annual incomes to the capitalists are gradually unfolding themselves. Circumstances have latterly much improved the present condition and the future prospects of the great Joint Banking Associations in the Metropolis, and the shares in them are daily now attracting the attention of those who desire to invest their property at fair profits and with solid security. For the shares of the London and Westminster Bank, the demand continues to exceed the supply in the market for sale, and to make purchases, higher prices must be submitted to by the buyers. In the shares of the Union Bank of London, also, increased activity prevails, in consequence of the very satisfactory annual report made on Wednesday by the Court of Directors. For India Stock, likewise, a considerable demand has existed throughout the week, and higher prices have been consequently demanded. Bank Stock has also advanced to 200; and in all these descriptions of securities a fair portion of business has been transacted. Not so, however, is the present condition of our Funded Debt, for the transactions on the English Stock Exchange, since our last publication, have been neither extensive nor interesting. The monied interest consider the present price of the Consols too high for investment, with security to the monies so invested; but still, small purchases made by trustees and by public companies, have caused them to reach 99½, the July dividend deducted. Other descriptions of our funds have ruled proportionally high.

Amongst the shares of all the great railway associations, also, the abundance of money is operating most favourably. The dispute so long existing between the Grand Junction and the London and Birmingham Companies having been amicably arranged, public confidence is again reappearing in the solidity of the property, and a considerable improvement in the value of both these great undertakings has been the necessary consequence. Great North of England and Midland Counties' shares have likewise advanced severally £2, and an equal improvement has occurred in those of the Great Western, and of the Liverpool and Manchester lines. Edinburgh and Glasgow are £1 higher than they were last week, and so also are those of the Glasgow and Ayr line. In short large sums of money continue almost daily to be added to the £80,000,000 sterling already embarked in railway property.

On the Foreign Stock Exchange, also, foreign bonds and securities have, during the week, attracted the attention of the capitalist to the usual extent, and a considerable quantity of business has been again transacted in various descriptions of them. A remittance in dollars, on account of the next half-yearly dividend, caused Mexican bonds to advance 2 per cent.; and in Spanish Threes, the operations of speculators caused an improvement of 1 per cent., since our last publication. Brazilian bonds are likewise gradually advancing, and so are those of Venezuela. In Belgian and Dutch stock, purchases to some extent have again been made, at last week's quotations. The foreign demand for the bonds of the northern states of Europe is still rather active than otherwise; and Russian and Danish bonds fully maintain their late high prices. Thus there appears to be nothing unsatisfactory during the last week in this great department of the London money market.

On the Royal Exchange last foreign post-day, there was again a large amount of bills drawn on the Continent, for sale, but the demand for remittance, chiefly in payment for foreign agricultural produce at present importing into the United Kingdom, exceeded the supply, and a small depreciation in the rates of the foreign exchanges was the necessary consequence. Gold is now dearer in Hamburgh than it is in London.

"ORLANDO," THE WINNER OF THE DERBY.

The Derby day rose fair and bright,
You did not hear the Cits complain—
The farmers would have felt delight
If there had been a running rain.

Throngs filled the road to Derby Downs,
Expectant thousands reached the plain,
Their harness reeked with horses' sweat—
Yes, bridle, bit, and running rein!

The soldier gay rode there away,
With spur on heel, and glove on hand, O—
The Channel Downs, for Epsom Downs,
The sailor left—the sea for-land O!

The world came to a grand stand; still
The sun shone down upon it, O, so
Hot, that Orlando's backers were
For full five minutes furioso!

Yet other favourites matched the field
Whose fate their betters would not leave, O,
Like Music's eggs their wagers were,
For they were all laid "Con motivo!"

Before the race—'twas ever so—
The legs took exercise with pother,
While many of them took the odds,
Just to be even with each other!

They herald, soon the horses in,
Be-times their speed the jockeys boast;
Who will not chronicle that name
Which he shall own who wins the post?

What ho!—they ride!—now some rejoice,
While others' hearts are filled with dolours;
One jock has struck his horse to win,
While all the rest have struck their colours!

Hurrah, Hurrah! for Running Rein,
He loudly is proclaimed the winner—
To all the world his owners say,
Now, gentlemen, go home to dinner!

But not too long the taunt endures,
For soon their money vision breaks up,
And all their chops fall down at once,
When Weatherby wont give the stakes up!

Ah! no he wont—tho' legs demand,
With all their sable birds of feather by,—
For he says no—give up's no go,—
Whether by fraud or force wont Weatherby.

A four-year-old is Running Rein!
The Turf must have some satisfaction.
"I'd scorn the action," Wood exclaims,
"And more than that, I'll bring the action."

The action 's tried—"Wood versus Peel;"
The lawyers hit their hardest knocks,
And Running Rein, with all his jaw,
Is ordered in the witness-box!

The Peel assents—the Wood protests—
The jury feel in a quan*dary.*
No matter, Alderson has got
A cacoethes vet*inary!*

Horses come seldom into court,
Tho' asses gather there amain,
And Alderson 's a farrier judge,
Who will examine Running Rein.

They hurry east, they hurry west,
To find him still they are unable—
Ah! when a case is so stall'd off,
Men think it can't be very stable!

They hurry north, they hurry south,
Still all their seeking is no good;
Well, Wood can't find him, so its clear
That Running Rein has cut his Wood!

So up he gives his cause; the Judge
Says very well, I think you should man;

COLONEL PEEL'S "ORLANDO," THE WINNER OF THE DERBY. DRAWN BY J. F. HERRING, SEN., ESQ.

And Wood replies, I've been no doubt
  Imposed on by that bad man, Goodman.

The Judge then cries this cause has failed,
  And every one I think must see vy!
Goody is bad ; so in your hands
  Jury! defendant's verdict leave I!

With this remark, which here to make,
  Justice—too much disgusted—begs ;
That Lords perform a blackguard feat,
  When they begin to bet with Legs!

With this Peel's counsel turns and says,
  We've gained, now what are you going to stand O?
What, but a very feast of gold,
  Part of stakes that won Orlando!

The great interest excited by "The Running Rein Case," and the verdict for the proprietor of "Orlando," induces us to present to our readers the above portrait, from a drawing by Mr. J. F. Herring, sen.

Orlando stands 15 hands 1 inch high; and his colour is a bright bay; he has a white face, and white hind legs; is a wiry animal, and very blood-looking; his head is lean, and full of character; his neck light; shoulders oblique; good fore and back ribs; deep in the brisket; good arms and thighs, and flat legs; rather long pasterns, with capital feet; he is one of the best tempered animals perhaps, as a race horse, that we have ever seen.

THE CHAPEL ROYAL, ST. JAMES'S.

Many readers of the Court Circular may remember "the early service," "the daily service," and "the afternoon service," at the Chapel Royal, St. James's, which, during the London season, are attended by many persons of distinction: the Duke of Wellington and Sir Frederick Trench, for example, are regular attendants at the early service. The history and details of the establishment, are not, however, so well known.

The Chapel Royal, then, is believed to be the same that belonged to the ancient hospital, suppressed by Henry VIII. It was retained, in accordance with the good old custom of attaching a place of worship to all noble residences, beneath whose roof the lord of the manor and his humblest ploughman might meet to worship the God of rich and poor, in whose sight each had equal claims to regard. It is a Royal Peculiar, and, as such, is exempted from all episcopal jurisdiction. Divine service is performed here in the same manner as at our various cathedrals. Its establishment consists of a Dean, usually the Bishop of London, who has a salary of £200 per annum; a Lord High Almoner; a Sub-Almoner, whose salary is £97 11s. 8d. per annum; a Clerk of the Queen's Closet, who has beneath his jurisdiction three deputy clerks, and a closet keeper, the latter of whom is allowed £41 per annum, besides £50 for necessaries, and £31 5s. for linen and washing. Besides these, there are one or two inferior officers, such as choristers, &c.

This is not the only ecclesiastical foundation belonging to what is termed the Queen's household. There are in all forty-eight chaplains, that preach in turn before the Royal Family, though of that number but few of them perform service in the Chapel Royal, and we know not that all have salaries. In addition to those chaplains, there are ten priests in ordinary; but several of these offices are held by one and the same person.

There is one relic of the old Papal times still lingering among these officers, or, if now abolished, was in existence as late as 1815, when the Rev. Dr. Henry Fly held the office. It is that of Confessor to the Royal Household: of course, as auricular confession is not a tenet of our church, the situation is happily a sinecure. It brings a salary of thirty-six pounds ten shillings only to its holder: the reverend gentleman who held the office in 1815, was also one of the ten priests in ordinary.

There are, in addition to those officers, sixteen gentlemen of the Chapel Royal, who have each a salary of £73 yearly; and five Clergymen, and eight Gentlemen in Waiting.

The organist and composer has a salary of £146 yearly; the ordinary organist, £41 10s.; The violist, £40, and the lutanist, £41 10s. yearly; but, as these instruments form no part of the modern choir, these places are sinecures, generally held by two Gentlemen of the Chapel. The musical service of the Chapel has been famed, probably, from the time of the founder. Henry VIII., we know, was not only a lover of music, but himself an accomplished musician; and we infer this part of his household to have been on a scale of grandeur and magnificence in accordance with his well-known taste for splendour and display.

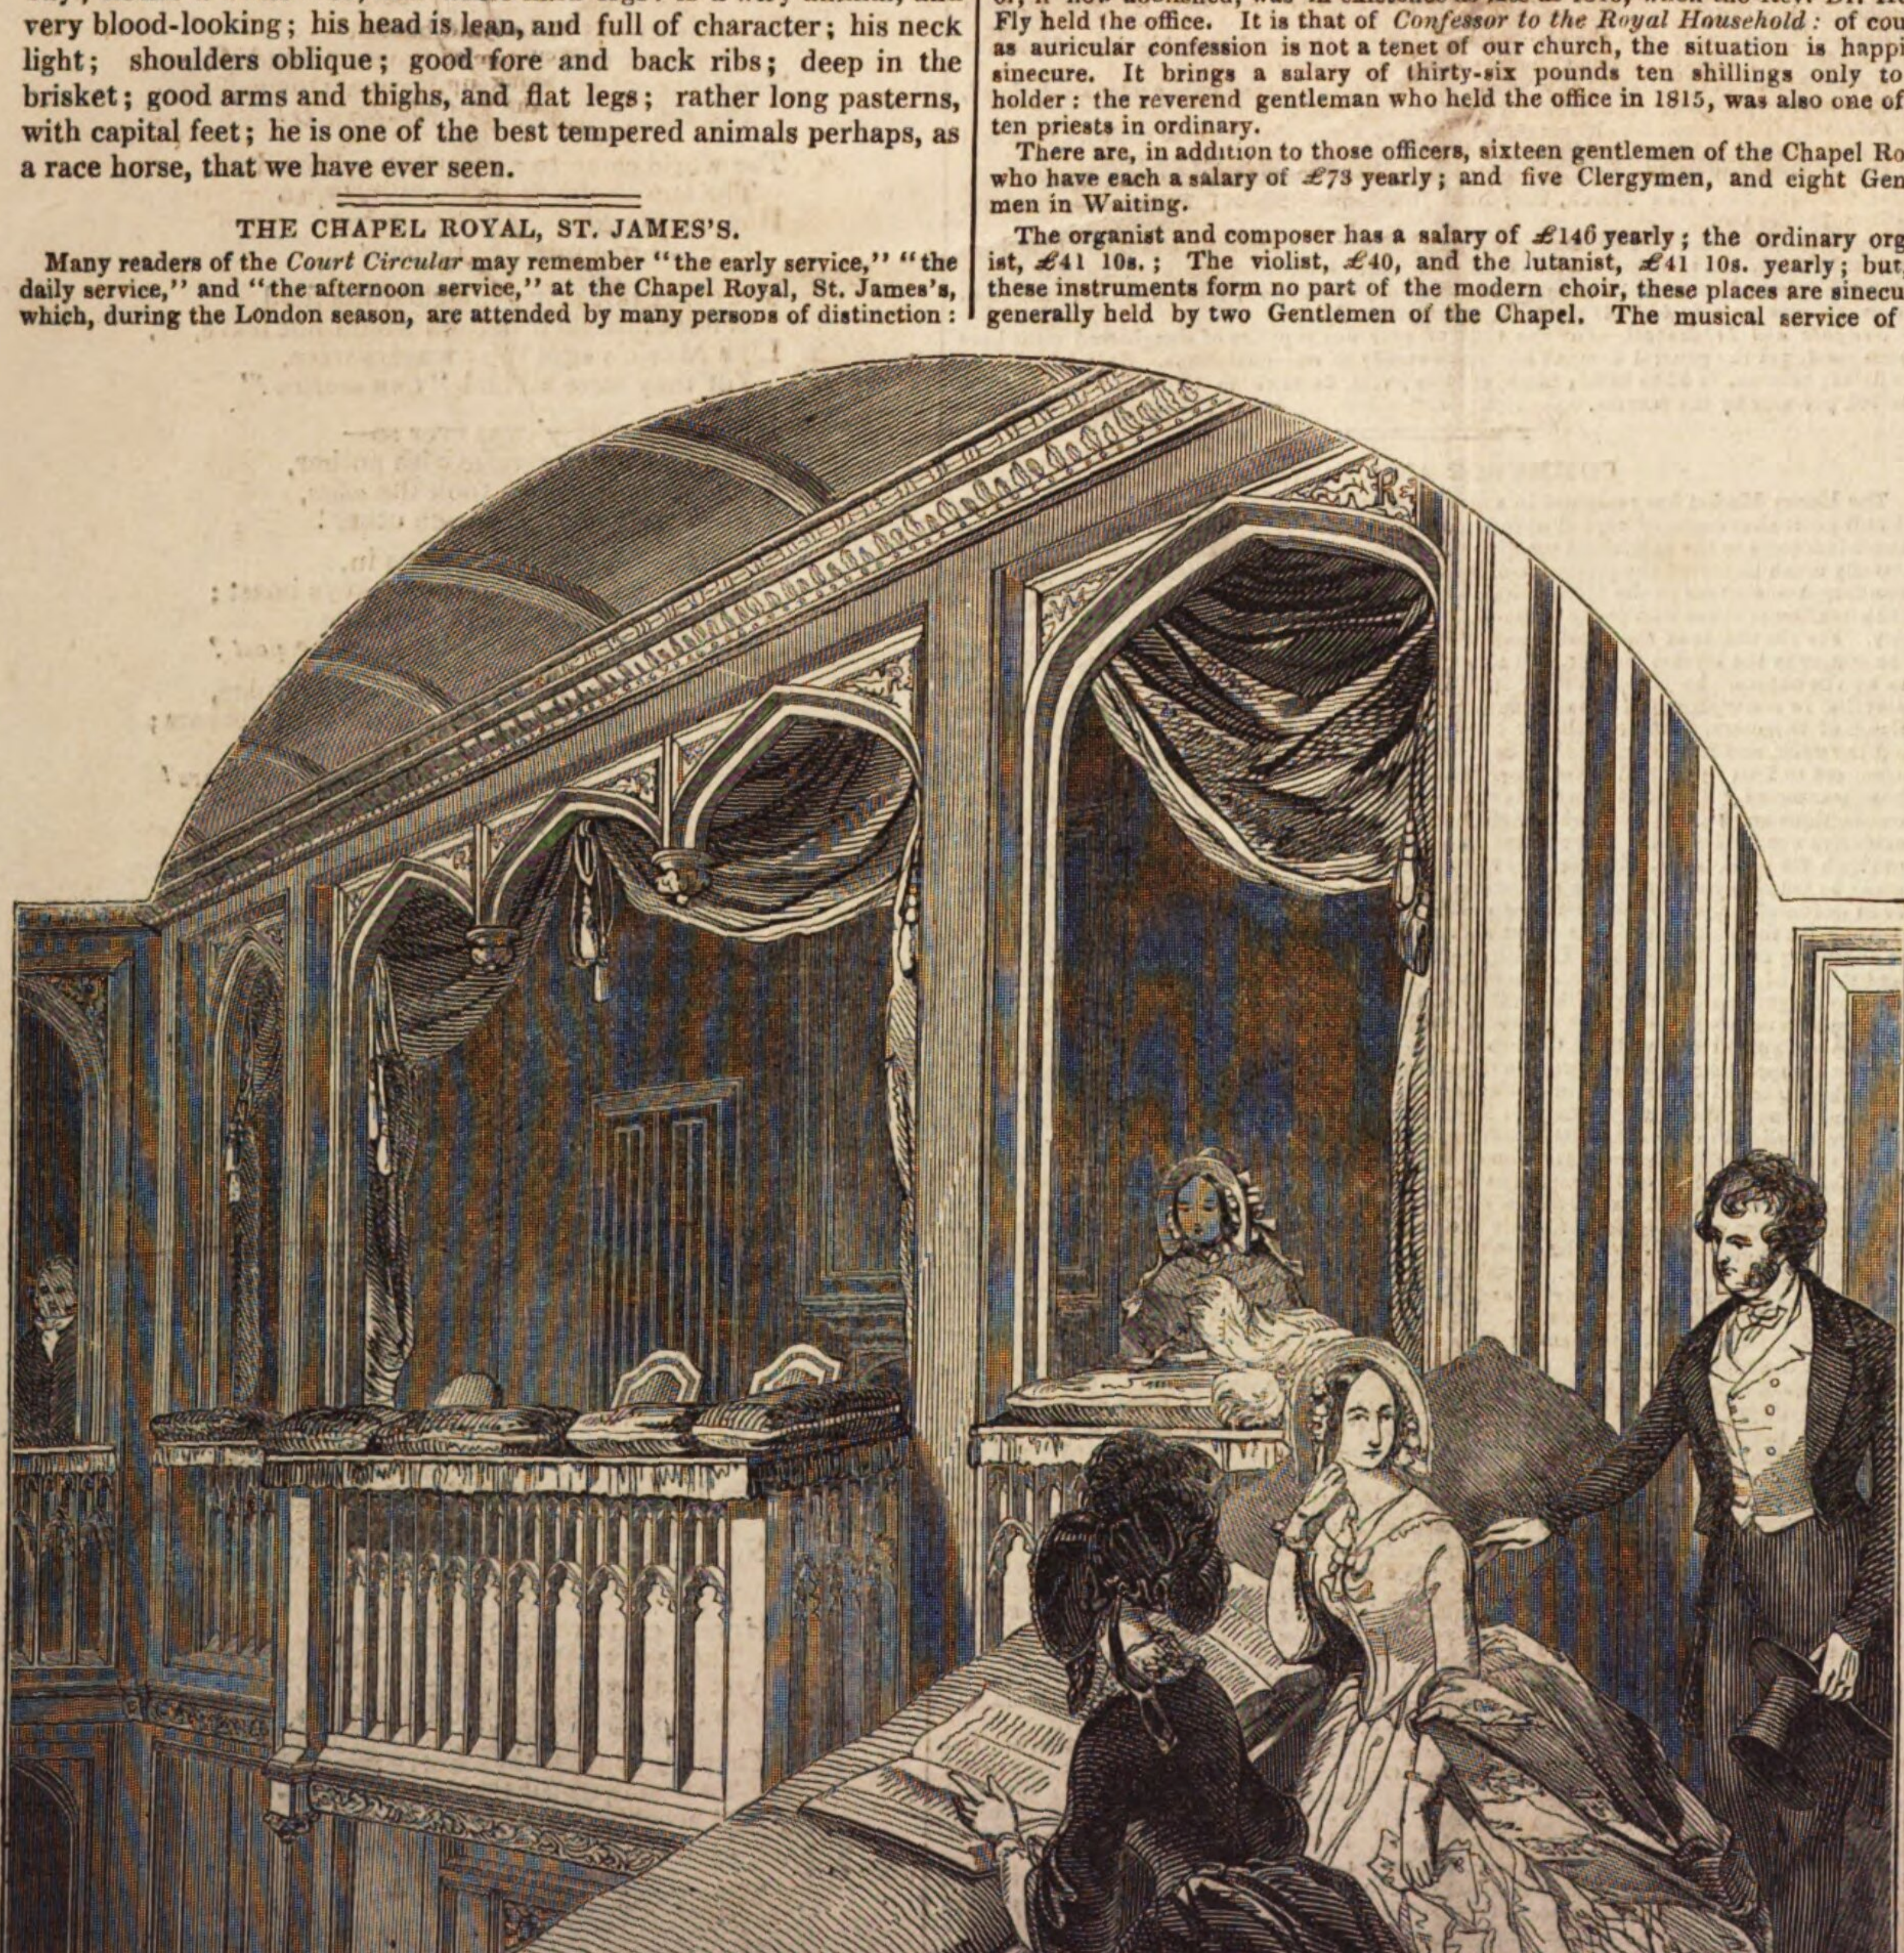
The sergeant of the vestry has a salary of £182 2s. per annum; the groom of the vestry, £51 12s; the yeoman of the vestry, £54 15s.; and there is also paid for maintaining and teaching ten children of the Chapel Royal (choristers), £320 per annum.

In the time of George III., the King, when in town, was always preceded to the Chapel Royal by a nobleman carrying the sword of state, and attended by the Lords and Groom of the Bedchamber, the Gold Staff Officer, and other officers in waiting; accompanied by the various members of the Royal Family, and such of the foreign and native nobility as happened to be in the palace at the period. The heralds and pursuivants at arms also attended, the procession being closed by the band of gentlemen pensioners.

The King was indeed a most regular attendant. Madame d'Arblay, in her memoirs, recently published, describes the perseverance with which he continued his religious duties there during 1747, at the time when he was in the prime of life, and she was one of the robing-women. According to her account he perseveringly attended prayers in November, until the Queen and family, dropping off one by one, used to leave the King, the parson, and his Majesty's equerry, to "freeze it out together."

Previous to the addition of a Chapel to Buckingham Palace, her Majesty and the Court were constant attendants at the Chapel Royal, St. James's.

The chapel is situated on the western side of the court-yard of the palace. It is a small square in plan, possessing few striking features, being altogether plain and unostentatious. In this point, it is in perfect keeping with the palace itself. A gallery runs ronnd one half of the building, the centre portion of which, immediately over the entrance doorway, is appropriated to her Majesty and suite. The ceiling is very superb, and ia one of the earliest specimens of the new style, introduced by Holbein into England, in 1540. The form of the whole is flat, with a slight curve or rise, at the two long sides; the rib-mouldings are of wooden frame work, suspended to the roof above; the panels have plaster grounds, and on these are painted various heraldic subjects, the centres being Tudor emblems. The subject is gilt, shaded boldly with bistre; the roses glared with a red colour, and the arms emblazoned in their proper colours; leaves painted dark green, ornamented each subject; and the general ground of the whole was light blue. The mouldings of the ribs are painted green, and some are gilt; the under-side, dark blue, with a running gilt ornament. This ceiling has undergone several repairs; in one of which the blue ground was painted white. In 1836, when the chapel was enlarged, under the direction of Sir Robert Smirke, the blue ground was discovered, as were some of the mottoes in the small panels.



THE ROYAL CHAPEL, ST. JAMES'S.

NOOKS AND CORNERS OF OLD ENGLAND.

THE FREE-GRAMMAR SCHOOL, AT NEWPORT.

This ancient building is celebrated for its association with the fortunes of Charles I. during that ill-fated Sovereign's sojourn in the Isle of Wight. It is still used as a school-house, and is exteriorly built of the soft freestone found in the island, shaped into rough resemblance of bricks; but, at the angles of the building, the stones are neatly squared: parts of the stacks of chimneys shown in the engraving are built of brick. The school-room is the apartment in which Charles and the Commissioners met: it is panelled with oak, which is generally in a dilapidated condition. At the east end of the room, within the memory of a very old man, was a canopy, beneath which, tradition says, the King's chair was placed. On the north side of the room, and near the canopy, are two doors, through one of which—that nearest to the window—Charles had communication with his partisans; though it is more probable that the King entered the room by this door. The room below has some tolerably ornamental carving, but of a later date than the main building.

THE FREE GRAMMAR-SCHOOL, NEWPORT, ISLE OF WIGHT.

MEETING OF THE IMPROVED ORDER OF OLD FRIENDS, IN FINSBURY-SQUARE.

ANNIVERSARY OF THE IMPROVED ORDER OF OLD FRIENDS.

Monday was the day appointed for the celebration of the anniversary of this institution, which is stated to number in its list nearly 40,000 members. The place of muster was Finsbury-square, and thither the several lodges passed in procession, each accompanied by its banner and band of music, committee bearing ornamented wands, and wearing their insignia of office. The weather was brilliant, and the appearance of the banners very splendid, there being no lack of gold and silver upon these huge floating sheets of emblazonry. The bands played lively airs, and, making allowance for the vast numbers, the line of procession was well kept. At the place of muster, represented in our engraving, the scene was that of a general holiday, and there seemed to be but one feeling of satisfaction and joy pervading the "Old Friends," and the vast assemblage of spectators. The several lodges having formed in the square, proceeded to the large tavern known as Highbury Barn, and there passed the day in festivity. There were in the entire procession nearly 2000 persons, 74 banners, and 30 bands of music; and the moving masses of spectators were astounding.

The respectable appearance of the "Old Friends" could scarcely fail to impress the spectator with associations of full employment, and the very healthy condition of "well-to-do." The "Order" is an improved Friendly Society, one of those institutions which, when founded upon correct principles, and prudently conducted, are beneficial both to their members and to the community at large. Like most of that which is excellent in English habits, these societies are of very ancient origin, for the guilds, or social corporations of the Anglo Saxons, seem on the whole to have been friendly associations, made for mutual aid and contribution to meet the pecuniary exigencies which were perpetually arising from burials, legal exactions, penal mulcts, and other payments or compensations. The quality of the members of these societies was not, however, confined to the operative classes. And it is now no longer necessary to establish a mutual guarantee against legal exactions and penal mulcts; and the objects of friendly societies are limited to an insurance against the natural contingencies of sickness, infirmity, and death. Nevertheless, they are clearly to be traced to the customs of our ancestors a thousand years since.

GREAT PUBLIC MEETING AT GUERNSEY, TO ADDRESS THE QUEEN.

Our readers may remember that certain injurious and unfounded imputations have lately been cast upon the loyalty of the inhabitants of the island of Guernsey; insomuch that the Government were induced, by the representations of the Governor, to despatch a number of troops to the island to suppress the imaginary insurrection. To repudiate altogether this insinuation, the islanders met in great numbers on the 2nd instant, to assure the Queen of their unshaken attachment and allegiance to her Majesty's person and Government. The day will hereafter be a memorable one in the history of the island; for up to this period a general public meeting of the inhabitants of Guernsey was a thing unknown. At all former times, and under the most urgent circumstances, the opinions of the people of the island had no other organs of expression than the States, the Court, and parochial meetings of the rate-payers. By many, indeed, it was maintained that by such means only could the public wishes be proclaimed in a constitutional manner, and that a general meeting of the inhabitants would be subversive of constitutional order. There were others, however, who could not subscribe to this opinion. The question was mooted by this party as an experiment; and, it being hailed by respectable persons of all classes, Tuesday was the day fixed for this "novel and interesting event."

As early as three o'clock in the morning, the inhabitants of the island were on the alert, as if in preparation for a national holiday. In the town of St. Peter-Port, workmen were busy in every direction hanging flags and garlands, and raising arches of evergreens and flowers brought in cart-loads from the country.

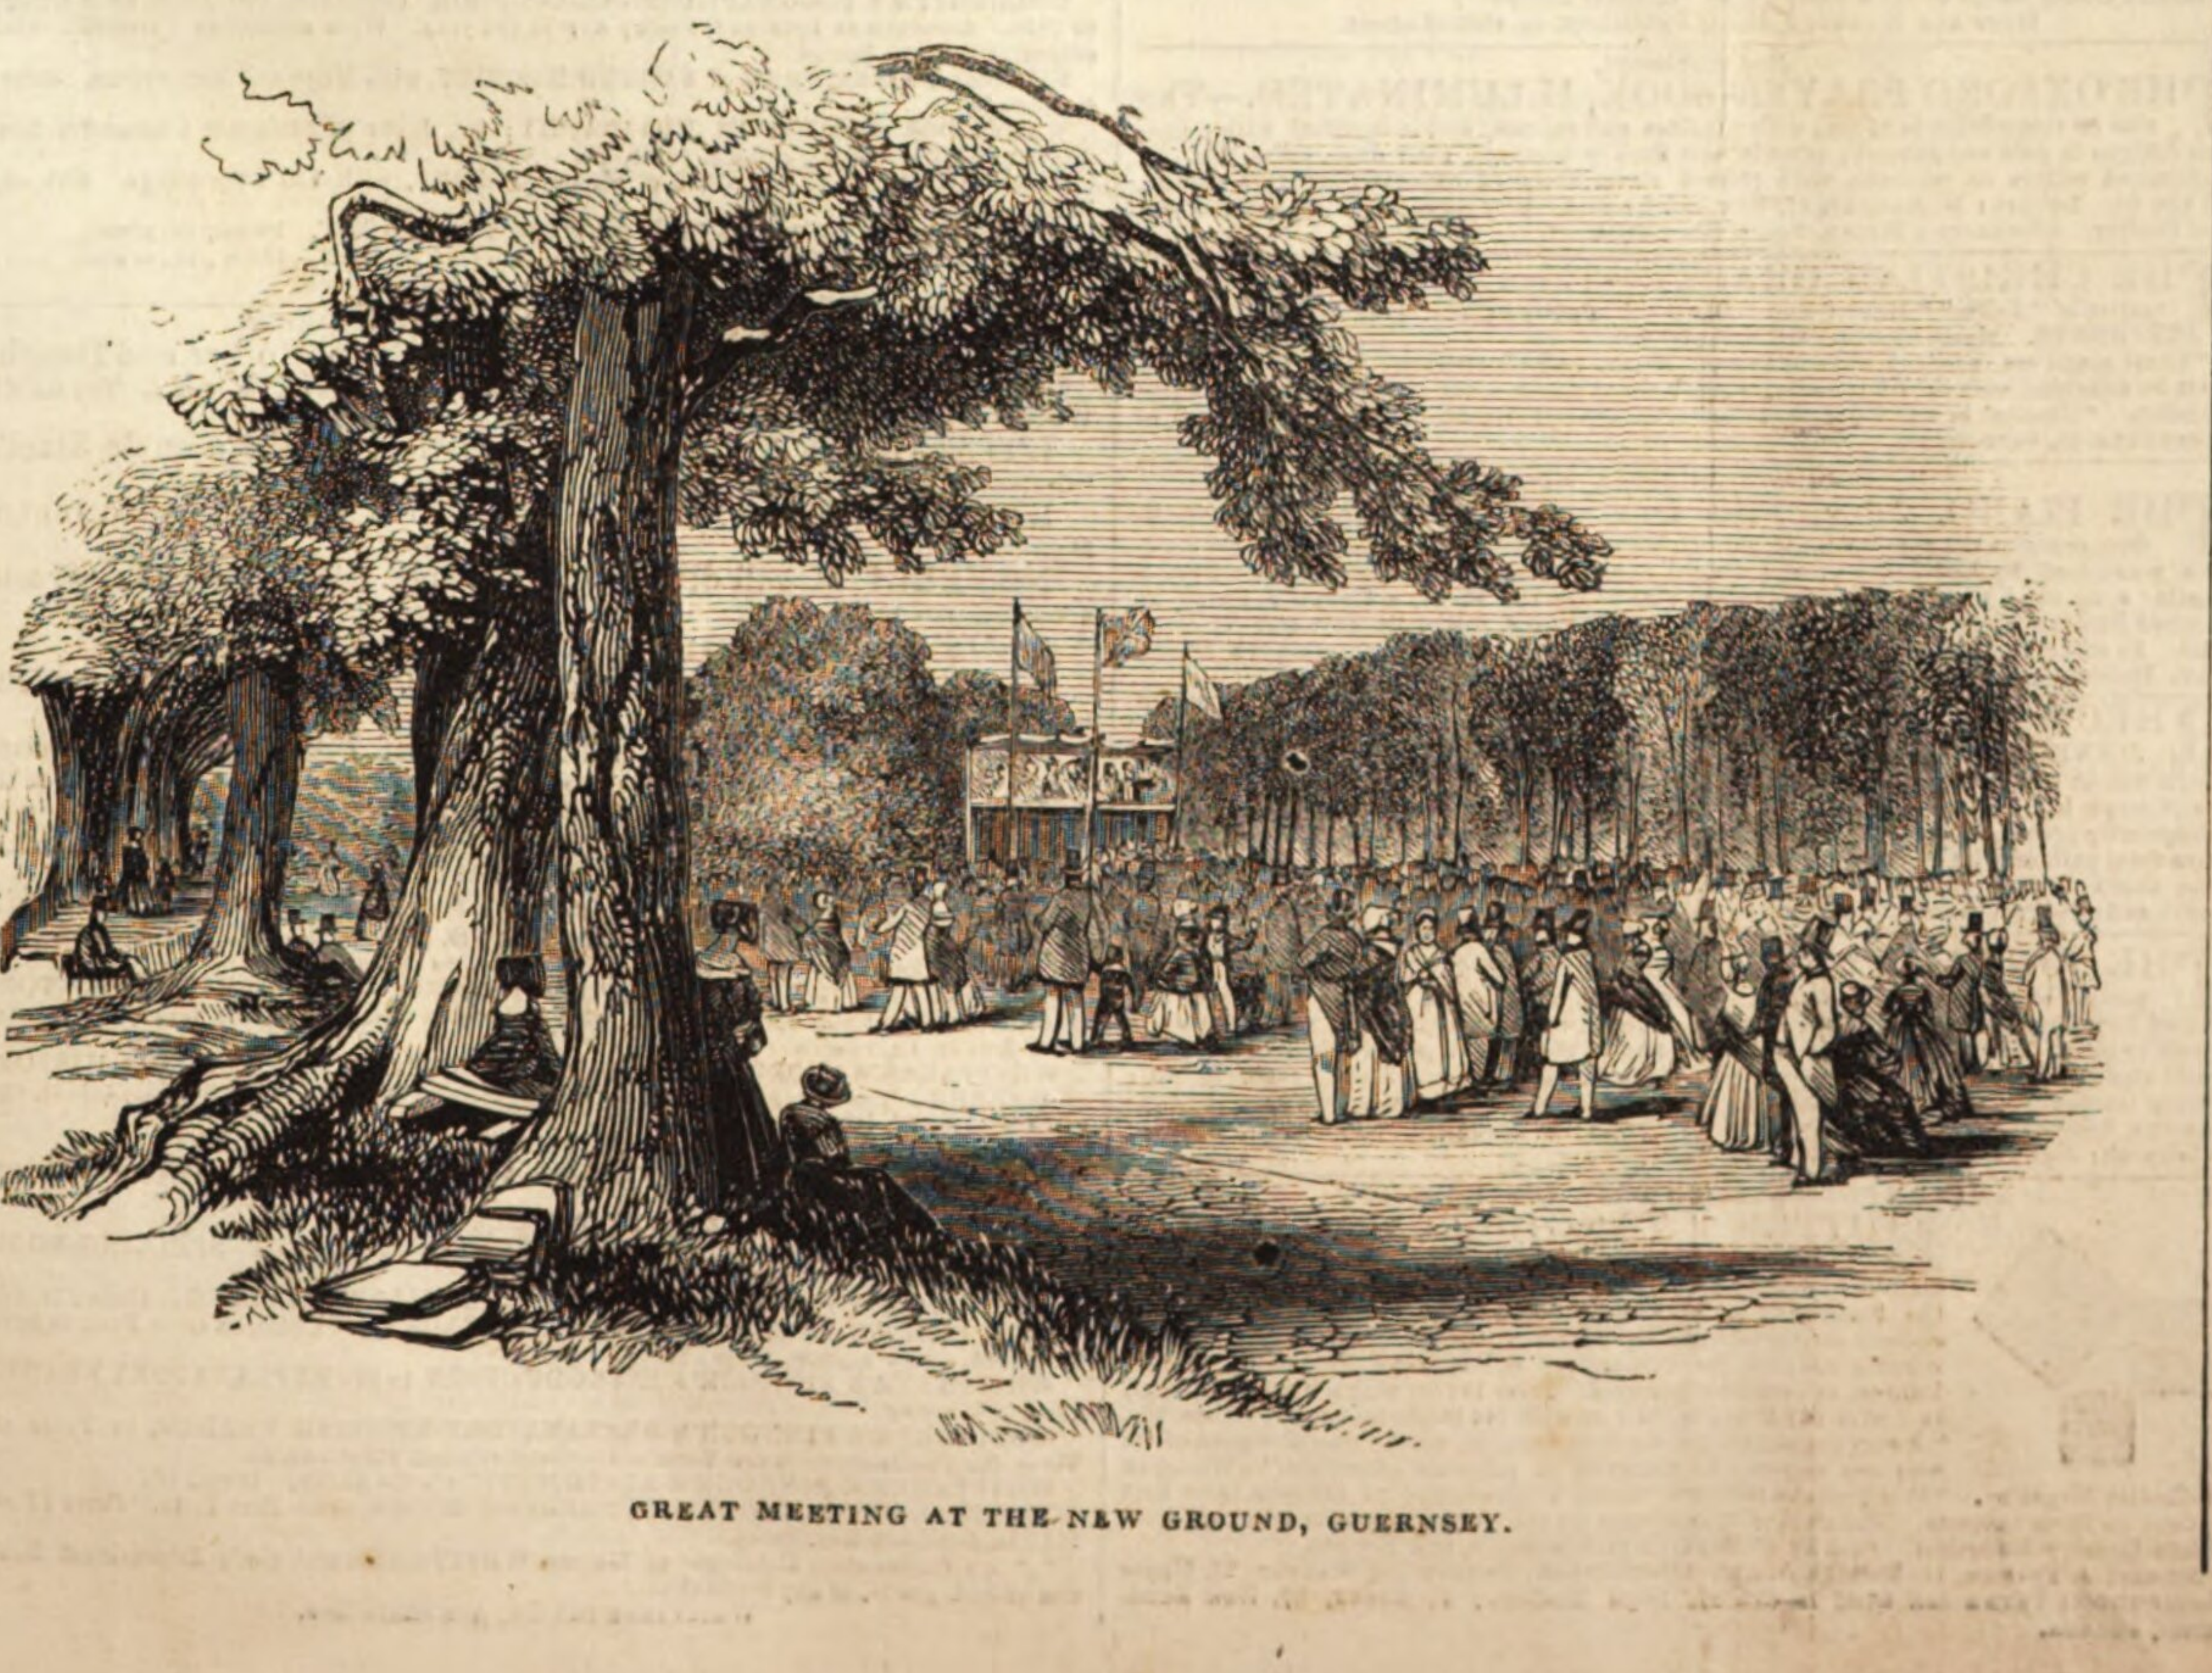
The public promenade, known as "the New Ground," was judiciously fixed on as the place of meeting, where a substantial and capacious hustings, which afterwards gave accommodation to upwards of 200 persons, was erected by Mr. Daniel de Putron. The centre was ornamented with the Royal Standard of England, whilst the Union Jack floated at each corner.

Twelve o'clock was the hour appointed for the meeting, but long before this the crowd commenced to pour in, and by noon there was collected such an assemblage of both sexes as was never before witnessed in Guernsey. Some have estimated them at 10,000 and others at 16,000, but, they may safely be stated at from 12,000 to 15,000.

The assemblage consisted of both sexes, and of all classes, and as the meeting was considered almost as a religious solemnity, all were dressed in their holiday attire, so that the mass presented a most animating appearance. Punctually at twelve o'clock, the gallant and venerable General Sir Thomas Saumarez, who the day previous had completed his 84th year, ascended the hustings, and was loudly cheered by the multitude,—the band, which was placed on a platform in front of that construction, at the same time playing the national anthem, and the whole of the assemblage being uncovered. There were on the hustings the Very Reverend the Dean, the Reverend Thomas Brock, Commissary of Guernsey, and the greater part of the Clergy and Ministers of the island, the bailiff and most of the magistrates, Sir Thomas Mansell, R.N., Lieut.-Col. Lane, Major Rynd, and a very considerable number of naval and military officers, both native and British, together with Colonels and Officers of the Militia, and many of the most respectable of the inhabitants.

The business of the meeting having been opened by the venerable chairman, resolutions were passed, and a dutiful and loyal address voted to her Majesty, amid the enthusiastic shouts of the multitude; after which the meeting was addressed by several gentlemen. The platform was then vacated, the signing of the address commenced, and in a short time 980 signatures were affixed to it. From the New Ground, the vast assembly dispersed, to witness the decorations in the town; at about seven o'clock, a vessel, of about 150 tons, was launched from the building-yard of Mr. Machon; the Independent Club-house was brilliantly illuminated, fireworks were displayed, and the rejoicings were kept up till midnight.

Our engraving, from an artistical sketch, obligingly forwarded by a correspondent at Guernsey, represents the New Ground during the meeting.



GREAT MEETING AT THE NEW GROUND, GUERNSEY.

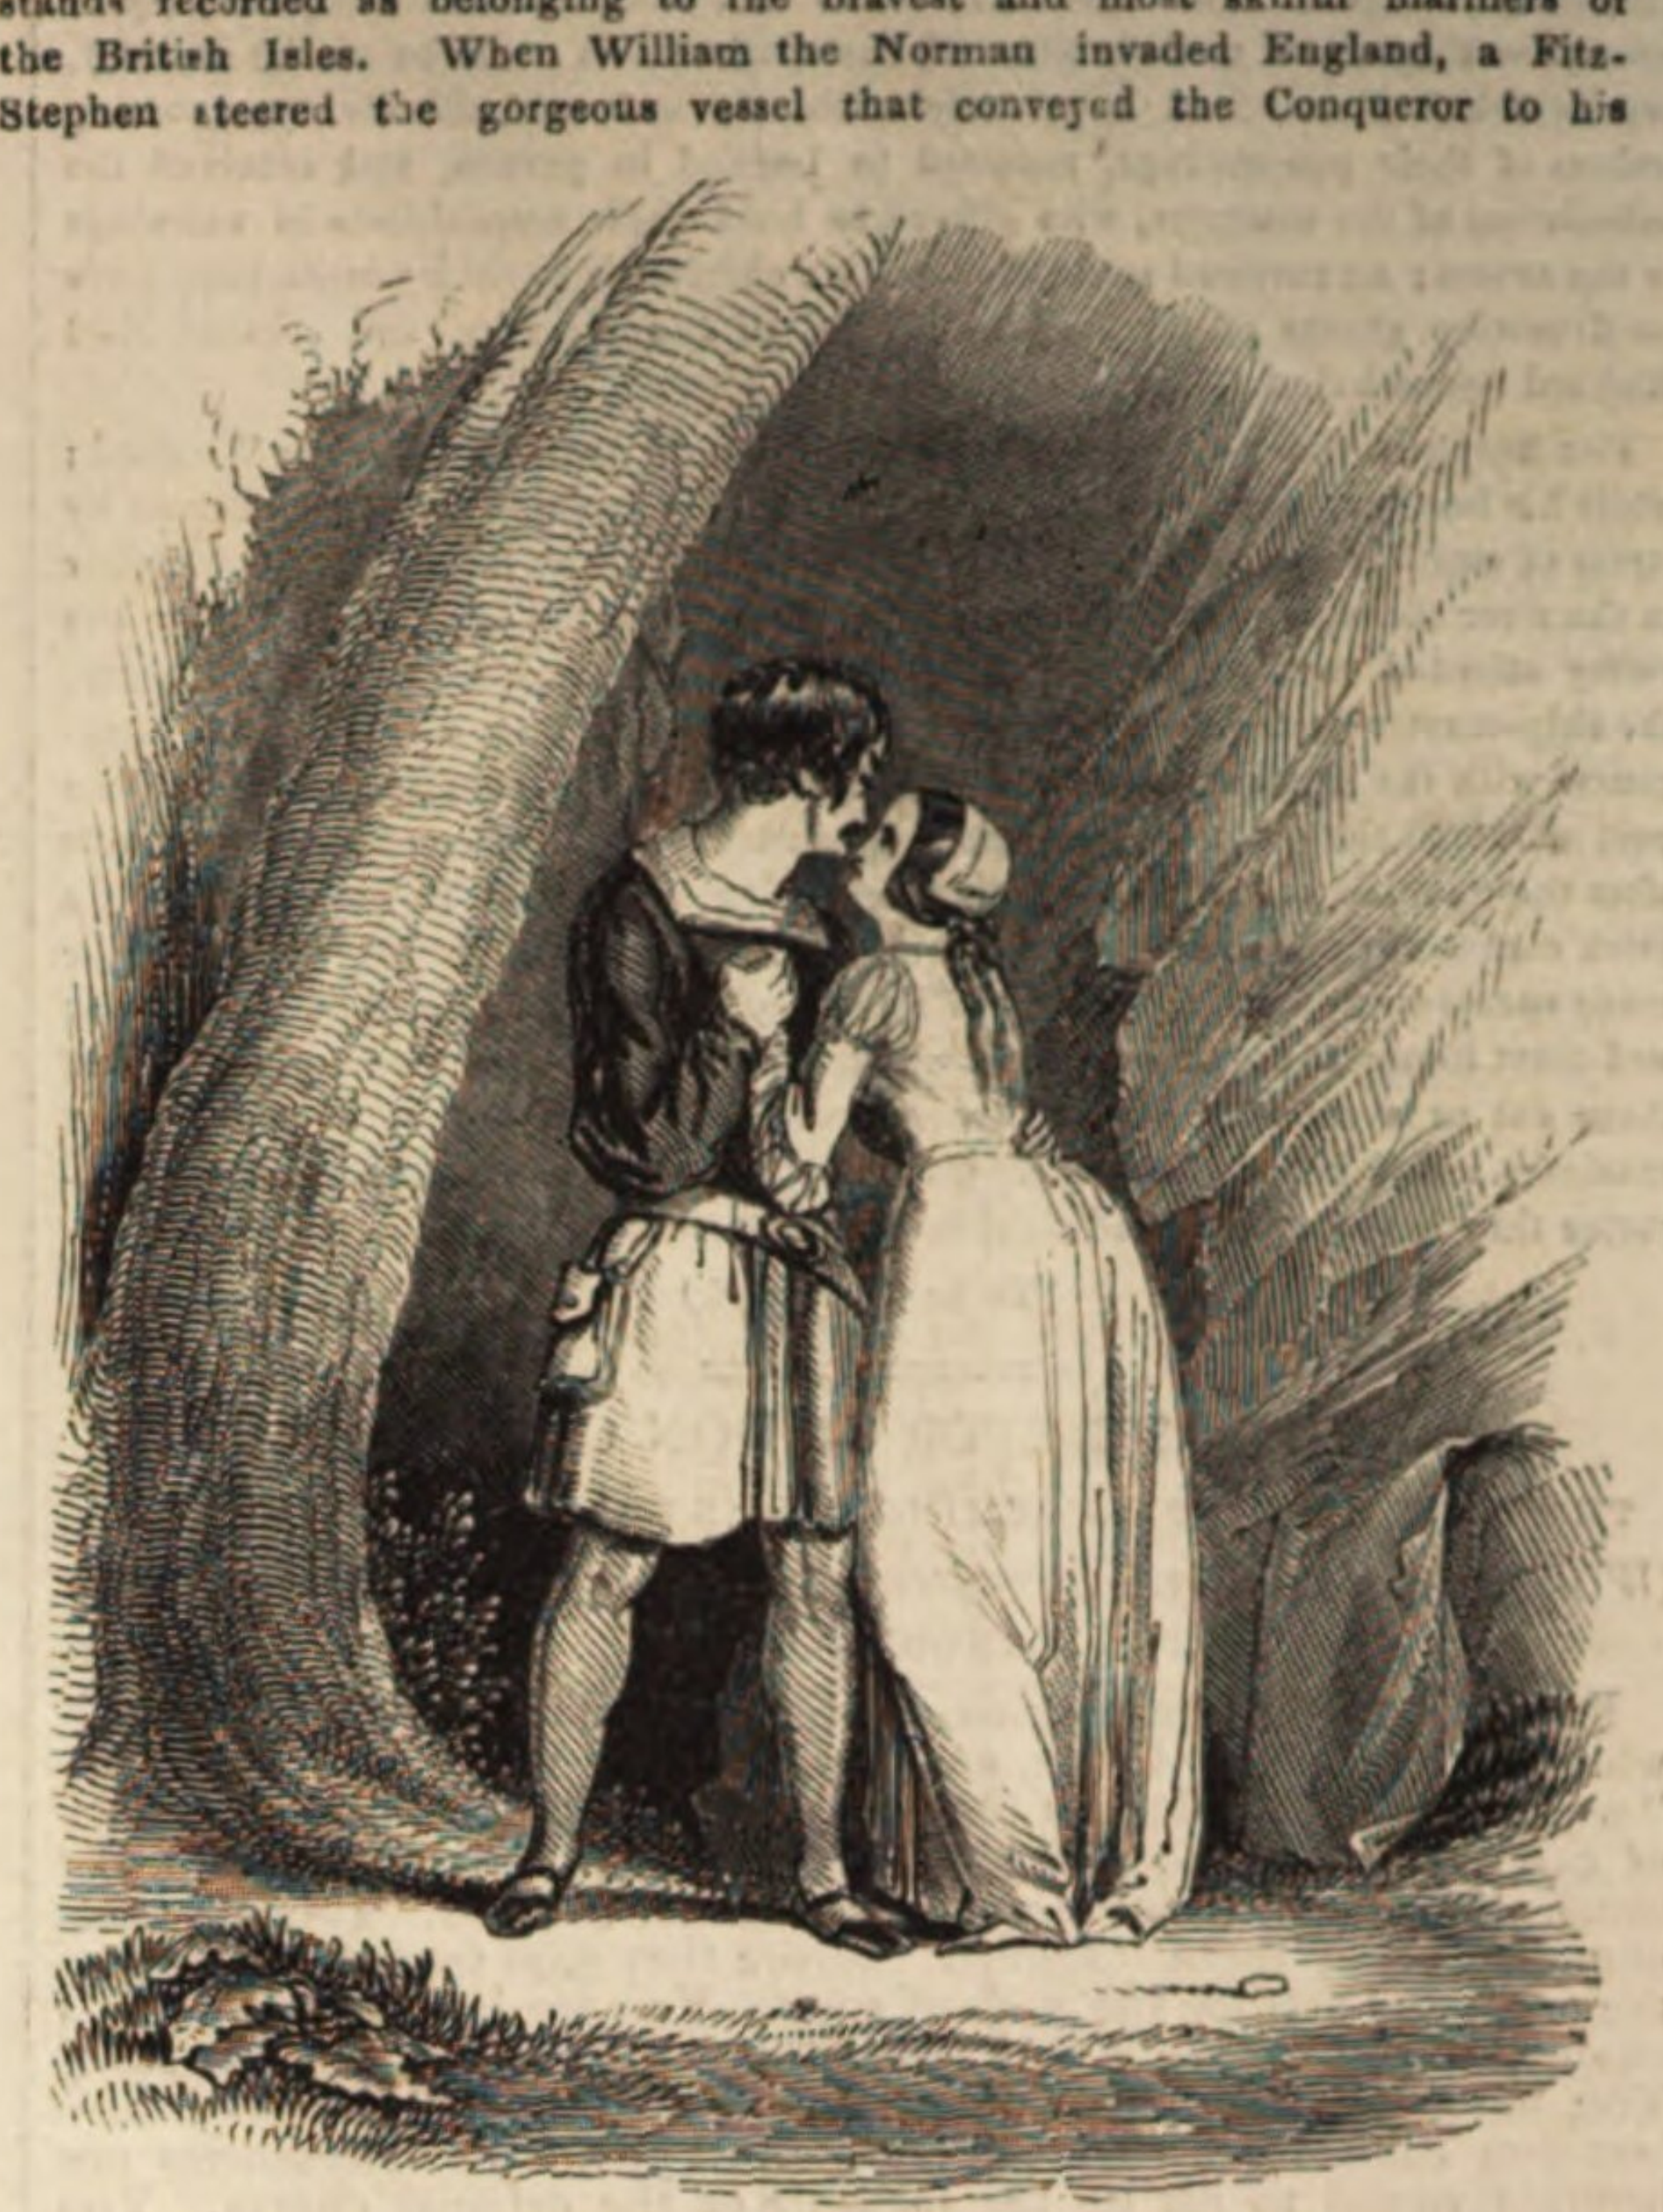
FITZ-STEPHEN.

BY

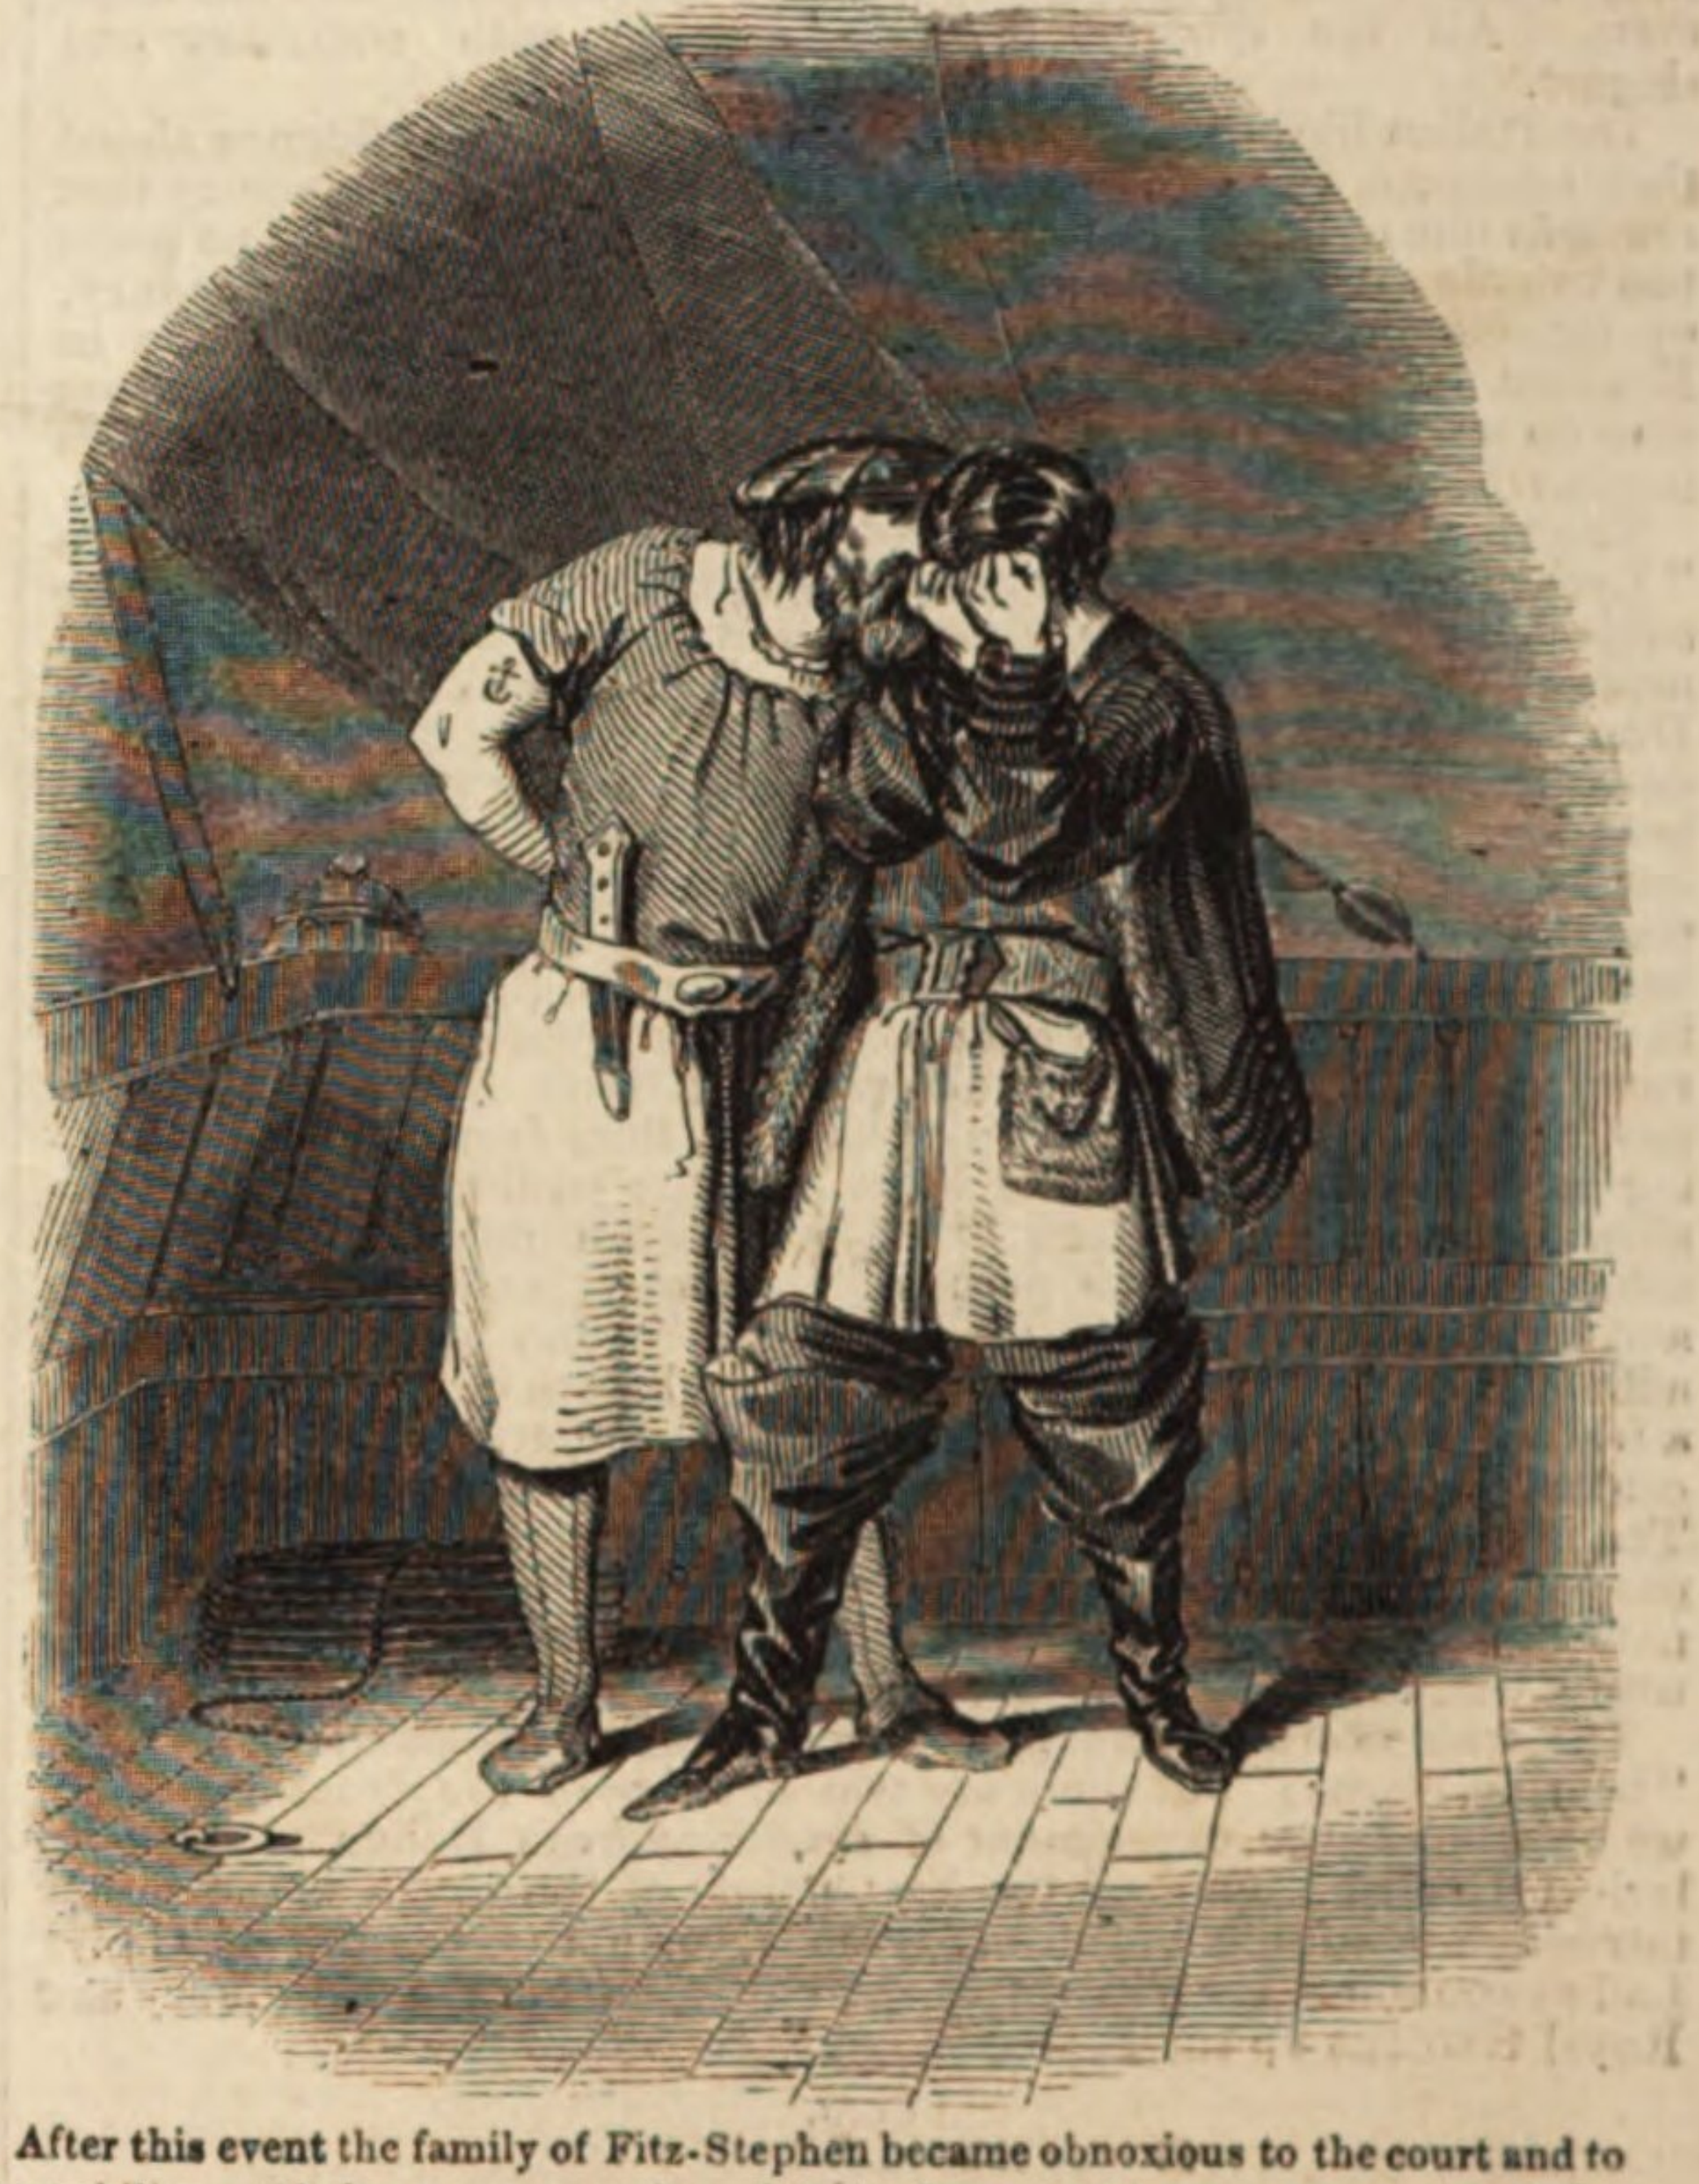
"THE OLD SAILOR."

> "The great King of Kings
> Hath in the table of his law commanded,
> That thou shalt do no murder.
> Take heed, for he holds vengeance in his hand,
> To hurl upon their heads that break his law.—Shakspeare.

From the earliest period of English naval history, the name of Fitz-Stephen stands recorded as belonging to the bravest and most skilful mariners of the British Isles. When William the Norman invaded England, a Fitz-Stephen steered the gorgeous vessel that conveyed the Conqueror to his future kingdom, and it was the grandson of this man who commanded the White Ship, which was wrecked on the Catte du Raz, when Prince William, the worshipped of his father's heart, together with the flower of the English and Norman nobility, perished in the ocean, and found at the same moment, a death of violence and an unblessed grave. Fitz-Stephen was not himself to be blamed for this—the catastrophe was owing to the intoxication of his pilots, who had drank deep of the ruddy wine, in honour of their royal and noble freight. But the devoted commander would not survive the lost heir to the throne of England—he had gone down with his vessel when she first sank, but rose again buoyant on the waters and gained the mast of the wreck, whose top was above the surface—here he might have remained in safety, but on enquiring for the Prince, of a Rouen butcher, who was the only person saved, and learning that he was drowned, he flung himself back into the sea and settled down beneath the waves a voluntary, but a useless sacrifice.



Was the hand of retributive justice displayed in this disaster? The proud monarch, who had usurped his brother's throne and deprived him of his sight, had anticipated a long succession of his own lineal descendants to rule over the dominions which he had seized; he had embarked for England after obtaining the oath of fealty from the Norman barons to his son—that son, who in the midst of revelry and joyous mirth, whilst sky and sea were beautifully serene, was untimely and suddenly summoned into the presence of the King of Kings, and the worldly ambition of his father, which had urged him into the perpetration of crime, was crushed and annihilated. "He never smiled again."



After this event the family of Fitz-Stephen became obnoxious to the court and to the nobility. Their presence awakened in the breasts of bereaved parents painful recollections that could not be subdued—recollections of the young, the brave, and the beautiful, who would never return, and whose bodies the greedy waves had not restored for christian burial. Death is at all seasons appalling, and brings regret and sorrow to the survivors; yet there is a melancholy satisfaction in hearing the last utterance of the dying, closing the eyes of the dead, and laying the perishing remains within the silent sepulchre. But oh! how greatly is the heart agonized when separated for ever from those whom we have loved—no voice to sooth and cheer the departing spirit, but suddenly cut off when hope was brightest, and home, with all its dear delights and sweet enjoyments, was daily getting nearer. Oh! how the mind's eye dwells with appalling interest upon the ghastly corpse dashed about at the mercy of the winds and waves! There is something consolatory in having witnessed the depositing of the coffin in its narrow prison-house; it gives a locality to the departed; remembrance revives the funeral scene, and there is a certainty that the inanimate body is mingling with its kindred earth. But dreadfully distressing it is when even these melancholy consolations are denied, and imagination pictures the sallow and bloated body rolled over and over by the billows, or becoming a prey to the monsters of the deep.

Fitz-Stephen was a bold, generous, and chivalrous youth, much valued and esteemed by his relatives, who now, in addition to their sorrow for his loss, found themselves compelled to withdraw for a time into partial obscurity that implied disgrace. In the reign of Henry the First, however, they appear to have regained favour, for we find one of them acting in the capacity of Secretary to the proud prelate Becket, Archbishop of Canterbury, whose unjustifiable assassination caused him to be canonized as a saint; and we also see another of the family, Robert Fitz-Stephen, at the head of a body of retainers subjugating Ireland to the supreme control of Dermot, King of Leinster, who had been exiled by his subjects. But Dermot did not long survive his success, and the whole dominion of Ireland devolved on Richard, Earl of Strigul, who had married Dermot's daughter. The adventurers who had achieved this conquest appropriated to themselves as their share of the spoil certain portions of the country, over which they exercised a princely authority and rule, till Henry, growing jealous of their proceedings, repaired to Ireland in person, and received the submission of the usurpers, who offered to hold their acquisitions in vassalage to the crown; he restored some of the Irish chieftains to their possessions, gave confirmatory grants of territory to several of the English, and created Earl Richard Seneschal of Ireland.

Fitz-Stephen the warrior acquired considerable tracts of land in Wexford; while his brother, a sea-captain who traded with Spain, having been driven by stress of weather upon the western coast, entered Galway Bay, and found shelter in the river through which Lough Carrib flows into the sea. Gratified by the safety afforded to him, as well as pleased with the appearance of the country, the ship-master determined to remove thither and establish a commercial intercourse with the continent. His design succeeded; the commodiousness of the port attracted the notice of mercantile speculators; a handsome town was built after the Spanish model (the streets crossing each other at right angles) and a brisk commerce was opened with Spain, Portugal, and the Mediterranean. For many succeeding years the family of Fitz-Stephen occasionally filled the highest and most important stations; and when a Parliament was summoned, one of them sat as a member of the lower house. Their fame as merchants and mariners continued to be widely diffused; but more so on account of the character they bore for stern and rigid integrity.

THE LIBRETTO OF DON CARLOS,

THE NEW OPERA PERFORMING AT HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

(With poetical translations, written exclusively for the Illustrated London News.)

Previous to the appearance of the new opera of "Don Carlos," which has raised up Costa, and knocked up Mario and Lablache, "we fell upon" the Italian Libretto, and have taken the opportunity of careful perusal, to award it a literary notice apart from the musical criticism, which appears in another column. It is amusing enough to read these "libretti" before they pass from the hands of the poet, and assume the garb of song. You are in the blacksmith's shop, and you see the naked iron before it is forged into the shoe. You have the mould without the metal—the die without the coin—but you cannot get the mint-sterling, until all the accessories are brought round to fill up the measure of the original charm. You read a libretto, and you sink your poor poet into a nonentity. He has fair thoughts, pretty sentiments, and a sweet or horrible romance, but you cannot appreciate him properly till he is fairly drowned—not > Like maudlin Clarence in his malmsey butt,

but in sweets full as delicious and intoxicating; in bright scenery, brilliant costume, "heavenly music, and the delirium of angel voices." You take him to the Opera, you know that he is of no use in your study, and you not only put flesh upon the skeleton, but array him in a goodly suit of fashionable attire. Or, if you like, he is the foundation of a house, and nothing more; Costa builds up the tenement—Lumley puts on the roof—Grieves paints papers and decorates, while Lablache, Grisi, Bellini, Mario, Fornasari, and Giubilei come in as the furniture. You have other enchantments around you, and in the meanwhile your poet is out of sight. But for all this there is no reason why a libretto should not be as good as any other of the elements which compose an Opera. In dramatic outline, in fertile incident, in strength of purpose and poetic feature, it should be the very spring of all the fountain; and genius and originality ought to shine like stars from the heaven that surrounds them. The story should make itself felt; not in the way of excuse or as filling an hiatus; not as who should say—

> Story, Lord bless you I have none to tell,

but by its intrinsic interest, by the emotion it is capable to excite. With our English operas this is rarely the case; you seldom get a glimpse of poetry in an English libretto, and the nouvelette is generally worked out by the scene-painter, the blue fire, and the trap-door. All the spirituel of the affair lies with composer and singers.

The Italian libretti are better; there is some natural fluency about their language, and a gentle current of flowing undulating poetry that reminds one of improvisation, so facile is it, and so free. The poets too usually select lofty themes, or such as are wild in their romance, or touching and tender in their simplicity. The disadvantage in England is that they are generally abominably translated for those who do not know Italian; but if you see them upon the stage, there is something to be gathered from them after all.

The story of M. Costa's new opera is before us. in the form of a "Lyric Tragedy," from the pen of Signor Leopoldo Tarantini. The subject is one of those absorbing crises of history which have lived in mystery and died in blood. It involves the destinies of Philip II. and Don Carlos of Spain, and Isabella of Valois—the creature of saddened purity, though implied crime—who, having warmly loved and been betrothed to the son, was forced by the exigencies of state policy to wed the father, and reaped the bitterness of her frightful destiny in the tragic harvest of sorrow, which the Muses in the libretto before us have sent forth their ambassador to glean. The poet has in some measure departed from history, and from still more familiar romance—for it will be remembered that both Alfieri and Schiller have woven it into the fair embroidery of their fame: the one painting in Philip and Carlos the bigot and the enthusiast, with all the glow and fervour of deep and dark Italian portraiture; and the other, diverging into the path of friendship, and quitting passion and love, to shadow forth the devoted affection and fidelity of the afflicted Princess's friend. In the version before us that friendship is a feature, but not a prominent one; and the interest of the tragedy is centred in the King, his unhappy son, and still more unhappy wife. The father is haughty, distrustful, and tyrannical—the son wretched, passionate, and enthusiastic—the wife miserable utterly, in her unnatural position; loving the son enduringly, but dreading the husband with a wild and wondering awe.

The framework of the plot may be easily imagined from these "bearing-places;" but there are two or three of the situations which we have made the experiment of rendering from Italian poetry into lyrical English. One of the best points of the opera is the pretty introduction of the beautiful Isabella, with the Chorus of Court Ladies sounding her praises as she emerges from the Shrubbery and Royal Gardens up the Palace Steps.

Coro.

Sì vaga si bella
Sul fior dell' età
Non v' è o' Isabella
Più cara beltà
Del serto che brilla
Raggiante sul crin
Più puro sfavilla
Quel guardo azzurrin
Quel guardo che splende
Di divo candor
Quel guardo la rende
Regina de' cor.
D' Iberia le meste
Querele ascoltò,
E un angel celeste
Iddio le donò.

Chorus.

In her beauty gliding there,
Bloomful and surpassing fair,
Who can wear her charms so well
As the lovely Isabel!
Not the circlet that doth shine
Brilliant on her brow divine,
Hath a sparkle half as bright
As her eyes, when shedding light!

In those tender eyes we see
Stars of Heav'nly purity
That with love proclaim her still
Queen of every heart and will!
Spain was desolate, and prayed—
So, when her complaint was made,
Heaven, indulgent list'ning, gave
This sweet soul, to soothe and save.

Soon the chorus subsides, and the fair courtiers are in the presence of her whose praises have hardly died upon their lips. One Duchess de Mondecar welcomes her, and the scene which ensues reminds us of Mary's farewell to France, though taking in the sequel a sadder aspect. The Duchess and Queen converse:—

Duch. Quì t' assidi
Regina; il primo spiro
Della tepida brezza
Che va destando i rugiadosi fiori
Dolce è goder sui matutini albori.

Reg. Ah sì—caro è al mio core
Questo loco, quest' ora—
Quì quanto intorno io miro
Mi richiama di Francia all' aure amiche,
Parmi fruirle ancora—

Duch. Ognor Francia rimembri?

Reg. Ognora, ognora
Quando, o bel suol di Francia,
Ritorni al mio pensiere,
Per te nei dì che furono
Par che rinasca il cor.

Per te rivivo all' estasi
Del mio primier amor.

Parmi sull' ale ai zeffiri
Volar di sfere in sfere,
Del caro ben l' immagine
Lieve mi segue a vol.

Ah! scordo allor gli spasimi
Di questo basso suol.

Coro.

Misera! oh qual nell' anima
Rinchiude acerbo duol.

Reg. Riavendosi dal suo abbandono.
Delirai! delirio orrendo!
Tutto, ah tutto è colpa in me.
E un arcano il mio dolore
Che morir con me dovrà
E un martir che in ogni core
Desta orrore e non pietà.

Quel che avanza a ognun che geme:
Il conforto della speme—
Fin la speme è in me delitto
Fin delitto è il sovvenir.

Duch. Sit here. Such breath as zephyr breathes,
And round the dewy flowret wreathes
The morning's sweet and scented gale
Is fair and fragrant to inhale.

Queen. Ah, yes, this calm and balmy spot,
Recalls me pleasures unforgot,
And bids my bounding fancy dance,
Back to the homes of joyous France.

Duch. Still France rememb'rest thou?

Queen. Oh, yes!
Its cherish'd charms my memory bless,
And as in days long gone I seem
To live again in every dream
That floats around my heart, to prove
The bliss of all my early love!

I seem as though on zephyr wing,
I flew about, a fairy thing,
And fondly caught, when glancing back,
Love's image lingering on my track!
Ah! all forgotten then my grief,
In joy so beautiful and brief!

Chorus.

Ah, wretched soul, in sadness drown'd,
How black on it hath sorrow frown'd.

Queen (recovering her abandon).
I was delirious! fatal madness stole
Upon my spirit, and absorbed my soul.
All, all is guilt with me; no mortal eye
May scan the mystery that with me must die;
A grief that, once proclaimed, would only start
All hearts to horror—none to pity's part.
Even hope, that still is sorrow's gentlest bride,
'Mid all my torture is to me denied;
For Hope is crime to me, and Memory's pain
Cannot come guiltless to my aching brain.

There is something exquisitely touching in the affliction which is by present circumstances forbidden even to remember its former love. It furnishes a key and clue to the whole tragedy, which has indeed a fatal termination, and plunges its hapless heroine among the flames of the Inquisition.

COLWELL'S POMADE, or HAIR RESTORATIVE, is rapidly superseding every other preparation hitherto offered to the public, having never yet failed, although tested in numerous cases of baldness of 20 years. For the growth of eyebrows and whiskers it is equally certain. One pot is sufficient to convince the most sceptical.—Sold by all wholesale dealers; and retail, at 3s. 6d. each, by Sanger, Oxford street; Smyth and Nephew, 117, New Bond-street; Savory and Moore, New Bond-street, and Regent-street; Sharpe, Haymarket; Butler, Cheapside; Prout, 229, Strand; by most respectable chemists; and by the proprietor, H. Colwell, Belvidere-place, Southwark, by whom all letters will be attended to, and testimonials sent.

WOLLASTON'S PATENT GELATINE, for immediately making Jellies or Blanc-mange, being quickly dissolved in boiling water. It is of equal strength with the finest Russian Isinglass, and perfectly free from any unpleasant taste or smell, requiring less flavouring than any other preparation of Gelatine or Isinglass, being a perfectly pure, colourless, and soluble substance. For Jellies it will not be found necessary to use eggs, as passing through a flannel bag is sufficient. Invalids will find this a very nourishing and valuable restorative, from the great facility and readiness with which it is used, and not being liable to become sour so soon as isinglass.—Manufactured and Sold by Edward L. Woollaston, Dover; and retailed by all respectable Druggists, Grocers and others, at 8s. per pound.

IMPORTANT to FAMILIES FURNISHING.—A considerable saving can be effected in the purchase of Furnishing Ironmongery, by visiting the PANKLIBANON IRON WORKS, 58, Baker-street, Portman-square, where may be inspected the most extensive STOCK of IRONMONGERY GOODS in the Kingdom, consisting of kitchen cooking utensils, German silver wares, drawing-room stoves, shower and vapour baths, ornamental iron work, garden implements, japanned water cans and toilette pails, best Sheffield plate, kitchen ranges, fenders and fire-irons, tea trays, ornamental wire-work, flower-stands, table cutlery, &c. Every article being marked in plain figures, at the lowest possible price, will fully convince purchasers at this establishment of the great advantage resulting from Cash payments, as the Proprietors warrant every article of the very best manufacture.—THORPE, FALLOWS, and CO., 58, Baker-street, Portman-square.—A liberal allowance to merchants and captains.

FOR STOPPING DECAYED TEETH.—Price 4s. 6d. Patronised by her Majesty, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent. Mr. THOMAS'S SUCCEDANEUM, for Stopping Decayed Teeth, however large the cavity. It is placed in the tooth in a soft state, without any pressure or pain, and will remain firm in the tooth for many years, rendering extraction unnecessary, arresting the further progress of decay. All persons can use Mr. Thomas's Succedaneum themselves with ease, as full directions are enclosed.—Prepared only by Mr THOMAS, Surgeon-Dentist, 64, Berners-street, Oxford-street. Price 4s. 6d., and can be sent by post. Mr. THOMAS continues to supply the Loss of Teeth on his new system of Self-adhesion, without springs or wires. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation whatever. At home from Eleven till Four.

MOURNING—Court, Family, and Complimentary.—The Proprietors of the London General Mourning Warehouse, Nos. 247 and 249 Regent-street, beg respectfully to remind families whose bereavements compel them to adopt mourning attire, that every article (of the very best description) requisite for a complete outfit of mourning may be had at their establishment at a moment's notice. Widows' and Family Mourning is always kept made up; and a note descriptive of the mourning required, will ensure everything necessary for the occasion, being sent (in town or country) immediately. Ladies requiring Silks—either Satins, Satin Turcs, Watered or Plain Ducapes, and Widows Silks, are particularly invited to a trial of the new Corbeau Silks introduced at this house, as they will be found not only more durable, but the colour will stand the test of the strongest acid, or even sea water. Black and Grey, and Fancy Mourning Silks of every description. The Show Rooms are replete with every novelty that modern taste has introduced in mourning millinery, flowers, collars, head-dresses, bugle berthes, trimmings, &c. &c.—The London General Mourning Warehouse, Nos. 247 and 249, Regent-street, near Oxford street.—W. C JAY, and Co.

PRESERVES and CONFECTIONERY.—The superiority of BETTS'S PATENT BRANDY, for Preserves and Confectionery, is testified by the fact that it is preferred to any other spirit by the most extensive Wholesale Confectioners in the Metropolis; for fortifying Home-made Wines it is invaluable; as an ordinary Beverage it is congenial to the most delicate constitutions; and, as a Medical Stimulant it is peculiarly adapted to persons of bilious or dyspeptic habits. Quantities of not less than Two Gallons, supplied at the Distillery, 7, Smithfield Bars, in Stone Jars, at 18s. per Gallon, exclusive of the price of the Jar; and in Glass Bottles, at 20s. per Gallon, Bottles and Case included.

Consumers of Brandy are respectfully informed that J. T. BETTS, Jun. and Co. will not be responsible for any Bottled Brandy that is not protected against fraudulent substitution, by the Patent Metallic Capsules, made of pure and solid metal, (not tin-foil,) embossed with the words "Betts's Patent Brandy, 7, Smithfield Bars, to which attention is especially directed.

SAILING UNDER FALSE COLOURS!!!—The BRITISH COLLEGE OF HEALTH hereby cautions the Public against the numberless Pills sold under fictitious names and titles, which have sprung into existence since Mr. MORISON'S Work appeared. The parties who put forth such Pills (sailing under false colours), take the name of some eminent person not in existence, and then most fraudulently make extracts of Mr. Morison's Work, which they put into their bills, in order to obtain a sale for their pills. It is, therefore, against such a nefarious practice that Messrs. MORISON deem it their duty and interest to warn the Public, being determined that the Hygeian Theory of Medicine, as introduced by JAMES MORISON, the Hygeist, shall not be made a vehicle to such fraud and imposture. MORISON and CO., Hygeists.

British College of Health, Hamilton-place, New-road, July, 1844.

N.B. We would advise the Public, should they feel inclined to patronise such Pills, to be cautious in making inquiries as to who the Proprietors of such medicines really are. The practice of adopting the Hygeian theory with an inefficient or improper medicine, of course tends to bring that theory into disrepute.

ROWLAND'S ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE.—Under the patronage of her Majesty the Queen, H. R. H. Prince Albert, the Royal Family, and Nobility.—A fragrant White Powder prepared from Oriental Herbs of inestimable virtue for strengthening, preserving, and cleansing the Teeth. It eradicates the factitious formation of tartar, and by the removal of that extraneous substance, lends a salutary growth and freshness to the gums. It removes from the surface of the teeth the spots of incipient decay, polishes and preserves the enamel, substituting for discolour and the aspect of impurity, the most pure and pearl-like whiteness; while, from its salubrious and disinfecting qualities, it gives sweetness and perfume to the breath. Price 2s. 9d. per box, duty included.

Caution.—To protect the public from fraud, the Hon. Commissioners of her Majesty's Stamps have authorised the Proprietors' signature to be engraved on the Government Stamp, thus:—A. ROWLAND & SON, 20, Hatton Garden, which is affixed on each Box.

, All others are Fraudulent Counterfeits!!!

THE HAIR.—Of the numerous compounds constantly announced, for promoting the growth or reproduction of the Hair, few survive, even in name, beyond a very limited period, whilst ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, with a reputation unparalleled, is still on the increase in public estimation. The singular virtues of this successful invention for Restoring, Preserving, and Beautifying the Human Hair, are too well known and appreciated to need comment. The very facts of the high and distinguished patronage it enjoys, its general use in all countries, together with numerous testimonials constantly received in its favour, are authorities which stamp its superior excellence and title over all attempts of a similar nature. Being universally preferred, its consequent great demand excites the cupidity of unprincipled shopkeepers, who vend the most spurious trash as the "genuine" Macassar Oil; whereas, the genuine article is wholly the invention and property of A. Rowland and Son, and the amalgamation of its costly exotic materials (solely imported by them) renders abortive any attempt to discover its component parts—thus proving the imposition of all other articles bearing the title of "Macassar Oil." The genuine article has the words ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL engraved in two lines on the Wrapper: and on the back of the wrapper nearly 1500 times, containing 29,028 letters.—Price 3s. 6d., 7s.; Family bottles (equal to four small), 10s. 6d.; and double that size, 21s. per bottle.—, All others are FRAUDULENT COUNTERFEITS!!!

Important.—Any article purchased, or ordered, if not approved of, exchanged, money returned.

Observe.—E. MOSES and SON, Tailors, Wholesale and Retail Woollen Drapers Outfitters and General Warehousemen, 154 Minories, and 86, Aldgate, City, opposite the church.

Caution.—E. Moses and Son are obliged to guard the Public against imposition, having learned that the untradesman-like falsehood of being connected with them, or it's the same concern, has been resorted to in many instances, and for obvious reasons. They have no connexion whatever with any other Establishment; and those who desire genuine Cheap Clothing, should call or send to 154, Minories, or 86, Aldgate, opposite the church to prevent disappointment, &c.

N.B. No Business transacted at this Establishment from Friday at sunset until sunset on Saturday, when Business is resumed until twelve o'clock.

QUITE A NEW DISCOVERY.

NO MORE SUFFERING FROM CORNS or BUNIONS.—AGENTS required all over England, Ireland and Scotland, for the sale of this wonderful remedy, which immediately enables the greatest sufferer to walk with the most perfect ease and comfort. Sold in boxes, including stamp, at 1s. 1½d., by JONES and Co. LIGHTHOUSE, 201, Strand, London.

A box will be sent free to any address on receipt of fifteen postage stamps.

TO PARENTS and GUARDIANS.—WANTED, by a Retail Furnishing and Manufacturing IRONMONGER at the West-end, a respectable, well-educated Youth as an APPRENTICE. He will be treated as one of the family, and have every opportunity of thoroughly learning his business.—For full particulars apply to Mr. Wilkinson, 77, Regent-street, between 3 and 6; if by letter, prepaid.

GOOD TEAS, in 6lb. bags, or small chests of 35lb., at 2s. 10d., 3s. 4d. and 3s. 10d. per lb.; Young Hyson 3s. By the change of wind millions of pounds of tea have arrived, and the merchants, consequently accept lower prices. The above being trade quotations, families will find that they save considerably at each year's end by constantly dealing with the East India Tea Company.—Offices, 9, Great St. Helen's Church-yard, Bishopsgate-street.

CHASTON'S PATENT INDIA RUBBER ELASTIC CORN PLAISTERS are generally admitted to be the most unique and best to eradicate either Hard or Soft CORNS. From their elastic quality, they can be worn with perfect ease, however tight the boot or shoe fits the foot. Invented and sold by B. CHASTON, Chemist, Watton, Norfolk. N.B.—On receipt of thirteen postage stamps (free), a box will be forwarded (also free) to any part of the Kingdom.

EAU de COLOGNE, 10s. per case of six, or 2s. singly, which, since its first preparation, in 1709, has maintained an undisturbed supremacy over all other distilled compounds, can be had genuine, as prepared from the original recipe, by application to H. BREIDENBACH, 88, Park-street, Grosvenor-square, and manufacturer at Cologne. This Eau de Cologne is no spurious imitation of Farina's, but the genuine article itself, and as such defies all competition.

COFFEE!—All who prize a delicious Cup of really fine COFFEE are invited to purchase from the Establishment of SIDNEY and HALL, No. 8, Ludgate Hill. The New Duties came into operation on Saturday, 8th of June, from which day we reduced prices TWO-PENCE to FOUR-PENCE per POUND.—The Tea Market, No 8, Ludgate Hill. SIDNEY and HALL.

Black Tea of splendid quality at Three Shillings and Ten-pence per Pound.

CUSTARDS WITHOUT TROUBLE.—ORRIDGE'S POWDER merely requires the addition of Boiling Milk to form a Custard of exquisite richness. It is less expensive, and far more wholesome, than the Custards as usually made. To secure the right article, be pleased to ask for the preparation made by Orridge, Chemist to the Queen, Deptford. Sold in boxes, 1s., 2s., and 5s. each, by Edwards, 67, St. Paul's Churchyard; Batty and Co., Finsbury Pavement; and most Chemists and Italian Warehousemen.

WRITING, Languages, &c.—The WRITING of persons of all ages, if ever so bad, IMPROVED in EIGHT easy LESSONS. The pupils are taught quite privately, or met at their own residences. Bookkeeping for the counting-house, custom-house, &c., mental arithmetic, and the reporters' short-hand guaranteed in twelve lessons. Separate rooms for ladies. Apply to Mr. Langmaid, at the old establishment for private tuition, (where there are professors for the French, German, and Italian languages, on the Hamiltonian system,) 122, Regent-street.

THE BEST ENGLISH WATCHES.—A. B. SAVORY and SONS, Watchmakers, 9, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank, request the attention of purchasers to their stock of London-made PATENT LEVER WATCHES, which are manufactured by themselves in their own house. In silver cases, with the detached escapement and jewelled, the prices are four and a half guineas, six, and eight guineas each; or in gold cases, 10, 12, 14, and 16 guineas each. The very large stock offered for selection includes every description, enabling a customer to select that which is more particularly adapted to his own use.

EMPLOYMENT.—Persons having a little time to spare, are apprised that Agents continue to be appointed in London and Country Towns by the EAST INDIA TEA COMPANY, for the sale of their celebrated TEAS (Offices, 9, Great St. Helen's Churchyard, Bishopsgate-street). They are packed in showy leaden canisters, from an ounce to a pound, with the prices and weight marked on each packet, and but little trouble is occasioned by the sale; the license is only 11s. per annum, and many, during the last nineteen years, have realised considerable incomes by the Agency, without 1s. let or loss. Application to be made (if by letter, post paid) as above.

HANWELL COLLEGIATE SCHOOL, Middlesex.—Principal, the Rev. J. A. EMERTON, M.A., Curate of Hanwell. Parents and Guardians desirous of selecting a School in a healthy situation, combining the intellectual advantages of a collegiate course with religious instruction, moral and physical training and parental care, may obtain Prospectuses by a personal or written application to the Principal, or by letter, pre-paid to the Rev. T. T. Walmsley, D.D., Rectory, Hanwell; J. D. Macbride, Esq., D.C.L., Principal of Magdalene Hall, Oxford: or to J. A. Paris, Esq., M.D., Dover-street, Piccadilly, President of the Royal College of Physicians.

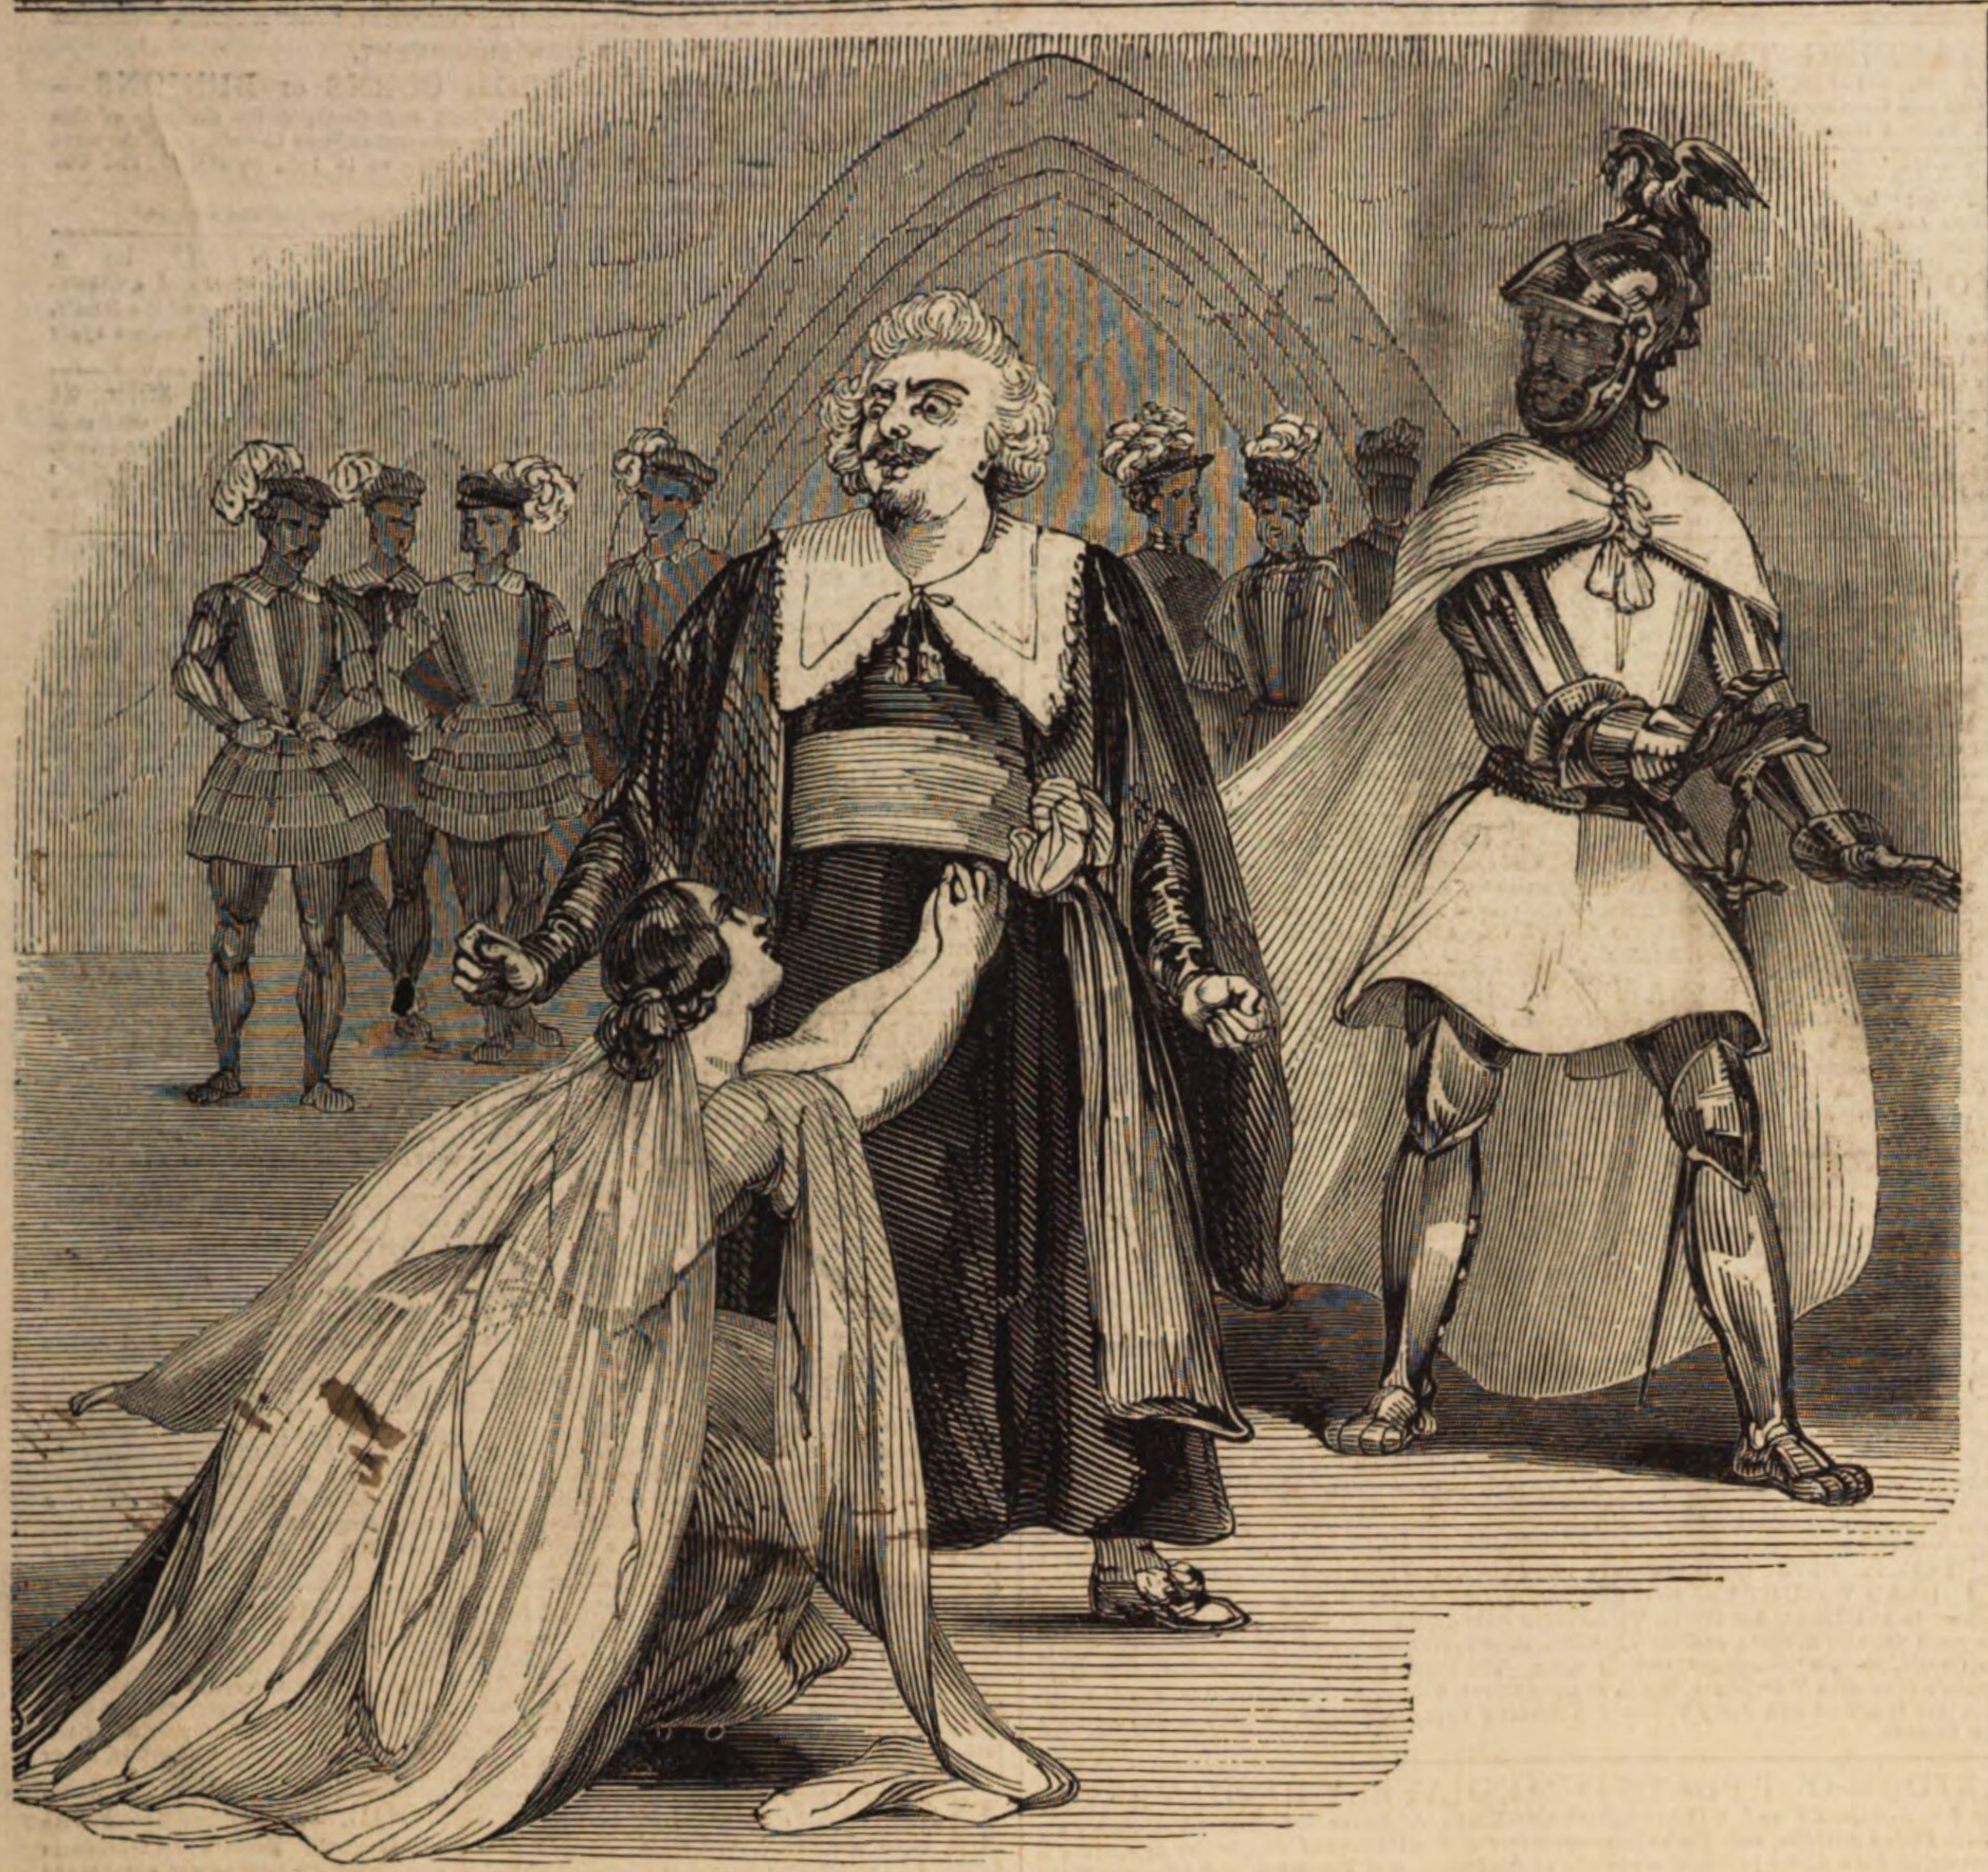
CROUCH-END ACADEMY, HORNSEY.—At this old-established School, situate in one of the healthiest localities in the neighbourhood of London, YOUNG GENTLEMEN are BOARDED and EDUCATED, on the most moderate terms, consistently with that kind and parental treatment which they so liberally receive, in addition to the advantages to be derived from the highly judicious system of education which has so long been continued in successful operation under the management of the present proprietor. The terms are for a substantial and well-grounded education, comprising a complete course of grammatical, commercial, and elementary study, together with the Latin and French Languages, the theory of navigation, trigonometry, algebra, land-surveying, geometry, mensuration, geography and the use of the globes, board, washing, repairing of linen, &c., 30 guineas per annum, and no extras; pupils under ten years of age, 25 guineas; foreigners learning the English language, and gentlemen requiring a separate room and table, 60 guineas per annum; junior pupils, 40 guineas. This establishment has now stood the test of public opinion, and received the most liberal patronage, for more than 130 years, during 20 of which it has been conducted by the present proprietor, Mr. W. C. SMITH. It is situate in one of the most beautiful and picturesque localities in the vicinity of the metropolis, and affords not only the advantages arising from a sound and efficient system of education, but combines also every privilege that can tend to promote health and strength. An excellent table is kept, and more of the social comforts of home will be found in this school than in any other of the same very moderate terms. The number of pupils generally averages between 40 and 50, and for the instruction of this limited number four tutors, besides the principal (exclusive of the music, drawing, and dancing masters), are always kept, and reside in the house. The school, which is a detached and commodious building, in the Elizabethan style of architecture, is lofty, and especially adapted for study and the preservation of health—the house spacious—the bed rooms airy—the play-ground large and dry—and the walks in the fields most delightful, this part of the country having been always pre-eminently distinguished for its great salubrity, as well as for the beauty and richness of its landscape. This establishment, which is distant about five miles from the City, is also most conveniently situate for parents desiring frequently to visit their children, as access by omnibus is to be had at all hours of the day, both from the Bank and Charing-cross. Those who are really in quest of a goood school, will find this establishment, on inquiry, everything that could be wished, as the most indefatigable exertions are invariably made to carry the views and intentions of the parent into effect, and that, too, under the mildest possible treatment. The most satisfactory references to merchants and gentlemen, residing in London and elsewhere, whose sons have been brought up at this establishment, can be obtained, together with prospectuses of terms and other particulars, by applying, personally, or by letter, to the Principal of the CROUCH-END ACADEMY, Hornsey. The present vacation will terminate on the 21st instant.



SCENE FROM THE OPERA OF "OTELLO," AT HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

SCENE FROM OTELLO.

The Doge (Elmiro) denunciating his daughter (Desdemona) is perhaps, as treated by Lablache and Grisi, the most splendid lyric-tragic passage upon the Opera or indeed any other stage. The prostration of Grisi before the lightning blast of Lablache's malediction is truly awful. We thought we almost heard the dreadful lines from "Troilus and Cressida" issue from the angry father's lips:

> Now Hell's bluest plagues
> Receive her quick, with all her crimes upon her:
> Let her sink spotted down: let the dark Host
> Make room, and point, and hiss her as she goes:
> Let the most branded Ghosts of all her sex
> Rejoice and cry, Here comes a blacker Fiend!

The terrible fierceness of Lablache is in those lines. Mario as the Moor serves but as an accessory to the picture: he cannot stand out in any great prominence against the other mighty portraits. Garcia was the only Otello who could have withstood Lablache's Elmiro: but still Mario is very charming in the part and sings its music beautifully.

LYCEUM THEATRE.

A drama founded upon Boz's "Martin Chuzzlewit" was produced at this house on Monday last, and was completly successful. To describe the intricate and ever-changing plot of the novelist would be needless, and that of the dramatist (Mr. E. Stirling) is pretty nearly the same thing. Suffice it to say, that the principal features in the narrative are made to stand out very prominently in its stage adaptation. Pecksniff and Tom Pinch are admirably personated by Messrs. F. Mathews and Meadows. Mary Graham is rendered still more interesting by Miss Fortescue's representation of her, and Master Bailey, the Boots at Mrs. Todgers' boarding-house, is irresistibly impudent and droll as performed by Mrs. Keeley. Keeley, himself, was immense in the part of Old Mother Gamp, the monthly nurse. The drama has been "got up" most excellently. The following neat prologue, written by Mr. Albert Smith, was well delivered by Mrs. Keeley, and much applauded:—

No ghostly legend from some mould'ring page
And "carefully adapted to the stage;"
No grand romantic drama, deep and dire,
Filled with "terrific combats" and red fire,
Boast we to night. No flimsy plot shall trench
Upon our scene "translated from the French;"
But one in deep emotions far more rife,
The powerful romance of common life.

We owe this story of the present hour
To that great master hand, whose graphic power
Can call up laughter, bid the tear-drop start,
Or find an echoing chord in every heart.
Whom we have learned to deem an household friend,
Who, 'midst his varied writings, never penn'd
One line that might his guileless pages spot,
One word that "dying he would wish to blot."

We know there is around his simple name
A prestige thrown, your sympathies to claim;
But our poor playwright, feeling well his task,
Has sent me forth your clemency to ask.
And some old friends, selected from the rest,
Of human kind the sweetest and the best,
Crowd forth, your patient hearing to implore,
Presuming on the fellowship of yore.

Good Mr. Pickwick first with smiling face,
And kindly heart implores your patient grace:
Then arm in arm, led onwards by one will,
The Brothers Cheeryble endorse our bill,
And warm by kindness ever both alike,
The timid hopes of poor neglected Smike,
Whilst not unmindful of your past kind deeds,
Oliver Twist next for indulgence pleads.
Dick Swiveller, who has crept here quite by stealth,
"Passes the rosy" ere he drinks your health,
Surrounded by those friends we know so well,
Watch'd over by the shade of Little Nell.
Next laughing at Joe Willett in our train
Dear Dolly Varden flirts, and laughs again
And hopes your pleasure will not be alloyed
Because she knows that Miggs will be annoyed.

And lastly, whilst around both cot and hall
The echoes of the Christmas Carol fall,
Bob Cratchet on raised wages, spruce and trim,
Leads forward, with his crutch, poor Tiny Tim.
The others are to come. In anxious state
Behind the scenes your fiat they await.
Be satisfied, for yours and their behoof,
They'll do the best they can; now to the proof.

The piece was announced for repetition till further notice by Mr. Keeley.

MUSIC.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

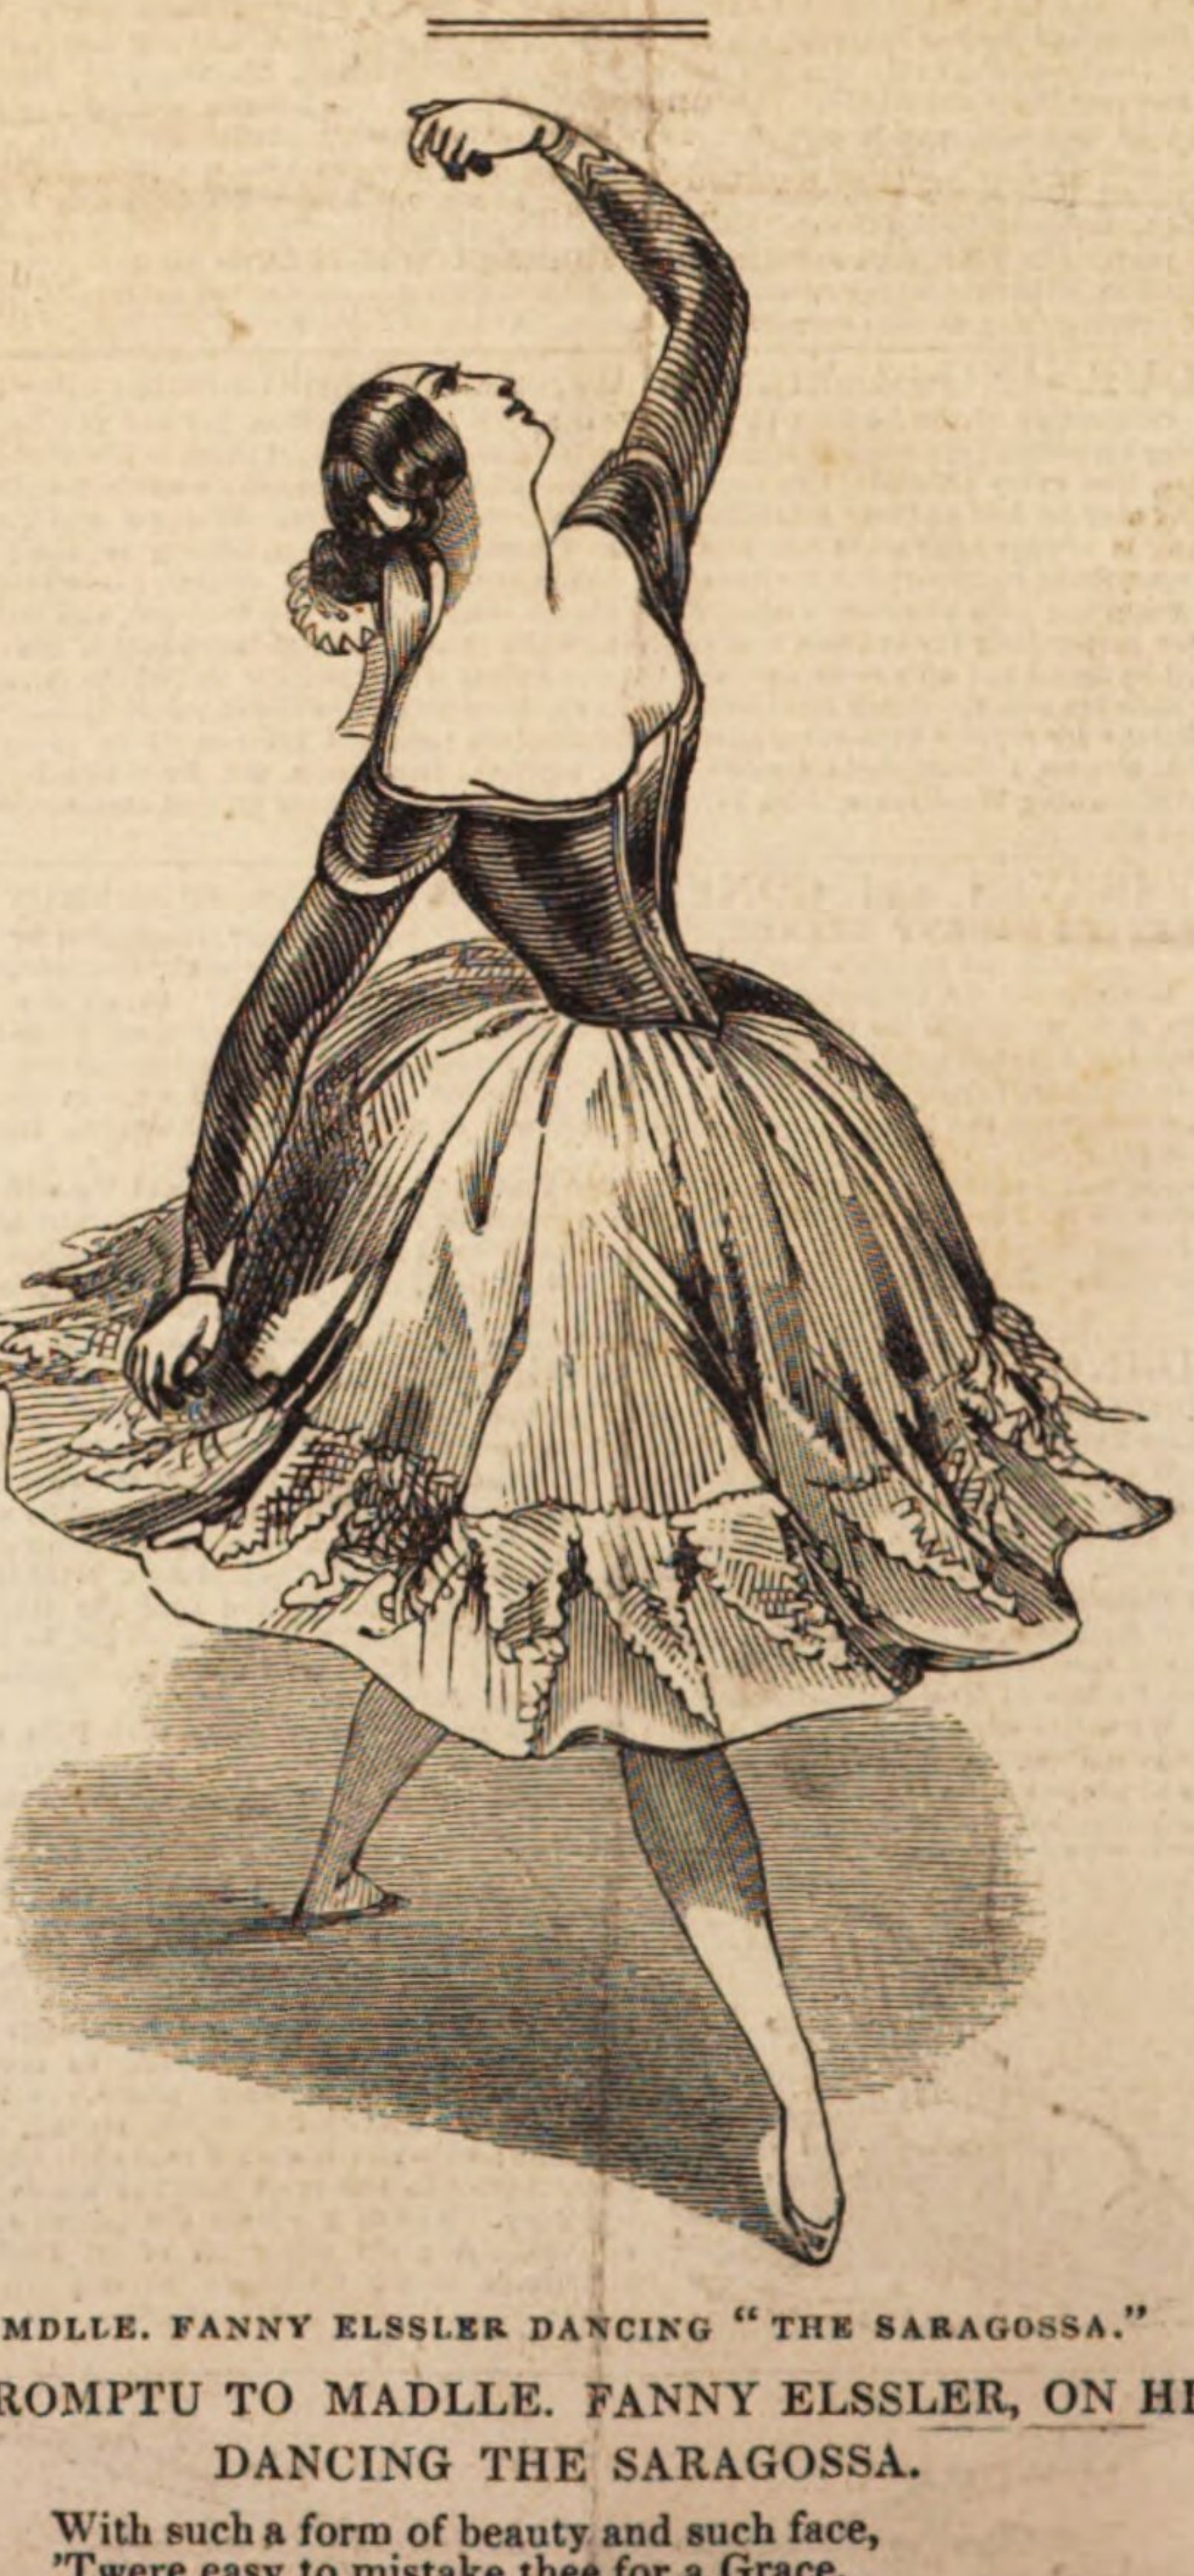
The eighth and last concert for the season took place on Monday night last, at the Hanover-square Rooms, and proved to be one of the most interesting of the series. The following was the programme:—

PART I.
Sinfonia Eroica	Beethoven.
Song, MS. "Ach Herr," Herr Staudigl	Nicolai.
Trio, two violoncellos and double bass, Messrs. Lindley, Lucas, and Howell	Corelli.
Scene from "As You Like It," Miss A. Williams, Miss Dolby, Mr. Allen, and Herr Staudigl, with Chorus	H. Smart.
PART II.
The First Walpurgis-Night, Miss Dolby, Mr. Allen, and Herr Staudigl (first time of performance in this country)	Mendelssohn.
Concerto Violin, M. Sainton	Sainton.
A Selection from "The Ruins of Athens," Miss A. Williams and Herr Staudigl, with Chorus, MS. (first time of performance in this country)	Beethoven.
Overture to "Oberon"	Weber.

This concert, conducted by Mendelssohn, and led by T. Cooke (who, by the way, conduced to more than half the effect by his precise and steady leadership), went off beautifully. It will be seen by the programme that the directors are now acting more liberally than in former years; witness the production of Smart's "Scena" (a beautiful composition), and the names of English vocalists in the scheme. This is as it should be—a glorious change has taken place; we have begun to "dare to have sense ourselves," and the happiest results have been the consequence.

The "Sinfonia Eroica" was exquisitely performed. Staudigl sang a version of one of David's Psalms most admirably: he was in better voice than he has been for some time back. Corelli's "Trio" is beginning to be a little tiresome. H. Smart's composition, which gained the prize offered by Mr. Macready two years ago for the best finale to "As You Like It," is full of chaste and beautiful writing.

The second part opened with a composition by Mendelssohn, so full of poetry of the highest order that we cannot find words to adequately describe it. Wildness, Strength, and Beauty seem to have been the composer's adopted Graces, while, on the other hand, he must have multiplied the muses by their own number, for he seems ninety-nine times greater in this work than in any he has produced before. He has gone hand-in-hand with his poet Goethe, and done him ample justice. The choruses are of a most impressive character: that of the Druid Guards "Disperse, disperse, ye gallant men," was enthusiastically encored, and the reception of another, between the said guards and the people feigning to be witches, cannot be described. We never witnessed more delight on the part of an auditory. Staudigl as a kind of Oroveso was magnificent, and the whole terminated with a chorus of Druids worthy of the loftiest inspiration of Handel. Though the season be near its close, we mean the musical season in general, we hope to hear this stupendous work again. M. Sainton played a very clever concerto on the violin, his own composition, in a neat and finished style. Beethoven's "Ruins of Athens," like the generality of his works, msut be heard often before it can be duly appreciated; still many pieces excited considerable applause. Weber's overture, with which the concert terminated, was heard to the very echo of the last chord, when vehement cheering for Mendelssohn proved how highly his services are estimated by the subscribers to these now truly classic concerts.



MDLLE. FANNY ELSSLER DANCING "THE SARAGOSSA."

IMPROMPTU TO MADLLE. FANNY ELSSLER, ON HER DANCING THE SARAGOSSA.

With such a form of beauty and such face,
'Twere easy to mistake thee for a Grace,
But that one only of the Sisters Three
Could not reveal thy various symmetry!
The air is musical wheree'er thy feet
In mazy turnings cause vibrations sweet—
Their echoes, than the sounds to which they move
More exquisite—more soul-inspiring prove,
And make us think that ev'n the Muses Nine
To make Thee One their sister charms combine!

THE SLAVE TRADE.

THE debates towards the end of the session seldom touch on questions in which great principles are involved; they are mostly confined to the details of bills and measures that have been driven, as it were, into a corner by the discussions of an earlier period, and must be passed with most of their imperfections, or dropped altogether. Sometimes, however, a giant evil will make itself visible among the mass of petty enactments, and force itself on the attention even of unwilling Legislatures. There are some things that can not be hid, some from which it is vain for man to avert his gaze. They do not the less exist because we for a time cease to think of them, and when attention is re-awakened to their frightful evils, the prospect is often worse, the abuse has grown more terrible than when we last surveyed it.

On Tuesday evening the Slave Trade was brought under the notice of the house, and the effect of the discussion is what we have described; it produces a painful conviction that our exertions have been useless, and our efforts vain. We have spent masses of treasure, have lost to the country numbers of valuable lives—the fatal Niger expedition is an instance of it—and yet the hideous traffic, that stands a dark stain in the history not of one nation, but of mankind, is more active, more cruel, more unrelenting, destroys more human life, and causes more human misery in a year than at any former period! The truth is often mournful, and here is indeed an instance of it; how can it be accounted for? How is it that exertions so disinterestedly made, and, for the most part, so ably directed, have been not merely so useless, but absolutely so mischievous?

In the first place, the traffic, dreadful as it is, produces, it is said, enormous profits; and, as the efforts of those European nations that have declared themselves opposed to it, have reduced it to a smuggling trade, the increased risks are covered by increased profits. Every expedient that perverted ingenuity can discover has been brought to bear, to combine capacity for cargo and swiftness of sailing in the slaving vessels: to these human life is sacrificed with a coolness of calculation that is perfectly revolting. When the slaves are brought to the place of embarkation, it is stated as "a well-known fact, that whatever might be the size of the slave ship, the slave captain always took a fourth, or a third more than his ship was calculated to hold. This was done on a true arithmetical calculation, just as a person who was sending a pipe of wine round upon the Indian voyage always sent a quarter-cask, in order to make up for leakage and evaporation, so the slave captain took an extra number of slaves on board, to make up for the deaths he felt certain would occur during the passage."

The mass of human evil caused by the system of which the above extract describes but a portion of the details, is thus impressively placed before the mind, in the recent speech of Lord Palmerston. After estimating, on the authority of Mr. Bandinell and Sir F. Buxton, the number of slaves annually deported from Africa at 150,000, he says, "What an enormous amount of human misery and human crime is shown by this simple statement to exist! Let any man consider to himself what 150,000 people are; let any man who has seen armies collected think, if it has ever fallen to his lot to see 150,000 men collected at once under his eye—let him imagine that he saw that number assembled together on a plain—that he was told, as they passed by him, that they were travelling fast towards their doom—that that living mass of human beings was doomed to a painful and premature death, under every variety of bodily and mental torture! Why, if he were told that it was not a single sight, but that every year, over the same spot of ground, an equal number were urged forward to the same melancholy doom, could any man, when he witnessed such a sight, fail to invoke the vengeance of Heaven on the authors of such enormities?"

The bringing all this amount of misery together, and concentrating the attention, as it were, upon it, is most effective. It reminds us of the passage in which all the gathered diseases of the future degenerate race of man are shown by Milton's Angel to our first parent, as the consequences of his transgression.

> Sight so deform what mortal eye could long
> Dry-eyed behold! Adam could not—but wept.

It must be a callous heart indeed that can contemplate such a number of his fellow beings doomed annually to be the victims of the unhallowed avarice of man. The world has been called "a vast Lazar-house of many woes;" but it exhibits no other evil like this—not even the carnage of war and battle—though these have in them sufficient of the horrible, for in these men meet on something like equal terms, and war itself is not without redeeming features in, at least, individual instances of mercy, generosity, and forbearance. But the Slave Trade is a perpetual war, in which all the advantage is on one side; it is like massacre without resistance, or cruelty without provocation.

But greater perhaps even than its physical evils, are its fatal moral effects; it is another melancholy fact, that the most cruel features of slavery have been the most strongly developed beneath European and Christian masters. Among the Mahometans cruelty to the domestic slave—the dweller beneath the same roof—is the exception rather than the rule. Where Christians are slave-owners, kindness has been the exception—the general rule, barbarity. The description applies to the masters of every European nation; and treating the English and the Americans as one race—as they have been and are at present the greatest slave holders of modern times—the heaviest amount of guilt lies upon them. Seeing what is the practice of Christian men, it was not likely to impress an ignorant and heathen people with anything but hatred of the race and suspicion of the creed of those who were guilty of such enormities. Thus centuries of intercourse between Africa and Europe have left the former as Pagan and idolatrous as she was centuries ago; and while the spiritual state of the people is no better now than it was then, their physical condition is far worse, from the continual internal wars the slavers encourage by giving a ready market for the prisoners, and the decrease of cultivation in consequence of the continual drain of the native population. The accounts of travellers in Africa two centuries ago, prove that whole districts are now deserts that were then well cultivated, populous, and flourishing. In both respects the blighting effect of the Slave Trade is manifest. Sir R. Peel says, "When I reflect on this subject, I cannot but imagine to myself the light in which the nations of Europe must appear to those unfortunate inhabitants of Africa who are made the victims of this crime—what must be their ideas of the Christian faith which they are taught to believe is professed by Europeans when they see them practising daily such dreadful cruelties, and when they witness so many thousands of their fellow-creatures falling victims to the avarice and cruelty of those who they are told call themselves Christians? Whilst such frightful crimes were daily committed amongst them, was it not to be expected that impediments to the spread of Christianity would be engendered thereby."

The evils being so incontestably proved and conceded by all parties, what we must again ask is the reason that all the efforts made to check, have only increased them? Sir R. Peel says, and we believe says truly, that two nations only are mainly responsible for the failure of the exertions of the rest of the world. Spain, by its possession of Cuba, affords a market for the slaves; the Spanish Governors share the profits of the Trade, and Spanish subjects are the agents in carrying it on. The Empire of Brazil is open to the same reproach; and as long as these two countries continue to uphold the system, the attempts to put it down will be ineffectual. France and England are the only two powers that do much towards its suppression; we might almost say that it is England alone that interferes to any appreciable extent, for France and America, by their overstrained sense of national honour on the "right of search," have thrown obstacles in the way of vigorous effort in this respect rather than assisted. America, too, is open to suspicion in the matter; against the spirit of her free constitution, she fosters within herself a system of slavery as foul as ever disgraced the world. The states of Europe who have declared against the Slave Trade—Norway, Sweden, Austria, Prussia, Russia, either have but little power, like the two first, or small naval forces, as Austria and Prussia, or no colonies, like Russia; they can do little more than protest against the traffic, and leave its suppression to others; and of the three powers, France, England, and the United States, who interfere the most actively, by far the greatest share of the work is done by England alone. It is a credit to us that we do so much; it is a misfortune that we cannot do more; but while the manner and extent of our interference is so fettered by the regard that must be paid to national rights, we fear that we have gone as far as we shall be able to go. The only mode would be to declare the traffic piracy, and take from those engaged in it the protection of every flag of every power. Till that is done, we must, according to Sir R. Peel, deal cautiously with criminals who are bold to effrontery, dexterous, and indefatigable. We must sit down and wish that the world was better, but take no strong means of making it so. He sees the evil in its full extent, and with his regrets for its existence, his cold, prudential reasons for not increasing the means of preventing it, contrast somewhat disappointingly.

SWAN-UPPING.

Yesterday the Lord Mayor and his civic friends proceeded in state to spend a festive day in the haunts of the regal and privileged swans of the Thames, previously to their more close inspection by the Dyers' Company, in August next. On this occasion, the state barge, followed by a gaily dressed shallop, conveying the company, were towed to Brentford Ait, a little above Kew-bridge, where the celebrated barge, the Maria Wood, was moored to receive them: his lordship disembarked and continued his "voyage" to Twickenham on board the barge Maria. A splendid banquet was served on board, and dancing kept up with much spirit on the ample deck.

The following particulars of the Swan, and the business of these pleasure "Uppings," will gratify our readers:—

"The Swan," says Mr. Yarrell, "is, perhaps, the most beautiful living ornament of our rivers and lakes. Poets of all ages and countries have made this bird the theme of their praise, and by none with more characteristic truth of expression than by our own Milton, who, in his 'Paradise Lost,' says:—

'The swan with arched neck
Between her white wings mantling, proudly rows

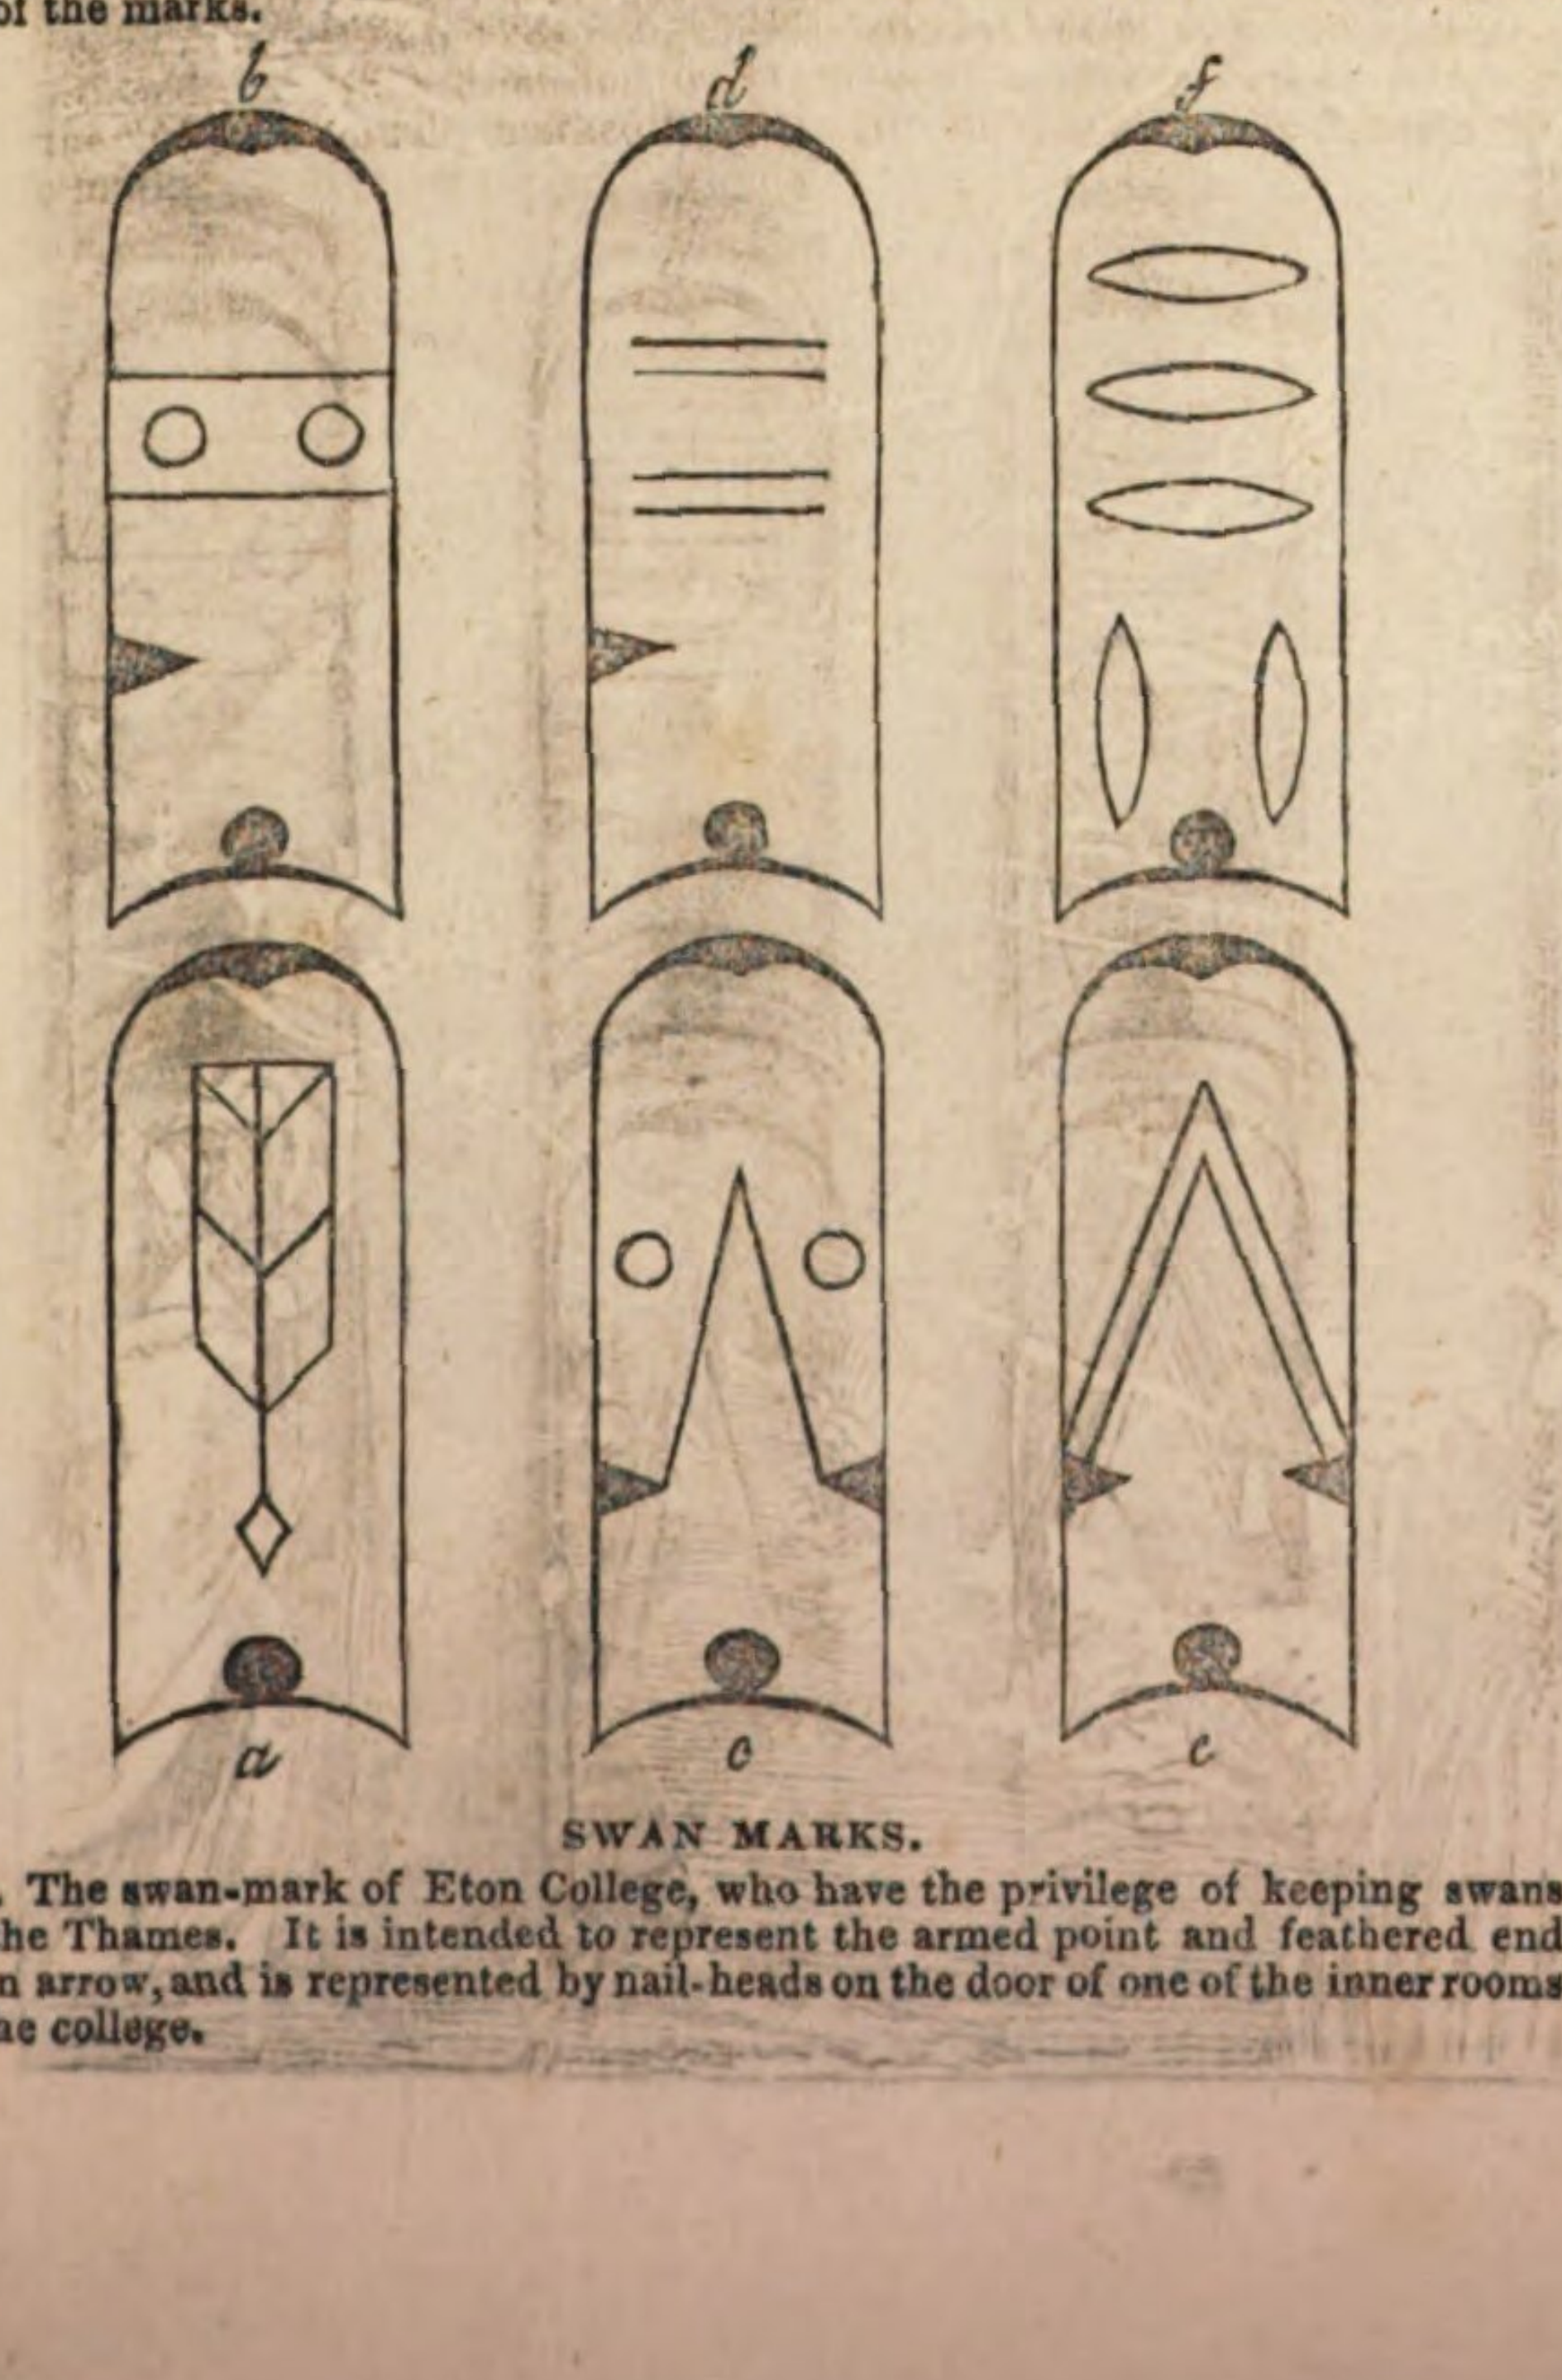
In the Thames, at present, the greatest number of swans belong to the Queen, and the Companies of Vintners and Dyers own the next largest proportion; but the birds are far less numerous than they used to be. They are marked upon the upper mandible with a knife or other sharp instrument. The "Swan-upping," or "Swan-hopping," as it is vulgarly termed," is the catching and taking up the swans to mark the cygnets, and renew that on the old birds, if obliterated, in the presence of the royal swan herdsman, which is still continued by the companies above mentioned. This was ostensibly the business of the civic excursion yesterday, but the birds are actually marked in the month of August. We subjoin a few of the marks.



SWAN MARKS.

a. The swan-mark of Eton College, who have the privilege of keeping swans on the Thames. It is intended to represent the armed point and feathered end of an arrow, and is represented by nail-heads on the door of one of the inner rooms of the college.

b, c. Represent the swan-marks of the Dyers' and Vintners' Companies of the City of London, as used in the reign of Elizabeth. These two companies have long enjoyed the privilege of keeping swans on the Thames, from London to a considerable distance above Windsor; and they continue the ancient custom of proceeding with their friends and visitors, with the royal swan herdsman, and their own swanherds and assistants, on the first Monday in August in every year, from Lambeth, on their "swan voyage," for the purpose of catching and marking the birds as above. Mr. Kemp, F.S.A., who has taken great pains to collect the details of this ancient custom, states, that "the struggles of the swans, when caught by their pursuers, and the duckings which the latter receive in the contests, made this a diversion with our ancestors of no ordinary interest." The formation of the circles or amulets on the beak, as observed in these two ancient marks, being considered to inflict more severe pain upon the bird than straight lines, the rings are now omitted, and the lines doubled, as shown in the marks d, e, which are those of the Dyers' and Vintners' Companies, as used at this time; b, d, being the ancient and modern mark of the Dyers' Company, and c, e, the ancient and modern mark of the Vintners' Company. The two nicks in the swan-mark of the latter, which have so often been noticed, are probably intended for two half lozenges, or a demi-lozenge on each side; the V is, perhaps, a chevron reversed, the arms of the company being sable, a chevron between three tuns argent; for Mr. Kemp considers the true chevron could scarcely be cut on the beak of the bird, without each lateral branch crossing its elongated and tender nostril; and this, from a feeling of humanity, the marker would be disposed to avoid. Besides being heraldic, that many of these swan-marks have the additional adaptation of the initial letter of the word "Vintner," and form also the Roman numeral V., is supported by a custom at the hospitable entertainments of the Vintners' Company, where one of the regular stand up toasts of the day is, "The Worshipful Company of Vintners, with Five!" Mr. Kemp discountenances the popular notion that the sign of the Swan with Two Necks, has any reference to the "Two Nicks."

f Is the royal swan-mark of Queen Victoria, and has been used through the reigns of George III. and IV., and William IV. to the present time.

At the Swan-voyage in August, 1841, the following number of old and young swans, belonged to her Majesty and the two civic companies:—

	Old Swans	Cygnets	Total
Her Majesty	185	47	232
The Vintners' Company	79	21	100
The Dyers' Company	91	14	105
	355	82	437

At one period, however, the Vintners' Company alone possessed 500 birds. In the language of the swanherds, the male swan is called a Cob, the female a Plu.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

FRANCE.

Our accounts from France are of an interesting character. The dispute with Morocco is, of course, the principal political topic in the Paris papers; but there is also domestic news worthy of notice. The Duchess de Nemours has given birth to a Prince, upon whom Louis Philippe has bestowed the title of Duke d'Alençon. The most contradictory reports were in circulation in Paris, respecting the contest in which France is at present engaged with Morocco. On the one hand it is said the Prince de Joinville is about to be recalled from the Mediterranean with his fleet, but it is obvious from the accounts given in other French journals, that the Government do not expect to be able to settle the differences in so summary a manner. For instance, a Toulon paper of the 9th says:—"The four ships forming the squadron of Rear-Admiral Parseval Deschenes have completed their provisions and stores for five months, and wait only the telegraphic order for sailing. Admiral Parseval being of older rank than the Prince de Joinville, cannot be put under the command of his royal highness, and we are credibly informed will remove his flag from the Ocean to the Souverain. The Minister of Marine has sent orders for the purchase on account of Government of the steamers Le Liamone and Le Var, belonging to M. E. Gérard, and which have been employed in carrying the mails between Toulon and Corsica. The command of the Liamone has been given to Lieutenant Albert, and of the Var to Lieutenant Lacroix. They came into harbour this morning to be armed; they are to be manned with crews of about thirty sailors, but their destination is not known." Some of the Paris papers too state that the aspect of affairs in Algiers was very warlike. The whole of the Prince de Joinville's squadron, consisting of the Suffren, Jemmapes, and Triton of the line, the Belle Poule frigate, and the Gassendi, Pluton, Asmodée, and Phare steamers, were off the port of Oran.

The Chamber of Deputies has been occupied with the discussion of the Orleans and Bordeaux Railroad Bill. The seventh paragraph of the bill excluded members of the Legislature from all participation in railroad companies, either as contractors or managers. On the return of the bill to the Deputies, M. Cremieux again proposed the insertion of the clause; but after a long debate, it was rejected, and the measure passed in the form in which it had been sent down from the Peers. The numbers were—

For the bill	195
Against it	105
Majority	90

It would seem, therefore, that the French Legislature, like the English House of Commons, is determined to have as much controul as possible over Railways.

In a previous sitting, the Chamber of Deputies passed, by a majority of 190 to 41, the bill for granting an extraordinary credit of 8,000,000 francs to the Navy Department, and immediately took into consideration the budget of expenses of the same department for 1845. Contrary to what was expected when the Prince de Joinville published his exciting "note," most of the estimates were voted in great haste, and with very little discussion. On this occasion Admiral Leray read a long speech on the state of the navy, and M. Lherbette expressed a hope that the Emperor of Morocco would be made to pay the cost of the naval armament which had been sent to that country. M. Lherbette added, that 73 million francs were already due to France for various expeditions, namely, forty-three millions by Spain, six millions by Greece, two millions by Belgium, and 16 millions by Mexico. The Minister of Marine replied that the expedition to Morocco had cost nothing, and that there was every reason to believe that the arrangements which had been made would prove in every respect advantageous.

The Courrier Français says:—We understand that immediately on the close of the session Marshal Soult will go to pass three months at his seat of Saint Amand; the Minister of Commerce will take a tour through the manufacturing districts; the Minister of Public Works will make a general inspection of the railroads; the Minister of the Marine will visit Cherbourg and Brest; the Minister of Justice will pass a month with his family at Douai, and the Ministers of Finances and Public Instruction will go to take the benefit of some of the mineral waters.

The Sémaphore de Marseilles of the 13th inst. announces the demise of the celebrated M. Forbin Janson, Bishop of Nancy and Toul.

The Chronica de Gibraltar of the 26th ultimo states that on the morning of that day, the Vesuvius steamer sailed for Tangier, for the purpose of taking on board the English Consul General and conveying him to Mogadore. The consul was commissioned by his government to hand the Emperor a sealed dispatch, which had been brought to him by the Prometheus steamer.

A letter from Dreux thus describes the celebration of the anniversary of the death of the Duke of Orleans:—At half-past eleven the King, leading the Queen by the hand, entered the body of the chapel through the crypt. His Majesty took his station in the centre of the choir, before the altar, having the Queen on his right, and next to her the Queen of the Belgians, and the Duke de Montpensier. On his left was the Duchess of Orleans, between her Royal Highness Madame Adelaide and the Prince de Wurtemburg. The clergy followed the Royal Family from the crypt. It was impossible to see without emotion the august widow of the Prince Royal endeavouring to suppress the convulsive sobbings of her heart, prostrated and motionless on the earth by the weight of her grief, while the King and Queen were seeking resignation at the foot of the altar. One overwhelming feeling predominated in all who were present; the most lively sympathy with the august mourners was depicted in every countenance. After the absolution, the King and his family returned to the Palace, passing again through the crypt, where the Queen and the Duchess remained a long time kneeling before the tomb of the departed Prince.

CURIOUS TRIAL FOR MURDER.—The Paris papers contain long details of a trial resembling in some respects the celebrated Laffarge case. A Madame Lacoste and a Monsieur Joseph Meilhan were indicted, under the following circumstances, before the Tribunal of Auch, near Toulouse, on the 10th inst.:—Meilhan was the first prisoner placed at the bar. He is a robust old man, with a countenance full of good nature and serenity, and with features possessing little of the southern type. Madame Lacoste, who next entered the court, accompanied by her advocate, M. Alem-Rousseau, is described as an elegant woman, with large black eyes, regular features, and altogether an expressive face. Her dress was plain, but in excellent taste. She looked pale and melancholy, and her appearance contrasted singularly with the jovial features of her fellow-prisoner. Meilhan, in answer to the various questions put to him, stated that his name was Joseph Odilon Meilhan, that he was 70 years old, a native of Vicq Fezensac, a schoolmaster by profession, and that his habitual residence was Riguepeu. Madame Lacoste replied that her maiden name was Euphemie Vergès, that she was 26 years old, a native of Mazerolles, in the Upper Pyrenees, and that she resided at Riguepeu. All her replies were made in a mild and sweet voice, with a southern accent, and her manner was modest, unaffected, and interesting. The act of accusation states that, in 1841, Henry Lacoste, the deceased, although then 66 years old, married his grand niece, Euphemie Vergès, that he was apparently in good health; but that, on the 16th of May, 1843, whilst at the fair of Riguepeu, he was suddenly attacked by illness, and that eight days afterwards he expired at his own house, after having experienced repeated attacks of colic and vomiting. A few days afterwards his widow produced a will, by which her husband had made her sole legatee, and bequeathed to her the whole of his fortune, amounting to 700,000 francs. Reports being current that Madame Lacoste and Meilhan had poisoned Lacoste, the widow announced her intention of attacking the authors of them for defamation, and wrote to the Procureur du Roi at Auch, requiring the exhumation of the body of the deceased. This took place on the 18th of December. The body and parts of the muscles were submitted to the ordinary experiments by three pharmaciens of Auch, who declared that they contained arsenic. On the 16th of May Lacoste was at the fair of Riguepeu, where he drank some wine with Meilhan; he was immediately afterwards taken ill, and declared that Meilhan must have put something into his wine. On reaching home, Lacoste became worse, but his wife did not call in medical aid until within a few hours of his death. She alone attended him. She herself administered during his illness the tisannes which he took, and in which it is declared there must have been added other portions of arsenic, which, it is presumed, were supplied by Meilhan. The motives for this crime on the part of Madame Lacoste are stated to have been her knowledge that her husband, dissatisfied at being without children, and otherwise displeased with his wife, had signified his intention of revoking the will which he had made in her favour. Against Meilhan it is charged that he was on very intimate terms with Madame Lacoste. He admitted having dined with her immediately after her husband's death; but this, he said, was the custom of the country, and other persons were invited as well as himself. The chief ground of suspicion against Meilhan was that he had suddenly changed from poverty, and become possessor of a large sum of money. Madame Lacoste was asked by the President what her fortune was before she married Lacoste. She replied, from 20,000f. to 25,000f. It was then observed to her that she was charged with having kept up, after marriage, an intimacy with a young man at Tarbes, to whom she had been formerly attached. She replied emphatically, "That is not true;" but admitted that a month or six weeks after her husband's death she had received a young man of Tarbes, who was her suitor. Evidence was given that the marriage was unhappy. An immense deal of tittle-tattle evidence was admitted during the four days the trial lasted. Some of the sixty-eight suitors who were said to have offered for Madame Lacoste were introduced into court and examined, without throwing the smallest gleam of light on the charge. It was fully established that M. Lacoste had a great aversion to medical men, and great need of them, for he was much diseased, and doctored himself. Much of the interest of the trial was occasioned by the beauty of the lady. "She was," said her counsel, "all beauty, goodness, kindness. She had everything in her favour—she was charming!" At the end of the fourth day both the accused were acquitted.

A new opera by Balfe, "Les Quatres Fils Amyon," was produced at the Paris Opera Comique on Monday, and was entirely successful. It is founded on the old nursery tale of how some sons set out to seek their fortunes; how they fell in love with four heiresses; how an old servant of the family deluded the Count of Beaumaison to give his only daughter in marriage to the eldest of the sons, and how the said daughter contrived to get her three cousins married to the three other brothers. The music is charming; the overture is busy and well instrumented, and the opening song of the first act, "Sentinelle, prenez garde a vous," almost insures success for the piece. A new bass singer, Herman Leon, from Brussels, sang this air, and in doing justice to Mr. Balfe's music established his own reputation. The general character of the music is elegance and lightness, interspersed, however, with several passages which indicate the learned and scientific hand of a master.

The Lyons papers say that several persons have been arrested, charged with a Fieschi plot against the authorities of that place. Several grenades were found in their possession, with which, it is said, they intended, by a single discharge, to destroy the general in command, the mayor, and the prefect, when coming out of the church of St. John, after the solemn mass of the 1st of May.

SPAIN.

Our letters from Spain bring the important information of the dissolution of the Cortes, and the convocation of the new Legislature for the 10th of October next. Another decree prescribes the nomination, by the Basque provinces, of two commissioners for each, who are to repair to Madrid to settle with the Government the question of the fueros. A fourth decree orders the exhumation of the remains of Montes de Oca, former Minister of Marine, who was shot at Vittoria, in October, 1841, and their removal to the cemetery of Fuencarral, at Madrid.

The Ministry have addressed circular letters to all the Political Chiefs, inviting them to adopt the necessary measures for the elections of the deputies and one-third of the senators. The electoral lists are to be closed on the 3rd of August, and publicly posted up, on the 19th, during fifteen days. The elections are to commence throughout the provinces on the 3rd of September, and the general scrutiny to take place on the 14th.

The Gazette publishes the official return of the national property sold in June last, from which it appears that 438 lots were disposed of for 9,041,996 reals (upwards of £90,000). The entire of the property hitherto sold has produced 218,820,637 reals.

PORTUGAL.

We have advices from Lisbon to the 8th inst., but they are destitute of interest. The abstract of the revenue derived from the customs at Lisbon and Oporto for the first six months of this year, proves that there has been some improvement in trade, but it is not to any great extent, nor does it at all afford any reasonable prospect of financial improvement.

The Diario of the 2nd instant contained the Queen's decree, authorising the raising of the required loan from the new contractors.

HOLLAND.

The Staats Courant of the 14th inst. prints a supplement of twenty-five columns with the project of law for introducing a new tariff of duties on importation, exportation, and transit, accompanied with the explanatory memorial, which has been sent to the members of both chambers of the States General, and which will be laid before the States General at the opening of the next session.

THE HAGUE, July 14.—The latest accounts from India (to the end of March) state, among other news, that a combat had taken place near the Thousand Islands, very near Batavia, with two piratical vessels, one of which was taken—the other escaped. The men of war of the more important expedition against the pirates sailed from the roads of Sourabaya on the 15th of Feb. His Majesty's frigate the Palambang, Captain Koope, had made a demonstration in January on the west coast of Sumatra. Major Van der Hart, resident at Ayen Banjee, had been thereby enabled, at the head of a detachment, to confirm the authority of the Government in the Balla Lands without having recourse to arms.

TURKEY.

We have accounts from Constantinople to the 27th ult., but they bring nothing of importance. The Sultan had renewed to Sir Stratford Canning his promises in reference to the renegade question.

GREECE.

Letters from Athens of the 30th ult. describe Greece as on the eve of becoming again the theatre of party strife. A few days previously some rioting took place in that capital. Cries of "Down with the Ministry!" and "Viva the Constitution!" were vociferated under the King's windows, and Callergis was obliged to order a body of cavalry to disperse the mob. Several persons were wounded in the affray, two of whom subsequently died. The elections were nearly over in the provinces, and had passed off quietly, except in Messenia, where five individuals lost their lives. On the 29th the list of the senators, 36 in number, was published. Coletti, Mavrocordato, and Metaxa, would not permit their names to be enrolled on the list, which included the most eminent of the personages who took part in the political events of the last 25 years.

UNITED STATES.

The Acadia Mail steam-ship has arrived at Liverpool from Boston and Halifax, after a very rapid passage of only twelve days from the former and nine and a half from the latter port. The Royal Mail steamer Britannia, which sailed hence with the American mails on the 19th of June, arrived out at Halifax on the 1st inst.

By the Acadia we have received New York papers to the 30th ult., Boston to the 1st, and Halifax to the 3d inst., and files from Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick, to correspondingly late dates. The political news is unimportant, and indeed the only topic which appears to have excited any interest in New York when the last accounts came away, was the unexpected marriage of President Tyler. The worthy head of the American union has married a young lady, 26 years of age, represented as possessing great personal attractions. Her father was a Col. Gardner, of the American militia, and was killed on board the steam-ship Princeton, at the time of the late unfortunate explosion. After the marriage ceremony had been performed the President, who is ex officio commander in chief of the navy and army, to give his fair bride a taste of the honours which would be paid her in his society, took her on a water excursion in a steamboat through the harbour and bay of New York, in which were lying an 84-gun ship, used as a receiving-ship for naval apprentices, a revenue cutter, two Mexican war-steamers, and the war-steamer Princeton. From all of these salutes were of course fired, even from the very ship in which the President's wife's father had so shortly before met his death. We hardly need say there is very great disparity between the ages of the happy pair, Mr. Tyler being almost of an age to be grandfather to the lady of his choice.

The Texan annexation question is rapidly losing its hold on the public mind; most parties evidently look at it as a mere electioneering bait of Mr. Tyler.

The Canada papers mention another steam-boat explosion. On the 25th of June the steam-boat Gen. Vance, Captain Woodworth, burst her boiler at the wharf on the Canada side, and five persons, including General Truax, are known to have lost their lives. The Vance was owned by Captain Woodworth. Captain W. was killed while in conversation with the engineer, who was severely, but not dangerously, wounded. The Detroit Advertiser says that Mr. Motherwell, the engineer of the steam ferry-boat United, who had just stepped on board the Vance, was among the killed, as also a man named George Sweeny, of Canada West, formerly employed on board the British steamer Kent. Gen. Truax was wounded in the head by a fragment, and died of his wounds. The two firemen were severely wounded. The engineer of the boat, who is represented as a careful and able officer, was, at the time of the accident, in conversation with the captain, remonstrating with him for not having given warning of his intention to stop at Windsor, and requesting him to make but a short stay, as the steam was well up. Upon leaving the wharf at Detroit the steam was low; and at the time of the accident the safety valve was up.

The great wheat harvest has commenced in many parts of America, and all accounts agree that it will be most abundant. Indeed, the crops of all descriptions are promising.

Exchange was rather dull at 109½.

A letter from New Helvetia mentions the arrival there of Lieutenant Fremont and the exploring expedition to Oregon. They found it impossible to pass over the Snowy Mountains into the Oregon, towards the Arkansas river, and he was obliged with his party to strike further south, and get to the above settlement in California.

THE COUNTESS DE NASSAU.—According to a letter from the Hague, the Countess de Nassau, widow of the late ex-King of the Netherlands, is on the point of taking for a second husband General Van Omphal, who was aide-de-camp to his late Majesty.

THE STATE APARTMENTS AT WINDSOR CASTLE.—It will be interesting to the public to know that the whole of the state rooms at Windsor Castle will remain open, during the stay of the Court, as heretofore, from eleven in the morning till six o'clock in the afternoon. On Tuesdays and Fridays the public will not be admitted, nor on Sundays until half-past one o'clock, P.M.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

THE ALLEGED LUNACY OF AN EX-M.P.—In the Court of Chancery there have been several days' argument upon the subject of the alleged lunacy of Mr. Dyce Sombre, late M.P. for Sudbury. The object of the proceedings is to supersede the decision of the commission of lunacy. The affidavits disclosed some very extraordinary conduct on the part of Mr. Sombre, which the counsel contended afforded ample proof that he was a dangerous and confirmed lunatic; one of his delusions was that Mrs. Dyce Sombre had been guilty of great impropriety. Dr. Elliotson deposed that Mr. Dyce Sombre called upon him and in a violent manner complained that he had mesmerised him or his wife, and that he must fight him for it. Deponent declined fighting without a cause, when Mr. Dyce Sombre said he would insult him before his servants, and then he must fight. He had some difficulty in getting him out of the house. E. M. Rickets said that Mr. Dyce Sombre had frequently said to him that he would take his wife's life or shoot her. He was quite satisfied that he was out of his mind. On one occasion Mr. Dyce Sombre stated that he had seen a spirit in his dressing-room, and on another, said that he would cut off his wife's nose. Mr. Sombre told Sir James Clark that if he had not been placed in confinement he would have shot his wife, and that she should have taken the other pistol and shot him. His intention was to have shot her in the back, but not to have killed her. He said, that he should like to have a public trial to bring all the charges against her; and that she had danced in an opera ballet before her marriage. On one occasion, when Dr. Dormier refused him some curaçoa in a mild manner, he sprung into his room with a stick; he also said that a spirit had told him that the Queen had been confined on a certain day, although he had seen her driving out in the morning. Upon seeing a lady in a carriage, he said that it was Sir William Follett, disguised in female attire, and that he should like to fight Lord Cardigan for keeping him in confinement. He was also guilty of many other absurdities and acts of violence.—William Sheriff, a keeper, deposed that he took a brace of pistols from Mr. Dyce Sombre, loaded with powder and balls, but they had no caps on. He had very recently danced and shouted along Pall-mall, and accosted every female he met with; his conduct was so outrageous in Bond-street that he would have been taken into custody by the police had deponent not explained the circumstances to them.—Mr. Kelly, who appeared for Mrs. Dyce Sombre, after repudiating the idea that this was a hostile suit to Mr. Dyce Sombre, contended that the case was made out by the affidavits: for though parts of them only went to the extent of passion and jealousy, still throughout the whole of them, from the beginning of 1843 down to the latest period that information could be obtained, there was incontestable evidence that Mr. Dyce Sombre had not laboured under an erroneous impression arising from facts, but a conception that facts existed which never had, that he had seen and heard things which had never been uttered or taken place. There was no accounting for the extremity to which human passion might carry one, and, if it were caused by a false conclusion derived from passing facts, even although it extended to murder, it could not be called insanity; but, if the impelling power were a conviction that something had taken place which never had, the man who laboured under such a delusion was insane, or there was no such thing as madness in this world. As to the French doctors who had pronounced Mr. Sombre to be sane, Mr. Kelly said they had not probed into the delusion under which he laboured.—Mr. Bethell followed on the same side.—Sir T. Wilde, in his reply, on the part of Mr. Dyce Sombre, argued that there was no proof of any insane acts in Paris during his nine months' residence there, and insisted that whatever the errors or follies of which he had been guilty, he was not a lunatic, or incompetent to manage his affairs. The arguments occupied no less than eight days, and were only concluded on Wednesday. The Lord Chancellor was glad they had come to an end of these proceedings. It only remained for him, before the decision of the case, to see Mr. Sombre, and that he should take an opportunity of doing at the earliest moment.

EXTRAORDINARY DISCLOSURES.—The Court of Bankruptcy was on Monday again occupied with the case of William Bromley, who had carried on business as a solicitor and money scrivener in Gray's Inn, and who lately failed for no less a sum than £140,000. The case excited unusual curiosity. Mr. Sturgeon, on the part of the bankrupt, appeared to explain the circumstances under which his client had contracted such enormous debts. He stated that the bankrupt had once been solicitor to Earl Grey. He had been unfortunately tempted to enter into various speculations, in the full confidence that he would be enabled to realise a fortune, and in those moments of temptation he had applied money to his own purposes which had been placed in his hands with other intentions. But he had not done so without reasonable expectation of being able to replace the sums so applied, for at this time his professional exertions brought him in an income of between £2000 and £3000 per annum, and the rental of various properties which he then held yielded between £5000 and £6000 a year. The bankrupt had given, when on a bed of sickness, a warrant of attorney to Captain Blair, and when he found that warrant about to be put in execution, he himself caused this fiat to be issued, in order that his assets might be equally distributed, and that no one creditor should obtain a preference at the expense of the general body. He (Mr. Sturgeon) could assure the court that the bankrupt's property had cost him upwards of £120,000, the whole of which will come to the creditors.—Sir C. F. Williams: I should be very glad if 120,000 half-crowns would come to the creditors.—Mr. Humphreys, who represented the assignees, here said, that there would not be one shilling in the pound.—Mr. Sturgeon was proceeding to give explanations of cases mentioned at a former hearing, when he was interrupted by Sir C. F. Williams, who said, as regards the cases gone into, amounting to between £30,000 and £40,000, I am convinced that cool and deliberate fraud was practised, the nature of which makes me shudder.—Mr. Sturgeon made some further remarks, and asserted that the bankrupt was anxious for the fullest investigation of his accounts.—Sir C. F. Williams, in giving the decision of the Court, said the statement of Mr. Sturgeon did not afford any explanation of a single item in the balance sheet. He did not think the creditors ought to be satisfied; and, in all his experience, he never saw so adverse a balance sheet. A man might at once, and by some sudden emergency, be plunged into difficulties; he may feel alarmed at the sudden touch of the sheriff's officer, or a hundred other imaginable cases, and do under such circumstances what his better nature and his more sober senses would afterwards recoil from; but in this case no such excuse can by any possibility be pleaded. Sir C. F. Williams then made the following remarks upon the case, which will best explain the painful and peculiar circumstances of it. He said, I do not find upon the face of the balance sheet here, that the bankrupt had one shilling of capital at the time when it commences, about one year ago; but I do find the startling admission that the debts amount to £141,522, out of which there are creditors without any security to the amount of £86,791, and creditors holding security only in the sum of £455 15s. Now this must appear to the creditors, and to all the world, to be a frightful state of things, and it is also quite clear that Mr. Bromley had engaged in such extraordinary courses of business as to leave him indebted now in the enormous sum of £86,791. If, in addition to this, it be true that he derived an income from his profession of £3000 a year, I fear it will be found that his improvident outlay, and misappropriation of his creditors' money, will amount to not less than £15,000 a year. True, it is also said upon this balance-sheet that his property amounts to £120,517 7s.; but I verily believe that, out of this apparently enormous sum, not £6000 will be realised for the creditors. I find an alleged mortgage by Chuleb to Mr. Wilkinson, who was Mr. Bromley's friend and benefactor; and how has he repaid it? Why, by pretending that it was advanced to a Mr. Throughton (£3500); and what was really done with it? It was placed to Mr. Bromley's own account; and to make the transaction the more culpable, it was entered in Throughton's name, and the interest credited to him, as if it were a bona fide matter. Nor was this all, for the deed was sent to Dr. Lushington—the pretended deed—for no deed was ever really executed; and the whole turned out to be a decided fabrication. The bankrupt's is not a case to excite pity or compassion. Look again at his conduct to Archdeacon Brymer. That most respectable gentleman may not possibly suffer to the amount of ruin which has fallen upon others, because of his having a private fortune; but how can I recur to that of a poor woman, who was not only deprived of a competent means of support for life, but was obliged to resort to the parish for a loaf; and the very mention of whose case the other day produced a shriek of horror in a crowded court? Again, the bankrupt alleged that he lent Mr. Ker £3000, when the fact was that that respectable gentleman had never borrowed a single shilling. Again, I find that the mortgage to Cooke was released for £4000, upon his paying it in. It was afterwards alleged that the sum had been lent to Bernal; but what was the result? Why, that it all went into the hands of Mr. Bromley himself. The executors in the case of Mr. Wilkinson never thought human nature could be so base as to imagine such gross misconduct, and the whole of these monies had been swamped by the bankrupt. However, these extraordinary transactions should act as valuable admonitions to society in general not to trust themselves or their property to the management of any man's hands, without seeing that they were properly secured. There never was worse conduct than that of the bankrupt in relation to Mr. Wilkinson. The deeds for £9000 were deposited in a tin box, at Messrs. Child's, and within three months after his death he got them back, used them to his own purpose, and never returned them. The recital of these things creates horror. Compassion was claimed for the bankrupt upon the ground of the extent of his speculations. Now, my answer is, that before he indulged in this lust for speculation, he should have looked into his banker's book, and not have dipped his hands into the pockets of his friends, his benefactors, and his clients. In this case, to the sorrow of the creditors, the property which the bankrupt states to have cost £120,000, has been so spun out in order to raise money, so divided, and so subdivided, that I do not believe it will yield more than £5000 to £6000; for the whole of the property, even to the homestead and pigstye, have been pledged, I fear, to their full value. After some further observations, the learned commissioner ordered an adjournment, at the bankrupt's expense, for the 28th of October, when an amended balance sheet is to be furnished.

ASSIZE INTELLIGENCE.

The Summer Assizes have commenced since our last.

NORFOLK CIRCUIT.

THE MURDER IN BUCKINGHAMSHIRE.—On Monday at the Assizes for the county of Buckingham, held at Aylesbury, Richard Chandler was indicted for killing and slaying John Leech, gamekeeper to a gentleman named Curtis, by striking him over the head with a stake, on Monday, the 2nd of July, in the parish of Little Brickhill, near Newport Pagnell. John Keen was also indicted for aiding and assisting. The trial lasted a considerable time; but the following are the whole facts of the case:—On the day named in the indictment the two prisoners were detected by the deceased beating for game. The latter interfered, and attempted to take them into custody. Chandler declared that he would not be taken alive, and a severe struggle took place between them and the deceased. The latter was getting the better of them, when Chandler seized a stake from the hedge, and, striking the deceased several blows with it over the head, felled him to the earth, and caused his death subsequently. The jury retired to consider their verdict, and after being absent for some time, returned a verdict, finding Chandler "guilty of manslaughter," and "acquitting" Keen. Mr. Baron Alderson sentenced Chandler to be transported for fifteen years.

THE ROBBERY OF A BANKER'S PARCEL.—At Oxford, on Tuesday, Richard Elliott was tried before Chief Justice Tindal, charged with stealing 1500 sovereigns, the property of Robinson and Co., bankers of Oxford. This robbery, which took place in March last, made some noise at the time. It will be recollected that on the 18th of that month 1500 sovereigns were nailed up in a box, by Coutts and Co., and afterwards put into a bag, and carried by the porter to the Gloucester Coffee-house, which was the last house the Defiance coach stopped at before leaving London. The bag with its contents was given to Hobson, the driver, and deposited in the front boot. The prisoner Elliott was taken up by the coachman, at Knightsbridge. The bag was afterwards seen safe by Hobson at Longford; and on the coach stopping at Benson, the prisoner was seen meddling with the parcels in the front box. He afterwards treated the coachman to a glass of ale, and paid his fare to Benson. The coach went on to Oxford, and on arriving at Messrs. Robinson and Co.'s, at whose banking house the coach first stopped, the bag and its contents were not to be found. Various circumstances were stated, with a view to implicate the prisoner in the robbery, but the jury did not think them sufficient, and returned a verdict of acquittal.

POLICE.

FRAUDULENT BILL DISCOUNTERS.—On Tuesday, John Alves, whom the police have long been looking after, was apprehended by Inspector Pearce, of the A division. He is charged with having stolen two £1000 promissory notes from Lord Charles Fitzroy, with which he had been entrusted by his lordship to get discounted. Immediately after the prisoner's apprehension, he was examined at Marlborough-street, before Mr. Maltby.—Alves is a man about thirty-five years of age, but from having shaved off his whiskers, and dressed his hair in a juvenile style, he looks much younger. Neither his manners nor appearance were such as would, under ordinary circumstances, disarm suspicion, especially where money transactions for the first time were to be concluded. The prisoner is said to be known to the police as an acquaintance of the well-known John Minter Hart, and an associate of Cooke, Prescott, and others, engaged in the same pursuits.—Mr. Clarkson and Mr. Watkins accompanied Lord Charles Fitzroy into court as his lordship's professional advisers.—Mr. Clarkson addressed the bench, and stated the principal circumstances as detailed afterwards in evidence.—Lord Charles Fitzroy examined: I reside at this moment at Midhurst, in Sussex, when in town I live at Burlington-house. I was not acquainted with Alves until I received the letter of the 19th January. I wrote an answer and addressed it to No. 24, Piccadilly. I saw Alves on the 1st of February. I went to his office, which was on the first floor, and I saw some pictures in the room to which he called my attention. The proposition made to me was to procure £2000 at 25 per cent. I demurred, and left the room, but I called again the next day. I agreed to take the money on Alves's terms. Alves asked me if it would be more convenient to have two bills for £1000 each, than one of £2000 drawn on me? Alves gave me two bills ready prepared. I put my name to them, but I cannot recollect whether I wrote the body of the bills. Alves gave me a letter of acknowledgment. I would not have parted with the bills without this letter. In the faith that I was to receive the money, less the discount, I consented to part with the securities. Alves put the letter into my hands, and I saw him previously write it. I have no doubt the first letter I received was written by Alves. It was arranged that I was to call in Piccadilly on the Friday following for the money. I went and waited an hour, but Alves was not within. I left word I had gone to the United Service Club, and went away. I went out of town, and the next morning I received a letter containing £200. I wrote an answer, requesting Alves to meet me the following Wednesday.—Mr. Clarkson here asked the magistrate if it was necessary to give the accused notice at once to produce the answer.—The prisoner said it was not necessary, as he was willing to produce the letters.—Lord C. Fitzroy, continued: On Wednesday I went to Piccadilly. Received a letter in the handwriting of Alves. It was to the effect, that the writer was extremely sorry that he could not meet me at the appointed hour, but, if I would make another appointment, he would attend to it, and would pay the balance of the notes into my banker's hands, if I wished. I made no subsequent appointment, but I called at the house frequently, and always received the same answer, that Mr. Alves was out. I went to my solicitor, Mr. Watkins, in Sackville-street, and left the £200 with him to pay to Alves. Under the advice of my solicitor, I copied the following note to Mr. Alves, to be sent to him:—

> Sir,—I have called several times, for the purpose of returning the £200 which you sent me. I decline the money, and have deposited it with my solicitor, in whose hands it now is; and I must further request you to give up the two £1000 promissory notes, which you obtained from me under false pretences.
> Your obedient servant,
> C. FITZROY.

I have never heard anything in reply to this letter. The bills were for three months, and until they became due, I heard nothing more of either them or Alves. Before the bills became due I came to this court for advice. I have received nothing on the bills, except the £200, and no money has been paid into my banker's hands. In consequence of suggestions from my professional adviser, I have filed a bill against an individual who holds one of the bills, and one against another person. [The names of the individuals were mentioned, but this being an ex-parte proceeding, we do not think it fair to publish them.]—Mr. Maltby asked the accused if he wished to put any questions to Lord C. Fitzroy?—Prisoner: I only wish to say that at the first appointment I got to Piccadilly before one o'clock, and finding his lordship gone, I went to the club, and afterwards to the railway, but was too late. With this exception the statement of Lord Charles Fitzroy is correct.—Mr. Clarkson: There was plenty of time between the 16th of February and now to have seen Lord C. Fitzroy.—Inspector Pearce proved that he took the prisoner into custody that morning, at Chelsea. He told him that he was charged with obtaining two promissory notes from Lord C. Fitzroy, by fraudulent pretences, to which he replied that his lordship had been harsh with him.—Mr. Watkins, solicitor, proved that the letter was sent to 24, Piccadilly, and that his lordship left the £200 with him. He had called several times, but had never been able to see Alves. Mr. Clarkson said he was bound in fairness to state that he held in his hand the answer to the bill filed by Lord C. Fitzroy. The individual against whom the bill was filed states that, on the 16th of February, he gave to Alves £600 in two checks, £300 worth of pictures, and took £100 discount for one of the promissory notes. He did not mean to make this evidence at present. The statute made it a misdemeanour to misappropriate securities where written directions were given. So as written directions could be proved, he contended it did not matter who wrote them, whether the principal or the agent. The written directions here were in the writing of Alves; both parties were consenting parties; and he submitted it did not matter who was the writer of these directions, inasmuch as they were to govern the transaction. The case was a very important one; and if the present proceeding failed to protect his lordship from loss, he trusted it would at least protect the public.—Mr. Maltby asked the prisoner if he had anything to say to the charge.—The prisoner wanted to know what the charge was.—Mr. Maltby said he was charged with stealing two bills, the property of Lord C. Fitzroy.—The prisoner asked how he could be charged with stealing two bills, when Lord C. Fitzroy admitted he gave them to him.—Mr. Clarkson said the charge which he at present made was, that the prisoner was entrusted with securities, with directions in writing to negotiate them, and that he had abused this trust.—The prisoner said he had a letter from his lordship, requesting him to fix a time to see him. This was after he had sent Lord C. Fitzroy the £200. The letter was read at the request of the prisoner.—Mr. Clarkson said the letter did not alter the case.—Mr. Maltby was of the same opinion.—Mr. Clarkson said there was no doubt a great moral fraud had been committed, but it was difficult at present to say what precise shape the charge against the prisoner would take.—Mr. Maltby said there was enough to justify him in remanding the prisoner until Monday next, but he would have no objection to receive good bail, two sureties in £250 each, and the prisoner in £500.—[The extent to which these bill transactions are carried in the metropolis demands serious attention. Scarcely a day passes but some nefarious transaction is brought to light connected with bill discounting, and the records of the Bankruptcy Court prove the difficulty which tradesmen find of extricating themselves when once in the clutches of these discounters and their agents. In the present case it appears that £100 was to be paid for the discount of one of the notes for £1000, but the sum of £700 was to be taken out in pictures. This discount, enormous as it may seem, is less than that usually charged by the gang of swindlers who infest the metropolis. The defective state of the law calls aloud for a change. At present it appears that there is no remedy when a person intrusts another to get a bill discounted, and he appropriates the money, unless there should be a written direction on the subject. It is fortunate for Lord C. Fitzroy that he took such a precaution, or he would probably have been compelled to pay the money for the bills.]

CHARGE OF STEALING A CHECK.—At the Mansion House, on Tuesday, a young man, who stated his name to be Henry Sage, and his profession to be that of a surgeon, was brought before Sir Peter Laurie, charged by Mr. Robarts, of the banking-house of Curtis, Robarts, and Co., under the following circumstances:—Mr. Robarts stated, that on the afternoon of Monday he called accidentally upon Mrs. Maddox, his sister, and was told by her that she had lost a small bag out of her carriage, which bag contained a check which she had drawn for £30 upon the house in Lombard-street. As the check was post-dated, he did not suppose that any mischief would arise from the finding of it by any person, but by way of precaution he wrote to the resident clerk the particulars, and at a little after nine o'clock on that (Tuesday) morning it was presented at the counter by the prisoner, who gave so lame an account of the manner in which he became possessed of it, that it was considered proper to give him into custody.—Sir Peter Laurie: Perhaps the gentleman will give me an intelligible explanation. Pray, sir, where did you get this check?—The defendant: I had it of two Frenchmen whom I saw in Lombard-street.—A long examination took place in regard to the two Frenchmen, but as they did not appear, although the person said he was sure they would do so, he was remanded. On Wednesday Sage was re-examined on the charge.—Sir Peter Laurie told the prisoner he had made inquiry into his character, and also as to that of the persons whom the prisoner said were in his company when he spoke to the two Frenchmen, and nothing favourable had been elicited.—Mrs. Sidney Maddox (widow) stated that the check produced had been last in her possession on Monday. It was drawn by her on the banking-house of her brother (Mr. Robarts), and she had deposited it in a pocket-book which she placed in a bag, which bag lay in a basket in her sister's open carriage, at Holmes's shawl warehouse, in Regent-street, where she called. She was about twenty minutes or a quarter of an hour at Holmes's, and upon her return to the carriage she missed the bag.—The prisoner requested to know whether the magistrate woud take bail.—Sir Peter Laurie replied that he could not think of taking bail in such a case.—The prisoner: I assure you that I am entirely innocent. I admit that there is something calculated to excite suspicion, but that is all.—The prisoner was then committed for trial.

CHARGE OF MANSLAUGHTER.—On Tuesday, Francis Thomas Scott was charged at Union-hall with the death of John Samuel Reed on the preceding day.—James Hughes stated, that on the preceding afternoon, as he was in Blackfriars-road, he observed the prisoner on horseback galloping down the road at a very furious rate. When he got about half way down a middle-aged respectable-looking man, who happened to be passing from one side to the other, was knocked down, and one of the hinder hoofs of the horse striking him on the side of the head, inflicted a dreadful wound. The unfortunate man was taken up in a state of perfect insensibility, bleeding from the wound, and also from the mouth and ears, and conveyed to Guy's Hospital. The injuries he received were of such a serious nature, that in the course of the night he expired. In the course of the investigation it was stated that the prisoner was under the effects of liquor at the time of the catastrophe, and that he was riding along at a most reckless rate down the Blackfriars-road.—Mr. Cottingham remanded the prisoner until Wednesday, when some further evidence was adduced. The magistrate then said it had been clearly proved that the prisoner was riding along at a most furious rate, by which the life of a human being had been sacrificed. He then committed the prisoner for trial for manslaughter.

COUNTRY NEWS.

LIVERPOOL MECHANICS' INSTITUTION.—The directors of this Institution have just issued a prospectus of a Girls' School, on a large scale, which they intend to open on the 5th of August next.

STATE OF TRADE.—We are glad to state that the accounts from some of the manufacturing districts of the state of trade are favourable. At Manchester goods are on demand, and there are improvements in other places.

INCENDIARY FIRES.—Last Friday night there was a large fire at the farm-premises of Mr. John Turner, of Stonham Astle, Suffolk. The farm-buildings were burnt, and a horse, a pig, &c., destroyed. About £600 or £700 worth of damage was done. This village is six miles from Stowmarket. Mr. Turner is the Poor-law Guardian of the parish. A boy has been taken into custody, under some vague suspicion. There was also another fire at Debenham, an adjoining village to Stonham, at a wheelwright's shop named Homes, but of small importance.

SERIOUS FIRE AT SLOUGH.—On Monday afternoon, shortly after two o'clock, a fire broke out in the recently-erected mansion at Upton Park near Slough, the property of Mr. J. F. Bedborough, the builder, of New Windsor. As soon as the intelligence of the fire reached Windsor two companies of the Scots Fusilier Guards, under the command of Colonel Drummond, left Windsor with the barrack engine for the scene of conflagration, followed by the two engines from the Castle, the Windsor and Eton College engines, and several others from the vicinity; but such was the ascendancy which the flames had obtained before their arrival, that all attempts (though there was a plentiful supply of water) to preserve the property were totally ineffectual, and three houses were completely gutted, forming the west end of Victoria-terrace. The property is insured to the amount of £3000 (about one-half of its value) in the London Union Fire Office.

FIRE IN SALFORD.—On Sunday a fire of an alarming character broke out on the premises of Messrs. G. Wilson and Co., engineers, screw, bolt, &c., manufacturers, Queen-street, Salford, which for rapidity and destruction has seldom been equalled. The premises in question are upwards of fifty yards in length, and from these there was a wooden communication to the extensive sizing works of Messrs. Lavins and Co. These works soon caught fire, and in a quarter of an hour were in flames from one end to the other; the cotton warp, of which there was a large quantity on the premises, blazing most tremendously. With difficulty the flames were prevented from spreading to the adjacent cottages. The shrieks of the inmates were quite appalling. The women and children were glad to escape in their night dresses, and fortunately none of them suffered any serious injury. It is not known how the fire originated. The premises were locked up on Saturday night at the usual time, and all was then safe. As to the amount of loss, it is not at present accurately known. Messrs. Wilson are insured for £3300 in the Globe-office, and Messrs. Lavins for £5200, of which the Atlas company lose £1750 for the building, and £3500 for the stock; but it is supposed that these amounts will not cover the loss sustained by Messrs. Wilson and Lavins.

MELANCHOLY CASE OF DROWNING AT DOVER.—On Monday afternoon a very melancholy loss of life occurred in Dover Bay, by the upsetting of a small pleasure-boat, or punt. The party consisted of Mrs. Bennett, two of her daughters, one about ten and the other eight years of age; a young gentleman, Mr. Henry Rawlings, the nephew of Mr. Bennet; and the two men who were in charge of the boat, named Fox and Lewisham. The boat was under sail and tacking, about a mile off the land, when she was observed to upset, there being a rather brisk breeze of wind blowing at the time. On observing the accident several boats were immediately launched from the beach, but before they could get to the sufferers, a fishing-smack, that was about half a mile to windward, bore down, and sent her boat to the spot. The fishermen fortunately picked up Mrs. Bennett, and the two men, Fox and Lewisham; but the gentleman and the two young ladies had disappeared. The boatmen saved themselves by swimming, and it is supposed Mrs. Bennett's clothes kept her above water. Mrs. Bennett was brought on shore almost lifeless; but on being taken to Mr. Marsh's bathing-house, she was placed in a warm bath, and by the application of the means recommended by the Humane Society, she was fortunately recovered. Mr. Bennett comes from Frome, in Somersetshire, where he carries on the business of a woollen cloth manufacturer, and has also a warehouse in the borough. He came to Dover with his family for the benefit of their healths only about a week since. He had gone to Folkestone and Hythe in the morning, and did not return till half-past seven o'clock, when he became acquainted with his sad loss. Mrs. Bennett, who narrowly escaped with her life, was so far recovered by about nine o'clock at night as to admit of her being removed to her lodgings. Up to that time she had not been informed of the fate of her two daughters and the young gentleman. She is now aware of it, and bears the bereavement with Christian fortitude. The men Fox and Lewisham, who had charge of the boat, are not licensed boatmen, though they have been in the habit of taking off pleasure parties for some time back. The ill-fated craft was only about twelve feet long, and of a class not adapted to carry sail. At the time of the accident Mr. Rawlings was steering the boat, and in "wearing," or "gibbing" her, a squall caught the sail, and before the sheet could be let go upset the boat. The fishing-smack which saved Mrs. Bennett and Fox and Lewisham is named the Forget-me-not, Captain Ord, and the property of Mr. Duke, of Dover. One of the bodies, that of the youngest girl, was found on Tuesday afternoon. On Wednesday, about eleven o'clock, the body of Mr. Henry Rawlings, who was drowned on Monday, was picked up in the bay. An inquest was opened before the borough coroner at one o'clock, on both bodies, and the evidence went to show that the boat had been upset during a brisk gale, while the boatmen were about to jib her. There did not appear to have been carelessness on the part of any one; but the boat was not a good one, and she carried too much sail for her size. The inquest was adjourned for further evidence.

HORRIBLE ACCIDENT.—A most heart-rending and fatal accident happened on Monday to a limeburner employed at the Southwick lime-kilns, near Sunderland. The poor man, whose name was Bell, went on the top of one of the kilns when it was burning. When standing on the stones about the centre of the kiln, the burning mass beneath him suddenly gave way, and he sank up to the shoulders in the "furnace of fire." In this position he remained for a short time in the greatest agony, till his limbs and body were so burnt as to cause his death. A rope having been fastened round the upper part of his body, he was with difficulty dragged out, when his mangled remains presented a most horrible spectacle—appalling even to contemplate. The unfortunate man has left a widow and large family to mourn his truly melancholy death.

MINIATURE STEAM ENGINE.—A most interesting piece of mechanism has been produced by Mr. Warner, and exhibited by him at the Polytechnic Institution, in Regent-street. The base on which this beautiful little toy stands is a four penny-piece. It is perfect in all its parts, and will work by atmospheric pressure, a more severe test as to the precision of its fittings than steam itself. Altogether this is a most beautiful piece of mechanism, and does infinite credit to the patience and ingenuity of Mr. Warner.

GREAT SALE OF PINE-APPLES.

On Monday last, considerable interest was excited among persons engaged in the "Fruit Trade" at the sale of upwards of 2700 West Indian Pine-Apples, by Messrs. Keeling and Hunt, of Monument-yard.

It appears that a cargo of this delicious fruit was imported last year, but was altogether inferior to the pines just disposed of. These have been received by the Rival, from Nassau, and by the Reis Effendi, Captain Sutherland, from Eleuthera, one of the smallest but most fruitful of the Bahamas, and celebrated also for its fine turtles.

The Reis Effendi was consigned to Nassau, where she took in part of her cargo, consisting of logwood, yellow-wood, ebony, arrow-root, conch-shells, tortoise-shells, and asphaltum; she completed at Eleuthera, with pines and turtle, where the former can be bought at a dollar and a quarter per dozen, and the latter at five pence per pound.

Up to the last season, the trade in pines, at Eleuthera, was in the hands of the Americans, who obtained the fruit at their own prices; whereas, this year, in consequence of British competition, the pines have advanced 50 per cent. The letters from the Bahamas state that the natives are quite enthusiastic now that the British have taken up the trade, since the Americans, who were the sole purchasers before, cannot now beat them down in prices.

The pine plants in the West Indies, it appears, only bear for three years, and then the natives root them up to make room for other plantations. The plant is, as the reader may recollect, indigenous to some of the West India islands, and to South America. In its wild state, as at Eleuthera, it is found near the sea-shore, the sand accumulated there in downs serving for its growth, as well as for that of most of the species of the same family. Each plant, when put into the ground, yields one pine for three successive years, and then becomes exhausted. The sandy plains of Praya Velha, and Praya Grande, formed by the receding of the sea, and in which no other plant will thrive, are the spots where the pine-apple grows best.

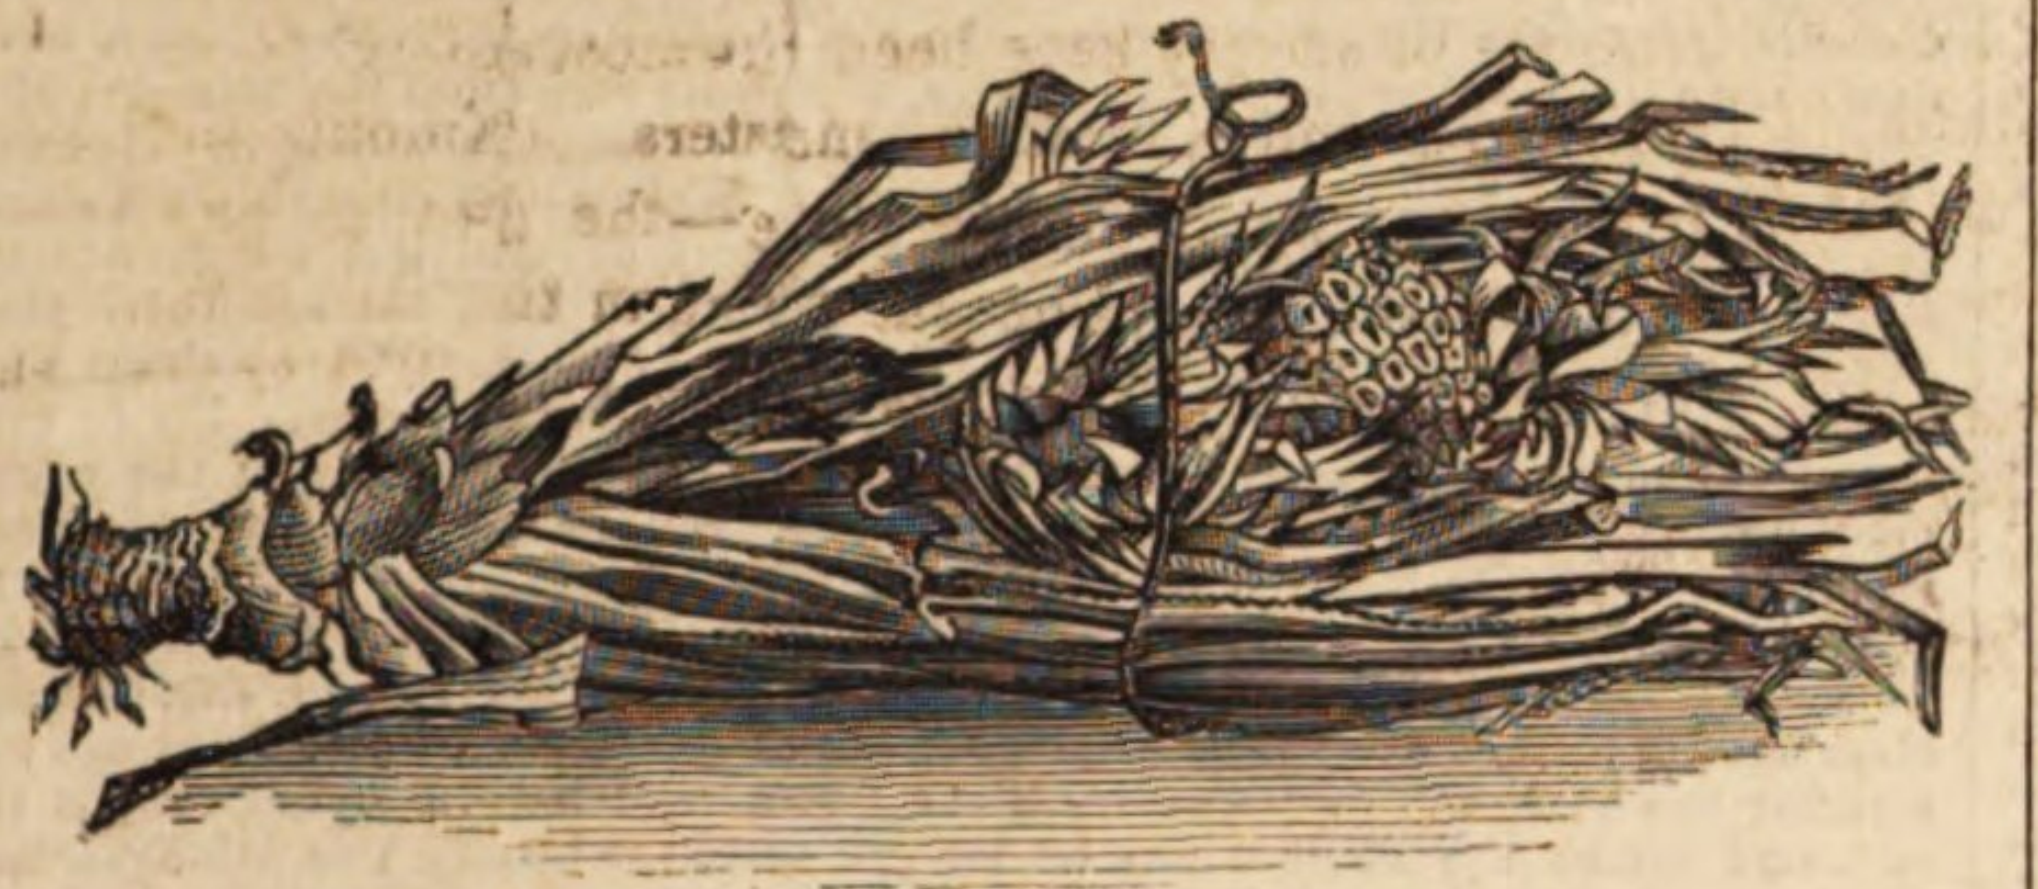
At Eleuthera the business of culture has only just been commenced, by sending to that island a few of our finest varieties of the fruit. The pines just received are, unquestionably, superior to last year's importation. They may be purchased at from 2s. 6d. to 6s., and their average weight is two pounds; whereas, in England, from seven pounds to eight pounds is, by no means, an uncommon weight for a single fruit.

We have heard of pine-apples being so abundant in the West Indies, as to be used, when cut horizontally, for scrubbing ships' decks, the acid of the fruit serving to whiten the timbers.

Although the flavour of the West India pines is far inferior to pines of British growth, they are fine fruit; and Eleuthera should not be lost sight of, producing as it does, two prime luxuries of the table—pine-apples and turtles.

The engravings show the pines, as lotted for sale; and a specimen, with the crown, main-leaves, and stem; the varieties imported being the Birds-eye and Providence.

Two of the finest pines received by Messrs. Keeling and Hunt were forwarded as a present to her Majesty, for which the following courteous acknowledgment has been received:—



PINE-APPLE FROM ELEUTHERA.

Windsor Castle, 14th July, 1844.

The Master of the Queen's Household presents his compliments to Messrs. Keeling and Hunt, and has the honour to acknowledge the receipt of two pine-apples, which arrived on Saturday evening, in perfect order, and have been served at her Majesty's table.

Messrs. Keeling and Hunt have just received a second cargo from Eleuthera, consisting of 12,000 pines, and 50 tons of block ice; the vessel having made the passage in 28 days.

By way of tail-piece, we subjoin a specimen of the Batata, or Sweet Potato, of which three boxes were sold on Monday, subsequently to the pines. It is a native of the Malayan archipelago, and was eaten much in the south of Europe before the cultivation of the potato, which both became a substitute for it, and appropriated its name. It is partially cultivated in the south of Spain and France, whence its roots are sent to the markets of Madrid and Paris, where they are held as a delicacy: they are mealy, sweet, and wholesome, but keep badly.

GREAT REPEAL MEETING AT WASHINGTON.

A vast meeting was held in Washington Hall, on the 25th ult., for the purpose of raising a fund for the payment of the fine of £2000 which Mr. O'Connell is sentenced to pay at the expiration of his imprisonment. The scene is described in the New York Herald to have "exceeded anything ever seen in this city since the memorable eve of October 29, 1841, when Bishop Hughes organized the thousands then assembled into a body pledged to carry his ticket. From all quarters of the city, and from the adjoining villages, the Irish, chiefly of the lower classes, poured in by hundreds and thousands to the place of meeting. Long before the time of meeting the large hall was densely crowded, and the scene was diversified, animated, and picturesque in the extreme." Mr. Hilliard, the celebrated artist, has sketched this great demonstration for the annexed engraving.

There could not have been less than twelve thousand Irishmen present in the course of the evening, for the stream going out and entering the hall was kept up without intermission for nearly three hours. Every man seemed prepared to contribute; and the shouts, the tossing of hats in the air, the whirling about of coats and jackets, the waving of shillelahs, the almost frenzied excitement which universally prevailed, were certainly well fitted to astonish all who witnessed, for the first time, a lively Irish meeting. Crowds of passers-by in Broadway stopped in utter amazement to listen to the shouts of the multitudes which thronged and issued from the hall.

The Secretary, Bartholomew O'Connor, Esq., amid deafening applause, introduced Mr. Gansevoort Melville as Chairman, who briefly addressed the meeting amidst tumultuous applause, and bespoke their "substantial sympathy for the great—the illustrious—the indomitable patriot—O'Connell—the man whose energies have been devoted to human liberty all over the world; and who is now consigned to the gloom of the dungeon for Ireland." (Immense cheering which lasted for a considerable time.)

The Secretary, Mr. O'Connor, then read several communications from various Repealers in America, with accompanying subscriptions; and Mr. Harry Langton, the Receiver-General, announced seventy-seven dollars from "the Foigh-a-Ballaghs of Waterford," for whom three lusty cheers were given. Other subscriptions were announced, and, says the New York Herald:—"The rapidity with which the money was poured in, and the jostling, bustling, struggling and pushing to get to the tables where it was received. were perfectly indescribable. It seemed as if every man felt that the salvation of his native land depended on his depositing his dollar."

After this part of the business had proceeded with spirit for some time, the meeting was addressed by Mr. H. Greeley with great vehemence, who stated that since the last meeting, there had taken place two events favourable to the cause of liberty:—"One is Daniel O'Connell's standing up with undaunted mien and resolution before his judges, to plead for the cause of his country and the cause of universal freedom, in a voice that spreads unchecked over the civilized world (great applause.) Yes, the trial of these great patriots, intended to be the death-blow of Repeal, has but given it a wider range, and one which no government can control. * * * * The world, gentlemen, has seen Daniel O'Connell standing up before his judges, saying, 'I stand up for relief to the poor, prosperity to the humble, and liberty to the oppressed; for such a conspiracy as this I am indicted before you.' (A burst of applause followed this sentence, which took some moments to subside.) The cause of Repeal has had another honourable testimony from the British Secretary for Foreign Affairs, the Earl of Aberdeen, who, in a correspondence with the British Minister in this country, says that his government is solicitous for the abolition of slavery all over the world—every place but Ireland. (Laughter.) Out of his own mouth we will show the justice of our cause. Our enemies ask us what we have to do with Repeal? I answer, just as much as the British have to do with the abolition of slavery out of their own dominions. (Prolonged cheering.) We have it under the sign manual of the British Secretary for Foreign Affairs—in the hand-writing of the Earl of Aberdeen, in a document coolly considered and skilfully penned, that they mean to abolish slavery in every place as soon as they can, but we tell them, if they are not prepared to begin, we will teach them a lesson in their own land." (Great applause.)

The Hon. John M'Kean then proposed seven or eight resolutions, of a very strong character.

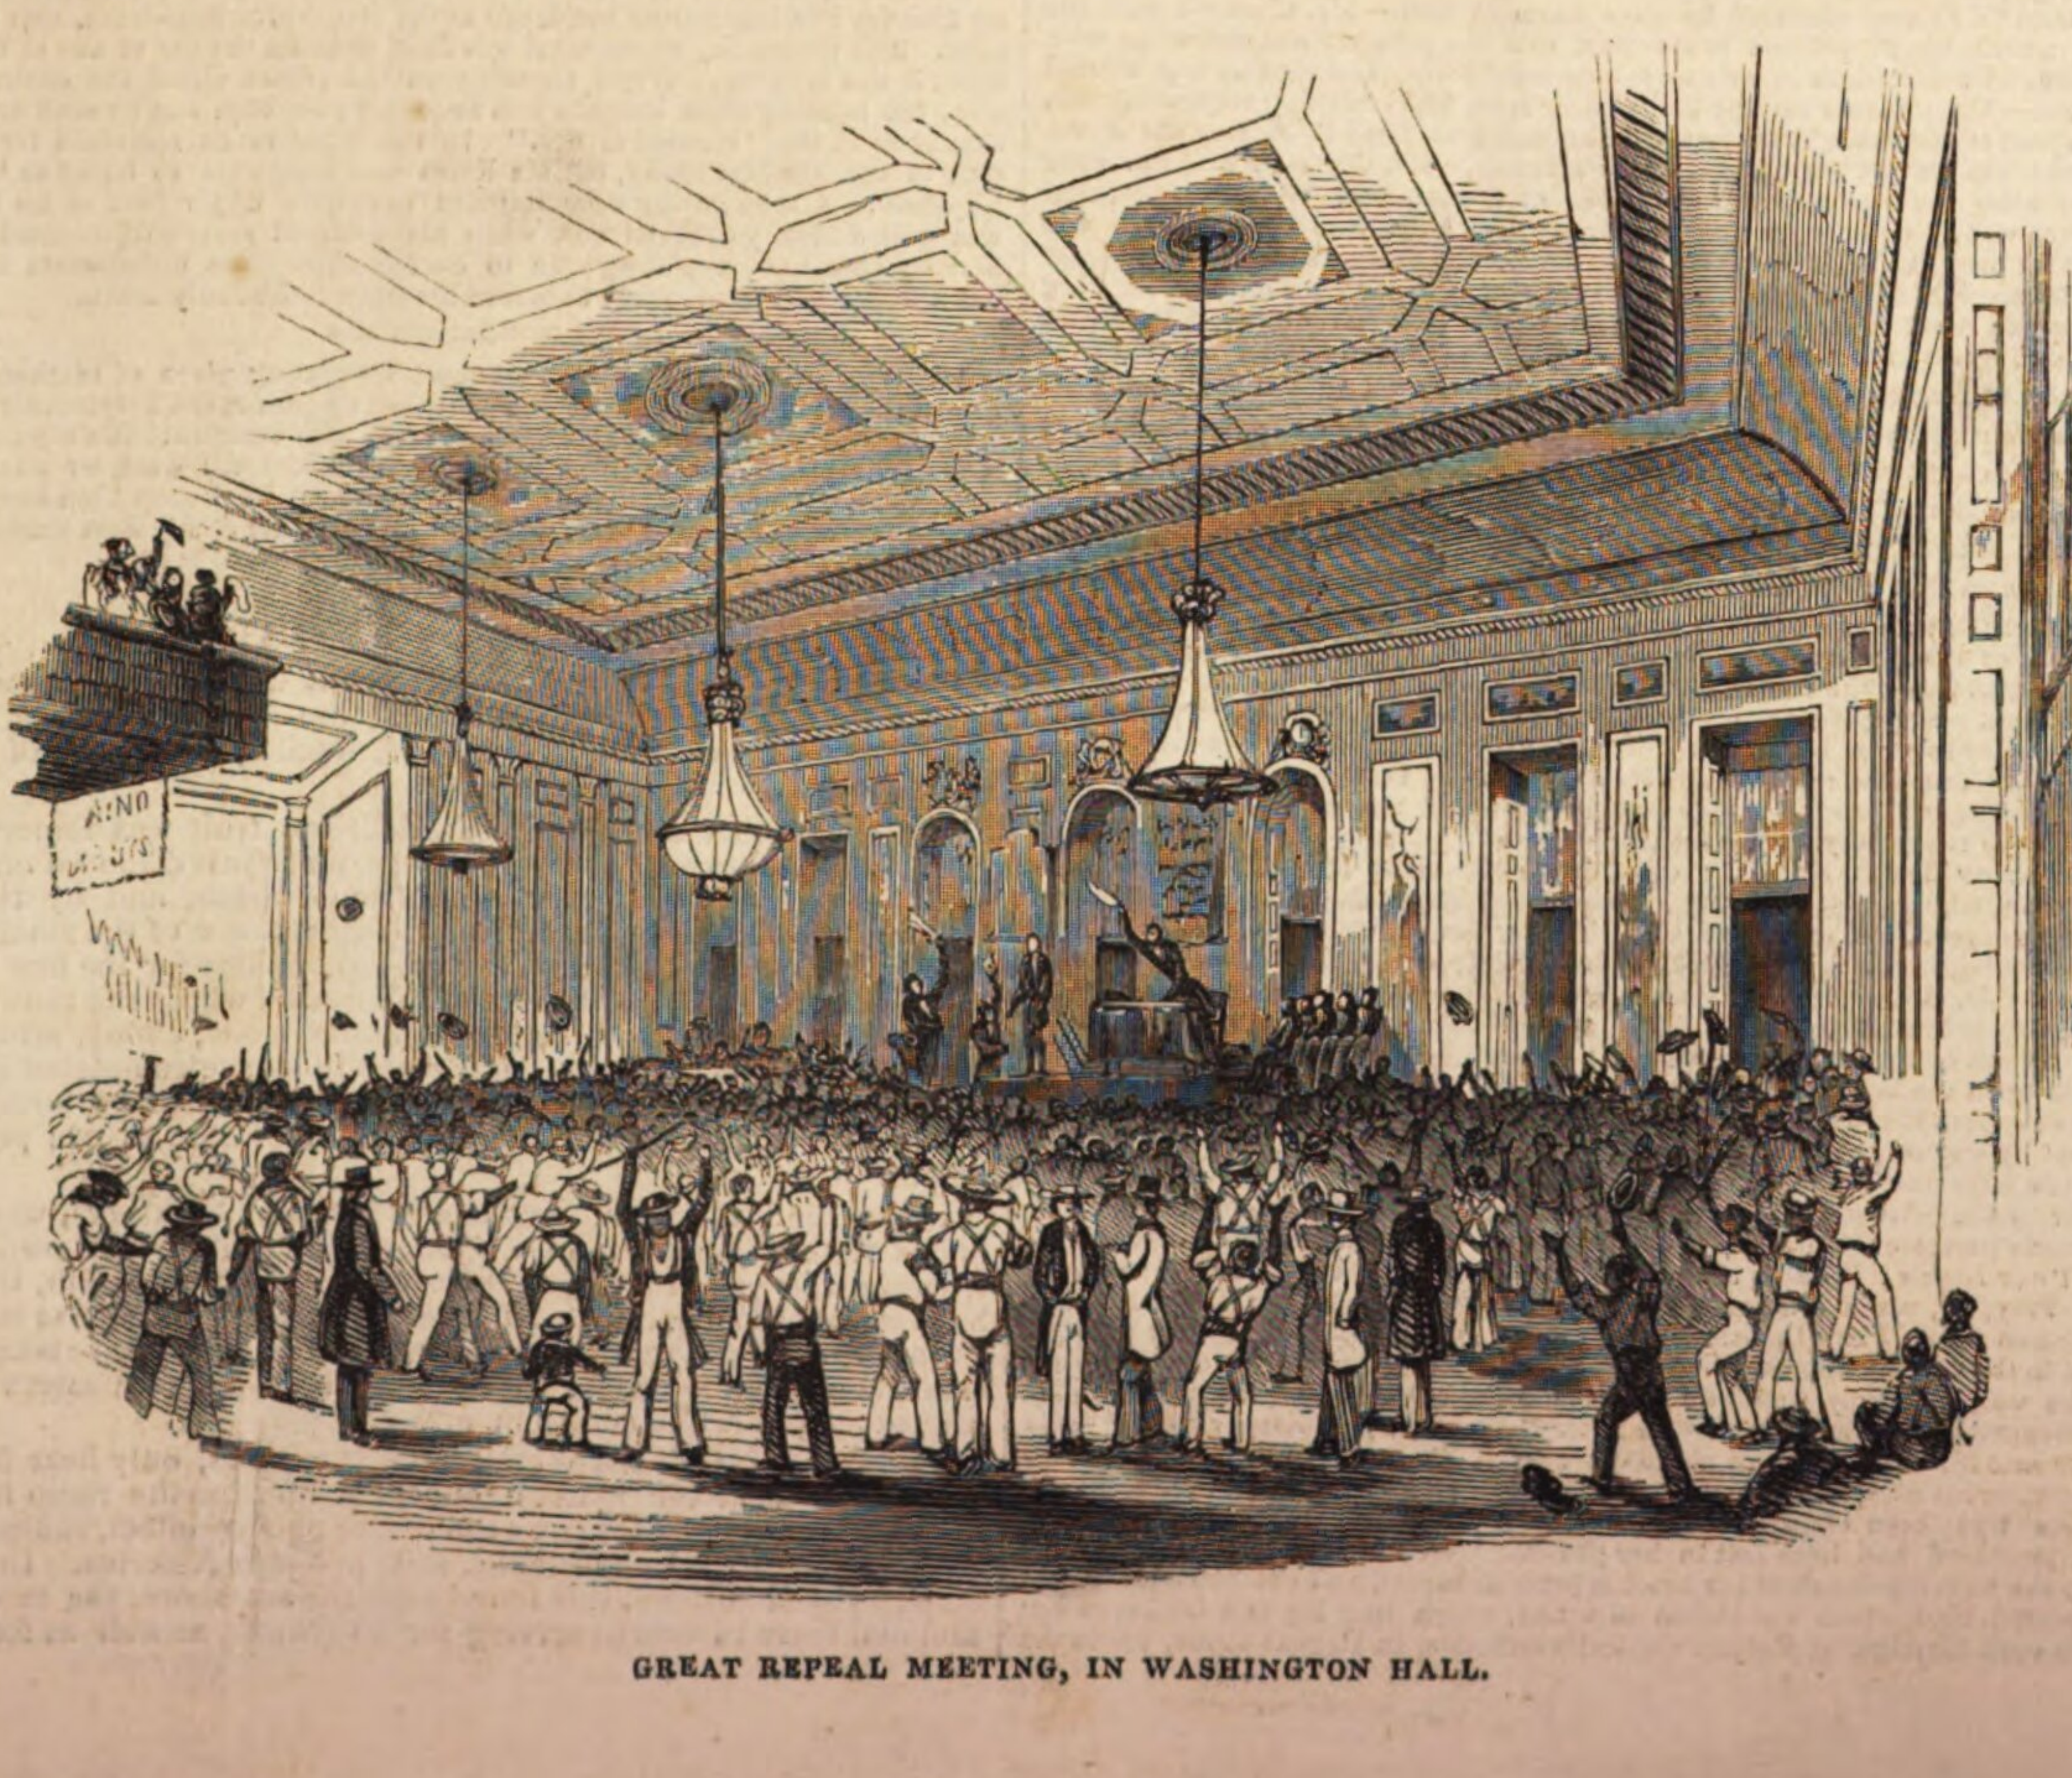
The Chairman then proposed three cheers for "the ladies," which were heartily responded to.

For a considerable time, "the money came rolling in," and, at length, the meeting was adjourned to the following evening, after 1072 dollars, 70 cents had been collected.

Next evening, according to the New York Herald, "the muster evidenced that a good deal of the steam had been let off by the previous evening's proceedings. At the time the meeting was organised, there were not as many hundreds present as there were thousands, on the previous night. Their conduct was much cooler—there was not that anxiety to bring out the needful." Nevertheless, numbers of persons came forward with different sums; many of them apparently only labourers, presented at what they no doubt thought the altar of liberty, their five, and some ten, dollars each, when all the apparel on their backs were not worth the same amount, and many who had subscribed the previous evening, repeated their subscriptions on this occasion, and some of them for the fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh time. About nine o'clock the room was well filled. Considerable amusement was then caused by a jolly Irish tar attempting to sing the "Harp of Erin," whereas the meeting were more disposed for the cash.

One secretary then spoke, and concluded by calling for three cheers for "O'Connell, his speedy deliverance, and regeneration of Ireland."

The receiver-general continued to receive subscriptions, and "found it such hard, warm work, that he was obliged partially to strip to it:" he then announced that evening's collection to have been near upon 300 dollars, and the meeting adjourned.

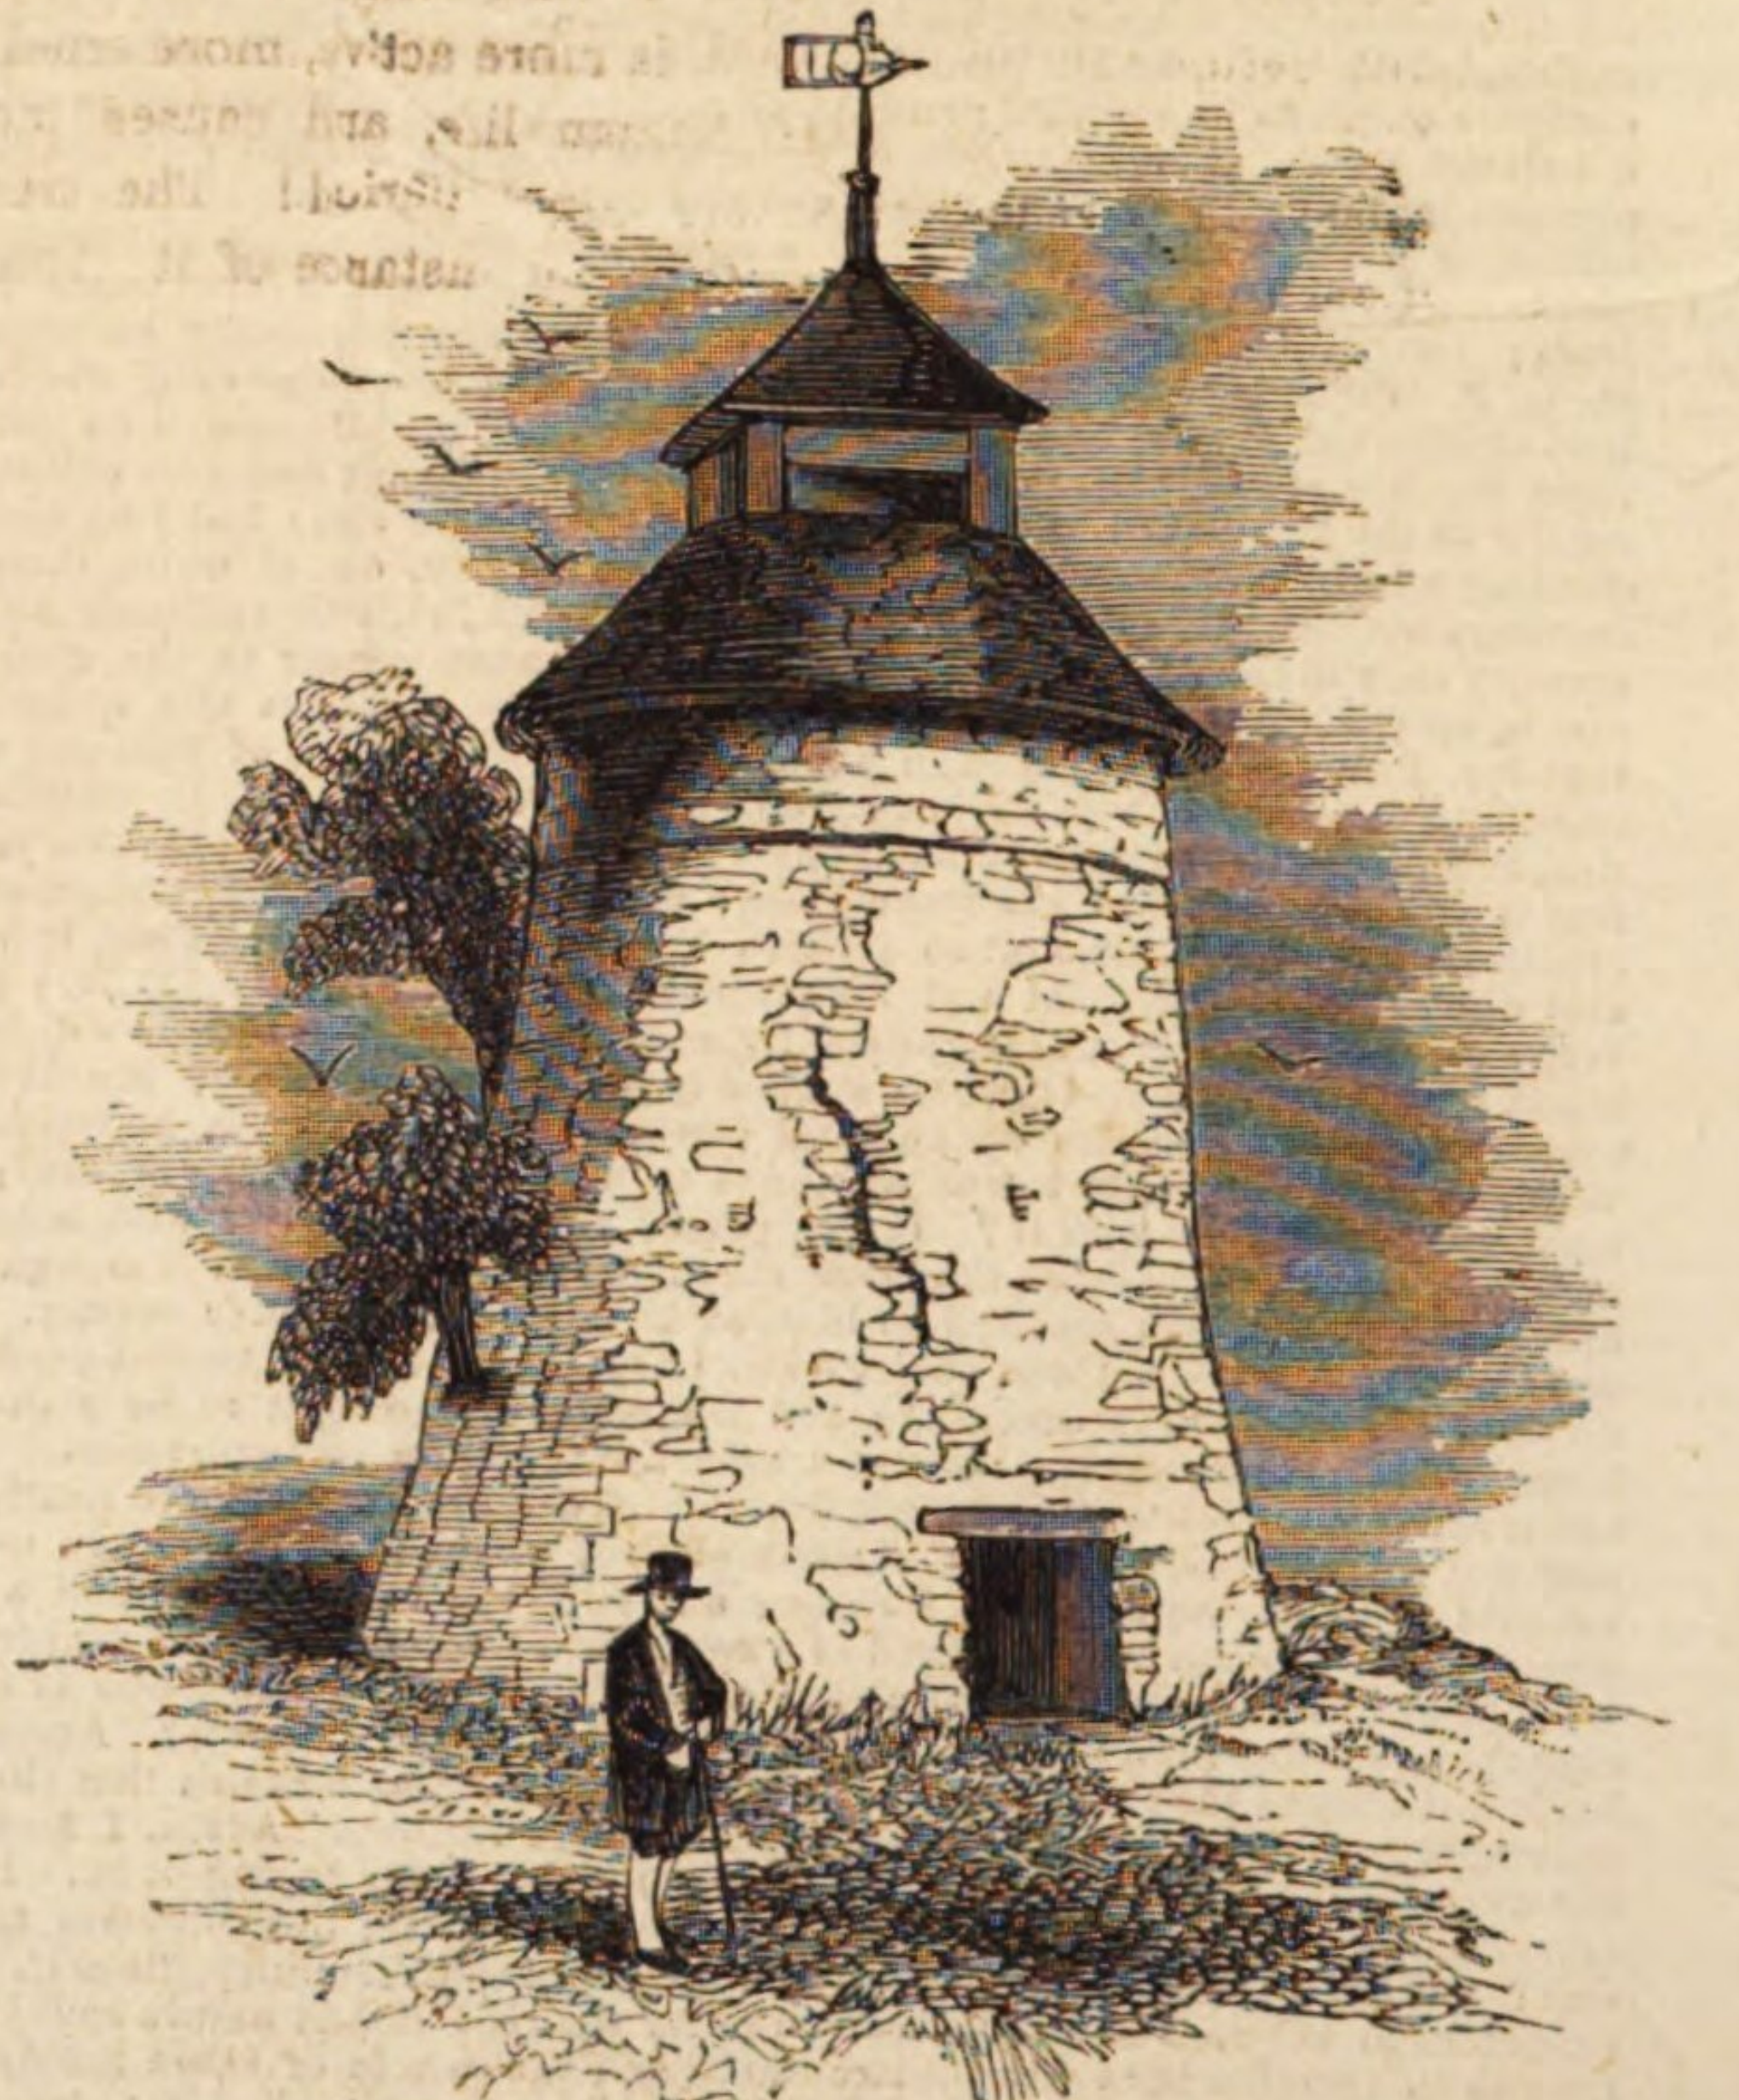


GREAT REPEAL MEETING, IN WASHINGTON HALL.

NOOKS AND CORNERS OF OLD ENGLAND.

ANCIENT DOVE-COTS.

The regal, ecclesiastical, and military antiquities of the country have been fully explored; but those which throw a light on our domestic history—the manners and customs of our ancestors—have been seldom visited, and as seldom described by those who profess to narrate the history of the people, as well as the rule of their more conspicuous leader. The reason of this omission is to be found in the character of the locality of such monuments. They dwell in obscure places, and are found only in "nooks and corners." Such an object is exhibited in our cut. It is the ancient dove-cots of Codnor. An ordinary observer would pass it heedlessly, and number it in his note-book with those towers and walls of the castle devoted to military purposes, and thus lose an instructive opportunity of making himself acquainted with an interesting feature of the private, every-day life of the early founders and inhabitants of the place.



DOVE-COT TOWER, CODNOR CASTLE, DERBYSHIRE.

The keeping of doves was so extensively followed in the middle ages, that a house or "cot," for their preservation, became a distinct adjunct to the household arrangements of the humblest as well as of the most lordly dwelling. Those, however, which belonged to the poor have mostly perished, and with the changing spirit of the age, the practice itself has, with them, almost passed away; but those which belonged to the feudal castle, built, as they mostly are, of stone, remain to this day in a state of perfect preservation. The midland counties contain many good examples, but perhaps the one at Westonlarge, in Kent, and that at Codnor, shown in our cut, may be taken as the finest specimens These dove-cots were usually circular in form, of the length [illegible] more feet, neatly and strongly built of "ashler work," and fitted in the interior with parallel ranges of nest chambers for the accommodation of the birds.

Codnor is beautifully situated in the eastern part of Derbyshire, about nine miles from Derby, and two from Ripley. The castle, which was built in the early part of the thirteenth century, is now a mass of ruins. Richard de Grey, in the early part of the thirteenth century, had his chief seat here. In the 26th Edward III., the Lord Grey, of Codnor, was joined in commission with Wm. D'Eincourt, to command all the knights in Derbyshire and Nottinghamshire, in case of an invasion. In the 3rd Henry V., the king sent the Lord Grey, of Codnor, to bring to England, Henry, the son of Hotspur, from Scotland. Henry, the last of the family, it is said, was much devoted to chemistry, and obtained a license for the transmutation of metals. Dying in the reign of Henry VIII., he left part of his lands to his two natural sons, Richard and Henry, the remainder of his estates went to his aunt Elizabeth, who was married to Sir John Zouch, younger son of William Lord Zouch, of Harringworth. Codnor remained in the hands of the Zouches until 1622, when it was sold, and the family left the kingdom. Sir Keynshen Master, who resided here in 1712, is supposed to have been the last inhabitant. The castle and lands now belong to the celebrated Butterley Company, who in prosecuting their operations for getting iron ore, have undermined the ruins in many places, so that in a few years this, like many other of our most interesting relics of former ages, will be swept away from the face of the earth, and its site only known by tradition.

SCULPTURE.—"LOVE TRIUMPHANT."

This beautifully classic group in marble, by Mr. P. Mac Dowell, A., is one of the finest specimens of British sculpture produced for many a year. It has been executed for that munificent patron of art, Mr. Wentworth Beaumont, and will form the gem of his splendid collection. The composition is very felicitous: two figures, a youth and a maiden, support, on their shoulders, the boy Cupid; the march of the two supporters is bold and spirited, and their varied expression excellent, as they look up to the archer-boy, whose playful smile, whilst he bears the torch in triumph, is truly charming. The head of the female is exquisite, and has few parallels in the exhibition. In conception, expression, and finish, the group is not surpassed; and it goes far to redeem the character of this year's exhibition of sculpture, in which the busts alone are nearly two-thirds of the whole collection.

BIRMINGHAM ELECTION.

The Birmingham election terminated on Saturday last in the election of Mr. Spooner, the Conservative candidate, by a large majority.

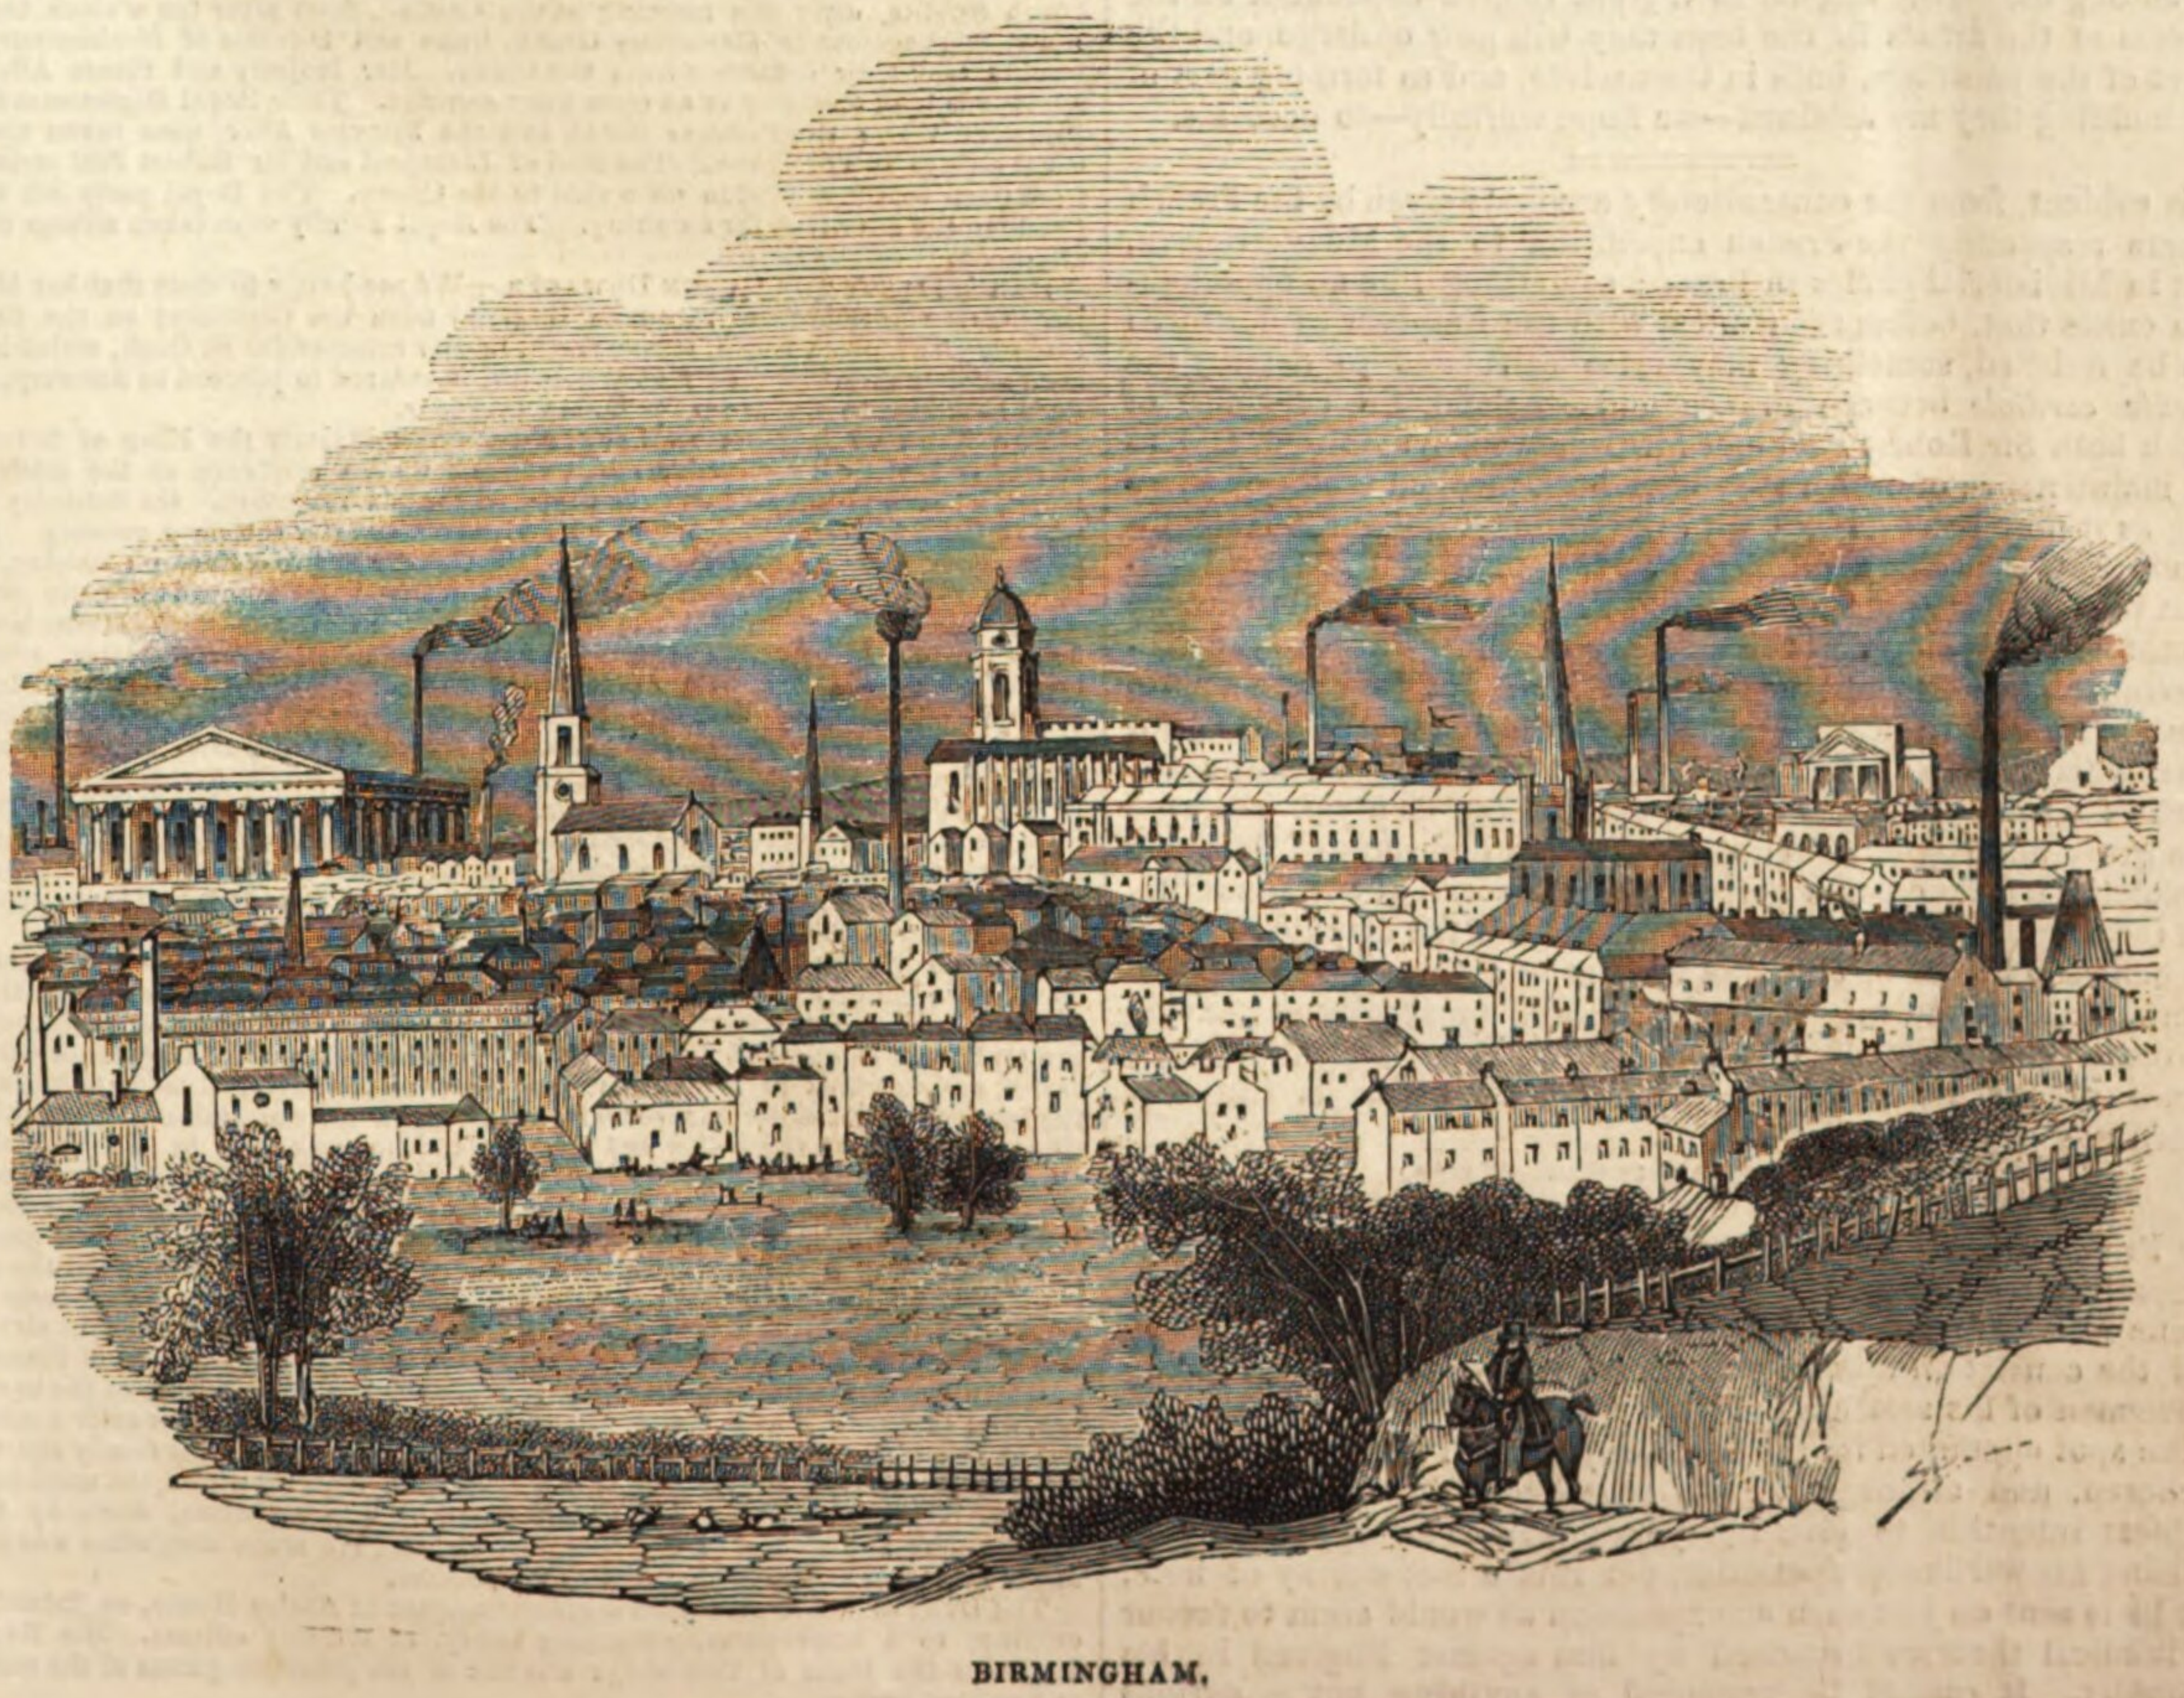
The numbers were on Monday officially declared by the Mayor to be as follows:—For Mr. Spooner, 2095; for Mr. W. Scholefield, 1735; for Mr. Sturge, 346. Majority for Mr. Spooner over Mr. Scholefield, 360; majority for Mr. Spooner over Mr. Sturge, 1749; majority for Mr. Spooner over both Mr. Scholefield and Mr. Sturge, 14. Mr. Spooner having been declared duly elected, that gentleman came forward and returned thanks. He said he did not go to Parliament to serve any party, nor to truckle to any Minister. (Cheers.) He would neither be a noisy Oppositionist, nor an over-zealous, talkative Government supporter. Mr. Spooner, after stating that he should not consider himself as the representative of a party, but the representative of all parties and all interests in the borough, concluded by expressing his thanks to the ladies of Birmingham, by whom he had been so efficiently supported. On sitting down, he was loudly applauded.—Mr. Sturge, in returning thanks, said he did not regret that he had stood by his pledge, and given the electors the opportunity of voting either for or against him.—Mr. Beale addressed the electors on the part of Mr. W. Scholefield, who was not present.

At the general election for 1841, the numbers were:—Muntz, 2175; Scholefield, 1963; Spooner, 1825.

Birmingham, with its numerous steam-engine chimneys, and a portion of its pleasant environs, are represented in our engraving. The town lies nearly in the middle of England, and was once surrounded with gardens, which, however, are fast diminishing from the rapid increase of buildings. As a seat of industry and the simpler mechanical arts, Birmingham may date its prosperity from the time of the Restoration. It has few edifices, either public or private, of gerat antiquity; nor has it been the scene of any important historical events. From the nature of its staple employments, it lay till lately under the stigma of blackness and dirt; but the improved processes and the great change in the nature of its manufactures, with the excellent arrangements of the Commissioners of the Street Acts, tend, especially in the newer parts, to remove these grounds of reproach. Its general aspect is that of a place suddealy and greatly improved; the streets lately erected or altered are wide, and the buildings are good. Many of the public edifices are substantially built, in a style highly creditable to the taste of the people. The magnificent new Town Hall, shown to the left of the view, is one of the finest structures of the kind in the kingdom. It is of the Corinthian order, its proportions being taken from the Temple of Jupiter Stator, at Rome. The exterior is of grey Anglesea marble: the extreme length of the building being 166 feet, breadth 104 feet, and height 83 feet. Two of the principal churches are St. Martin's, with a lofty and well-proportioned spire; and St. Philip's, adorned with an enriched tower, surmounted by a dome.

The denomination of "the toy-shop of Europe," given to Birmingham by Burke, was correct at the time; but the extensive application of powerful mechanical forces has now raised the staple productions of the place.

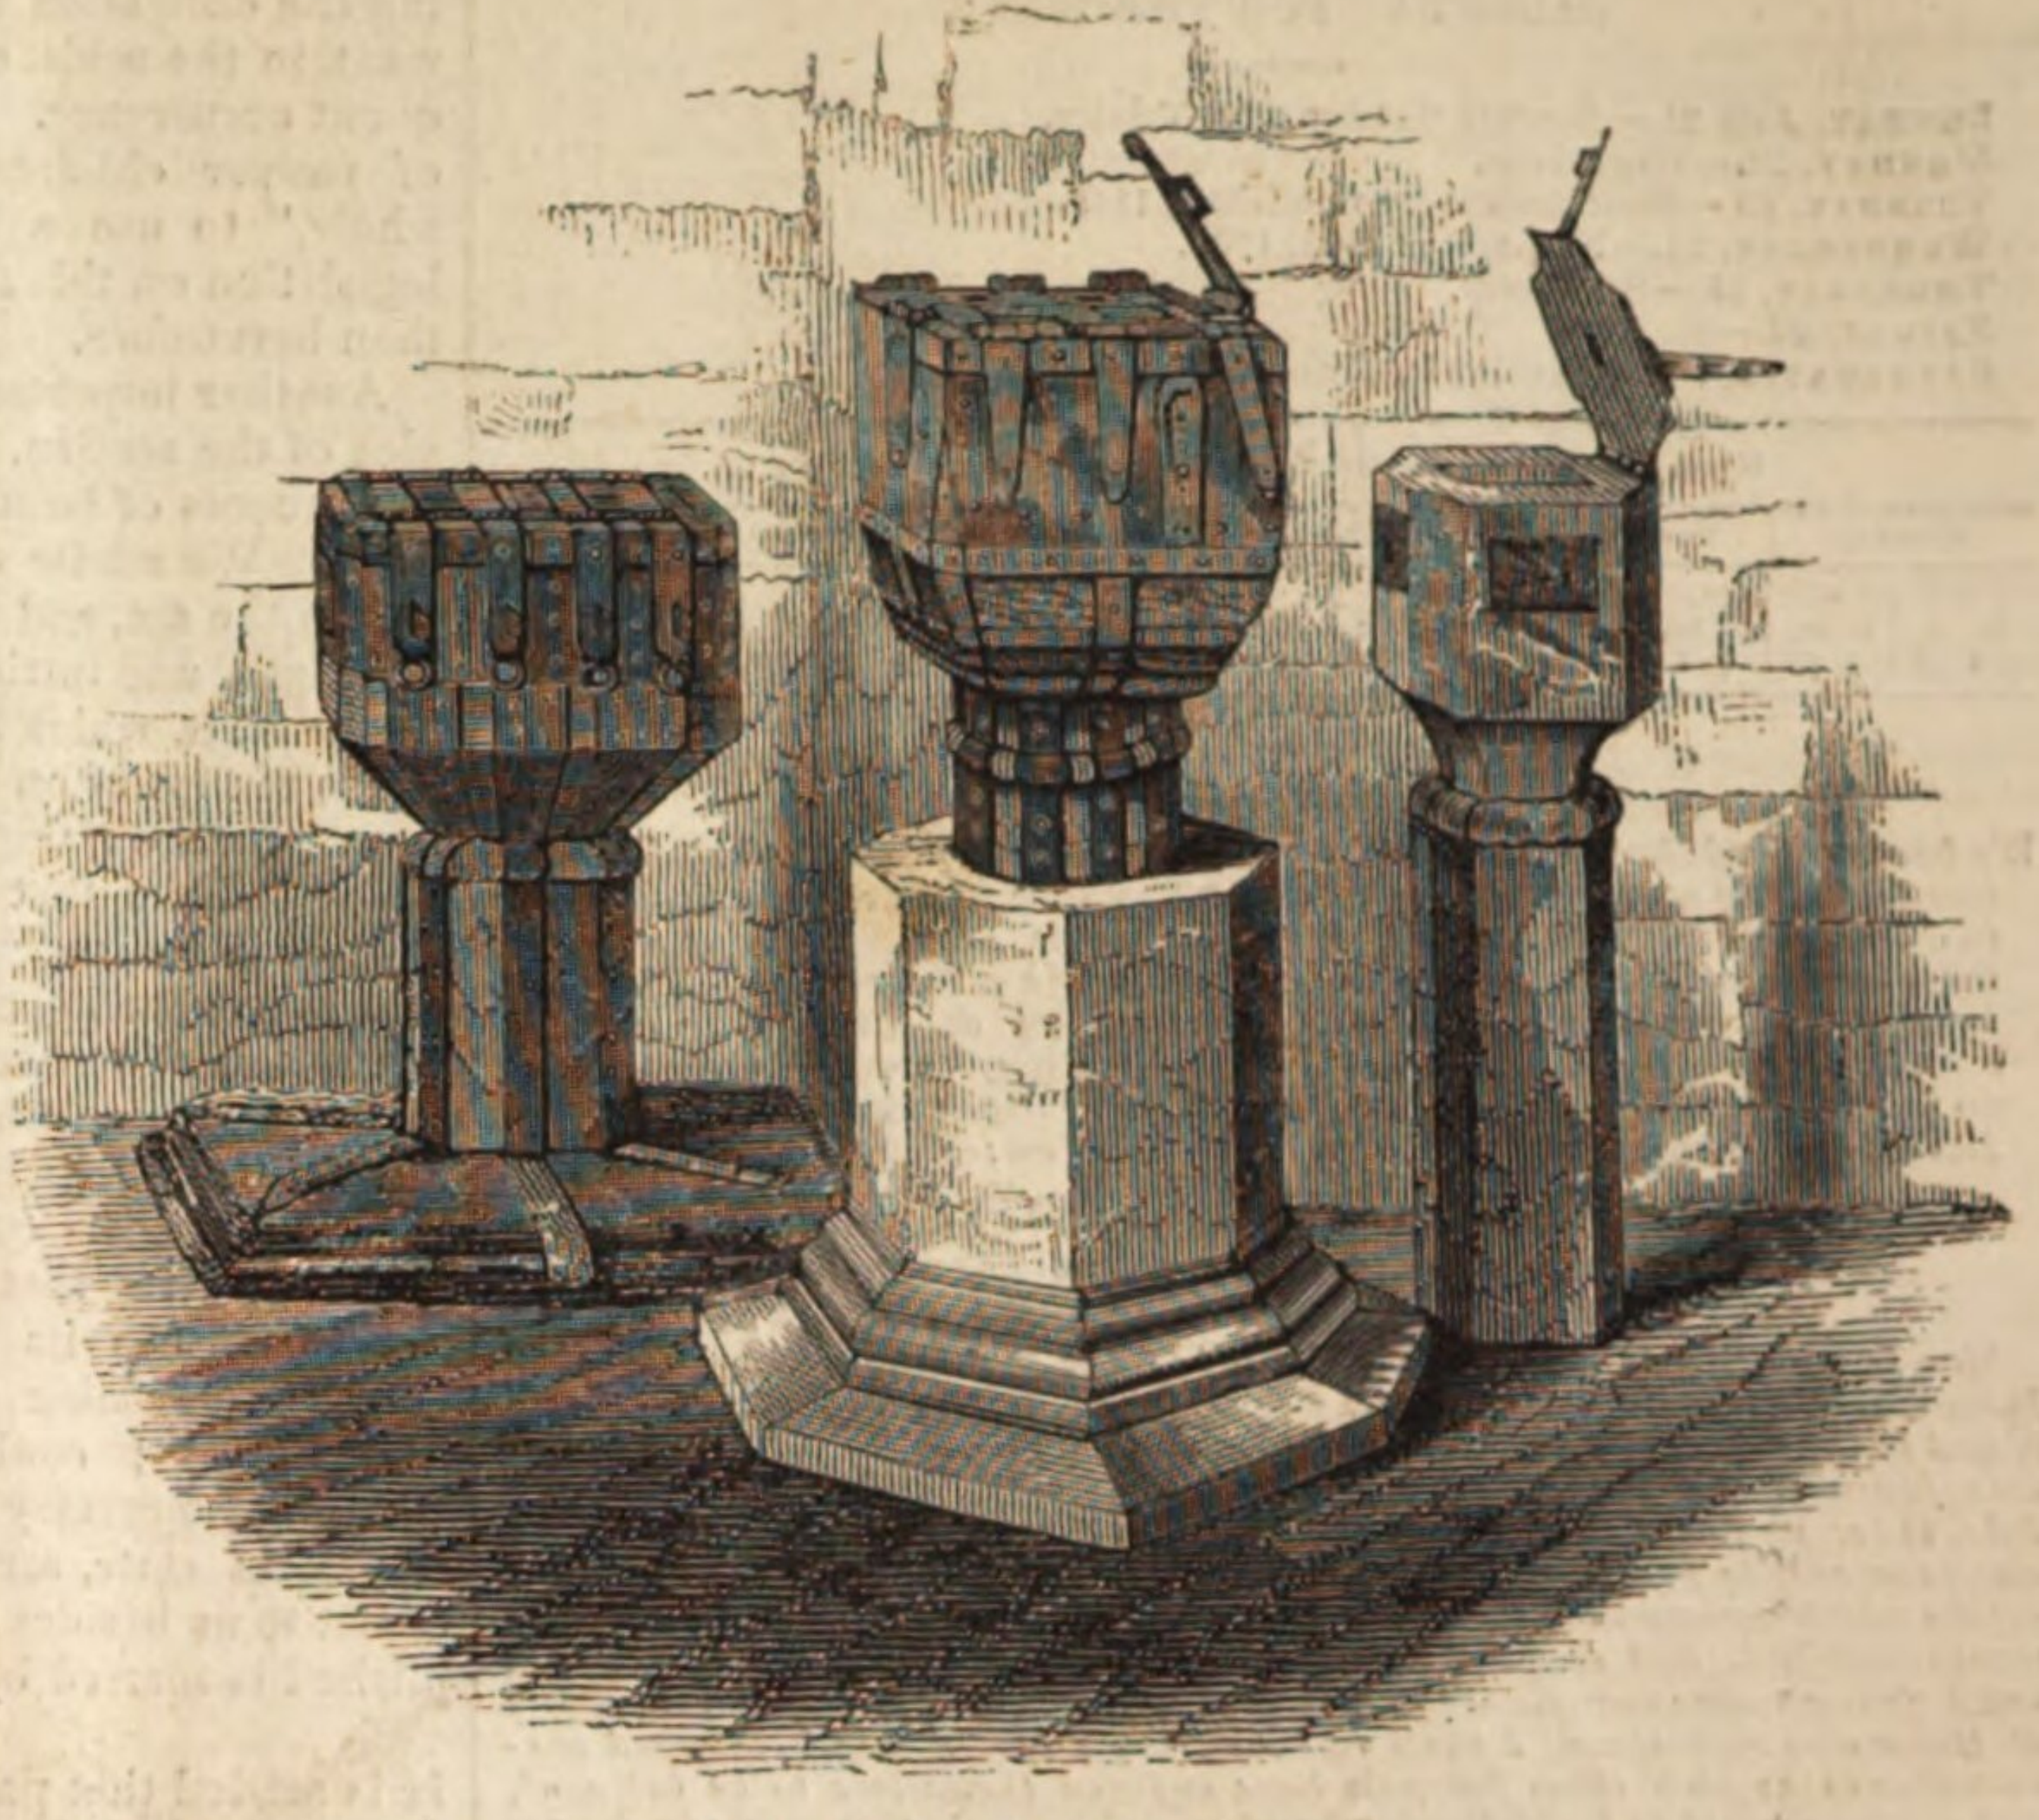
The elective franchise, which has just been exercised at Birmingham, was only conferred upon the town by the late Reform Bill: and, under the still more recent Municipal Corporation Act, has been changed the simple form of government which existed when Birmingham was an obscure village.



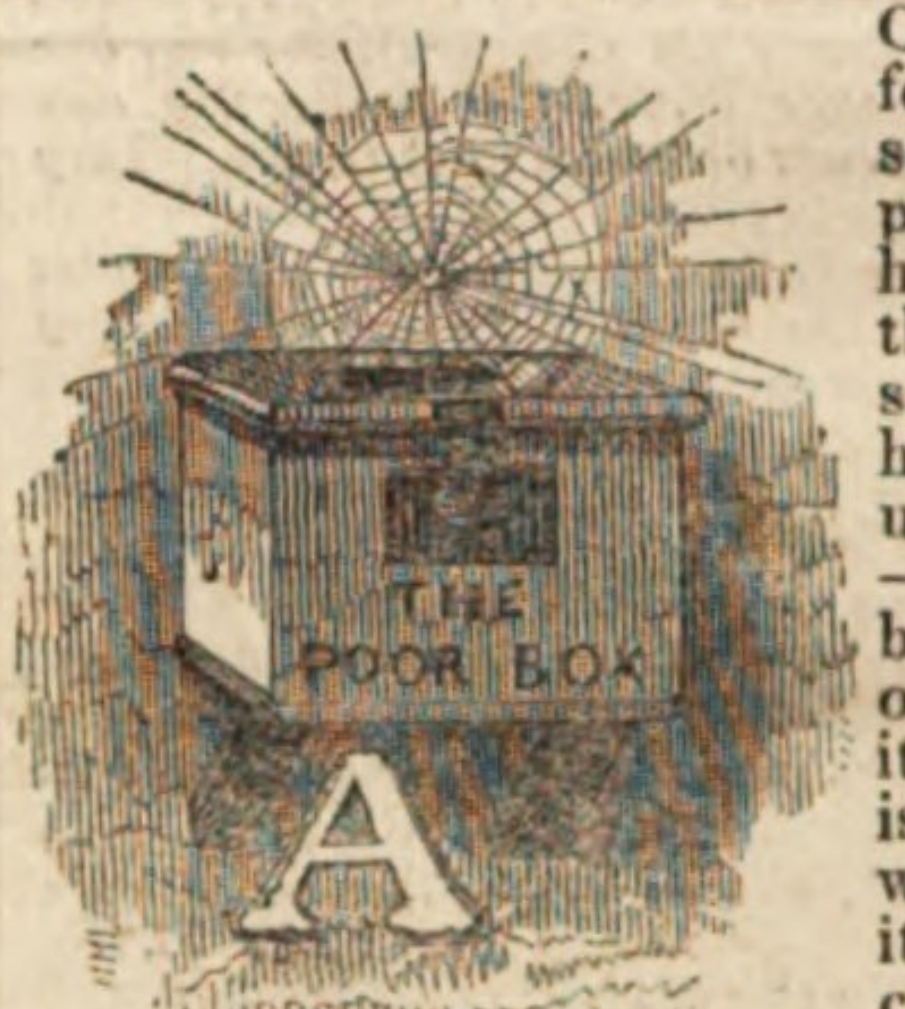
BIRMINGHAM.

THE CHURCH POOR'S BOX.

The poor man's box is there too: if ye find anything
Besides the posy, and that half rubbed out too,
For fear it should awaken too much charity,
Give it to pious uses——.—BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER.

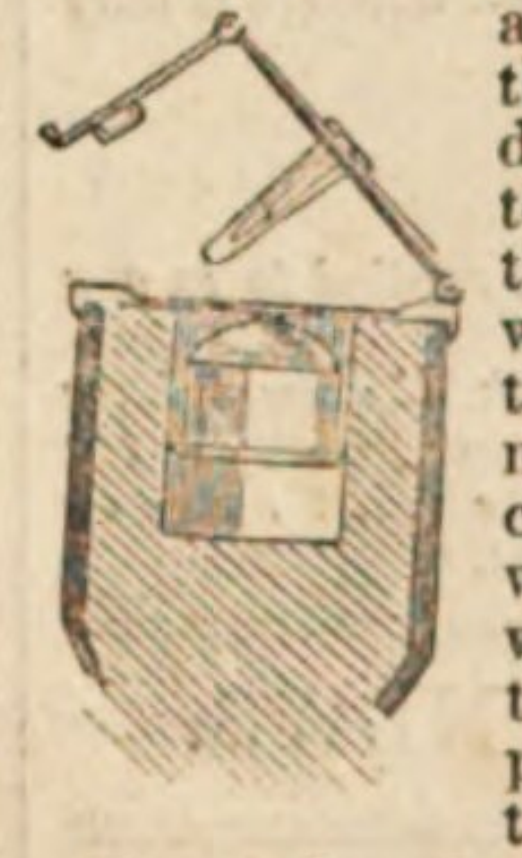


POOR'S BOXES IN CHURCHES.



A CHURCH POOR'S Box is now almost a forgotten piece of antiquity. We have still Poor's Boxes in our prisons and police-courts; but charity seems to have fled from our churches, for there they appear to be considered unnecessary articles. Indeed, as if to show how strangely custom has perverted its use, its very name has become changed—the rich "Poor's Box" of former ages being now abbreviated to a "Poor Box" only. It has no longer a genitive case: it belongs not to the poor, except as it is poor itself. The large cobweb with which the satire of Hogarth has clogged it up, tells not more plainly its neglected condition than does the omission of that single letter in its designation, which time and truth have alike established. It is poor indeed!—starved in neglected holes and corners. But it is not entirely so Hiding in some obscure village church, it may still be found among ancient relics and forgotten lumber; or, revived by some worthy antiquary, it may re-appear in the church-porch, and wait patiently for charity til neglect shall again cover it with dust, and be once more forgotten.

We have engraved some of these Poor's Boxes that have survived the changes of three or four centuries. They are from three neighbouring churches in a secluded part of Norfolk, (a county rich in ecclesiastical remains,) where they may be said to have been discovered a few years since by J. A. Repton, Esq., by whom an account was transmitted to the Antiquarian Society. The central chest, mounted on an octagonal stone pedestal, is from the Church of Cawston, and is probably as old as the church itself, which was built between the years 1385 and 1414. The one on the left hand is from Loddon Church, built about 1495; and the other, of about the same date, is from the Church at Wickmere. From the substantial manner in which these boxes are made, being massive wooden structures, strongly bound and secured with iron plates, it would seem that the amount deposited in them in those days, for the use of the poor, was oftentimes so considerable as to render such precautions necessary against robbery; for, doubtless, there were knaves in the land then as now, who would not scruple to plunder even the Poor's Box, if the booty was sufficiently tempting. We may also judge from the number of the keys (the Cawston box having places for three, of which it is supposed two were for the churchwardens, the other for the clergyman,) that even the officials might be tempted to go astray. Besides these precautions, there is yet another in this Cawston-box, which we may show by a section of the interior; where an inverted cup, suspended from the lid, allows the alms to glide over to the receptacle below, but prevents their abstraction through the money-hole at the top.



Formerly, the Poor's Box was to be found in every cathedral, church, chapel, or meeting-house, where the principles of Christianity were taught, and the duties of man to man enjoined upon all. There, where charity was preached and its lessons illustrated by Holy Writ, was the Poor's Box affixed, that the act might wait upon the will; that they whose hearts had been moved by the preacher's discourse, and who felt the desire to benefit their poorer brethren, might do so at once humbly and religiously. And on the Continent it still retains its place in the cathedrals, the "tronc" being placed frequently in several parts of the church, with inscriptions over it in three or four languages, stating to what use the alms will be applied—sometimes for the poor generally, sometimes for particular charities, to which is mostly added some text from Scripture, appealing to the feelings or religion of the visitors.

But the Poor's Box is now banished from our churches, modern refinement having substituted for it the glaring silver plate, which once a month, or on the occasion of a "charity sermon" (for it is only on these rare occasions it makes its appearance), stands boldly in the way of all who leave the church, or appeals still more strongly to their vanity in a pompous walk, or triumph, from pew to pew. And there also stands the beadle in his scarlet and gold, now bowing to the guinea dropped from the perfumed glove of the "carriage lady;" now hastening to remove the halfpence (the "widow's mite," perhaps the only contribution of true charity), because the copper sullies the lustre of the more patrician coin. There is little charity in these gold and silver offerings. Pride and ostentation there is much; and for these the old and unobtrusive Poor's Box is sacrificed. The cause of the poor may not therefore be injured; and perhaps they by whom this change has been introduced, studying human nature as it is rather than as it ought to be, have judged wisely in enlisting Pride and Vanity in a cause which Charity is not alone sufficient to secure. But we would fain hope otherwise. A better spirit is now abroad; and as the false sympathy with crime and depravity, which has retained the Poor's Box longer in our prisons than our churches, becomes exposed, our charity and sympathies will become more strongly directed to the cause of poverty. The Poor's Box may then regain its place in church, and we trust it will then lose its satirical title of Poor Box.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We have received three letters, calling our attention to two Kentish journals impugning the accuracy of our statements relative to Dover and Folkestone, in connexion with the transmission of the Indian Mail. We have referred these letters and the statements in question to the artist commissioned by us to execute the illustrations and the accompanying details; and we have received from him the following letter in explanation. For ourselves, we have no partiality in the matter; but for its associations and historic interest, Dover is not surpassed by any town in the kingdom:—

DOVER versus FOLKESTONE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

15*th July*, 1844.

Sir—In reference to the illustrated report of the "Progress of the Overland Indian Mail," which appeared in the Illustrated London News of July 6, and to the reflections which have been cast on its accuracy by those respectable journals the Dover Chronicle and the Dover Telegraph, of the 13*th July, it becomes my duty, both to yourself and the public, to state that I am alone responsible for the truth of the drawings, and for the facts on which the article which accompanies them are founded. I made the sketcees* from the scenes described, and supplied the information for the letter-press. But, to avoid giving undue importance to a subject of local rivalry between the ports of Dover and Folkestone, I shall refrain from noticing the ill-tempered personalities into which those journals have suffered themselves to be betrayed, and confine myself to the following brief and undeniable statements in answer to the insinuations which they have thought proper to make against your own veracity and the independence of the South Eastern Railway Company.

First, That neither the South-Eastern Company, its chairman, nor any one of its members servants, or friends, had, either directly or indirectly, any concern in the suggestion or execution of the cuts or notes in question. They were, from first to last, wholly mine.

Second, That the article connected with the Folkestone cuts distinctly states that it is the abstract Indian Mail, containing the heads of its more important information, which is and ever has been, expressed from Boulogne through the port of Folkestone.

Third, That the Indian Mail itself has been landed at Folkestone, although its ordinary route has been through Dover.

Fourth, That the Princess Mary steamer has performed the passage between Folkestone and Boulogne in one hour and fifty-seven minutes; your statement being "within two hours."

I have only now to regret that any misapprehension should have existed on these points.

I have the honour to be, Sir, your faithful servant,
11, Bouverie-street, Fleet-street. Stephen Sly.

The tale of "'Fitz-stephen" will be resumed in our next.

"R. G.," Charlotte-street, Islington.—Not at present.

We have received a long letter, dated from Haydock Lodge, which is illegible.

"An Old Inhabitant of St. Giles's," complains that the clock of the parish church is neither lighted with gas nor at present strikes the hours and quarters.

The Scenes in Dublin and its Environs reached us much too late to be available.

"I. B.," Dublin, is thanked for his sketch for which we have not room.

"An Admirer," Guisborough.—The subject is not of present interest.

"Philanthropos," Bath, wishes to ascertain the dimensions of the Hellespont from the Bermudas, engraved in a late Number.

"An Enquirer," Passage, is recommended to be cautious of foreign loans and lotteries.

"X. Y. Z.," Belper.—The promised engraving of the Chatsworth Conservatory will appear shortly.

"L. M."—The Treatise on Navigation, published by the Useful Knowledge Society.

"R. W. P.," Maidstone, should write to Mr. J. Gilbert, Blackheath.

"J. Stevenson," Bytown, Canada, should send us a subject of more popular interest for engraving.

"R. H."—The church shall appear shortly.

"C. T. P.," Holborn.—We do not know.

"J. O.," Tewkesbury.—The work was noticed in our last Number.

"E. T.," Leeds.—Leigh's and Mogg's are fair Pictures of London.

"C. S.," Lyme Regis.— We have not room.

"A Subscriber."—The person who hires the gig is liable for all damage it may receive while in his possession.

"Voltus" may republish the Music.

"Fair Play."—No.

"A. B.," must reside in the parish a week.

Several communications not answered in this Number will be replied to in our next.

Chapel Royal, St. James's.—In our Journal of last week, it should have been stated that the end gallery is occupied by the Royal Family; the central pew by her Majesty and Prince Albert; that on the right hand by the Queen Dowager, and on the left by the Duchess of Kent.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 20, 1844.

At the very time the question of the Slave-trade was brought under the notice of the Legislature, and as if to illustrate the working of the whole system, have arrived accounts of the state of the island of Cuba, which speak "trumpet-tongued" as to the political and social misery it produces. The slaves of that island, far more numerous than their inhuman masters, have attempted to rise; and though the planters and the white inhabitants have escaped the doom that overtook the French in St. Domingo, they are still in the most imminent danger. Both sides seem to have passed that point at which reconciliation is possible: henceforth there must be inextinguishable hatred between them. The masters cannot trust, the slaves will not forgive. On the mere suspicion in some cases, on the slenderest proof in others, the most atrocious cruelties have been perpetrated on the blacks. The details read like a bloody page torn from the barbarous annals of the past, and transferred by the dark necromancy of man's depravity, to the present times; they thrust themselves into notice among the trivialities of our everyday life, like monstrous things of whose like the world has read, but it was hoped had forgotten—forgotten so completely, that their recurrence seemed an impossibility. Too well are we taught that it is not so. The worst cruelties of the past have been revived in their worst forms in the present; and that they should have done so is a terrible warning to those nations that yet retain among them the accursed thing. The Southern States of America have much to fear from this example, so near at hand; and to them the impressive warning addressed to Spain by Sir Robert Peel will but too well apply. No country ever continued in the practice of gross wrong and oppression but the victims were sooner or later terribly avenged, the very means taken to uphold the system only making it more unendurable.

The House of Commons continues its day sittings, and is getting through the heavy business of the session with tolerable rapidity. The Poor-law Bill is progressing through committee with but few alterations. It makes some changes in the existing law which will be hailed as improvements, though rather for the principle on which they are founded than for the extent of the ameliorations they effect. It is proposed to establish some kind of places of refuge for the destitute and houseless poor, in which they will obtain temporary shelter, and, we presume, enough food to support life for a short space, till the law can provide something more permanent for them. This will at least prevent the recurrence of those shocking scenes which have been revealed in our Police-offices and Inquest-rooms, of human beings bandied about from officer to officer, and from parish to parish, each "legally" denying the obligation to relieve the outcast, till death by hunger and want, in the midst of the richest city in the world, was of too frequent occurrence. There is also some provision for the education of pauper children which deserves commendation. "On the whole," to use a favourite phrase of Sir J. Graham himself, his legislation on this subject has this session assumed a better tone than heretofore.

Another important measure produced amid the expiring struggles of the session, and yet incomplete, is an act for regulating the process of building in this gigantic and still extending metropolis. We advise all who are interested in brick and mortar to obtain the act, and endeavour to understand it—if they can, for in length and intricacy it rivals any Act of Parliament that ever preceded it, which is saying a great deal. It has been described by an authority on one side of the house as doing too much, and by another, on the other side, as effecting too little. Mr. Mackinnon states that the principal recommendations of the committee, as to ventilation and drainage, have been neglected, and that it has the appearance of having been framed for the especial advantage of builders by profession and surveyors. As the hon. gentleman is a Ministerialist, and has paid some attention to the subject, his allegation may have some weight. But its merits and defects are alike concealed by the impossibility of discussing it. We perceive that Trafalgar-square is to have a separate act to ensure its protection from injury, &c. The measure shows a laudable desire on the part of the Board of Woods and Forests; could it not go a step further, and provide the funds necessary to complete the works, which, in their present imperfect state, are a painful annoyance to the eye, and a discredit to us besides? The good effect of all that has been accomplished is marred by the want of finish in the rest.

It is settled that painting in Fresco is to be adopted as a portion of the decorations of the New Houses of Parliament; it is also fixed that the artists to be employed are British, which was sometime a doubt, as it was thought we had none among us capable of adopting a new style, or working in an unaccustomed method. The Commissioners have selected the artists, and have fixed on the subjects they are to send in; so far, the two exhibitions which have attracted so much public notice have produced a certain result. The manner in which the selection has been made is fair and open, and we trust there is at last a probability of something connected with the expenditure of the public money on works of art being concluded, without the suspicion of its being a job. The exhibition of Frescoes, Cartoons, and Sculpture, sent in according to the terms of the Commissioners, prior to the selection, has been this week opened to the free inspection of the public. It was looked forward to with some anxiety, as the previous exhibition of the Cartoons only went to prove a capability of drawing designs in a style suitable to the work; it gave no assurance of equal ability in executing the Frescoes themselves. An artist might succeed admirably in sketching an outline of grandeur and breadth on the canvass who would fail when he came to deal with the difficulties of colour joined to those of the material. The Exhibition contains some decided failures certainly, but enough also of skill in and mastery of the art to justify the commission in coming to its resolution. It is a revival of this kind of painting in England rather than an introduction of it, and should the mode be adopted by those who have the means of employing it, it may yet become an important branch of art among us. This will be in a great degree dependent on the success of the artists in the tests they will now undergo. and the effect of the paintings, both in themselves, and as forming part of the building they are destined—we hope worthily—to decorate.

It is evident, from the contradictory accounts given by the French papers respecting the French expedition to the Mediterranean, that in Ministerial circles in France something like an apprehension exists that, before the contest with the Emperor of Morocco can be finished, something may arise calculated to destroy the entente cordiale between France and England, the existence of which both Sir Robert Peel and M. Guizot have admitted, and to the maintenance of which they have both pledged themselves, so long as it may be consistent with the national honour. Notwithstanding the pacific assurances of M. Guizot, and the protestations in a similar spirit made by the French Ministerial press, we cannot help thinking that the presence of a large fleet in the Mediterranean is a circumstance calculated, if not to excite apprehension, at least to justify vigilance and caution on the part of our Government. We are not alarmists, but yet we regard the dispatch of a squadron under such circumstances as a fait accompli of a grave and significant character. Every day some of the Paris Ministerial papers contain a report of the recall of the squadron, and indulge in vague hints of a settlement of the dispute; but yet the bellicose Prince de Joinville was, at the date of the last accounts, before Oran with a large force, and apparently not having the most remote intention to put back. There is, indeed, little chance of his imitating the ancient feat, which is thus recorded:—

> "The King of France, with eighty thousand men, > Marched up the hill, and then—marched down again!"

The Prince is formed of sterner stuff than the warriors who make demonstrations without the intention of following them up; and no one who has read his late pamphlet can fail to be impressed with the conviction that he will court every opportunity of giving a specimen of his seamanship.

The spot appointed for the first essay of the Prince is singularly ill-chosen, and although we do not accuse M. Guizot of the slightest intention to give the young Prince an opportunity of realising his warlike propensities, yet it is a fact worthy of note, that he is sent on just such an expedition as would seem to favour the inimical theories broached by him against England in his pamphlet. It cannot be regarded as anything but a curious coincidence, to say the least, that when the Prince startled the world with his noble authorship, the hypothesis which he created was that of a war to be waged in the very seas whereon his squadron now rides. Ay, and more than this, Algiers was actually named in the paragraph in which he dwells upon the great results likely to arise for France should she have the opportunity of contesting the empire of the sea. These are the words of the pamphlet:—"Dans la Mediterranée nous regnerions en maitres, nous assurerions notre conquête d'Alger, ce vaste champ ouvert á notre commerce et á notre civilization;" and then the warlike writer proceeds to contend that Malta and Gibraltar do not afford sufficient means of supplying combustible materials for English steam vessels, and therefore he feels assured that France would be free to carry into effect all its projects in that quarter of the globe. In this instance the wish has indeed been "father to the thought," and whether by accident or from design, the Prince de Joinville is at this very moment in possession of all the appliances he desired to work out his destructive theory.

Placing entire reliance upon the declarations both of Sir R. Peel and M. Guizot, we yet assert that the state of things which has arisen ought not to be looked upon with indifference. We believe that the enlightened and sensible men of both France and England desire the continuance of peace, and are impressed with the belief that war is opposed alike to religion and to commercial prosperity, but yet it would not be absolute wisdom to look upon the dispatch of a French fleet to the Mediterranean with indifference. Our Government, we have reason to believe, are not so disposed, and already indications are perceptible of the rendezvous of a British fleet in the Bay of Gibraltar. Heaven forbid that hostilities with France should be imminent—we had almost said possible; but no political maxim appears to be sounder than that which urges preparation for war as the best means of preserving peace.

When it is considered that France at first disclaimed the idea of retaining Algiers, and that the British Cabinet of that day were satisfied with the explanation, it cannot fail to be remarked as somewhat singular that France should now run such risks for the retention of that colony, and that the Prince de Joinville should discuss the importance of preserving the fruits of the conquest. No secret, however, is now made of the fact that the English Government did not much admire the colonization of Algeria by France; and only last week Lord Aberdeen explained that his expression on the subject was not that he had no "objection" to urge, but that he had no "observation" to make.

However, this is only a secondary consideration at present; but we have felt it our duty to call attention to the maritime expedition which France has now fitted out, believing it to be the most important political event that has occurred for some years past. Not that England need fear war; they who commence the contest with her will have most need of apprehension; but it is of the utmost consequence that there should be "no mistake," as was the case in regard to the original occupation of Algiers, for which England was not prepared, and against which it has been found useless to remonstrate.

THE COURT AND HAUT TON.

On Saturday last her Majeaty and Prince Albert, accompanied by the Princess Royal, went to Adelaide Lodge in a pony carriage. Their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales and the Princess Alice were taken an airing in the morning in an open pony carriage. His Royal Highness Prince Albert visited her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent in the afternoon at her residence, Frogmore Lodge.

Windsor, Sunday.—This morning the Queen and Prince Albert, the Duchess of Kent, the ladies and gentlemen of the royal suite and the household, attended divine service at the private chapel in the Castle. The Hon. and Rev. C. Leslie Courtenay officiated. Her Majesty and Prince Albert walked this forenoon in the pleasure grounds of the Castle. Their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, the Princess Royal, and the Princess Alice, were taken airings in the morning.

Monday.—The Queen and Prince Albert, accompanied by the Princess Royal, took an airing this morning in an open pony carriage, in the pleasure grounds of the Castle. Their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales and the Princess Alice were taken a drive in an open carriage in the forenoon. His Royal Highness Prince Albert, attended by Col. Bouverie, Equerry in Waiting, inspected his regiment (the Scots Fusilier Guards) this morning in the Great Park. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent visited her Majesty today. Their Royal Highnesses the Hereditary Grand Duke and Duchess of Mecklenburgh Strelitz arrived at the Castle from town, on a visit to the Queen.

Tuesday.—The Queen and Prince Albert, accompanied by the Hereditary Grand Duke and Duchess of Mecklenburgh Strelitz, took an airing in an open pony carriage this morning. The illustrious party paid a visit to her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, at Frogmore Lodge.—Their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales and the Princess Alice were taken a drive in an open pony carriage in the forenoon. Her Royal Highness the Princess Royal was also taken an airing.—The Earl Delawarr arrived at the Castle on a visit to the Queen this forenoon.—The royal party left the Castle, for an airing, shortly before five o'clock this afternoon. The Queen, the Princess Royal, the Hereditary Grand Duchess of Mecklenburgh Strelitz, and the Countess of Mount Edgecumbe, lady in waiting, were in the first open pony carriage and four. The illustrious party returned to the Castle at half-past six o'clock.

Wednesday.—Her Hoyal Highness the Duchess of Kent visited the Queen and Prince Albert, and the Hereditary Grand Duke and Duchess of Mecklenburgh Strelitz, early this morning at the Castle. Soon after ten o'clock their Royal Highnesses the Hereditary Grand Duke and Duchess of Mecklenburgh Strelitz took their departure from the Castle. Her Majesty and Prince Albert afterwards took an airing in an open pony carriage. Their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, the Princess Royal, and the Princess Alice, were taken their usual airings this forenoon. The Earl of Liverpool and Sir Robert Peel arrived from town in the afternoon on a visit to the Queen. The Royal party left the Castle in the afternoon for an airing. The Royal Family were taken airings this afternoon.

Her Majesty the Queen Dowager.—We are happy to state that her Majesty Queen Adelaide will return to England from the Continent on the 23rd instant. The Black Eagle, steam-yacht, master cemmander B. Cook, which has been newly painted and fitted at Woolwich, is ordered to proceed to Antwerp, to be in readiness to bring over the Queen Dowager.

The King of Saxony in Liverpool.—His Majesty the King of Saxony arrived in Liverpool on Sunday last, and took up his residence at the Adelphi Hotel, where apartments had been prepared for his reception. On Saturday he was at Bangor, North Wales, and he arrived at Chester the same evening. He there resided at the Royal Hotel. He left Chester at five o'clock on Sunday, in two travelling carriages and four. He reached Birkenhead a little after seven o'clock, and crossed the river Mersey in the Mersey steam-boat. After leaving Liverpool, the King of Saxony went to Manchester, where he visited several mill and other establishments. His Majesty left Manchester for York. It is understood his Majesty, after visiting Leeds and York, will return to Liverpool, and afterwards proceed to Lancaster, Bowness, and Scotland, and that he will embark at Leith for Saxony on the 31st instant.

The Duke of Alencon.—The godfather of the young Duke d'Alençon (the infant son of the Duke and Duchess de Nemours) is his Majesty the King o Portugal, who appointed his ambassador at the court of Paris to be his proxyf The godmother is her Royal Highness the Duchess of Saxe Coburg Gotha, represented by her Royal Highness the Princess de Joinville.

The Marchioness of Londonderry's Dress Ball.—The Marchioness of Londonderry gave a grand fancy dress ball on Tuesday evening, at Holdernesse-house, which was honoured by the presence of their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester, and upwards of five hundred members of the principal noble families in the kingdom. In order to give increased effect to the entertainment, her ladyship requested all the ladies and gentlemen who took part in the Waverley Quadrille to attend in their respective costumes, in addition to which a new set, entitled the "Married Ladies' Quadrille," was arranged expressly for the occasion. The company began to arrive about ten o'clock. The company engaged in the Waverley Quadrille assembled in the picture gallery; and, upon the arrival of the royal family, marched in procession through the grand saloons of the mansion, returning to the gallery, where dancing commenced about eleven o'clock. The Waverley Quadrille was succeeded by that of the Queens of France, in which married ladies only took part. This was the great feature of the evening, and excited intense interest. Refreshments were served in the salle à manger at one o'clock, shortly after which the members of the royal family retired, but dancing wae resumed about two o'clock, and kept up with spirit until daybreak. Nothing could exceed the splendour of the costumes, worn by the Marchioness and several of her noble gnests, and the scene altogether was one of the most magnificent it is possible to conceive.

The Duke of Wellington gave a grand banquet at Apsley House, on Saturday evening, to a large party, exceeding thirty, of military officers. His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge was one of the principal guests of the noble and gallant host.

On Saturday last the Duke and Duchess of St. Alban's entertained at dinner, at Holly Lodge, the Duke and Duchess of Norfolk, Lord Edward and Lady Mary Howard, Duchess and Mdlle. De Coigny, Marquis of Granby, Lord and Lady Delamere and Captain and Miss Cholmondeley, Lord and Lady Morley, Lord and Lady Hawarden and Miss Maude, Mr. and Lady Gertrude Stanley, Miss Stanley, Lady Georgiana Cholmeley, Lady Mary Corbett, Mr. and Mrs. Stanley, &c.

The Duke of Wellington has issued cards for a splendid entertainment on the 31st inst., at Apsley House, to their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, Duchess of Gloucester, and the Hereditary Grand Duke and Grand Duchess of Mecklenburgh Strelitz.

The Dowager Duchess of Bedford gave another fête champêtre on Wednesday, at Campden Hill, which attracted a very numerous and fashionable company.

Her Majesty has appointed the Hon. Lucy Maria Kerr to be one of the Maids in Ordinary to her Majesty, in the room of the Hon. Harriet Lister.

Baroness Rothschild's Fete.—Baroness Rothschild gave a very delightful fête on Wednesday, at Gunnersbury Park, to above four hundred of the aristocracy, in addition to their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, and the Grand Duke and Grand Duchess of Mecklenburgh Strelitz. A concert, at which the leading artistes of the Italian Opera assisted, preceded the banquet, and at six o'clock their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge and the Hereditary Grand Duke and Grand Duchess of Mecklenburgh Strelitz, conducted by Baroness Rothschild and Baron Lionel Rothschild, entered the salle à manger, where a sumptuous repast awaited them. At the royal table covers were laid for about thirty personages. The pleasure grounds and gardens were all suitably prepared for the reception.

On Monday evening the Marquis of Salisbury was honoured by the presence of their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge at a grand entertainment given at the noble marquis's residence in Arlington-street. The sumptuous entertainment was magnificently served up in the banquetting room. The noble marquis cast open a splendid range of saloons for the reception of a numerous and brilliant circle of the élite of society. The Marchioness held a reception at a later period of the evening, which was attended by nearly four hundred members of the aristocracy.

On Tuesday, the Hon. S. Carew, M.P. for Waterford, was married at St. James's Church, Piccadilly, to Miss Katherine Emily Ann Phillips, danghter of George Richard Phillips, Esq., of Hill-street, Berkeley-square.

Marriages among the Aristocracy.—We hear that a marriage is on the tapis between the Earl of Mulgrave, only son of the Marquis and Marchioness of Normanby, and Miss Russell, niece to the Dowager Duchess of Cleveland. The alliance between Mr. Edward C. Kerrison, only son of Lieutenant-General Sir Edward Kerrison, Bart., M.P., and Lady Caroline Fox Strangways, youngest daughter of the Earl of Ilchester, and niece to the Marchioness of Lansdowne, is expected to be solemnized the week after next. The preliminaries have been arranged for a marriage between Mr. Cochrane and Miss Seymour, daughter of Rear-Admiral Sir G. Seymour, K.C.H., the newly-appointed Commander-in-Chief in the Pacific, and niece to the Countess of Euston and Lady Seaford. The ceremony is expected to take place before the departure of Sir George for his distant command at the end of next month.—We understand that a marriage is arranged between Viscount Loftus, eldest son of the Marquis of Ely, and the beautiful and accomplished Miss Jane Hope Vere, daughter of the late Mr. Hope Vere, of Craigie-hall and Blackwood, N.B.

Sir Robert and Lady Peel received a distinguished party at dinner, on Saturday last, at their mansion in Whitehall Gardens.

Alexander Oswald, Esq., M.P. for Ayrshire, is about to lead to the hymeneal altar Lady Louisa Johnstone, widow of the late Sir Frederick Johnstone, Bart.

Mr. Van Amburgh has been exhibiting his trained animals at Windsor. A few days ago, pursuant to royal command, two beautiful cubs, a lion and lioness, were sent by him to the Castle, and shown to her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the Court, in her Majesty's drawing-room. The pets were very playful, and some of the attendants took them in their arms. There were present, besides her Majesty and the Prince, the Duchess of Kent, the Countess Josephine Wratislaw, Viscountess Jocelyn, Lady Anna Maria Dawson, the Hon. Misses Liddell and Paget, the Earl of Morton, Capt. the Hon. Nelson Hood, &c.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

New Church at Greenwich.—A new church, to be dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, is about to be erected at Greenwich. The site is chosen, and the ground, nearly an acre, which is gratuitously presented for the purpose by the Drake family, is situate between the Upper-road, Deptford, and Tanner's-hill, Greenwich.

The Earl of Cardigan has subscribed the sum of £100 towards a new church at East Ardsley, near Wakefield.

Cambridge, July 13.—The following have been elected afternoon preachers at Great St. Mary's:—1844: October, the Hulsean Lecturer; November, the Rev. Theyre T. Smith, Queen's College; December, the Rev. D. Moore, Catherine Hall; 1845: January, the Rev. Dr. Robinson, Trinity College; February, the Rev. Dr. Mill, Trinity College; March, the Rev. T. Worsley, master of Downing; April, the Hulsean Lecturer; May, the Rev. C. S. Bird, Trinity College. The following appointment has taken place:—The Hon. and Rev. Arthur Saville, M.A., of Trinity College, to the curacy of St. Nicholas, Warwick.

Ordination.—An ordination will be held on Sunday, July 21, by the Lord Bishop of Worcester, at Worcester.

Oxford, July 13.—We understand that it is intended to form an Oxford Society, for the promotion of the Fine Arts, in connection with the Randolph and Taylor Galleries, so as to establish an institution for the encouragement of that study. By the demise of Dr. Hoskins, rector of Appleton, Berks, for forty-two years, that living has become vacant; and by the death of the Rev. R. Williams, of Great Houghton, Northamptonshire, for thirty-nine years, this rectory is also vacant. Both of them are in the gift of the President and Fellows of Magdalen College.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

Further Metropolitan Improvements.—The building to be called New Exeter 'Change is just completed. It consists of ten shops, with dwellings attached, together with spacious rooms over the lobby entrance. This new Exchange runs from North Wellington-street into Catherine-street, in the Strand, and will certainly add not a little to the improvements which have recently been made in that neighbourhood. The arabesque decorations which ornament the shop fronts, and the entrance, are exceedingly tasteful. It is intended that the shops shall be let for the sale of cutlery and articles for the toilet. A bill has been introduced into the House of Commons which provides that Trafalgar-square, and all the works now being, or which may be hereafter erected thereon, shall be vested in the Queen, her successors and heirs, as part and parcel of the hereditary possessions and revenues of her Majesty, in right of her Crown. Piccadilly is to be widened. That portion of the Green Park to be appropriated to the purpose is to be severed from the parish of St. Martin-in-the-Fields and annexed to that of St. George, Hanover-square. The whole of Piccadilly, between Bolton-street and Park-lane, when so widened and improved, is to be kept in repair at the expense of the last-mentioned parish.

Coffee and Eating House Keepers' Association.—Monday evening the annual general meeting of the members of the above association, established for the purpose of relieving coffee and eating-house keepers, when in distressed circumstances, was held at Anderton's Hotel, Fleet-street, and was well attended. The report of the committee stated that they continued to receive fresh proofs of the esteem in which the association was held by the members of their body resident in London. During the year there had been an increase in the amount and number of subscriptions, an increase much greater than any previous year of the society's existence. Since the last meeting £200 had been added to the sum invested in the funds, making the total sum now amount to £1400. The committee had received but one application for pecuniary assistance, and having found the applicant eligible, he was unanimously placed upon the funds as a pensioner.

Parish of St. Mary, Newington.—Church Rates.—On Wednesday the question regarding the payment of a salary to the Rev. Mr. Ainslie, for his services as Chaplain to the Parish Workhouse, was finally decided, and the poll closed leaving a considerable majority against the rate, there being for it, 721, against it. 1356. The church-rate party were consequently defeated by the majority of 635.

Royal Dispensary for Diseases of the Ear.—On Tuesday last the twenty-eighth general annual meeting of this charity was held at the Dispensary, the Marquis of Exeter, K.G., in the chair. The report gave a favourable account of the affairs of the institution, and briefly recapitulated the chief points in its history. From this it appears that the number of patients cured or relieved since its establishment, in 1816, is upwards of 13,850, including upwards of 700 cases of nervous deafness. Thanks were voted to several distinguished persons for their support of the charity, and to Sir Matthew John Tierney, Bart., the physician, and John Harrison Curtis, Esq., the surgeon, for the performance of their respective duties.

Royal South London Floricultural Society.—On Wednesday the second flower show of the season was held in the Surrey Zoological Gardens. The flowers, &c., were arranged in a very tasteful manner, beneath marquees of immense length. The display of picotees, carnations, fuschias, cut flowers, and miscellaneous plants, were equal to those of any previous exhibition. Seventy-four prizes, consisting of gold and silver medals, a prize in money, offered by J. Coppock, Esq., together with the Linnæan medal, given by W. T. Iliff, Esq., were awarded to the best exhibitors. The gardens throughout the day were thronged with visitors. The boys of the Royal Military Asylum, with their juvenile band, were present, and attracted much attention, and contributed materially to enliven the scene by the performance of a variety of overtures and popular airs.

The Fine Arts.—In addition to the order given to the six artists for fresco paintings, the Royal Commission of Fine Arts have offered three premiums of £200 each to the artists who shall furnish specimens of cartoon drawing and fresco painting, which shall respectively be deemed worthy of one of the said premiums by judges to be appointed to decide on the relative merit of the works. Also three premiums of £500 each, three premiums of £300 each, and three premiums of £200 each, to the artists who shall furnish oil-paintings for the decoration of the New Palace at Westminster, which shall be deemed worthy of one or the other of the said premiums, by judges to be appointed to decide on the relative merits of the works. The names of the artists are not required to be concealed.

Mortality in the Metropolis.—The number of deaths within the metropolis, for the week ending Saturday, the 13th inst., amounted to 831. Of that number 438 deaths were of persons under 15 years of age, 259 between 15 and 60, and 133 from 60 upwards. The number of females who died during the week was 424. and of males 407. The mean temperature was 61.5 deg.

The late Attempt at Murder in Holborn.—Wednesday, upon inquiring at St Bartholomew's Hospital as to the state of Mr. Smith, the gunmaker, of Holborn, who was wounded in the back by a pistol-shot, fired at him by the Hon. W. Touchet, the reporter was informed that Mr. Smith was progressing favourably, and strong hopes are entertained that he will ultimately recover. On Monday, the piece of coat which was carried into the wound by the bullet forced itself out. The bullet has not yet been discovered, but it is supposed by the medical gentlemen who attend him that it is lodged between the fangs of the vertebræ, having been stopped there in its progress, and prevented from injuring the spinal cord. Lord Audley and the family of the Hon. W. Touchet are most solicitous about the progress to convalescence of Mr. Smith.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The implied course of the Government in reference to betting on horse-races could not have been made known at a more convenient season. "Book-making," "betting-round," "P. P. betting," and all and singular such devices, are to have their swing—ample scope and run enough; and "let every man take care of himself," as a gallant member of Tattersall's said to the committee. Just such counsel was given by the donkey to the chickens when he danced among the hencoops. The gallant captain is in a condition to weather the pirates, but we should be glad to know how is our public to protect itself? Are any precautions taken that the subscribers to Tattersall's (a society formed for the especial purpose of betting, and one which gives the bias to the investment of vast ventures on the turf,) shall be parties of substantive respectability—of money as well as manners?—the two items which now-a-days constitute the man, and without both of which he is "but half made up." No such thing. There are individuals there, as plenty as blackberries, who have not paid the half—the quarter—the sixteenth—hardly a fractional portion of their losses in the ring. It is not enough that their creditors countenance their defaults: there they are where betters from all quarters of the globe "most do congregate," and the style in which they may be seen "picking up" a country gentleman now and then, would put to the blush Goldsmith's green spectacle merchant. If the system of general speculation on the issues of the turf is to be comforted by state patronage, at least we have a right to expect that some place shall exist, appropriated to its details, where gentlemen may venture as among their fellows, instead of trusting themselves among a company of cut-purses. This may seem harsh language, but it is the truth. There are among the existing members of that society persons who cast shame upon an association, whose sole bond of confederacy is honour. Let us believe the time of reform at Tattersall's is not remote. This latter confidence, too, may be more extended than in its application to men and manners. Surely some small endowment of necessaries might most conveniently be made upon the Subscription Room. On Thursday afternoon it was without information about the results of Wednesday's racing at Liverpool, or any news touching the state of the odds. A return list, in instances such as that, ought to be forwarded by express (the rail is express master-general), and posted up the moment of its arrival. Every appliance of the turf comes twenty-one years after it is needed.

The Sheet Calendar of the 16th instant, gave us such a Derby and Oaks entry for 1846, as never entered the most distempered dreams of our forefathers: there are 196 subscribers to the former, and 140 to the latter; thus, the Derby has much more than doubled in fifteen years, and the Oaks has improved in the same proportion. What betting round we shall have if the Home Secretary don't meddle with it! No doubt a hundred horses will be backed for the Derby of 1846, so that at 70 to 1 against every one of the lot, there would be a fortune for the book maker that laid against the whole party to a hundred pounds. The speculation during the week, save that upon the Liverpool events, was not worth the name of betting. Nothing was done on Thursday at the Corner, save a few offers to back Alice Hawthorn for the Goodwood Cup, at 2 to 1. And till Goodwood business is introduced in earnest, it will be dull times for the industrious investor of loose cash on loose consequences.

TATTERSALL'S.

Monday.—One of the events on which we have given a table of the prices this afternoon, will have been decided ere this paper will have gone to press; we need, therefore, only mention that the actual betting on it was confined to four or five hands, and that three of them, namely, The Castor, The Poor Soldier, and The British Yeoman, belong to John Scott's masters, a strong symptom of monopoly, and calculated to lead the public astray as to which was the real Simon Pure. The Goodwood Stakes betting was flat, and with no other result than to raise Franchise a point or two on last week's market. The chief feature of the day's business was the fall of Alice Hawthorn to 2 to 1, with plenty of layers, and the advance of the 'Squire and Robert de Gorham to 8 to 1, both taken freely. Nothing fresh on the St. Leger.

Tewkesbury Races.—These races are fixed for Wednesday and Thursday next. The entries for the Produce Stakes are fourteen, including some of the first two-year olds of the day. In the Gloucestershire Stakes sixteen are entered, and excellent sport is anticipated in this race. Seven are entered for the Tradesmen and Innkeepers' Cup, and for the seven other races some very excellent horses have arrived. The course, from the late rains, is in beautiful order and presents such turf as but few places in England can boast of.

Eastern Yacht Club.—It is anticipated that a regatta, on an extensive scale, will be held in Harwich Harbour, towards the end of the ensuing month, under the auspices of the "Eastern Yacht Club," now about being formed.

The Royal Academy Club.—A great boat race amongst the gentlemen of the Royal Academy Club, for a pair of gold oars, will take place on Tuesday next, from Vauxhall to Putney-bridge.

Cricket.—On Monday the great match between the Marylebone Club, with Pilch, against the Northern Counties, with A. Mynn, Esq., was commenced, and as this was considered one of the most interesting matches of the season, the ground was crowded with spectators, and many of high rank and fashion, and all appeared to take a lively interest in the game. The following are the fields:—Marylebone Club—Sir F. Bathurst, Kynaston, Keate, Mills, and Taylor, Esqs., with Dean, Dorrington, Hillyer, Lillywhite, Pilch, and Sewell. Northern Counties—Elmhurst, Hartopp, Nethercote, Noyes, and Mynn, Esqs., with Butler, Brown, Clark, Fenner, Guy, and Tinlay. The Marylebone Club went in first, and obtained 97 runs. The Northern Counties then took to their batting, and got 105 runs, heading their opponents by 8 runs. The Marylebone Club took their second innings, and obtained 76 runs, leaving 68 runs for the opposite party to get, but who got only 55 runs, thus leaving the Marylebone Club the winners by 13 runs. The game was not concluded till Wednesday night.

The Shooting Season.—As the result of extensive inquiries throughout the north, we may state that prospects for the moors have not been better for the last seven years. The birds are very numerous, and the recent rains have proved exceedingly beneficial, coming as they did at the period of the young ones breaking the shell. We understand that most of the Perthshire moors are let, and the same is the case with our more Highland ones.—Northern (Inverness) Herald.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

The Earl of Haddington and the other Lords of the Admiralty visited Deptford Dockyard on Tuesday, and mustered the officers and men belonging to the establishment.

The Collingwood, 80, Captain H. Eden, bent sails and crossed topgallant-yards on Tuesday, and it is expected will leave Portsmouth Harbour for Spithead directly. She has a very fine set of men on board, to all appearance, both as respects their physical and sailor-like qualities. She will be ready for sea on the 25th instant.

The Queen, 110, Captain Martin, was taken into dock at Portsmouth on Monday, all standing, with her middle and main-deck guns in, and all her stores on board, under the command of Mr. Bellamy, the master. On Tuesday morning her pendant was re-hoisted, being commissioned by Lieut. Robt. Hall, of the Camperdown. She will remain in dock until some alteration is made in her cabins and other internal fittings.

The Superb, 80, at Devonport, advanced ship, has been taken into dock to be cleaned.

The Indus, 78, supernumerary advanced ship for Portsmouth, instead of the Malabar, was undocked at Devonport, on Tuesday morning.

The Terrible, steam-frigate, building at Deptford, is to have tubular boilers, and small engines to fetch the boilers.

A general court-martial is ordered to assemble in Limerick—Colonel Chatterton, 4th Dragoon Guards. president—for the trial, at his own request, of Lieutenant Wm. Augustus Hyder, 10th Hussars, quartered there, on charges preferred by his commanding officer, Colonel Vandeleur.

The 32nd regiment, under Lieutenant Colonel Markham, will arrive in Dublin, from Manchester, this day. The 5th Fusiliers have received the route for Belfast to replace the 66th, ordered to this garrison. The 11th Hussars will not leave Dundalk until October. On their arrival there the 11th Hussars proceed to Dublin.—Dublin Monitor of Monday.

IRELAND.

Departure of Lord De Grey.—The Lord Lieutenant and the Countess de Grey held an undress levee at Dublin Castle on Monday, for the reception of those desirous of paying their respects previous to the departure of their excellencies. The levee commenced at one o'clock, and for nearly an hour visitors continued to arrive. The attendance was numerous, and comprised most of the nobility and gentry now in town, a considerable number of clergymen, officials, military officers, &c. After the reception, an address to Lord de Grey, highly complimenting his excellency personally, but avoiding any special allusion to political questions, was presented by Sir Edward Borough and a deputation. This address was signed by the Archbishop of Armagh and several bishops, a number of peers, and a great number of deputy-lieutenants, magistrates, &c. The final departure of the Earl and Countess de Grey from Dublin, took place on Tuesday morning with the usual ceremonies. Before nine o'clock all the troops in garrison, in review order, lined the streets from Essex-bridge to the Westland-row Railway station. The Royal Horse Artillery were formed, with their right at Essex-bridge, through Parliament-street. The 3rd Dragoon Guards and 1st Royal Dragoons from their left, through Dame-street and College-green, as far as their strength permitted them to extend. The Royal Foot Artillery, Royal Sappers and Miners, 5th Fusiliers, 16th, 24th, 34th, and 36th Regiments extended in succession through Grafton-street, Nassau-street, Leinster-street, Clare-street, into Westland-row; and the 11th Hussars formed in the extreme left to the railway station, with their band stationed on their right. At 10 o'clock, the Lieutenant-General commanding, Major-General Wyndham, and a brilliant staff, assembled at Essex-bridge, to await the arrival of their Excellencies from the Viceregal lodge. At this hour the bridge was thronged by well-dressed persons, and a few equipages ready to join the procession. A few minutes before 11, the Viceregal party, consisting of three carriages—one an open landau, in which their Excellencies were seated—and escorted by a troop of the 11th Hussars, left the Park, en route for the railway-station. At a quarter-past eleven o'clock the Viceregal party arrived at Westland-row, where the directors and a great number of ladies and gentlemen were in attendance to receive them. A special train immediately started to Kingstown, where a guard of honour from the 5th Fusiliers, with the Queen's colours and band, were drawn up at the place of embarkation, together with 100 of the Royal Marines, with their officers. Their Excellencies and suite having alighted went on board the Medusa Government steamer, Captain Ladd, and all being in readiness, at a quarter before twelve o'clock the steamer proceeded on her destination, under a royal salute from her Majesty's steamers Albion and Lucifer, and the revenue brig Shamrock. In less than twenty minutes the Medusa appeared a long way out at sea, and there can be little doubt of her having a quick and pleasant passage. Their Excellencies take with them the best wishes of all the good and loyal people of Ireland.

Mr. O'Connell.—According to a statement made at the Repeal Association on Monday, Mr. O'Connell is joyous and buoyant, and occupies himself with "practising gymnastics;" so that, it was added, when he comes out of prison he will have acquired not only additional strength, "but more grace of attitude." All representations agree in describing Mr. O'Connell to be in excellent health and spirits.

Lamentable Occurrence.—Mr. Wm. E. Ryan, brother of Alderman E. F. Ryan, of Limerick, fell over the taffrail of the steamer at Lough Dergh, near Killaloe, on Wednesday evening, and was drowned. The deceased, when a mere lad, was blown up in his bed, at the awful gunpowder explosion at George's-street, Limerick, on the night of the 3rd of January, 1837, and most providentially escaped, though in the very focus of death and desolation.

The Repeal Button.—On Saturday last there was some excitement at the Head Police Office, Dublin, in consequence of that day being fixed to hear the charge of Ignatius Ennis against Capt. Matthews, of the 34th regiment, for assault and larceny, in forcing from his breast a Repeal button. From the statement of Richard O'Connell, Esq., who was counsel for Ennis, it appeared that the complainant was a carman, and some money was due to him from Lieutenant Agnew, of the 34th, stationed in Portobello Barracks. That gentleman desired Ennis to call for the amount on last Monday morning. He accordingly proceeded to the barracks for that purpose. He passed the sentinel at the gate, and was going towards the quarters of Lieutenant Agnew, when he observed a body of soldiers, in marching order, moving towards him. When they came up to him, Captain Mathews stepped up to him, and said "You scoundrel, how dare you come in here with that button," seizing him by the lappel of the coat, and tearing the button from it, which he retained. He then collared him, and roughly pushed him, again calling him foul names, such as you "rascal and scoundrel." The button which excited the ire of the gallant officer was what is called a Repeal button, and rumour had it that there was a military order against admitting persons wearing it to pass into any of the barracks; bnt he (Mr. O'Connell) contended that his client had a right to wear it, and that no man could legally deprive him of it, much less assault him in compelling him to yield up his property. This account was proved in evidence. The counsel for Capt. Mathews said there was a positive order from the commander of the forces that no person wearing party emblems of any kind should be permitted to enter any of the barracks in Ireland, and that order applied as well to Orange lilies as to Repeal buttons. Captain Mathews would as soon remove an Orange lily from the breast of a person appearing within the precincts of the barrack, as he would a Repeal button. His client avowed the act, and he believed that in it he was strictly performing his duty. He did not seize hold of the man, as was alleged, until he had first told him to go out; but as he paid no attention to what he said, he took hold of the lappel of the coat, and used no more force than was necessary to remove the button. He also denied having called Ennis any such names as rascal and scoundrel. Evidence was given on the part of the defendant of the fact that there was an order against wearing party badges in the barracks in Ireland. The magistrates, after hearing both sides, were of opinion that an assault in law had been committed, and that there was nothing to justify it. They therefore ordered Captain Mathews to find bail for his appearance at the next commission, which will sit on the 5th of August.

A Mrs. Wright, an Englishwoman sixty years of age, went to Calais from Boulogne a few days ago to see her granddaughter at school. After spending the evening there in good spirits, on returning to the hotel she felt unwell, entered a shop, seated herself, and almost immediately expired. Medical men soon attended, but could do no good. She and her husband had dined at the Hotel de Genéve.

FINE ARTS.

NATIONAL GALLERY. NEW PICTURE—REMBRANDT'S "RABBI."

Rembrandt, one of the most celebrated painters of the Dutch school, also an etcher admired for the boldness of his designs, notwithstanding the apparently careless execution of them, which, to an uneducated eye, made them seem so many scratchings, was born near Leyden, in 1606, and died in 1688. He could finish, if he liked, up to the fineness of enamel (witness a painting of his in this Gallery, "The Woman taken in Adultery"), but his own penchant was for the dash and glare, and sometimes whimsically opposite gloom, which alternately appear in his pictures. There is one remarkable quality in his productions; they may be placed in any light, and seen to advantage, for their lustre is in themselves.

The rose is pale beneath the moon—alone
Her lover can her blushes see—all flow'rs
Have each their own peculiar light—some choose
The morning or the noon-tide hour to ope
Their beauteous bosoms to the sight:
Some sentimental blossoms wait till eve
Is in the dewy west ere they awake
Their lovely eyes!—but in the forests deep
Of Mexico, there is a flow'r that glows
E'en through the gloom of midnight's darkest hour,
And from within its long-inwreathed bell
Pours out a stream of the most glorious light,
Dazzling the weak beholder's eye with beauty!

Something resembling this Torch-flower is the internal light of Rembrandt's pictures. The Jewish "Rabbi" which has been recently added to the National Collection, if not one of his greatest productions, is a splendid performance—a study for young portrait painters. There is none of that mawkish, tea-board lackery colouring about it—all is breadth and freedom and strength. Some slight objections might be made in detail—but "ubi plura nibent," it is much more pleasant to chronicle the beauties than the defects. The head of the Rabbi is a splendid specimen of what the hand of Genius can create; and the picture is a valuable acquisition to the Gallery. It was purchased for 410 guineas at the sale of the late Mr. Harman's collection, and was once the property of the Duke of Argyle.

A JEWISH RABBI. BY REMBRANDT, IN THE NATIONAL GALLERY.

"THE WISE AND FOOLISH VIRGINS." BY J. E LAUDER.—IN THE EXHIBITION OF THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

The Ten Virgins.—"Then shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins, which took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom. And five of them were wise, and five were foolish. They that were foolish took their lamps, and took no oil with them; but the wise took oil in their vessels with their lamps. While the bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept. And at midnight there was a cry made, Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him. Then all those virgins arose, and trimmed their lamps. And the foolish said unto the wise, Give us of your oil, for our lamps are gone out. But the wise answered, saying, Not so, lest there be not enough for us and you: but go ye rather to them that sell, and buy for yourselves."—Matthew, chap. xxv.

This picture is one of great promise for the English school. With the firmness, breadth, and simplicity of expression which characterised the greater works of Gainsborough, it has much of the dignity and sentiment of the hitherto inimitable school of Caracci. As a whole, the composition is dramatic without exaggeration, and forcible without overstepping the sublime simplicity of the scripture narrative. Its faults are those of detail: the colouring is in many parts crude in finish and injudicious in distribution, while much of the drawing is feeble and ill proportioned. But these are errors which experience will rectify. The expression—the sacred power of the parable is realised, and all is solemn and instructively impressive. It is the first work of a young man, and we are glad to learn has found a liberal purchaser.

The Exhibition at Westminster Hall.—It may be well to remind our readers that the exhibition of the works of art placed in Westminster-hall, pursuant to the notices issued by her Majesty's Commissioners of the Fine Arts, was for the first time thrown open for the gratuitous admission of the public on Monday. Though it was not generally understood that the exhibition would be free so soon after its first opening, the hall was numerously attended, the great majority of the persons present being well attired, while there appeared to be very few of the working classes among the visitors. All conducted themselves with the most perfect propriety and decorum. Numbers of persons have visited the exhibition during the week. On Saturdays the charge for admission will be 1s.

GREAT MEETING OF THE ROYAL AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY OF ENGLAND.—THE TOWN AND PORT OF SOUTHAMPTON.

GREAT MEETING OF THE ROYAL AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY OF ENGLAND.

The anniversary meeting of this truly national society is appointed to take place at Southampton in the ensuing week; and, in our two next Journals, we shall present our readers with an illustrated record of the Society's Show, the Prize Animals, &c. The proceedings may be said to have commenced on Thursday, the last day of receiving implements, wheat, barley, seeds, &c., to be exhibited in the Implement Yard, and arranged by the Stewards for the Judges' inspection. The proceedings will be resumed on Tuesday, and terminate on Friday next.

As the most useful information at present, we subjoin a plan representing the situation of the Society's Pavilion and Show Yards; the Victoria Inn, and the principal Inns; all points of interest in connection with this great Agricultural gathering:

The town of Southampton (of which we have annexed a bird's-eye view), though lying within Hampshire, forms a county of itself, situated on a point of land between the river Alre, or Itchen, on the east, and the Test, Teese, or Anton, on the west: these rivers here uniting form the estuary called Southampton Water.

The town lies somewhat elevated on the bank of the Anton, which washes it on the west and south sides. The principal, or High street, runs north and south, and is divided into two parts by an ancient bar, or gateway, belonging to the old town wall. The other streets or lanes lead from the High-street at right angles, or are nearly parallel to it. On the south side of the town is the quay: near which, at the south-western corner of the town, is the pier, a structure of considerable extent and elegance. At the east end of the quay is a raised walk, or causeway; and on the platform, or battery, near the quay, is a singular gem of the time of Henry VIII. The more modern part of the town, above the Bar, contains some handsome ranges of buildings. High-street is handsomely built throughout. A new road from thence to the Itchen leads to the floating-bridge, which forms the communication with Fareham, Gosport, and Portsmouth.

The principal parish churches are in High-street. Of these, Holy Rhood, a large and ancient structure, with a lofty tower and spire, and a long colonnade, or portico, in front, is distinctly shown in the engraving; as is also the Grecian-Ionic church of All Saints, above Holy Rhood; and about midway between them a church not yet completed. St. Michael's, the most ancient church, is in the west part of the town, and has a tower and several Norman porticoes. There are several Dissenting places of worship; and the Corporation have, besides the Guildhall, a handsome audit-house, a borough gaol, and a debtors' prison. There are also a theatre, assembly-rooms, reading-rooms, libraries, billiard-rooms, bathing-rooms, and a botanic garden. The topography of the town will be better understood by reference to the prefixed plan.

Southampton was anciently a place of great trade, which declined to a very low ebb. It revived in the eighteenth century; but its improvement has been mainly in the present century, in which it has trebled its population. It has a secure harbour, and considerable docks are in course of construction. There are a custom-house and four banking establishments; it is the largest packet-port in the kingdom; and has been materially benefited by its direct railway communication with London.

The Harvest.—We are glad to find, from the provincial papers, that in spite of the fears expressed, in consequence of the long drought, the harvest is likely to be a good one. The Halifax Guardian says—"We congratulate our readers upon the hopeful harvest prospects, which we hear from all parts of the country. The weather, during the week, has been most seasonable, and the crops, of all descriptions, continue rapidly to improve. There is the prospect, not only of an abundant, but of an early harvest. Reports from the south and east speak of the wheat as falling into the sere and yellow leaf, and the Scotch papers say that the harvest will probably be earlier in that country than any harvest since 1826."

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Friday.

The Earl of Radnor presented a petition from Mr. Mazzini, complaining of the opening of his letters at the Post-office, and gave notice that on Monday he should move that the petition be referred to the committee.

The Marquis of Clanricarde alluded to reports that a large army had been collected on the western territory of India, under Sir Charles Napier, and wished to know if it was intended to commence hostilities. He also asked if there existed an intention to obtain an extension of territory on the banks of the Indus.—The Earl of Ripon said there were exaggerations in the reports about an enormous army. There was not an army to the extent of 80,000 men on the Punjaub, nor was Sir C. Napier to command it. In the north-western provinces it was necessary to assemble a large force, for the purpose of meeting any emergency that might arise. The Government had no desire to obtain an extension of territory, but he could not answer for what we might be called upon to do for our own defence or protection. It was not possible during the Session to lay on the table any information respecting the state of India.

A long discussion ensued upon the order of the day for going into committee on the Bank Charter Bill. The bill ultimately went into committee, pro forma, and the house adjourned at half-past ten o'clock. It was remarked, as somewhat curious, that notwithstanding the importance of the bill, merely a dozen peers were present during the evening.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Friday.

Petitions were presented on various subjects.

Sir G. Clerk gave notice that he should in Committee of Supply, this day week, move the education grant for Maynooth College.

Mr. M. Gibson put a question to Sir R. Peel upon the subject of the alleged arrival of the new Brazilian tariff, but the right hon. bart. said that no information of the tariff having arrived, had reached the Foreign Office.

In answer to Mr. S. Wortley, Sir James Graham said he was compelled to abandon the County Courts Bill for this session.

The house went into committee on the New Poor Law Bill. Clauses 21, 22, and 23 were agreed to. On clause 24 being proposed, Captain Bernal moved an amendment to the effect that justices of the peace appointed under the Municipal Act shall be, ex officio, members of the board of guardians. The amendment was, however, negatived.

The whole night was consumed in discussing the clauses of the bill, but nothing of importance occurred. Several amendments were proposed, but the Government was successful in carrying the clauses. At midnight, the committee having got as far as the 34th clause, the Chairman reported progress.—The house resumed, and, after some discussion, it was arranged that the house should meet again to-day at twelve o'clock (Saturday), to proceed with the bill.—Mr. Wakley protested against this course, but Sir R. Peel said, that if the hon. gent. wished to get away for grouse shooting on the 12th of August (a laugh), he (Sir R. Peel) saw no chance of it unless they proceeded with this bill at once.

The house adjourned at one o'clock till twelve o'clock to-day (Saturday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Saturday.

The House of Commons met to-day at one. On the motion of Mr. Gladstone the committee on the Railways Bill was postponed until Thursday next at one o'clock. The right hon. gentleman stated that by that day he expected to receive the opinion of the Directors of the various railway companies upon the measure. After some opposition on the part of Mr. Wakley, the house resolved into committee on the Poor Law Amendment Bill, with which the house was occupied for some hours, and then adjourned till Monday.

Before the proceedings were ended, Mr. Wakley took an opportunity of giving an emphatic denial to an insinuation of Mr. Wodehouse, which, indeed, was not made for the first time. Mr. Wodehouse, at the conclusion of some remarks relative to incendiarism, referred to Mr. Wakley, and said, "No one is more capable to give an opinion on the subject of incendiarism than the hon. member himself." Mr. Wakley repelled the charge as a foul calumny, and thus explained the origin of it:—"I had the misfortune," said Mr. Wakley, "to be attacked in my own house; my house was burnt. I brought an action against the insurance-office which resisted my claim; and every farthing for which I was insured was given me by a jury—Lord Tenterden being the judge (hear); and, after the trial, one of the jurymen, who was himself a proprietor of the insurance-company against which I proceeded, joined my friends in a subscription to pay my extra expenses as between attorney and client. (Hear, hear.) All this was stated in the newspapers at the time; but as I have been most shamefully and cruelly used by persons casting out insinuations against me, I do trust that the house will feel that I have not now unnecessarily interfered." (Cheers.)—Mr. Wodehouse expressed his satisfaction that he had afforded Mr. Wakley the opportunity of giving so distinct an answer to the accusation.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Monday.

The Earl of Radnor presented a petition from Mr. Mazzini, praying to be examined before the Secret Committee on the Post-office, but the Duke of Wellington having stated that the petitioner's character had nothing to do with the object of the inquiry, the petition was withdrawn.

Dissenters' Chapels Bill.—The Lord Chancellor moved that the house should agree to the amendments made by the House of Commons in this bill, and called upon their lordships to sanction the measure, as a large majority of the house had marked its sense of its justice and policy. The noble and learned lord defended the bill with great animation, and expressed his regret that it had excited so much opposition from the Bench of Bishops. The noble and learned lord concluded his exhortation in favour of the bill in these emphatic terms:—He was sorry that the chief opposition to the bill proceeded from the dissenting body—from those who not so very long since complained of being made the victims of persecution—who had obtained from the Legislature all they could get, and now desired to withhold from their brethren that toleration which they had demanded and obtained for themselves. Some of their lordships might remember a remarkable speech of a wise, eloquent, and philosophical statesman, Mr. Burke; he did not dare to quote the whole of the eloquent passage to which he alluded, it was too warm for the temperament of that house (a laugh); but he would repeat the last sentence:—"If," said he, "instead of busying themselves in the depths of the divine counsels, they would turn to the mild moderation of the gospel, they would there read their own condemnation—'O thou unworthy servant, did I not forgive thee because thou desiredst me? Shouldst not thou have extended to thy fellow-servant that which I have extended to thee?'"—The Bishop of London opposed the amendments made by the Commons with much energy, and called upon the house to take the last opportunity of voting against a bill which was contrary to the dictates of reason, and to the maxims of common sense. The third clause contained the very essence of injustice, because it barred the relators, who had already almost obtained judgment in their favour, from further prosecuting their claims. The second clause, as altered by the Commons, was frightfully destructive to the cause of the Christian Church and to the principles of eternal truth, because it declared that doctrines, directly in opposition to those fundamental truths on which our hopes of salvation rest, may be taught in any place of worship whatever. Then the designation by Parliament of Unitarian meeting-houses as places "for the worship of God" was a recognition most palpably contrary to the constitution of this Christian country, which could not regard as lawful any worship to the Deity except such as was offered to the Trinity. After thus impugning the principle of the bill, the Bishop of London said, that although almost dismayed by the talents opposed to him, yet he felt comforted, in the course his duty imposed on him, by the reflection that out of doors the vast majority of all professions, and that many of the Judges both of the courts of law and equity were with him in hostility to it. He approved neither of the bill nor the amendments. In some respects those amendments were an improvement—in others, a worsening of the bill. But he could not accept of either. It was a hasty measure, introduced and adopted without sufficient Parliamentary inquiry; and, if passed into a law, would outrage the religious feelings which pervaded the great bulk of the community. In conclusion the right rev. prelate moved that the Commons' amendments be considered that day three months.—The Bishop of Durham supported the measure.—Lord Brougham also spoke in its favour. He denied that the great body of Dissenters were opposed to it, and said he regarded it as a measure advantageous to all classes of Churchmen and Dissenters, and calculated to promote peace, and prevent chicane.—The Bishop of Norwich admitted that at first he looked upon the measure as a Socinian endowment bill; but on further examination, he found it to be a measure of equity and justice.—The Earl of Roden strongly condemned the bill, and said the principles of it were utterly inconsistent with that of a Conservative Government. The bill was of a more spoliative character than the appropriation clause.—Lord Cottenham, with much candour, undertook to defend the Conservative character of the Government, and to explain the meaning which he attached to the word Conservative. He said if he were right in the meaning which he had always attached to the word "Conservative," the present bill was entitled to be considered as purely a Conservative measure, for its object was to do justice, by protecting property that had been in the hands of particular parties for a great length of time, and preventing its spoliation from those who were in the enjoyment of it, in order to have it transferred to others who had no earthly right to it. Such was the meaning that he attached to the word "Conservatism." (Loud cries of "Hear, hear," from the Ministerial benches.)—Lord Teynham, the Earl of Galloway, and Lord Lyttelton spoke against the bill.—On a division the numbers were—

In favour of the amendments made by the House of Commons	202
For the Bishop of London's amendment	41
Majority in favour of the bill	—161

The Commons' amendments were then agreed to.

The Loan Societies (Ireland) Bill, and the Birkenhead Docks Bill were read a third time and passed, and the house adjourned at half-past eleven.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Monday.

The Poor-Law Bill.—The house met at twelve o'clock in the day, and discussed the Poor-law Amendment Bill in committee. On the 36th clause, Mr. Christopher urged the expediency of establishing in each union workhouse a ward for the houseless poor who were journeying in quest of employment or of their parishes.—Sir J. Graham was favourable to this suggestion, though he considered it not to be strictly connected with the clause in discussion. At present it was not unusual to commit these wanderers to prison; but he thought it much better to provide them with a temporary asylum than to send them to gaol. Three or four of these asylums, in well-selected localities, would enable the police to bring such persons where they might have shelter for a night, or even refuge for three or four days, and due care in case of sickness. Such an arrangement would fulfil the duties of Christianity and humanity, which he feared were neglected under the present system.—The clause was opposed by Mr. T. Duncombe and other members, but was carried on a division.—At four o'clock the Chairman reported progress, and it was arranged that the bill should be proceeded with on Wednesday. At five o'clock the house met again.—Mr. Wodehouse made a more ample apology to Mr. Wakley than he had done on Saturday.—Sir Robert Peel considered the explanation to be in unison with the unanimous feelings of the house, and hoped it would be put on the records of the house as a public declaration.—Mr. Wakley expressed his gratitude, and said the acknowledgment would be most satisfactory to every member of his family, and he had a particular motive in making that declaration.—In answer to a question from Mr. Hume, Sir J. Graham said that as he saw no prospect of Lord Cottenham's bill for the Abolition of Imprisonment for Debt being proceeded with this session, he must withdraw the County Courts' Bill.

The Irish State Trials.—Mr. Wyse moved for a select committee to inquire, in accordance with the prayer of the petition presented on the 17th of June, into the facts connected with the formation of the special jury in the case of "The Queen, at the presecution of the Attorney-General, v. Daniel O'Connell and others." Mr. Wyse grounded his claim to the inquiry, upon the fact that petitions had been presented from nearly 1,000,000 of the Irish people praying for it. The hon. member alluded to the excitement which prevailed in Ireland upon the subject, and contended that the trial had not been a fair one. He then went over the various technical objections to the jury lists which have been so often urged, and repeated some of the other well known grounds urged against the validity of the trial. Mr. Wyse, in conclusion, said the Ministers themselves had raised Mr. O'Connell into the position of importance which he occupied, and urged them to undo the injury they had inflicted on the Irish nation.—Lord Eliot opposed the motion, on the ground that Mr. Wyse had not substantiated any of his objections to the fairness of the trial, and particularly as the whole question was now under the consideration of the House of Lords.—Mr. M. J. O'Connell addressed the house in the same spirit as Mr. Wyse.—The Solicitor-General entered into some details respecting the trial, and denied that any unfairness had been practised against the defendants. He also vindicated the summing up of the Lord Chief Justice, and said the present discussion was in the highest degree calculated to cast suspicion on the administration of justice at this most important trial. Under what circumstances was this motion made? A most dangerous and extensive conspiracy existed in Ireland—a conspiracy fraught with the most dangerous consequences—threatening danger to the whole empire. This conspiracy—not by asking for extraordinary powers, not by using a coercion bill—with no other weapon than the ordinary arm of the law, the Government had beaten down to the ground;—the law had vindicated its supremacy;—the offenders were beaten beneath its feet;—and it was under such circumstances that the hon. gentleman endeavoured to impugn the justice of the proceedings, and to lead the public mind to the conclusion that the parties implicated had not been fairly dealt with. (Cheers.)—Mr. V. Stuart urged the house to agree to the inquiry, in order to restore confidence in the administration of the laws.—On a division, the numbers were—

For Mr. Wyse's motion	73
Against it	91
Majority against the motion	—18

The London and Croydon Railway Bill was read a third time.

The house sat till past midnight.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Tuesday.

Lord Monteagle obtained leave to bring in a bill to legalise such Art Unions as possessed charters, and to give to those which had not, provided they were approved by the Board of Trade, an equal legality.—The bill was read a first time, and ordered to be printed.

Earl Fortescue then introduced the case of Mr. O'Driscoll, an Irish magistrate. That gentleman, as may be recollected, was dismissed by the Lord Chancellor of Ireland from the commission of the peace, for intemperate conduct in beating a boy, and for using offensive language to his brother magistrates, but who has since been re-appointed, upon a memorial addressed to the Lord-Lieutenant, and signed by five noblemen, 13 clergymen, 41 esquires, and 2840 respectable inhabitants of the county, praying for his restoration. The noble earl complained of the re-appointment of Mr. O'Driscoll as another insult to Ireland, and moved for copies of any memorial or memorials addressed to the Lord Chancellor of Ireland, recommending the restoration of Mr. Alexander O'Driscoll to the commission of the peace.—Lord Wharncliffe, in reply, defended the conduct of the Government.—The Marquis of Normanby strongly impugned it, and contrasted the policy of the Whigs.—A long discussion arose upon Irish matters generally, in the course of which some rather angry remarks were made by noble lords on both sides of the house, but nothing of political importance elicited. Ultimately, the motion for the documents was agreed to.

The Charitable Bequests Bill was re-committed, and the house adjourned at half-past nine o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Tuesday.

The house met at twelve o'clock, and, after some discussion and a division, resolved into committee on the Metropolitan Buildings Bill. A number of the clauses were agreed to, and some verbal amendments added.

The Slave Trade.—In the evening, Lord Palmerston, in moving for returns connected with the slave-trade, entered into some very interesting details upon the subject. The first part of his speech was devoted to an argument, which he supported by statutes, to prove that the slave-trade was much on the increase, and that several Governments had refused to fulfil their engagements to put down the traffic. Lord Palmerston made the following statement to show the immense number of slaves annually carried from Africa, and imported into the islands and continent of America, for the purposes of slavery. He said, "Now, what are the numbers which are calculated at this time to be annually imported to the isles and continent of America? Mr. Bandinell, in his able work on the subject, compiled from official documents, and containing condensed forms in a small compass of more valuable information than perhaps any other work of its size can afford—Mr. Bandinell, a man of great industry and accuracy, calculates the number of those only who have landed in America, previous to the few years that have lately elapsed, at from 120,000 to 130,000, and Sir F. Buxton, in his interesting and valuable work, puts the numbers at 150,000 at least:" The noble lord then drew this startling picture of the horrors connected with slavery:—"But any man who thinks that only 150,000 negroes are sacrificed to the avarice and cruelty of men—I will not call them Christian men—belonging to Christian nations, is very far from the truth. It is calculated, that for every negro who lands, two others have perished in the previous stages of the slave-trade; that whatsoever number may be landed, that number must be multiplied by three before you can arrive at the full sacrifice of human life—at the full number of human persons who are annually swept away from the population of Africa. It is well known that the negroes are not collected at the places where they embark; many of them come from a great distance in the interior of Africa—many hundred miles in the interior, down to the sea-coast—some of them are captives taken in wars—wars stimulated and brought on by the prospect of gain to be derived from the sale of the captives; but the greater number are the victims of the system of man-stealing which prevails in the interior of Africa. The way it takes place is this: When the time of year comes round for sending a slave caravan to the coast, some peaceable African village, whose unsuspecting inhabitants are buried in that repose which nature kindly bestows on man to fit him for the useful occupations and the innocent engagements of the succeeding day—some African village in the dead of night is surrounded by armed ruffians; the huts are set on fire; the inhabitants, roused from their sleep by the flames in which they are enveloped, endeavour to escape; some attempt it by flight, and some by resistance, but all fail; the fugitives are brought back, and those who resisted are overpowered and made slaves. Sometimes a hill-village is attacked, where the intricacies of the ground afford a greater facility for escape; some of the inhabitants fly to the neighbouring caverns; some take refuge in the high grounds; fires are lighted at the mouths of the caves, and those who sheltered themselves within are compelled to choose between suffocation within and captivity without. The wells on which the natives depend for water are occupied, and those who have fled to the high grounds are compelled by the intolerable torments of thirst to barter their liberty for a few drops of water. (Hear, hear, hear.) Then comes the selection. The hale and healthy of either sex, with children about six or seven years of age, are put aside by the merchant to go with the caravan to the coast; the aged and the infirm, the infant at the mother's breast, the child under six or seven years of age, to send them to the coast would be impossible, and if it were possible it would be without profit—to maintain them would be costly—to leave them to perish would be too cruel even for the slave hunter; they are despatched, and are the least to be pitied. (Hear.) Well, the caravan sets out—men, women, and children, half-naked, barefooted, and weak, are driven on by the lash and the goad, the strong restrained from flight by yokes and chains—they are marched 100 miles across the burning sands of the plain, and over the stony passes of the mountains; with disease of body and agony of mind, some drop down dead on the way; others, unable to keep up with the rest, are left behind to perish by a lingering death of hunger or thirst, or become a prey to the wild beasts of the desert, and others are knocked on the head, and put out of their misery. Multitudes perish in this way, and travellers who have visited the interior tell us that they can trace the march of a slave caravan through the pathless wilderness, and that at the wells and watering places thousands of human skeletons are bleaching and mouldering in the dust. (Hear, hear.) Well, the slave ship arrives, the captain lands, inspects the negroes, chooses those whose health and strength lead him to think they will outlive the passage, and become profitable to the merchant. Those whose weakly or sickly appearance induce him to believe will not outlive the voyage he rejects altogether, and these last are either put out of the way, or are left to perish on the coast by famine and distress. It has been reckoned, and I believe the calculation is not exaggerated, that whatever may be the number of negroes embarked on the coast, an equal number perish previously at the seizure, on the march, or in the detention. Therefore, for every 500 negroes put on board, 500 human beings are always sacrificed." After describing the agonies of the negroes on board ships, Lord Palmerston made the following summary of the results of this horrible traffic. "From all those various causes I reckon that one-third of the negroes who are embarked on the coast of Africa perish before they reach the coast of America, and if to that one-third 500 be added as having died before embarkation, I say that for every negro landed in America two others have perished at the previous stages of this abominable traffic. Why, according to that, if 150,000 have been landed only for the few years last past, the ravage committed on the population of Africa must be measured by a number not short of from 400,000 to 500,000 every year; and let any man reckon what a fearful devastation that depopulation must have caused, during the last 50 years, throughout the African interior. (Hear, hear.) Why, I undertake to say that, if all the other crimes the human race have committed from the creation of the world down to the present hour were classed together in one fell aggregate—I undertake to say that the great aggregate would not equal—at any rate would not exceed—the extent of the devastation of human life under this hideous, this atrocious traffic." (Cheers.) Having thus proved the extent of the evil, the noble lord argued that our Government in particular was bound to put an end to the disgusting system. He accused the present Ministry of not having endeavoured to do so, and argued that while he and his friends were in office they had effected great diminution in the numbers of slaves landed in America. For instance, "in the year 1838, there were landed in the Brazils 94 000, and in Cuba 28,000, making a total of 122,000. In 1840 there were landed in Brazil only 14,000, and in Cuba 14,700, instead of 28,000; making a total of 28,700, instead of 122,300, or a diminution of no less than 93,000. Nor was this a sudden diminution: with regard to Cuba, it is stated on good authority, that from 1817 to 1835, there were imported from 39,000 to 40,000 slaves annually. In 1838, as I have said, the number imported was 28,000; in 1839, it had fallen to 25,000; in 1840, to 14,000; in 1841, to 11,000; and in 1842, it was stated to have come down so low as 3000. In Brazil, there were imported in 1838, 94,000; in 1839, these had fallen to 56,000; and, in 1840, there were only imported 14,000." Lord Palmerston next taunted the Government upon the alleged cordiality existing between it and that of France, and said he had not seen any fruit of such cordiality. The noble lord then made an emphatic appeal to the Government to put down slavery, by which, he said, it would earn the gratitude of posterity for countless ages yet to come, and concluded by moving for a "Return, showing the total number of African Negroes landed for the purposes of slavery on the islands and on the continent of America, from the year 1815 to the year 1843, both inclusive; distinguishing the number so landed in each of those years, and distinguishing also the number landed in each year on the territory of each separate state or power, so far as the same can be made up from documents in the possession of her Majesty's Government."—Sir R. Peel commenced his reply by saying that he could hardly have inferred from the modest terms in which the notice of the noble lord who had just sat down was worded, that it would have afforded him an opportunity for making the rhetorical display in which he had just indulged; a more harmless motion than that which he read on the notices of that day he could hardly conceive. The right honourable baronet then said, he concurred in all that Lord Palmerston had urged in regard to the horrors of the slave-trade. "I do most sincerely believe," said Sir R. Peel, "that the slave-trade is the most iniquitous, the most heinous offence against mankind that was ever yet invented or practised by man. The pursuit of it engenders more crime, and produces more misery, than any other traffic that ever yet was carried on, and it fell most distinctly under prohibition by the laws both of God and man. I do not believe that the noble lord has overrated the amount of misery which this most detestable crime has inflicted upon the unfortunate beings who are subjected to this traffic; though I rather think he has done so with the number of slaves who have been landed on the coast and islands of America, between the years 1815 and 1843. The noble lord estimates their number at 150,000: I reckon them at 100,000; but if my estimate should even prove to be the more correct one of the two, I still am perfectly ready to admit that these figures do not by any means represent the sum total of those natives of Africa who have suffered the horrible miseries which this traffic has entailed upon them. I don't think, therefore, the extent of this misery, with respect to numbers or its nature, has been exaggerated by the noble lord." Sir R. Peel, however, although admitting the existence of the evil, said he did not believe that while Spain and the Brazils determined upon carrying on the slave-trade, any effectual progress could be made in putting an end to it. These are the terms in which Sir Robert Peel enunciated this declaration:—"I here declare it to be my opinion that a heavy load of public guilt rests on the heads of those nations who derive a profit from this horrible traffic; and I, moreover, assert it can be clearly and indisputably shown that Spain and the Brazils are the only two Christian countries the government or people of which derive any profit from the trade in human beings. (Hear.) Those countries have the power to suppress the slave-trade, and unless they exert that power sincerely, and with a determination that the effort shall be effectual, it is utterly out of our power to do so. It would be impossible to make any effort of this kind with the hope of perfect success unless by the co-operation of the Brazilian Government. It might be partially done, and the Court of the Brazils has expressed a desire to assist our views; but the connivance of the local authorities has hitherto always prevented the efforts to suppress the trade from being effectual; and, in my opinion, nothing is more easy than to show, that if the two Governments of Spain and the Brazils were earnest in their desires, the slave-trade might be put an immediate stop to." After this statement Sir. Robert Peel applied himself to controvert Lord Palmerston's opinion that the present Government had been less active in endeavouring to suppress the slave-trade than the last, and enumerated various points of policy to prove that every possible exertion had been made by the present Government to suppress the traffic. Sir Robert then passed to the allusion to France. He said—"The noble lord referred in the course of his speech to the good understanding that exists between France and this country, and the noble lord says he is always glad that a good understanding should prevail; but he spoke in terms which seemed hardly calculated to improve or strengthen it. (Hear, hear.) I also entertain the same opinion on that point, and I am sure that it cannot be forwarded by any compromise dishonourable to this country. (Hear, hear.) But at the same time, if with regard to their mutual interests that good understanding between France and England can subsist, it is essential to the interests of civilization, of peace, and of the welfare of the whole civilized world. (Hear.) I believe that it is the earnest wish of the great body of the people of this country to maintain that good understanding so long as they can do so without any sacrifice of honour, or the essential interests of the country. (Hear, hear.)" After touching upon these points Sir R. Peel said he did not think Lord Palmerston had shown any ground for his strictures upon the Government, and hinted that the noble lord appeared to have made his motion, of which he had given notice last March, mainly for the sake of his peroration; he, of course, could not suffer such a gem to remain in obscurity. He could not take it with him into the country; if he had done that, he would have been repeating the speech to himself all the autumn, as he must already have been doing all the last month. The right hon. bart concluded his speech thus:—"With the reservation that we should proceed temperately and justly, that we should act upon the law of nations, and ask for nothing more than positive engagements give us a right to obtain, that we should observe the principle towards the weak as well as the strong—with this reservation, I assure the noble lord and the house that the Government are deeply impressed with both the duty and policy, for the highest considerations of the public welfare, of suppressing the slave trade, and that if that be the avenue to fame, it shall be one that shall be open to us so far as constant and persevering exertions can insure the means of securing it." (The right hon. baronet sat down amidst loud cheers.)—After a reply from Lord Palmerston the papers were ordered, with some additions suggested by Sir R. Peel.

The other business was unimportant.

The house adjourned at one o'clock in the morning.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Wednesday.

The House did not sit.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Wednesday.

Mr. Spooner, the new member for Birmingham, took the oaths and his seat, amidst cheers from the Ministerial side of the House.

The House went into Committee on the Poor-law Amendment Bill.—On the 38th clause, Sir. J. Graham proposed that each district board should appoint a chaplain, at a salary to be fixed by the Poor-law Commissioners. Some conversation arose upon this point, but the proposal was agreed to. Several other clauses were agreed to without any material opposition.

Mr. S. O'Brien proposed a clause for authorising the admission into the district schools of children not paupers, upon some moderate payment.—Sir J. Graham did not sanction the amendment, and it was withdrawn. The Committee proceeded as far as clause 54.

In accordance with a suggestion of Sir J. Graham, Mr. Cowper said he should not press the Field Gardens Bill this session. The Bill was committed pro forma in order that the amendments to it might be printed.

On bringing up the report of the Farm Buildings Bill, Mr. Hume said, he regretted that the Government had not submitted any measure to Parliament in order to prevent the continuance of the causes which had lately led to the commission of numerous acts of incendiarism in several counties of England. Those causes were the distress and despair of a large portion of the labouring classes of the country. It appeared to him that the Government had treated these matters very lightly.—Sir J. Graham said that information would be shortly afforded to Parliament and the country with respect to the causes which had led to the late fires in the counties of Norfolk, Suffolk, and Essex; 17 persons would be tried for being concerned in those fires.—Mr. Hume.—The fires are still going on.—Sir C. Burrell said the hon. member fer Montrose had stated that the labourers of this country were inadequately paid. He (Sir C. Burrell) asserted that in the county (Sussex) which he represented, and particularly in the neighbourhood where he resided, wages were reasonable. The average wages of labour in his neighbourhood, were 13s. a week.

The Metropolitan Buildings Bill was discussed in committee and all its various clauses agreed to.—Mr. Hawes, who had been absent during the committee, complained of the rapidity with which the bill had been passed, as he had various amendments to propose.—The Earl of Lincoln replied that the Government had nothing to do with the absence of Mr. Hawes, who had received public and private intimation of the intention to preceed with the measure.—Mr. Alderman Humphery joined Mr. Hawes in opposition to the bill, and some formal amendments were proposed, on which there were divisions.—At length Friday was fixed for bringing up the report and the house adjourned at a quarter past ten o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Thursday.

Committee of Privilege.—The house sat this morning at ten o'clock in a Committee of Privilege, when they unanimously decided that Sir Brooke Wm. Brydges, Bart., had established his claim to the vacant Barony of Fitzwalter.

The house met again at five o'clock in the evening.

Lord Campbell presented the petition of which he had given notice, from Charles Henry Russell, to be heard at the bar, by himself or counsel, against the actions for Gaming Discontinuance Bill. The noble and lerned lord then moved that the petitioner be heard by counsel against the order of the day for its committal. Agreed to.

The Aliens Bill.—Lord Brougham called the attention of the house to a bill which had been brought up from the House of Commons, having for object to remove various disadvantages under which foreigners now laboured. It was his intention to add a clause providing that the wives of British subjects should be naturalised by the fact of their marriage; and that in all acts of naturalisation the clause prohibiting a naturalised person to sit in Parliament, or hold office under the Crown, should be omitted.

Lord Mountcashel brought forward a motion respecting a school in Ireland, which was finally negatived without a division.

The Art Unions Bill was read a second time.

The Report on the Insolvent Debtors Bill was received.

Their lordships adjourned soon after seven o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS—Thursday.

The house met this afternoon at one o'clock, and again went into committee on the Poor-law Amendment Bill. The committee proceeded as far as the 60th clause, when the Chairman reported progress. The discussion did not present any point of particular interest.

Mr. Ross gave notice that on Tuesday next he should move for an humble address to her Majesty, praying for the removal of Mr. O'Driscoll, recently restored to the commission of the peace in Ireland.

The Post-Office Committee.—Mr. T. Duncombe called the attention of the house to the proceedings of the committee appointed to investigate the recent charges made by him against the Post-office. The hon. member said he had been called before the committee, and he did not accuse them with any impropriety or harshness—indeed, their manner had been almost coaxing to him—but he had been asked to furnish a list of the witnesses whom he intended to support the charges he had made, and, at the same time, the committee wished to prevent him from being present at the examination. He maintained that the truth could not be ascertained, unless he were present during the examination of certain witnesses, and he therefore moved that it be an instruction to the committee that he might be present during the examination of such witnesses as he might think proper to examine.—Mr. Hume seconded the motion.—Lord Sandon, as chairman of the committee, said, the committee felt that the hon. gentleman had no knowledge of the parties himself, and that he only acted on information received from others. For him to be present, therefore, examining witnesses and observing the evidence, would have been virtually to have put him on the committee—(Hear, hear)—wishout his having the responsibility of being a member of it. They should be most happy to have the hon. member on the committee, if the house should think fit to place him there, as he would then have the same responsibility as the other members of it.—Sir R. Peel said he was unwilling to throw any technical difficulty in the way of the motion which the hon. gentleman had made, although he thought he was justified, according to the rules of the house, in objecting to a member of that house stating anything with respect to the proceedings of a Secret Committee, but he was unwilling to debar the hon. gentleman the opportunity of making his statement. No notice of a motion had been given, and he (Sir R. Peel) was at a loss to understand the grounds upon which the hon. gentleman had made the present motion.—Mr. Labouchere said he quite agreed in the statement that the house must choose between putting the hon. member for Finsbury on the committee, or allowing him to examine particular witnesses himself.—Mr. V. Smith moved that the Hon. Manners Sutton, and Mr. T. Duncombe be added to the committee.—The question having been put, the O'Conor Don referred to what had been done by the committee with regard to the presence of the hon. member for Finsbury. He did not think it would be right for the house to rescind the resolution to which it had come when it negatived the proposition that he should be a member of the committee. After a sharp discussion the house divided. The numbers were—

For the motion	51
Against it	141
Majority against it	—90

The proposition for putting Mr. Duncombe on the committee is thus negatived.

The Unlawful Oaths (Ireland) Bill, after some discussion, was read a third time; it is only a continuance of a former act.

The house then went into committee on the Poor-law Bill. Several clauses were agreed to. An amendment was moved, during the discussion, to one of the clauses, which will allow of relief being given to widows and others not residing in their own parishes, without compelling them to return to the place of their settlement, which, under the existing law is imperative.—Mr. Tatton Egerton supported the amendment; he said that a poor widow residing in a manufacturing town with her children, would be enabled by a small amount of relief from the perhaps distant union to support herself and family, while if they were compelled to return they would all become chargeable.—Sis James Graham opposed the amendment; from the time of Elizabeth, residence had always been enforced as a condition of relief. He considered the small amount from the union would go in aid of wages in the manufacturing district.—Mr. Bankes and several other members supported the amendment, which, on a division, was carried against the Government by a majority of one, the numbers being, for it 49, against it 48. The announcement was loudly cheered. The remaining clauses of the bill were then gone through, the preamble agreed to, and the house resumed, thus closing the long and fatiguing discussion of this measure.

The Committee on the Railways' Bill was postponed till Monday, and the other orders having been disposed of, the house adjourned at a quarter to two o'clock.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

"Lucrezia Borgia" was announced for Moriani's benefit on Thursday evening last, but, we will not say whether it was a disappointment or not—the opera of "Don Pasquale" was substituted for it, some late affiches announcing that owing to the increased hoarseness of Signor Moriani that it was impossible for him to appear. Now, whether it be the humidity of our climate, or affectation on the part of its visitors, we will not presume to say, but it is a curious thing to remark that all vocal foreigners on their first arrival in this country are hoarse for two or three days. Why do not the dancers take example from this, and get the cramp for a short time? Lablache was never more rich in Don Pasquale; his ejaculations in French now and then were amazingly droll. Grisi, as Norina, was exquisite :the parts of Ernesto and Malatesta are not very well calculated to show off the respective powers of either Mario or Fornasari; but in the beautiful quartet towards the close of the second act, it would be difficult to say to whom, individually, we were indebted for the exquisite effect. It was encored nem. con. and increased in attraction on its repetition.

Between the second and third acts of the opera there was a divertissement, or extract from some ballet, in which Cerito and St. Leon danced à merveille. It was announced as a pas de deux, but a Mdlle. Ferdinand appeared, and made it a pas de trois, to the great delight of every amateur de danse.

The ballet of "Giselle" followed, in which Elssler was as charming as ever. The house was crowded to excess, and, with good humour, more judiciously critical than usual. This is pleasant to notice, both for artistes and audience: there can be nothing more dreadful than hearing sweet sounds thrown away upon dull or ignorant ears.

ST. JAMES'S.

This delightful house closed for the season on Wednesday last with a performance for the benefit of M. Cartigny and M. Cloup. It was a miscellaneous selection, and the assistance of the humorous John Parry was called in, to atone in some measure for the loss of the lively Déjazet and Levassor, who took their leave on Monday. The highest thanks are due to Mr. Mitchell for the brilliant treat he has so liberally afforded.

PRINCESS'S.

On Monday last, in addition to the other novelties, "The Ladies' Club" was produced; but although powerfully cast, it did not go off altogether with good effect.

STRAND.

An adaptation of "Martin Chuzzlewit" has been produced at this theatre with merited success. It is a less disjointed version than that lately introduced at the Lyceum, and accordingly the plot is rendered more intelligible to those persons who have not read the novel. The part of Pecksniff was sustained with much talent by Mr. H. Hall, who doubled Mrs. Gamp. Tom Pinch, by Mr. Younge, was a successful impersonation, especially in the pathetic touches—by far the most difficult for stage representation. The other characters were well supported, if we except occasional loudness and coarseness, but ill adapted for the contracted area of this theatre. Altogether, the piece is bustling throughout, and seizes upon the best points of the tale with good tact and judgment.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Seguin, the vocalists, have recently returned to England from America, where they have been on a successful theatrical tour for several years past. They intend to return to the United States very shortly.

MUSIC.

HANOVER-SQUARE ROOMS.

Mr. Wilson took his farewell of the metropolis on Wednesday evening at these rooms, which were well attended to say "au revoir" to the most popular minstrel that has appeared in our recollection. He possesses the art of interweaving song with history; and the occasional anecdote and melody commingled, make his entertainment in the highest degree charming. He is going to make a provincial tour, but we hope he will soon return to delight the metropolis with his Scottish recitals once and many times more.

Fatal Accident on the Croydon Railway.—On Sunday afternoon an accident occurred on the above line near the Brighton Junction, which terminated fatally to a passenger in a third-class carriage. It appeared that the deceased, a country-looking man, took a third-class ticket at Croydon about half-past two. Previous to the train leaving he had a pint of ale at the Railway Tavern, part of which he gave to another passenger. Shortly after the train had started he lifted himself over the side of the carriage, which is about breast high, and endeavoured to sit on the corner. Just as he had placed himself there he overbalanced, and fell backwards under the train, which was going at a rapid rate; the two carriages which were behind passed over his body and mangled him dreadfully. On his arrival at the terminus he was taken to Guy's Hospital, where he immediately expired. The top of his head was smashed in, and his left leg broken; his name is unknown.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

Fatal Accident in the Thames Tunnel.—On Monday afternoon, Mr. Baker held an inquest in the board room of Wapping Workhouse, on the body of Samuel Jolly, aged fifty, gunsmith, lately residing at 18, Meeting-house-lane, High-street, Woolwich. From the evidence it appears that the deceased tendered one penny at the Wapping entrance of the Tunnel, about eleven o'clock on Thursday night, for the purpose of proceeding to the Rotherhithe side, on his way to Woolwich, and that when he had descended to within fourteen steps of the bottom, he, by some cause not elicited, rolled to the stone flooring at the bottom of the flight of stairs, by which he received an extensive fracture of the skull, and notwithstanding medical attendance, he died in the workhouse at two o'clock on Friday morning. The deceased appeared to be sober and was not subject to fits.—Verdict, "Accidental Death."

Fatal Cart Collision.—Last Saturday evening Mr. Higgs held an inquest at the Nag's Head, Wandsworth-road, on the body of Sarah Groves, aged eleven, daughter of Mr. Groves, saddler, &c., of the Blackfriars-road. It appeared that the deceased, on Thursday evening last, was in a chaise with her father, mother, and sister proceeding along the Wandsworth-road, when they saw coming furiously towards them two horses and a cart. Mr. Groves pulled up by the side of the road, got out of his chaise, and stood by his horse's head, and as the horses and cart were approaching, he held up his whip, which made them swerve towards him, and strike against the chaise. By the concussion his wife was thrown out, and, going to her assistance, he left his horse's head, and the animal ran away. Deceased being frightened, jumped out of the chaise, and the consequence was fatal injury to the skull. The horses in the cart in the first instance ran away from a watering-place beside the road, through the driver having taken the bits from their mouths to allow them to drink. The jury returned a verdict of "Accidental Death, adding that the taking the bits from horses' mouths for any purpose on the public roads was highly censurable.

The late Fatal Steam-boat Accident.—On Tuesday morning Mr. Carter resumed, for the fourth time, at the Ship, Fore-street, Lambeth, the inquiry touching the death of Henry Tucker, aged 35, a lighterman, and William Wright, aged 23, a coach-painter. The particulars of this protracted inquest have been given in our paper. The inquest room was, as on the former occasions, crowded with persons engaged in the navigation of the river. A good deal of evidence having been adduced, at five o'clock P.M. (the inquiry having begun at ten in the morning) the coroner summed up. After a consultation of two hours, the jury returned a verdict of "Accidental Death," with a deodand of £100 upon the steamer, the Thunder, which caused the accident. Mr. Justins, on the part of the proprietor of the boat, said that he should appeal against the verdict by certiorari.

Sudden Death in an Omnibus.—On Tuesday Mr. G. I. Mills, Deputy Coroner for Middlesex, held an inquest at the Mother Black Cap, High-street, Camden-town, on the body of Janet Hans, aged 42. It appeared from the evidence that on Friday last the deceased got into a Kentish-town omnibus in the New Road, on her way to Camden-town. Charles Wiber, the conductor of the omnibus, stated, that the instant he had handed deceased up the steps into the vehicle she fell forward, and on being picked up by some of the passengers, she appeared perfectly lifeless. The passengers were so alarmed that they rushed out of the omnibus, leaving no one in it but deceased and her daughter. A surgeon, who was sent for when the deceased was carried home, pronounced her to have been dead some time; but, in order to satisfy deceased's relatives, attempted to bleed her, but without effect. He gave it as his opinion that her death was instantaneous, and was caused by the water touching the heart at the moment she had reached the top of the steps of the omnibus. Verdict, "Natural Death."

Suicide with Poison.—On Wednesday evening, Mr. Joseph Payne held an adjourned inquest, at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, on the body of Cornelius Ryan, aged 31, late a servant in Mr. Godby's clothes wharehouse, in Brook-street, Holborn, who committed suicide. Deceased, on Saturday last, went to Mr. King's surgery, in Gray's Inn-lane, andrequested to be served with a pennyworth of arsenic. Mr. Bastow, Mr. King's assistant, who was in the surgery, at first refused to serve him, but he was well known at the shop, and telling such a plausible tale about wanting to poison some rats, he was served with the poison. He then went away, and on the following morning a lad called upon Mr. King, and said that the deceased wanted to see him. He repaired to deceased's residence, in Euston-place, Clerkenwell, where he found him labouring under the effects of poison. He was removed to the above institution, where he died shortly after, from the effects of poison taken into the stomach. Proof was given that deceased's mind was impaired, and that the complaint was hereditary, and the jury, after consulting, returned a verdict of "Temporary Insanity."

Fatal Coach Accident.—On Saturday evening last, as the Shuttle coach was on its way from Bury to Manchester, when about 150 yards from the Bess's-o'th'-Barn toll-bar, on the Bury New Road, the linch pin of the off-hind wheel fell out, and the wheel came off, and four passengers and the coachman were thrown from the top of the coach. One woman, the wife of Samuel Kenyon, block printer, Bank Top, Manchester, was killed on the spot.

Melancholy Accident.—We extremely regret to announce that in the contest for the Hooton Cup, at Eastham, a short time after the boats had rounded the flag barge situated about a mile and a half above the Eastham Ferry, the Amphitrite shipped a sea and swamped. A number of boats, as also a steamer, were close at hand, but, in despite of all their endeavours, they only succeeded in saving four out of the five of the crew, and two of those, a Mr. Dixon, and we believe a Mr. Mold, of Chester, in an almost senseless state. The remaining one, a fine young boy, who acted as coxswain, Mr. William Henry Brown, son of the late Mayor of Chester, was drowned.

Death from Starvation.—Frightful Case.—An inquest was held on Wednesday, before Mr. Mills, at the Strand Union Workhouse, on the body of William Edward Carson, aged 32. Allen Phillips, police constable 48 F, said, on Friday afternoon he was on duty in Covent-garden, and found deceased, about half-past two o'clock, lying on the pavement under the Piazza, in a dreadfully exhausted and apparently dying condition. Witness had deceased conveyed to Charing-cross Hospital. The witness, in answer to further questions, stated that whilst deceased was at the hospital, he was questioned, and stated himself to have been a barrister's clerk in the Temple. He had not tasted food for three days. He had some bread in his pocket, but he said his destitution had become so great that his stomach could not take it. He was in the most deplorable condition, and on being searched all that was found on him was a piece of bread and an old pocket-book, containing his certificate of baptism. He was subsequently taken to the Union. Walter Pullman stated, that on deceased's arrival at the Strand Union Workhouse, he was in so exhausted a state that, notwithstanding he was promptly attended to by the medical man, he died in a few hours after his admission. After a considerable discussion, the jury returned a verdict, "That the deceased died from extreme exhaustion, produced and imbided from destitution and the want of the common necessaries of life."

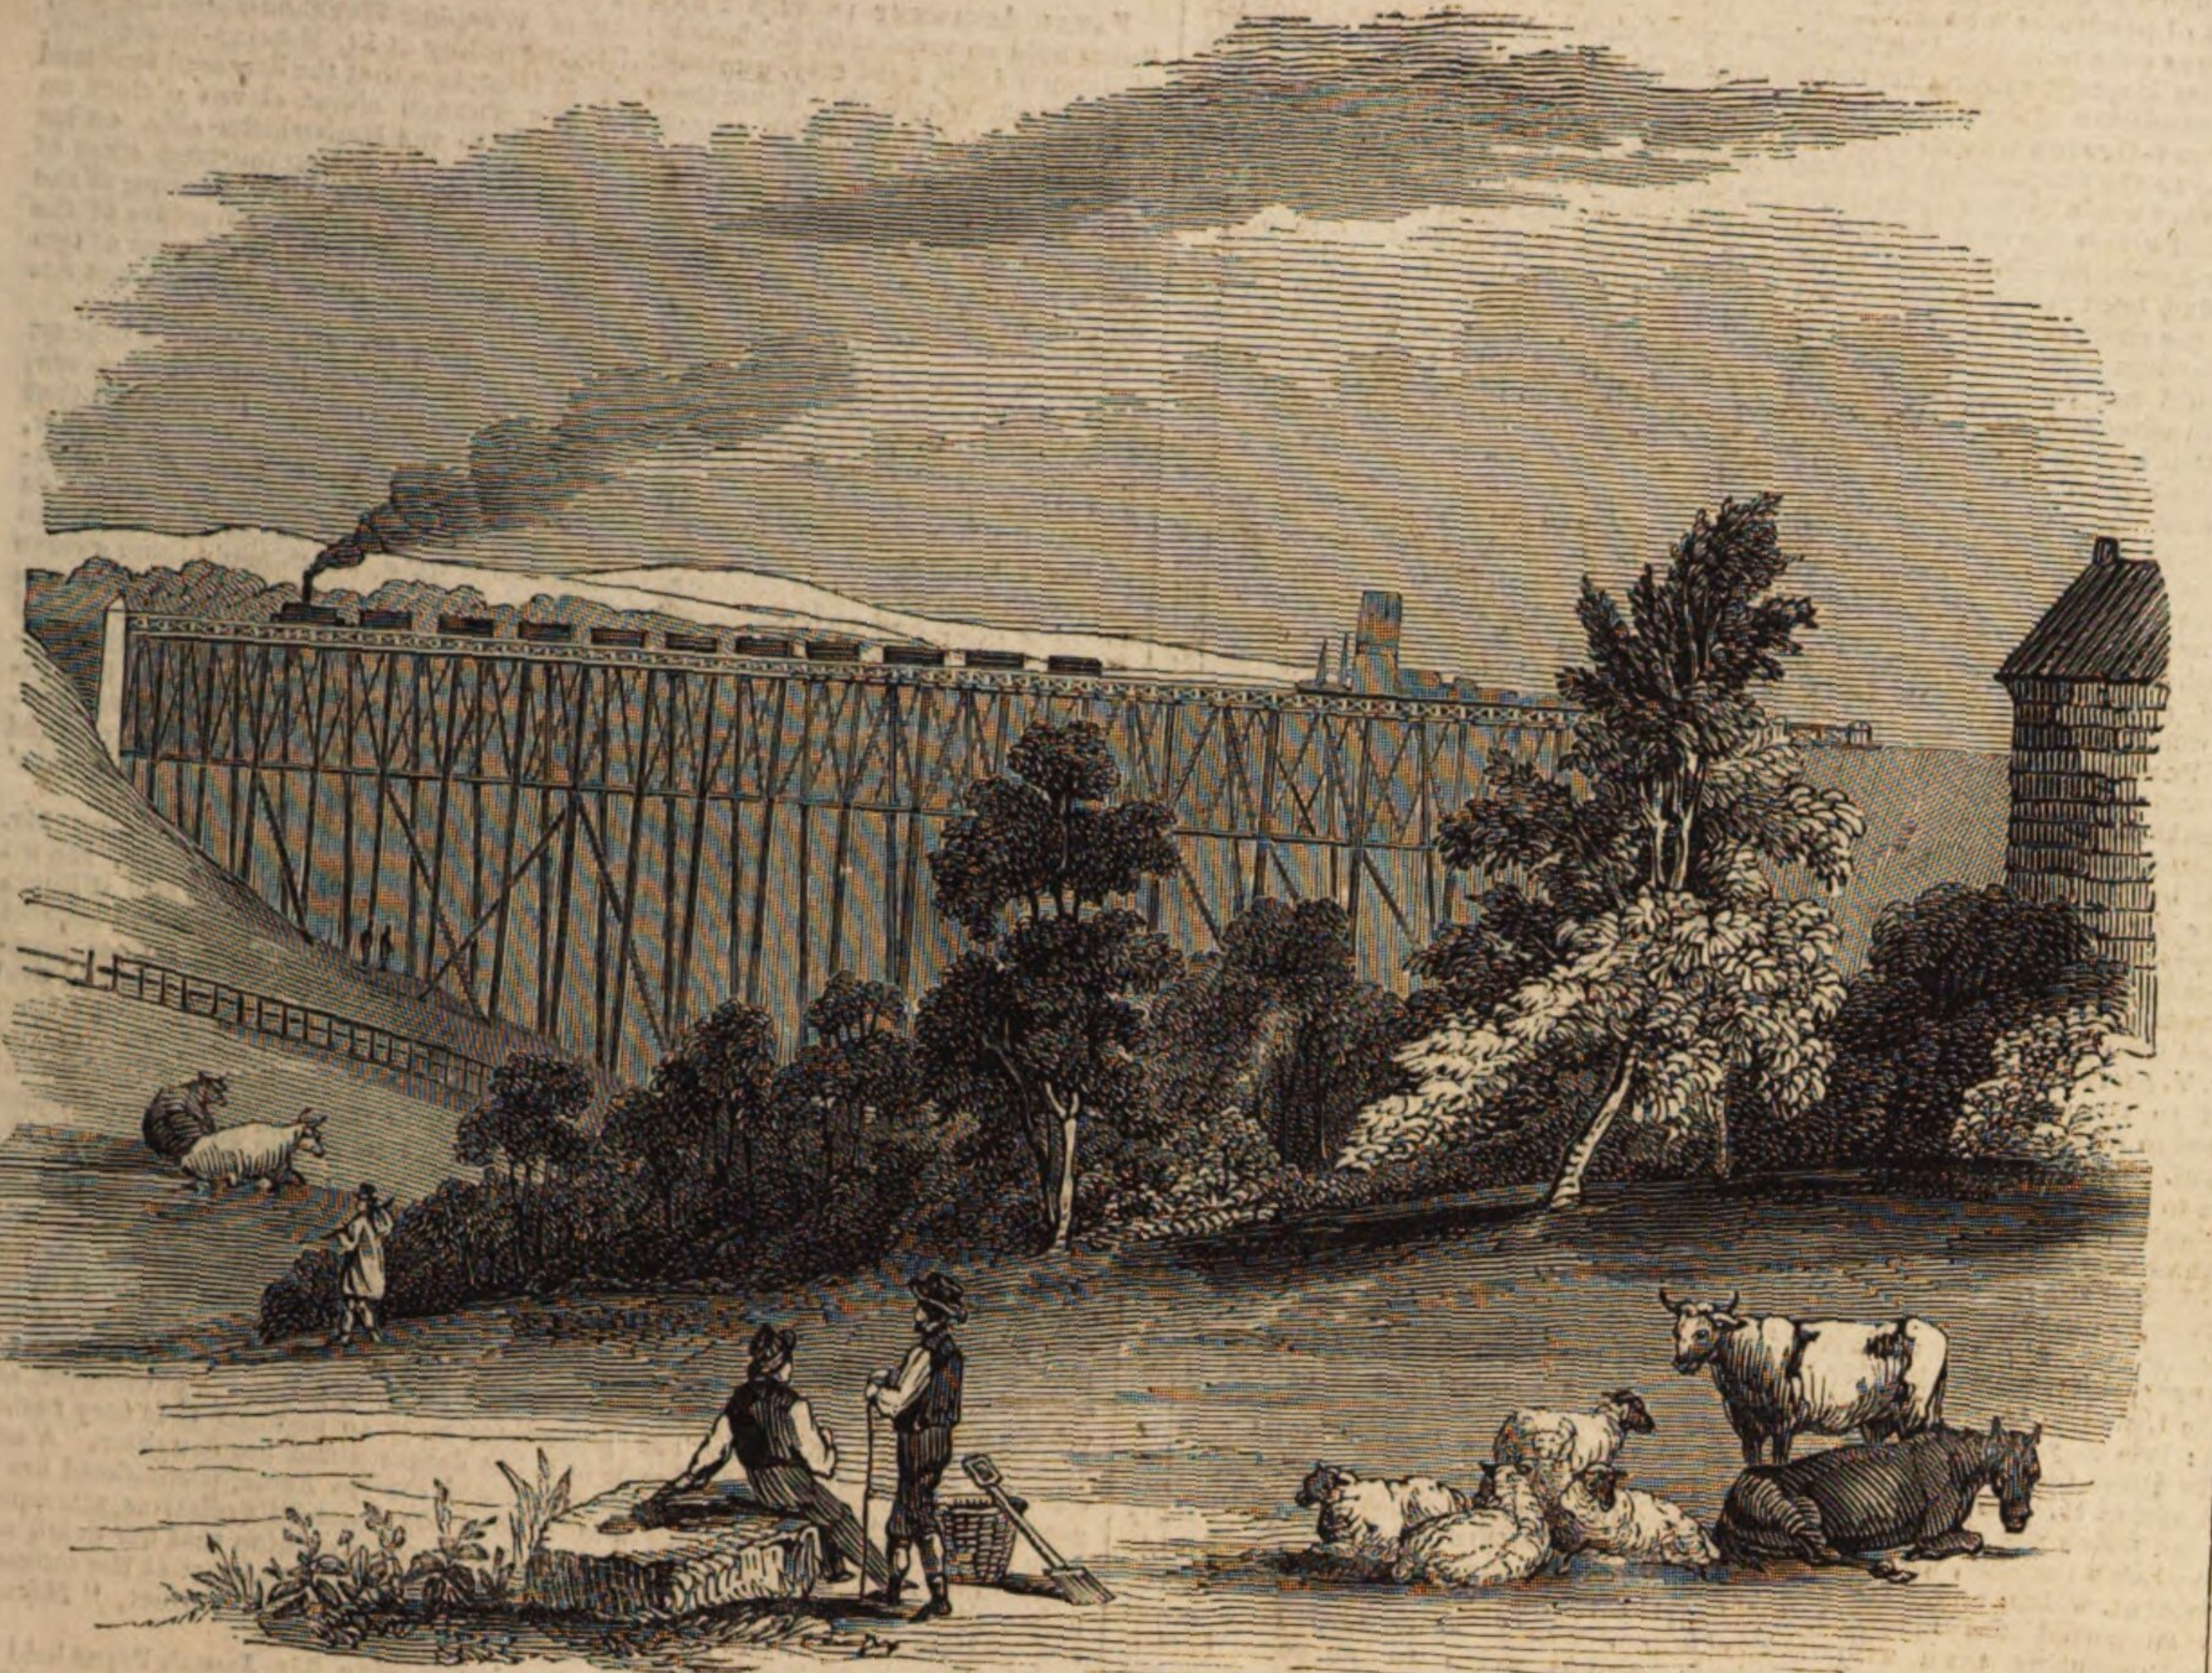
Fire in Great Portland-street.—On Wednesday morning a fire broke out in a spacious range of premises, the property of his Grace the Duke of Portland, but tenanted by Mr. Gotobed, corn-merchant and hay salesman, and Mr. Gould, an upholsterer, in Riding-house-lane, Great Portland-street. The damage done is as follows:—Considerable injury to building and stock in basement and ground floors, a large quantity of the stock in trade destroyed; Mr. James Gould, upholsterer, first floor, stock in trade, and furniture, damaged by fire and water, window-frames burned out; No. 9, Little Titchfield-street, Thomas Leay, tailor, building and stock damaged by water, &c. Both Mr. Gotobed and Mr. Gould were insured.

Scaffold Accident.—On Wednesday evening some scaffolding suddenly fell, on which were several men at work, in front of an extensive building in Gloucester-square, Regent's-park, and which is intended for the residence of Mr. George Wyatt, the architect. When the poor fellows were extricated, they were all found to be more or less injured: two of them, named John Humphries, a carpenter, aged 50, and Charles West, a labourer, aged 30, so seriously that they were conveyed in a state of insensibility to St. George's Hospital. The cause of the accident is said to have been from the putlogs, on which the planks of the scaffolding rested, giving way. The above unfortunate men are in a deplorable state of suffering, and but slight hopes are entertained for the recovery of West.

The Late Murder in the Mint.—It will be remembered that in the course of last February a woman of the name of Elizabeth Hobbs, the wife of a stoker, occupying lodgings in the Mint, Southwark, had a quarrel with her landlord, a man named James Carroll, who, in ejecting her from her apartment, threw her down stairs, and inflicted such other severe injuries as to cause almost her immediate death. At the coroner's inquest the jury returned a verdict of "Wilful Murder against James Carroll." Carroll, it appears, instantly decamped, and proceeded to Ireland. He was, however, taken into custody on Tuesday by police sergeant Sturgen, M 1, and subsequently examined at Union Hall Police Office. After hearing some formal evidence, Mr. Cottingham told the prisoner that he stood charged with the wilful murder of Elizabeth Hobbs, and that he was informed a true bill had been found against him at the Old Bailey. As soon as he received a certificate from the Clerk of Arraigns that he is the party mentioned, he should commit him to Newgate for trial. He, therefore, should remand him for the present.

Dalmas.—The daily papers have stated that Dalmas is to be transported for life. This is a mistake. No decision upon the subject has yet been given. The instructions to the Governor of Millbank Penitentiary are, that he shall be kept there for a month, in order that medical men may examine him. The result of their investigations will determine whether he will be sent to Bethlehem as an insane person, or be transported to a penal settlement.

The Loss of the Manchester.—The relatives of the unhappy persons who perished on board this ill-fated steamer have now the melancholy satisfaction of knowing that the remains of the sufferers have at last been cast up from the deep: for by the late arrivals from Hamburgh we learn that eleven bodies of the unfortunate sufferers have been picked up, comprising the whole of the passengers, the captain, Mr. Dudley, and part of his crew. The managers of the Hanseatic Steam Navigation Company, at Hamburgh, have received information from Busum, to the effect that the bodies of Captain Dudley, Mrs. St. George Smith, and her son, Mr. G. Smith, two seamen, and a gentleman unknown, with a large sum of money, amounting to 3,900 marks, tied round his neck, had been cast ashore near that place, and that the bodies of Miss Emily Smith, the daughter of Mrs. Smith, and Mr. P. Rothbury, of Leeds, had also been picked up off Cuxhaven, and brought into that port. A friend of Mr. Edgington, a magistrate at Hull, who was deputed to remain at the mouth of the Elbe so as to identify the bodies of Mrs. Smith and her son and daughter, has taken charge of them, and no doubt by the earliest packet to Hull will convey them to England for interment. The body of the unfortunate commander, Mr. Dudley, has been interred in the churchyard of Wessbussum, as also the other bodies.



TIMBER VIADUCT ON THE DARLINGTON AND NEWCASTLE RAILWAY.

THE SHERBURN VIADUCT, ON THE GREAT NORTH RAILWAY.

During the past month has been opened the Great Northern Line of Railway communication from London to Newcastle-on-Tyne, by which the county of Northumberland, the cities of Durham, Newcastle, Shields, and Carlisle, are brought near to the centre of England and to the metropolis, from which they were isolated by want of a railway. "England," says the Railway Chronicle, "is now covered with an unbroken chain of railway communication from Exeter, Bristol, Southampton, and Brighton on the Channel, to Newcastle and Carlisle, on the Scottish Border." The opening of this noble line, on the 18th ultimo, was, indeed, a brilliant affair. In the morning a party breakfasted in London, at the Euston Hotel; and in the afternoon the same party found themselves sitting comfortably at an early dinner in the town of Newcastle, having passed over three hundred and three miles, in nine hours and twenty-nine minutes, stoppages included! the rate of travelling having been a mean, including stoppages, of 40 miles an hour throughout the whole distance, the stoppages having occupied 1 hour and 40 minutes of that time.

"This rapid communication between London and the North is the work of several combined railways. The train which leaves Euston-square for Newcastle passes over the London and Birmingham line for 83 miles, to Rugby, where it enters on the Midland Counties. It then passes over 49¼ miles to Derby, along the North Midland 63¼ miles to Normanton, thence by 24 miles of the York and North Midland to York. From York there are 45 miles of the North of England line to Darlington, and thence 38½ miles to Newcastle. In all, over the six lines, 303 miles.

"It is this last portion which forms the Newcastle and Darlington Junction Railway. It is also a combination of several lines—from Darlington there are 23 miles of the new line, 4½ miles of the Durham Junction, 5 of the Pontop and South Shields, and 6 of the Brandling Junction—in all, from Darlington to Newcastle, 38½ miles."—Railway Chronicle.

Among the novelties of construction in this portion, the beautiful timber viaducts are masterly specimens of skill and economy, of which, that which crosses the Sherburn is represented in our engraving: it carries the line at the length of 70 feet, over a chasm 600 feet wide, at the cost of less than £10 per foot.

The value of timber viaducts, as the means of effecting the economical construction of railways, is a point of engineering practice becoming daily of greater importance. Those on the Newcastle and Darlington railway are the work of Mr. Harrison. The Sherburn construction is from 60 to 70 feet high; it is founded on piles driven 35 feet into the ground; several courses of masonry rest on these piles, and from the masonry spring the light tall timber baulks that support the railing. A single baulk, a foot square and 70 feet high, with a locomotive engine on the top of it, is at first sight an alarming statement. Here it is literally true—yet such is the excellent disposition of the timber, that the structure is rigid, free from vibration, and perfectly stable. The whole, including the masonry, piling, and stone abutments, cost only £10 5s. per running foot: without stone abutments the cost is reduced to £9 10s. per foot. This is by far the cheapest system with which we are acquainted, and to its solidity and excellence we can bear decided testimony. We question whether any arrangement of materials can be made more judicious and more economical than this. The direct pressure of the weight being made to rest vertically on the upright timber, is unquestionably that arrangement which will carry most. No obliquity of position, no arch form, no conceivable disposition, can increase the power of matter to resist this strain. The uprights are 20 feet apart, a distance which enables the horizontal baulks to carry the whole weight, while additional stiffness is attained by the intermediate diagonals. The long diagonal braces merely serve to keep the vertical baulks accurately in their positions. These diagonals are simply half-baulks, checked on the timbers, and fastened by a single bolt. The scantling is uniform throughout the structure.

The piles on which the whole structure is sustained, are about 35 feet long and 12 inches square, of American rock elm, and are driven till completely buried in the soil: on them rest blocks of masonry, 3 feet deep by about 4 feet square, on which the upright standards of the bridge, 12 to 13 inches square, are supported. These uprights are placed at distances of 20 feet between centres in the longitudinal direction of the bridge, in transversal rows of four each, 9 feet to 11½ between centres. By this arrangement, each pair of piles supports one upright, and the stone blocks and intermediate cross-pieces of timber serve to preserve the piles from exposure to the air. The upper ends of the standards are bound together by cross-beams of the same scantling, which rest upon the top of them, and by half-baulks, one on either side of the pile, about 10 feet below the former,—and lying upon four longitudinal pieces of the same size, which extend the whole length of the viaduct, and are fastened to the inside of the uprights abutting against the latter:—resting on the intermediate cross-pieces are the lower ends of as many struts, which rise at an angle of 45 degrees, bearing up at their junction a transverse beam of the same size, and to the same level as those which rest upon the tops of the upright standards. Between these cross-pieces and the stone blocks, transverse pieces, about 6 inches by 4 inches, run diagonally on either side of each row of uprights, crossing each other beneath the centre of the way. Upon the upper transverse beams, which lie on the tops of the standards, are laid nine longitudinal beams, five of which, including the two outer, are equidistant from each other, and 12 inches deep by 6 inches broad; the remaining four, which are 12 inches square, are so disposed as to be nearly beneath, and slightly wider than the lines of rails. Upon these, 3-inch planks are laid diagonally, at an angle of about 45 degrees, and above all there are longitudinal wooden sleepers, 12 inches by 6. The whole structure is surmounted by a slight railing, about 3 inches square, consisting of upright posts, 5 feet asunder, and intermediate diagonals. All the timber used is Memel, with the exception of the piles, which, as we have already said, are of American rock elm.

This viaduct is remarkably free from vibration—the passage of a train scarcely affecting it in any perceptible degree. The simplicity of the framing, also, gives great facilities for repairs or alterations, as almost the whole can be removed by degrees, without interruption to the working of the line.

Our sketch is taken at a short distance from Sherburn Hospital, founded by Bishop Pudsey, in 1180, for sixty-four poor lepers, a master, and other officers, and altogether, a noble monument of the benevolence of our ancestors.

Of interest akin to the construction of the Sherburn Viaduct, is the annexed specimen of the mechanical works on the Utica and Syracuse Railway. As a considerable length of this line passes through a deep swamp, a foundation of great permanency was required; this gave rise to a modification of the superstructure, and formed that which is known as pile road. The swamp varied in depth from 10 to 60 feet, and was nearly on a dead level throughout; the grade line closely corresponded with its surface, so that it was necessary to reach the hard bottom before any foundation could be effected. Piles were adopted as the cheapest and most efficacious means to secure a durable and substantial basis; they were driven to their places by Cram's Patent Steam Pile Driver, which, in our engraving, is shown driving piles for a railway, but is equally applicable to pile-driving in bridge constructions. The machine is formed of a platform, about twenty-five feet long, and eight broad; at one end are erected two pairs of leaders, or guides, in which the hammers are moved. Immediately behind the leaders are fixed the rollers, with the necessary breaks, and gearing for working the hammers, raising the piles, &c. The rollers are revolved by a small high-pressure steam-engine, occupying the rear of the machine. The arrangement of the leaders is the same as in ordinary piling machines: a curved piece of wood forces open the shears, when the hammers reach their elevation. The hammers are confined to the leaders by a groove; they weigh about 1000lb each, are made of cast-iron, and at their last blow fall through a space of 27 feet. A pair of piles are driven at one operation by this machine; when driven, cast-iron rollers are placed upon their heads, and the machine, by means of an inverted rail, moves on to the next place. The heads of the piles, sawed off to reduce them to the proper level, were found sufficient to supply the furnace with fuel.

The men employed in operating this machine on the Utica and Syracuse Railway, were a foreman, a steam-engineer, two brakemen, and two men in front at the saws; also a horse and cart to furnish water for the boiler. Properly geared in front of the machine, and between the leaders, was a saw that played upon a sway-bar, and could be pressed against either pile as it was driven home: being prepared by sharpening one end, and butting the other, it was drawn up by ropes, worked by the engine, secured in position between the leaders, and driven to the hard bottom.

This machine was manufactured in the United States, complete, at the cost of 2000 dollars. Mr. Weale, in his valuable "Examples of Railway Making," (whence the above details have been derived), states that Mr. Thomas Roberts, of Plymouth Dockyard, has patented an ingenious invention for scarfing timber, which may also be used for driving piles of great lengths.

ROMAN LONDON.

Some interesting discoveries have been made in the course of the past week of the foundations of several Roman buildings, in the centre of the city of London; and of various Roman coins, vases, lamps, and domestic implements. These have occurred in the course of the great excavation made for the formation of common sewers in Huggin-lane, Bread-street-hill, and Peter's-hill—a group of sites placed on the narrow slip of land between the ancient Watling-street and the Thames, at Queenhithe; and not far from the Roman miliary, or "London stone," the centre of the Roman city. Several of the foundations of the buildings are of a size and strength which would lead to the conclusion of their having been public edifices of great dimensions and importance; one of them, indeed, has been surmised to be the base of a temple. Others, of smaller size and slighter structure, have been supposed to be the foundations of houses. Several of the latter were found beautifully paved with large square brick tiles. The walls, in most cases, are constructed of rubble, alternately with broad layers of tile and concrete, after the Roman style of construction. Our first cut exhibits a portion of one of the more massive walls, found in the Bread-street excavation; and the second a clay lamp, from the same locality.

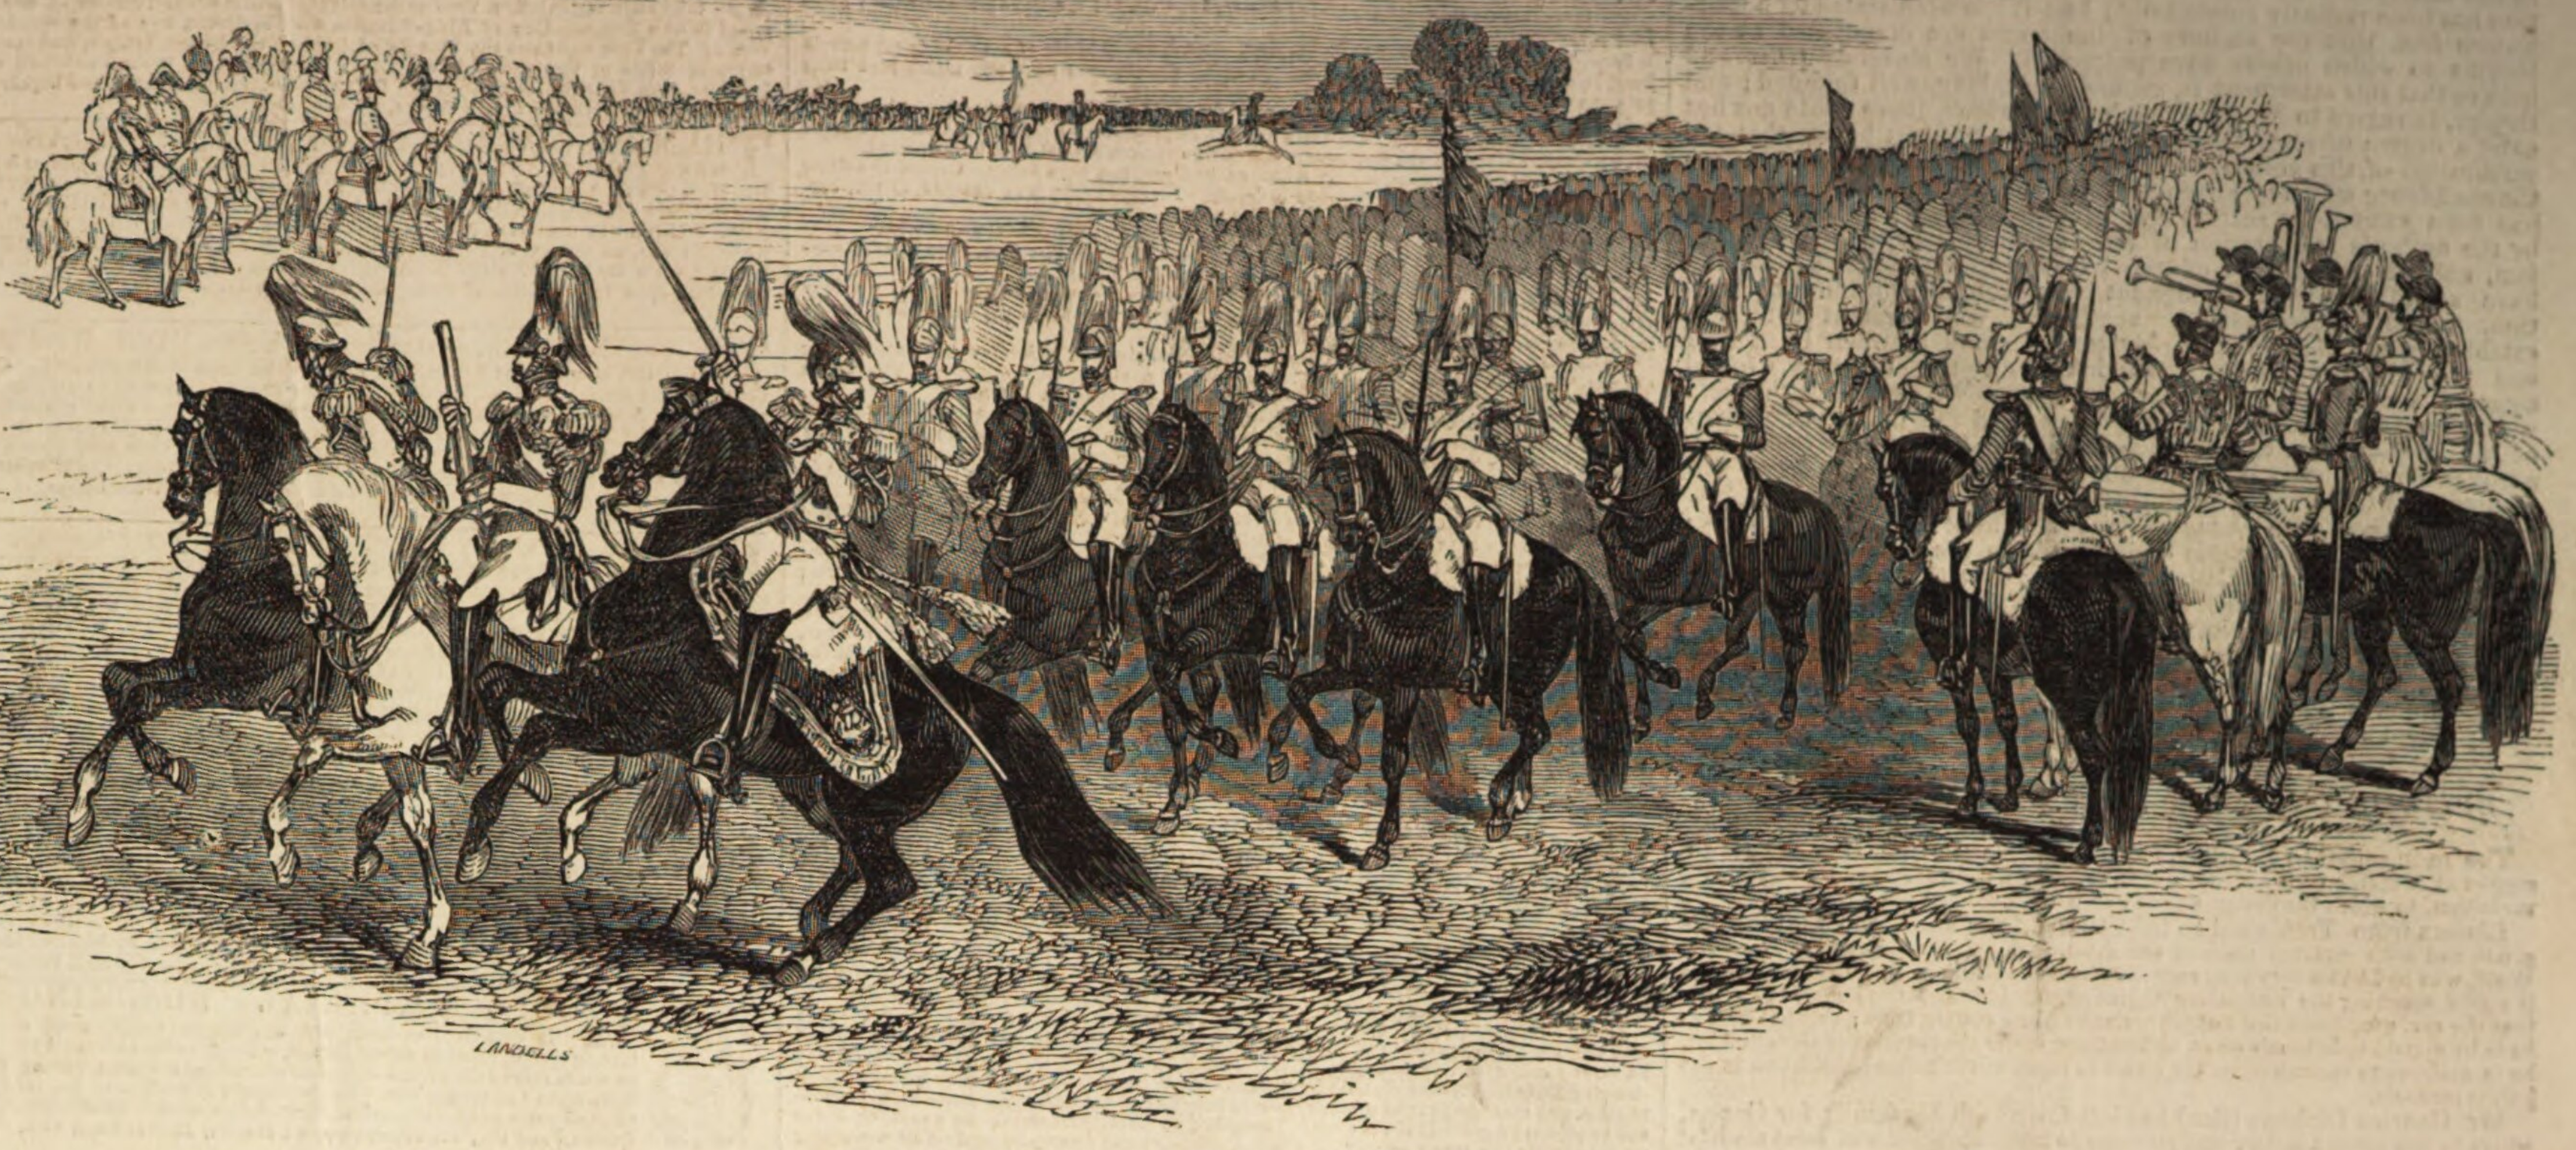
A Chapel on Wheels.—The Wesleyan Methodists of the Bingham circuit have erected a moveable wooden meeting-house upon wheels, capable of seating about 120 persons, at a cost of about £60, for the accommodation of several villages where no site could be obtained. The above place of worship was opened on Monday last.

Difficult to Please.—Thomas Lichfield, a hired servant, complained a day or two ago against his master, Mr. W. Chambers, of Wellingborough, for the non-payment of wages due up to the time he left. Mr. Chambers considered that he had no right to pay the complainant until he completed the period of his engagement. "He sets me such funny jobs," said Lichfield, "such as standing on a gatepost to whitewash the moon with a pot of blacking; at another time, to fetch a load of clouds to litter the horses: he tell'd me the other Sunday, when I wanted my dinner, to cut a Bath brick into mutton chops, and fry them in a four-wheel waggon at Vishuvious; it ain't likely I can do them there conjuration tricks." The complaint was discharged, and Lichfield ordered to return to his work.

St. Swithin's Day.—Monday last passed over without a shower—at least in the Metropolis; so that the weather-wise, who prognosticated a wet autumn, will probably calm their apprehensions. In the country, however, there appears to have been much rain. The Tyne Mercury says—"Monday, being the anniversary of St. Swithin, that venerable saint poured his unction upon Newcastle in the shape of frequent and heavy showers."



GRAND REVIEW IN HYDE PARK, ON SATURDAY LAST.

GRAND REVIEW IN HYDE PARK ON SATURDAY LAST.

The 1st Life Guards, stationed at Regent's Park barracks, the 2nd Life Guards, at Hyde Park barracks, the 2nd battalion of the Grenadier Guards, at St. George's barracks, the 3d battalion of the Grenadier Guards, at St. John's-wood barracks, the 1st battalion of the Coldstream Guards, at Portman-street barracks, and the 2d battalion of the Coldstream Guards, at Wellington barracks, left their respective quarters on Saturday morning, and arrived on the review-ground in Hyde Park about ten o'clock, and shortly after formed into line according to their rank in the service, the ground being kept by the 17th Lancers, from Hounslow.

At half-past ten o'clock the following troops were formed in contiguous columns, at a distance of twenty-five paces:—The 1st and 2nd Life Guards on the right, and then the second and third battalions of the 1st or Grenadier Foot Guards, and the two battalions of the 2nd or Coldstream Guards on the left. The whole line was commanded by Major-General the Hon. Edward Lygon, and the brigade of Foot Guards by Lord Saltoun. At eleven o'clock, punctually, the Duke of Wellington arrived on the ground, and was received by the "general salute," the colours of the Grenadier Guards dropping in honour of his being their colonel. The duke and a numerous staff, including a few ladies and numerous civilians, and the Earl of Cardigan in plain clothes, then went down the entire line, the respective bands playing "See the Conquering Hero comes;" after which they again returned to the saluting point, and the troops marched past (and saluted) in slow time, and then again, in columns at quarter distance, in quick time; after which they deployed in two lines, with their rear to Connaught-terrace, the Coldstream forming the front and the Grenadiers the rear line, at fifty paces distance, and the left flank companies of the whole thrown out as skirmishers. The two lines then advanced covered by the skirmishers) to the wood, and then halted, recalled the skirmishers, and the two battalions of the Coldstreams fired by companies from left to right; after which they retired, by filing through the line of the Grenadiers, who advanced, then halted, and commenced file-firing, and afterwards made a very fine charge towards the Serpentine; then halted, and retired in line covered by skirmishers.

The Coldstreams, after filing through the Grenadiers, re-formed, and retired in line, then halted, and fronted; and the Grenadiers filed through their line, and formed column at quarter distance in their rear. The Life Guards now came on from the rear, through the openings between the battalions, formed line, and charged towards the Serpentine; afterwards retired to the right and rear of the Infantry, who then retired towards Connaught-terrace, covered by skirmishers. The whole of the Infantry then deployed to the left of the second company of the second battalion of Coldstreams, which brought them facing the saluting point, when the whole line advanced in slow time, and presented arms after halting. The Duke then assured General Lygon and Lord Saltoun how satisfied he was with the movements, and the steadiness and precision with which they were performed, &c., and the troops then fired a volley, in order to unload their firelocks, formed four deep, and marched off the ground, leaving their bands to enliven the company till dispersed by the heavy rain.

The troops on the ground were as follows:—

1st Life Guards—Colonel Cavendish, Adjutant Anderton.

2nd Life Guards—Colonel Reid, Adjutant Sherwen.

2nd Battalion Grenadier Guards—Lieutenant-Colonel Lascelles, Adjutant Lindsay.

3rd Battalion Grenadier Gnards—Colonel Home, Adjutant Lambert.

1st Battalion Coldstream Guards—Colonel Shane, Acting-Adjutant Cocks.

2nd Battalion Coldstream Guards—Colonel H. Bentinck, Adjutant Lord Frederick Paulet.

The 1st Life Guards was headed by their colonel, the Viscount Combermere; the 2d Life Guards headed by their colonel, the Marquis of Londonderry; and the Coldstream Guards by their colonel, his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge. The colonels of the regiments, after passing, joined his Grace the Commander-in-Chief.

Some dissatisfaction among the officers of the Brigade was caused by an order from the Quartermaster-General, forbidding the usual tickets of admission to the several friends of the officers, while Yeomanry and Militia, if in uniform, could take their friends from among the crowd, thus rendering it impossible for many ladies to attend.

Our first engraving represents the Review-Ground; to which we append a view of the Infantry Barracks, adjoining the Birdcage-walk, St. James's Park, with the Parade, &c.

Frightful Execution in France.—On the 8th instant Pierre Lescure, who was accused of the murder of his father, but not brought to trial for want of sufficient evidence, and who has since been condemned to death for making away with his uncle, was executed at Riom (Puy-de-Dôme), France. The circumstances attending the execution were most horrifying. Being a man of herculean strength, he was bound in prison with an unusual weight of chains. It required at least half an hour for the smiths to unrivet them. Lescure was much weakened by his confinement, and assistance was offered to him in walking to the scaffold, but he declined it and went forward, and even ascended the ladder with a firm step. Fearing resistance the executioners of St. Fleur and Moulins were called in to aid the executioner of Riom. When Lescure appeared on the platform, his tall and athletic person towered above them and the priest who attended him. Unfortunately he was not bound with sufficient force to the swing-board, which also was too short for his length, so that his neck went beyond the groove, and the axe, when loosened, fell on the wood of the frame, and only wounded its intended victim. Upon this the executioner from St. Fleur got astride on the head of Lescure, but the convict struggled from the grasp, and, breaking his bands, rose again, with his shoulders and breast covered with his blood, his face flushed, and his eyes haggard, uttering cries that struck terror to the heart of every spectator. The priest approached the wretched man, and, presenting to him the image of Christ on the cross, succeeded by his exhortations in prevailing on him to again submit to be bound. Again the axe fell, and again missed its mark, only enlarging the first wound. Lescure's cries became still more astounding. The people shouted with indignation, and pressing round the scaffold, were on the point of overcoming the gendarmerie in attendance, while the priest, whose surplice was covered with blood, embraced and did all in his power to console and calm the mutilated man. The three executioners were for a time completely paralysed; but at last one of them mustered resolution enough to fix the devoted head in a proper position, and the axe, already streaming with blood, fell a third time, and completed its task.

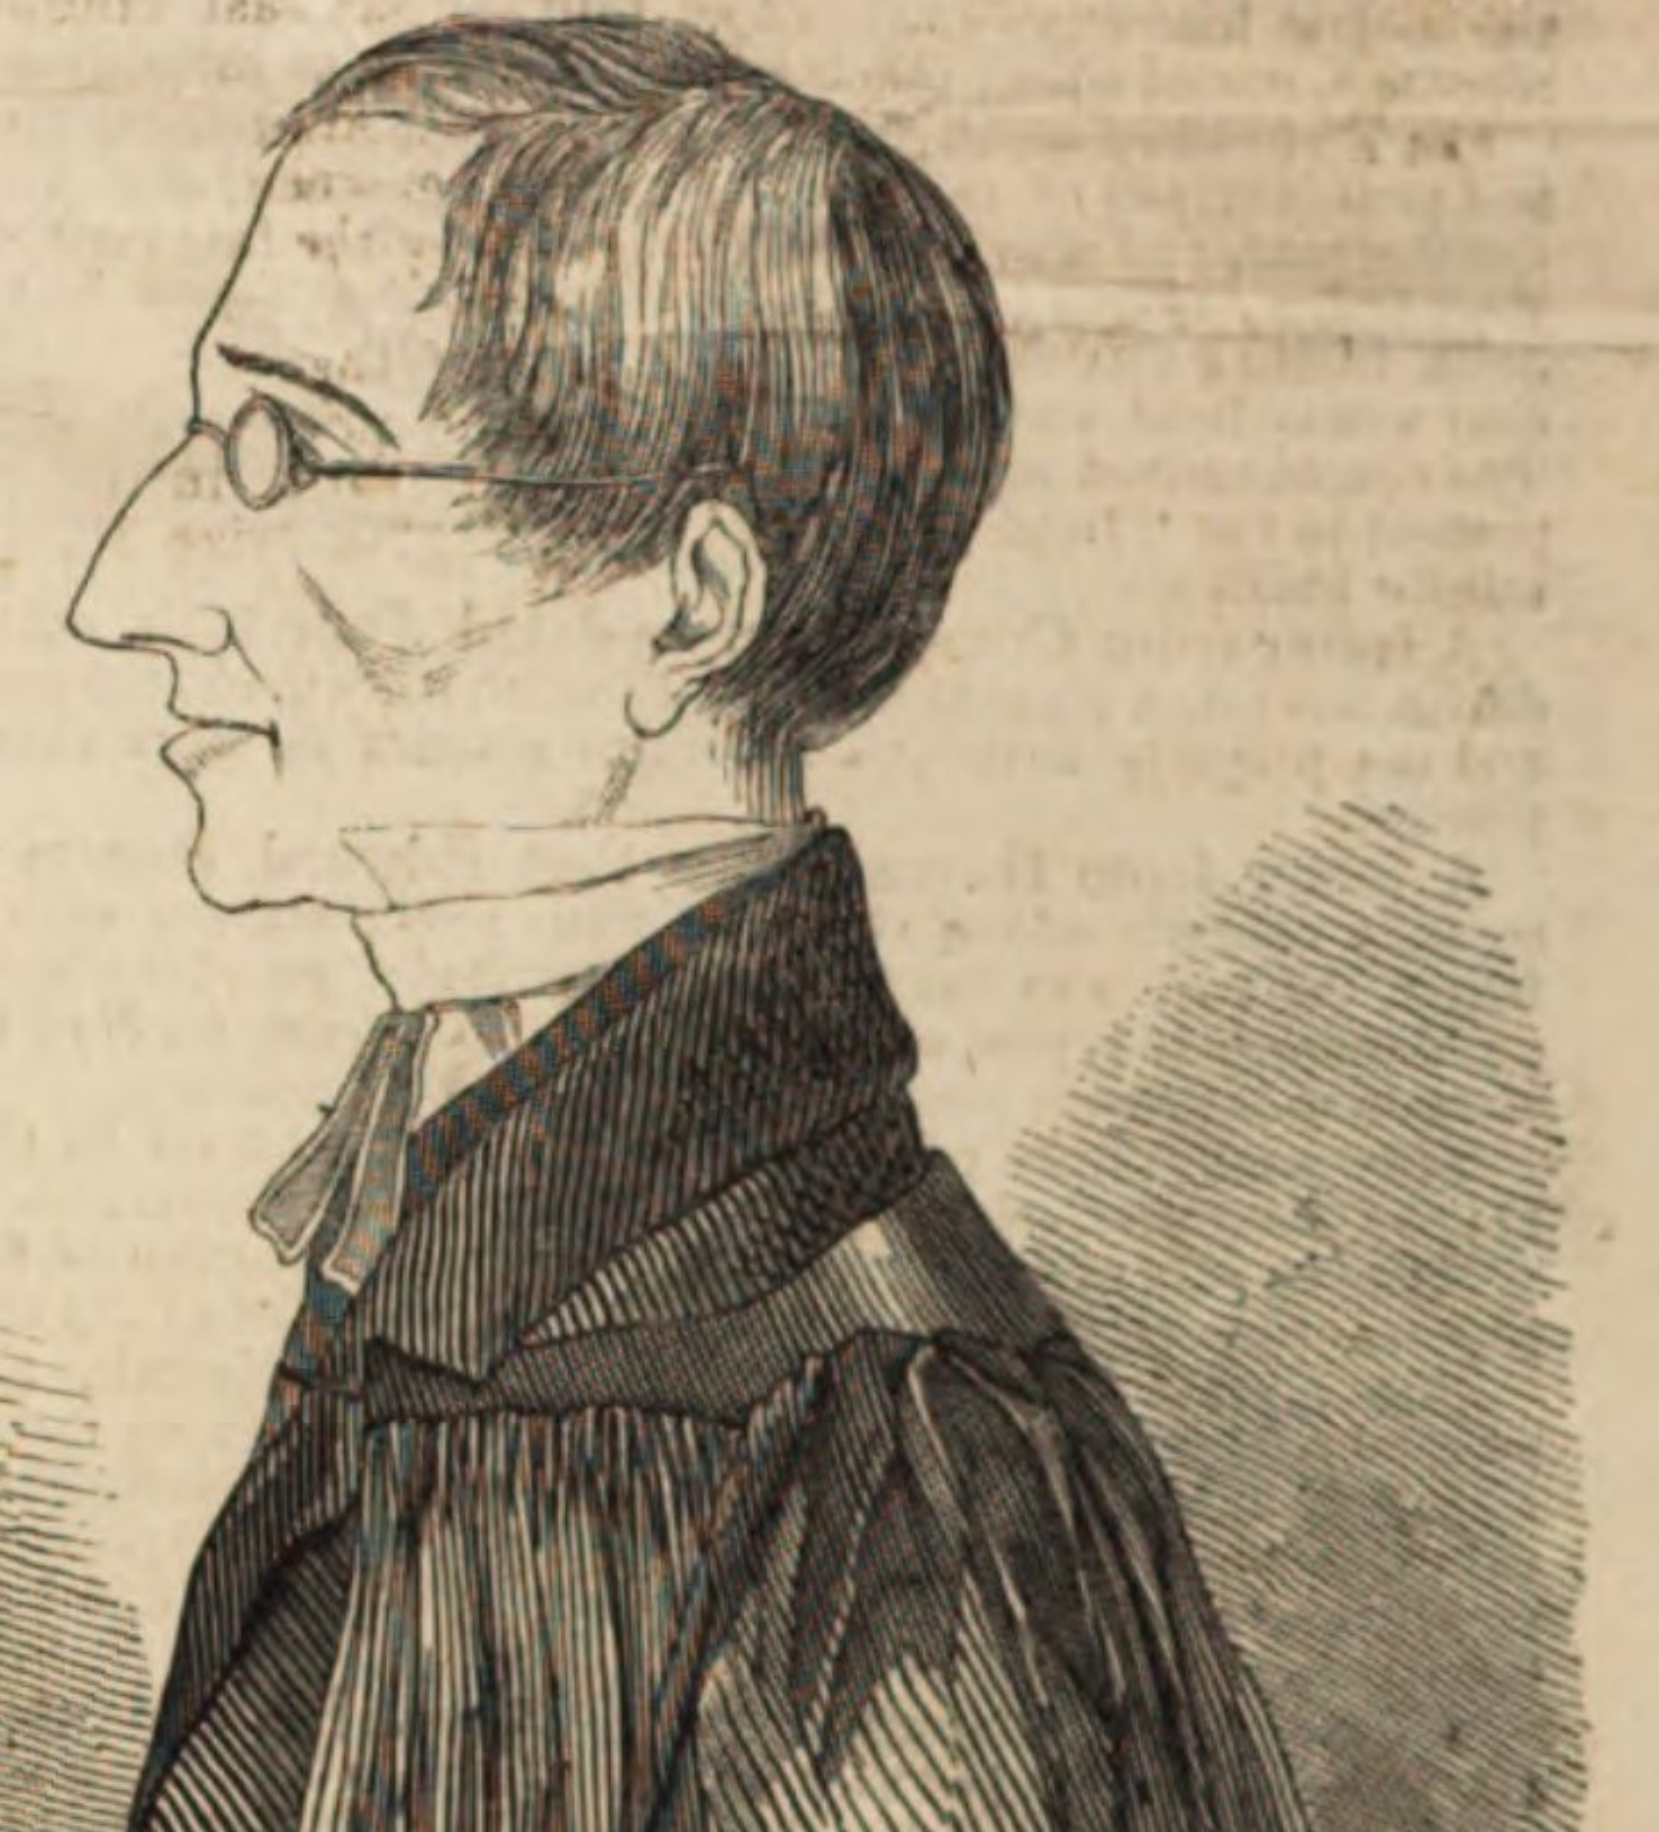
LITERATURE.

The English Review, or Quarterly Journal of Ecclesiastical and General Literature. July, 1844. No. 2.

There are some good articles in this number of the "English Review," and written in a spirit which we cannot but commend—a spirit more or less pervading them all—a spirit that, while it has in view the temporal good of man, looks more particularly to his spiritual welfare also. We are mistaken if the present is not superior, in several respects, to the first number. The article on Dr. Prichard's "Natural History of Man" is a lucid and well-reasoned essay, and evidently written by one who has well studied the subject. It arrives at conclusions respecting the origin of the human race, which cannot but legitimately flow from the induction of facts. The review of Lady Fullerton's "Ellen Middleton, a Tale," we deem to be a "fair account" of that excellent novel. We agree with the reviewer, that of all the religious novels we have ever seen, that eminently able and eminently womanly work has, with the most pointed religious aim, the least of direct religious teaching; it has the least effort and the greatest force; it is the least didactic and the most instructive. The paper on "Mr. Maitland's Essays on the Dark Ages," is full of information so far as it goes; but the reviewer does not clear up quite to our satisfaction the anecdote respecting Luther and his Latin Bible at Erfurth. The article on the "Progress of Education" we read with great pleasure; and we trust the prospects in regard to the right Christian instruction of the rising generation are as cheering as the writer indicates. The last article of the Review, on the "Old English Chroniclers—the Wars of the Roses," is a deeply historical and instructive essay. But that which exhibits more than any other paper the character and principles of this periodical, is the criticism of "Newman's Sermons on Subjects of the Day," the notice of which we purposely left till the last. If we have, in our former allusion to this subject, been at all mistaken as to those principles, we now happily have an opportunity of correcting ourselves and our readers, by quoting the following passage:—



THE REV. MR. NEWMAN.

"It remains, in conclusion, to offer some general remarks on the position, in relation to existing parties in the Church, which this volume [The Sermons] seems to indicate. That there has been, unhappily, within the last two or three years, a tendency in some quarters to certain doctrines and practices of the Church of Rome, is a fact which is too well known to need any proof. That such a tendency has been viewed with the deepest regret by the great body of those who have maintained Church principles is equally certain. Convinced as they are that the principles which they uphold do not favour the pretensions of Romanism, but present a firm barrier against them—and persuaded as they have been that the 'Tracts for the Times' (we say nothing of a few of the latter tracts) were not written by men who were either disloyal to the English Church, or favourable to Romanism, they have been justly unwilling to identify the tracts and their authors, whose services had been in many respects so great, with views opposed to their continual declarations, and to the tenour of many of their writings. It was surely, for instance, difficult to imagine that the author of 'Lectures on Romanism and Popular Protestantism,' could approve of the later doctrines of the 'British Critic.' A distinction is certainly perceptible between the doctrines of that periodical and those of the tracts, and of their authors, if not always in principles, yet certainly in the conclusions at which they respectively arrived. This distinction has been recently pointed out; and it has been stated as a well-known fact, that the authors of the tracts are dissatisfied at the lengths to which others have proceeded. We sincerely trust and believe that this statement is, generally speaking, well founded; and though, in regard to Mr. Newman's recent views, there could not but exist a degree of uncertainty, we were not without hopes that the publication of this volume of sermons might possibly tend to restore the confidence which had been lost, and to remove the doubts which had been excited by several recent circumstances; more especially by the author's retractation of strong expressions against Romanism, and his resignation of the vicarage of St. Mary's. But we have sought in vain throughout this volume for any declaration, or any expression of sentiment, which might suffice to establish some difference of objects and views between its author and the 'British Critic:' we have, on the contrary, found signs of agreement in too many respects. We say this with grief: we are too sensible of the great services, and the many excellences of Mr. Newman not to feel much at being obliged to arrive at such a conclusion; but it is in the discharge of a solemn duty to the Church, and to her great head, that we avow our conviction that Mr. Newman's views have changed—that they have received a developement which has caused them to diverge from the sound and genuine principles of the Anglo-Catholic Church; and that those who combine with Catholic principles a warm attachment to the English Church, and a conscientious repugnance to the errors and superstitions prevalent in the Roman communion, can no longer expect the co-operation of this distinguished and eminent writer."

We annex a portrait of the Rev. Mr. Newman, sketched in St. Mary's, and allowed to be a characteristic likeness.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

The monument to Southey, in Crosthwaite Church, Keswick, is to consist of a shrine with a recumbent figure of the poet, instead of a tablet with medallion, to which the design was at first limited.

Letters from Trebizond to the 24th of June announce that intelligence had been received there of the safe arrival at Bokhara of the Rev. Dr. Wolff, who had had a very kind reception from the Bokharees; but, since nothing is stated touching the interesting object of this journey, it is concluded either that the rev. gentleman had not yet arrived at any certain facts; or, that sent as he is by certain individuals on an undertaking under the sanction of Government, he is desirous to communicate the result to them and it before publication in the public journals.

Mr. Charles Dickens (Boz) has left town with his family for Genoa, where he has taken a house, and purposes to make a residence of some months' duration in Italy.

It is stated that the Post-office authorities have discovered that portions of the human body have been sent by post since the cheap postage. They have taken steps to prevent any such an occurrence in future.

Sir James Graham has intimated that he can see no ground whatever for interfering with the conviction of Barber, and the ship Agincourt, in which that convict and his accomplice Fletcher are passengers, is on her way to her destination. It is believed that if any confirmation of the propriety of the verdict had been considered necessary, that confirmation was furnished in the ingenious struggle to appear to be an innocent man, made by Barber after his condemnation, a struggle which showed how impossible it was that so clever a fellow could have been made the dupe by one so infinitely his inferior in every respect.

Letters from Alexandria, of the 26th of June, announce the arrival there, late on the afternoon of the 22d, of the Geyser, British war-steamer, from Marseilles, conveying his Excellency Sir Henry Hardinge, who landed as a private individual on the following morning, but re-embarked soon after and landed in state, in the Pacha's barge, at the palace gate, he was received by a guard of honour. At three, p.m., after Divine service, his Excellency paid his visit of ceremony to his Highness the old Pacha, who met him at the door of the audience hall. On the 24th he had another interview, which was private, and at three p.m., was entertained by the Pacha at dinner, after which both took a long drive. On the 25th Sir Henry left Alexandria for Cairo, where he would arrive at noon on the 26th. Several officers of the Pacha's household were sent to accompany his Excellency.

We regret to announce the death of Lord Kintore, which took place on Thursday week at his residence Keith Hall, Scotland. The immediate cause of his lordship's death, we understand to have been an injury that he had received in the chase many years ago, and which, although partially cured, had left effects from which his lordship never altogether recovered. His lordship was accounted the boldest huntsman of the day. His lordship has left two sons by his second marriage, one of whom succeeds him in the title and family possessions.

On Thursday week, Lieutenant Leeson, nephew to Lord Milltown, and youngest son of the late Hon. Mr. Leeson, of the Thorn, near Penrith, Cumberland, and who is on leave of absence from his regiment, which is in the East Indies, eloped to Gretna-green, with Miss Laura Bristow, a daughter of John Charles Bristow, Esq., of Easemere-hill, Ullswater, Westmoreland, and over whose head sixteen summers have scarcely flown. Pursuit was in vain. The couple arrived within a short time at Gretna-green, got married, and are at present in the "Land o' Cakes," and it is understood that they will shortly set sail for India.

A letter from Constantinople dated June 27th, states that an inundation has taken place at Adanna, by which more than 1000 persons have perished, and the property destroyed is said to amount to more than eight millions of piasters.

A letter from Havre states that Edward Donon Cadot, who was recently charged under very suspicious circumstances with the murder of his father, the banker at Pontoise, and acquitted after a lengthened trial, embarked on Monday at that port on board the Louis Philippe, for New York. An immense concourse of persons assembled to witness his departure.

The post-offices of France last year received in the various boxes 114,200,000 letters, of which 3,200,000 remained unclaimed. The 111 millions produced a sum of 41,569,200f. There were also distributed 60,000,000 of printed papers, which produced 2,400,000f., giving a total of 43,969,200f.

The Earl of Westmoreland, Lord Burghersh, and other distinguished noblemen, left Cologne on Sunday morning by the railroad for Ostend, embarked at midnight on board the General Steam Navigation Company's steam ship Rainbow for London, and arrived at London-bridge-wharf shortly after ten on Monday morning. The distance between Cologne and London occupied only twenty-seven hours.

We regret to announce the death of Lieutenant George Lennox, 4th Madras Cavalry, aged 23, the eldest son of Lord and Lady George Lennox. This gallant young officer died of cholera, on the 2d of May, on the march from Secunderabad to Trichinopoly, in camp at Ootatoor.

There was a severe gale and storm in the metropolis on Sunday morning last, which appears to have been felt much in the country. At Liverpool great apprehension was entertained for the shipping, but no damage of consequence was done. At Manchester on Monday last there was a severe thunder storm. The electric fluid entered a cottage in Ardwick, and struck a boy named James Edward Jackson, about ten years of age, who was with his sister. It appears that the boy was not fully dressed, and had a shawl wrapped round his waist. The boy states that when he felt the "ball of fire" run round his head he drew the shawl up so as to cover it. His hair, especially at the back part of his head, is singed, as well as the upper part of the shawl. His sister corroborates the boy's statement as to seeing flame going out at the front door.

On Thursday morning, shortly after one, a fire broke out upon the premises occupied by Mr. W. T. Purkis, publican, the Prince of Wales, Lewisham-lane, near Greenwich. The fire was not extinguished before the house was gutted, and the major part of the contents destroyed. The cause of the fire is unknown; the building is supposed to be uninsured.

A man named John Riley, a prisoner in Westminster Bridewell on a charge of robbing his master Lord Northbland of a Bank note, committed suicide on Wednesday night by suspending himself by the neck with a handkerchief to the fastenings of the cell window.

THE MARKETS.

Corn Exchange.—During the present week the arrivals of English wheat have been but moderate, hence the supply on offer at Mark-lane has been by no means large. For all descriptions the demand has been in a very sluggish state, and we have to report a further decline in the value of quite 1s per quarter. In foreign wheat, both free and in bond, exceedingly little has been doing, and, in some instances, the rates have fallen 1s per quarter. Although the receipts of barley have been small, that article has moved off slowly, at barely stationary prices. The malt trade has ruled dull, and the currencies have had a downward tendency. The show of oat samples has been extensive, owing to which the oat trade has been extremely heavy, and the value of the inferior parcels has given way 6d per quarter. Beans, peas, and flour have been a mere drug, and must be considered somewhat cheaper.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 43s to 53s; ditto white, 54s to 60s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 44s to 52s; ditto white, 44s to 54s; rye, 31s to 33s; grinding barley, 27s to 28s; distilling ditto, 31s to 32s; malting ditto, 32s to 34s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 59s to 60s; brown ditto, 57s to 60s; Kingston and Ware, 62s to 64s; Chevalier, 64s to 65s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 20s to 22s; potatoe ditto, 23s to 25s; Youghal and Cork, black, 19s to 21s; ditto white, 19s to 21s; tick beans, 29s to 31s; old ditto, 38s to 40s; grey peas, 31s to 33s; maple, 33s to 34s; white, 35s to 38s; boilers, 38s to 39s per quarter. Town-made flour, 45s to 48s; Suffolk, 38s to 39s; Stockton and Yorkshire, 37s to 38s, per 280 lbs. Foreign.—Free wheat, 58s to 61s; Dantzig, red, 50s to 56s; white, 56s to 61s. In Bond.—Barley, 23s to 24s; oats, brew, 17s to 19s; ditto feed, 14s to 17s; beans, 24s to 28s; peas, 28s to 29s per quarter. Flour, America, 24s to 25s; Baltic, 24s to 25s per barrel.

The Seed Market.—Owing to the prevailing fine weather, the demand for all kinds of seeds is heavy, and previous rates are barely supported.

The following are the present rates:—Linseed, English, sowing, 54s to 60s; Baltic crushing, 40s to 42s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 41s to 43s; hempseed, 35s to 38s per quarter; coriander, 15s to 20s per cwt.; brown mustard seed, 17s to 20s; white ditto, 10s to 13s; tares, 4s to 5s 0d per bushel; English rapeseed, new, £28 to £30 per last of ten quarters; Linseed cakes, English, £9 15s to £10 10s; foreign, £5 15s to £7 0s per 1000; rapeseed cakes, £5 0s to £6 0s per ton; canary 55s to 58s per quarter.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 8d to 8½d; of household ditto, 6d to 7½d per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Averages.—Wheat, 54s 10d; barley, 34s 10d; oats, 22s 3d; rye, 34s 2d; beans, 37s 8d; peas, 37s 3d.

Six Weeks' Averages that govern Duty.—Wheat, 55s 6d; barley, 33s 2d; oats, 22s 6d; rye, 34s 1d; beans, 37s 5d; peas, 35s 6d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 17s; barley, 5s; oats, 6s; rye, 8s 6d; beans, 5s 6d; peas, 7s. 6d.

Tea.—The present has been a very sluggish market for all kinds of tea; the finest parcels have, however, produced full prices, but all other descriptions have not maintained their previous value.

Sugar.—Notwithstanding the large supply of sugar in warehouse, the demand must be considered tolerably steady; yet most of the large dealers have purchased with some caution, under the apparent impression that present prices cannot long be supported.

Coffee.—In British plantation only a limited business has been doing. Ceylon is selling steadily, at 49s to 51s per cwt. for good ordinary. Foreign coffee is in demand, at full currencies.

Rice.—This market is inactive, yet we have no alteration to notice in the quotations.

Oils.—For all kinds of oils we have an improved demand, and prices are steadily supported.

Tallow.—The amount of business doing in tallow is by no means extensive, yet previous rates are supported. P.Y.C., on the spot, is held at 41s 3d to 41s 6d, while the price for forward delivery is 41s 9d to 42s per cwt.

Provisions.—In Irish butter scarcely anything is doing, at a further decline of 1s per quarter. The best foreign butter is in fair inquiry, at a rise of 2s per quarter. The bacon market is firm, at fully late rates. Other kinds of provisions are a dull sale.

Hops.—The accounts received from East Kent are, on the whole, favourable; but those from all other quarters intimate that the bine is looking unhealthy. The trade here is very inactive, at barely late rates. The duty is called £145,000 to £150,000.

Wool.—Some large public sales, which will be continued for ten days more, have taken place this week, and at which a good business has been doing, at full prices.

Potatoes.—In old potatoes, the supply of which is small, very little is doing, at from 60s to 85s per ton. New ones are in demand, at 8s to 16s per cwt.

Coals.—Adair's, 19s; Holywell Main, 23s; Ord's Redheugh, 18s; Old Tanfield, 16s; Townley, 19s 6d; Wylam, 21s 3d; Belmont, 24s 3d; Braddyl's Hetton, 25s; Gosforth, 25s; Adelaide, 24s 6d; Lambton, 24s 6d; and Stewart's, 25s per ton.

Smithfield.—Although the supplies of fat stock on offer have proved tolerably extensive, the general demand has ruled active, at full prices. Beef, from 2s 4d to 4s; mutton, 2s 4d to 4s; lamb, 4s to 5s; veal, 3s to 4s 4d; and pork, 2s 4d to 4s per 8lbs, to sink the offals.

Newgate and Leadenhall.—For each kind of prime meat we have to report a steady inquiry, while the value of other qualities has been mostly supported. Beef, from 2s 4d to 3s 4d; mutton, 2s 4d to 3s 8d; lamb, 4s to 5s; veal, 3s 2d to 4s 2d; and pork, 2s 4d to 4s per 8lbs, by the carcase.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent).

The abundance of money still continues, and the brokers' prices range from one and three quarters to two per cent.

The half-yearly meeting of the St. Katherine Dock Company was held on Tuesday, and a dividend of two-and-a-half per cent. declared. The comparative statement of ships entered inwards for the last six months showed an increase over the previous six months of sixty ships and 6930 tons, the number standing relatively 375 ships, and 75,997 tons, and 435 ships, 82,927 tons. The goods landed, delivered, and warehoused, were all increased.

At the recent meeting of the Grand Junction Railway Company, it was resolved that the £12 10s. per share agreed to be subscribed towards the Lancaster and Carlisle line, should be shortly called for. The Chairman (Mr. Moss), in the course of the proceedings, stated that all differences between the Grand Junction and London and Birmingham boards had ceased to exist, and that the general arrangements in progress would ultimately prove highly beneficial to both railways. It is understood (although no official announcement was made at the meeting) that the terms are:—"An alliance, offensive and defensive, against all competing lines. That the Holyhead be left to the Birmingham, free of any opposition, direct or indirect. The Shrewsbury lines to be in abeyance for the present, but to be ultimately left to the Grand Junction. The Grand Junction to withdraw all connection with the London and York scheme." This arrangement must be a subject of congratulation to the shareholders of both lines, as the warfare carried on only tended to mutual injury. There is little doubt, however, that the London and York scheme has hastened this beneficial result. Should the last-mentioned line ever be carried out, the most serious injury must be felt by the London and Birmingham. The other material sufferers would be the Midland Counties, North Midland, and York and North Midland Railways. The array of interest on either side, whenever the question is presented to the Legislature, will be unsurpassed in the annals of private influence. It would not be just, however, to refer to the subject more fully until it becomes a public question.

The English Market betrayed more than usual activity at the commencement of the week, the Government broker having taken, on Monday, a purchase of £15,000 Consols at 99½, which, joined to some other bargains, gave a favourable turn to prices. Consols, at close of business, quoted 99⅝ to ¾; Three per Cent. Reduced, 100⅛ to ¼; Three-and-a-Half per Cent. Reduced, 102⅞ to 103; New Three-and-a-Half per Cents., 102½; Long Annuities, 12 9-16; Bank Stock, 199 to 200; India Stock, 284½ to 285½; Exchequer Bills, 76 to 78; India Bonds, 94 to 96 pm. These prices were well supported by operations on the part of the public, as well as the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt. On Wednesday, however, some extensive sales produced a reaction, and Consols quoted only 99⅝, at which the commissioner took his purchase. Quotations were afterwards a shade worse, and have not since advanced, Consols, at the close of the week, marking 99¼ to ⅜; Three per Cent. Reduced, 100 to ⅛; Three-and-Half per Cent. Reduced, 102¾; New Three-and-a-Half per Cents., 101⅞; Exchequer Bills, 77 to 79; India Bonds, 96; India Stock, 286 to 287, Long Annuities, 12½; Bank Stock, 199 to 200.

The foreign money-market opened with considerable animation on Monday, prices being well supported, and several transactions in the speculative stocks gave a good tone to quotations. Spanish Actives quoted 22⅝ to ¾; Three-per-Cents, 33 to ¼; Mexican, 35⅞ to 36; Deferred, 15¾ to 16; Peruvian, 26 to 27; Dutch Two-and-a half per Cents, 61½ to ¾; the Five per Cents, 101½ to ⅝; Danish, 88 to 89; Colombian 13⅝ to ⅞; Chilian, 104 to 106; Brazilian, 83 to 84; Belgian, 103½ to 104½. The arrangement of the half-monthly account on Tuesday was a very quiet affair, money being easy at from three to five per cent., and the differences small. Prices, however, were not maintained on Wednesday, as the heaviness in the English house influenced all speculative trantactions. A slight tendency to advance was perceptible in Spanish on Thursday, quotations improving a point. Some transactions were also effected in the Active Bonds, without the overdue coupons of all years previous to 1844. The price quoted was 17¾. Nothing of any moment occurred towards the close of the week, and final quotations were—Brazilian Bonds, 80; Columbian, 13⅝; Mexican, 35½; Portuguese, 45½; Spanish Actives, 22⅞; Three per Cents do., 33¼; Venezuela, 41½; Dutch Two and a-half per Cents, 61⅞; Five per Cents, do., 101⅝ to ¾.

The railway market has been steady during the week, without any marked variation in prices. The settlement on Tuesday passed off quietly, and prices maintained their previous quotations. The final prices, when neither premium nor discount is mentioned, stand:—Birmingham and Derby, 68 to 70; Birmingham and Gloucester, 99; Bristol and Exeter, 75 to 77; Eastern Counties, 12¾: ditto (New), 12½; ditto (Extension), 1 to ⅛ pm.; Great North of England, 101 to 101½; Great Western, 53 to 54; London and Brighton, 47 to ½; London and Blackwall, 7⅝ to ¾; London and Birmingham, 222 to 224; Croydon, 17½ to 18¼; South Eastern and Dover, 36 to ½; Paris and Rouen, 38½ to 39; Paris and Orleans, 38½ to 39; Norwich and Brandon (New), 5½ to 6; Orleans, Tours, and Bordeaux, 1 to ½; South Western, 81½; Yarmouth and Norwich, 7 to 9 pm.

TWENTY YEARS LOSS of HAIR, and WONDERFUL RESTORATION.—"Church-street, Whitby, October 19, 1841.—Gentlemen,—Of the last supply of OLDRIDGE'S BALM OF COLUMBIA, every bottle was sold immediately on receipt, and I have many more bespoke, only waiting for a further supply, which I hope you will send without the least delay. Orders have poured in more than ever since the powerful effects of the Balm have been so decisively demonstrated in the cases of several credible and respectable inhabitants of the town. One instance, among others which have attracted particular attention, is the case of a gentleman who had had little or no hair for twenty years; he had tried numerous preparations in vain, and ultimately had his head shaved and wore a wig. At my recommendation he tried the Balm; and, after using it according to the directions, for a short time, the young hair appeared, and he has now as fine a head of hair as any person in Whitby. Yours, &c., John Kilvington.—To Messrs. Kennaby, Brothers, 10, Westmoreland-buildings, Aldersgate-street, London."—OLDRIDGE'S BALM prevents the hair turning grey, and the first application causes it to curl beautifully, frees it from scurf, and stops it from falling off.—Price 3s. 6d., 6s., and 11s. per bottle.—Ask for Oldridge's Balm of Columbia, 1, Wellington-street, Strand.

INTERESTING TO LADIES.

To Messrs. Rowland and Son, 20, Hatton-garden, London.

Percy-place, Landport, Portsmouth, April 4th, 1844

Gentlemen,—I think it but an act of justice to inform you of the benefit I have derived from the use of your admirable Macassar Oil. About six months ago I found my hair getting daily more weak and thin, and much discoloured from a practice I had adopted of wetting it continually; fearing that I should lose it entirely, and hearing of the efficacy of your Macassar Oil, I have for some time past constantly used it, and the result is, that my hair is now perfectly restored and much improved in appearance and colour, having become thick, dark, and glossy; it also curls freely without the use of paper, which it never did before. To all my friends I have warmly recommended your Macassar Oil as an excellent restorative and preservative for the hair. As I have an objection to see my name in print, I beg you will not publish it; but you are at liberty to show this letter, or make any other use you please of it, and refer applicants to me, if necessary, in proof of the efficacy of your Macassar Oil.

Your obedient servant, * * * * * * * * * *

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL preserves and reproduces the Hair; prevents it from falling off or turning Grey; changes Grey Hair to its Original Colour; frees it from Scurf and Dandriff, and makes it beautifully soft and curly.

Ask for "ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL." All others are Fraudulent Counterfeits.

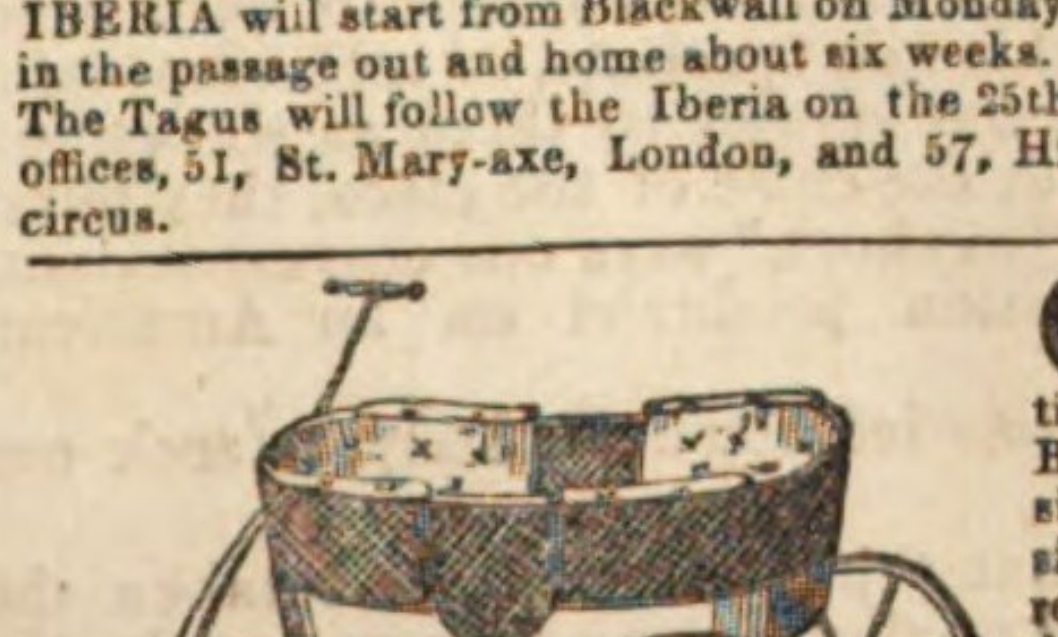
WHITE BRANDY, for Preserves and Home-made Wines.—We are supplying this exceedingly pure spirit, of the highest legal strength, by the single Gallon or upwards, at the low rate of 16s. per Imperial Gallon. Our IMPROVED BRITISH COGNAC, and the LIQUEUR GINGER BRANDY, both of which are likewise in great request, continue at 18s., as heretofore.—Beware of assumed agencies, and order by post, direct from the Proprietors, Henry Brett and Co., Old Furnival's-inn, Holborn-bars.

SILVER, and IMITATIONS of SILVER PLATE.—The PARISIAN SILVER DETERGENT (1s. 6d. per bottle) gives a rich and lasting lustre and polish to silver plate and its imitations: it at once removes all stains, and renders the imitations of silver equal to real silver in appearance. In all the operations of plate cleaning and polishing, it saves much trouble and expense. Sold by UPTON and Co., 33, George-street, Hanover-square; and 66, Basinghall-street, City.—N.B. Gold Detergent, 2s. 6d. per bottle; Lacquer and Bronze, 1s. 6d. each; lamp, 1s. 4d. The trade supplied.

INTERESTING and CLASSICAL EXCURSION.—A six weeks' Tour by steam to Athens, Smyrna, and Constantinople, calling at Gibraltar and Malta, with the option of visiting en route Vigo, Oporto, Lisbon, Cadiz, and Gibraltar.—The Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company's well known splendid steam ship IBERIA will start from Blackwall on Monday, August 5, for the above ports. Time occupied in the passage out and home about six weeks. Very superior accommodation for passengers. The Tagus will follow the Iberia on the 25th August. For terms apply at the Company's offices, 51, St. Mary-axe, London, and 57, High-street, Southampton; also at 33, Regent-circus.



CHILDREN and INVALIDS.—To be Disposed of, an immense collection of Children's Chaises, Vis-a-vis, Phaetons Barouches, Waggons, of various designs and sizes, &c., from the cheapest to the most expensive builds, Second hand as well as New, at very reduced prices. Also all the out-of-door and in-door Invalid Wheel-chairs, constructed especially for the comfort of Invalids. On SALE or HIRE, Self-acting Wheel-chairs, by which any degree of exercise for the arms may be obtained. Long Bed or Spinal Carriages for the very debilitated. Any of the above can be had with hoods of macintosh, leather, or canvas, to let up and down.
INGRAM'S MANUFACTORY, 29, City-road, Finsbury-square.

EXCELLENT TEAS of their kinds, in 6lb. bags and 12lb. chests, at 4s. 6d., 4s. 2d., 3s. 10d., 3s. 4d., and 2s. 10d. per lb.; Young Hyson, 3s.; Small Bright Gunpowder, 4s. 10d. By sending to the East India Tea Company's Offices, No. 9, Great St. Helen's Church-yard, Bishopsgate, ready money purchasers will derive all the advantages they have a right to expect from the importers.

CHASTON'S PATENT INDIA RUBBER ELASTIC CORN PLAISTERS are generally admitted to be the most unique and best to eradicate either Hard or Soft CORNS. From their elastic quality, they can be worn with perfect ease, however tight the boot or shoe fits the foot. Invented and sold by B. CHASTON, Chemist, Watton, Norfolk. N.B.—On receipt of thirteen postage stamps (free), a box will be forwarded (also free) to any part of the Kingdom.

SEWELL and CO.'s WAVERLEY CHINTZ.—This novel and peculiar furniture print is just introduced, and offered at 9½d. a yard. It will be found suited to all purposes, and fast in colours. Sewell and Co. beg also to call attention to a large importation of magnificent French Carpets, considerably below value: they are in sizes well adapted for ladies' rooms. Families purchasing before leaving town will find some very cheap lots of Irish Cloths, Damask Table Linen, Sheetings, &c., Brussels Carpets, and Washing Damasks.—Compton House, Frith street and Compton street, Soho square.

DENTAL SURGERY.—32, Haymarket, St. James's.—Messrs. MOSELY, Surgeon-Dentist, by appointment to his Majesty the King of Hanover, may be consulted daily, as usual, 32, Haymarket. Their TERREOUS ARTIFICIAL TEETH, fixed without springs or wires, fastening the adjoining teeth, and guaranteed to retain their colour during the life of the patient. Teeth filled with gold, however large the cavity; loose teeth fastened without ligatures; children's teeth regulated, and every operation relating to dental surgery.

WATTS'S WRITING FLUID.—This beautiful Writing Fluid has for years been extensively used among bankers, merchants, &c. It flows freely, and does not corrode the metallic pen, and changes from blue to a permanent intense black. Purchasers should ask for "Watts's Writing Fluid"—Sold in bottles, 6d., 1s., and 3s., by all stationers; and Wholesale at the Manufactory, 12, Brooksby-street, Barnsbury-park, Islington. Also, Watts's permanent Blue, Red, and Black INKS, of surpassing brilliancy.

SILVER IMPLESITE, an EFFECTUAL SUCCEDANEUM for STOPPING TEETH.—This Preparation causes no pain or inconvenience; the application is so simple that any person can use it without the chance of failure; it arrests farther decay, and will remain firm for years. Price 2s.—Agents: Barclay and Sons, Farringdon-street; Mr. Ripley, Nicholas-lane, City; can be sent free by post for 2s. 2d., on receipt of post-stamps to Mr. Ripley, or the Proprietor, J. Marder, Jun., Operative Chemist, Lyme, Dorset.

THE TOILET OF BEAUTY furnishes innumerable proofs of the high estimation in which GOWLAND'S LOTION is held by the most distinguished possessors of brilliant complexions. This elegant preparation comprehends the preservation of the complexion, both from the effects of cutaneous malady, and the operation of increased temperature, by refreshing its delicacy, and sustaining the brightest tints with which beauty is adorned.—"Robt. Shaw, London," is in white letters, on the Government Stamp, without which none is genuine. Prices, 2s. 9d., 5s. 6d., quarts, 8s. 6d. Sold by all Perfumers and Chemists.

GRAFFTEY'S POMPEIAN HAIR DYE, Price 3s. 6d. and 5s. 6d., is warranted to change Hair to a permanent, natural, and beautiful Brown or Black, without staining the skin or injuring the hair. This liquid is in three preparations—1st, a Black; 2nd, a Dark; 3rd, a Lighter Brown.—Sold only at Grafftey's, 23, Warwick-street, Regent street, London; and can be obtained of any of his Agents, or direct by sending 1s. extra, in postage stamps. Also, GRAFFTEY'S DEPILATORY, the most certain and innocent preparation for removing superfluous hair. Price 2s. 6d. and 4s. 6d. Be sure to order Grafftey's.

LOAN of the GRAND DUKE of BADEN of 5,000,000 florins, negotiated in the year 1841. The seventh distribution will take place at Carlsruhe, publicly and irrevocably, on the 1st August, 1844, when 400 gains will be obtained. One gain of 35,000 florins, 10,000, 5000, 3000, &c. The lowest gains being 65 florins each; and 12 florins are equal to £1 sterling. Price of a share, 10s.; eleven for £5; twenty-three for £10, &c.—For particulars and bonds of the above loans apply to Messrs. J. A. Schwarzschild, bankers, Frankfort-on-Maine; or, to save postage, all applications by letter can be addressed Mr. A. Schwarzschild, Plough-court, Lombard-street, London.

THE SOCIETY of DANCERS and TEACHERS of DANCING (Male and Female) of the United Kingdom.—It is earnestly requested that all in the profession immediately enrol their names as members, to assist in forming a fund for the relief of themselves (if required) in old age or distress. All donations will be gladly received at the Society's Bankers, Messrs. Coutts and Co., or by Mr. Beckett, Secretary.—Office, 32, Gerrard-street, Soho, where every information can be obtained. A Committe every Tuesday evening, Five o'clock, at the Office. No admission fee until after the 29th of September.

LIGHT SUMMER COATS.—Messrs. BURCH and LUCAS beg to inform gentlemen that they keep a large assortment of this most fashionable and agreeable SUMMER GARMENT ready made in Angolas, Cashmeretts, Tweeds, &c., of superior workmanship and taste; being made under the superintendence of the proprietors, they can warrant their being of better materials and lower price than any other respectable tailor's in London—viz., from 20s. to 42s. N.B. All garments of an inferior or slop description are excluded from this establishment. BURCH and LUCAS, Tailors, &c., 52, King William-street, London-bridge, established 1818.

WORN-OUT PLATE immediately RE-SILVERED.—COGAN and GILLO'S NOVARGENT, or Silver Solution, immediately re-silvers Plated Articles, and Plates German Silver, and all alloys of copper, by depositing a Coating of Pure Silver, and Preserves and Cleanses Plate and Plated Goods. It is used with less trouble than the ordinary process of cleansing, and is warranted not to contain Mercury or anything injurious, as it deposits nothing but Pure Silver. Sold by Messrs. BARCLAY and SONS, 95, Farringdon-street, London, at 1s. and 3s. the Bottle; and to be had of all the principal Chemists and Booksellers in the United Kingdom.—None are genuine, unless signed on the wrapper by L. D. Cogan and R. Gillo.

ESSENCE of the MOSS ROSE.—J. and E. ATKINSON, Perfumers, beg respectfully to recommend to the nobility and gentry this New Perfume, as much preferable to the Esprit de Rose, so long a favourite, but objected to by many as too pungent, and not so reviving as other perfumes; but the Essence of the Moss Rose differs from that extracted from the Chinese and other roses, being more delicate, fragrant, and permanent, and they confidently expect will become a favourite with the admirers of perfumes extracted from English flowers. Essence of Spring Flowers, and all others, of the finest quality.—Prepared by J. and E. Atkinson, Perfumers, 24, Old Bond-street, and sold, by appointment, by most Perfumers.

CAMELEON SILKS.—BAILEY and Co. respectfully solicit the attention of Families to a Manufacturer's Stock of Cameleon Silks:—

185 pieces of Figured Cameleon Gros-de-Naps, at 1s. 9½d. per yard.

207 pieces of very rich shots, fashionable colours, 2s. 4½d. the very best.

A large assortment of Polka Mantles, 25s., elegantly trimmed.

53 pieces of New Tarletane Muslins, fast colours, 4s. 11½d. full dress.

2184 yards of real Valenciennes Lace, 4½d. per yard.

A decided cheap lot of Irish Linens, particularly a few chests at 10d. per yard.
Bailey and Co., Albion House, 77, St. Paul's Churchyard, London.

IMPORTANT to FAMILIES FURNISHING.—A considerable saving can be effected in the purchase of Furnishing Ironmongery, by visiting the PANKLIBANON IRON WORKS, 58, Baker-street, Portman-square, where may be inspected the most extensive STOCK of IRONMONGERY GOODS in the Kingdom, consisting of kitchen cooking utensils, German silver wares, drawing-room stoves, shower and vapour baths, ornamental iron work, garden implements, japanned water cans and toilette pails, best Sheffield plate, kitchen ranges, fenders and fire-irons, tea trays, ornamental wire-work, flower-stands, table cutlery, &c. Every article being marked in plain figures, at the lowest possible price, will fully convince purchasers at this establishment of the great advantage resulting from Cash payments, as the Proprietors warrant every article of the very best manufacture, at a saving of at least 30 per cent.—THORPE, FALLOWS, and CO., 58, Baker-street, Portman-square.—A liberal allowance to merchants and captains.

MIND COMPLAINTS or NERVOUSNESS.—Clergymen, Noblemen, and all who suffer from groundless fear, suspicion, inquietude, &c.; confusion, blushings, despondency, indecision, irresolution, headache, vertigo, loss of memory, delusion, inaptitude for society, study, or business; blood to the head, restlessness, wretchedness, thoughts of self injury, &c., can now not only be relieved, but tranquillised, made happy, and cured. The Rev. Dr. WILLIS MOSELY, late of Cambridge University, after enduring these sufferings fourteen years, discovered their causes, seat, and a perfect cure, and for twenty five years has had no relapse. By the same means he has cured numerous Clergymen, Gentleman, Noblemen, &c.; and of 10,000 applicants knows not twenty uncured who have followed his advice. Numerous testimonials can be seen, and references given. Most get well in six weeks.—Means of cure sent to all parts. Apply or write. At home from Eleven to Three.—9, Charlotte street, Bloomsbury.

COD LIVER OIL, a Safe and Certain CURE for GOUT, and RHEUMATISM, Scrofula, Skin Diseases, Ulcers, Consumption, and nearly every case of suffering humanity.—The above remedy is now just introduced in this country in its pure state. In every case yet tried it has produced instant relief, and, after a short time using it, a perfect cure; Prospectuses, containing a full account of this remedy, to be had of JONES and Co., 201, Strand, London. To protect purchasers against fraudulent and spurious imitations, the following important Caution must be strictly attended to:—Messrs. JONES and Co. having been appointed as the sole mercantile Agents for this remedy by the only manufacturer, an eminent chemist and practitioner, residing on the Continent, they beg to state that every bottle sent from their establishment will be contained in a wrapper, bearing a fac-simile of their signature, and that the outside wrapper will be further protected by the stamp and address, "JONES and Co., 201, Strand, London."

Wholesale Agents: Barclay and Sons, Farringdon-street; E. Edwards, 67, St. Paul's Churchyard; Sutton and Co., Bow Churchyard. Sold in bottles at 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each.

LONG LIFE, HEALTH, AND HAPPINESS.—

CURE OF CONSUMPTIVE ASTHMA BY PARR'S LIFE PILLS.

I, ALEXANDER DOUGLAS, do hereby declare the good I have received from taking PARR'S LIFE PILLS. In the year 1840 I was afflicted with a most distressing Asthma, Cough, and Shortness of Breath, which reduced me to death's door, notwithstanding my spending nearly £200 in consulting the most eminent medical men in London and Edinburgh. My disease continued unabated, and I was, as a last resource, advised to try my native air of Dundee, which I did, and, at the same time, was recommended by a friend to take PARR'S LIFE PILLS. I commenced with them in the spring of 1843; experiencing relief, I persevered, and am now, in my 63rd year, perfectly cured, and in better health than I have been for many years. Having just arrived in London, I hasten to make my wonderful cure known to the proprietors; and to recommend something to the afflicted worthy of a fair trial, and no favour. I have recommended them to many of my friends, and they have all found relief.

July, 16, 1844, ALEXANDER DOUGLAS, Farmer.
Witness, to the above, ALEXANDER CUTHBERT, Stolswell-road, Dundee.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

In order to protect the public from imitations, the Hon. Commissioners of Stamps have ordered the words "PARR'S LIFE PILLS" to be engraved on the Government Stamp, pasted round the sides of each box, in White Letters on a Red ground. Purchasers are also requested to observe that a fac-simile of the Proprietors' signature, "T. ROBERTS and Co., Crane-court, Fleet-street, London," is printed on the directions wrapped round each box—without which none are genuine.—Sold by all respectable Medicine Vendors.

QUITE A NEW DISCOVERY.

NO MORE SUFFERING FROM CORNS or BUNIONS.—AGENTS required all over England, Ireland and Scotland, for the sale of this PHILOSOPHICAL REMEDY, which immediately enables the greatest sufferer to walk with the most perfect ease and comfort. Sold in boxes, including stamp, at 1s. 1½d., by JONES and Co., LIGHTHOUSE, 201, Strand, London.

A box will be sent free to any address on receipt of fifteen postage stamps.

EAU de COLOGNE, 10s. per case of six, or 2s. singly, which, since its first preparation, in 1709, has maintained an undisturbed supremacy over all other distilled compounds, can be had genuine, as prepared from the original recipe, by application to H. BREIDENBACH, 88, Park-street, Grosvenor-square, and manufacturer at Cologne. This Eau de Cologne is no spurious imitation of Farina's, but the genuine article itself, and as such defies all competition.

SEA.—ONE or TWO YOUNG GENTLEMEN who have a desire for the Sea, are required in a large first-class East Indiaman as MIDSHIPMEN, where they are treated as Gentlemen, mess with the officers, and live apart from the men. For amount of premium and other particulars apply to Edward West, Ship and Insurance Broker, 5, St. Benet's-place, Gracechurch-street, London. A VACANCY also for a SEA APPRENTICE.

TO ANGLERS.—Three Joint Bamboo Rods, 2s. each; Four Joint Best Hickory Rods for Punt Fishing, Brazed, Ringed, Winch Fittings, and Bag, 15s; Four Joint Hickory Fly Rods, from 7s. 6d.; Artificial Flies, 2s. per dozen; Best Gut Fishing Lines, 3d. per yard; Silk Fly Line, 1d. per yard.—Catalogue of prices may be had (gratis), on application, or by post, to E. ALLEN, Silver Trout, 198, Oxford-street, two doors from Orchard-street.

STOOPING of the SHOULDERS and CONTRACTION of the CHEST are effectually prevented and removed in Youth and Ladies and Gentlemen, by the occasional use of the PATENT ST. JAMES'S CHEST EXPANDER, which is light, simple, easily employed outwardly or invisibly, without uncomfortable constraint or impediment to exercise. Sent per post by Mr. A. BINYON, Wholesale Depôt, 40, Tavistock-street, Strand, London, or full particulars on receiving a postage stamp.

CUSTARDS WITHOUT TROUBLE.—ORRIDGE'S POWDER merely requires the addition of Boiling Milk to form a Custard of exquisite richness. It is less expensive, and far more wholesome, than the Custards as usually made. To secure the right article, be pleased to ask for the preparation made by Orridge, Chemist to the Queen, Deptford. Sold in boxes, 1s., 2s., and 5s. each, by Edwards, 67, St. Paul's Churchyard; Batty and Co., Finsbury Pavement; and most Chemists and Italian Warehousemen.

WRITING, Languages, &c.—The WRITING of persons of all ages, if ever so bad, IMPROVED in EIGHT easy LESSONS. The pupils are taught quite privately, or met at their own residences. Bookkeeping for the counting-house, custom-house &c., mental arithmetic, and the reporters' short-hand guaranteed in twelve lessons. Separate rooms for ladies. Apply to Mr. Langmaid, at the old establishment for private tuition, (where there are professors for the French, German, and Italian languages, on the Hamiltonian system,) 122, Regent-street.

EMPLOYMENT.—Persons having a little time to spare, are apprised that Agents continue to be appointed in London and Country Towns by the EAST INDIA TEA COMPANY, for the sale of their celebrated TEAS (Offices, 9, Great St. Helen's Churchyard, Bishopsgate-street). They are packed in showy leaden canisters, from an ounce to a pound, with the prices and weight marked on each packet, and but little trouble is occasioned by the sale; the license is only 11s. per annum, and many, during the last nineteen years, have realised considerable incomes by the Agency, without 1s. let or loss. Application to be made (if by letter, post paid) as above.

WOOLLASTON'S PATENT GELATINE, for immediately making Jellies or Blanc-mange, being quickly dissolved in boiling water. It is of equal strength with the finest Russian Isinglass, and perfectly free from any unpleasant taste or smell, requiring less flavouring than any other preparation of Gelatine or Isinglass, being a perfectly pure, colourless, and soluble substance. For Jellies it will not be found necessary to use eggs, as passing through a flannel bag is sufficient. Invalids will find this a very nourishing and valuable restorative, from the great facility and readiness with which it is used, and not being liable to become sour so soon as isinglass.—Manufactured and Sold by Edward L. Woollaston, Dover; and retailed by all respectable Druggists, Grocers, and others, at 8s. per pound.

FOR STOPPING DECAYED TEETH.—Price 4s. 6d. Patronised by her Majesty, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent. Mr. THOMAS'S SUCCEDANEUM, for Stopping Decayed Teeth, however large the cavity. It is placed in the tooth in a soft state, without any pressure or pain, and will remain firm in the tooth for many years, rendering extraction unnecessary, arresting the further progress of decay. All persons can use Mr. Thomas's Succedaneum themselves with ease, as full directions are enclosed.—Prepared only by Mr THOMAS, Surgeon-Dentist, 64, Berners-street, Oxford-street. Price 4s. 6d., and can be sent by post. Mr. THOMAS continues to supply the Loss of Teeth on his new system of Self-adhesion, without springs or wires. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation whatever. At home from Eleven till Four.

METCALFE'S NEW PATTERN TOOTH BRUSH and SMYRNA SPONGES.—The Tooth Brush has the important advantage of searching thoroughly into the divisions of the teeth and cleaning them in the most effectual and extraordinary manner, and is famous for the hairs not coming loose, 1s. An improved Clothes Brush, that cleans in a third part of the usual time, and incapable of injuring the finest nap. Penetrating Hair Brushes, with the durable unbleached Russian bristle, which does not soften like common hair. Flesh Brushes, of improved graduated and powerful friction. Velvet Brushes, which act in the most surprising and successful manner. The genuine Smyrna Sponge, with its preserved valuable properties of absorption, vitality, and durability, by means of direct importations, dispensing with all intermediate parties, profits, and destructive bleaching, and securing the luxury of a genuine Smyrna Sponge.—Only at METCALFE'S sole establishment, 130 B, Oxford-street, one door from Holles-street.—Caution: Beware of the words, "from Metcalfe's," adopted by some houses.

PRESERVES and CONFECTIONERY.—The superiority of BETTS'S PATENT BRANDY, for Preserves and Confectionery, is testified by the fact that it is preferred to any other spirit by the most extensive Wholesale Confectioners in the Metropolis; for fortifying Home-made Wines it is invaluable; as an ordinary Beverage it is congenial to the most delicate constitutions; and, as a Medical Stimulant, it is peculiarly adapted to persons of bilious or dyspeptic habits. Quantities of not less than Two Gallons, supplied at the Distillery, 7, Smithfield Bars, in Stone Jars, at 18s. per Gallon, exclusive of the price of the Jar; and in Glass Bottles, at 20s. per Gallon, Bottles and Case included.

Consumers of Brandy are respectfully informed that J. T. BETTS, Jun. and Co. will not be responsible for any Bottled Brandy that is not protected against fraudulent substitution, by the Patent Metallic Capsules, made of pure and solid metal, (not tin-foil,) embossed with the words "Betts's Patent Brandy, 7, Smithfield Bars," to which attention is especially directed.

TO LADIES.—ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, for the SKIN and COMPLEXION. This Royally Patronized and universally adopted Specific is composed chiefly of extracts from the most rare flowers and herbs of an eastern clime, and perfectly free from all mineral admixture. It exerts the most soothing, gentle, cooling, and purifying action on the skin; and most effectually dissipates all Redness, Tan, Pimples, Blotches, Spots, Freckles, and other Cutaneous Visitations. The radiant bloom it imparts to the Cheek, and the softness and delicacy it induces on the Hands, Arms and Neck, render it indispensable to every toilet. It affords immediate relief in cases of Sunburn, Stings of Insects, or incidental Inflammation. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle, duty included.

Caution.—Many Shopkeepers vend the most spurious trash under the title of "Genuine" Kalydor, containing mineral astringents utterly ruinous to the complexion, and by their repellant action endangering health. It is therefore imperative on purchasers to see that the words "ROWLAND'S KALYDOR" are on the Wrapper; and A. ROWLAND & SON, 20, Hatton Garden, engraved (by Authority) on the Government Stamp affixed on each bottle.  All others are Fraudulent Counterfeits!

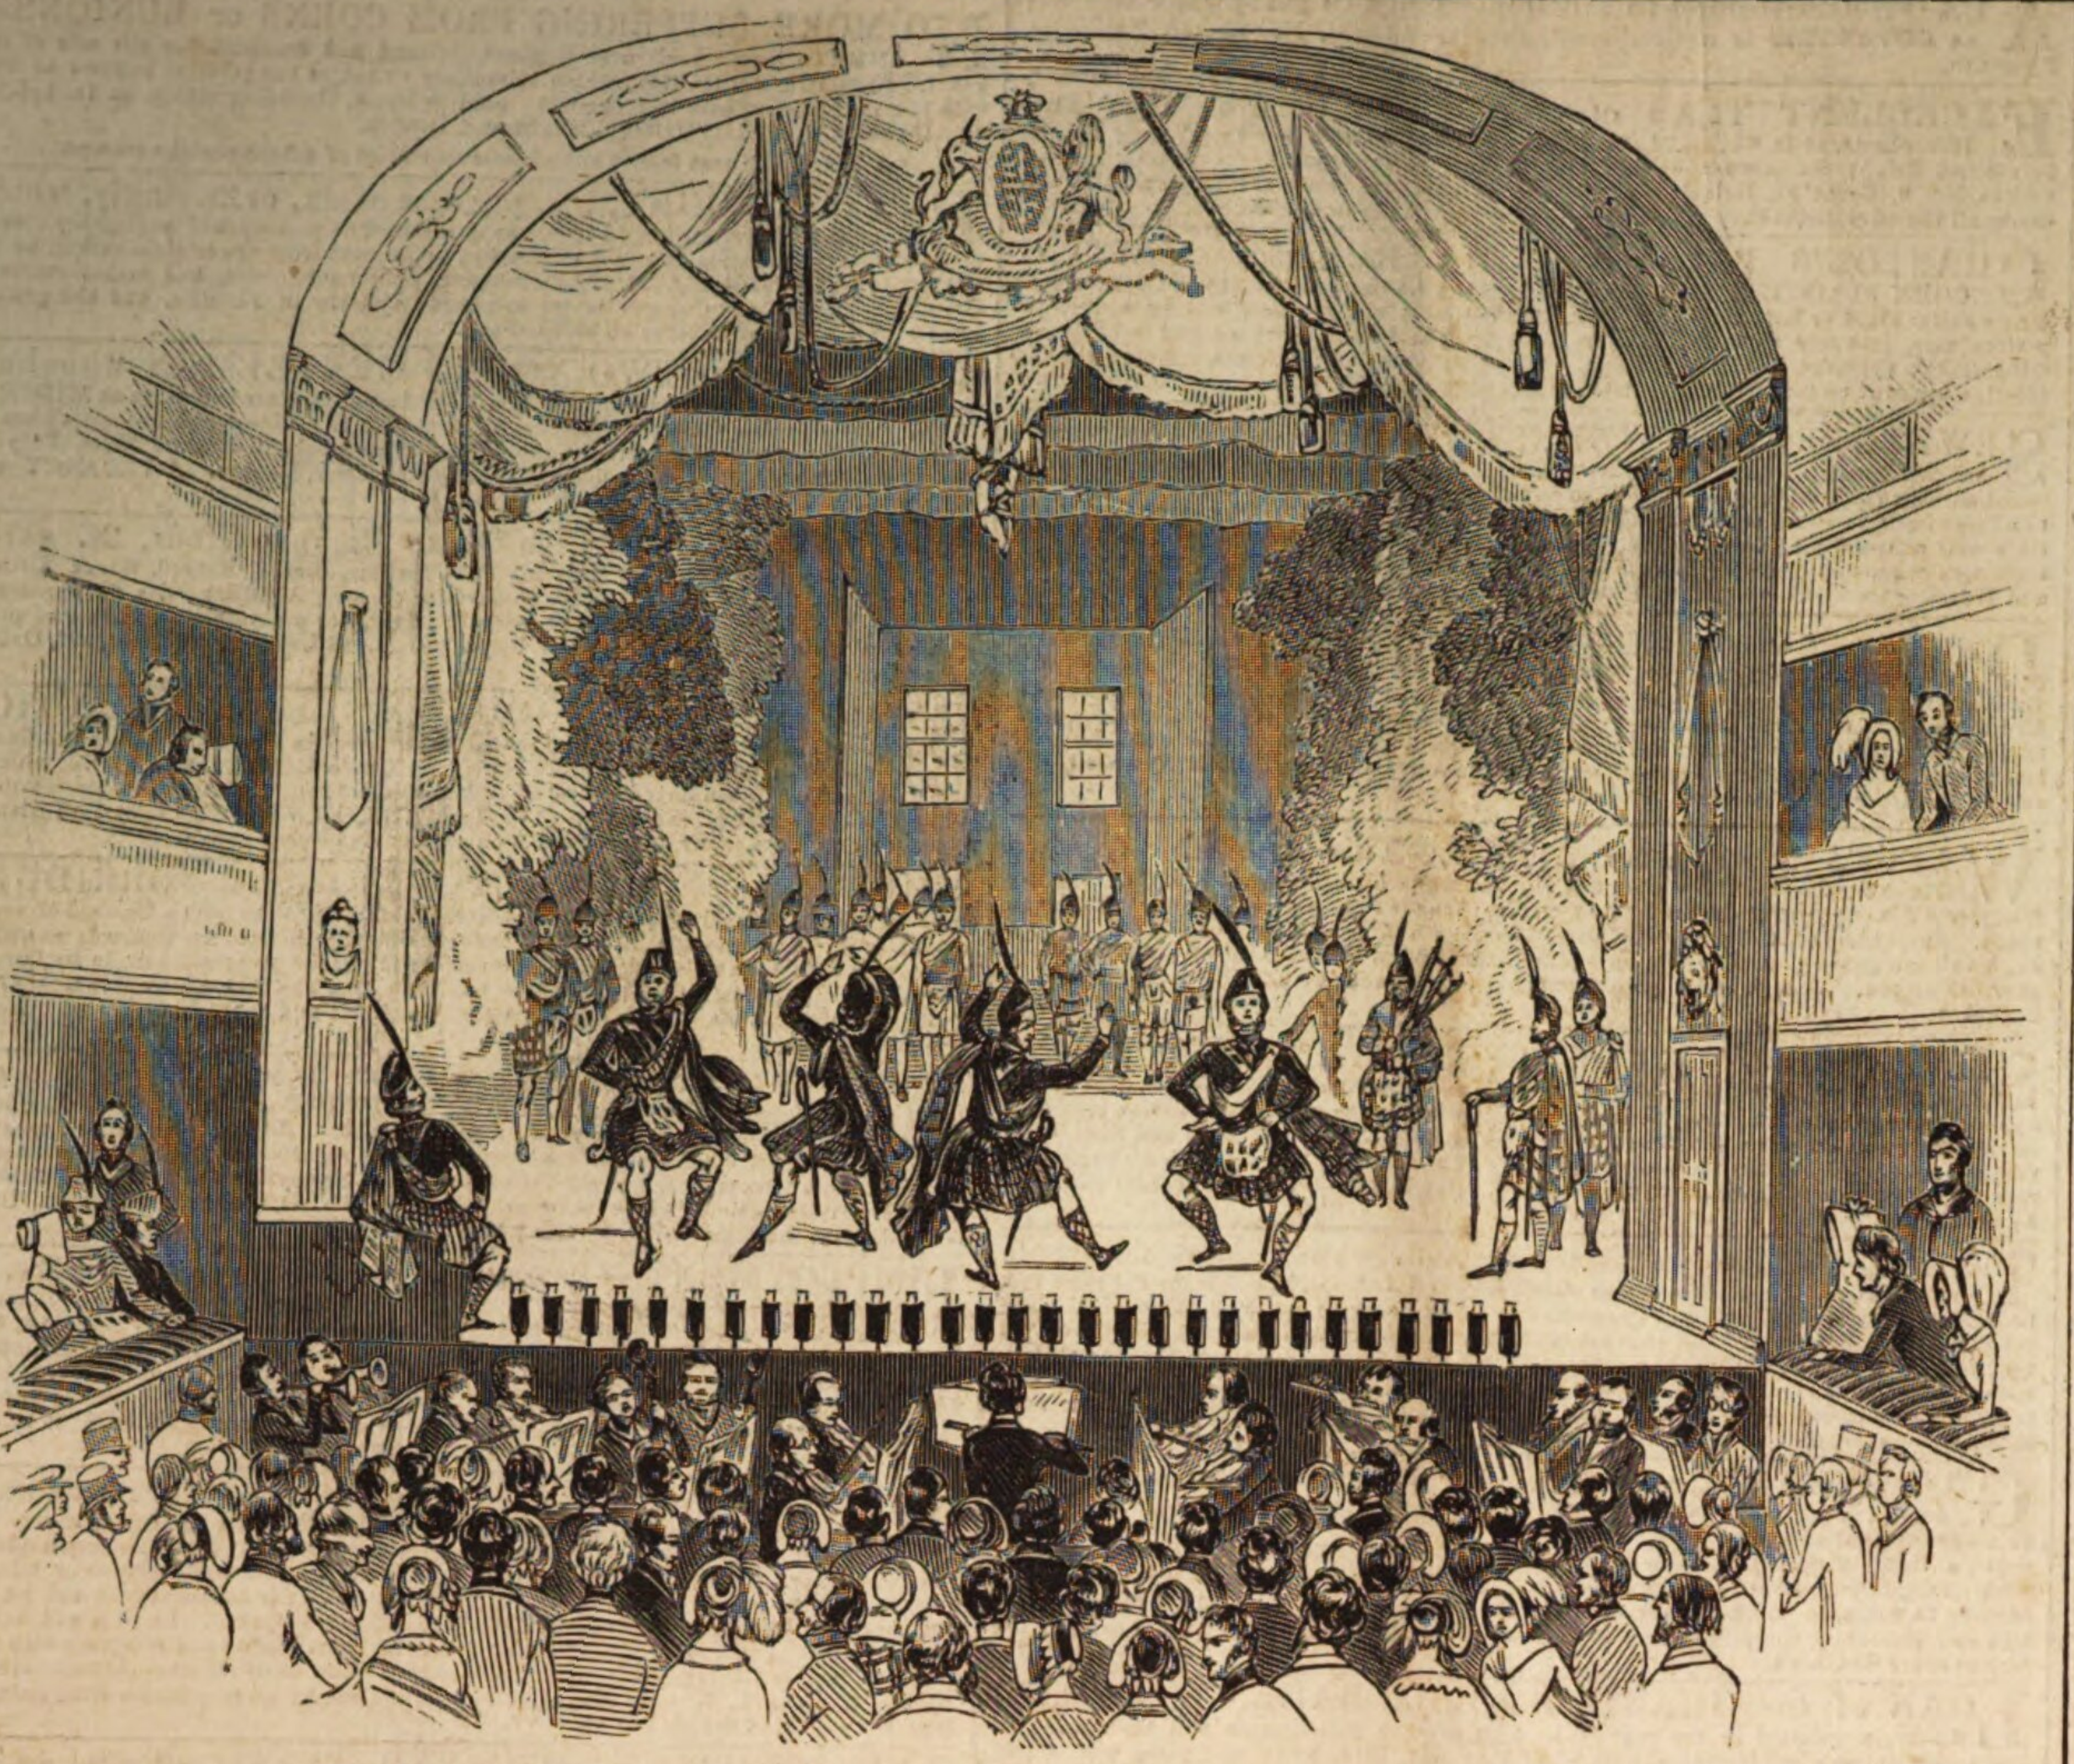
Observe.—E. MOSES and SON, Tailors, Wholesale and Retail Woollen Drapers, Outfitters and General Warehousemen, 154, Minories, and 86, Aldgate, City, opposite the church.

Caution.—E. Moses and Son are obliged to guard the Public against imposition, having learned that the untradesman-like falsehood of being connected with them, or it's the same concern, has been resorted to in many instances, and for obvious reasons. They have no connexion whatever with any other Establishment; and those who desire genuine Cheap Clothing, should call or send to 154, Minories, or 86, Aldgate, opposite the church, to prevent disappointment, &c.

N.B. No Business transacted at this Establishment from Friday at sunset until sunset on Saturday, when Business is resumed until twelve o'clock.



THE GREAT HIGHLAND BAGPIPE COMPETITION. AT THE THEATRE ROYAL, EDINBURGH.

TRIENNIAL COMPETITION OF PIPERS, EDINBURGH.

This very attractive contest of the best performers of the Ancient Music of the great Highland Bagpipe was held in the Theatre Royal, at Edinburgh, on the 10th instant. The doors were opened at twelve o'clock, noon, and in a few minutes every corner of the theatre was crowded to excess. The performances were strathspeys and sword-dances, by fourteen accomplished pipers. The effect of the national music on the audience was very marked; at one moment they were riveted by the plaintive lament, and next the strathspey, or reel, made hearts and heels as light as those of the agile inhabitants of the hill and dale. The scene during the performance of a reel by four Highlanders, is shown in our engraving. The judges named by the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland then retired to decide the prizes. In their absence, Donald MacInnes, from Lochaber, who gained the Prize Pipe at the last competition, performed a salute on the Prize Pipe to be then awarded. There were also favourite Scottish airs by the band, and national dances.

At five o'clock the judges returned, and proceeded to distribute the prizes, which were received by the fatigued competitors with evident feelings of pride. The president and judges were seated in the box nearest the right hand side of the stage; and, on a table near them, on the stage, were placed the prizes—a bagpipe, a sword, horn, &c. The general effect of the kilted men in their particoloured costumes, was extremely picturesque. The Prize Pipe and other prizes having thus been distributed, the affair concluded with a spirited dance. The spectators were admitted by tickets, the proceeds from the sale of which, were divided among the pipers, dancers, and competitors for dress.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

A greater instance of versatility never appeared than in the persons of Grisi and Lablache. Who that has only seen the prima donna in the arch Rosina, could form any notion of her great powers as a tragic actress in the parts of Semiramide, Norma, Lucrezia, Lucia, or Anna Bolena?—and it is hard again for those who have been convulsed by the drolleries and irresistible humour of Don Geronimo, Leporello, Doctor Bartolo, Don Pasquale, &c., to believe it is the identical Lablache who exhibits the awful fury of an incensed father, as Elmiro, the religious grandeur of Moise, or the tyrannical overbearing of the brutal Harry. Of Moriani's versatility we cannot say anything, not having seen him in a character opposed to his personation of deep and intense tragedy, in which he is truly affecting and powerful. No man can better express the tender abandonments of the soul to love, hope, or joy, than Moriani, while, on the other hand, frenzy and despair he can depict with equal truth, but with more thrilling energy. In the magnificent scene selected for our illustration, perhaps he was a little enfeebled in voice from previous over exertion, but his energetic action was still unfailing, which, joined to Lablache's hauteur and Grisi's earnest indignation, formed a tableau of dramatic beauty which we seldom, if ever, have seen equalled—certainly not excelled. The costumes of this scene cannot be too highly extolled for their splendour and accuracy—that of Lablache particularly made him stand forth as "bluff Harry" himself. What a pity that the termination of the season is nigh at hand, and that we cannot hear and see Donizetti's chef-d'œuvres again rendered still more perfect by a little more practice!

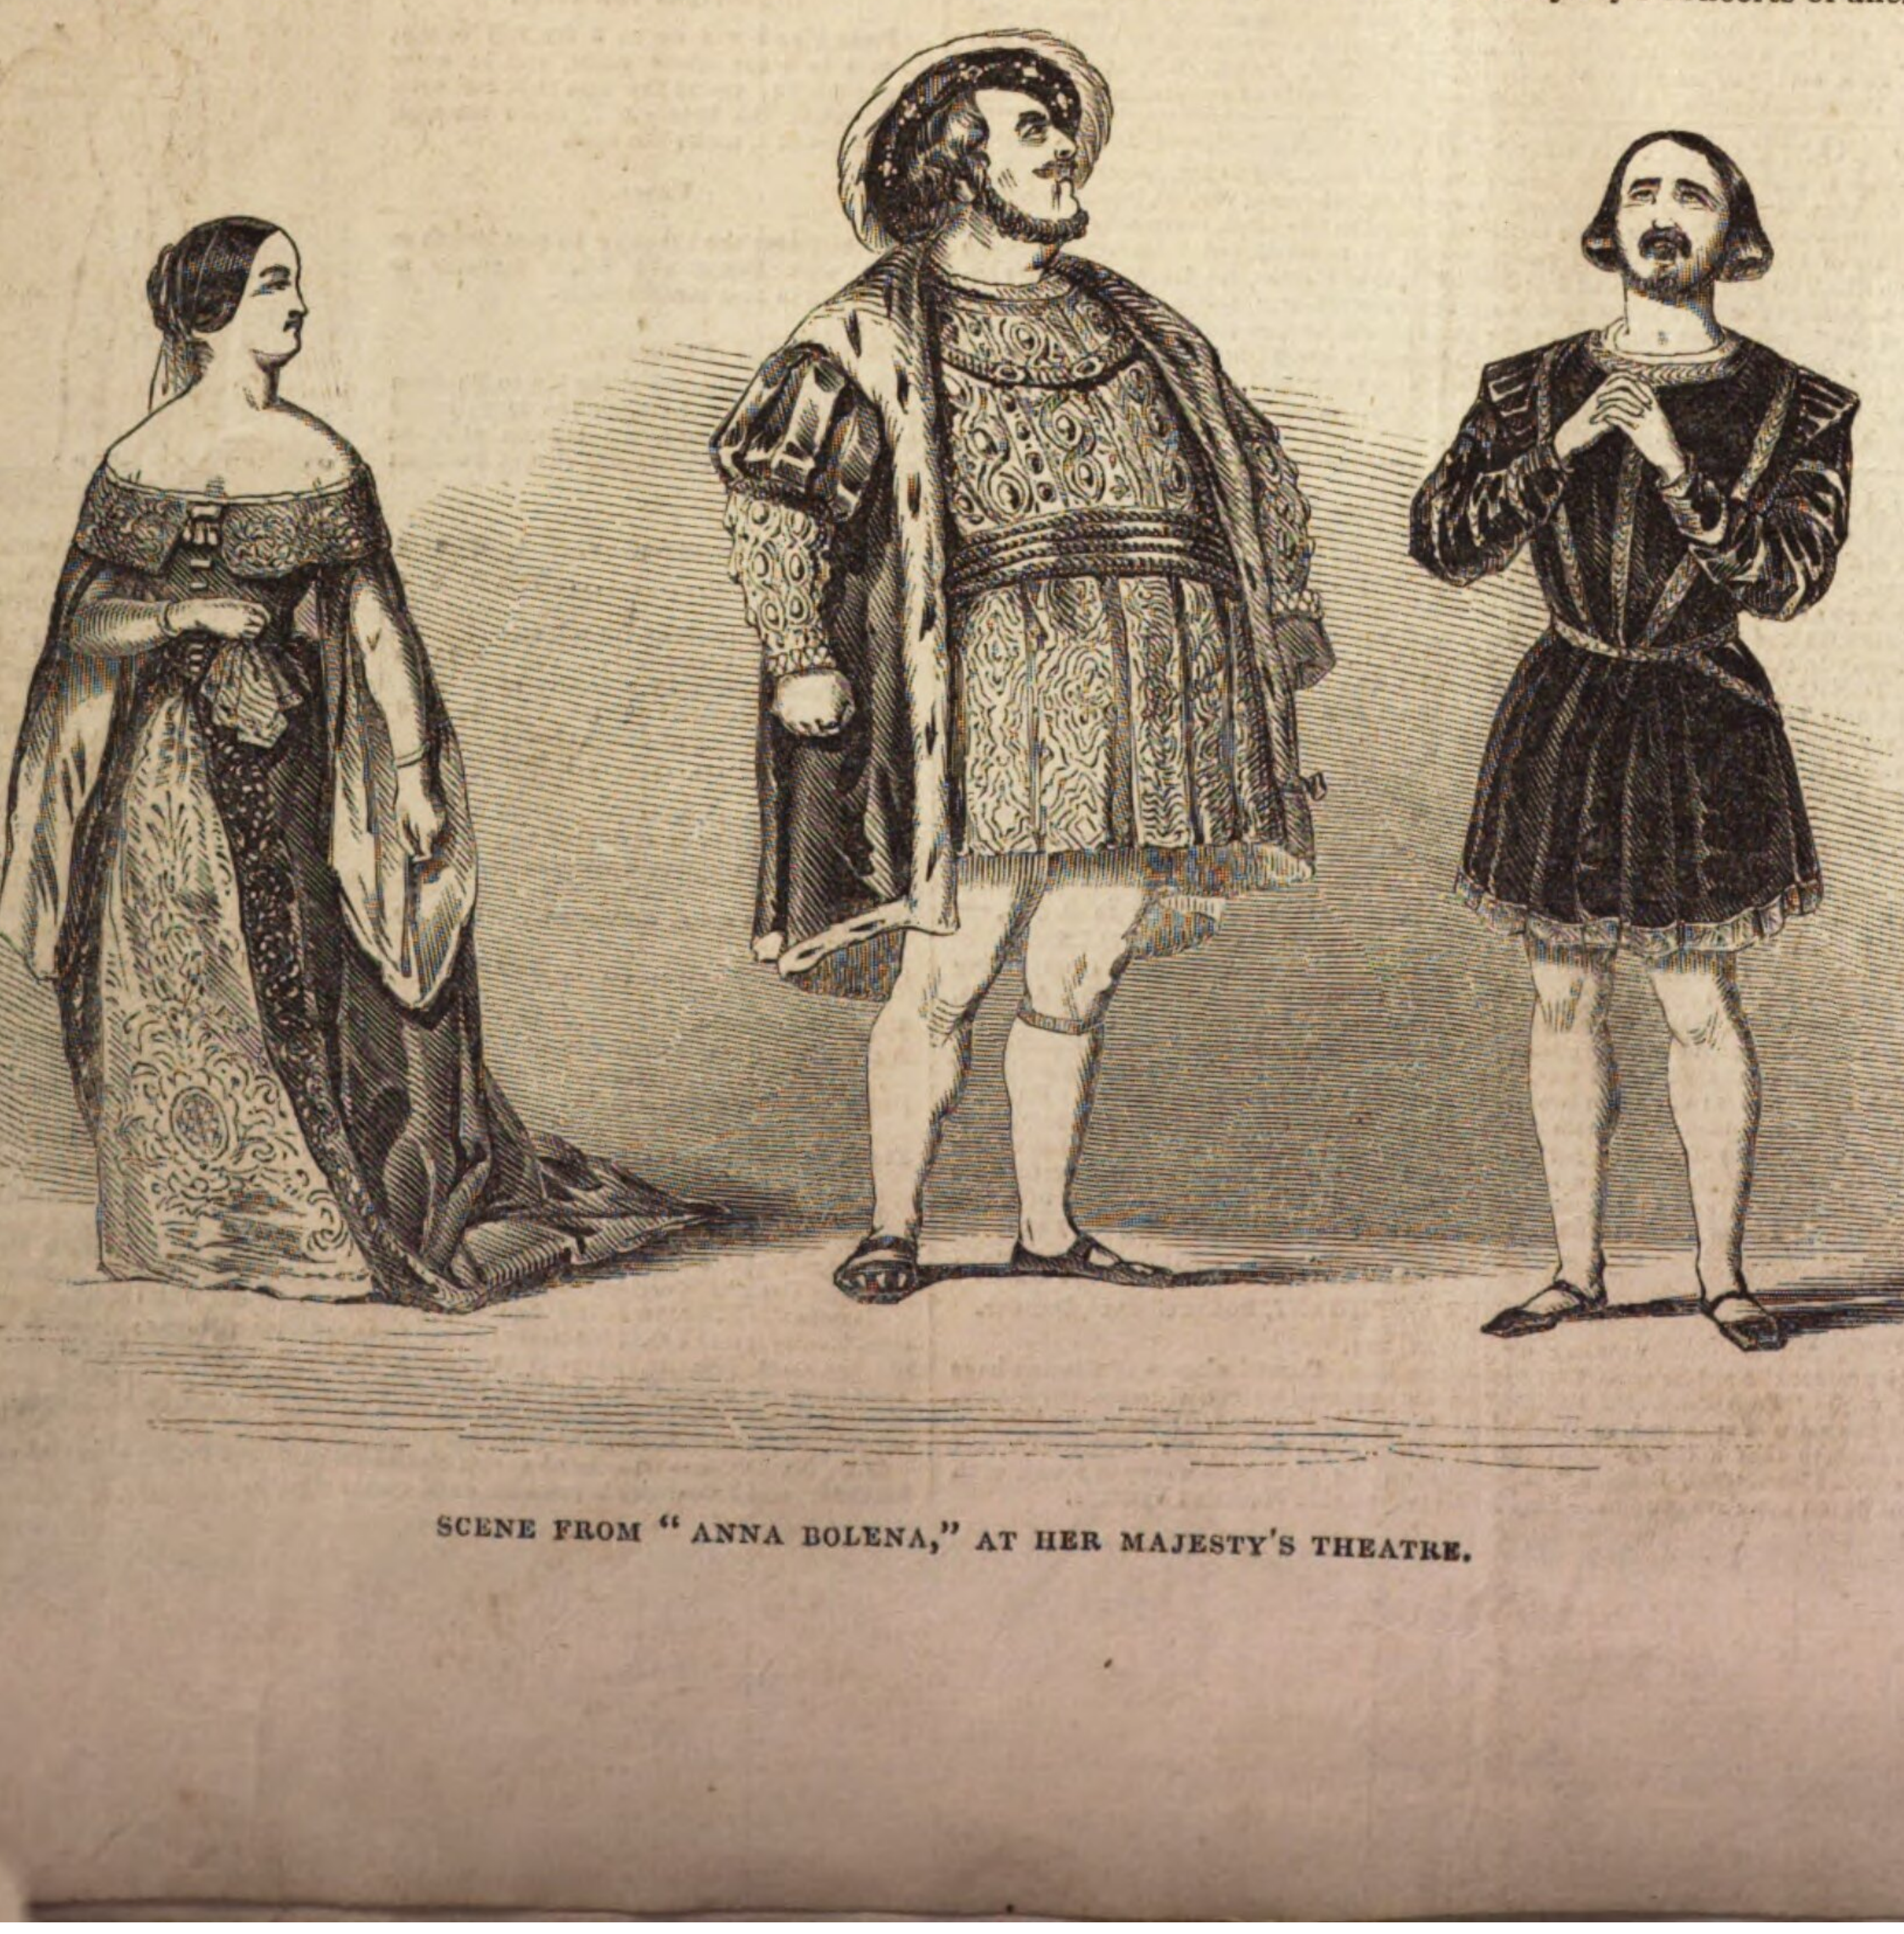
> But the swallows will take flight
> And the singing-birds will too—
> So we have nothing else to say
> But come again soon—do!

Theatricals in America.—Mr. Macready appeared at the Buffalo Theatre on the 25th ult., in Hamlet; and on the previous evening, Mr. Vandenhoff played the same character at the Albany Theatre. Brougham and Miss Nelson are in New York, where Ole Bull has just arrived. The Lyceum burlesque, "Open Sesame," has been received in New York with immense success.

Musical Movements.—At the termination of the opera season, the principal artistes, both vocal and instrumental, who have delighted the metropolis, will take provincial tours through the three kingdoms. The first troupe will consist of Grisi, Favanti, Mario, and F. Lablache: the second, of Persiani, Salvi, and Fornasari, under the direction of Puzzi. The third part will be principally instrumental, under the management of Sivori.

Taglioni.—This charming danseuse continues still to captivate the Parisians. She intends shortly to retire from public life after a novel manner. She will pay a farewell visit to every place where she has been received. This, it is calculated, will occupy about two years in the performance.

Herr Staudigl.—This distinguished artiste was one of the passengers on board the Earl of Liverpool, which sailed on Sunday evening last for Ostend. It is said that it is his intention to sing in French at the Academie Royale, Paris:—we hope not—the audience of that theatre are not likely to be pleased with his solid style of singing. He will return here next season. We understand he is engaged for the whole series of her Majesty's concerts of ancient music.



SCENE FROM "ANNA BOLENA," AT HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

JULY.—SONNET.

Now is the time to see the glorious Sun
  At early dawn his chymistry begin—
To see him hang, on threads the dews have spun,
  Pearls, sapphires, rubies—and far up, within
The greeny clouds, a golden tissue weave,
Whose splendour drowsy-heads can ne'er believe!
A poet's fancy only can conceive
The gorgeous beauty of a summer's morn
At that sweet time when young Aurora's born
  To shed her smile on fields and groves and bow'rs,
And tell the rustling minstrels on each thorn
  To mix their music with the breath of flow'rs!
Oh! there's no time can give such pure delight,
As when the Day first flees th' embrace of Night. W.

ROBERTS, THE WELSH HARPER.

There is no country in the world where the motto of "prisca gens mortatium" is more assumed than in Wales: a man with a genealogy of two thousand years' standing, is only a "fellow of yesterday!" The good people of the principality are ready to assert that Adam was a Welshman; that the Garden of Eden was situate in the lovely Vale of Llangollen; that the Cambrian language was the vernacular of the terrestrial Paradise; and that their music, with their national instrument, boast of the highest antiquity on earth. Be that as it may, many of their own writers and historians do not agree with the general opinion of their countrymen, but, on the contrary, assert that they had their music and learning from Ireland. For instance, Giraldus Cambrensis distinctly states so. Caradoc affirms that the Welsh had the harp from Ireland (vide Wynne's "History of Wales," p. 159); and Vallancy (in "Collect. de rebus Hiber.," No.13, p. 36), gives the following philological reason for its importation from the Insula Sacra, or Holy Island, which its name Erin implied (vide O'Brien on the Round Towers of Ireland.) "The Irish Teadhloin, pronounced Tealoin or Telin," says the General, "is certainly the etymon of the Welsh Teylin, a harp—a word I can find no derivation of in that language; and, I think, proves from whence they borrowed both the instrument and its name." Still there is a great dissimilarity between the Irish and Welsh harps—the former being very inferior in size, and strung with wire; the latter in some instances as high as six feet, and strung with gut. We confess we prefer the tone of the Cambrian instrument to that of the Irish; there is less tinkling or jarring, and particularly in the hands of Mr. Roberts, who awakens all our best recollections of the bards of old by his admirable performance. Although totally deprived of sight, that loss of sense seems to have been amply atoned for in the amazing perfection of his musical hearing. He has gained the principal prizes at the Estefodd, and is decorated with a profusion of harps, medals, &c., the trophies of his triumphs. Her Majesty, when Princess Victoria, condescendingly hung one around his neck, and the Duke of Sussex conferred a similar honour upon him. He is considered the best harper in Wales.

CLASSICAL CONCERT.

On Monday evening last an instrumental concert under this title was given at the Hanover-square Rooms, and proved a delicious treat. The following is the scheme:—

Quartett (No. 74), Messrs. Sivori, Sainton, Hill, and Rousselot..	Haydn.
Posthumous Quartett, Messrs. Sainton, Sivori, Hill, and Rousselot..	Beethoven.
Trio in A, pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, Mr. Osborne, Signor Sivori, and M. Rousselot......................	Osborne.
Quartett, Messrs. Sivori, Sainton, Hill, and Rousselot....	Beethoven.

Haydn's quartett was deliciously performed, particularly the andante and last movement. Beethoven's wild and fanciful composition was executed in a most masterly manner; but, beautiful as it is, it is rather too long—six movements, and some of them of considerable length, are somewhat too much. The trio, by Osborne, is a very charming composition, replete with peculiar melody and science. It was very neatly performed by the author, a native of the Sister Isle, but who has chiefly resided at Paris for several years, where his reputation both as composer and performer is of the highest order. The last quartett, one from the Rousamousky set, was also magnificently executed. Altogether the concert was a most brilliant treat to amateur and professor. The performers were placed on a platform in the centre of the room, which had an imposing and pretty effect.

Mr. Macready at New York.—A correspondent assures us that Mr. Macready's performance of Werner at New York, has proved a great dramatic triumph: his audiences appear to have been almost paralyzed by the force of this fine specimen of melo-dramatic tragedy; the bye-play, especially, was viewed by them as something they had never seen before, and at the close of the piece, they burst forth into rampant enthusiasm: "in short," says our correspondent, "never shall I forget the sensation produced on an American audience by Macready's Werner."

Mr. Bunn.—This gentleman has left town for Italy, to seek out some novelties for next season.

Mr. Webster.—We learn that this gentleman has taken the Adelphi Theatre. He is an enterprizing manager to undertake the superintendence of three dramatic establishments at once, namely, the Haymarket, the Adelphi, and the Liverpool. We heartily wish him success, but there is an old saying, "Too many irons," &c.

STEAMERS AND PIERS.

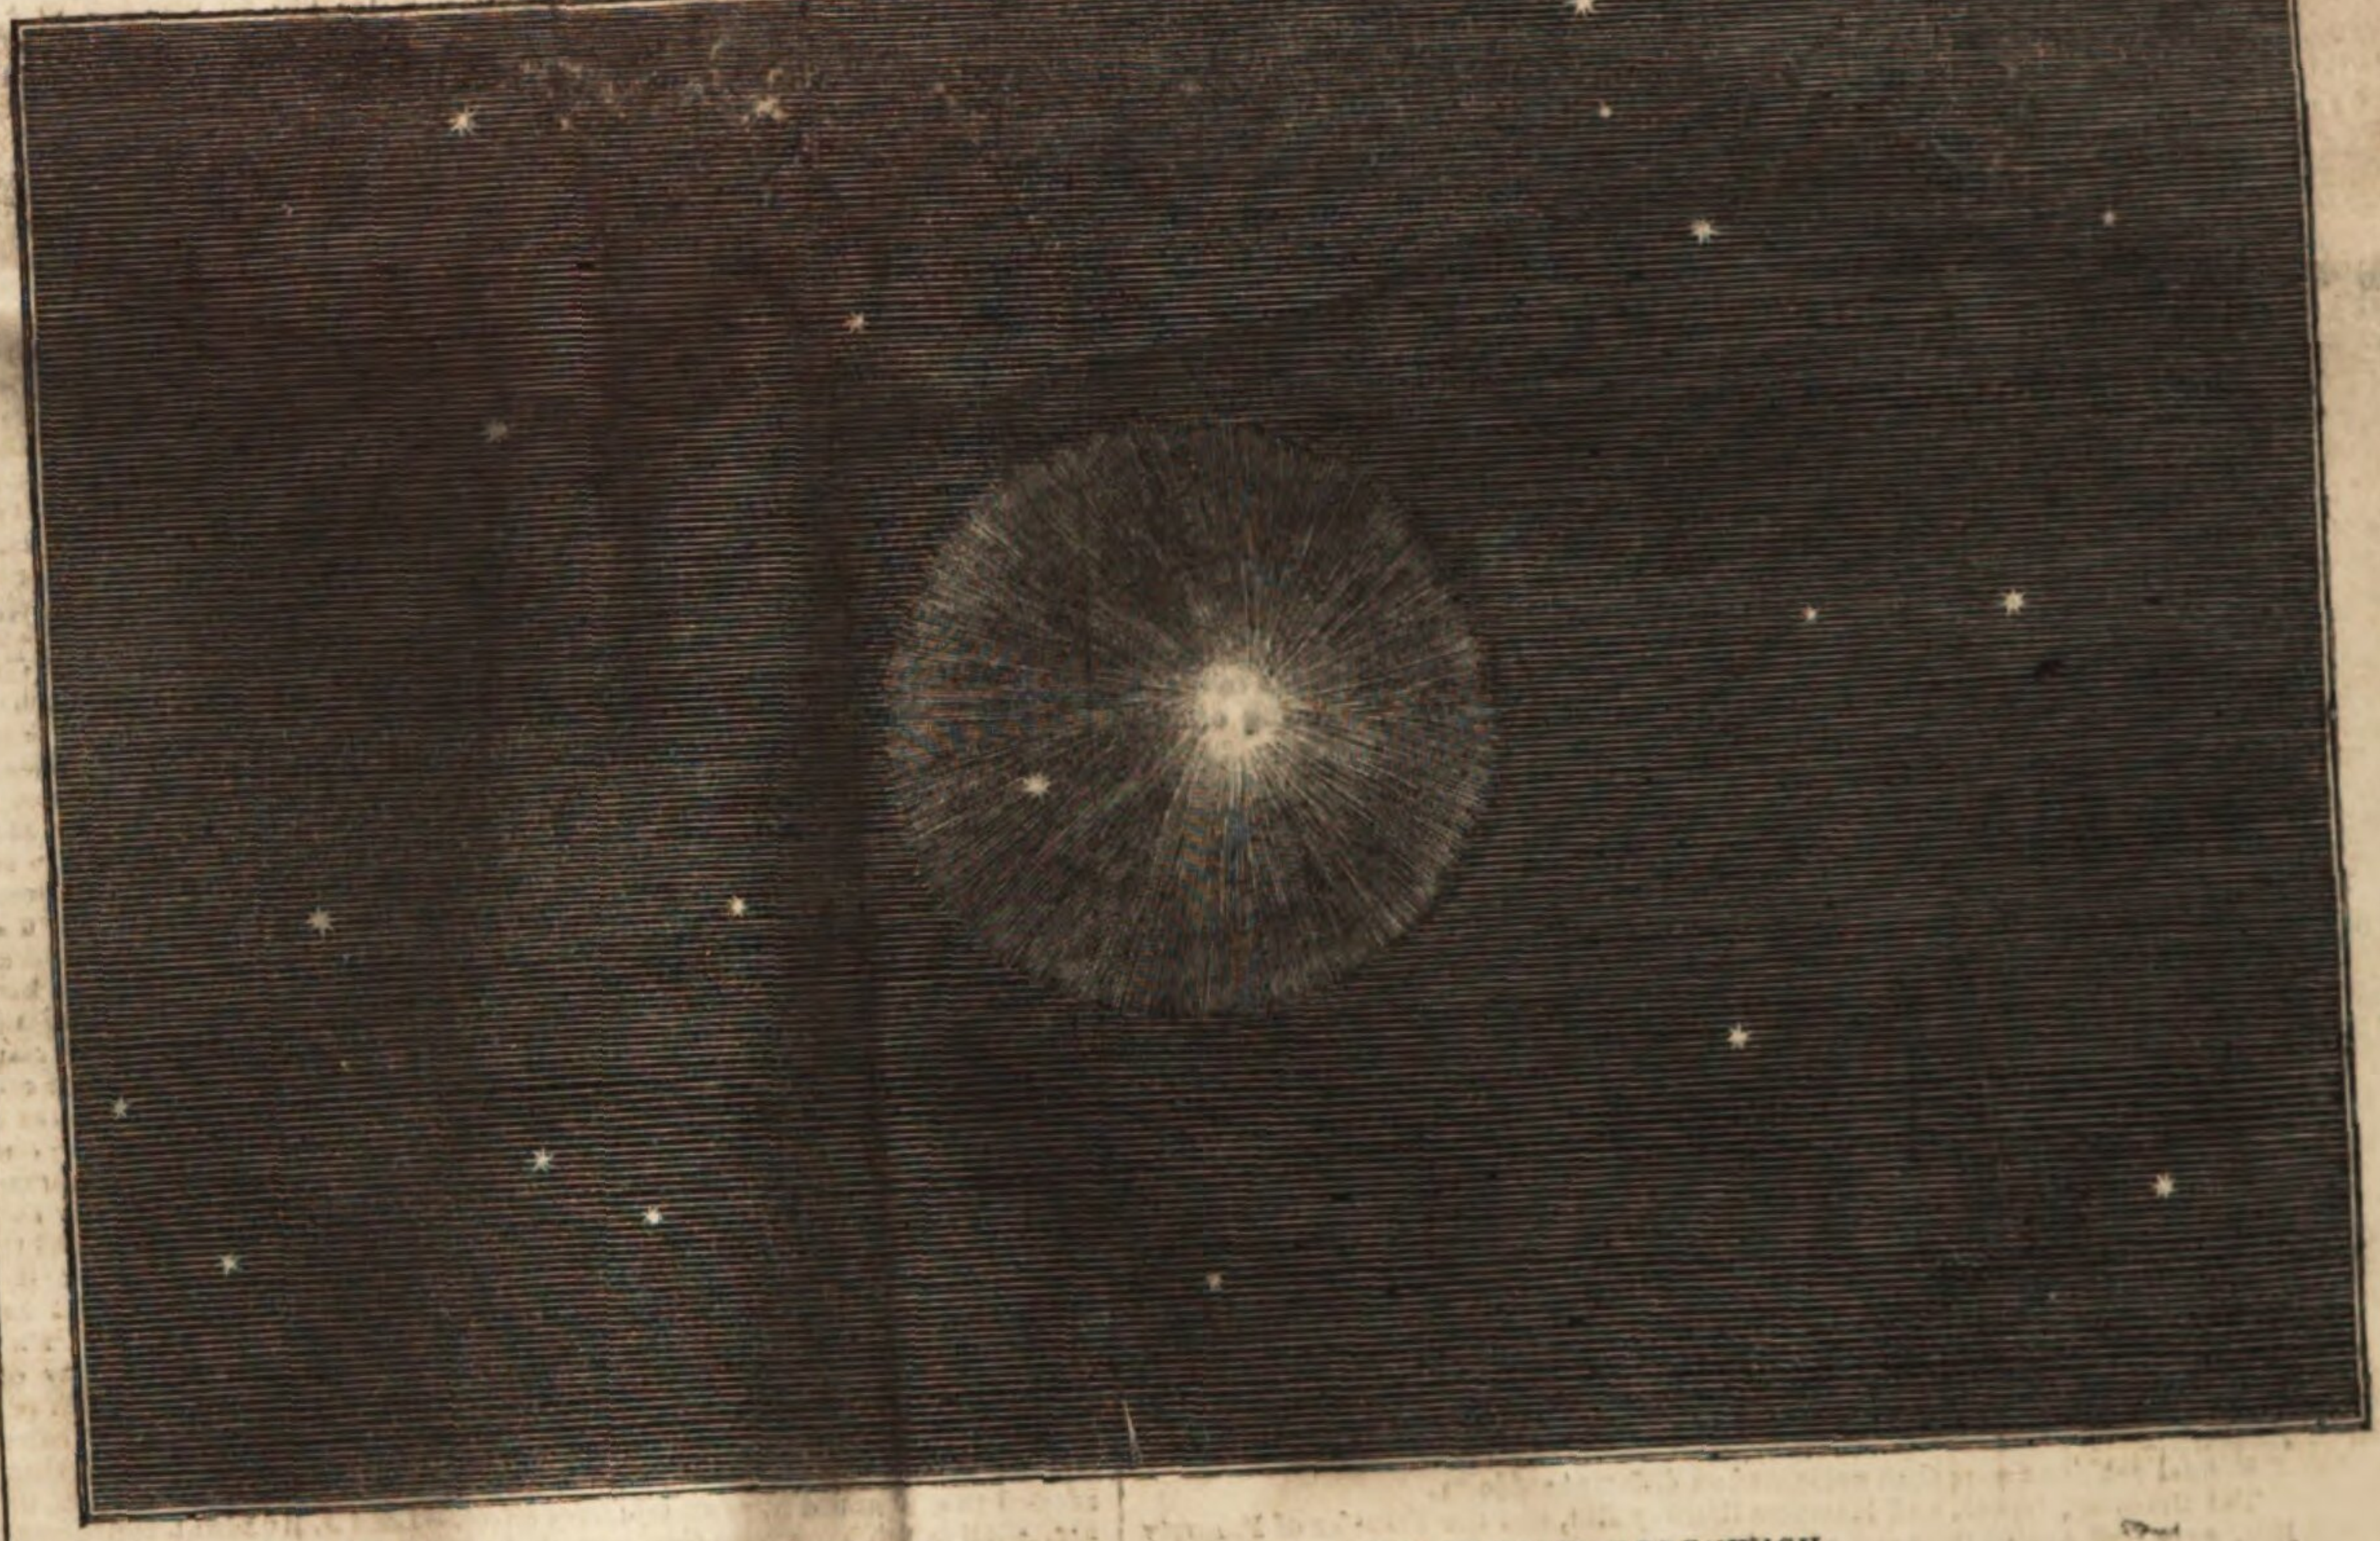
HUMAN reason, in its full pride' is often sternly rebuked by the fatality of human accident. The casualties of life, and the modes in which they occur, so often prove that our reason and foresight are made so little use of, that there seems but slender cause for arrogance, and much, very much, for humility. If reason, the power of thought and reflection, were given to man for any purpose, it surely was for that of preserving his life; yet the hunted herd that rushes blindly over the precipice is not more heedless of consequences than are vast numbers of human beings, who, having reason, seem deprived of the faculty of using it.

The public has been this week startled by the occurrence of one of those events which, happening, as they generally do, in the midst of some exciting cause that congregates numbers to one spot, none think danger possible, till some unforeseen, but not unlikely accident, converts a gay and laughing scene into one of shrieking and dismay—of a convulsive struggle with each other, and with the elements for life, terminated by the silence of death that closes over the victims, and the frantic grief of the survivors.

Such, or nearly such, was the scene that occurred at Blackfriars-bridge on Monday last.

There is a superstition connected with some of the rivers of Europe that the spirit of their waters requires each year a certain number of victims, and he seldom fails in receiving his tribute. It is a fanciful way of accounting for those casualties of which all rivers that flow past great cities are fertile. But there is, probably, no river in which so many human lives are annually lost as the Thames. This arises from the immense population on its banks—its large amount of water-borne traffic—and, added to this, a love of boating and regattas unknown to any other people, except, perhaps, the Venetians. Under such circumstances, it might be thought that the authorities would take some care of that part of the public that never take any of themselves. But the river is altogether destitute of a police to regulate the passenger traffic of its surface. Some order is enforced on the larger vessels that moor in the tiers, but the "silent highway" may be used as the providers of water conveyance choose; they may overcrowd their vessels from cupidity, or they may run down each other from carelessness—there is little or no check upon them. On land, where the number of loaded and crowded vehicles can at worst only cause a stoppage, there are street-keepers and constables to insist on order and careful driving, and carriages and omnibuses are limited in their burdens to the safety point. On the water, where a collision, or over-crowding, might be the death of hundreds, every master of a steamer appears to be a law unto himself; and the too natural desire to gain as much as possible, being stimulated by opposition, the consequence is what may be seen any fine Sunday or holiday at any of the landing-places, and what, to those who are in the slightest degree acquainted with the laws that govern floating bodies, and with what a mass of human beings will do in a moment of panic, is almost a melancholy sight. Forgetting that "ships are but boards, sailors are but men," and that, consequently, the former may be rotten and the latter careless or incapable, or both, people rush by hundreds into a boat that with half the number would be loaded to the verge of safety, and they steam away with a happy indifference which might be mistaken for courage, by a spectator who did not know that is is nothing more than utter ignorance of their own danger. The slightest accident to the vessel or her machinery, the least panic, would in such a crowd be fatal, for the greater mass in a moment of terror would lose all self-command, and the exertions of the few who could keep their presence of mind would be unavailing. What the result might be is terrible to contemplate.

We dwell on this total want of caution in the public themselves, in order more strongly to point out the necessity of some regulations for ensuring their safety. We are no advocates for the continual interference of the authorities with the affairs of daily life, according to the continental system, which does every man's business for him better than he could do it himself. But there is a mean in all things, and the total neglect we witness here is as blameable as the excess of supervision. In no respect is this neglect more apparent than in the state of the different piers and landing-places along the river. They are ricketty structures, made of old worn out coal barges, chained together, or connected by planking, which may or may not be trustworthy. The recent appalling accident seems to have arisen from the snapping of the timbers of one of these platforms, over-crowded with people, who were suffered to go upon it by a culpable neglect. The whole of the piers on the river are bad and faulty, and as unsightly in appearance as they are dangerous in use. Surely it would be easy to construct them so as to be at once safe and elegant, and without making them what they are at present—obstructions to the navigation of the river. Nothing can be better adapted to the formation of these piers than the suspension principle, so easily applied, and, when properly constructed, so safe, with the additional advantage of allowing a free tide-way beneath. The Cadogan-pier, at Chelsea, is an example of what might be done elsewhere. It is inconceivable that the Court of Conservancy, entrusted with the guardianship of the river against obstructions and encroachments, should have so long tolerated these crazy fabrics. To their neglect may be attributed the loss of seven or eight lives now, and more hereafter when the impression produced by this catastrophe shall have worn off. It has been stated that the Court was about to take some steps in the matter; it is even said that this pier was one of those about to be "presented" as unsafe. We hope the late event will quicken the pace of this body, seeing the fatal result of its dilatoriness. If they make a vigorous strike now, they will be seconded by public opinion, and the banks of the river may present landing places that will no longer be at once unsightly and unsafe, and on any public occasion or spectacle on the river, inviting the crowd to press upon them to betray them to a sudden death. Those who profit by the conveyance of passengers on the river should be compelled to consult the public safety a little more, even though it should cause their returns to be a little less.



THE NEW COMET. DRAWN AT THE ROYAL OBSERVATORY, GREENWICH.

ADDRESS TO THE COMET.

Cœlivagæ flammæ.

Art thou the same mysterious traveller,
That in our last bright circuit of the sun
Paid visit to our gaze,
And woke up mixt surprise—
Filling the many with an awful dread,
The few with deep delight?

Art thou the same return'd with reinforce
Of heav'nly ammunition—Light and Heat,
Which in thy last campaign
'Gainst other worlds was spent
Ere thou had'st meditated war on us?
Hast thou been back to where

The storehouse of the thunderbolt is kept,
And steep'd thy long hair in the lightning stream
That 'round it ever flows,
Keeping it prisoner there
Till the destroying angel lifts the sluice
To pour both on some world?

Or art though on a kindly mission sent?—
Or on thy own research a wand'ring orb
Curious to see in which
Of all the breathing stars
The happiest Eden was by folly lost?
If so—come not to us!

Thou'lt find no remnants of that blissful place
Where we imagine our first kindred dwelt—
Dreary and desolate
Is all around it now!—
Turn—turn away and give us not the fear
Of thy consuming touch!

W.

A beautiful comet has recently appeared in our northern heavens, but whether it be a new one—that is one that has preveviously escaped the observation of astronomers—can only be determined by further observations on its orbit. Since its first discovery in this country, it has passed Bootis Corona Borealis, and on the night of July 23d, when our drawing was made, it was not far from Bootis. Its daily change in R. A. = —4m. 30s.; ditto in N. E. D. = + 44m. In its course towards the sun, it is rapidly approaching the earth, a circumstance which has caused timid and visionary people some alarm. The fever of apprehension is not, however, so great as that which disturbed the Parisian population in 1773, when a similar phenomenon occurred. On that occasion, many persons are said to have died of fright; while numbers prepared for the worst by purchasing—what were offered at high premiums—places in paradise. To relieve the fear of such a catastrophe, we may inform the public of the result of some very curious and elaborate calculations made by Arago to show the extremely small probability of a contact between ourselves and any comet whatever. "Let us suppose," says that great man, "a comet, of which we only know that at its perihelion it is nearer the sun than we are, and that its diameter is one-fourth of that of the earth, the calculation of probabilities shows that of 281,000,000 of chances, there is only one unfavourable, there exists but one which can produce a collision between the two bodies. As for the nebulosity, in its most general dimensions, the unfavourable chances will be from ten to twenty in the same number of two hundred and eighty one millions. Admitting then, for a moment, that the comets which may strike the earth with their nuclei, would annihilate the whole human race, then the danger of death to each individual, resulting from the appearance of an unknown comet, would be exactly equal to the risk he would run if in an urn there was only one single white ball, of a total number of 281,000 000 balls, and that his condemnation to death would be the inevitable consequence of the white ball being produced at the first drawing."

The comet is of a bright white colour, with its tail turned from the earth. Stars of small magnitude are seen through its body. At present, it is only visible with a telescope; but in a few nights it is expected to be seen with the naked eye. Its luminosity is so intense that it has been easily detected during the bright sunsets of the past week.

We are indebted to the Astronomer Royal, for permitting our artist to make the drawing from which our cut is engraved.

[COUNTRY EDITION.]

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

FRANCE.

The Paris papers are, of course, much occupied with the progress of the expedition against Morocco, but no news of consequence has transpired.

Accounts have been received from Algiers to the 16th by the Ville de Bordeaux steamer, which arrived at Marseilles on the 18th. At the time when she left Algiers it was not known that the Prince de Joinville, with his fleet, had left Oran for Tangiers. It was said in Algiers that Marshal Bugeaud intended to follow up his attacks upon the Moors by more decisive measures. It was also reported in Algiers, in opposition to the general opinion as to the Emperor of Morocco's pacific dispositions towards France, that after the affair of the 15th the Moors were supplied with of troops from Fez.

There has been another accident on the Versailles Railway (left bank), but fortunately it was not attended, like the last, with fatal consequences. At Meudon, a train coming from Versailles, was in the act of stopping, when it came in contact with another train which was standing at the station and ready to start. It is supposed the person in charge of the engine neglected to turn the steam off in time. The stoker, and another person, had legs fractured, and one or two others were slightly injured. It being the day of the Meudon fête, when a vast number of the Paris populace were assembled, the affair created great alarm.

The Chamber of Peers has adopted without any amendment the bill for authorising the construction of a railroad from Paris to the Belgian frontier, and to the British channel, and has also agreed to the bill for the railway from Paris to Rennes. The section from Paris to Amiens will be ready to receive the rails towards the end of the year.

In the Chamber of Deputies the Budget of Receipts was voted by a majority of 209 against 39. The Chamber also adopted an important amendment of M. Salvandy, who had proposed that the University tax, which produces annually about 1,600,000f., should cease to be levied after the 1st of January, 1845. Another amendment, equally important, moved by M. Garnier Pagès, was also carried with the approbation of the Minister of Finance. It was to the following effect:—

"The portion not yet issued of the loan of 450,000,000f., which the Minister of Finance has been authorised to negotiate with publicity and competition by the 35th article of the law of June 25, 1841, may be equally negotiated by him, for the entire or any portion, by means of a public subscription, of which the mode and conditions shall be fixed by Royal ordinance."

It appears that the French Government have not yet determined to negociate the loan of 300,000,000 francs which was authorised in 1842.

The Toulonnais of the 18th inst. contains the following list of the French vessels of war now concentrated on the African coast—The ships of the line Suffren, bearing the flag of Admiral de Joinville, Jemappes, and Triton; the frigate Belle Poule; the steam frigates Labrador, Asmodée, and Orénoque; the steam-corvettes Pluton, Gassendi, Veloce, and Cuvier; the steamers of lesser power Phare, Castor, Cocyte, Etna, Tartare, Euphrate, Sphinx, Chimère, Rubis, Var, and Gregois; and the lighters Aube, Provencale, and Perdrix.

The Moniteur publishes the returns of the manufacture and consumption of beet root sugar down to the close of June last; from which it appears that on the 1st of July there were 325 manufactories in operation, or 59 less than at the corresponding period of 1843. The entire quantity of sugar manufactured in 1844 was 28,104,523 kilogrammes, and that lying over since last year, 3,871,314, making in all 31,975,837 kilogrammes; the quantity sold for consumption was 28,993,218, leaving on hand at the end of June, 2,979,619 kilogrammes. The duties levied thereon amounted to 4,869,890 francs.

SPAIN.

Our accounts from Madrid state that the threatened expedition against Morocco was still in the contemplation of Ministers, but the well-informed portion of the public did not consider it as likely to proceed.

The late executions in Aragon had caused a very painful sensation in that capital. The province of Almeira had been likewise declared in a state of siege, in consequence of symptoms of disaffection manifested in different localities. Some other executions of an equally atrocious character had taken place at Caspe. The following account is given of it, in a letter from Caspe, dated the 9th instant:—"Yesterday morning," it says, "a detachment of twenty infantry and nine cavalry arrived here from Alcaniz. The three unhappy Carlists were removed from their dungeons and enjoined to confess, and at twelve o'clock they were shot. The judge opposed, by every legal means, so flagrant an injustice: but what can the tribunals do in presence of bayonets? One of the three sufferers, Pajares, died without confession, and Christian burial was denied to his remains."

M. Viluma was to resume the post of Ambassador in London, and Count de Colombi had been appointed Chargé d'Affaires in Brussels. A letter from Gibraltar, of the 5th, mentions that the steamer Vesuvius, which sailed on the 26th ult., from Mogadore, with Mr. Hay, Consul-General of England at Tangier, had returned to Gibraltar. The Consul was to proceed from Mogadore to the residence of the Emperor, and there was every reason to hope that his mission would be successful. According to that letter, the Moors of Fez had resolved to avenge their countrymen killed in the late encounters with the French, by setting fire to the quarter inhabited by the Israelites; but Sidi Mahomed, the son of the Emperor, had opposed their project.

The Posdata quotes a letter from Algesiras of the 12th, announcing that the French squadron reached that harbour on the morning of the 11th. The Prince de Joinville had immediately gone ashore, and had an interview with the General in command of the place. After his return on board the Suffren, a deputation of the authorities waited upon him to congratulate him on his arrival, and offer him the use of an apartment which the Ayuntamiento had fitted up for his reception. The Prince politely declined the offer, and even requested that no honours should be paid to him when he visited their town, which he purposed often doing during his stay in their harbour. The next day the Prince, dressed in plain clothes, landed with a number of officers of his staff, and rode out to examine the adjoining coast, on which he intended, the next morning, to effect a landing from the ships, to train his crews to that exercise.

HANOVER.

A letter from Hanover of the 16th inst. has the following:—"We were alarmed yesterday by a report that the town of Gelas was almost entirely burnt to the ground. To-day, however, we learn that there has been a great fire, which destroyed a church, with a celebrated organ, and ten houses. It is stated, that to the indefatigable and judicious exertions of the military in directing the fire-engines, may be ascribed the preservation of the remainder of the town, the wind being very stormy, and the roofs of the adjoining houses being often in great danger.

PORTUGAL.

We have letters from Lisbon to the 17th inst., but they are utterly destitute of political news. The financial difficulties of the Portuguese Government are on the increase. An attempt had been made to negociate a loan with the Lisbon bank, but it had failed. The consequence is, that Government is compelled to dishonour bills for very petty sums. Some have been protested for the sum of £120, others have been renewed at a very extravagant interest.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Friday.

The house met at four o'clock, when the royal assent was given to various bills.

Mr. E. James was called to the bar, and addressed their lordships against the Gaming Bill. When the learned gentleman concluded, Mr. Russell was called and examined, but as he declined to answer some questions put to him, he was told to withdraw, but not to leave the house. Ultimately it was resolved that the witness Russell be ordered to attend at the bar, and that in the meantime his evidence before the Select Committee and the house be printed. The witness was accordingly called in, and ordered to attend. He said—"I will obey your lordships."

Several petitions were then presented on different subjects.

The Brighton, Lewes, and Hastings Railway Bill, and the Transfer of Property Bill, were read a third time and passed.

The Art Union Bill went through committee, and some other bills being disposed of, the house adjourned at half-past seven o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Friday.

The house met at twelve o'clock.

Railway Resolutions.—Mr. Gladstone moved certain resolutions relating to the deposit of railway sections, plans, and bills, in the railway department of the Board of Trade, and to reports which may be made thereon. The right hon. gentleman said it was unnecessary to make any statement respecting them, as the resolutions were themselves sufficiently explanatory. He proposed, however, to omit the last resolution, as it related to subjects of which the house could have no knowledge. The resolutions having been agreed to, Mr. Gladstone said, it must be obvious that there were many subjects which came under the control of the Board of Trade which could not be made the subject of resolutions of that house; but it would be the duty of the Board of Trade to prepare some minutes, which would be laid before the house with as little delay as possible.

The report on the Metropolitan Buildings Bill was agreed to.

Joint Stock Companies Bill.—The house, on the motion of Mr. Gladstone, went into committee on the Joint Stock Companies Regulation and Registration Bill.—In answer to a question from Sir D. Norreys, Mr Gladstone stated that on bringing up the report he should introduce words to extend its provisions to Ireland. The clauses were disposed of, and the bill, with the amendments, ordered to be reported on Tuesday.

Mr. Ewart called the attention of the house to the expediency of a statement being made by the Government, respecting the disposal and the results of the outlay of public money voted for the purposes of education. The remarks of the hon. member, however, did not elicit any reply.

Mr. Milner Gibson then brought the subject of the incendiarism in Norfolk and Suffolk before the house; and after contending that the existence of the crime called for the earnest attention of the Government, moved an address to her Majesty for a commission to inquire into the subject.—Sir J. Graham opposed it, and said such discussions were only calculated to increase the evil.—After a long discussion the house divided. The numbers were—

For the motion..	41
Against it	130
Majority against the motion	—89

The house having resolved into a committee of supply, Mr. Wyse, on the vote for education (Ireland) having been proposed, moved an address to her Majesty, representing the importance of due provision being made for the University education of Ireland, and praying for an enlargement and improvement of existing arrangements, by opening the emoluments and honours of the Universities of Dublin to Roman Catholics as well as Protestants, or by such other means as her Majesty in her wisdom and benevolence may deem fit.—Sir R. Peel assured Mr. Wyse that the Government had taken the subject into consideration, and next session a measure would be submitted, the object of which would be to place the Roman Catholics on a level, as regarded academical education, with their Protestant fellow subjects.—With this explanation Mr. Wyse was satisfied, and the vote of £40,000 for the purpose of education in Ireland was then agreed to.—Mr. Plumptre gave his opinion that the Protestant population of Ireland would feel themselves deeply wounded by the increase of £25,000 a year in the grant. If he had any other opportunity he should divide the committee against the grant.—Lord Palmerston, and some other hon. members, expressed their satisfaction at the liberal tone assumed by Sir R. Peel on the subject. Subsequently the usual annual vote for Maynooth College was proposed. To this some opposition was manifested. On a division, the grant was agreed to by 87 to 30.—The house resumed.

Mr. Sheil gave notice, that on Monday he should move for a select committee to inquire how the French possessions in Africa were acquired, and how far their extension was consistent with the political and commercial interests of this country.—Sir R. Peel said it was the most extraordinary motion he had ever heard.—The house adjourned at twenty minutes to two o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Monday.

Actions for Gaming Discontinuance Bill.—Mr. Russell, the solicitor, was again examined in reference to the thirty-four qui tam actions commenced by him. A question was put to him, which he declined to answer, as to the parties connected with the proceedings who advanced the money. This he declined to answer on the ground that it involved a privileged communication to him in his character of attorney.—The Earl of Radnor passed a censure on the committee appointed to inquire into the gaming laws, who, he said, wished to fish out facts unfairly. He objected to the course of examination adopted by Lord Brougham.—Lord Brougham defended it.—A controversy of rather a personal character arose, in the course of which the Duke of Richmond said that Earl Radnor had taken advantage of the proceedings out-of-doors, and had adopted the clap-trap for the purpose of representing that the object of the bill was only to protect some of their own friends. The noble duke denied that the committee had any unfair feeling.—The Earl of Eglintoun also defended the committee.—Earl Radnor explained.—It was decided that the witness was right in his view, and the question was withdrawn.—The bill passed through committee.

The Sudbury Disfranchisement Bill was read a second time, as was the Charitable Trusts Bill. The latter, however, excited some opposition from the Bishop of London.

The Charitable Bequests (Ireland) Bill, and the Art-Unions Bill, were read a third time and passed.

Adjourned at eleven o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Monday.

The house assembled at twelve o'clock.

The Explosion off Brighton.—In answer to a question from Captain Pechell, Sir R. Peel said that the Government had nothing to do with the experiment made by Captain Warner, and had received no report of the proceedings.—Captain Plumridge also put some questions to Lord Ingestre, which that noble lord answered, by reading a certificate, signed by himself, and Captains Dickenson and Henderson, (given in page 54.)

Joint Stock Banks Regulation Bill.—In Committee on the Joint Stock Banks Regulation Bill, Sir W. Clay moved a clause, removing the principle of unlimited liability of shareholders in joint stock banks, and rendering them liable only for the amount of their shares. The clause, however, was negatived, on a division.

Railways Bill.—Mr. Gladstone explained the alterations made by the Government in the bill; the chief of which appear, from his statement, to be as follows:—Mr. Gladstone said there was a material relaxation in the term of the option of revision or purchase—that was, that the right of purchase should not accrue until after twenty-one years, instead of fifteen years, after the passing of the Act of Incorporation, as originally intended. Another change was, that the right of revision, being once exercised, should not be again exercised within the further term of twenty-one years. The bill, in its amended state, provided that when a railway should be purchased, it should be taken at the value at which it might be estimated at the time of the purchase. He thought that an improvement in the bill. Then, again, it was provided that, if the railway, at the expiration of twenty-one years, should be making more than ten per cent., the transfer should be effected by the payment of twenty-five years' purchase.—On clause 6 an amendment was proposed by Mr. Thornely, having for its object to provide third class trains on Sundays, as well as first and second class. The Government opposed this amendment; but, on a division, it was carried by a majority of 32.—Other amendments were proposed, and some divisions took place, but none of them were carried, and the bill passed through committee.

In answer to a question from Captain Polhill, Sir J. Graham said he had advised her Majesty to grant mercy to Dalmas; but he declined to state the grounds on which he had made the recommendation.

France and Morocco.—Mr. Sheil called the attention of the house to the present state of the relations between France and Morocco. He did not persist in the motion of which he gave notice on Friday last, and which Sir R. Peel characterized as the most extraordinary one he had ever heard, but merely moved for a return of the amount of the British force in the Mediterranean on the 1st July, 1844, and a copy of an ordonnance of the French Government, imposing new duties on foreign vessels entering the port of Algiers. Mr. Sheil introduced the subject by referring to the various communications which have taken place between France and England respecting the occupation of Algiers, and remarked that the occupation of the colony involved important circumstances connected with the commerce of this country. He read documents to show that much injury had been done to our trade by the tariff in operation in that part of Africa. Mr. Sheil then alluded to the dispute between France and Morocco, and insisted that our Government had not taken steps to provide a sufficient force in the Mediterranean to meet any emergency. In urging this, however, Mr. Sheil disclaimed the idea of saying any thing offensive towards the French. He greatly admired the French people: they were a noble people, and the Minister of the French Government stood pre-eminently great in intellectual stature: he was a great statesman—a great thinker—a great minister—a great writer—but, what was better, he was a good and honourable man. (Cheers.) The King of the French, since he had been placed upon the throne, had displayed that jewel which was stated to be rare, and which was finer than any which he carried in his crown. (Cheers.) His noble friend (Lord Palmerston) was charged with having alienated France: at all events he did not lower England (cheers from the Opposition); and he owned that he had been at a loss to discover any practical fruits from the amity which was stated to subsist between the two cabinets. He saw many professions of diplomatic endearment exchanged between the Cabinets of France and England; but he was at a loss to discover what England got. (Hear.)—Sir R. Peel said that the Government were occupied in doing what they could to prevent any hostile collision between France and Morocco, that either might be injurious to the integrity or independence of Morocco, or compromise the commercial or political interests of this country. He acquitted Mr. Sheil of any intention to cause animosities between this country and France; but said if that had been his intention, he could hardly have taken any course more calculated to ensure it. Sir R. Peel then went over the circumstances connected with the occupation of Algiers by the French, remarking en passant that the Whig Government had never taken any steps on the subject. On the subject of the tariff he said he regretted that France had imposed it, but that was a totally different question from the question of right.—Sir R. Peel denied the alleged insufficiency of the British navy, and repeated what he had lately said, that this country was now in a situation for making, within a very short time, if it should be necessary, a naval demonstration worthy of her character. All that the Government had thought it requisite to do with respect to the African question, was to ask for a disclaimer from France of any intention to extend her territories in the direction of Tunis or of Morocco, and that disclaimer France had given. The right hon. baronet opposed the motion, on the ground that it would have an injurious effect.—Lord J. Russell concurred with Mr. Sheil in thinking that Government had not paid sufficient attention to the state of the navy.—In the course of a long discussion that ensued, Sir C. Napier gave a similar opinion to that of Lord John Russell, and also censured the Government for not sufficiently equipping the navy. He said he hoped that the right hon. baronet, who, he was afraid, allowed obstinacy to prevail over his mind (a laugh), would alter his determination, and come down to Parliament and ask for more men, and he thought that his hon. friend the member for Montrose (Mr. Hume) would be one of the first to vote with the right hon. baronet for the increase when he saw that this country would be placed in an improper position without it.—Sir G. Cockburn defended the policy of the Admiralty, and said they could send out ships with quite sufficient rapidity for any emergency that was likely to occur.—Lord Palmerston considered the existence of the war party in France as an additional reason for entering into discussions, which would show the force and the resolution of this country. He stated the substance of some correspondence which had passed upon the subject of Algiers between the Duke of Wellington's Ministry, in 1830, and the Government of France; and defended the course taken by the subsequent Ministry in leaving the subject undisturbed. He blamed the present Government for the insufficiency of their naval force. He believed that the best economy was to be well prepared with the means of naval defence.—The motion was negatived without a division.

Mr. Hume brought on the motion, upon which the house had been counted out a few nights before, for an address to the Crown praying Her Majesty to remodel the Royal Academy, with a view of rendering it more conducive to the advancement of the fine arts. In the course of his speech, Mr. Hume spoke of the Royal Academy and the President in very uncourteous terms.—Sir R. Peel observed that the hon. member had now substituted the word "impudence" in speaking of the members of the Royal Academy, for the term "audacity," which he had at first used. He would not, however, quarrel with the hon. gentleman, considering him to be a good judge as to how far impudence might be carried with impunity. (A laugh.)—Mr. Hume said that if he had not had the impudence of the devil he would never have done any good in that house. (A laugh.) As to the taunt which the right hon. baronet had thrown out respecting his impudence, it was quite thrown away upon him, for he should go on as he had always done, performing his duty to the public. (Hear.)

The Municipal Corporation Bill was read a third time and passed.

The house sat till nearly two o'clock in the morning.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Tuesday.

The house sat but a very short time, and a few bills were advanced a stage.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Tuesday.

The house assembled at twelve o'clock, and devoted the morning sitting to the Joint Stock Banks Bill and the Joint Stock Regulations Bill.

In the evening Lord Ashley moved for an address to the Crown praying her Majesty to take into consideration the report of the Commissioners of Lunacy. Lord Ashley cited many passages of the report to prove the wretched condition of pauper lunatics and the inadequacy of the present means of providing for them.—Sir James Graham admitted the existence of the evil, but requested the withdrawal of the motion, as the Government intended at some future period to take measures to ensure better prevision both for pauper and criminal lunatics. Lord Ashley therefore withdrew the motion.

On the motion of Dr. Bowring, a resolution was carried, recommending a further relaxation of the quarantine laws.

Mr. Ross then moved an address to the Crown, praying of her Majesty to remove from the Commission of the Peace, Mr. O. Driscoll, (about whose case a long discussion took place in the House of Lords last week.—Lord Eliot and Sir J. Graham both opposed the motion, and on a division, Mr. Ross's motion was negatived by 92 to 59.

Leave was given to the Chancellor of the Exchequer to bring in the Appropriation Bill, the sure forerunner of the close of the session.

The House adjourned at one o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Wednesday.

The house did not sit.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Wednesday.

The house met at twelve o'clock in the day, and disposed of several bills.

Upon the suggestion of Sir James Graham, Mr. Fitzroy Kelly withdrew his Bill giving an appeal in criminal cases, the Government having undertaken to pay attention to the subject next session,

The Poor Law Amendment Bill was then discussed. On the question of bringing up the Report, Mr. Borthwick moved the addition of four clauses, introducing the principles that people standing in the relation of man and wife, and in that of parent and child, should not be separated; and that persons who had fallen into poverty from temporary infirmity or insufficiency of employment, or whose destitution had arisen from circumstances over which they had no control, should be entitled to out-door relief.—Sir James Graham opposed the clauses, on the ground that they were contrary to the principle of the legislation on the Poor Law which had prevailed for the last three centuries. On a division the first clause was negatived by 82 to 19, and Mr. Borthwick did not divide the house on the others. The further consideration of the Report was postponed.

The Clerk of the Crown in Chancery Bill was read a third time and passed.

The house sat till one o'clock, but nothing of importance occurred.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Thursday.

The County Coroners Bill was read a third time and passed.

Actions for Gaming Suspension Bill.—The Marquis of Normanby, in the absence of the Duke of Richmond, moved the third reading of the Actions for Gaming at Horse Races Bill.—The Earl of Radnor opposed the motion. He contended that the defendants in these actions had no claim for the protection or the interference of the Parliament.—The Earl of Stradbroke and Lord Foley supported the bill.—After a few words from the Marquis of Normanby, in reply, the bill was read a third time and passed.

The Earl of Aberdeen, pursuant to notice, laid on the table the latest instructions given to the naval officers engaged in the suppression of the slave trade.

The following bills were then severally read a third time: the Sudbury Disfranchisement Bill, the Parish Constables Bill, Unlawful Oaths (Ireland) Bill, Soap Allowances Bill.

On the question of receiving the Report on the Insolvent Debtors' Bill a long debate took place, some portions of which were of an angry and personal description: Lord Cottenham complaining of the manner in which his bill had been treated by the committee. Several noble lords joined in the debate, and the Lord Chancellor having replied in defence of himself and the committee, the Report was received, and their lordships adjourned at half-past eleven.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Thursday.

There was again a morning sitting, and the discussion of the Poor Law Amendment Bill was continued. Several amendments were proposed and rejected. Colonel Sibthorp moved a clause, having for its object to abolish the Poor Law Commission, and to vest the management of the poor in local Boards of Guardians.—Sir J. Graham resisted the clause, on the ground that it would be equivalent to the abolition of the present Poor Laws. He said the Commissioners had his entire confidence. On a division the numbers were, for Colonel Sibthorp's clause 8, against it, 81, majority against it, 73. Various other clauses were discussed, and the further consideration of the Report was postponed till a later hour.

Archbutt's Divorce Bill was read a third time and passed.

The house next went into Committee on the Controverted Elections Bill, and having passed the measure through this stage, resumed the discussion on the report of the Poor-law Amendment Bill, which was disposed of with the exception of some few amendments, which stood over till the next day.

The remainder of the sitting was occupied in disposing of the business on the paper, most of which consisted of bills that stood for the third reading. Nothing of importance occurred in the discussions, and the house adjourned at half-past twelve.

Dreadful Suicide.—On Tuesday, expired at the Greenwich Union, an unfortunate young woman named Hannah Diball, aged eighteen, who precipitated herself from a second floor window of a house near the Magistrate's Police-office, Woolwich, on Saturday last. The unfortunate deceased was subject to fits of aberration of intellect and in one of these she destroyed her life.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

Ingenious Frauds in the Linendrapery Trade.—In the Court of Bankruptcy on Monday, assignees were chosen in the matter of Robert Bannister, a bankrupt, who had carried on business as a linen draper at Portsea, and whose brief career and flight from England exhibit the most extraordinary circumstances. It appeared that in the course of about ten weeks the bankrupt had contracted debts with some of the first houses in the trade in London, and with a few also at Manchester, to the amount of between £16,000 and £17,000. The mode of his conducting business during that short period was by selling at reduced prices—that is, under cost prices—at Portsea, where he was supposed to have taken about £40 a day; other portions of the goods supplied to him, having been consigned to the care of certain auctioneers in London, had been subsequently disposed of, and the proceeds at once realised by the bankrupt. Another portion of the goods was also sent to a description of houses in the London trade, called "slaughter houses." The bankrupt was last seen at Portsea, by his servants, upon the 23rd of June last, when the business was carried on in the usual way. A few days subsequently, however, upon the receipt of an anonymous letter by one of the London creditors, in which it was stated that "the bankrupt had bolted, and left the concern to take care of itself," Mr. Quilter, of the firm of Quilter and Ball, accountants, was despatched by the leading (chief) London creditors to Portsea, on the evening of the 6th inst., where he found the statement as contained in the letter to be the fact. Upon his return to London, next morning, a docket was struck against the bankrupt, and in the course of the same day, the stock upon the premises, valued at about £4500, was seized, as well as between £400 and £500 in cash from the wife of the bankrupt and another person connected with him. In consequence of subquent exertions, a further amount of property has been received, to the extent of £500, from various places where it had been deposited by the bankrupt. Bannister, it appears, went to France and other places under different names, and afterwards embarked for Madeira, but a clerk has been dispatched to that island with a warrant for his apprehension. He is supposed to have a large sum of money in his possession.

ASSIZE INTELLIGENCE.

Frightful Cases of Confessed Murder.—At the Norfolk Assizes, held at Cambridge, Eliza Joyce, aged 31, was charged with having, in the October of 1841, at Boston, administered to one Emma Joyce, a quantity of laudanum, with intent to kill and murder her. A second indictment, charged her with having, in the month of January, 1842, administered also a quantity of poison to Ann Joyce, with intent to kill and murder her. The prisoner was tried at the last spring assizes for the murder of one of the children of her husband by a former wife; owing, however, to some defect in the proof, she was acquitted. So strong, however, was the impression on the mind of her husband of her guilt, that he refused to live with her, and she went to the Boston union, where, being attacked with a severe fit of illness, she confessed to having murdered the two children mentioned in the indictment; to one, which was three years old, she was stepmother; the other, which was eighteen months old, was her own offspring. The wretched woman was habited in deep mourning, and as she appeared in the dock was evidently suffering acutely, both in body and mind. She was accommodated with a chair. Having pleaded guilty to the charges against her, the learned judge, in passing sentence, observed the present was one of the most distressing cases it had been his lot to witness since he had sat upon the bench. By her own confession, she had not only destroyed the life of an infant to whom she was bound to have been a protector, but she had not hesitated to sacrifice her offspring, and that without any conceivable reason. He could hold out no hopes of mercy to her in this life; she must, therefore, prepare to meet her God. Mr. Justice Coltman then passed upon the prisoner the last sentence of the law, that she be hung—nothing being audible beyond the judge's voice but the sobs of the guilty woman in the dock.

Incendiarism by a Girl.—Upon the same day, at the above assizes, Fanny Rutherford, a young girl of fifteen, was charged with setting fire to an outhouse, whereby five cottages were burnt to the ground. Mr. Worlledge conducted the case for the prosecution, and called several witnesses, whose testimony proved that within a minute after the prisoner had been seen to enter and quit a certain outhouse attached to her father's cottage, and close to which was a furze stack, a fire burst out. While the flames were in progress, and after they had spent their utmost fury on the property set forth in the indictment, the prisoner was quietly amusing herself in the street, playing and romping about with other children. In addition to these facts, various witnesses deposed to her having given several contradictory statements relative to her proceedings just before the fire; and the jury having, without much hesitation, returned a verdict of "Guilty," the prisoner was sentenced to fifteen years' transportation.

A Barrister Indicted for Perjury.—Considerable interest was excited by the profession and the public as to the result of the trial of Mr. Newton, the barrister, on a charge of alleged perjury. The trial took place at Worcester on Monday. There were several counts in the indictment, but the allegations were in fact only two, namely, that the defendant had committed wilful and corrupt perjury in two affidavits sworn to by him, one on the 28th of June, at Gloucester, and the other before Mr. Justice Maule at Oxford, on circuit, on the 14th of July, 1843, in swearing that he was discharged by order of Mr. Boodle from an arrest at the suit of Mr. Healey, and that George Wilson, the prosecutor in this case, had forcibly broken into his house and arrested him on the 5th July last. The public are familiar with the circumstances out of which the trial arose. Witnesses were examined on the part of the prosecutor, but the case signally failed, and the jury returned a verdict of acquittal.

Shooting with Intent to Murder.—At the Lincoln assizes, William Markham, aged 37, was charged with having, on the 30th of May, at Tathwell, feloniously shot at Jacob Gainsley, with intent to murder him. There were other counts charging him with an intent to wound and maim. The prosecutor is the keeper of a toll-bar near Louth, and on the evening in question was within the same, reading his Bible, when Markham entered and asked for a biscuit. He soon after quitted the place, but returned, and taking down a pistol from the mantelpiece, levelled it at the prosecutor and fired, the ball happily missing him and lodging in the wall. The defence was, that the man, at the time he committed the act in question, was not in a right state of mind. The jury retired, and after a long consultation, returned with a verdict of guilty of shooting with intent to kill. The sentence was deferred.

Incendiarism in Suffolk.—The Suffolk assizes have commenced. The calendar contains the names of 50 prisoners, the majority of whom are charged with the frightful crime of arson. Scarcely any of the prisoners can either read or write. They are for the most part boys or young men.

POLICE.

The late Bill-Discounting Case.—John Alves, the person charged with having fraudulently obtained two promissory notes of £1000 each from Lord C. Fitzroy, attended on Monday before Mr. Maltby, at Marlborough-street Police-court, to meet the further proceedings in this case. After some conversation between the counsel on both sides, the defendant entered into recognizances to meet the charge. We last week remarked upon the defective state of the law in regard to the appropriation of bills; and it appears that a difficulty has arisen in this case, the directions, it being now ascertained, were not in writing, but only verbal, on the part of Lord C. Fitzroy. There is, however, another point in the defendant's favour. A bill in Chancery has been filed against him and two others, and the third section of the above act prohibits in such a case any criminal proceedings.

Death of a Boy from Brutal Treatment.—On Wednesday, at Worship-street, a man named Jeremiah Mulready, a carman, in the service of a farmer, at Hendon, was charged with having so seriously injured a boy, thirteen years of age, named Robert Jennings, the son of a poor labourer, in Golden-lane, St. Luke's, that he has since died on the hospital. An Irish shoemaker, named Mahony, stated, that while at his tea on the preceding afternoon, at 137, Golden-lane, he was called by some person to his street door, and he saw the prisoner drive a cart full of wet sand up to the next house. The prisoner then suddenly turned his horse round, and backed the cart close to the pavement, when, without calling out or giving the least warning, he instantly withdrew the bolt in the front of the cart, and turned the contents of the cart in a lump on the curbstone. This action was done so quickly that it was impossible for any person who was behind to escape, and, hearing a fearful scream when the cart was tilted, he recollected seeing the youth Jennings standing just where the sand was shot only an instant before; but the sand had fallen in such a compact mass, that not an inch of his person was visible. The prisoner did not immediately move his cart, and the witness and a shopman of a Mr. Fletcher, residing next door, with great difficulty got the sand from off the boy, on whose chest the whole weight of it was lying. The prisoner exhibited the greatest indifference, and, without taking the least notice of the occurrence, pitched the cart back again on to the shafts, and sent the horse on. The horse and cart went some distance down the street, and, in consequence of the boy's ankle having got twisted in a chain secured to the tail board, his body was dragged along the paving-stones until the horse was stopped, when it was found that the flesh of the boy's leg had been torn away by the chain, and the bone laid bare for the length of about six inches. The witness and Mr. Fletcher's shopman then raised up the youth, who was speechless, and carried him to the shop of a surgeon adjoining, but the surgeon could do nothing for him, and advised his removal to the hospital, which was accordingly done; but the poor youth expired there within a short time after his arrival. The witness spoke very indignantly of the heartlessness displayed by the prisoner, who, although he saw the state the unfortunate youth was in, while the witness had him in his arms, exclaimed, on being appealed to by one of the crowd the occurrence had assembled, "Oh, that vagabond's not hurt: he should have got out of the way." Another witness, named Henry M'Keogh, gave a similar account of the transaction, and was satisfied the prisoner gave no warning whatever. The prisoner said that he called out twice, and could prove it, if the magistrate would give him time to produce his witness. The prisoner's master gave him a good general character as a steady and careful driver, and offered to become bail for the prisoner if the magistrate would consent to take it. Mr. Bingham said it was important to the prisoner to produce the witness he spoke of if he could, and he would remand him for a week to enable him to do so, accepting the master's bail in the sum of £80 for the prisoner's appearance.

IRELAND.

The Lord-Lieutenant has nominated the Dean of the Chapel Royal to be first chaplain to his Excellency, and has expressed his intention of re-appointing all the chaplains whose names appear on the list of his predecessor. Viscount Tullamore, of the 43rd Regiment, son of the Earl of Charleville, has received the appointment of extra aide-de-camp on the staff of the Lord-Lieutenant.

The Harvest in Ireland.—The reports from all parts of the kingdom speak most sanguinely of the prospects of the harvest, which has already commenced in some of the more favoured districts, several fields of barley having been cut down in the neighbourhood of Dublin. The grain crops will be abundantly beyond the average of preceding years, but hay, from the exceeding drought, will be scarce, and of inferior quality. Potatoes are said to have failed in some instances; but the complaint is by no means general, nor is there at present any reason to apprehend a scarcity of this necessary article of food.

The "State Prisoners."—The rules of the prison being further relaxed by permission given to erect a gymnasium for the health and recreation of the seven conspirators, M. Maccaud, the celebrated professor of gymnastics, has been engaged—whether at the expense of the county or of the Corn Exchange, is a secret—for the purpose of imparting instructions in his graceful art to Messrs. O'Connell and Co. All his pupils are progressing admirably: but Mr. O'Connell, sen., as might be expected, is far a-head of his competitors. His feats of strength and agility are stated to have excited the astonishment of his teacher. Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays, being the days on which strangers are excluded from visits, are devoted to practice.—[So says the Dublin correspondent of the Times, and the details given from other sources of the feastings and visitings at the prison, prove pretty clearly that "the martyrs" have every opportu*nity of enjoying themselves as much as possible.*]

A very serious accident occurred to the High Sheriff of Carlow county, Sir Robert J. Paul, on Monday, by which it was considered for a time that his life was placed in imminent danger. He went to shoot rabbits at Brown's Hill, where he was on a visit; and after some time spent in this amusement, with a double barrel gun, he was reloading one of the barrels, when the other, which was loaded, exploded, and lodged the contents in his right hand, dreadfully shattering two of his fingers. Dr. Rawson, of Carlow, was in attendance a short time after, and removed a joint off the thumb, and the entire fore finger. He sustained some injury in the cheek, but is entirely out of danger, and going on well.

The Murder of Lord Norbury.—At the King's County Assizes, held at Tullamore, Peter Dolan, who was dressed in the garb of a labourer, and was apparently about thirty-five years of age, was arraigned for the murder of Hector Toler, Lord Norbury, on the 1st of January, 1839 (in the second year of the reign of Queen Victoria), by firing at him with a gun, loaded with powder and ball, and giving him a mortal wound, of which he languished for two days and then died. The Solicitor-General briefly stated the case, observing that the principal witness *in the case was a person named Day, who was open to the imputa*tion of being one of those conspirators himself, and who, therefore, came before them in the questionable character of an approver. He then detailed the circumstances of the murder, and called several witnesses in addition to Day, who deposed to various facts connected with the murder, the circumstances of which must be familiar to our readers. They, however, failed to satisfy the jury, who returned a verdict of acquittal.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

LAMENTABLE OCCURRENCE AT BLACKFRIARS-BRIDGE.

On Monday evening a most serious and fatal accident took place in consequence of the breaking down of the floating pier moored upon the east end of Blackfriars-bridge.

A crowd of men, women, and children had congregated upon the pier for the purpose of witnessing the great heat of the Bankside boat race, when suddenly the temporary bridge gave way and precipitated nearly thirty persons into the water, which was then about ten feet deep, on the Middlesex side. The confusion was at once indescribable—a dense mass of human beings struggling together, each clasping the other, and many of them sinking to rise no more. With all possible speed drags were procured, and four persons were, after much difficulty, rescued, and, after the most careful attention on the part of Dr. Hutchinson, they were restored to their families and friends. About eight o'clock, the bodies of two children, Benjamin Bredcott, aged about four years, and that of his sister, about fourteen years of age, were brought ashore, quite dead. The bodies were taken to the Glaziers' Arms, in Water-lane, and every attempt made to resuscitate them, but without effect. About half-past eight the body of a young female, about eighteen years of age, was found close by the bow of one of the coal-barges lying alongside the floating pier. She was dressed in a black drawn bonnet, a lavender print dress, had on an apron, but no ring on her finger. She was quite dead when taken to the above public-house, where she was laid by a large fire and wrapped up in flannel.

When the poor creatures were precipitated into the water, their screams for assistance were truly heart-rending, but so great was the confusion, that few had sufficient presence of mind to exert themselves.

The bridge and the vicinity presented a scene of painful excitement such as we never before witnessed. Mothers were running wildly in every direction calling out for their children, each expecting momentarily to hear of her own bereavement. Others made rapidly towards their homes, to see if all were safe, whilst here and there, on and about the vicinity of the bridge, some spectator of the sad event, who had barely escaped the calamity, was detailing with painful cir*cumstantiality all that he or she had witnessed, scarcely conscious, in the turn of* the tale, of the interest which it excited.

By ten o'clock two other bodies had been picked up at St. Paul's Wharf, but the parties were restored.

Just before that hour another female body was found, and the following is a correct list of those first discovered:—

Mary Ann Bredcott, aged eighteen years, living with her father in Newgate-market.

Rhoda, aged fourteen, her sister. Benjamin, aged about four years.

Also, Maria Paleston, twenty-three years of age, a fringe-maker, who was residing at 8, Aylesbury Court, St. John's Square.

It appeared that Mr. Bredcott was himself immersed with his children, and in the presence of his wife, who, standing on the step at a few yards distance, was an eye-witness of the distressing scene. The fifth body was discovered near the bridge on Tuesday morning, and proved to be a little girl named Aurelia Mundy, about ten years of age, the daughter of Alfred Mundy, a publican, in Printing-house-lane.

An inquest was held on the body of the latter at the Glazier's Arms, on Tuesday evening, before Mr. Payne, coroner. The first witness, David Thomas, a labouring man, deposed as follows:—I was standing on the landing-place at the lower part of the pier, near Blackfriars-bridge, when the accident occurred. A steamer had just come up, and Mr. Ware, one of the proprietors of the pier, who was also standing on the dumb lighter, told me to go and send the people away from the top part of the pier. There were as many as 50 people at that time on the wooden bridge leading from the stone landing to the pier-boat. They had been attracted there by a rowing match which was going on on the river. I told them repeatedly to go away, but they persisted in remaining on the pier-bridge. I heard the noise when the bridge snapped asunder, and saw the people struggling in the water. Several children had just previously run from the bridge on to the stone steps. I picked up a Frenchman and his lady; they were saved. I should say about twenty persons fell into the water besides those who were drowned. The proprietors of the pier do not allow the public to stand there by right, only on this occasion they would not go away. No money was taken for admission to the pier. The bridge was only intended to land passengers from the steam-boats, and for that purpose I believe it was quite strong enough. It broke down, in my opinion, from the heavy weight upon it, and from no other cause. I believe the wood of which it was made was strong and sound in every respect.

Mr. Ware, one of the proprietors of the pier, corroborated the statement of the last witness, that the bridge was made quite strong enough for the embarking and disembarking of passengers. He had endeavoured repeatedly to remove the people from the pier, but they insisted on stopping. He did not see any policemen present. At the time of the accident (shortly before eight o'clock) the tide was about an hour after high water. He thought as many as forty persons fell into the water. He took two out himself.

A carpenter named George Hodges said the wooden bridge of the pier was in good condition. It was built of the best Dantzic timber. From his experience he was satisfied that the bridge was of sufficient strength. It was sufficiently strong to enable people to pass from the bridge to the steamboats. He believed the rail on the bridge was the original one, and that the pressure on it broke it. While this rail remained whole, the entire structure would continue whole and firm. Had no doubt that this rail broke or was forced outwards. The rail was a support to the bridge.

Some other evidence was given, but it was immaterial. After an address from the Coroner upon the law of the case, the jury, without rising, returned a verdict of "Accidental Death."

On Wednesday an inquest was held by Mr. J. Payne, at the School-room, Playhouse-yard, on the four remaining bodies, namely, those of Rhoda Bredcott, aged 14; Mary Ann Bredcott, aged 10; and George Bredcott, aged 4 (the children of Mr. Bredcott, butcher, 22, Newgate-market); and of Mary Puleston, aged 23, of Aylesbury-court.

Martha Canning stated, that she was standing on the wooden-bridge, with her child in her arms, when the accident happened, by which she was precipitated into the river. She had seen Mr. Bredcott and his girl and boy just previously, having stood close by them on the bridge. When the crash took place she clung to that part of the platform which hung from the stonework, having her child still on one arm. One of the watermen tried to get her out of the water, but failed in the attempt. They were ultimately saved by a gentleman whom she did not know. She saw Mr. Bredcott just after he was taken out of the water, but did not see his children taken out. She did not pay anything to get on the bridge, nor did she see any money taken at all. There were, she thought, about thirty or forty people on the bridge, independently of a great many others who had assembled on other parts of the pier.

John Bredcott, an aged man (the father of the three deceased children) after speaking to the identity of his children, stated that he was standing with them on the bridge, about two yards from the stone work, when the accident happened. He had no idea of its being unsafe, and did not hear any body telling them to go off, or he should not have remained there another minute.

Thomas Eaves, city policeman, No. 303, deposed that he was on Blackfriars-bridge, and from thence went to the spot. Was there when the body of Rhoda Bredcott was found. Was on duty near the spot. It was not his duty to remove persons from the pier who might be standing there, and should not do it without the order from the superintendent. It was not a usual thing to remove such persons. Saw sixty persons standing on the bridge about half an hour before it gave way. Saw the waterman attempt to drive the people off the pier several times, but when that person's back was turned, they came there again.

Mr. Hutchinson, the surgeon, deposed to the ineffectual attempts he made to restore animation to the bodies.

Edward Thomas Puleston was then examined.—Lives at 8, Aylesbury-court, St. John-square, and is a currier by trade. The deceased, Maria Puleston, was his daughter, and was 22 years of age. Was not aware that she was dead until he had returned home after the accident. Was himself at Blackfriars-bridge, but did not see her there. He saw the accident happen from the place where he was standing. Many people were standing on the wooden bridge at the time. He should say there were 40 or 50 standing on it when the platform broke, as nearly as he could judge.

After some other evidence, which was not material, the coroner addressed the jury, who, after a few minutes' consultation, returned a verdict of "Accidental death."

One of the jurymen said it did not appear that any blame was attached to the people connected with the pier.

The coroner concurred in the observation, giving his opinion that the pier men had only been too indulgent.

On Tuesday Mr. Under-Sheriff Anderton waited upon the Lord Mayor, and called his attention to the accident. He said that the inhabitants of the neighbouring houses were, in consequence of the frightful occurrence, the full extent of which they were not yet acquainted with, in a state of the most painful excitement; and blame was attached to the corporation for having allowed the temporary piers to remain along the shore, occasioning considerable danger to human life, and palpable inconvenience to those engaged in commercial pursuits upon the banks of the Thames. Speaking as one of the public, he could not help saying he was surprised that more numerous accidents had not occurred. He also begged permission to draw his lordship's attention to the state of the steam vessels in conveying passengers to different parts of the river. On Monday night one of the steamers was observed at Blackwall to have on board upwards of 1000 persons, so that there the immense mass stuck, deriving its safety in a great degree from the impossibility of moving from one side to the other; for, if the vessel had dropped a little upon either side, the most awful destruction must have taken place.

The Lord Mayor expressed his satisfaction at the manner in which the Under Sheriff had publicly called his attention to the melancholy disaster which had occurred, and to the practice of overcrowding the steam-vessels—a subject which had frequently occupied his mind. He regretted that delays, arising from the nature of the difficulties which pressed upon the subject, had taken place; but the committee, together with the Watermen's Company, were, with the aid of the City Solicitor, at the present moment engaged in framing rules which would soon be acted upon, and were calculated to remedy the hazardous evil of overcrowding. The Lord Mayor added that, in his opinion, there ought to be a sort of City pilot on board steam-vessels.

A Special Court of Common Council was held on Wednesday, when Mr. Atkins called the attention of the Court to the accident. The Lord Mayor said that at the next meeting of the Navigation Committee, a set of laws would be laid before them, both with regard to prices and the number of passengers carried by steam-boats. That the Conservatory of the City of London possessed the power to enforce certain regulations, and he could assure the Court they would be strictly carried out, and that immediately.

Fatal Accidents on the River on Sunday.—On Sunday last a great many accidents took place on the river, attended by loss of life. The most painful and distressing occurred between ten and eleven, near the Archbishop of Canterbury's Palace, to a party of five who were returning from Richmond. From the statements of the survivors, two youths, named Henry Tuckton and Alfred M'Evoy, it appears that on their return they stopped at the Red-house, Battersea, where they partook of some refreshments, and continued their course towards Hungerford Market, Mr. Thwaites, a brother-in-law of Mr. Lye, tailor, of Great Pulteney-street, taking charge of the rudder, and the remainder, viz., his son John, another young man whose name is unknown, and the survivors, pulling. On nearing Lambeth Church the cutter was shivered to pieces by a steamer, and the above three persons were drowned.—Near Putney, a skiff, containing seven persons, was upset by coming too near a barge, and a man named White was drowned.—The third accident happened on board the Nymph, Woolwich steamer, in Bugsby's Hole, near Blackwall-pier, whilst on her passage to London, to a little girl named Clarke, eight years of age, who accidentally fell overboard from the gangway.—The other fatal accident, making the fourth, happened to the mate of a collier off Rotherhithe, who was about returning on board his ship, when he missed his hold and fell into the Thames.

Coroner's Inquest.—On Monday afternoon an inquest was opened before Mr. G. J. Mills, at the Old Swan Tavern, Chelsea, on the body of Mr. Richard Pegler, aged 45, late a clerk in the banking-house of Messrs. Coutts and Co., in the Strand, which had been found in the river, between ten and eleven o'clock in the forenoon. The body having been identified by Mr. Samuel Pellatt, the brother-in-law of the deceased, the coroner adjourned the inquest, in order to afford time for the investigation of the case.

LINES ON THE DEATH OF THE POET CAMPBELL.

Another lyre hath hush'd its farewell tone,
From life's still changing sky, a light has gone!
Poet! who sang so well of hope's sweet ray,
Still beckoning sorrow to her starry way;—
What lays but thine, have taught so well her power,
To smooth the rugged toils of life's lone hour;
The way-worn pilgrim's sadness to beguile,
And bid the future's flowery promise smile.
Hope,—ever prompt, to smooth the brow of care,
And chace the gathering shadows from despair—
But far, how far,—beyond the bounds of Time
Thy numbers swell; and on their way sublime,
Led by the Angel still, that world explore,
Where ransomed millions fill the peaceful shore,
Where every sound of mourning dies away,
And souls rejoice in heaven's eternal day!
Shall not thy name with cherub hope be twined,
And live, till song itself shall be resigned!
We owe thy memory love, for tranquil hours
Beguil'd by thee, in fancy's fairy bowers;—
A world all beauty, peaceful and serene,
Where groves and woodlands own perpetual green,
Far o'er the Atlantic isles, thy muse could fling,
Its own sweet magic over "Wyoming."—
And Gertrude's peerless grace, again recall,
Where now the "heath-flower decks the ruin'd wall;"
How long o'er Indian wilds will fancy view
That home, where dwelt the loving and th true,
But thou art gathered to the dust, where rest,
Of mind's high heritage, the noblest,—best,—
He comes to join your band, departed throng,
Who once like him, awoke the chords of song;—
No murmured greetings from the tombs arise,
Where on each moveless breast the marble lies:
That once was "Tremblingly alive all o'er,"
Now, thought and feeling wake each pulse no more;
Meet honour gives that resting place to thee,
Who bad hope cheer our earthly destiny,—
And o'er the darkling grave pursue their way,
Led on by pure religious guiding ray.—
Farewell!—each gentle spirit sheds the tear,
Of grateful sorrow, over Campbell's bier.

A CLEVER BOY.

A farmer's wife, in speaking of the smartness, aptness, and intelligence of her son, a lad six years old, to a lady acquaintance, said, "He can read fluently in any part of the Bible, repeat the whole Catechism, and weed onions as well as his father." "Yes, mother," added the young hopeful, "and yesterday I licked Ned Rawson; throwed the cat into the well, and stole old Hinckley's gimblet."—American Paper.

EXTRAORDINARY SUCCESS OF A FAIR ANGLER IN LAKE WINDERMERE.

A lady, who, by the by, is no novice with the rod and the line, and who is almost daily on the queen of lakes, from morn till night, trolling for pike, spinning minnow for char, or bobbing for perch, one day last week hooked no less than twenty-six fine pikes.—Westmoreland Gazette.

THE MARRIAGE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The American papers last received are full of gossip about the marriage of the President with Miss Gardiner. The latest saying on the subject was that he had "annexed Gardiner's Island to the Union without the consent of the Senate." Another paper intimates that the exquisites are quite surly at his having carried off one of the finest belles, and one of them, in a vexatious mood, revived the old anti-war cry, "the Potomac the boundary; the Negro states by themselves."—The Philadelphia Chronicle gives the following small talk upon the matter:—"The party arrived in this city by the Pilot Line, about eleven o'clock on Wednesday night, and were received at the wharf by Robert Tyler, Esq.; their arrival was strictly private. They proceeded at once to Hartwell's Washington House, Chesnut-street, above Seventh. The arrival at the hotel was unknown to any. When the party had been announced, the register book was opened, and the following is the entry, as appears in the hand writing of the persons themselves:—John Tyler, Julia Gardiner Tyler, John Tyler, jun., Miss Gardiner, three servants. When Mr. Tyler had registered his name, his young bride said—'I will sign my own name,' and for the first time she wrote her new name. The autographs are on the book, and caused much speculative conversation. The President and his lady occupied the room No. 2, which is to be hereafter designated the 'President's Room'—as the circumstance of a marriage of a President is one that has never before occurred in the United States. The party left for Washington by the railroad, at seven o'clock the next morning without any display or pomp."

THE REAL METHOD OF SEAL-BREAKING.

Public attention has been of late very properly directed to the odious system of espionage which has long been practised at the Post-office, under the authority of the British Secretary of State; and many of the journals have pretended to describe the agency by which the operation of taking fac-similes of seals has been accomplished, but evidently with little knowledge of the subject. Some of them have stated that the imitation seal was produced by placing a plate of lead on the wax impression, which, when smartly struck, presented a perfect fac-simile of the original; but this is a palpable absurdity. The operation is much simpler; and by the process adopted at the Post-office a score of spurious seals can be produced in a few minutes, and with the utmost precision and certainty. The spurious seal by which it is intended to re-seal the opened letters, is taken in plaster of Paris, and with so much accuracy as to defy detection. It is, in fact, the process by which our beautiful casts of medals and coins are taken, as well as that by which the lower gangs of coiners are enabled to cast exact fac-similes of our silver coinage in base metal. It appears that in the secret, or inner bureau of the Post-office, the appropriate apparatus for casting is always in readiness. It simply consists of a small cylindrical annular brass mould, about an inch in height, which opens and shuts like a bullet mould. After the seal has been oiled, to prevent the plaster adhering, this mould is placed upon it, and the plaster of Paris, mixed in the usual way, is poured upon it. In about five minutes it hardens, or sets as it is technically called; and in about as many minutes more is fit for re-sealing the letter, which has been opened by the application of a hot iron to the seal, and a copy of its contents duly taken. If a wafer should have been used, a little hot water or steam will soon remove the obstruction.—Atlas.

LORD ELDON'S FULFILMENT OF A PROMISE.

In 1783, when Mr. Scott, afterwards Lord Eldon, first became a candidate for the borough of Weobly, he was lodged in the house of Mr. Bridge, the vicar, who having a daughter then a young child, took a jocular promise from him, that if he should ever become Chancellor, and the little girl's husband should be a clergyman, the Chancellor would give that clergyman a living. Now comes the sequel, partly related by Lord Eldon himself to his niece (Mrs. Foster). "Years rolled on—I came into office: when one morning I was told a young lady wished to speak to me; and I said that young ladies must be attended to, so they must show her up. And up came a very pretty young lady, and she curtsied and simpered, and said she thought I could not recollect her. I answered I certainly did not, but perhaps she could recall herself to my memory; so she asked if I remembered the clergyman at Weobly, and his little girl, to whom I had made a promise. 'Oh, yes!' I said, 'I do, and I suppose you are the little girl.' She curtsied, and said 'Yes.' 'And I suppose you are married to a clergyman?' 'No,' she said, and she blushed, 'I am only going to be married to one, if you, my lord, will give him a living.' Well, I told her to come back in a few days; and I made enquiries to ascertain from the bishop of the diocese that the gentleman she was going to be married to was a respectable clergyman of the Church of England; and then I looked at my list, and found I actually had a living vacant that I could give him. So when the young lady came back, I told her she might return home and get married as fast as she liked, for her intended husband should be presented to a living, and I would send the papers as soon as they could be made out. 'Oh, no!' she exclaimed, and again she simpered, and blushed, and curtsied; pray, my lord, let me take them back myself.' I was a good deal amused, so I actually had the papers made out, and I signed them, and she took them back herself the following day."—Life of Lord Eldon.

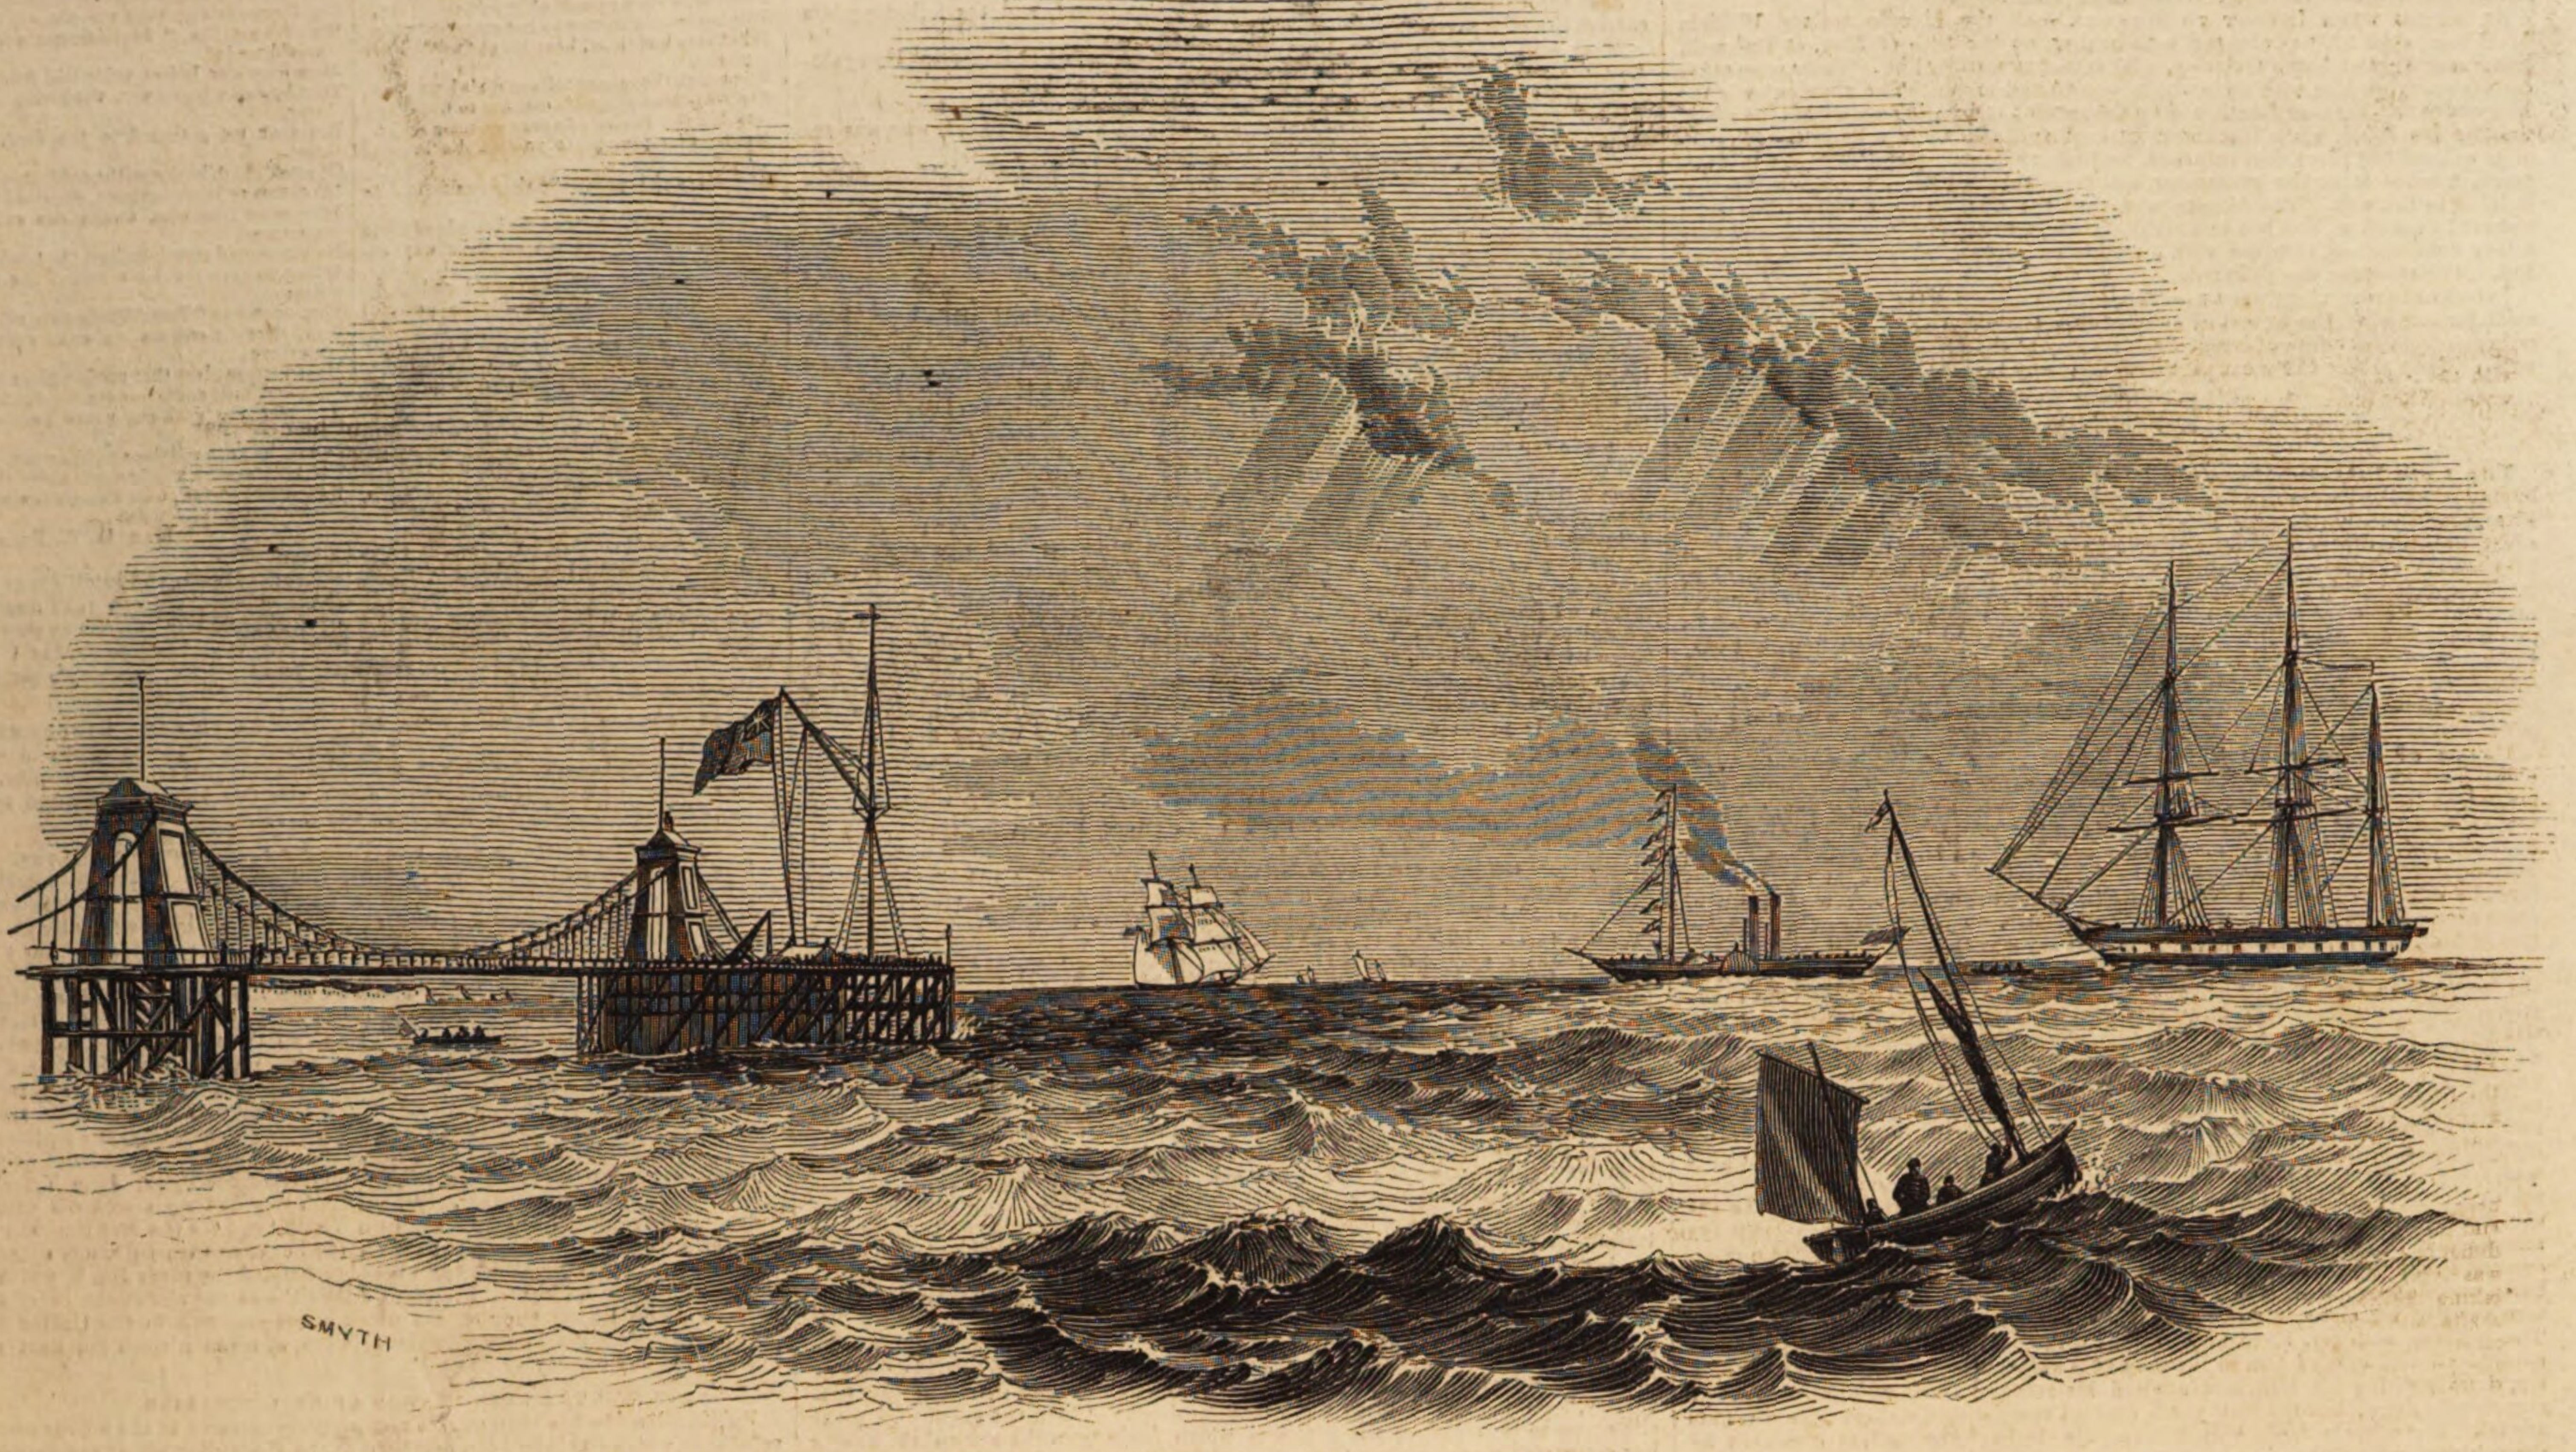
WHITEBAIT.

Whitebait is only a little means for acquiring a great deal of pleasure. Somehow, it is always allied with sunshine: it is accompanied by jolly friends and good humour. You rush after that little fish, and leave the cares of London behind you—the row and struggle, the foggy darkness, the slippery pavement where every man jostles you, striding on his way, pre-occupied with care written on his brow. Look out of the window; the sky is tinted with a thousand glorious hues—the ships pass silently over the blue glittering waters—there is no object within sight that is not calm, and happy, and beautiful. Yes! turn your head a little, and there lies the Tower of London in the dim smoky sunset. There lies Care, Labour, To-morrow.—New Monthly Magazine.

A PICTURE OF ALGIERS—AN AFRICAN PARIS.

A correspondent of the Times at Algiers gives a graphic description of that town, which the French, according to his account, are desirous to render as much like Paris as possible. He says, "What ought to be your sensations in stepping from the Marseilles steamer upon the terra firma of the Paris in Africa? Nothing very particular. You see yourself in a French town, and that's all. On arriving at the Place Royale the only object which shakes your faith in the French town is a large mosque, which forms a very striking and novel feature in the ensemble of the place. You must then picture to yourself a tolerably-sized square, open on one side to the sea, where you look over the Mole and the harbour, and a hundred merchant ships and half-a-dozen steamers, and filled up on the other sides with hotels and shops and cafés of four and five stories high, with an esplandade or parade, lined on two paths with growing-up orange-trees; and you have the Place Royale. There is another square as you advance upon the hill of houses, where a market is held in the centre, having a fountain, which is also enclosed by cafés and shops. There are two widish streets, Baba-Azours and Baba-Ouled, running east and west, which communicate directly with the Place Royale. The streets are lined with hotels, cafés, and shops, teeming with French goods, as cheap as in any town of France. There is scarcely a street where building up and pulling down is not going on. There is an immense faubourg (Mustapha) springing into life all along the eastern coast, like a Yankee city of the far west. There are at least some fifty carriage-omnibuses running to this and every other part of the environs. I must not forget also that the Government, to please the Moors, have, besides repairing their mosques, built them two or three handsome bazaars in their moresque fashion. The bustle and confusion in this African Paris is beyond description. It is like a great hotel, or an Africo-European bazaar. A fellow-traveller of mine could not think of anything else to compare it to but Epsom races. Of course, as French, Spaniards, Maltese, Arabs, Moors, and Barbary Jews, constitute nearly the whole population, the variety of their costumes has a very droll, if not pleasing effect. A great many of the lower classes are everywhere seen; and little Moorish shoe-blacks follow you to black your shoes in French style. The number of cafés and restaurants are totally beyond calculation. It was mentioned the other evening as an astounding proof of the progress of civilization in the interior, that Italian music and singing was to be heard at Blidals, a town about eight leagues from this. Everybody seems to live at the cafés or restaurants. Very small houses are inhabited by half-a-dozen families, that is, of Europeans; for house-rent is exceedingly dear.

NEW DESTRUCTIVE POWER: CAPTAIN WARNER'S EXPERIMENT AT BRIGHTON.



THE "JOHN O'GAUNT" BEING TOWED TO DESTRUCTION.

CAPTAIN WARNER'S EXPERIMENT AT BRIGHTON.

> From the earliest dawnings of policy to this day the invention of men has been sharpening and improving the mystery of murder, from the first rude essay of clubs and stones to the present perfection of gunnery, cannoneering, bombarding, mining.—Burke.

Upwards of a month since a report reached us that Captain Warner was about to exhibit in public the destructive effects of the explosive power discovered or invented by him, and with which he had already experimented privately. The place selected for this interesting demonstration was the expansive Bay or Road in front of the town of Brighton, a judicious choice, both as regards the bold and open shore and facility of rapidly reaching the town by railway.

The proposition which Captain Warner undertook to illustrate by the exhibition of this experiment was, that no ship could chase a vessel furnished with his implements of warfare, without herself being perfectly destroyed. It is now understood that the experiment had been proposed to the Government, as demanding their attention, from its application of a new power to the purposes of naval warfare, which would seem to bestow on those who might possess it, the power of the instant annihilation of opposing fleets. Thus far, it might be said to have a tendency greatly to alter the character and diminish the frequency of war; and, on these accounts, it was submitted that Government should defray the expenses of this public experiment, estimated at £2000. To this cost, however, the authorities demurred: a quarter of that sum was offered, but promptly declined; and, in this dilemma, Mr. Somes, the eminent ship-owner, generously proffered a vessel for the occasion, whilst the private friends of Capt. Warner raised the sum requisite for the attendant expenses. The vessel, the John o'Gaunt, a barque of 300 tons burden, three-masted, tall, full-bowed, strong, and seaworthy, was given up to Captain Warner in the early part of the present month, and on the 10th inst. sailed from the Thames, but on her arrival at Gravesend, the crew having learnt her destination, most of them deserted, under an apprehension that they might share her fate. After some delay, the men were procured, and she was piloted for Brighton; but, unfortunately, the vessel, which left the Downs on Wednesday, the 10th instant, was caught by the S.W. wind, which suddenly sprung up, and was compelled to put back. Meanwhile the experiment had been fixed for Saturday, the 13th, on which day a large party of noblemen and gentlemen went down to Brighton, specially to witness the spectacle. Their disappointment at its unavoidable postponement was very great: many inquiring groups were to be seen upon the cliffs, and each little knot of visitors seemed to sympathise with each other in their mortification: the good people of Brighton, whom we questioned, knew nothing of the matter, and this circumstance, coupled with the marvellous nature of the proposition, created public distrust; and many persons who could neither slake their scientific thirst, nor forget their disappointment in the luxurious accommodations of Brighton, returned to London with a lurking suspicion that they had been hoaxed, and that such was the only way in which "the invisible shell" (as Captain Warner's invention had been named), would ever go off. Among the visitors were Lords Brougham, Southampton, Ingestre, Worsley, John Beresford, Longford; Captains Dickinson, Henderson, Tracy, R.N., and Messrs. Hutt and Masterman, M.P., &c.

On Wednesday, the 17th, however, the John o'Gaunt was towed by a steamer to Shoreham Roads, and moored there; the knowledge of which fact, and the renewed assurances of Captain Warner that he would fulfil his promise on Saturday last, excited the public curiosity afresh, confidence being, in a great measure, revived by authorised announcements in the Times and other journals of Saturday, as well as by the affiches of the London and Brighton Railway Company.

On Saturday morning, at an early hour, crowds of visitors from all parts of the county of Sussex flocked into Brighton, and the first railway train brought down upwards of 500 passengers. The hour named for the experiment was between three and six, so that all the morning trains would arrive in time. Lord Brougham journeyed by the mid-day train, on the arrival of which at the Brighton terminus, there was an excitement far beyond that of the usual accession of Saturday visitors.

On our arrival at Brighton, by this train, we found the three-mile coast-line, from Kemp-town to Brunswick-terrace more or less thickly peopled: the cliffs, the chain-pier, and the houses facing the sea, with their hundreds of balconies, were densely occupied; in fact, the whole range of the coast from Shoreham to the upper extremity of Brighton, soon after noon presented a truly gay and animated appearance, being lined with crowds of persons, who were flanked by a row of carriages and other vehicles. There was an attractive attendance of ladies, whose generally fashionable attire, as they were seated at the windows and in the coaches, coupled with the elegant equipages interspersed, greatly enlivened the scene; and the weather was extremely fine. Among other distinguished persons present were, Earl Manvers, Lord Brougham, Lord Combermere, Viscount Ingestre, M.P.; Lord Ranelagh, Marquis of Douro, Lord J. Beresford, Lord W. Cowper, Lord Southampton, Marquis of Exeter, the Marquis of Lorne, Lord Alford, M.P.; Lord Hungerford, Lord Lovaine, Lord Aylmer, Lord Templetown, the Bishop of Oxford, Lord Tadcaster, Mr. M. Gore, M.P., Mr. Mackinnon, M.P., Mr. Tomline, M.P., Mr. Lindsay, M.P., Mr. Neville, M.P., Mr. R. Yorke, M.P., Hon. TEH EXPLOSION.

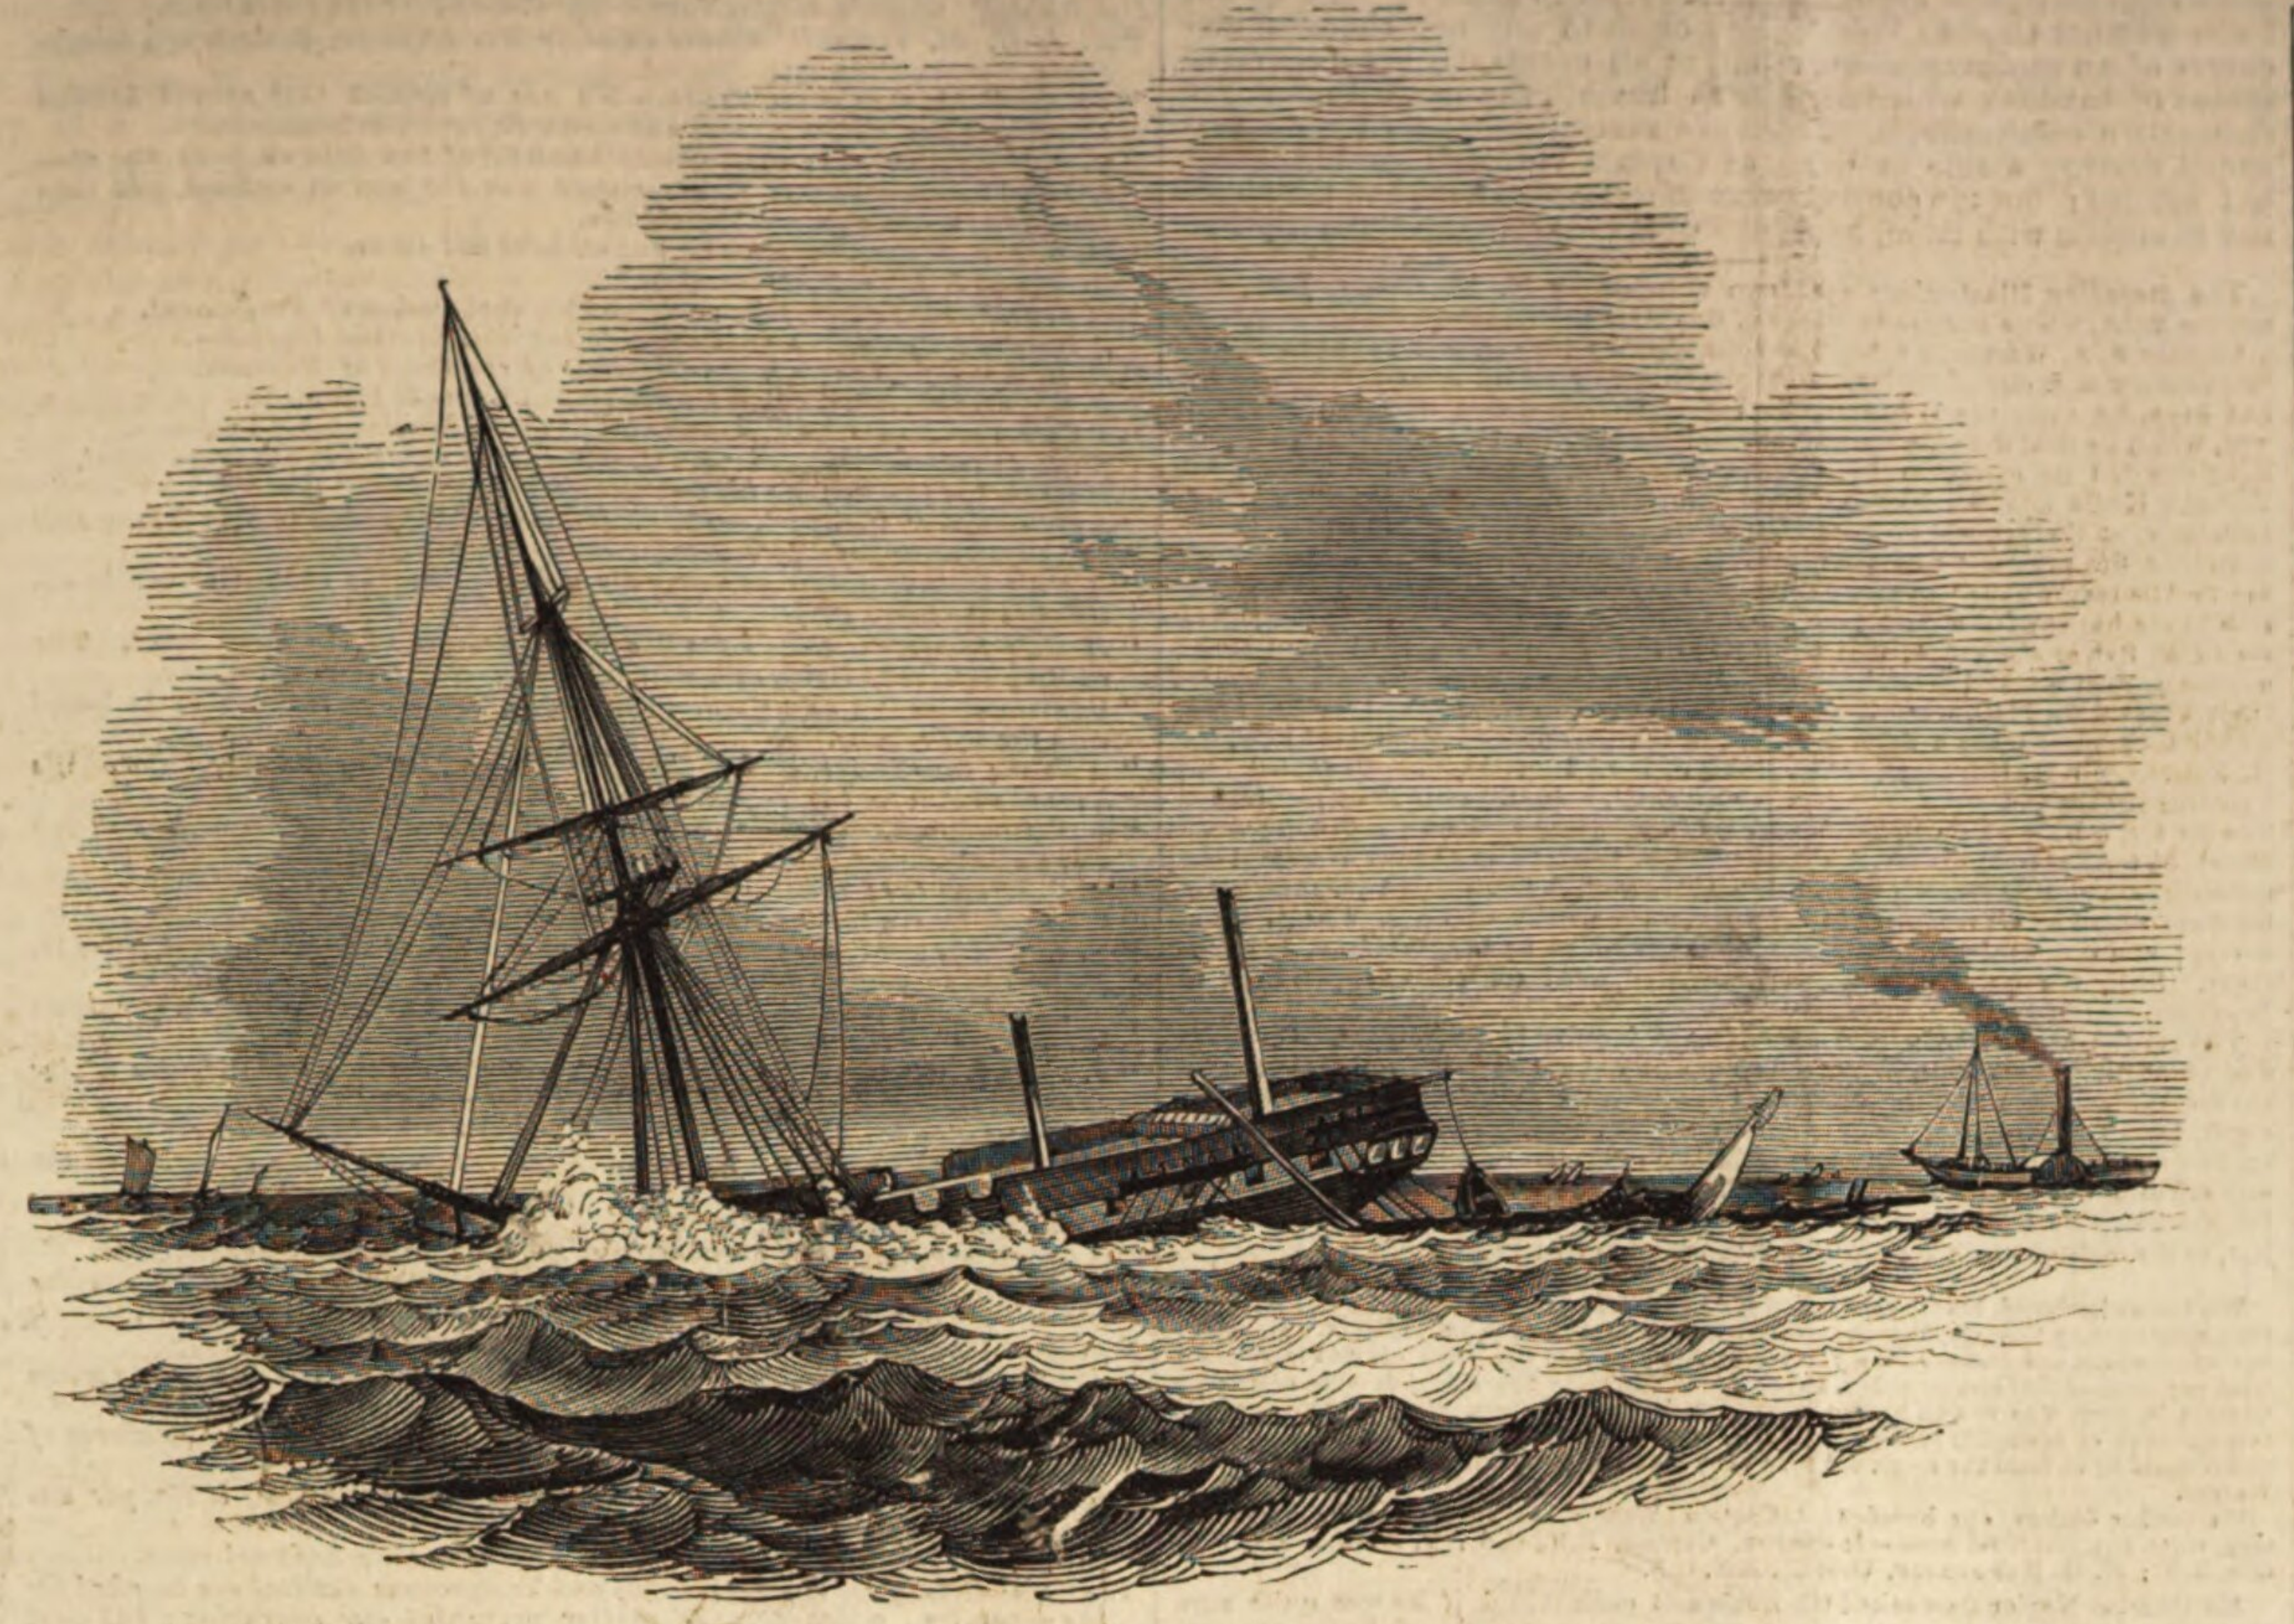
NEW DESTRUCTIVE POWER: CAPTAIN WARNER'S EXPERIMENT AT BRIGHTON.



THE JOHN O'GAUNT "SETTLING DOWN."

M.P., Hon. Captain Murray, R.N., Colonel Dundas, Captain R. Burton, R.N., Hon. Sydney Pierrepoint, Chevalier Benkhausen (the Russian Consul), Captain E. Loyd, R.N., Sir M. Cholmondeley, Sir T. Whitcote, Captain Henderson, R.N., Captain Dickenson, R.N., Captain Stevens (Marine Artillery), Hon. General Upton, Captain Britten, Colonel Sykes, Mr. W. Peel, Mr. Somes, the ship-owner, and the following Directors of the East India Company:—Mr. Robinson, Colonel Sykes, Mr. Tucker, Mr. Warden, Mr. Cotton, &c. The total number of persons present is estimated at from 30,000 to 40,000.

It appears that the hour of the experiment had been postponed until between four and five o'clock, for the purpose of giving time for the attendance of Lord Haddington and the Hon. Sidney Herbert, the First Lord and Secretary of the Admiralty, who had expressed a wish to be present, but they did not arrive until after the vessel had been destroyed.

Up to four o'clock the chain-pier was crowded with anxious lookers-out, who, however, then began to thin; some persons leaving it from impatience, and others from information that the experiment would not be exhibited off the pier, as originally inferred, but some distance westward, in which direction the crowd began to thicken.

Another hour passed away, and still there were no practical indications in favour of the experiment—in the sporting, if not scientific phrase—coming off. Meanwhile it had become known that from the signal-staff of the battery on the west cliff a flag was to be hoisted, by the command of Lord Ingestre and Captains Dickenson and Henderson, to indicate to Captain Warner when the ship, the subject of his operations, was to be destroyed. The reason of this arrangement was to remove any doubt as to the bonâ fide nature of Captain Warner's power of destroying a pursuing vessel, without having any communication with that vessel at the moment of her destruction. Accordingly, the platform of the battery was the grand position; and the stone pavement and the inclosed grass-plot was crowded with the élite of the nobles, fashionables, and professionals, those of the navy and army being in a large majority; and it was curious to observe them leaning across the long guns, with their telescopes pointed towards Shoreham Roads, where the devoted bark was lying, and whither two steamers, the Sir William Wallace (on board of which was Capt. Warner), and the Tees had gone. The Times report of this period is amusingly graphic:—

> "The company, who generally expected the experiment to come off at four o'clock, waited very good-humouredly, and without evincing any tokens of impatience, until five, when Lord Brougham, who had been manifestly chafing for some time, gave loud utterance to his expressions of displeasure and distrust of Captain Warner's intention to perform an experiment at all. In vain several of Captain Warner's friends reminded the noble and learned lord of the many impediments which prevented a short-handed crew from getting a ship under weigh with the dispatch of a man-of-war's complement of hands. Lord Brougham looked through his telescope, and commented upon the tardy movements of the John o'Gaunt's crew in a manner which intimated that if he himself had been on board, matters would have gone on much more smoothly and swiftly. His learned and mercurial lordship lying prone upon the battery parapet, with a huge telescope resting upon his white hat, was not one of the least lenitives of the tedium of delay."

This delay, however, is accounted for by more than an hour being passed in the removing from the ship cordage and other stores which were not necessary for the experiment, and in raising and detaching the anchor and cables. This was a slow process, and unintelligible to the majority of the spectators, who resolutely held up their glasses, which gleamed in the sunshine like files of musketry, until they became fatigued, and impatiently wondered what in the world Capt. Warner and his people could be about. Lord Brougham undisguisedly expressed his suspicion that the affair would end in nothing but smoke, and there would be no explosion. "You never intended to do it," said he to one of Captain Warner's friends. "Is it not extraordinary," he asked "that with a fair wind and two steam-boats, they cannot bring the ship up that short distance?" But every one is not so rapid in his movements as the noble and learned lord; who, it must be admitted, was only giving utterance to the general feeling. But the fact was that there were not hands enough employed to do the work quickly. Lord Brougham said he should go, and he would have gone, but just then Lord Ingestre called out that the ship was in motion.

This was about five o'clock, but the tow-line had not yet been attached, and the vessel swung round and was drifting away with the tide towards Shoreham; but a rope was immediately attached from her bow to the Sir William Wallace, which was ahead. Meanwhile some of the few men, who had been left in charge of her, descended into a boat and rowed off, as if for their lives, to the Tees, which followed astern for the purpose of keeping off any persons who might be influenced by their curiosity to come within range of danger. The tide, as is obvious from what was said before of her drifting, was against her, and the distance she was to be brought, between four and five miles, so that it was nearly six o'clock before she was fairly towed to the position she was to occupy, about a mile and a quarter from shore, between the Old Ship Hotel and the battery. Now, two men who had remained on board to manage her helm, or do anything else that might be necessary, hurried out of her, and went off in a boat with greater expedition, if possible, than their shipmates had previously.

The progress of the ship, as illustrated in our first engraving, was watched with intense interest by the assembled thousands, who seemed to forget their previous disappointment in their anticipation of the spectacle. The most intense anxiety now prevailed among the spectators on shore, and every movement of those on board the tug-boat was watched with the greatest interest. Captain Warner was himself on board the tug, and it had been arranged that when the signal was given from the battery the crew of that vessel should go below, leaving no other persons on deck but the captain and the mate. This arrangement was observed; and immediately afterwards, the steamer, which had hitherto been towing the ship by a hawser, put back, and came abreast of her—a position which she maintained for a very few moments, and then again proceeded to her former situation, about a quarter of a mile eastward of the John o' Gaunt.

Captain Warner now hoisted a Union Jack at the mast-head of the steamer, denoting that he was ready to operate, and only awaited the hoisting of the Union Jack from the flagstaff on the battery, to be replied to by Captain Warner hauling down his signal. This had been flying some time before it was answered from the battery; and then arose another delay, in consequence of some adventurous persons in a small cutter, in spite of the presence of the Tees, and of two armed revenue cutters besides, to keep off intruders, going close alongside the ship. Captain Warner hauled the Union Jack half-way down only until the cutter and its occupants were out of danger. The Union Jack was then hauled down entirely.

The grand crisis had now arrived; and we may say, without exaggeration, that the suspense of all present was painful; the silence was deep and unbroken.

At six o'clock, precisely, the devoted vessel appeared to be struck midships, at which point shot up a huge column of water, intermingled with the shingle of her ballast, which was mistaken by most persons for a cloud of smoke. Then a low booming and gurgling noise, indicating a submarine explosion, but not approaching a loud report. "The vessel is struck!" was uttered by a thousand voices, and the next thing to be seen was the falling of the mainmast and the mizen mast. In less than a minute, the vessel was riven almost from stem to stern. "She is filling!" "She is sinking!" the spectators exclaimed, and in less than two minutes and a half the vessel literally tumbled to pieces as if by magic.

went by the board, her m[illegible]ast, a new one, was shot clean out of her; she heeled over to port to an angle of 45 degrees, and her main hatchway being open, daylight was visible through her bottom timbers on her starboard side, and probably her larboard also, having been blown away, and she seemed to part asunder as she went down, in about 35 feet water, leaving nothing perceptible but the top of her foremast. The third illustration shows the vessel "settling down." The time which passed from her being struck and her sinking could not have exceeded two minutes and a half. Some few of the more enthusiastic spectators, chiefly professional men, raised a cheer, but with the mass all was mute astonishment. The eyes were rivetted on the last observable fragment of the large object that but the moment before floated gallant on the waters "like a thing of life." A work of destruction so sudden, so frightful, so stupendous, appeared impossible for a moment even to the thousands and tens of thousands that witnessed it. It was like an awful mystery. There were none of the ordinary circumstances which accompany similar catastrophes. There was no smoke, there was no fire, there was no noise, save the low groan of the rending timbers, and the succeeding hush of the waters as they rolled over the instantaneous wreck, and then arose a melancholy feeling, for it was impossible to prevent the imagination depicting the terrific effects of such an explosion upon a peopled ship, thus silently and suddenly perishing. The fourth engraving represents the vessel "settled," and the fifth illustration, the appearance of the wreck at sunset.

Several officers interested in the experiment put off to make an examination of the wreck, and the Sir William Wallace steamer remained in the vicinity for some time.

It was now six o'clock, and most of those who had gone down to Brighton for the day hastened to the railway station, and were brought to London in a train of twenty-nine carriages, containing nearly 600 persons.

Captain Warner received the congratulations, personally, on Saturday evening of Lord Brougham, and the other noblemen and officers who remained in Brighton; and Mr. Somes, who says he fully expected that Captain Warner would destroy his ship when he gave it to him, has expressed his willingness to give him another for the further proof of the Captain's powers, if the Government are not now satisfied, or will not provide one to satisfy themselves.

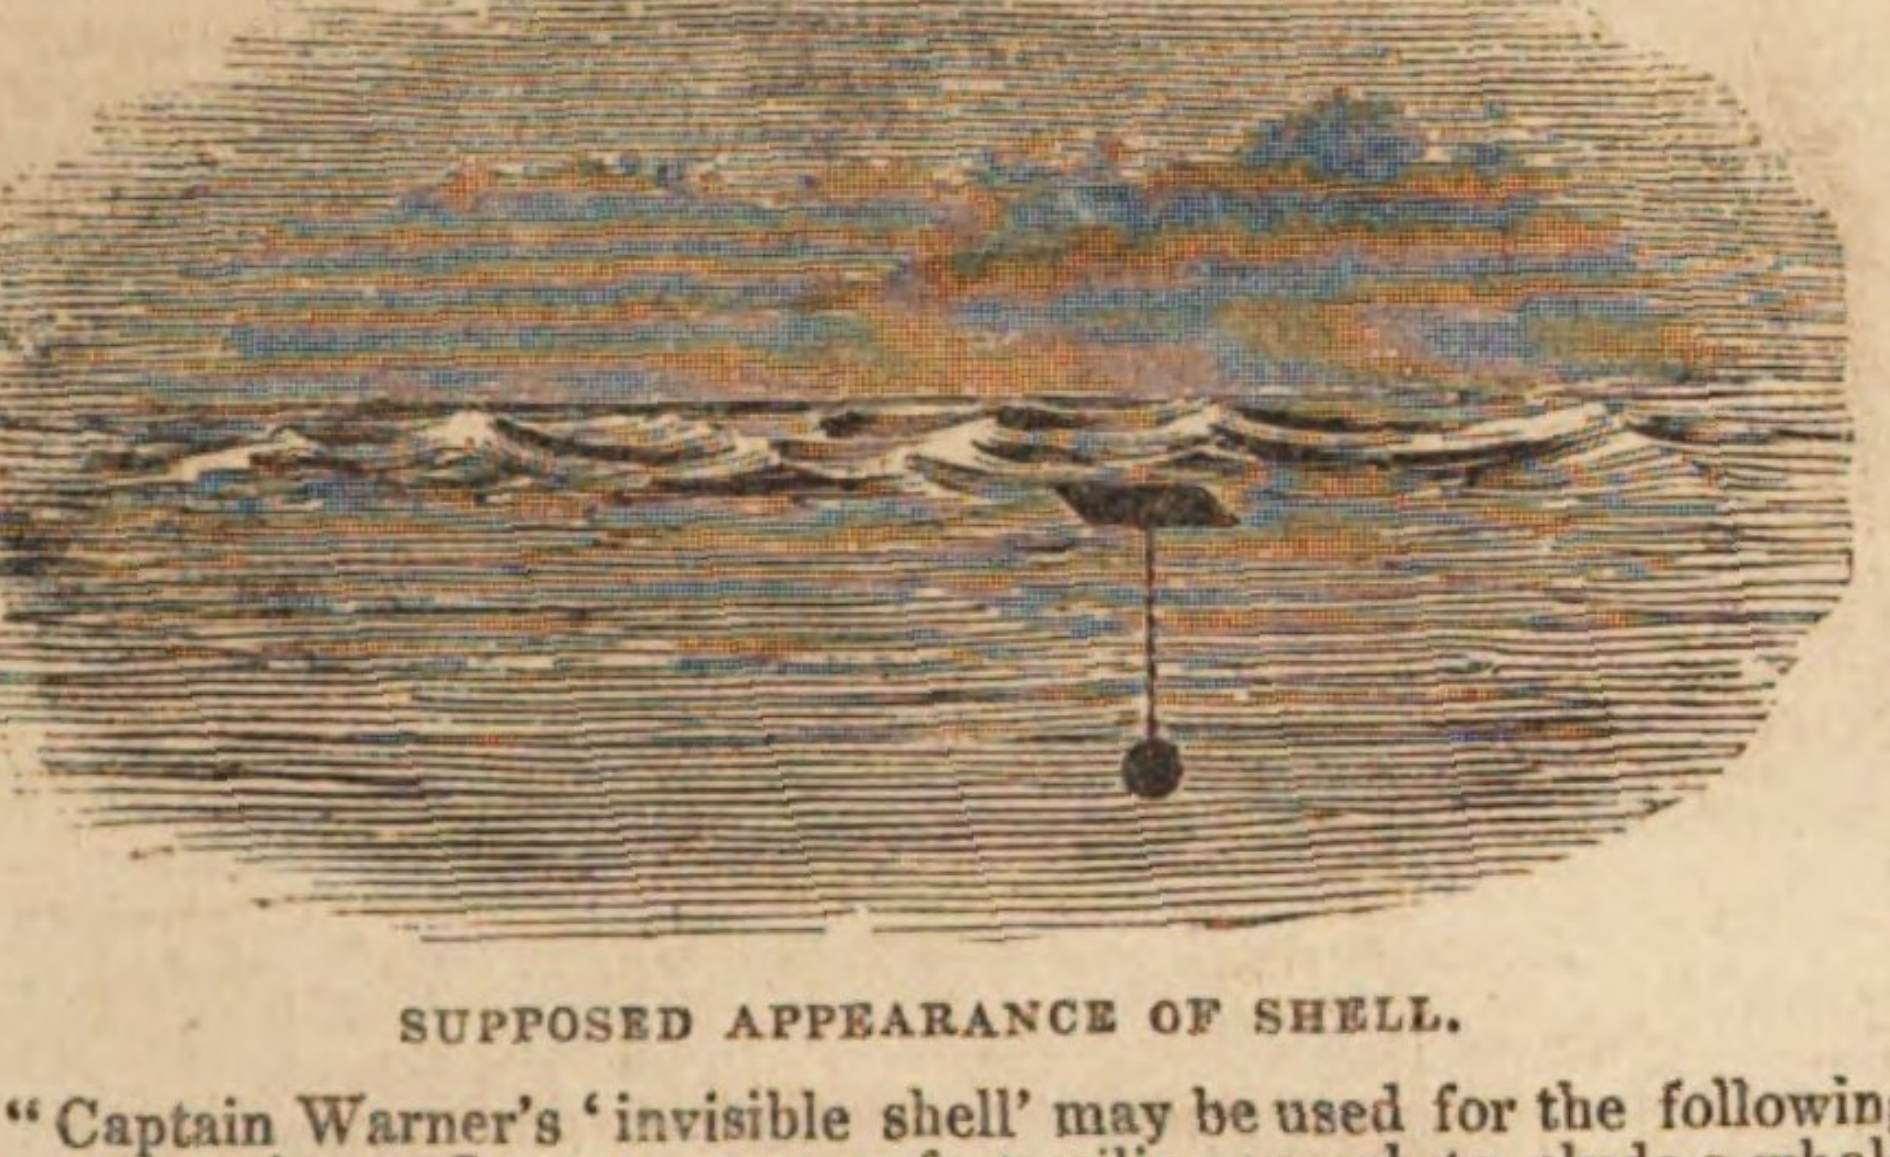
The success of the experiment is admitted to have been perfect and entire: and the wonderfully destructive power of its agency is universally admired. The modus operandi is kept secret; and, so long as this is the case, it will be impossible to say how far, under all circumstances, it would prove efficacious against an enemy's fleet, or safe for our own fleet to carry.

It is right to state that the experiment of Saturday was in order to show the portion of the invention which may be applied at sea, in the blockade of towns, or defence of places from attack by sea. There is application of the power, which is intended for a long range in the destruction of forts and places of strength.

Speculation is already rife as to the means employed; and the conjectures in the several journalists' reports of the event are too numerous for us to detail.

Some persons conjectured that the instrument of destruction was conveyed from the steamer to the ship by means of a rope. Others thought that the agent being attached to a line was suffered to float with the tide against the ship, and that then the line being pulled let off a trigger and produced the explosion. More scientific individuals imagine an electrical battery to have been used; others, an air-gun; others, that a substance is put to float without any guide on the water; others, that a submarine shell is sent in the direction of the ship's bottom. And still others conjecture that the "shell" is made of polished steel, and thus, magnetic, rendered buoyant by cork: "Such a floating magnet would be attracted by the iron of a ship approaching within the range of its attraction, and the force of contact and friction would be sufficient to explode many known detonating compositions." But, though every body was watching, and watching narrowly, with all the aid that optical instruments could afford them, the mode of operation is, we believe, still as profound a secret to the world as before this public experiment.

We have received the following from a correspondent, who minutely witnessed the whole proceedings, and is otherwise acquainted with the details of the subject:—"Of one thing we are quite convinced, that there was nothing in the vessel to cause the explosion; and the 'shell' is inferred from the effect produced, to have been three or four feet below the surface. A wooden case seen floating near the wreck, was by many persons considered to have contained the combustible material; but it was merely the box in which Captain W. had carried his engine of destruction.



SUPPOSED APPEARANCE OF SHELL.

"Captain Warner's 'invisible shell' may be used for the following purposes, viz.:— In a steamer or fast sailing vessel, to elude a whole fleet, and in the event of being chased, to destroy them. For a vessel to catch another, she must follow in her wake: these shells will then be sunk as a trap for the pursuing vessels, as will be seen in the annexed cut. (Cut No. 1.) The shell may also be used at the mouth of a harbour, or river, to prevent the ingress or egress of a hostile fleet. Or they can be projected to an incredible distance; an experiment which, we believe, will only be shown when the invention has been sanctioned by the Government."

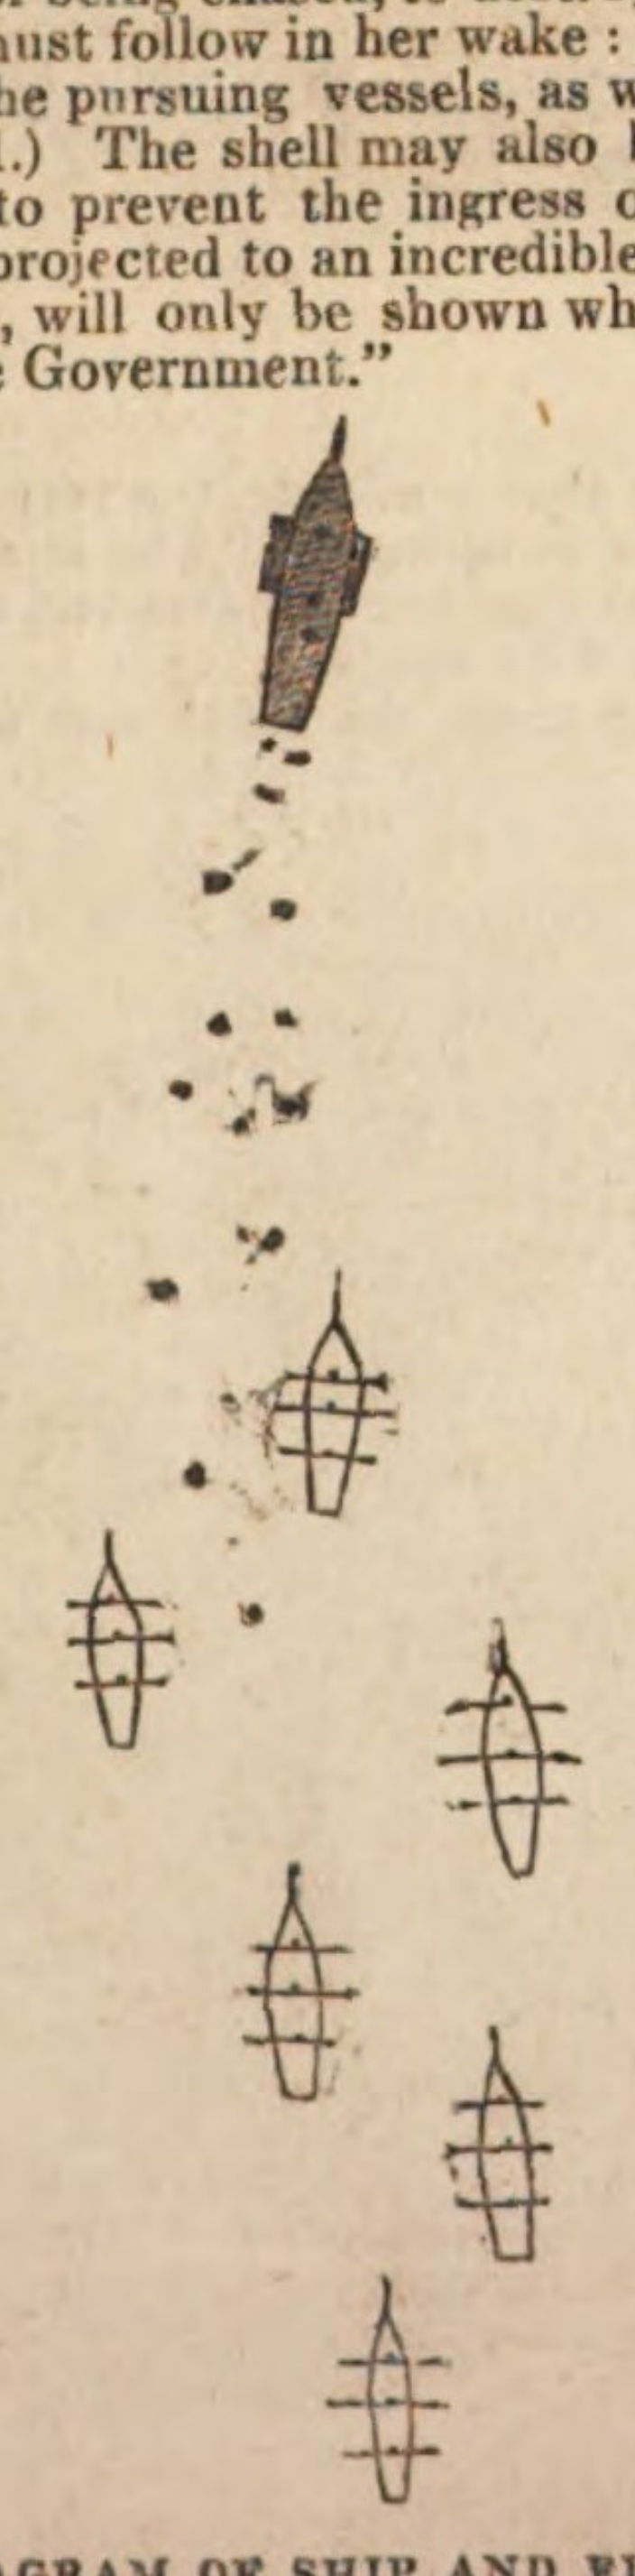


DIAGRAM OF SHIP AND FLEET.

The sketch, with the steamer in the foreground, in the previous page, gives an idea of the effect produced by a line-of-battle ship following in her wake, which is laid with these shells. Whether they are buoyed or not, we cannot say; but, from information to be depended on, we learn that they may be buoyed or not, as occasion may require. It may be urged that, if buoyed, they may be avoided; but sailors know the great difficulty of discerning a small object barely 'awash,' as shown in the illustration, and that it is only seen when right on it, and even then, not in time to avoid it. We do not know whether Captain Warner lays claim to any new chemical discovery of an explosive power; but, at all events, he has discovered means of handling with impunity to himself, the most deadly and destructive combustibles. There are several materials known that would destroy a ship as quick as Captain Warner's, could they be but applied; but the consequences to those who have had the temerity to meddle with them, have been of the most frightful description.

The preceding Illustrations are from sketches by N. M. Condy, Esq., the marine artist, whose success in works of this class is well established.

Captain S. A. Warner, we learn, commanded a privateer, and in the most gallant manner took one of the largest luggers that ever sailed from Boulogne. He has been, for some years, engaged in experimenting with a new implement of war, which he first described to his late Majesty William IV., in 1831; the Sailor King directed its merits to be investigated; and, accordingly, Admirals Sir Richard Keats and Sir Thomas Hardy, reported thereon satisfactorily. Subsequently, at the request of Lord Melbourne's private secretary, Lieut. Webster examined the principle and practice of Capt. Warner's discovery, and, in 1839, asserted its merits to be "so extraordinary as to vest the absolute sovereignty of the seas in the hands of the first power that should adopt them." Their range was stated at five or six miles; and a hundred sail of the line were declared to be useless against a vessel furnished with this stupendous power. Nevertheless, the subject rested till 1840, when it was agitated in the Times. In the spring of 1841, a trial took place upon a lake, in Essex, in the presence of Sir Robert Peel, Sir G. Murray, Sir H. Hardinge, Sir F. Burdett, Lord Ingestre, Col. Gurwood, and Captains Britten and Webster; when, with a shell, weighing only 18lbs., was lifted into the air, a boat weighing 2½ tons, filled in with and shattered into a thousand pieces, 5½ tons of solid timber, and displacing, at least, 14 or 15 tuns of water; the noise of the explosion scarcely exceeding that of a gun. A commission had previously been appointed by Government to investigate the merits of Capt. Warner's discovery; and the results were embodied in a pamphlet by Mr. Walesby, the barrister. Still, the question was left undecided until the recent experiment at Brighton.

The results have already been the subject of inquiry in Parliament. On Monday night Sir Robert Peel, in reply to a question by Capt. Pechell, stated that the Government had nothing whatever to do with the experiment. On the same night, Lord Ingestre, in reply to another question, by Capt. Plumridge, intimated that he was not at liberty to disclose either the materials by which the destruction was effected, nor the manner in which it was done; but the noble lord read the following certificate, which had been drawn up entirely with reference to the subject, to the facts of which his lordship was ready to make oath:—

July 21.

We, the undersigned, hereby certify that the operations against the John o'Gaunt, of 300 tons, conducted by Captain Warner, off Brighton, on Saturday the 20th instant, were under our management and control. We further certify that the explosion did not take place from any combustible matter either on board or alongside the ship, but was caused by Captain Warner, who was on board the William Wallace steamer, having the ship in tow at a distance of about 300 yards, and that the explosion took place in consequence of a signal made by us from the shore, the time of which was not previously known by Captain Warner.

We further declare our belief that Captain Warner has never been on board the ship since she left Gravesend.—INGESTRE, Captain, R.N., C.B.; T. DICKENSON, Captain, R.N.; W. H. HENDERSON, Captain, R.N. C.B.

Sir Charles Napier then asked the noble and gallant lord if he was quite sure there was not a Torpedo in the case, such, as in the words of Fulton, the inventor, was "to blow a whole ship's company into the air:" it was a chest containing a certain quantity of gunpowder, which, by means of some clock machinery, might be ignited at a given time under water, and being placed under a ship's bottom, destroy it by the explosion. Fulton offered his invention, but in vain, to the French Directory, and to the Dutch Government: he was sent by Bonaparte to Brest, where, however, he failed. It was subsequently offered to the British Government, and a commission appointed to examine the project; but Fulton took two days to blow up with his Torpedo, or Catamaran, an old Danish brig in Walmer Roads!

The commission upon Captain Warner's invention having been pronounced at an end on the 1st of May last, he addressed the following gratuitous offer to the Government Commissioners:—

Being now in possession of a bark fit for service, with her sails bent, I offer to you, her Majesty's commissioners, my permission to take the ship into any of the Government dockyards, and strengthen her in any manner you please, to test the force of my powers to the fullest extent. I shall then have no objection to go through the trials suggested by yourself (Colonel Chalmer, B.A.), and Captain Caffin, secretly with you, on condition of a written understanding that in case I succeed in satisfying you of the efficacy and practicability of my inventions, I am to be reimbursed my expenses. Without this understanding, though I shall be happy to see yourself and Captain Caffin, I must claim the privilege of having as many other parties present at my experiments as I may please.

This fair and liberal offer was not accepted; but, we are glad to see that Lord Ingestre has given notice of a motion upon the subject in the House of Commons for Tuesday evening.

It may not be generally known that Captain J. Norton has invented a most formidable percussion shell, to explode at the bottom of the sea. An iron tube, like the barrel of a musket, is screwed into a shell of any size, water-tight. A rod of iron, about half a pound in weight, and one foot in length, is suspended within the tube, by means of a split quill passing through a hole in the upper end of the rod, the other end being armed with a percussion cap. The mouth of the tube is closed with a screw lid, almost water-tight. Tin or brass wings being attached to the upper end of the tube, will keep it in a vertical position during its descent to the bottom of the sea; and the shock, on its striking the bottom, will cause the bar of iron within the tube to fall and produce the percussion and explosion. Should it be found difficult to make the shell water-proof, Captain Norton is satisfied that percussion-powder, made from silver, will explode by friction or percussion, even when mixed with water. These shells have been also adapted to field artillery, and have been pronounced "simple, safe, and efficacious."

The properties of explosive compounds are interesting, at this moment, in their assumed connexion with Captain Warner's secret. Two of the most formidable compounds known are the chloride of nitrogen, or azote; and its brother compound the iodide of ammonium, or nitrogen. The mechanical force of the chloride of azote in detonation, is superior to that of any other known, not even excepting the ammoniacal fulminating silver. Dulong was the first to investigate the iodide of ammonium, and exchanged for his knowledge in one experiment three fingers and in a succeeding experiment, an eye.

GRAND FESTIVAL IN HONOUR OF THE POET BURNS,
AUGUST, 1844.

THE PROPRIETORS of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS feel great pleasure in announcing to the Public of Scotland that they have secured the services of several eminent Artists and Authors to attend the
GREAT FESTIVAL IN HONOUR OF ROBERT BURNS.
No expense will be spared in the execution of the Engravings, which will be both splendid and numerous. The Literary Department is intrusted to one of the most popular Writers in Scotland, and it is arranged that these Illustrations and contributions will be given in the
ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS,
On SATURDAY, AUGUST 3rd; also, on SATURDAY, AUGUST 10; and to be concluded on SATURDAY, AUGUST 17.
The number of Illustrations of this event are expected to comprise
TWENTY BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVINGS.
In the progress of this Festival other objects of interest in Scotland will be introduced, and will form a
GREAT PICTURE
OF THE MOST ROMANTIC PART OF GREAT BRITAIN.

. The immense demand expected for the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS will render it necessary that orders should be given immediately to the News Agents in Scotland.

The ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS is published every week, containing about Thirty Engravings. Price 6d., free by post.

Office, 198, Strand, London.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Our Cambrian correspondent, Mr. Edward Taffy Morgan, has been very uselessly choleric: he attempts a defence of the morality of Wales against an article in our last, in which it was never dreamt of or alluded to, and calls "gross falsehoods" the quotations (on the subject of music alone) which we through delicacy extracted only from the works of Welsh writers! An Irishman is not put into a passion by being supposed capable of blunders, but a Welchman—no. we beg pardon, a "Cymro"—will not allow his national folly to be harmlessly ridiculed. Did Mr. Taffy Morgan ever read Shakspeare's "Sir Hugh Evans"? And again, what has his rodomontade about hospitality and purity of morals to do with our few observations on the origin of the Cambrian harp? Proh pudor!

"Selbus," Dublin.—We will see.

"F. C.," Manchester, may probably obtain the works referred to, of Mr. Bohn, York-street, Covent-garden.

"Oxoniensis" is mistaken: the passage in our journal respecting the Rev. Mr. Newman, was a quotation from the "English Review," just published.

"A Well-wisher," Birmingham.—His letter has been referred to the engraver of the view.

"T. W."—Thanks.

"M.," Helston.—The subject is too "cloudy."

"A Constant Reader."—We are gratified at our correspondent's approbation of the Southampton view.

"A Reader," Walton-on-the-Naze.—The demand for the toll is legal.

"E. J. H. St. Vincent" should write to Mr. Landells, Bride-court, Blackfriars.

"Tertius," St. Day, near Truro.—We are of opinion that several London advertisers pay £3000 a-year, and upwards, for advertisements.

"T. C.," Edinbro'.—In 1837, nearly one-half of the duty on hops was contributed by the county of Kent; Sussex was the next in amount, and then Hereford, Worcester, and Hampshire.

"M. S. J. A. Munro."—Thanks but we have not room.

"A. L. and J. L."—If under £10.

"S. S. J.," Halesworth, may rest quiet till next session of Parliament.

"A Constant Reader" should apply to the New Zealand Company.

"B. B. Z." should write to the Governor of the Bank of England.

"B. S." should recollect that we have many tastes to please.

"A Correspondent," Bolton.—The Duke of Wellington is an Irishman.

"W. B.," Halesworth, and "W. C. R." will be entitled to the large Print.

"Minima" is thanked for his corrections.

"A Subscriber," Westport.—The large Print of "London in 1842" may still be had, by order, of any bookseller.

"J. M.," Bonhill.—By continuing his subscription, the subscriber will be entitled to the large Print.

"H. C.," Langston, should see the advertisement of the large print. The railway referred to is a continuation of the South Eastern Railway.

"Cæsaromagers," Chelmsford.—The large print is not intended to be bound with the 4th volume.

"A Young Lieutenant, R.N.," should write to any army and navy tailor. We have not room for the obituary beyond its present extent.

"B.," Knutsford.—Perhaps our correspondent will favour us with a sketch and memoir.

"G.," Strand-lane, should call.

"Wexford."—We think the charge is correct.

"T. W.," Limerick, should order the print and No. of any news-agent, price 1s.

"D."—The documents are collateral security for the debt.

"A Traveller" is thanked for the hint. The price of each half-yearly volume is 18s. bound.

"J. B.," Windsor.—We do not find the origin of the name of Virginia Water in any readily accessible description of Berkshire.

"J. D.," Colesford, should not attempt to disguise his handwriting.

"E. S."—We do not feel disposed to extend the questionable celebrity of the French novelist in question.

"J. W. P.," Burslem, is thanked.

"A Subscriber from the Commencement."—The paragraph—anonymous.

"Beatrice," Kensington, should apply to the Income-tax Commissioners for the district in which she resides. Unwrought ivory is sold by weight.

"S. K.," should forward a specimen of the proffered sketches.

"J. H. S."—At draughts, it does not always follow that it is a drawn game when only one man of each party is left.

"A. Z."—The Turnpike Trusts Bill is one of the many deferred measures of the present session of Parliament.

"A. B.," Thirsk.—The price of our paper, if paid in advance, is 26s. per annum for 52 Nos.

"A Constant Subscriber." Walton-on-the-Naze.—We have not room.

The Committee of the Hartwell Peace and Temperance Festival are thanked for the views, &c., which press of matter prevented our engraving; but next year, we hope to illustrate their interesting meeting.

"A Subscriber," Linlithgow, will be entitled to the large print.

"Homo" is jocose: he should see future announcements.

The following poetical contributions are ineligible—"Lines by M. to the Duke of Devonshire;" "C. B. on a Young Mother;" "Lines by H. D. on the Wellington Statue;" "The Lament of a Jacket;" "Song, by Philo-Cricket."

"T. C. C.," Douglas, Isle of Man.—We think the Rothsay Castle steamer was wrecked late in 1839.

"Government School of Design."—The distribution of the prizes took place on Wednesday, Mr. E. W. Gladstone in the chair. Next week we shall engrave the principal prizes, and briefly report the progress of the school.

"A Subscriber from the Commencement."—A child that has lost either parent is an orphan.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 27, 1844.

IT is generally stated that the legislative business of Parliament will close on the 8th of August; it will not, however, rise on that day, but be adjourned over till the 22nd, in order to give time to the Judges to return from Circuit and deliver in their opinion on the points submitted to them, on the Writ of Error, from the Dublin Court of Queen's Bench. The decision of the Lords must be given in the present session, as to defer it till the next, would inflict the greater part of the sentence, with a doubt still existing as to whether there may or may not have been a flaw in the legal proceedings. The opinion of the Judges will be given in writing, and then the House of Peers will proceed to judgment, in which it may be necessary to state, they are not bound to decide according to the opinion so delivered, though coming from such high authorities it will doubtless have great effect on their lordships, whichever way it may be. The judgment having been given, Parliament will be prorogued, most probably by commission.

A CURIOUS coincidence marked the final stages of two of the principal measures introduced by the Government this session. In the discussion in committee on the final clauses of the Poor-law Bill, an amendment was moved, and by a Conservative member, which will have the effect of relaxing the strictness with which the act has been interpreted as to out-door relief. The amendment was resisted by Sir J. Graham, but on the division the Government was beaten; for though the majority was only one, yet "it will do," as Mercutio says, as well as a larger. The first Poor Law was strict enough on this head, but it was in addition strained unnecessarily on the side of harshness by those who administered it. The present amendment will, in some degree, correct the evil—for an evil it was—and the good work has been still more assisted by Sir J. Graham himself, by a declaration made on Wednesday last, of what he, the highest authority, both as one of the framers of the law and its chief administrator, conceives to be the intention of the act. He declares that by the old act, even as it stood, Boards of Guardians have the power to order out-door relief in cases of necessity, and that the unsparing indiscriminate severity with which destitution has been forced within the walls of the "house," as the condition of receiving the relief which in many cases was not required to be more than a casual one, is not warranted by the provisions of the bill. If Sir James Graham is right in his view of the law—and his well-known ability would prevent our doubting that he is so—why, in the name of justice and common sense, did he not state his opinion long ago? What a vast amount of doubt and uncertainty it would have relieved; what a mass of suffering it would have prevented; for it would be entertaining a worse opinion of mankind than we possess, to suppose that the guardians were always the willing instruments of the hard operation of the law. They overstrained the act for fear of breaking it, and dreaded being humane lest they should by mistake have fallen into an illegality. We here see the bad effect of the absurdly intricate and technical wording of acts of Parliament; they cannot be understood by those who are not practised in legal subtleties; but they are eternally liable to be misconstrued, and a practice once adopted under a certain act, establishes the rule by which others proceed, without looking at the act at all, and the result is often needless oppression and discontent. Mr. B. Escott, on hearing the interpretation given by Sir J. Graham, stated that he had frequently urged the Board of Guardians, of which he is a member, to adopt this very view, but had always been outvoted! We have no doubt that this has frequently been the case, and now, that Boards of Guardians are assured they have more discretion than they thought they had, we hope they will use it wisely, and make "relief" what it was intended to be—assistance, and not cut off every applicant for it from society by immuring him in a workhouse and converting him from a struggling but perhaps still hoping man, into an objectless and despairing pauper.

The other instance we have alluded to, in which the House of Commons came to a conclusion the reverse of that arrived at by her Majesty's Government, occurred on the Railways Bill. Like the Poor-law, it was dragging its slow length out of the purgatory of a committee, being as yet neither accepted nor condemned, when again an amendment was moved, and again by a Conservative member, making it imperative on railway companies, should they run any trains on a Sunday, to append to the first and second-class carriages a third-class train. The amendment was opposed in this case by the President of the Board of Trade, as in the other by the Secretary of State. Mr. Gladstone alleged that he could not think of encouraging Sunday travelling in the working classes. But it was answered, you provide for travelling on that day by those who can pay well for it; be at least impartial; for the poor man may have as urgent need to be conveyed from place to place on the Sabbath as the rich one, and to compel him to pay a high fare, is subjecting his necessity to a heavy tax, without asserting your principle one jot. In fact, the case, as stated by Mr. Sheil, was this—Dives was to be permitted to travel, while Lazarus was to stay at home; and the incongruity was so apparent that the house carried the amendment against the Government by a majority of 33—a large number in a thinly-attended house during a morning sitting. We wonder that so clear-headed a man as Mr. Gladstone should have put himself in such a position; he had not one argument to fall back on, as he had given up the principle of prohibition of Sunday travelling, by allowing first and second-class carriages to run. As a question of principle, he was bound to prohibit all or none. It was almost amusing to remark member after member rising on both sides, and all with some new form of condemnation of the partiality of the Board of Trade. Mr. Gladstone must have seen his mistake long before the division; and he would have done better to have conceded the point than to have exposed himself to defeat. We may observe, by the way, that there has seldom been a measure introduced which underwent such a change in its progress as this Railway Bill.

One of the last acts passed this session is an act of what may be called retributive justice. A notorious offender against political morality is effectually put out of the way of sinning any more. The Borough of Sudbury is politically extinguished, it is disfranchised; the powers it has abused are taken away from it, and having nothing to sell, can be purchased no more. Of the defunct we are told to say nothing except what is good; but where the subject of the discussion never did a thing of which good can be said, and many things which provoke tongues and pens to speak evil if they would speak with justice, how shall the injunction be observed? The best plan, perhaps, is to let its memory die, except so far as its misdeeds may act as a warning, and its fate as an example to other boroughs which could be named as by no means immaculate. It is not always the most guilty that are selected for punishment. Those on whom the Tower of Siloam fell were not sinners above all the Galileans. One great offender has been swept away, but there are many left having ample cause and necessity for repentance. We are glad that Parliament has taken this decisive step. Of all punishments it is the most striking and effectual. The question now remains to what place shall the two members be given, for we presume the list of Parliament will be maintained at the number of 658? The University of Edinburgh might, we think, put in a strong claim to consideration.

The investigation into the late accident at Blackfriars-bridge, has terminated without fixing any direct blame on any one. Indeed the summing up of the Coroner appears to acquit the proprietors of the pier, which might have been strong enough for the landing and embarkation of passengers crossing it a few at a time, but was not meant to bear the weight of a large concourse of people at once:—

> If it were shown that the wooden bridge was not sufficiently secure for the ingress and egress of parties passing to the river steamers, and that in consequence of such insecurity human life had been sacrificed, a verdict of manslaughter then would lie. It appeared, however, from the whole of the evidence, that the fatal event took place from the improper conduct of the persons who forced their way upon the bridge, and not from any neglect on the part of the pier people, who did all in their power to keep them off. Though sufficient for the purpose of ingress and egress to the steamboats, the bridge might not have been strong enough for those who forced their way upon it at the time of the accident. What right had they to be there? If any money had been taken for their admission, or if any inducement had been held out to them to come there, any person holding out such inducement would be liable to the charge of having caused the deaths which ensued.

It appears that at least some efforts were made to keep the crowd off, but the exertion of one man could do nothing against the determination of many, and then follows the inference of the Coroner, as to the real cause of the event, which, we fear, is too well founded:—

> The incautious rashness of the people who crowded to the wooden bridge in despite of all the efforts of the man on the pier to keep them away, led to the terrible catastrophe which involved the immediate families of those victims of their over-rashness in the deepest affliction, and startled the public by circulating exaggerated reports of the calamity. It was clear from the whole evidence that the accident occurred from the desire always prominent on the part of the people of England to see a stirring sight at all hazards.

A destruction of life from one kind of danger will frequently call attention to another. The over-crowding of the steamers has often been a subject of remark, but till some awful destruction of life occurs, nothing effectual seems very likely to be done. In the meantime it would be as well if the pleasure-loving part of the public, which is generally a very careless one, would ponder the following facts, communicated to the Lord Mayor by Mr. Under-Sheriff Anderton:—

> He begged permission to draw his Lordship's attention to the state of the steam vessels in conveying passengers to different parts of the river. On Monday night one of the steamers was observed at Blackwall to have on board upwards of 1000 persons, so that there the immense mass stuck, deriving its safety in a great degree from the impossibility of moving from one side to the other, for if the vessel dropped a little upon either side the most awful destruction must have taken place.

This is only one instance out of many; and here the evil is of a kind that the public might remedy for themselves. Others require the interference of authority, and we are happy to see such a statement as the following coming from the first Magistrate of the City:—

> My opinion as regards the regulating the speed of the steam-vessels is, that we should have an authorised agent on board—a sort of city pilot; we should erect public landing-places ourselves too, and do away with those private piers altogether; but I am convinced the Navigation Committee will make every exertion for the public safety and benefit, and it will no longer be considered indispensable to pack people together like a flock of sheep to insure their security from drowning.

THE COURT AND HAUT TON.

On Saturday last her Majesty and Prince Albert, accompanied by the Prince of Wales, took their usual early walk. The Princess Royal and the Princess Alice were taken a drive in an open pony carriage. The royal party took a drive in the afternoon, the Queen and Prince Albert in an open phaeton and pair.

Windsor, Sunday.—The Queen and Prince Albert, the ladies and gentlemen of the royal suite, and the household attended divine service this morning in the private chapel. The Hon. and Rev. C. L. Courtenay officiated. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent attended divine service in the chapel near Cumberland-lodge. In the forenoon the Queen and Prince Albert, accompanied by the Princess Royal, walked in the pleasure grounds of the Castle. Her Majesty and his Royal Highness took a drive in the afternoon in a pony phaeton.

Monday.—The Queen and Prince Albert took an airing this morning in a pony phaeton, and visited her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, at Frogmore Lodge. In the afternoon her Majesty and Prince Albert rode out in a pony phaeton, the Prince driving. The royal children were also taken out for airings.

Tuesday.—The Queen and Prince Albert, accompanied by the Princess Royal, walked this morning in the pleasure grounds of the Castle. Their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales and the Princess Alice, were taken an airing in the forenoon. The Royal party left the Castle for a drive in the afternoon. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent took an airing in an open carriage. The Royal dinner party at the Castle, in the evening, included her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, Lady Charlotte Dundas, and the Countess Wratislaw.

Wednesday.—The Queen and Prince Albert, accompanied by the Prince of Wales, walked in the pleasure grounds of the Castle this morning, and also took an airing in a pony phaeton. Her Majesty and Prince Albert visited the Duchess of Kent at Frogmore Lodge. Sir Robert Peel arrived at the Castle on a visit to the Queen. In the afternoon the illustrious party rode out. The Queen, the Marchioness of Douglas, the Countess of Mount Edgecumbe, and the Countess De Grey, occupied an open carriage and four. His Royal Highness Prince Albert was on horseback. The Royal Family were taken in the gardens of the Castle in the afternoon.

Return of the Queen Dowager to England.—On Thursday morning, at eight o'clock, the Black Eagle arrived at Woolwich Dockyard, having on board her Majesty the Queen Dowager and suite. The Queen looked exceedingly well, and sat on deck until half-past eight, while the carriages, five in number, were getting on shore and the horses putting to, and then disembarked and immediately proceeded to town. The landing was strictly private. A foreign steamer proceeded up the river with her Majesty's luggage.

Another Royal Visit.—We understand that his Royal Highness Prince Frederick William Louis of Prussia, brother of the King, and heir apparent to the Prussian throne, is expected on a visit to her Majesty in the early part of next week. His Royal Highness will probably be present at the Goodwood races.

Louis Philippe's Visit to England.—We believe it is arranged that the visit of the King of the French to her Majesty will take place in September. The King will embark at Tréport. His Majesty will be accompanied by two ships of 74 guns, and four or five steamers, and will land at Portsmouth, whence he will proceed by railway to the station nearest to Windsor. His Majesty will remain eight days at Windsor, and will not visit London.

The King of Saxony's Tour.—On Saturday last the two carriages and four conveying his Majesty the King of Saxony and suite drew up at the White Ox Inn, at High Hesket, about halfway between Penrith and Carlisle, when his Majesty, Baron Gersdorff, Doctor Carus, and others, walked forward down the hill towards Low Hesket. On the road a gig passed them in which were a lady and gentleman and a little boy; the latter happened to lose his hat out of the gig, when his Majesty hastened from his attendants and picked up the hat, and ran after the vehicle and gave it into the little fellow's hand. The lad, on being informed who the illustrious personage was who had picked his hat up off the road, was, of course, highly delighted, and called his hat the "King of Saxony." His Majesty has since visited Glasgow.

A Royal Artisan.—During the recent tour of the King of Saxony in the North, his Majesty visited the well-known pencil manufactory of Messrs. Banks, Foster, and Co., at Keswick. The King not only examined every process through which the pencil passes, but having expressed his admiration at the manner in which the operation of stamping was performed, he was solicited by Mr. Banks to try the operation, which the royal visitor at once agreed to, and on a dozen pure lead pencils being placed in his hands his Majesty passed them through the engine with an expertness and tact that would have done credit to a more experienced workman.

Wednesday being the birthday of her Royal Highness the Duchess of Cambridge, the whole of the corps diplomatique and most of the leading nobility in town paid congratulatory visits to her Royal Highness. In the evening there was a select dinner party at Cambridge House.

The Expected Accouchement of Her Majesty.—Two engines, to be attached to special trains, have been commanded to be kept in constant readiness with their steam up, both by day and night, at the Paddington Terminus of the Great Western Railway, to start at five minutes' notice for the Slough Station, for the purpose of conveying the great officers of state en route to Windsor Castle, upon their being summoned from town on the auspicious and interesting occasion of the accouchement of her Majesty. A powerful alarum has just been fixed at the galvanic telegraphic office at Paddington, communicating with the telegraph at Slough, for the purpose of arousing the attendant who sleeps at the office, in the event of a telegraphic express reaching the terminus from Windsor during the night. A trusty person has also been appointed to remain in attendance at the office of the Slough Station throughout the whole of the night. It is computed that a message can be expressed by the aid of the telegraph from Windsor Castle to Buckingham Palace in 25 minutes.

Dr. Charles Locock, first physician accoucheur to her Majesty, has arrived at Windsor, and taken up his residence at the house of the Rev. D. F. Markham, one of the canons of Windsor, and within the precincts of the Castle. Dr. Ferguson, second physician accoucheur, and Sir James Clark, Bart., one of the physicians in ordinary to the Queen, have also arrived. Mrs. Lilley, who has been engaged as her Majesty's monthly nurse, is at the Castle.

Prince Albert's Birthday.—The inhabitants of Dover intend to commemorate the approaching birthday of his Royal Highness Prince Albert (the 12th of August) by a grand fête and fancy fair on a very extensive scale, under high patronage and the immediate support of the first families in the locality; the proceeds to be devoted to the Shipwrecked Fishermen and Mariners' Benevolent Society, of which his Royal Highness is patron.

Grand Entertainment at Gloucester House.—Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester gave a magnificent entertainment on Monday evening at Gloucester House, to her illustrious relatives the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, and the Hereditary Grand Duke and Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, and a number of other distinguished persons. In the evening there was a concert, at the conclusion of which supper was served in the salle à manger, and the royal party took their departure about a quarter past one o'clock.

Fete Champetre, at Caen Wood.—On Tuesday afternoon the Earl of Mansfield gave a princely fête champêtre at Caen Wood, the noble earl's delightful retreat, at Hampstead, to the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, the Duchess of Gloucester, and above 700 of the leading aristocracy, and most of the foreign ministers.

The Duke of Wellington will give a grand concert of vocal and instrumental music on Wednesday evening next at Apsley House, to which are invited their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, the Hereditary Grand Duke and Duchess of Mecklenburgh Strelitz, and four hundred of the élite of the haut ton. The entertainment, it is understood, is given for the purpose of introducing Lady Charles Wellesley after her recent alliance with Lord Charles.

Lord Brougham is expected to arrive in the north in the course of a few days, the requisite arrangements having been made for his lordship's reception at Brougham Hall, to which considerable additions and alterations have lately been made in the building and decorative departments.

The Earl of Wilton gave a magnificent entertainment on Wednesday evening at his mansion in Grosvenor-square to their Royal Highnesses the Duchess of Cambridge, the Duchess of Gloucester, the Hereditary Grand Duke and Duchess of Mecklenburg Strelitz, the Duke of Wellington, &c. &c.

Liberal Present of her Majesty.—At the recent marriage of the Rev. Edward Hartropp Grove, Vice Principal of Brasenose College, Oxford, to the Hon. Harriet Lister, one of her Majesty's Maids of Honour, her Majesty presented the happy fair one with a magnificent locket containing her own hair, together with a donation of £1000, to which were added £500 from Lord John Russell, as a mark of his esteem. The bride was given away by Lord John Russell, whose first wife was her sister.

An address has been agreed to by the inhabitants of Guernsey, signed by 7000 natives, and 750 English residents. It is printed on white satin, and on the reverse side all the speeches at full length which were delivered at a late meeting at Guernsey, with a raised gold border. Sir Thomas Saumarez wrote to the Queen, begging permission to present it in person, and she graciously favoured him with an autograph reply, to the effect that she would herself receive from him the address. Sir Thomas was equerry to the Duke of Kent many years, and is, it appears, a favourite of her Majesty.

Fashionable Marriages.—Viscount Grimston, M.P., is on the eve of leading to the hymeneal altar Miss Weyland.—It is currently gossiped in the circles of fashion, that a lovely and accomplished daughter of a noble earl and countess is likely to be, within a few months, conducted to the altar by a young viscount, heir presumptive to a much higher title.—On Tuesday, at Hampton Church, Mr. Cochrane, son of Rear-Admiral Sir Thomas Cochrane, led to the altar the daughter of Rear Admiral Sir G. F. Seymour, Commander-in-chief in the Pacific.—The marriage between Mr. Kerrison and Lady Caroline Strangways was solemnised on Tuesday morning at Melbury, Dorsetshire.

Death of the Dowager Countess of Leicester.—It is with pain we record the demise of Anne Amelia, Dowager Countess of Leicester, wife of the Right Hon. Edward Ellice, M.P. for Coventry, which took place on Monday morning, at Longford-hall, her ladyship's seat in Derbyshire, where the deceased countess had repaired for her accouchement. Her death resulted from her confinement, having, on the 10th instant, given birth to a son, who survived its birth only a few hours. The deceased countess was third daughter of the Earl and Countess of Albemarle.

Accident to the Earl of Mornington.—The Earl of Mornington met with an accident on Wednesday, at his residence at Twickenham. His lordship missed his footing in descending a stone staircase, and rolled to the bottom, where he was taken up severely bruised, but happily no bones were broken, and it is hoped that his lordship has suffered no internal injury. The venerable earl is now in the eighty-second year of his age, and his frame has been somewhat shaken by this unfortunate accident.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

Consecration.—On Wednesday morning the Lord Bishop of Worcester consecrated a new church in Birmingham, dedicated to St. Stephen. The church, which is a neat and convenient structure, is capable of accommodating about 1200 persons, having many of its sittings unappropriated and free. On Sunday morning the Lord Bishop of Ripon consecrated a new church at Yeadon, in the parish of Guiseley, near Leeds, in the presence of a large number of the clergy and gentry of the neighbourhood. The Lord Bishop of Ripon has licensed the Rev. William Metcalf, M.A., Incumbent of Kirkhammerton, Yorkshire, to the ministry of the new church.

The Isle of Man.—The Lord Bishop of Sodor and Man, held an ordination at Bishop's Court, on Sunday, the 21st inst., when the following gentlemen were admitted to holy orders:—Priests—The Rev. John Fry Garde, the Rev. John Congreve, B.A., the Rev. Isaac Britain. Deacons—Alexander Watt, A.M., Philip Dowe.

The Ecclesiastical Commissioners for England had a meeting on Tuesday. Those present were the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Ely, the Bishop of Lichfield, the Lord President of the Council, the Dean of Westminster, and the Earl of Besborough.

The Dean and Chapter of Lincoln have nominated the Rev. James Johnson, curate of Crowie, Lincolnshire, to the livings of Glentham and Normanby, in the same county. The Lord Bishop of Peterborough has instituted the Rev. James Powell Marriott, B.A., to the rectory of Cottesbach, Leicestershire, vacant by the resignation of Fitzherbert Adams Marriott. The Rev. George Cook, M.A., has been instituted by the Bishop of Salisbury to the perpetual curacy of Piddle Hinton, Dorsetshire, vacant by the cession of the Rev. T. Thellusson Carter, on the presentation of the Provost of Eton College. The Rev. W. F. Sims, M. A., Chaplain to Lord Viscount Strangford, has been appointed to the evening lectureship of Lee Church, Kent, of which parish he is the curate. The Lord Bishop of Oxford has licensed the Rev. Robert Williams to the perpetual curacy of Stoken Church, Oxfordshire,

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

Taking the Veil.—On Tuesday morning the imposing ceremony of taking the black veil was performed at the Convent of the Sisters of Mercy, at Parker's Folly, Bermondsey. At the early hour of eight o'clock the chapel of the Convent was crowded, principally by ladies, to witness the ceremony. At that hour the Convent bell began tolling, announcing the entrance of the procession, which consisted of the priests, incense-boys, and assistants, followed by the nuns, each of whom bore a lighted wax taper. The ceremony was then proceeded with, during which solemn mass was celebrated; and at the conclusion, each of the nuns embraced their newly professed sister, and they returned to the Convent in the same order in which they had left. The young lady who has thus embraced the profession is a Miss Duff, and is possessed of considerable property. She has been in the convent upwards of two years, and is of great personal attractions.

The State of the Weather.—The weather has been intensely hot in the metropolis this week. On Tuesday the thermometer stood in the sun, south aspect, 109 degrees. When placed, at four o'clock, upon wood, in opposition to its rays, the spirit reached 121 degrees, whilst the other, which was longitudinal, was only 102 degrees. The shade thermometer indicated, in the sheltered position, 84 degrees ·5; and the most extraordinary indication was the heat of Monday night, which was not less than 63 degrees, eight degrees above temperate heat; being a most unusual heat in the night, even in eastern nations. On Tuesday afternoon at Windsor the thermometer in the shade, on the north side of the Castle, ranged between 81 and 82 degrees, and within a few minutes after the sun had passed the meridian, the mercury rose to 122 degrees Fahrenheit, the thermometer being in the sun, on the southern side of the royal residence, and between the Victoria and Augusta towers.

South London Floricultural Exhibition.—This exhibition took place on Tuesday, in the Surrey Zoological Gardens, and attracted a large crowd of respectable individuals. The show of flowers was very good, and the selection for prizes made by the judges gave universal satisfaction. The collection of miscellaneous plants in pots was particularly fine, and from their showy, elegant appearance, added much to the beauty of the exhibition. In the evening the gardens were crowded, in consequence of the double attraction of the fireworks and flowers. His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, and the Grand Duke of Mecklenburgh Strelitz, honoured the exhibition with their presence between one and two o'clock, and expressed their high gratification at the show of flowers and fruits.

The Statuary at the New Royal Exchange.—The Committee for managing the building of this splendid edifice have recently determined upon most important improvements in the shape of statues, that will tend to render it of a far more attractive character than was at first anticipated. A finely carved marble figure of the Queen will stand in the centre of the quadrangle, facing the principal or western entrance. The sum of 1000 guineas has been allowed for its cost, and the artist being left to the selection of her Majesty, she has been pleased to confer the honour on Mr. Lough. A new statue of Sir Thomas Gresham, 15 feet in height, and chiselled out of Portland stone, at a cost of 500 guineas, has also been decided on, and will be placed immediately under the tower at the eastern end. New figures of Sir Thomas Whittington and Sir Hugh Myddelton are likewise to adorn this commercial building. The former, for which £450 has been allowed, will, with a new statue of Queen Elizabeth, occupy the only two niches on the east side of the area. The latter, with another, will be placed on the north exterior facing Bartholomew-lane, £430 being allowed for its cost. The figures are in a forward state, and it is hoped that they will occupy their several positions on the day of the opening of this important structure.

The Registration.—In consequence of the recent decision of Lord Chief Justice Tindal, that lodgers paying a yearly rent of £10 were entitled under the Reform Act to the privileges of voting at elections, there is every probability that the constituencies of the metropolitan boroughs will this year be greatly increased. In the Tower Hamlets about 1000 claims have been sent in to the overseers; in the Ward of Cripplegate, notices have been served for 700; and in the borough of Lambeth there are no fewer than 1000 new claimants, the great majority of whom are lodgers. From this it is evident that the revision of the lists of voters will this year last much longer than usual.

Increase of Luxury.—The effect of the importation of pines from the West Indies is that such luxuries have been placed within the reach of the poorer classes, by the novel mode of having considerable numbers exposed in barrows and hawked through the streets for sale in the same way as it is customary to see cherries and cocoa nuts, but with the addition that the public ears are saluted with the extraordinary cry of "Pine Apples, a penny a slice."

Distribution of Prizes at the Government School of Design.—On Wednesday the annual distribution of prizes to the pupils of this valuable institution took place in the great room of the establishment at Somerset-house. The hour fixed for the business of the day was four o'clock, and by that time the great room was filled by the pupils, and a large assemblage of Members of Parliament, artists, and other distinguished personages, amongst whom were several ladies. The walls of the room were covered with paintings in fresco, drawings, models, and other works of art, the productions of the students, of a very meritorious character. Lord Colborne having briefly opened the proceedings of the day, called the Right Honourable W. E. Gladstone to the chair for the purpose of distributing the prizes. Mr. Gladstone made some very gratifying observations upon the progress which the School of Design, manifested by the productions of the pupils, had made within the comparatively short period since its establishment, and expatiated upon the important and useful results which must accrue from it to the extensive manufactures of this country. A debt of gratitude was due to the Government under whose auspices this great experiment of superinducing an excellence in the ornamental arts, upon the proud pre-eminence which this country already enjoyed in those more purely of industry and ingenuity; and, for himself and his colleagues, he was happy to be able to declare their warm and anxious interest in its success, and their determination to lend it every co-operation in their power. (Cheers.) The right honourable gentleman also passed a high compliment upon the exertions of the council, and of Mr. C. H. Wilson, the director, to whose zeal, talent, and discretion so much of the success which had attended the objects of the institution was due. This compliment was responded to by loud cheers from the pupils, re-echoed by many of the general company. Mr. Gladstone then proceeded to deliver the prizes to the successful competitors.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

Movements of the French Navy. Extract of a letter received at Lloyd's from their agent at Gibraltar, dated the 14th of July:—

"The French Government steamer Pluton, with his Royal Highness the Prince de Joinville, arrived at this port from Oran on the night of the 8th inst.; she steamed for Tangier the following morning, and returned to the anchorage on the same evening.

"The French line-of-battle ships (of the first class) the Suffren, the Jemappes, and the Triton, also the frigate Belle Poule, which were in Algesiras roadstead, have this day sailed for the westward, said to be bound for Cadiz to await the issue of the negociations now pending with the Emperor of Morocco."

Extract from the Gibraltar Chronicle of the 12th of July:—

"A frigate, signalized three leagues distant to the eastward this morning, did not show her colours until her Majesty's ship Warspite fired a gun and hoisted the demand as she passed Europa Point to the west, when she showed French colours. Her decks were crowded with people."

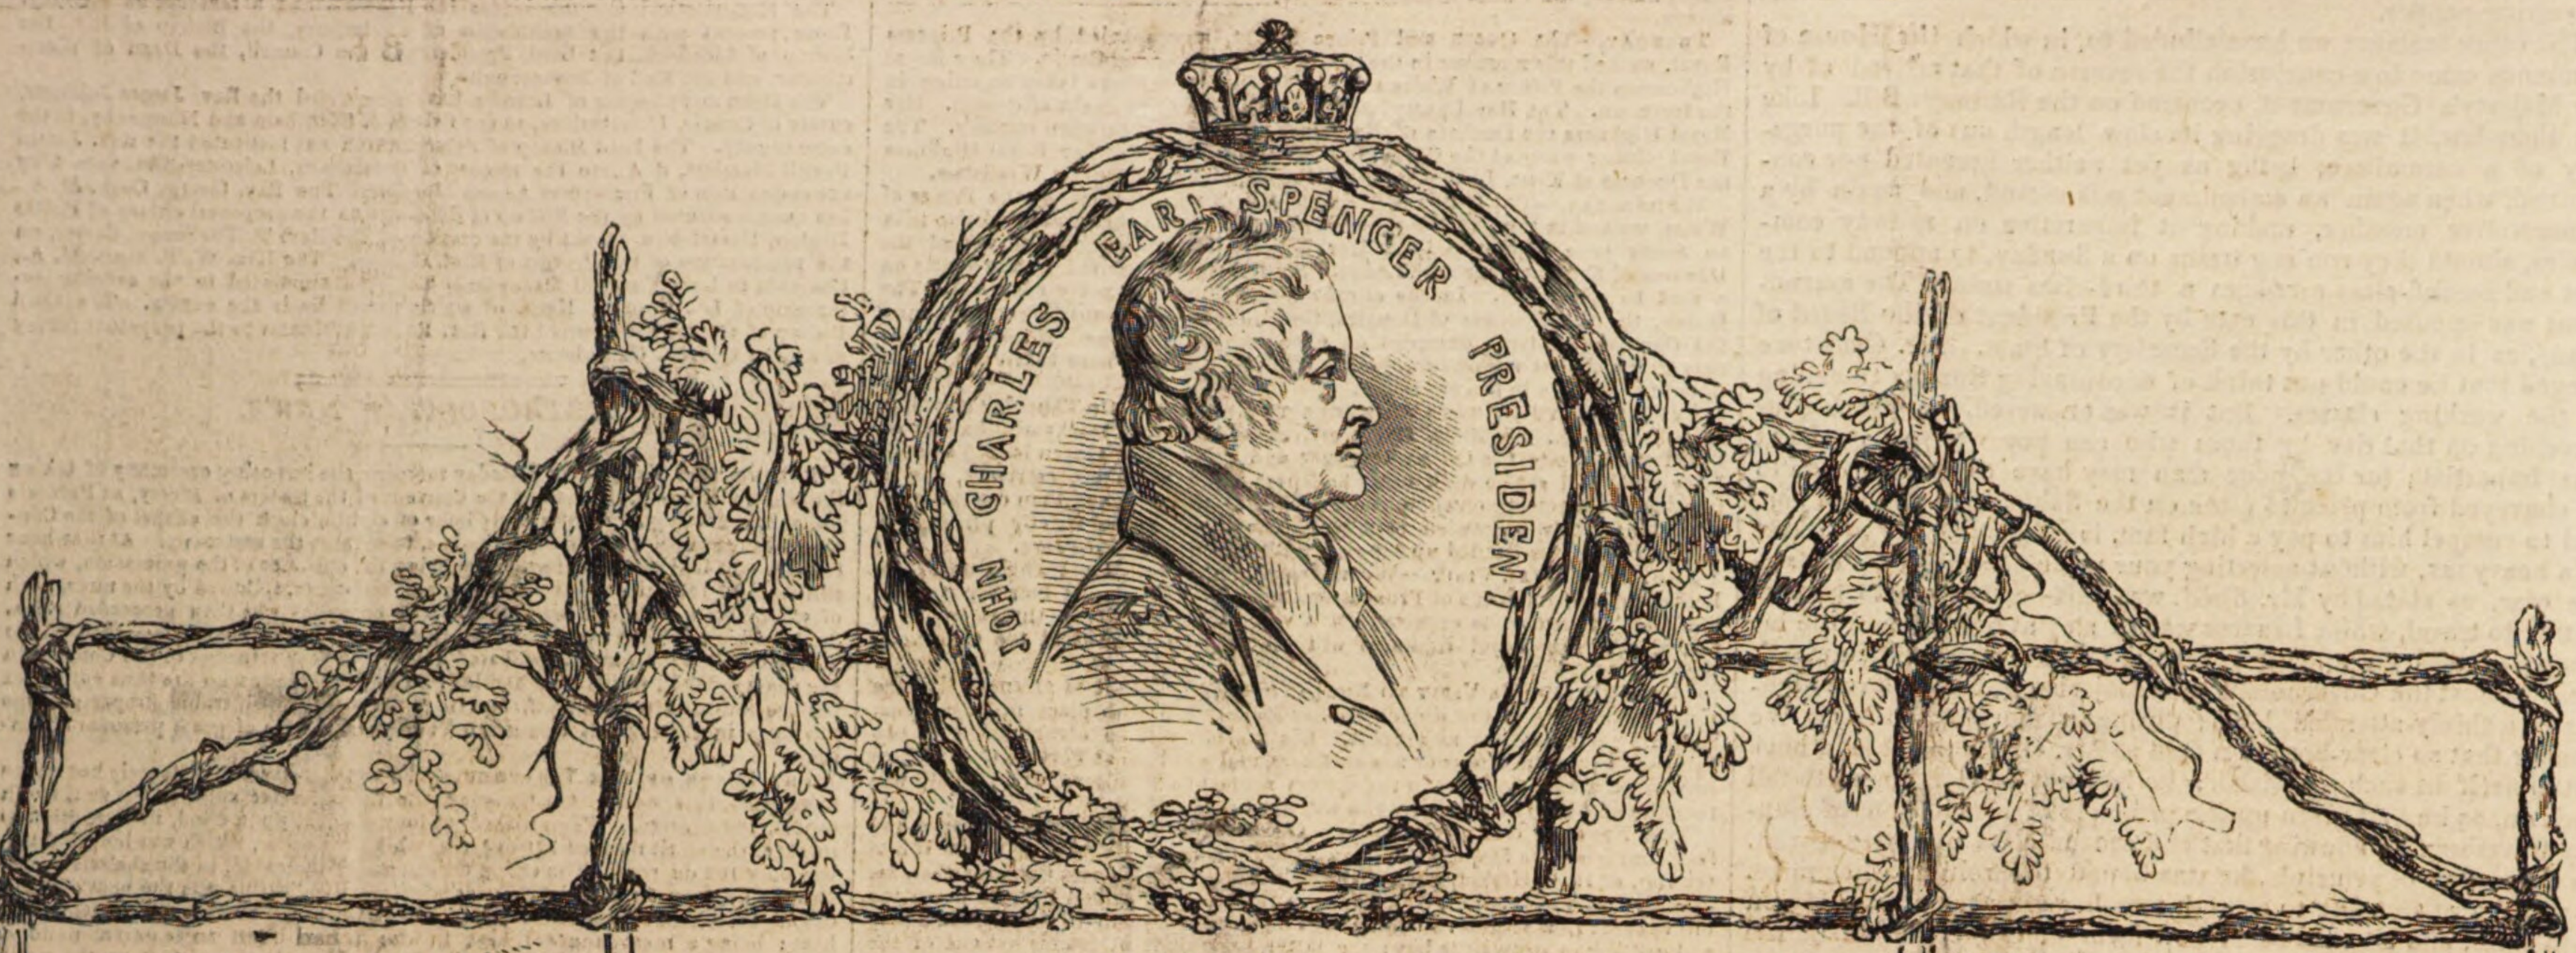
The sentence of the court martial on First Lieutenant Louis, Royal Marines, Woolwich Division, for leaving his guard at the Victualling-yard, Deptford, without due authority, and for being absent therefrom when the fire took place on board the freight ship Madras, on the 9th inst., was, that Lieutenant Louis be cashiered: but in consequence of certain mitigatory circumstances which appeared in evidence, and the high testimony borne to his character by his commanding officer, Colonel Parke, C. B., Commandant of the Woolwich division, Lieutenant Louis was recommended to her Majesty's favourable consideration, who, exercising her clemency, though fully approving the sentence of the court, has been pleased to order that Lieutenant Louis be permitted to return to his duty.

The Admiral Superintendent of Devonport Dock-yard, with Capt. Burgoyne, and the master shipwright, surveyed the line of battle ships in ordinary on Monday, and the assistant-master shipwright, with the foreman afloat, and the commander of the ordinary, surveyed the frigates. On Tuesday Sir S. Pym and party inspected the advanced ships, and the other officers the small vessels.

The Malabar embarked passengers and some officers for India, at Spithead, and sailed on Tuesday morning for Madras. She has 120 rank and file going out to join their respective corps in the East Indies on board.

Appointments—Assistant-Surgeons: A. W. Babington (1841), of the Queen, to the Comet; Richard P. Chapman (1843), acting of the Prometheus, to the Porcupine; John Belcher (1833), to the Hecla; Philip Porter (1841), to the Virago; Patrick Slevin (1841), of the Lynx, to the Savage; Alexander Mitchell (1839), to the Lynx.

The Collingwood, 80, Captain H. Eden, went out of harbour from Portsmouth to Spithead, on Saturday, in excellent style. She had a leading wind out, and carried all sail to royals. The Collingwood has since taken in her lower deck guns, some provisions, and water. Rear-Admiral Sir G. F. Seymour went down to Spithead yesterday, and hoisted his flag (blue at the mizen) on board the Collingwood. After mustering and inspecting the gallant crew, he departed on leave until the ship sails.



JOHN CHARLES EARL SPENCER PRESIDENT

GREAT MEETING OF THE ROYAL AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY, AT SOUTHAMPTON.

THE OLD ENGLISH FARMER,

A HOMELY BALLAD, SUGGESTED BY THE ABOVE ANNIVERSARY.

Here's a health to the Farmer who lives on the Land,
Made the best and the richest on Earth by his hand:
You may roam the wide world, but there's nought to be seen
That can rival the old English Farmer, I ween!
Derry down, down,
Down derry down!

What life is so happy? he's up with the sun—
He hears the Day's poetry sweetly begun
By the lark and the cuckoo, the swallow and merle—
And sees the green lawn all besprinkled with pearl!
Derry down, &c.

While sluggards in cities, 'mid tumult and strife,
Lose all the best part of this quick-fading life;
He quaffs Hebe's cup at Aurora's first ray,
And lives twice as long as they do ev'ry day!
Derry down, &c.

He rules ev'ry station from castle to cot,
He's neither by Noble nor peasant forgot;
The peer and the ploughman together agree
That the farmer should never want company!
Derry down, &c.

Look round you—what treasure his riches unfold!
His granaries fill'd with those sheaves of bright gold!
His pens and his pastures all breathing with life,
And his home far away from all passion and strife!
Derry down, &c.

Then, a health to the Farmer who lives on the Land,
Made the best and the richest on Earth by his hand:
You may roam the wide world, but there's nought to be seen
That can rival the old English Farmer, I ween!
Derry down, down,
Down derry down!

This great agricultural gathering of farmers, farm implements, and anything, dead or alive, appertaining nearly or remotely to the culture of the soil, has for the last week been setting the pleasant town of Southampton in a mighty stir—diffusing, it is to be hoped, enlightenment and knowledge over the length and breadth of our agricultural districts, and certainly diffusing gold and silver at a very pleasant rate (for the recipients) among the pockets of the honest townsfolk; in fact, teaching, literally, the man of the fields how to reap good harvests, and causing, metaphorically, the man of the town to do the same.

Trains and steam-boats—vapour by water, and vapour by land—have been pouring their thousands from every point of the compass upon the focus of Southampton, and the natural effect of the inordinate demand for the good things of this life consequently felt, naturally raised the price of those said articles to an equally high level.

The proceedings, as our readers may be aware, consist of an immense Show of Cattle and Agricultural Implements; meetings of Agricultural Societies during the day, and dinners of the same during the night. The ground chosen for the exhibition is at the village of Portswood, about two miles from Southampton. It is a sweet spot, surrounded by stately trees, from which here and there rise the handsome mansions of the resident gentry; one of which, that of Mr. Mott, upon whose grounds the exhibition took place, is accurately represented by our artist.

The general appearance of the show-ground may be easily described. Imagine, in the first place, a dusty road, bounded by magnificent trees, and covered with coaches, omnibuses, cabs, carts, and flys, everything in fact which ever went upon wheels, toiling their dusty way towards the scene of action; your approach to it is announced by a perfect street of booths, erected like the old Flemish House, with their gables towards the road: coloured lamps are suspended in most of them, intended, of course, to be very brilliant at night, and provisions of all kinds, good for the hungry and thirsty, are most invitingly exposed to view. Branching off the road, upon your left, and taking your way through irregular groups of canvass-constructed buildings, surrounded by groups of loungers, and tenanted by groups of merry-makers, you perceive the wooden walls—not of England—but of the Royal Agricultural Society's Show, extending before you. The ground enclosed forms a square. One-half of it is devoted to the implements, and the other to the live stock. The former occupies a space of about sixteen acres. Imagine this space—all enclosed in a square—divided into lines by long rows of open tents, stretching from one end of it to the other; and under these tents, ranges of implements of husbandry, of all shapes and sizes, simple and complex, intended for all manner of agricultural purposes; and each long line flanked by a double row of admiring and criticising visitors, composed of well dressed ladies and gentlemen, and stout burly farmers; and explained and exhibited by the inventors or their servants—call up all this before your mind's eye, and you will have some idea of the Implement department of the Show.

THE CATTLE SHOW, PORTSWOOD.

We now proceed to report the proceedings, on the respective days.

TUESDAY.

PUBLIC EXHIBITION OF THE WORKING OF THE IMPLEMENTS.

This was the most interesting portion of the day's proceedings, and attracted universal attention. The time fixed for the public trial of the agricultural implements to take place was twelve o'clock; but, for some hours previous to that time, the road leading from Southampton to the trial-ground was thronged with vehicles of every description, conveying the interested and curious to the appointed place, distant about four miles from Southampton, on the farm of Mr. C. Cater, at Swathling. Many thousand persons were on the ground, consisting of the agriculturists of Hampshire, and the adjoining counties, as well as of numbers from the extreme western counties. The Queen, Brunswick, and two other steamers, arrived in the morning from Plymouth and Cornwall, full of passengers. All the steamers from the Isle of Wight were also full, notwithstanding many persons were prevented from coming in consequence of the races. Among the parties on the ground we noticed most of the noblemen and gentlemen, and the landed proprietors of the county. The test trials, to determine the merits of the several implements, took place on Friday and Saturday, but were strictly private, the public not being allowed to approach nearer than the outside of the fields in which the implements were tried. These trials were conducted with great care and fairnesss: even the exhibitors of the various implements were confined to the attendance upon their own implements, and were not allowed to inspect the working of the others.

The judges were Mr. Outhwaithe, of Cathrich, Yorkshire, and another gentleman, who conducted the proceedings most impartially, and in a manner which gave general satisfaction. The implements selected for the public exhibition of their working were those previously selected for competition before the judges in the private trials, which had occupied the two previous days; those adapted for light land at Mr. Cater's farm, at Swathling, and those adapted for heavy land, at Mr. Spooner's, at Eling. The field selected for the public trial to-day is a level one, of considerable extent, adjoining the railway, and is a clover ley. 'I he ground was not in good order for working in consequence of its being unusually hard from the long drought. Precisely at twelve o'clock, the ploughing match commenced.

There were sixteen ploughs started, among which were two specimens of American ploughs, presented by Professor Col. The contrast between the working of these transatlantic ploughs and the English ones was most striking, and was the most perfect practical refutation of the self-congratulatory remarks of Daniel Webster, who, on his return from England, stated that he had not seen any implement in England worthy of comparison with those of America. We particularly examined the work of these ploughs, and, compared with the level and accurate furrows made by the English ploughs, which appeared as though cut out by a plane, they were coarse, rough, and irregular. The work of the competing ploughs, with the two exceptions we have alluded to, was generally good; especially so, considering the state of the soil. One of the ploughs was a new implement, made by Messrs. F., R., and A. Ransome, of Ipswich: it has a very convenient moveable nose-piece, which adjusts the pitch of the share, either to take more or less hold of the ground, or laterally to give it an inclination more or less toward the land. This plough won the prize of £10 and a silver medal in competing with the others, as a heavy land plough; and also won the prize of £10 and a silver medal, in its competition on the light land. Another of the ploughs was also a new implement, by the same exhibitors, the peculiar feature of which is that the mould-board of this plough is adapted for turning furrows 4½ inches deep, and 9 inches wide, so as to leave the angle of the furrow slice precisely at 45 degrees.

There was another and a strong plough by the same exhibitors, fitted for deep ploughing in tenacious land.

Mr. Lowcock' patent plough for laying furrows all in one direction, and which was awarded a prize of five pounds, was another of the competitors. The peculiar advantage in Lowcock's patent plough is that its construction admits of turning and laying the furrows all at the same angle, and in the same direction, to the right or left alternately, as it passes up or down the field; thus combining the properties of the turn-rest plough with the advantage of retaining the curved form of mould-board, as used on the most approved single ploughs.

An iron two-wheel pulverizing plough, invented by William Mason, constructed for a light soil, with the mould-board made to set wider or narrower as required, and pulverizing knives attached for breaking up old pastures, strong soils, or land that requires harrowing and bringing to a fine tilth, was one of the ploughs tried; and the remaining others were—

A one-wheel or swing plough, by Messrs. Tasker and Fowler, of Waterloo Iron Works, Andover, which may be used with or without the skim coulter.

An iron swing-plough, by the Earl of Ducie, which obtained a prize of five pounds at the Royal Agricultural Society's meeting at Bristol.

A two-wheel wrought-iron plough, with patent coulter, by Messrs. Sanders, Williams, and Taylor, of Bedford, which is fitted for wheel or swing plough, and is worked by two or four horses.

A one-wheel plough, by Mr. Hugh Carson, of Warminster, suited for light lands.

A patent iron plough, for sand and other light land. It is made of iron, principally wrought. The peculiarities consist in the very taper and regular curve of the cutting and moving parts, i. e., the share and furrow-turner, to which parts the inventors have paid great attention, not only with a view to reduce the draught, but to make it suitable to as great a variety of soil as possible. Every part of this plough is so arranged, that a common ploughman may take it to pieces, and put it together, without the assistance of a mechanic. It can be worked either with or without wheels, or with one wheel, as required. It has a broad share to fit it for paring turf and stubbles.

An iron plough, trussed beam, and steel breast, invented by Ransome, and manufactured by Messrs. Sims and Brown, of Tollard Royal, Dorsetshire.

A one-wheel plough, invented by the exhibitors, Messrs. Barratt, Exhall, and Andrews, of Reading, which is fitted with an open turn-furrow for plowing loamy and other adhesive soils, as it breaks the lower part of the furrow, and thus admits the air. The plough is extremely light, and has very great ease of draught.

Immediately after the termination of the ploughing match, the other implements, consisting of drills, harrows, clod crushers, and numerous other articles, were tried in an adjoining field, all of which seemed to excite general interest.

Throughout the day, the trains continued to bring in a great number of cattle for the show on Thursday.

WEDNESDAY.

The great point of attraction was

THE COUNCIL DINNER.

About 400 noblemen and gentlemen sat down to this dinner, which was held at the Victoria Archery and Assembly-rooms. Earl Spencer, the president of the Society, was in the chair, and the Vice Chairman was the Earl of Hardwicke. Among the company present, we noticed the Duke of Richmond, Marquis of Downshire, Lord Ashburton, Earl of Egmont, Lord Sandon, Earl Ducie, Lord Chichester, Lord Fortescue, Lord Lilford, Earl Somers, Earl of Essex, Lord Camoys, Mr. J. T. Hope, M.P., Lord Scarborough, Mr. Handley, Sir Charles Lemon, Lord Hatherton, Sir Thomas Dyke Acland, M.P., Mr. Hayter, M.P., Mr. Y. B. Shelley, Mr. B. W. Blanco, Hon. Mr. A'Court Holmes, M.P., Right Hon. W. Sturges Bourne, Mr. Escott, M.P., Mr. Pusey, M.P., Sir Charles Burrell, M.P., Sir Charles Price, Mr. G. A. Coathope, Mr. Sotheron, M.P., Sir Charles Morgan, Col. Challoner, Mr. Bramston, M.P., Col. Henderson (Mayor of Southampton), Capt. Ward, R.N., Lord De Lisle, Mr. Napper, of Meath, the Duke of Leinster, Mr. Stephen Mills, Sir John Ogilvie, Mr. Hillyer, Sir Isaac Lyon Goldsmid, &c

After the conclusion of the dinner, which was admirably served, by Messrs. Bathe and Breach, of the London Tavern,

The noble chairman proposed the health of her Majesty the Queen, and he was sure that all present would heartily unite in drinking her health, placed as she was in her present interesting position. (Cheers.)

He next gave the "Queen Dowager, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, Albert Prince of Wales, and the rest of the Royal Family." (Cheers.)

Lord Ashburton then proposed "the health of the Scientific Gentlemen who had honoured them with their presence upon that occasion."

Dr. Buckland returned thanks in a lengthened address, in which he strongly recommended the use of guano as a manure.

The following list of Awards was then read from the chair:—

SHORT HORNS.

Judges—Messrs. Watson, Torr, and Stokes.

Mr. John Cooper, of Brentwood, the owner of the best bull calved previously to the 1st of January, 1842, 30 sovs.

Mr. Hayter, M.P., the owner of the second best ditto, 15 sovs.

Mr. W. Foulds, of Kirdlington, Notts, the owner of the best bull calved since the 1st of January, 1842, and more than one year old, 20 sovs.

Mr. John Booth, of Catterick, Yorkshire, the owner of the best cow in milk, 15 sovs.

The Duke of Devonshire, the owner of the best in-calf heifer, not exceeding three years old, 15 sovs.

Mr. R. Booth, of Wallesby, near North Allerton, the owner of the best yearling heifer, 10 sovs.

The judges highly commend Mr. John Forrest's four years two months twenty-five days old short horned cow. Also Mr. John Booth's two years and a half old short horned in-calf heifer.

HEREFORDS.

Judges—Messrs. Smythies, Peake, and Mr. W. Perry, of Monkland, Ashdown, the owners of the best bull calved previously to the 1st of January, 1842, 30 sovs.

Mr. G. Brown, of Avebury, the owner of the second best ditto, 15 sovs.

Mr. J. N. Carpenter, of Eardisland, near Leominster, the owner of the best bull calved since the 1st of January, 1842, and more than one year old, 20 sovs.

Mr. J. House, of Wareham, Dorset, the owner of the best pen of three breeding sow pigs of the same litter, above 4 and under 9 months old, 10 sovs.

The judges highly commend Mr. Hobbs's Essex boar and his Essex sows. They also commend class 2 generally.

In the short-wooled sheep, the judges commend Mr. John Pope's old Dorset horned rams, 31 months old each; also, Mr. James Rawlence's two rams, of 30 and 40 months old; and, Mr. Thomas Goodwin's and Mr. John Pope's Hampshire Down Ewes.

In the Extra Stock, the judges awarded £10 to Mr. Charles Large, for his 4 years old Oxfordshire ewe; £7 to Mr. M. Goodall, for his 5 year old cow of the India and French cross; £2 to Mr. George Drake and £1 to ditto; £4 to Mr. T. B. Northeast, for his South Down ram, and £2 to ditto, and £4 to Mr. W. Samsbury; and for pigs £2 to Mr. Hobbs, £2 to ditto, and £3 to ditto, and £1 to Mr. Calhoun.

The "pleasuring" may be said to have commenced on this day, by all those who were determined to make the whole affair "a sight;" upon which the Times has this very neat piece of home philosophy:—

> There are balls, and concerts, and public dinners, for the supporters of agriculture, and a theatre, and even Van Amburgh and his lions; and it is astonishing how interested people are to see, when collected together on an occasion of the sort, things which, taken singly, they would neglect and despise. A very small portion of this bustle is to be attributed to the direct, though all to the indirect, fascinations of the unconscious cattle. To see them, to meditate—deeply, steadfastly, with hands on hips—upon their several proportions, their oleaginous development, and their "breed," is of course the great attraction of the agriculturists. They come to see the fat bulls; the "company" come to see the agriculturists and the other "sights:" and thus out of so many elements not naturally associated—bulls, cows, farmers, lords, ladies, lion-tamers, lions, fiddlers, and showmen—is a very gay, giddy, excitable, motley multitude brought together, all agreeing in the one great object of killing time for a week, and affording each other amusement by seeing and being seen.

In the morning, the Duke of Cambridge arrived by a special train. His Royal Highness breakfasted with the Mayor, and then proceeded to inspect the Implement-yard, which the duke was permitted to enter, contrary to the society's strict rule.

THURSDAY.

This has indeed been a grand day for Southampton, and never before was the town and its suburbs so thronged. Not less than from 25,000 to 30,000 strangers must have arrived in the course of the day, in addition to the number of persons previously here. At a very early hour in the morning, steamers from the Isle of Wight, Dorsetshire, Portsmouth, the Channel Islands, and the whole western and southern coast, made their appearance in Southampton water, their decks and cabins laden with passengers. Coaches, carts, gigs, country waggons filled with farmers and their labourers, poured in, and literally blocked up the streets and roads. Indeed, the whole line of road from Southampton to the Show-yards at Portswood, nearly two miles in length, was a continuous stream of vehicles and pedestrians, as crowded as the Strand at noon, through which, as Dr. Johnson remarked, "the full tide of human existence pours its mighty volume." In addition to this, the railway trains were continually arriving, twelve extra having been put on. A considerable number of people assembled round the station to witness the anticipated arrival of Prince Albert and the Duke of Wellington, both of whom, it appears, the good folks here had made up their minds to see, though, under existing circumstances, there was but little probability that the Prince could leave Windsor or the Duke London.

The weather was favourable, and light fleecy clouds tempered the intense heat which has prevailed for the last two days.

Towards four o'clock, the leading agriculturists visited the Show-yard for the Pavilion-dinner, but the ground, in consequence of the price of admission being, according to custom, reduced in the afternoon, was still more thronged than in the morning. On the whole the exhibition was most satisfactory, and afforded the highest gratification to the numerous visitors.

We now come to a more detailed description of which formed the chief attraction in this day's proceedings. The Show-yard, for the exhibition of the cattle, as well as the Implement-yard, was thrown open to the public at an early hour this morning. The whole Show covers fifteen acres of ground, and is divided into three compartments. The first, appropriated for the stock, contained twenty sheds, each 252 yards long; some of the sheds were subdivided, to meet the various wants of the respective animals they were intended to receive. For instance, the sheds for the reception of brood mares were closely boarded and separated from the others; those for the stallions and bulls were of greater strength than the others. The boars were in pens of double iron hurdles.

The second compartment formed the Implement-yard, and contained nine sheds, each 252 yards in length. The third compartment, which was the smallest, was appropriated for the preliminary and private trials of the implements previously to their being sent to the other trial-grounds. It was here that the steam-engines were tried, and their utility tested in setting in motion the numerous agricultural implements—such as the thrashing, winnowing, chaff-cutting, and other machines. The Cattle-yard, which, previously to the judges' awards, had been kept strictly private, so much so, that Lord Spencer found it necessary to apologise last night at the Council-dinner, for breaking through the regulations by taking his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge to inspect it, was this day thrown open by completely removing the closely boarded barrier, nearly 600 feet in length, and thus forming the Cattle and Implement-yard into one. The coup d'œil upon entering was remarkably striking, and appeared to engage the attention of numerous thousands who visited the scene.

At the extreme end of the Implement-yard there was one of Manning's portable wooden cottages, which had a picturesque effect. It was placed there for the location of the workmen and foremen in charge of the yard. The arrangements were most complete, and carried out with great strictness. A door was specially appointed for the entrance of the members of the council and the exhibitors, so as not to interfere with the entrances appropriated to the public. So strictly was this entrance kept, that his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge was even detained some minutes before he was admitted, although he was attended by several members of the council. The plan of the show yards was arranged by Mr. B. Gibbs, and the sheds and other buildings were erected by Mr. Manning.

The stock exhibited this year was superior in several instances to that exhibited at most of the previous meetings. A new class was introduced here, to which prizes were awarded, of cattle of the Channel Island breed, among which were several very good specimens. The two years and four months old bull, belonging to Mr. W. J. Phillips, of Eling Vicarage, Southampton, which gained the first prize yesterday, was very much admired. The awards for the best horses, which were not read by Lord Spencer at the dinner yesterday, were as follows:—

FOR THE BEST STALLIONS FOR AGRICULTURAL PURPOSES.

First prize, £30, to Mr. Thomas Catlin, of Butley Woodbridge, Suffolk, for a cart stallion, four years old, bred by himself.

Second prize, £20, to the Earl St. Germains, for an aged cart stallion.

FOR TWO YEAR OLD CART STALLIONS.

A prize of £15 to Lord St. John, for a cart stallion two years and two weeks old.

FOR CART MARES AND FOALS.

First prize, £20, to Mr. W. Fowle, of Market Lavington, Devizes, Wilts, for a cart mare and foal; sire of foal belonged to Mr. Tugs, of Penzelwood, Hants.

Second prize, £10, to Mr. G. W. Roberts, of King's Walden, Hitchen, Herts, for a cart mare and foal; mare bred by himself; sire of foal belonged to Mr. Hayden, of Avington, Cambridge.

FOR TWO YEAR OLD FILLIES.

A prize of £10 to Mr. W. Fowle, of Market Lavington, for a two year old filly, bred by Mr. R. Daintree, of Hemmingford Abbotts, near St. Ives, Hants.

FOR THOROUGHBRED STALLIONS.

A prize of £30 to Mr. R. Curtis, of Basingstoke, for a thoroughbred stallion, five years old, by Langar, dam by Cervantes, out of Marnana, by Selim.

A black thoroughbred stallion, 4 years old, got by Sheet Anchor out of Valencia, belonging to the Duke of Richmond, and bred by Lord George Bentinck, attracted considerable attention from its symmetry and beauty.

Among the Short Horns a bull of 2 years and 10 months old, belonging to Mr. Hayter, M.P., and which gained a prize of 15 sovs., attracted considerable attention, as well as one the property of Mr. Maw, of Tetley, Lincolnshire. Mr. Maw's bull was perfectly white, A short-horned milch cow, belonging to Mr. John Booth of Killerby, Yorkshire, and several others in this class belonging to Messrs. Cator, Atkins, and the Duke of Buccleuch, were beautiful specimens of the class. Mr. Carpenter's, of Leominster, Hereford bull, which gained a prize of 20 sovs., was one of the finest specimens of the class. The bull belonging to Mr. Turner, which gained the first prize of 30 sovereigns yesterday, together with the bulls of the breed exhibited by Lord Portman, Mr. T. Harcomb, and Mr. Renolds, as also a milch cow and an in-calf heifer, both belonging to Mr. G. Turner, and which both gained prizes, were admirable specimens of the Devon breed. Some of them were most beautifully proportioned. One of the cows in milk, of this class, had a remarkably beautiful calf by her side. The sheep occupied nearly four sheds. Among the rams of the Leicester breed were several very fine ones, with great broad flat backs. Among the long wools there was a very fine new Oxfordshire ram, which obtained the first prize of £30, and which is estimated at the value of £200. The extra stock occupied 40 pens. The hogs occupied only one division, and were not very numerous; although there were many among them superior to any that have previously attended these shows. There were several very fine boars, both of the large and small breed, among which there was a white one, belonging to Mr. Goodlake, which weighed 16 score, and an improved Essex one, only sixteen months old, weighing nearly 25 score.

THE DINNER AT THE PAVILION.

At four o'clock a public dinner took place at the Pavilion, specially erected for the occasion, and which is placed in a very convenient part of the town, the Fairfield. The Pavilion is similarly constructed to those that have been erected at the former meetings, when held at Derby, Bristol, Cambridge, &c. It is, however, not so large this year, as it is built only to accommodate 1200 persons, whereas the previous ones were much larger, and capable of containing upwards of double that number. The ladies' gallery is constructed to contain 200. The high table at which the chairman, Lord Spencer, was placed, was capable of holding 36 persons, among whom were most of the nobility who attended the Council-dinner, with a few additions who only arrived in Southampton this morning. The vice-chair was taken by the Duke of Richmond. The table appropriated for the Vice-chairman and his supporters was also a raised one, all the others were on a level, whereas at previous meetings they were placed upon an inclined plane arising from a centre level area, and forming a perfect amphitheatre; we do not think the alteration this year an improvement. The whole of the arrangements of this dinner, as well of those of the Council-dinner, yesterday, which gave so much satisfaction, were under the arrangement of Colonel Challoner. About 1200 persons sat down to the dinner, that being the number of tickets issued, although the applications for them far exceeded that number. The dinner was a cold one, and was supplied by Mr. Fricker, of the Star Hotel, and like the one yesterday was well arranged.

MEETING FOR THE PURPOSE OF ESTABLISHING AN AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE.

A public meeting for the above purpose was held at the Freemasons' Hall, at two o'clock. The attendance was not very numerous, which, indeed, could not be expected, as most of the agricultural vicitors were engaged at the Implement-yard. What, however, the meeting lacked in point of numbers was made up by the great respectability of the parties present, among whom were the Duke of Richmond, Lord Ducie, Mr. Pusey, M.P., Mr. Escott, M.P. (Oxford), Professor Playfair, Mr. Goddard, Dr. Buckland, Dr. Daubeny, &c., &c.

The chair was taken by Mr. Pusey, who briefly stated the object of the meeting, and pointed out the advantage that would accrue to the agriculturists from the establishing such a college. The project had been taken up by many of the leading agriculturists not only in the immediate district in which it was intended to establish the college, but in other and distant counties. Lord Bathurst had, in addition to providing a suitable farm of 400 acres, on which the college and other buildings were to be erected, advanced two thousand pounds in furtherance of the object. (Cheers.)

The Duke of Richmond, in proposing the first resolution, said that he appeared before them, not as a member of the Royal Agricultural Association, for the rules of that society precluded the members from interfering in any thing but the immediate object for which they periodically met; but he stood before them as a country gentleman anxious to promote an object so laudable and so beneficial to the agriculturists of the kingdom. (Cheers.) They all must regret that their early education had not given them the advantage of the knowledge of chemistry as practically adapted to agricultural purposes. He had declined to take shares in that society upon the principle that every shareholder should have time to attend to the details of the society to which he put his name, so that by so doing he might not mislead others to add their names upon the faith of seeing his name, and thereby supposing he would attend to its practical operations. He would avoid that evil, as he was aware that his many other avocations would prevent him from giving sufficient attention to the details. He, however, so highly approved of the society, that although he could not become a subscriber, for the reason he had stated, yet he most gladly gave a donation to promote its establishment. (Hear, hear.) He would not have the committee be too sanguine of making any profit from the farm. He was a farmer himself, and he was aware that farming was not so prosperous as most other pursuits. He was of opinion that schools of agriculture were much wanted in the country; and he had great pleasure in proposing the first resolution, which was seconded by Dr. Playfair.

> That schools of agriculture are much wanted in this country, in which a knowledge of the sciences now admitted to be essential to the successful pursuit of agriculture, may be learned, in connexion with the practical working of a farm on the most approved principles.

Mr. Escott proposed the second resolution, and said that he gladly availed himself of joining a meeting that had so important an object in view. He, in common with many other persons, had long deplored the want of a proper establishment for the education of the agricultural population in pursuits adapted to their after life. A most important fact was developed and published by the agriculturists themselves, as the wish to establish a college originated from a farmers' club (cheers). The object of the meeting had his most cordial support. He moved the following resolution, which was seconded by Mr. Nelson Goddard:—

> That the plan for the establishment of an agricultural college, near Cirencester, explained by the deputies attending that meeting, is calculated to effect the desirable object.

The next resolution was to have been proposed by Lord Spencer, but the Duke of Richmond explained to the meeting that that nobleman was unavoidably absent, in consequence of being in attendance on his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, who was inspecting the show yard. In the absence of Lord Spencer, Dr. Buckland proposed, and Mr. Eyle seconded, the resolution:—

> That this meeting warmly recommends the agricultural community to give they every support and encouragement to the establishment of this college; which regard as the first step in the right direction for training up the rising generation of farmers upon a sound foundation; and they would especially urge on farmers generally, the importance of securing to their children, intended for the same occupation, the great advantages to be derived from the kind of education provided by such an institution.

The Duke of Richmond proposed, and Dr. Daubeny seconded, a vote of thanks to Mr. Pusey, for the service he had rendered to the agriculturists generally, and for his conduct in the chair.

Mr. Pusey briefly replied, and congratulated the meeting upon the object they had in contemplation being fully carried out, when they saw the noblemen present, and the member for the University of Oxford, as well as two of its distinguished professors, come forward to take them by the hand.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

On Thursday evening last Madlle. Fanny Elssler took her benefit at this house. The entertainments commenced with Rossini's chef d'œuvre "La Gazza Ladra," with as fine a cast as the composer himself could possibly wish for. Grisi was Ninetta; Mario, Gianetto; Fornasari, Fernando; Favanti, Pippo; and though last, not least, Lablache, as the Podesta. We have so often spoken of the beauties of this opera that it is needless to say more at present than that it never was more splendidly performed. The scene in which Ninetta mis-reads the letter to the old Podesta, was a complication of different interests. The fear of the father—the anxiety of the daughter,—and the magisterial authority of the Podesta, were most exquisitely pourtrayed. The trio or canona, "O Nume benefico" was deservedly encored, perhaps it was never before so beautifully executed. This was decidedly the gem of the opera, although every morceau was most exquisitely given.

In the ballet department the fair beneficiaire distinguished herself more than à l'ordinaire. It was quite delightful to witness (maugre the intense heat) the contrast between her and Cerito; or rather the union of two opposite kinds of grace. The house was crowded to excess by the first of nobility and fashion. We were delighted to hear from an authoritative habitué of the opera, that early next season we shall be treated with a new opera by the "Swan of Pesaro"—the great Rossini!

NATIONAL SPORTS.

To those who have little else to make their hearts glad—God help them!—save summer and fair weather, July has set in one complete and joyous holiday. A gorgeous month it has been thus far; and it must be said goodly and grateful use has been made of it by those who most need rest for head and hand. A right pleasant sight is it to see the tens of thousands that daily go forth rejoicing on the bright, broad river—than which a prouder or a fairer never bore golden galley or silken streamer. And beneath oak, and plane, and sycamore—supine in the cool shade, or scattered over the emerald turf of courtly Hampton or Richmond, "the sheen" who may look upon the groups of trim adults, and jaunty youths, and maidens who thus make labour light and toil graceful, without feeling all the patriot in his soul, and his spirit rejoicing that he too is an Englishman! These are national sports, albeit of a class apart from woodcraft or exercises of skill or agility: these are the sports which have made comfort a word peculiar to our language, and home an instinct of our idiosyncracy.

In the stirring business of the Course the week has been a blank; a pause being necessary to give effect—in every sense of the word—to Goodwood after the three glorious days at Liverpool. But the interest of the racing world has not been permitted to flag. The rumour of foul play on the late Derby has assumed a palpable form, and there is little doubt but that Ratan was made safe, or "served," as his late owner professionally expressed it in some of his last words. The deed of darkness is attributed to one of those gentlemen who make betting a pursuit. These are the agents without which, we are told, the turf could not exist! They might as well insist, that, unless there were sharks in the sea, there would be no white bait at Greenwich or Blackwall. What will become of the gentleman should the swindling be brought home to him it is hard to say. Giving beans to a racer is not probably a misdemeanour according to the statute—at all events the Thames is not so far from the subscription-room—not above a shilling cab-fare; and what good a little bathing would do him this warm weather after his warm work! One cannot but see the principle of compensation in the racing robberies, that are now becoming identified with the news of the day, like the ordinary police reports, as commentaries on the evidence offered to Parliament of the immaculate character of the turf and its professors.

The amatuers of "river sports" as the amphibious regattas carried on between Wapping and Battersea are called, have been up and at it for these last four or five days. At Bankside there was some good rowing on Monday—accompanied, however, by one of the most melancholy catastrophes of the season, caused by the breaking down of a rotten steamboat pier, at Blackfriars-bridge. By this accident several persons were drowned, whose bodies have been recovered, and it is feared many others. But unless some precautions of another nature are taken, worse remains behind. Holding races with skiffs in the pool, through which countless steamers are at the same time darting like chosen instruments of destruction is a sheer temptation of fate. Some of these days we shall read of a whole regatta being chopp'd into mince meat; of a crew losing their heads as well as their "sculls;" of an excursion begun in a "funny" terminating very differently. There was also a regatta at St. John's, Westminster, and a prime oars wager match by the Royal Academy Club—won gallantly by Messrs. Atkinson and Robins—as also rowing at Poplar, Blackwall, and other head quarters of river water craft. The day before yesterday, also, the Royal Thames Yacht Club sailed their last match of the season, which we shall hereafter allude to—reverting for the present to its preceding match, which came off a fortnight ago. This was for a cup given by Captain Cocksedge. It was Tom Sheridan (or somebody else) who said a concert would be a capital thing only for the music: as symphonies to orchestras are regattas to yacht clubs. The Royal Squadron owes all its discords to its races; the R. T. Y. C. is fast going to category. As a meeting of the latter society is called for Monday next, especially to consider the matter of the Cocksedge dispute, we will not enter upon the merits or demerits of it, save to show the spirit of this case of loggerheads. A member writes to a sporting paper on the matter, and thus concludes his letter:—"If an investigation be not entered upon without delay, I, for one, shall take my name from the club, an example, I hear from others, that will be followed by names of greater weight."

Now, if the member, by the rules of the club, to which he subscribes on entering the society, was entitled to call for an investigation, he could do so of his right; and the threat of "taking his name from the club" was unnecessary. If he was not so entitled, and held it out as a menace, he has given as grave cause of offence as could be offered to a company of gentlemen. We look with interest to the result as deeply concerning the position and character of the Metropolitan Yacht Club.

TATTERSALL'S.

Monday.—The large amount of the deficiencies on the Derby, and the slight prospect held out of even a partial settlement of them, continues to operate as a preventive to "excessive gaming" in the shape of betting, and will inevitably have a permanently serious influence on book-making as a system—that it will stop it altogether, notwithstanding all that has been, or may be said and written against it, no one believes for a moment—there always will be backers of public horses, and always plenty to lay against them. Of the business transacted this afternoon little need be said; it was confined to some tolerably heavy investments on Franchise, Croton Oil, The Era, and Pride of Kildare, for the Goodwood Stakes, and on Ithuriel and The Curé for the St. Leger. For the latter race the Ugly Buck, who does not run at Goodwood, and The Princess, said to be in foal, are on the decline.

AQUATICS.

Bankside Regatta.—The twenty-sixth annual regatta for a new boat, and some excellent minor prizes liberally subscribed by the residents of the Clink Liberty, Southwark, to the watermen who had never before won a boat at Bankside, came off on Monday, and was well contested. The two first men of each of the two preceding heats rowed in the last. Bush after a dozen strokes took the lead, closely followed by Kelby, when on rounding the flag-boat, Kelby took the first place, and maintained it throughout, Bush pressing him very closely, and making a capital race. Knight was third, eight lengths astern of the second man.

St. John's, Westminster, Regatta.—The race was in three heats, with sixteen free watermen, comprising those who ply at the Horseferry and at the Middlesex side of Vauxhall-bridge; the distance contested in each heat being from buoys off the Horseferry, up round a boat off Mills's, Thames-bank, down round a boat off the new Houses of Parliament, and back to the Horseferry. The winner took the lead, and kept it decidedly after the first start, coming in first by some lengths. The race was respectably conducted throughout, and was won by Royal and Gardner after a well contested struggle.

Cricket.—Marylebone Club and Ground with Wenman v. Sussex.—This match was commenced at Lord's on Monday, and brought to a conclusion on Wednesday afternoon, in the presence of a highly fashionable and numerous assemblage. The score of the match was thus:—Sussex, 154; Marylebone, 92.

At the annual meeting of the Jockey Club, notice was given that at the next meeting of the Jockey Club, a resolution would be made to the effect that no person who is a defaulter for bets shall be allowed to run a horse at Newmarket, either in his own name or in the name of any other person.

The Bentinck Testimonial.—The subscriptions amount to nearly £1500.

Grand National Archery Fete.—Complete arrangements have been made for the grand national archery fête, which is to come off at Knavesmire, near the city of York, on Thursday, August 1. £125 will be laid out in prizes. No competitor will be allowed to take more than one prize. A grand stand will be erected on the ground, and every facility will be afforded to visiters to witness the sports of the day. A most interesting match may be anticipated.

COUNTRY NEWS.

We regret to learn, that on Monday Stannington church was struck by lightning and seriously damaged.—Sheffield Independent.

Balloon Ascent.—On Monday, Mr. Hampton ascended in a new and splendid balloon from Vauxhall gardens, Birmingham. A finer ascent was never witnessed: the weather was calm, and the evening truly delightful. The balloon having attained an altitude of more than two miles, Mr. Hampton descended at Sharechill near Wolverhampton. As it involves several novel points of construction, we shall engrave the new machine in our next paper.

On Wednesday morning an incendiary fire took place at the extensive homestead of Mr. W. D. Green, of Greenstead-hall, Colchester. The fire originated with a large stack of old hay, and the flames soon communicated with two other hay-stacks (altogether containing between 80 and 90 tons), to a large bean stack, the produce of 20 acres, and a straw stack of about 140 tons. From them the flames spread with the greatest rapidity to a very large barn and stables, which were destroyed. The damage is estimated at £2000. A mob collected, some of whom smashed the windows and plundered the dwelling-house; they also broke open the closets, from which they extracted Mr. Green's watch, and a portion of his plate, and other articles, and from the wine-cellars they took a quantity of wine, from the effects of which a number of them were seen rolling about the premises in a state of intoxication.

Incendiary Fire.—Thursday evening week, a fire broke out in a stable upon New Hall Farm, Mundon, in the occupation of Mr. Francis Blakeley, but timely assistance being rendered, very little damage fortunately was sustained. From the prevaricating manner of the servant girl, Mary Ann Pitman, she was taken into custody, and has since confessed she is the guilty party, having, with a lighted paper from the kitchen, set fire to some hay which was in the rack in the stable.—Essex Standard.

Murder near Stratford-upon-Avon.—Great excitement has been caused in Stratford-upon-Avon by a report of the discovery of a murder committed more than eighteen months ago, at Binton-bridge, near Stratford. Thomas Knight, one of the parties concerned, has made a voluntary confession; from which it appears, that three men, named Thomas Careless, Badenham, and "Sam," had been drinking at a public-house, when a Jew pedlar was present. On the Jew leaving the house they followed him to the bridge, knocked him down, and took away his box. He cried out, and offered them £5 to spare his life, but they beat him until he was insensible; and then, having torn away a large stone from the bridge, they tied it with a pitch rope round his body, and threw him into the deep water.

Extraordinary and Shocking Accident.—On Wednesday morning a fine bull, the property of Mr. Houghton, of Upton, near Aylesbury, was proceeding by the first train which leaves that town at seven o'clock, when about two miles from Tring, a spark flew from the engine and fell into the truck in which the bull was; the straw immediately ignited, and completely burnt the interior of the carriage to charcoal, singeing the poor animal exactly as you would a bacon hog, large pieces of his flesh were burned off, and one of his eyes completely destroyed. The poor creature was brought back to Aylesbury by the ten o'clock train, and was taken to a veterinary surgeon, where he remains without any chance of his recovery. He was a noble animal proceeding to the Royal Agricultural Society's show at Southampton, and was the only specimen sent from the Vale of Aylesbury.

Spread of Incendiarism.—The Suffolk correspondent of the Morning Chronicle states that there have been no less than ten incendiary fires in that county within eight days, dating from Sunday at midnight of the 14th of July, to Monday, the 22nd of July. A man named Clowe has been committed on the charge of being concerned in one of them. The Bishop of Ely has addressed a circular letter to the clergy of the Archdeaconry of Sudbury, in which he states that the amounts of these fires in Suffolk are so alarming, that he feels it to be his duty to call the attention of the clergy of his diocese in that county to this distressing state of things, and to advise them to take such steps in their respective parishes as they shall deem necessary for explaining to their flocks the great wickedness of those who are either directly or indirectly concerned in such unlawful proceedings.

A GAME OF CHESS.

A friendly chess party, the result of a challenge in the Illustrated London News, played between Mr. G. O. O——, Liverpool, and Mr. J. W. P——, a member of the Pottery Chess Club; commenced January 16, 1844, and concluded July 18, 1844.

and White surrendered (12)

(1) A novel, but injudicious mode of opening the game, as it prevents the K Kt from being moved to K B 3rd, which is generally the strongest position for it in the opening.

(2) A weak move: setting up a premature attack, and giving White an opportunity of weakening his centre.

(3) Better cover with Q B.

(4) White's second and third moves give Black this opportunity of breaking up the position of these pawns, which should have presented a shelter for the K on his castling.

(5) This appears to have been moved to prevent White from pinning Kt with Q B, and then advancing K P on it; but would not the sacrifice of his Kt for K P, followed by checking with Q at K R 5th, have opened up a good attack for Black?

(6) Q Kt to B 3rd would, perhaps, have been stronger.

(7) White here abandons a position which might have enabled him to set up a strong attack. By doubling his rooks on the Q Kt's file, in support of Q, and pushing on Q R P, instead of thus retreating, he must have gained an advantage.

(8) Wins a pawn, and plants his Kt in what will be found to be a strong position.

(9) By refusing the offered exchange, and pushing Q into a corner, from whence she has no retreat, White allows his opponent to wrest from him another pawn.

(10) Instead of this comparatively weak move, Black should now have adopted the move which his opponent allows him another opportunity for, and by which he wins the Bishop.

(11) If White now play, Rook takes R; Black checks with Q R, and then takes Q R, coming off with Bishop clear.

(12) It would have been folly to have held out longer with his straggling forces against Black's superiority, both in number and position.

The Burns Festival.—Great preparations are making in Scotland to give all possible effect to the great celebration in honour of Scotia's bard, on the 6th August. There is to be a procession of trades, and of parties in Celtic and fancy dresses, passing towards Alloway Kirk, over the new bridge of Doon, and back by the "Auld Brig," to the monument, where the sons, sisters, and nieces of the bard will receive the greetings of the throng. A concert will be given in the open air, Wilson and Templeton being engaged for the occasion. A collation will be partaken of in a pavilion erected for the purpose, and which is calculated for 2000 persons, where all manner of rational festivity will be enjoyed. The Earl of Eglintoun, Professor Wilson, and many other distinguished individuals will honour the celebration with their presence. The invitation to the Ayr Town Council to join the procession, was, at their meeting on Wednesday, enthusiastically responded to; and what with magistrates of towns, public bodies, Archers' Societies, Freemasons, Odd Fellows, Scottish peasantry, &c., with bands of music, and the town, neighbourhood, and line of walk decorated with the choicest offerings of the forest and flower-garden, the demonstration out of doors at the meeting with the Sons of Burns in the cradle-land of the poet, will be a spectacle of the most gratifying and ennobling description. In the interior of the pavilion, however, the effects will be greatly heightened by the glowing orations which those master-minds who have signified their intention of being present, may be expected to deliver on a theme on which their kindred genius renders it a labour of love to expatiate. It is our intention to present our readers with a copious and interesting account of this national festival, with beautiful illustrations, and we beg to refer them to an announcement on the subject, given elsewhere.

The Weather and the Crops.—The beautiful weather of the last few days has had a wonderful effect on the crops. The harvest in the county of Essex has already commenced, and in the neighbourhood of Romford has become very general. Several fields of wheat, barley, and oats have been cut, and throughout the counties of Kent, Sussex, Essex, and Surrey, grain of every decription presents a most luxuriant appearance. Notwithstanding the drought which has prevailed for such a lengthened period throughout the whole of the agricultural districts, which had a serious effect on the early crops of grass, and which it was calculated would have caused hay to be exceedingly dear, the late refreshing showers have caused the crop of aftergrass to be most abundant, and the mowers are now every where engaged in cutting the second hay harvest. Some wheat and oats have already been housed in the most excellent condition. Some samples of fine new wheat were exhibited at Mark-lane on Monday last, the produce of an extensive farm in Essex. The hop grounds of the county of Kent are looking extremely beautiful. Should the present fine weather continue, the harvest will become general throughout the country in the course of a week or ten days.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

Among the recent wonders connected with travelling, may be mentioned a recent experimental trip to Ostend. The directors of the Dover railway, M. Barcel, Chief of the Public Works, and M. Drouet, Secretary of the Belgian Legation in England, left London by the Dover railway at twenty minutes past six o'clock in the morning. The train arrived at Dover at fifty minutes past eight o'clock, after stopping at Folkestone twelve minutes; the steamer was in readiness, and left Dover at twenty minutes past nine o'clock, and arrived at Ostend at fifty minutes past one o'clock. The passage from London to Ostend was thus completed in seven hours and a half, including the embarkation and all stoppages, which at least occupied forty minutes.

The great federal shooting meeting at Basle is concluded. It is calculated that the number of carabine-shots fired was at the least 250,000; and, it is said, on the Sunday, no fewer than 21,000 bottles of wine were drunk in a few hours. There were three grand prizes of the respective values of 3,780f., 2,400f., and 2,100f.—the first being won by Col. Hunerwald, of Lemburg, in Argau; the second by M. Benzinger, of Appenzel, and the third by the English nobleman, Lord Vernon, who obtained his naturalisation in Switzerland in order to have the right of competing. He is said to have made a vow that he will not leave Switzerland until he has won the first prize. His skill has excited so much jealousy in the country, that a citizen of Appenzel, named Kohler, one of the most renowned marksmen in Switzerland, had recourse to a most unworthy trick to gain the superiority over Lord Vernon. By giving a heavy bribe, he seduced a marker to put down to him more hits than he actually made. The fraud, however, was discovered, and M. Kohler was obliged to leave Basle immediately.

The ship Crusader, bound from Halifax to London, was cast away about the 12th of December, on the island of Cape Wapitougure, and all the crew and officers perished. Three dead bodies were found washed up on the beach of the island, near the spot where the wreck was lying. A boat, with five persons in it, was observed by the natives a few hours after she struck, but it was impossible to render them any assistance, on account of the dreadful state of the weather, otherwise they would have been saved, the natives being very friendly.

The late Earl of Lonsdale left by his will to his cousin, Mary Frances Thompson, £10,000, but by his codicil he revokes this legacy, and gives her an annuity of £1000 per annum instead. To his friend the Hon. G. O'Callaghan, £2000. By the codicil, to his son Cecil and family (in addition to the benefit they receive by the will), £30,000. The personal property is sworn under the large sum of £100,000.

A letter from Constantinople dated the 3d July, gives an account of a beautiful atmospheric phenomenon which was seen on the previous Sunday. The atmosphere was hazy, but without a cloud. Thermometer about 90 degrees. An immense meteor, like a gigantic Congreve rocket, darted with a rushing noise from east to west. Its lightning course was marked by a streak of fire, and, after a passage of some 40 or 50 degrees, it burst like a bombshell, without detonation, lighting up the hemisphere with the brilliancy of the noonday sun. On its disappearance a white vapour remained in its track, and was visible for nearly half an hour. Many of the vulgar look upon it as a very bad omen, whilst others attribute it to the warm weather which continues.

A Frankfort journal publishes an account of the population of Prussia, from which it appears that, in Prussia Proper, and all the States under the Prussian Crown, the number of the inhabitants was, in 1840, 14,934,340. This number, however, must have increased considerably since 1840, for after England and Ireland, Prussia is, we believe, the State of Europe in which the population increases most rapidly.

The Marquis of Londonderry has left town for the north, with a view to arrange, if possible, the unhappy differences now existing among the colliery population in that district.

The wounded men from the army of Gwalior disembarked from the ship Windsor, on the morning of the 22nd inst., and proceeded forthwith to Chatham, in medical charge of Surgeon Wood, 9th Royal Lancers, and Assistant Surgeon Mapleton, her Majesty's 40th Foot, who were selected at Gwalior for this arduous duty. It would appear that the result has been most satisfactory, only one casualty having occurred amongst those brave fellows on the voyage. It is gratifying to learn, too, the very great kindness and attention that were evinced towards the wounded by the authorities in India.

The first railway ever formed in the British colonies is about to be constructed in the island of Jamaica, between Kingston and Spanish Town. The length is twelve miles, though powers have been obtained from the House of Assembly to carry the line some miles further if the projectors should think it desirable. Although the engineer and superintendants of the works have not yet left England, yet it is expected, from the easy gradients on the line, the abundant offers of labour already received, and the forward state of the iron work which is in course of preparation in this country, that the line will be open in October twelve months. This will be the first line of railway ever constructed by the labour of free negroes.

Private letters from Kissengen, announce the proximate arrival in this country of that celebrated statesman and diplomatist, Count de Nesselrode.

According to accounts received at the Jerusalem Coffee-house, there was a great scarcity of water at the island of Ascension and every one had been on allowance for three months. Vessels wanting water were obliged to go for a supply to Rio de Janeiro, and the cattle, sheep, and goats, were dying for want.

It is stated that a considerable reduction of the fares between Liverpool and London is about to be made almost immediately, the directors of the Grand Junction and the London and Birmingham Railway Companies having both decided in favour of such a step. This is one of the first results of the cordial understanding which now exists between the two companies.

During a storm of thunder and lightning which passed over the neighbourhood of Gloucester on Thursday afternoon, an old labouring man, named John Lane, seventy-one years of age, who was working in a potatoe field near Churchdown, between Gloucester and Cheltenham, was struck by the lightning and killed instantly.

The Lords of the Treasury have agreed to propose a grant for the completion of Nelson's Monument. The total sum required for the completion of the work is £12,095, namely, for granite steps £3095, four commemorative subjects in bronze £4000, four lions £3000, and architect's commission £2000. The Lords of the Treasury recommend a vote of £8000, which, with subscriptions in hand, will be sufficient for the purpose. A well known artist, Mr. R. Park, the sculptor, offered to the Government to complete the monument for £5000, which was rejected. However, he has since undertaken to complete the monument on his own responsibility, and at his own cost, rather than that any further difficulty should occur in the matter.

Major General Sir Robert Sale, his heroic lady and their widowed daughter, Mrs. Sturt and child, arrived at Lyme Regis on Tuesday, and subsequently left for London.

The Russian frigate Aurora has arrived with a quantity of gold, and it is said with some valuable presents for her Majesty also. The property contained in wooden boxes weighed just six tons, and has been safely deposited in the vaults of the Bank of England. It was rumoured at Gravesend that the gold was sent to this country for the purpose of being refined, and that the frigate would remain three weeks in the river, for the purpose of taking it away when so prepared.

A dreadful fire took place on the 1st inst. at Drontheim, in Norway. Several streets and 12 public edifices are stated to have been burnt to the ground. A similar disaster occurred at Cronstadt, in Transylvania, on the night of the 30th ult.; more than 90 buildings were destroyed. It is stated also, in a German paper, that the fine market-place of Marienburg has been burnt down.

An explosion of gas, the consequences of which were frightful, took place on Monday evening, at the Porter's lodge of No. 25, Rue Neuve St. Jean, Faubourg St. Denis, Paris. A vent having opened in the pipe supplying the wine-shop in the same house, the porter, whose lodge is very dark, took a lighted candle too near to it, and the gas caught fire. Two children of the unfortunate man were killed, and his wife so severely wounded in the leg that she was necessarily carried to the hospital.

THE LATE MR. THOMAS HUDSON.

This celebrated song-writer, who, by his comic effusions, was "wont to set the table in a roar," was born in April, 1791, in Mount-street, Lambeth; and was, consequently, at his decease a few weeks since, in his fifty-fourth year. He was the son of Mr. John Hudson, of the Stamp-Office, Somerset House. He was, at the usual age, apprenticed to a grocer, and subsequently commenced business in the metropolis. But, "Tom Hudson" (as he was termed in convivial circles) preferred the deliciæ musarum to the sweets of his own trade. In the year 1820, he commenced singing his own songs in private parties; soon after which he wrote lyrics for the proprietors of Vauxhall Gardens. About this time he commenced publishing his songs periodically; and we believe some fourteen or fifteen parts to have been issued, with ultimate advantage to the author, if not with direct profit. They abound, as the reader may be aware, with vis comica, and are recommended by their fun, "with indelicacy suppressed."

Though well known in the convivial circles of the metropolis, Hudson was not a dissipated man, for his habits were the reverse of intemperance: his talents at impromptu were very great; he has often caught up some incident which occurred at the table, or availed himself of the unexpected appearance of some public character, to produce an appropriate joke or compliment, which never failed to tell upon the company. Tom, however, was by no means an Apollo in voice; but, "the new song, composed by the singer," excused his defects of vocal execution. His more studied efforts were characterised by great humor and knowledge of life, and an abundant stock of those grotesque images which give the finish to a comic picture. With the middle and lower phases of London life, and the ridicule which has been attached to citizens and Cockneys, he possessed an extensive acquaintance: indeed, his perception of the ridiculous was altogether extremely nice. He was modest and retiring in his manners; and few men ever filled a "throne of human felicity" (as Dr. Johnson calls a tavern chair), with so humble a consciousness of his own merits. His features were rather of the sedate cast, and rarely partook of the hilarious glow, with which he was wont to light up the faces of others. He made many friends by his genius, as well as by the genuine worth and kindness of his nature: the majority of his earlier effusions, we have been told, received a few finishing touches from the hands of young men of classical attainments, who likewise furnished the mottoes for the songs, mostly selected from the poets and satirists of antiquity.

Notwithstanding his careful habits, and his many points of excellence as a husband, father, and friend, Hudson died in straitened circumstances; and now that "Poor Tom's acold," his widow and children are left in distress. A number of his warm-hearted admirers have therefore announced a Vocal and Instrumental Performance for the benefit of Mrs. Hudson and her family, at the Concert-room of the Princess' Theatre, on Wednesday evening next. All the artistes for the occasion have kindly given their services; and the affiche enumerates among the vocalists, the Misses Dolby, Lucombe, Lanza, and Williams; Mrs. W. H. Seguin, and Mrs. C. E. Horn; Messrs. Manvers, Sporle, Seguin, Horncastle, Robinson, Fitzwilliam, Ransford, Edney, and John Parry. Among the instrumental performers are MM. de Mayer, Moscheles, W. H. Holmes, Regondi, Sedgewick, Blagrove, Richardson, and Balsir Chatterton. The concert will be under the distinguished patronage of the Duke of Cambridge, the Lord Mayor, the Sheriffs, Court of Aldermen, and Mr. T. Duncombe, M.P.; and we trust that respect for the amiable character of the deceased, as well as sympathy for the condition of the survivors, will insure a successful pecuniary issue to the performance. With the view of directing the attention of our readers to this occasion of "all mankind's concern—charity," as well as with the object of commemorating a man of genius (in an eccentric line, it is true, but not without its sweet uses), we have prefixed the head and front of the meritorious song-writer to this slight sketch of his career. It is a rare thing to find men who provide for the amusement of others so free from the world's vices as was poor Tom Hudson; and such worth should be promulgated in proportion to its rarity. A kindred spirit has penned the following

LINES TO HIS MEMORY, BY AN OLD FRIEND.

Of manners meek, with wit and humour-store
As rich as ever made "the table roar;"
His shafts, tho' bright, ne'er hurt the gentlest heart,
For ev'ry one was an unvenom'd dart—
Wit forg'd it, Humour temper'd it, and then
'Twas shot at random by the best of men;
For well he knew where'er it chanc'd to fall,
No festering would follow—'twas not gall
He dipp'd the arrows of his genius in—
To wound another's feelings he held sin;
And by his own example fairly prov'd
That satire, not all caustic, may be lov'd!
He was a minstrel of eccentric vein—
To hear him once you'd hear him o'er again
A hundred times, and when those times were past,
Just pleas'd, as first you were, you'd be at last!

LORD HEYTESBURY.

Lord Heytesbury, the subject of our present sketch, is the successor of Earl De Grey in the Lord-Lieutenantship of Ireland. The name of his lordship is not so well known as those of most of his compeers, from among whom it might have been expected that the successor to this office would have been appointed. The title is not an old one, nor has the present possessor of it taken that part in the warfare of politics that ensures a nightly niche in the heavy columns of the debates, and a daily notoriety from the superlative praise or the superlative abuse of the "Leaders" of the organs of the respective parties. He is a moderate, sensible, and temperate man, with resolution enough to resist, and perception enough to concede, where he finds either to be necessary; in short, his opinions hit that middle point between extreme opinions, which it appears to be the object of Sir R. Peel to adhere to in his Irish appointments, and of which the character and disposition of Lord Eliot, the Secretary for Ireland, is an example.

William A'Court, Baron Heytesbury, is of a Wiltshire family, of which the seat is Heytesbury House, in that county. The title is a creation of 1828, the patent being dated in January of that year. The family is an old one, and has given several representatives to the borough of Heytesbury, almost continuously, from the year 1722 down to the creation of the title.

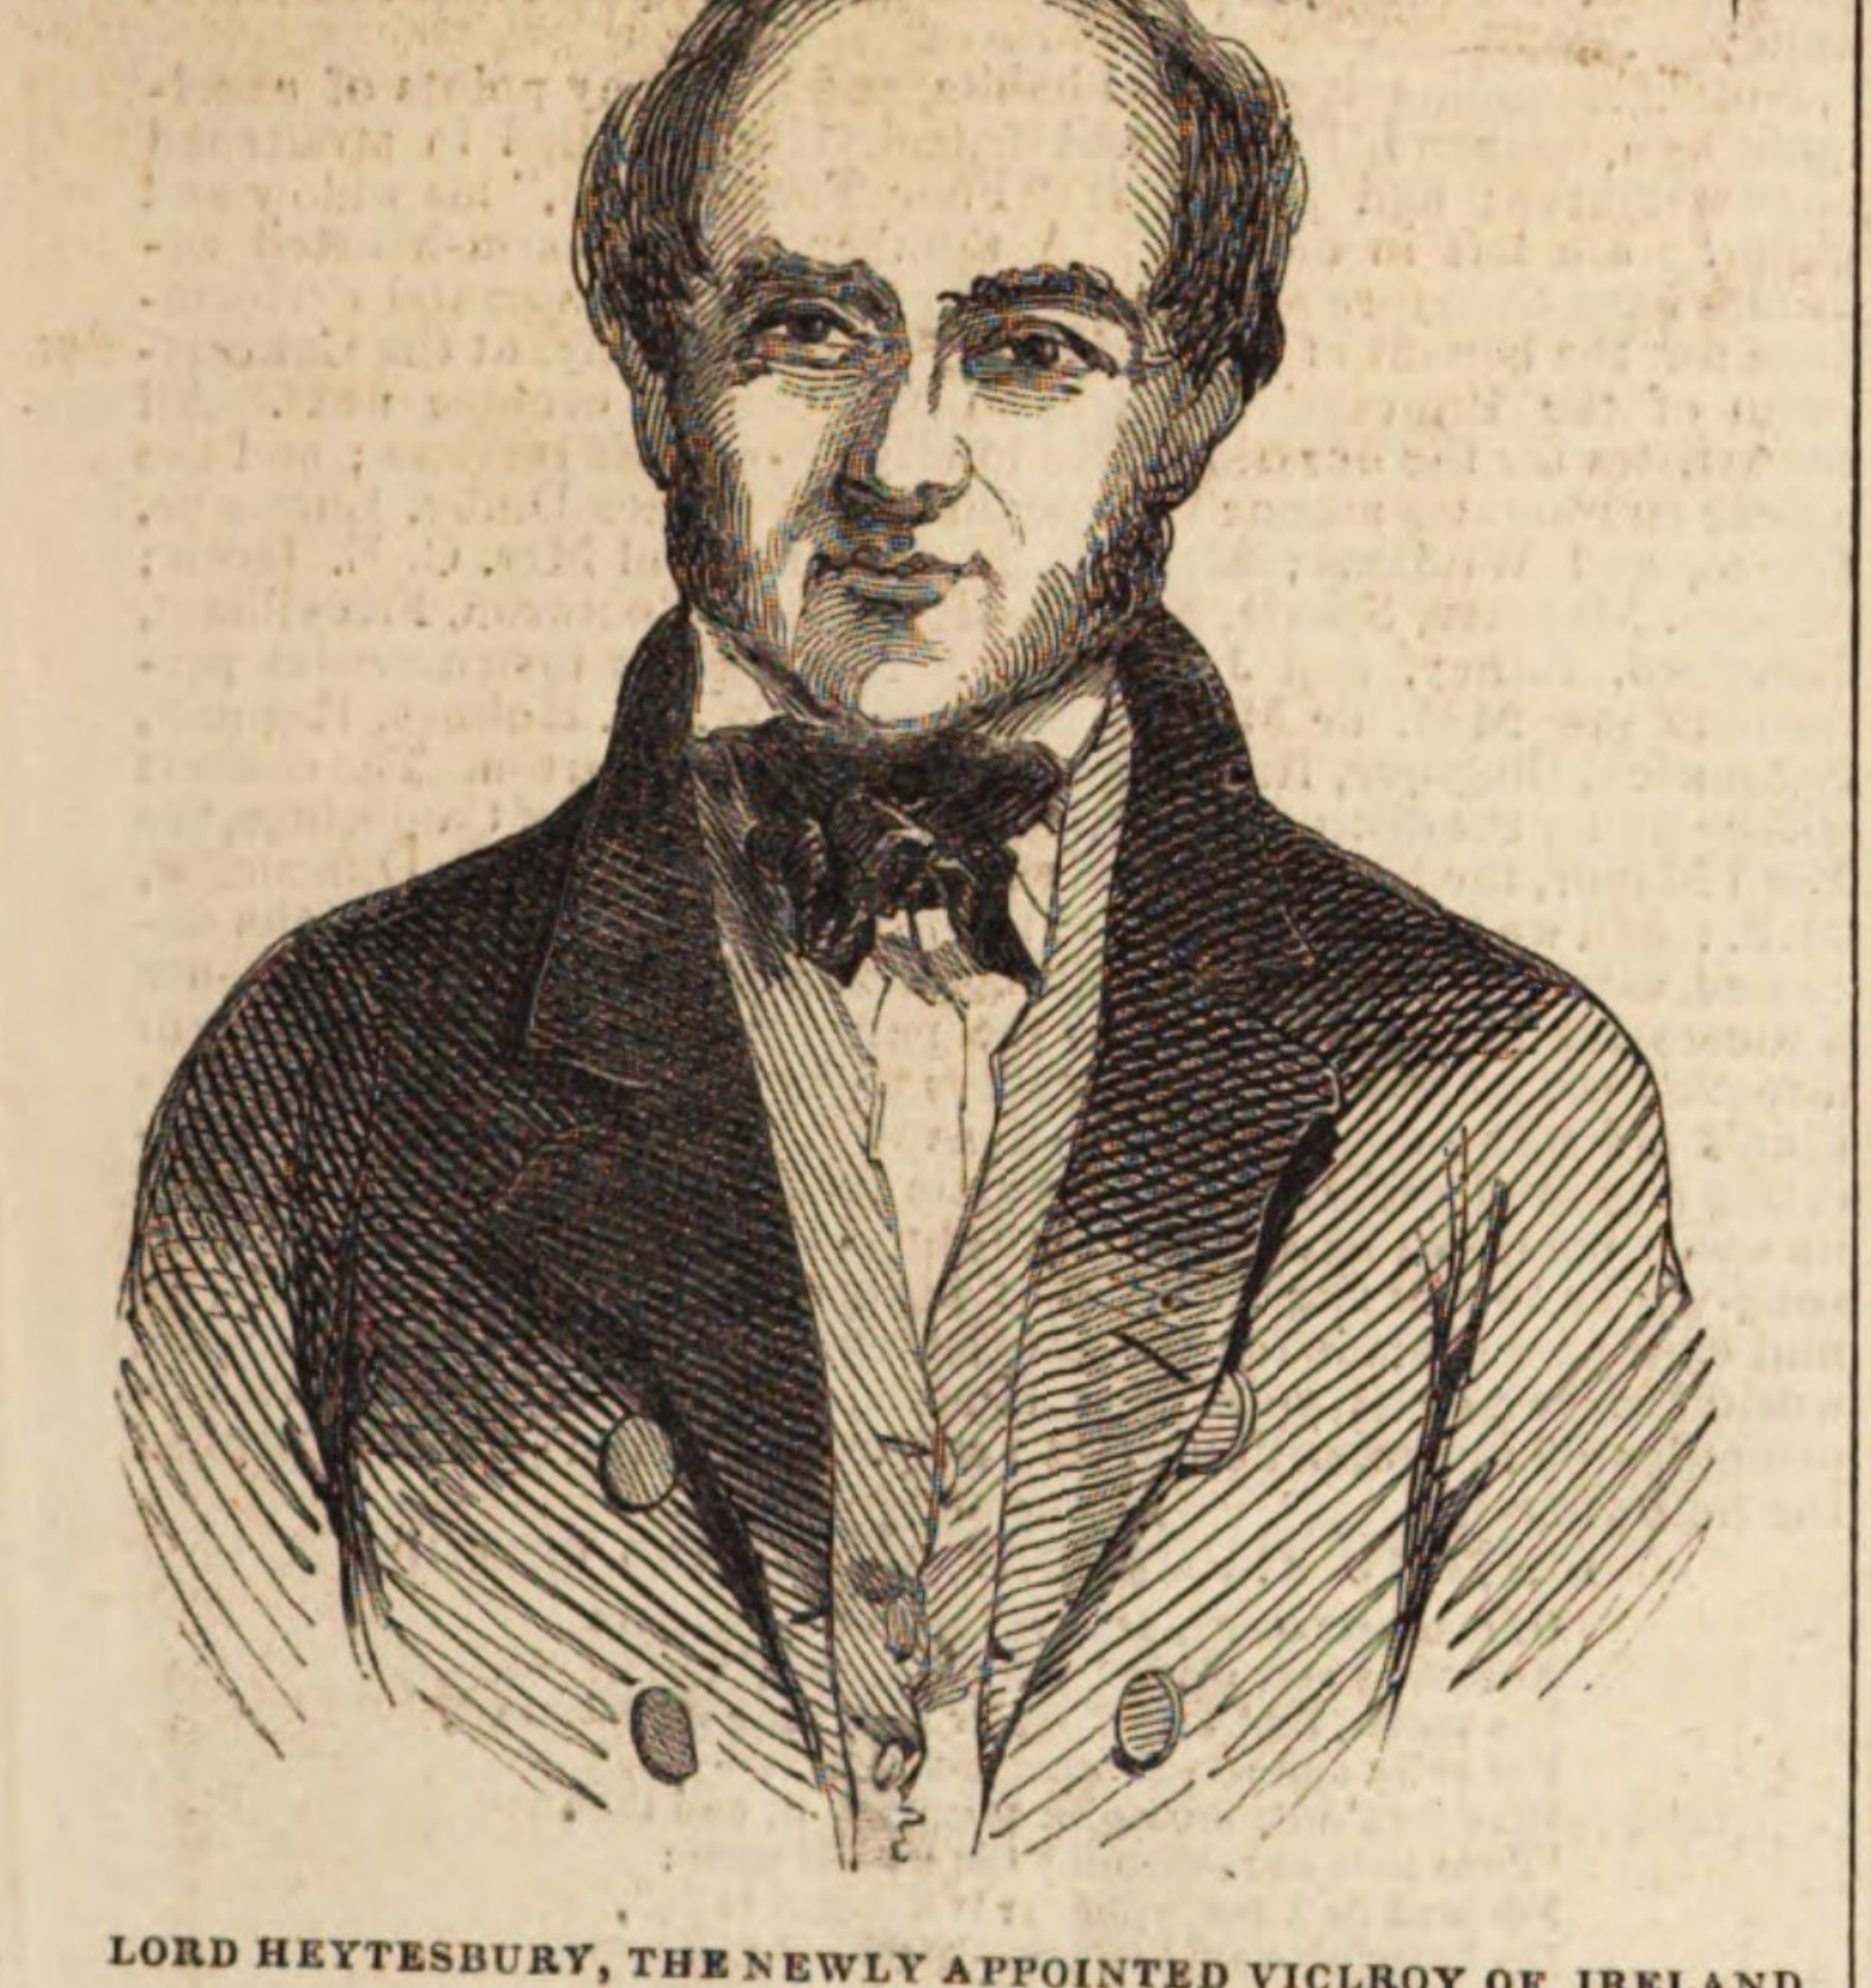
The present Lord Heytesbury is the son of William Pierce Ashe A'Court, a colonel in the army, and a lieutenant-colonel of the 2nd Wiltshire Militia, who was created a baronet in July, 1795. He was born in 1779, and is, consequently, in the sixty-fifth year of his age. He married the grand-daughter of the first Earl of Radnor. By the marriage of his sister to the present Earl of St. Germains, he is related to Lord Eliot, the present Secretary for Ireland, so that there is greater probability, from the connection both of relationship and office, they will act together with more cordiality than has sometimes been known to exist between the Viceroys of Ireland and their Secretaries.

Though comparatively unknown to the world of politics, Lord Heytesbury has very creditably filled a rather difficult post in the diplomatic service of the country, having for some years been Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the Court of St. Petersburgh. He was, we believe, acting in this capacity at the time of the revolution of Poland, and it redounds to his credit that he opposed as much as possible the violation of those articles of different treaties under which the independence of Poland was guaranteed; it is to be lamented that his efforts were fruitless and that the absolute power of the Russian Autocrat broke through all stipulations, causing himself the revolt which he afterwards so severely punished. It is by no means impossible that the conduct of Lord Heytesbury on that occasion may have recommended him to his present station. He has also supported his reputation as resident at other European Courts. His Lordship's son, the Hon. W. H. A. A'Court, is member for the Isle of Wight.

Lord Heytesbury was sworn in as Viceroy of Ireland at a Privy Council held at Buckingham Palace, on Wednesday se'nnight. It is stated that his Lordship has consented to retain in their offices the great majority of the gentlemen forming the household of his predecessor. Colonel Bowles, who, it was thought, was to be Private Secretary, is to be first Aide-de-Camp, and Controller. Mr. A'Court, who is at present Secretary to Lord Eliot, is to be Private Secretary to Lord Heytesbury. The following Aides-de-Camp, Captains Lyndsay, Cole, and Meade, and Lieutenant Sir William Don, Bart., it is understood, go out.



LORD HEYTESBURY, THE NEWLY APPOINTED VICLROY OF IRELAND.

NEW EXETER 'CHANGE.

Among the metropolitan improvements in course of completion, we are glad to notice a little Arcade, between Wellington-street, North, and Catherine-street, Strand, and forming an elegant and convenient communication between these thoroughfares. The Arcade itself, as our engraving shows, contains ten neat shops, with dwellings above: it has a well proportioned cove, and is lit from above by a metal-framed skylight, of corresponding design. The design is neat, though it could be wished that the architect, Mr. Sydney Smirke, had aimed at higher embellishment. The roof of the Lowther Arcade, in the Strand, is a very tasteful illustration of our meaning; with its series of elegant arches and pendentive domes, each of which terminates in an eye or circular skylight. Mr. Smirke's light, on the contrary, is a very common-place conservatory roof. The cove, fascia, piers, &c., of the Arcade have arabesque decorations, designed and executed by Mr. L. W. Collmann, of Mount-street; and now that the colours are fresh, these ornaments have a very sparkling effect. At each end is an imitative bronze gate, surmounted by the coronet of a marquisate (the Arcade having been erected by the Marquis of Exeter), whence its designation. The fronts in Wellington-street and Catherine-street, are in the style of the street architecture of the reign of James I.; and the contrast of the fine red brick with the tasteful stone dressings, has a handsome effect. The frontage, in each instance, extends considerably beyond that of the Arcade itself; that in Wellington-street being chiefly appropriated as the new offices of the Morning Post journal.

THE NEW EXETER 'CHANGE.

Our readers at a distance must not, from its name, assume this Arcade to occupy the place of Exeter 'Change, now only kept in popular remembrance by a clock, inscribed on its dial with "Exeter 'Change" in place of figures, upon the front of a house in the Strand, adjoining the 'Change site.

The New 'Change is the third building of its kind erected in this locality; for the original Exeter 'Change was taken from "the New Exchange," built in 1608, on the site of the stables of Durham House, opposite the Adelphi Theatre. It was opened by James I., and was named by him, "Britain's Bourse."

"THE CITY OF LONDON" IRON STEAM-SHIP.

This magnificent iron steamer has just been constructed in the Clyde, by Mr. Napier, at the expense of £40,000, for the Aberdeen and London Steam Navigation Company, for steaming regularly between Aberdeen and the metropolis. She made her first voyage from Aberdeen to Wapping the week before last, in an unusually short space of time; though the wind was adverse, and she had on board, besides passengers and a cargo of goods, 210 head of cattle, and 700 boxes of salmon. She left Wapping, on her return to Aberdeen, on Saturday last, and accomplished the passage in 38 hours.

The City of London is of admirable symmetry, and nice proportion of length, breadth, and height; which detract from her apparent magnitude. She is, however, a stupendous vessel, and commodiously planned; her large dimensions giving scope for every accommodation. Her actual measurement is as follows:—

	Feet.	In.
Length between perpendiculars	215	0
Length over all	231	0
Breadth of beam between paddle-boxes	31	0
Extreme breadth across paddle-boxes	52	6
Depth of hold	20	0

Her two engines together are rated at 430-horse power, and her registered tonnage is 732 tons—her measurement, 1110 tons. The poop stands 4 feet above the main deck, and is 65 feet long, and nearly 40 feet broad. The cabins are spacious and comfortable, and the ornaments are much more chaste than usual. This applies more particularly to the cabinet-work of the great saloon. The paneling, doors, and roof, are of solid oak, polished; the chairs and sofas, of oak also, are covered with green Genoa velvet; the mirrors, without being so profuse as to create confusion, are numerous enough; and the light is admitted through coloured glass, on which the royal arms, and those of London and Aberdeen, are finely depicted. The state-rooms are roomy, comfortable, and, withal, most thoroughly ventilated. There are six of them, containing two berths each, in the saloon, four of which enter from the saloon, and two from the lobby. Two gentlemen's sleeping cabins, each with twelve berths, and a ladies' cabin, with sixteen berths, enter from the lobby. Besides the berths aft, there is a gentlemen's cabin forward, with twenty-six berths—in all, 110; the whole have spring mattresses, are ventilated from the roof and sides, and are unusually roomy. The ladies' cabin is, as it ought to be, the most elegant and comfortable place in the ship; and the accommodation for steerage passengers is very superior. The comfort even of the dumb brutes, which will always form a large proportion of the passengers from Aberdeen to London, has not been overlooked. There is a large lower deck, in which they will enjoy fresh air, without exposure to the angry elements without.

To give additional security, the vessel is divided into four distinct compartments, each water-tight—so that, although she were to spring a leak, either forward or aft, there would be no danger of the ship filling, or of that still more dangerous accident in a steamer, the extinguishing of the fires in the engine-room. This same engine-room, by the way, is very tastefully and commodiously laid out; and the engines themselves are much admired for exquisite workmanship, strength, and finish. The boilers are four in number, and can be used separately in case of accident.

One excellent quality in the City of London, and one that will be gratefully acknowledged by passengers who are apt to get sick, is the almost total absence of the disagreeable tremulous motion that is experienced in most steamers. On the paddle-boxes, where it should be most sensibly felt, a great number of the passengers, in the trip north—some of them well able to judge—sat for hours, and acknowledged that certainly the tremor, in this instance, had been minimized.

In a pleasure-trip, this superb vessel accomplished the voyage from Greenock to Aberdeen, a distance of 540 miles, in 42 hours, or at the rate of about 13 miles an hour. Captain Cargill, by whom she is commanded, speaks highly of the ease with which she may be managed. With the exception of the Great Britain, which has not yet been to sea, she is the largest iron steam-ship afloat.

We congratulate the enterprising Company on having added this fine steamer to the number of powerful vessels already on their establishment. The resulting social and commercial advantages are thus illustrated in the Aberdeen Herald:—

> The voyage between London and Aberdeen is now achieved in a few hours; whereas, formerly, it always occupied days—not unfrequently weeks. Thanks to the almost miraculous power of steam, the broad Atlantic is now crossed in less time than our sailing vessels used sometimes to require between our own port and that of London. As to comfort and accommodation for passengers, comparison is out of the question. But greater advantages still have resulted in the speedier transmission of articles of commerce; and in no instance has this been more strikingly or beneficially exemplified than in the conveyance of cattle to the London market—an advantage to a great agricultural district like ours, of the very highest importance.

STATUE OF THE LATE DUKE OF SUSSEX.

[Mr. E. Hodges Baily, R.A., has just completed his model of the statue of his Royal Highness the late Duke of Sussex, which is to be executed in marble, according to a vote of the Grand Lodges, for Freemasons' Hall. It has been exhibited by the sculptor, and has received the highest commendation.]

Grand Master of our mystic tie,
Though now thy honour'd bones may lie
In Kensal cold—
Encas'd in stone—in marble here
Almost in life thou dost appear,
A wonder to behold!

Here is the good fraternal smile
That lit thy living lips erewhile
With grace and truth—
And here's thy manly—burly form
Grown large by nursing feelings warm
E'en from thy very youth!

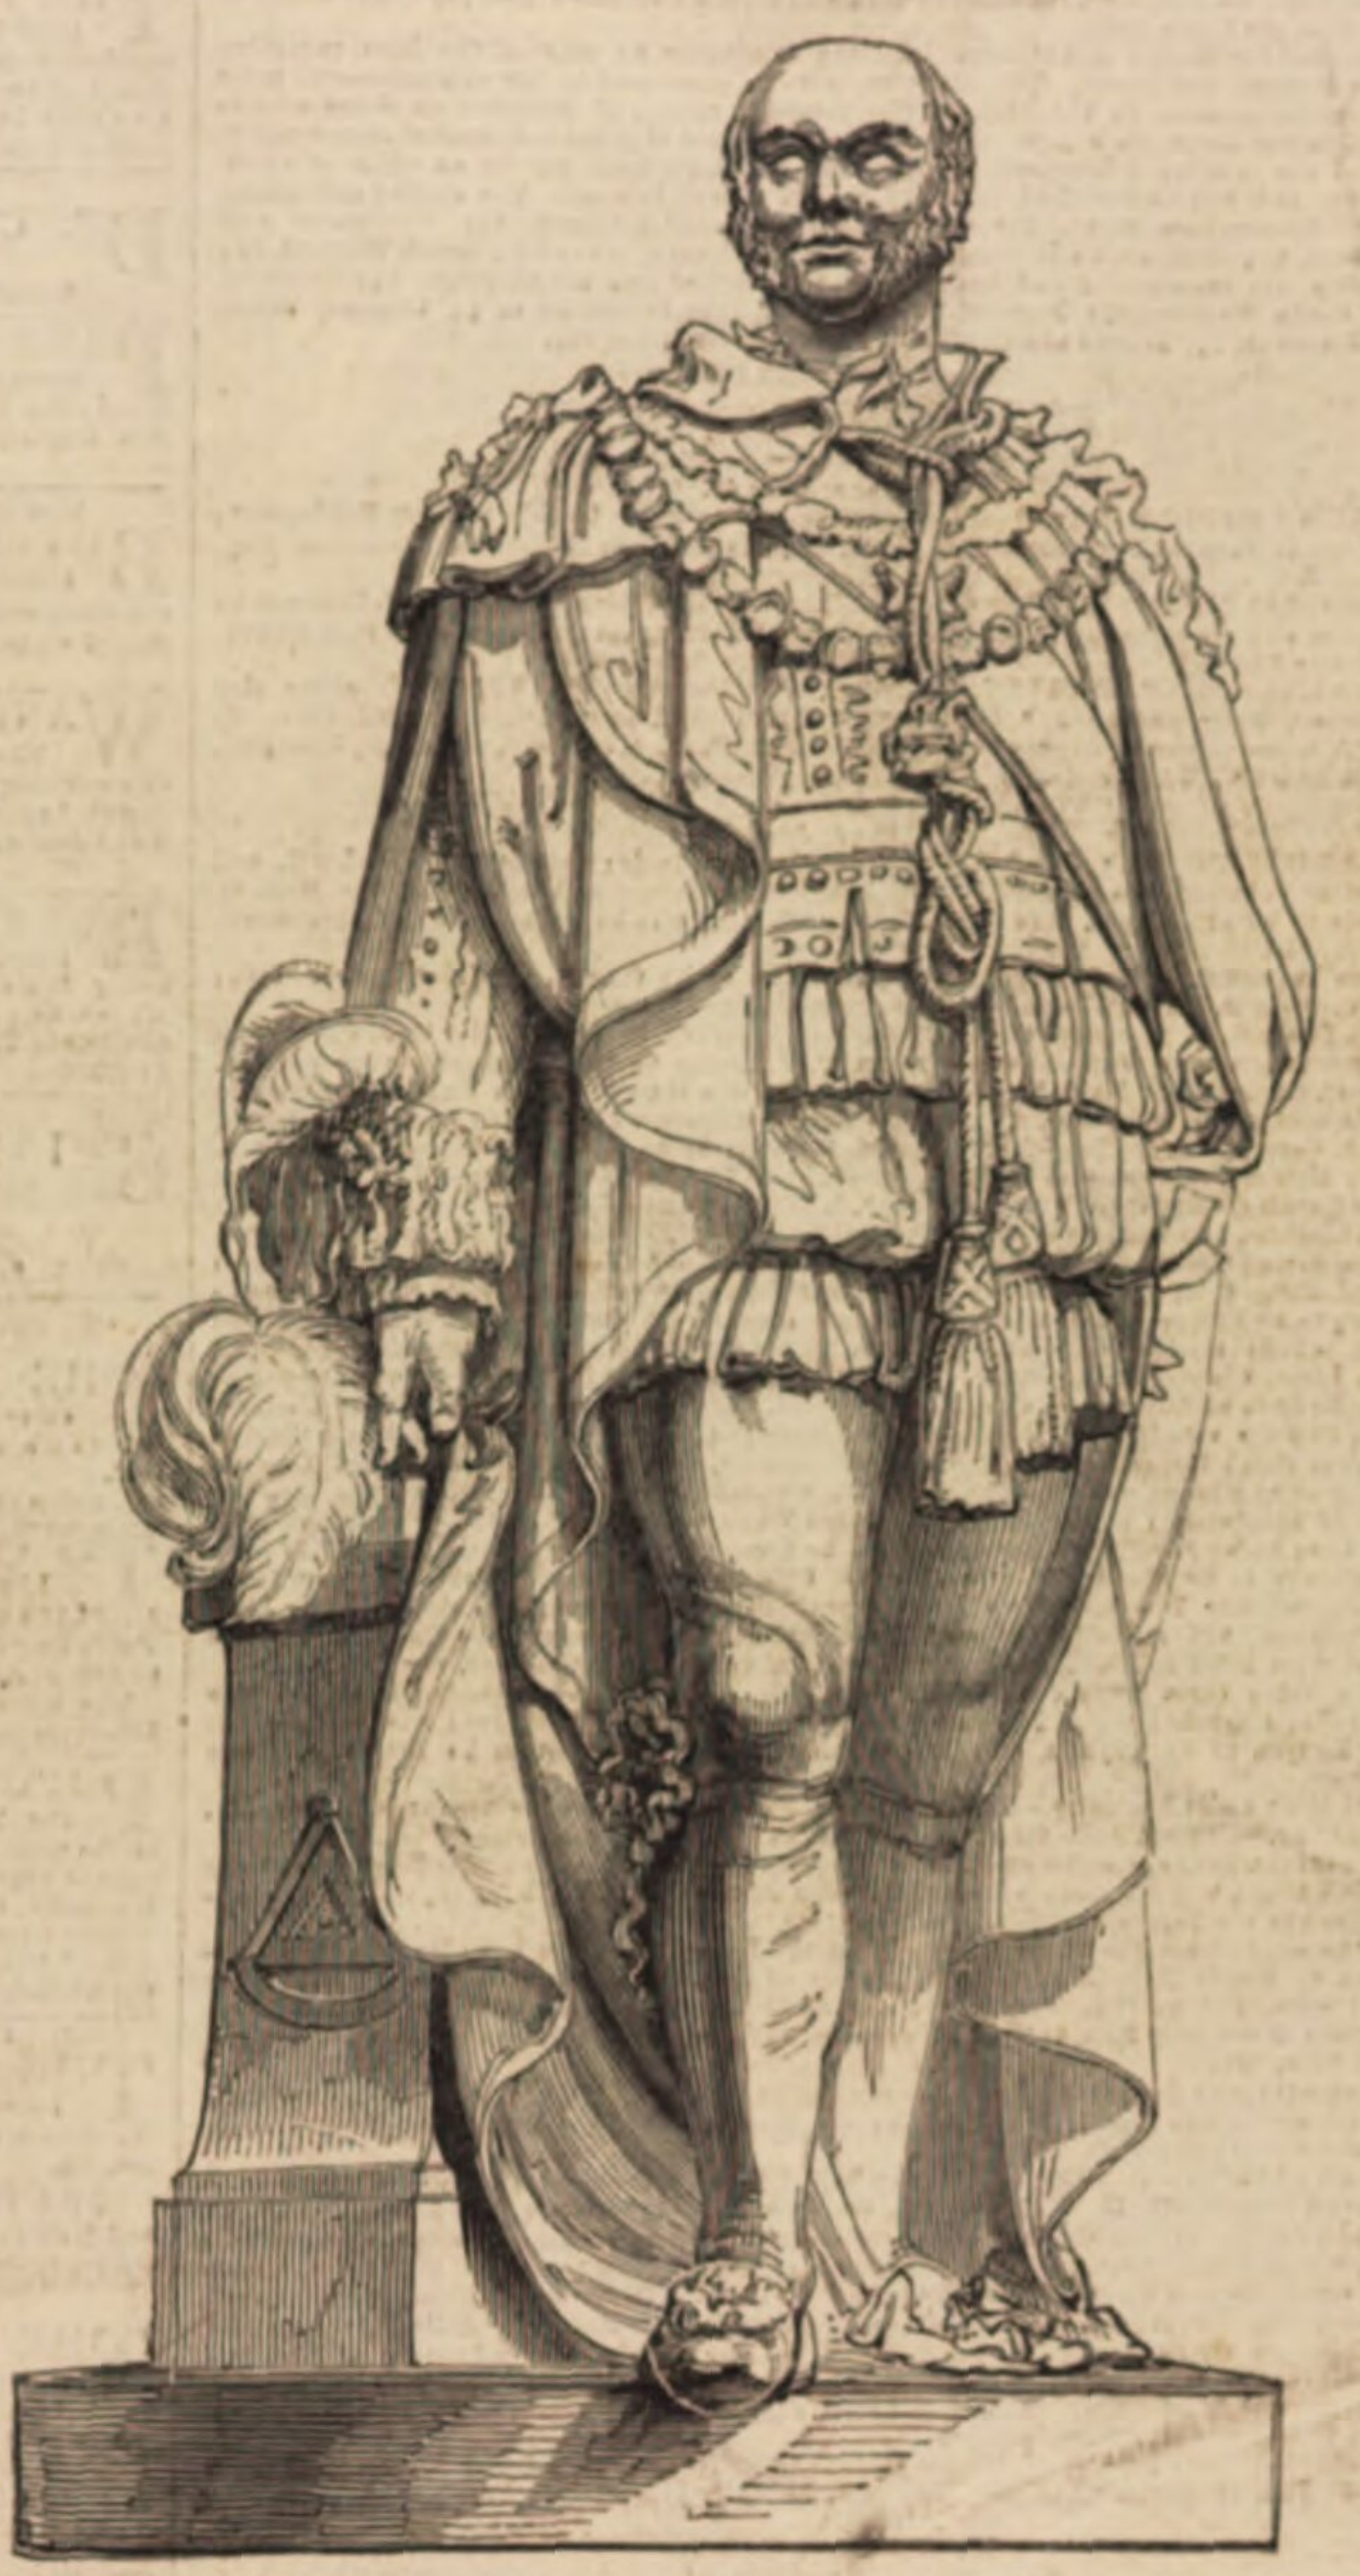
The crabbed-will'd—the cold of heart
Will soon from lusty health depart
And haggard show—
While they whose blessing 'tis to be
Possess'd of sweet philanthropy
Each day will thriving grow!

And thus with thee it was:—from child
To man thou wert as generous—mild—
And good a thing,
As ever grac'd humanity—
It was a pleasant sight to see
The Brother of a King

Low vail his bonnet to a girl,
And call her his "beloved pearl"
When made his Queen—
'Twas grateful, too, to see him fight
For a most suffering people's right,
And boldly stand between

The wrongs they bore for Judah's land,
And the unchristian tyrant's hand
That crush'd them low—
—— He's gone at last, but will survive
As long as memory can live
Or genius here his image show! W.

The statue is seven feet six inches in height, and the pedestal six feet: and his Royal Highness is represented standing upright, in the action of addressing an assembly. He is habited in the robes of a Knight of the Garter, and, in addition, wears the insignia of the Guelphic order. The sculptor has been very successful in the delineation of the features, and in imparting to his work the characteristic traits of the figure of the illustrious personage it is designed to portray. Like all the statues Mr. Baily has hitherto executed in an upright posture, this is remarkable for its ease and natural aspect; and more especially for the firmness and stability with which the figure stands upon the pedestal. The robes, though gorgeous in character, are yet not frittered in detail, but present a broad and massive effect. At the side is placed a small altar, on which the masonic emblems are figured.



STATUE OF THE DUKE OF SUSSEX, BY BAILY

FITZ-STEPHEN.

BY

"THE OLD SAILOR."

In the year 1500, James Fitz-Stephen commanded a fine carrack that traded with Biscay for wines and wool; and so highly was his honesty and uprightness esteemed, that cargoes to his account were frequently shipped on credit, both for the Irish and the London markets. He had married a lady of the name of Blake, to whom he was greatly attached, and everything seemed to promise a life of happiness and prosperity. His intercourse with Spain had not only raised him many friends in that country, but he had also caught much of the strongly inflexible character of the Biscayans, which gradually became blended with his own. In 1507, when Philip, the heir to the crown of Castile, and father to Charles V., visited England, James Fitz-Stephen was selected on his departure to pilot the royal ship to the Spanish shores, an office which he performed very ably; and Philip, to testify his satisfaction, granted him several exclusive privileges and immunities in his trading transactions with the city of Bilboa.

At an early age, his only son, Lynch Fitz-Stephen, accompanied his father in his voyages, and by diligent application became a smart active lad; but his parent, being strongly attached to domestic enjoyments, yielded to the persuasions of his wife to remain on shore, and though he did not entirely relinquish the sea, yet he fully established himself as a merchant, and carried on a very prosperous commerce, occasionally visiting Bilboa in pursuit of business.

Young Lynch continued his maritime life under other masters, but as soon as age and experience would sanction the trust, he was appointed to command one of his father's ships, and for some time he acquitted himself with credit; but, the dark-eyed beauties of Spain soon induced him to forget the fair-haired, confiding maiden in Galway, who loved him with an intensity bordering on fervent devotion.

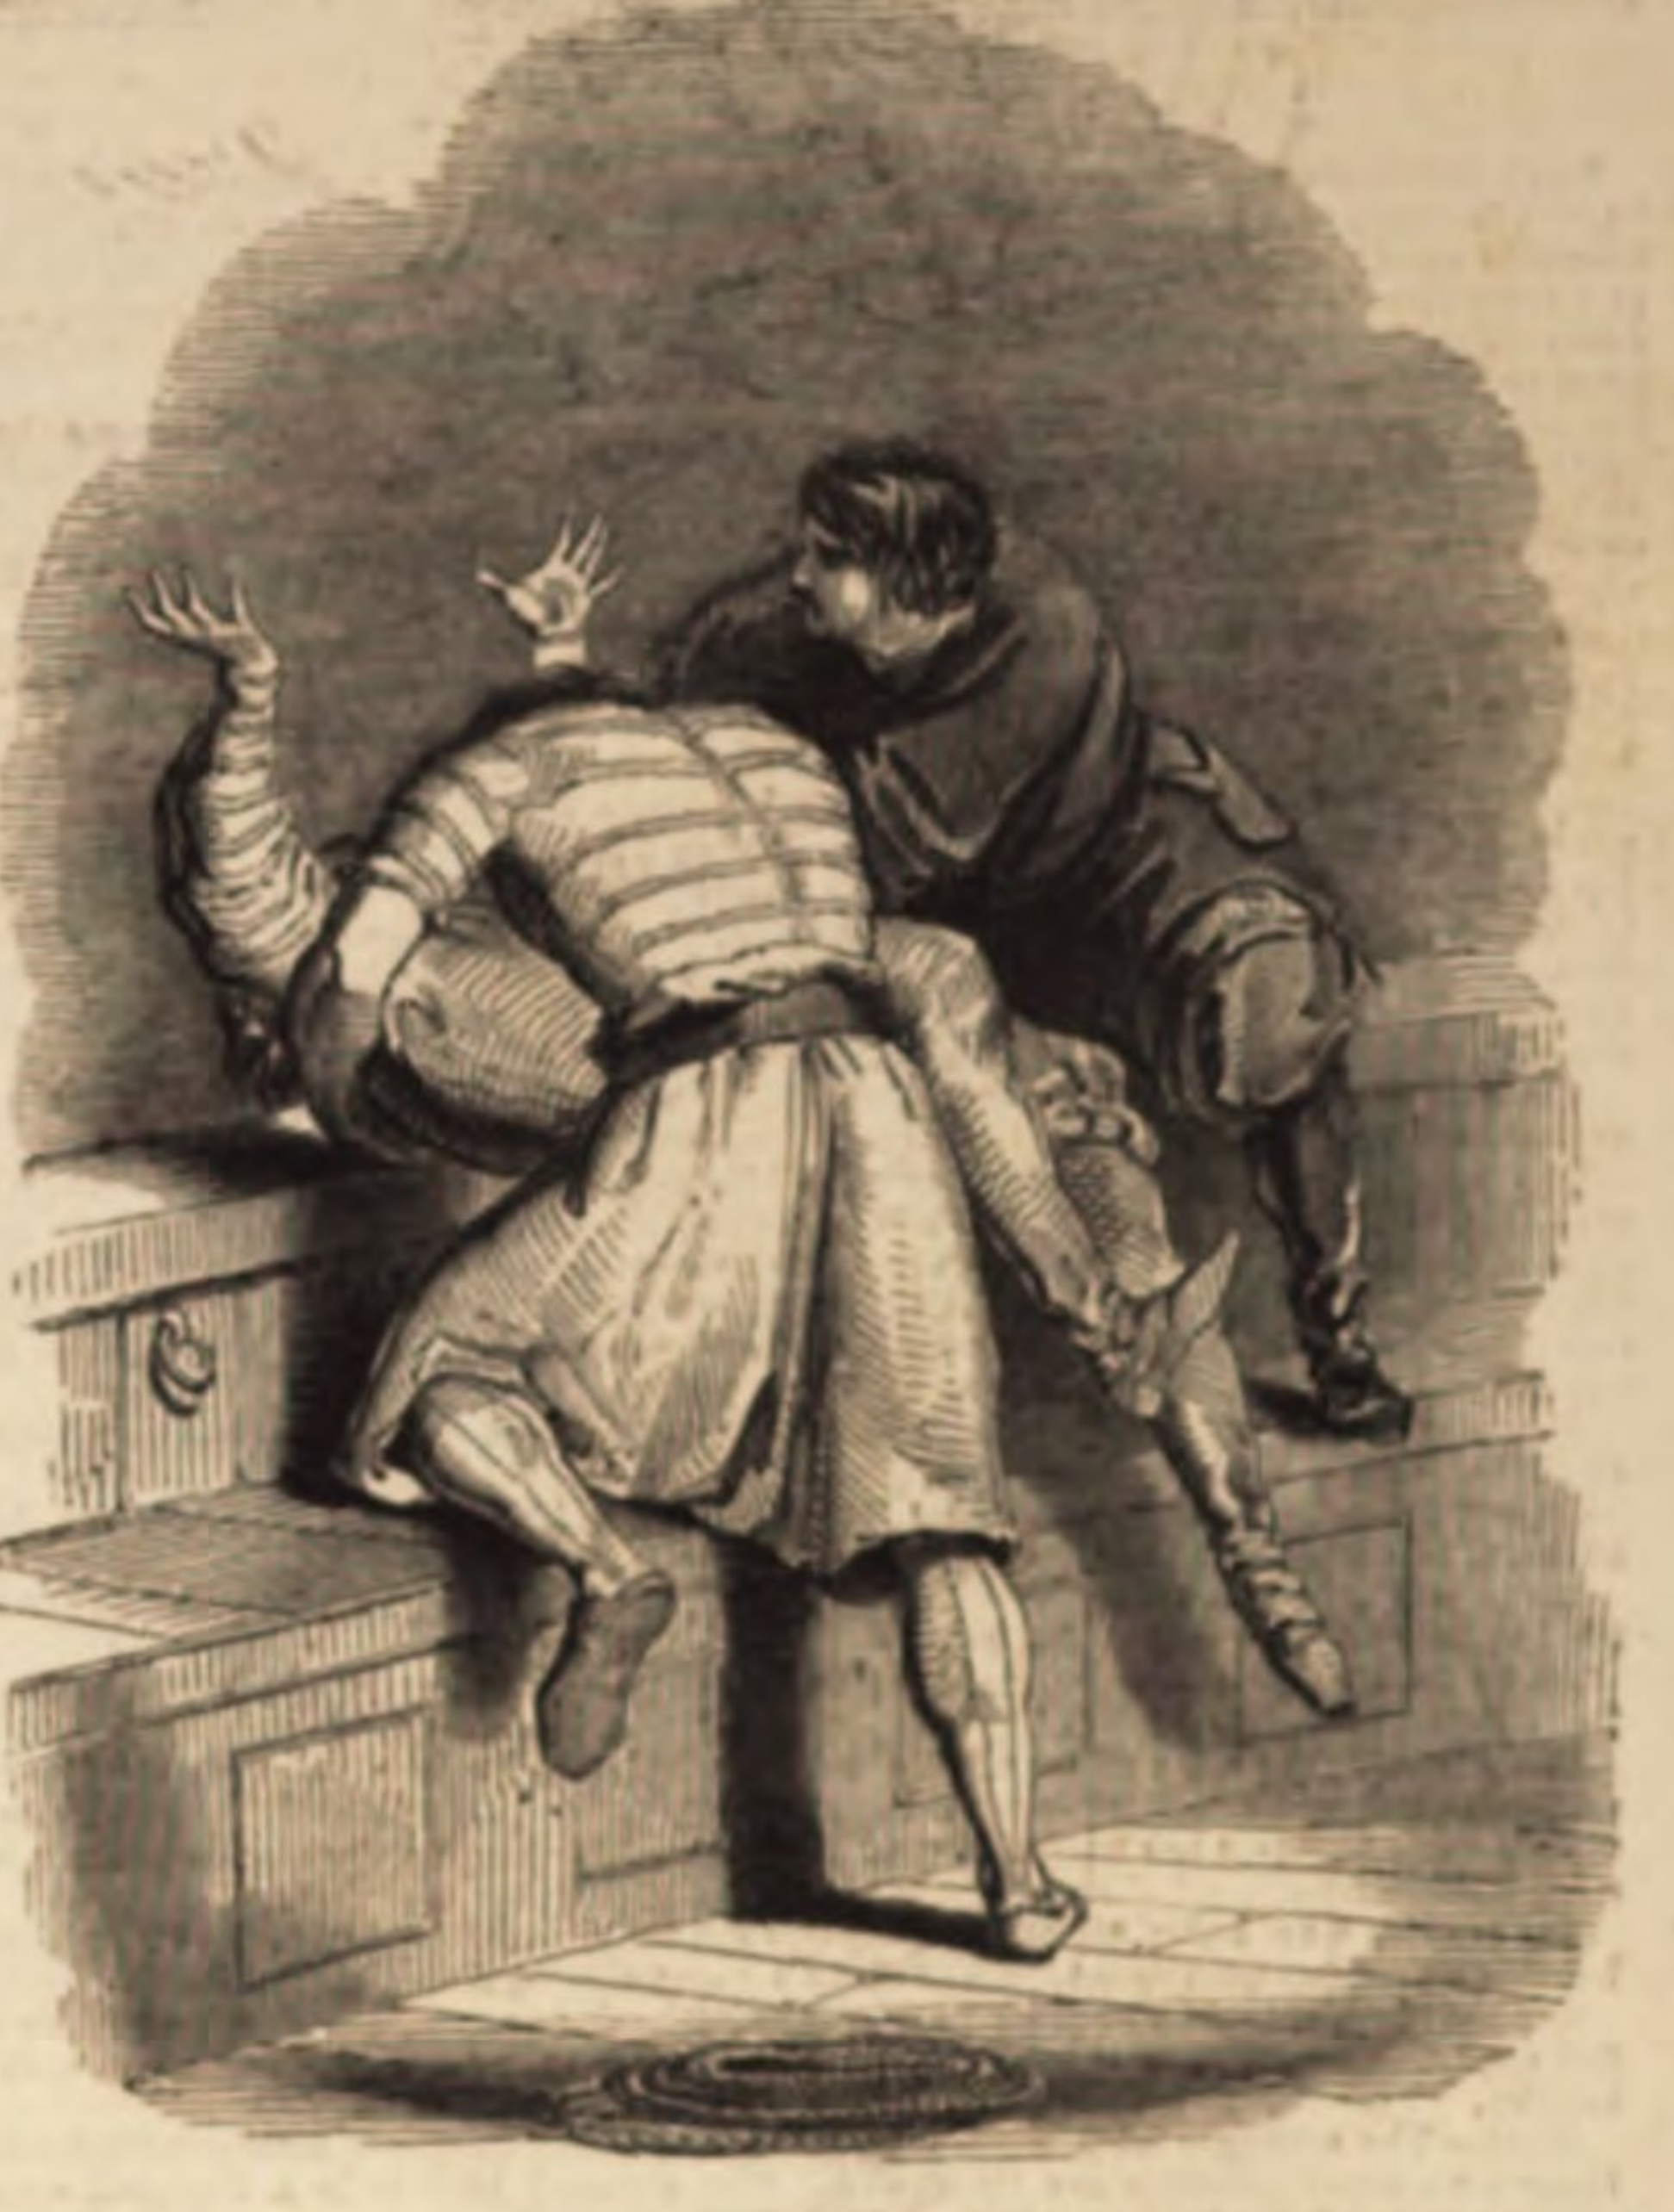
"And you are going to leave me, Lynch," said she, as he came to bid another farewell, previous to his departure for Biscay; "the heart of me is very sorrowful when you are away, but 'tis sadder I should be but for the certainty of your honour and fidelity, and sure I may rely on them, Lynch?"

"Indeed, dearest, and you may do so most implicitly," returned the young mariner with fervour, whilst a pang of shame and contrition told him that her confidence in his integrity was not altogether merited. "Who else, love, should occupy my thoughts, or be treasured in my breast? No, no; it is my own Aileen who possesses my undivided and unceasing affection, and never will I betray her to sorrow and anguish."

She laid her head against his breast, and after some persuasion she promised to give him her hand at the altar on his return from the voyage he was then about to make. They parted. The young man's cargo was on board, and he was amply furnished with money to liquidate former claims, as well as to purchase a full freightage of the choicest wines for home. He was cordially welcomed at Bilboa, and took up his temporary abode at the residence of an old merchant, to whom his cargo was consigned. With his son, Don Sebastian, he had formed an early friendship, and through his introduction, he had become acquainted with a female of exquisite beauty, Donna Clara, who admired the young and warm-hearted Irishman—she was incapable of feeling a more generous attachment.

His vessel was loaded—the time for his departure drew near; the account with the merchant was unsettled, and his money had been entirely expended in dissipation, and rich presents to Donna Clara. As far as the unsettled claims and value of his homeward cargo went, the unhappy state of his affairs would prove no detriment to his sailing, for his father's credit and responsibility were unimpeachable; and, once in his own country, he would find no difficulty in deceiving his parent, whilst he might trust to the chapter of accidents to rescue him from threatened disgrace. But to leave Donna Clara seemed to be almost impracticable, and she, too, had declared the utter impossibility of surviving their separation.

Lynch had informed the merchant that he had brought no funds, but that his father would remit the whole amount on the following voyage, with which arrangement the Spaniard appeared to be entirely satisfied; but the young mariner was thrown into a state of distressing consternation when it was proposed that his friend Don Sebastian, who had long been desirous of visiting the British isles, should take a passage with him to Galway, and there receive the balance due, to furnish funds for his intended excursion—he could neither decline nor refuse the proposition; therefore, dissembling his alarm, he expressed himself gratified at the prospect of companionship with so desirable a messmate.



Among the crew of the carrack was a foster-brother of the commander, who was greatly attached to him; and, the man had at all times evinced an entire devotion to the interest or pleasure of the young ship-master. Although unqualified to give counsel, Lynch made him his confidant, and consulted him on most occasions, so that Phelim MacConnor was in a great measure aware of the perils in which Fitz-Stephen had become involved.

They were now at sea; the wind was fair, the weather propitious, and every hour carried Lynch Fitz-Stephen nearer and nearer to his home; that home which he could not think of without feelings of dread. He trembled when he contemplated the just anger of his father—the utter loss of his own good name—and what was becoming every minute more painfully acute, the conviction that Aileen, the fond, confiding, and affectionate Aileen, would never be his.

The bright reflection of the clear full moon was dancing on the dark blue waters as Lynch stood alone leaning over the taffrail of his ship in silent and absorbed meditation. The swelling sails were filled with the freshening breeze, and the vessel marked her track upon the ocean in dazzling brilliancy and light. But her commander heeded not the glories which presented themselves; the heavy gloom of his conscience fell like a dark cloud upon all around him, and threw a damp and misty veil between the present and the future. He sometimes felt half resolved to inform his friend Sebastian of what had occurred, and to cast himself upon his generous sympathy; but shame and pride deterred him; he could not muster sufficient assurance or courage to acknowledge the villany he had practised, and he much doubted whether the high spirit of the Spaniard would not revolt at a proposal for concealment. Once married to Aileen, and her fortune, which was ample, would be at his disposal, so that he could restore the money he had so fraudulently embezzled and squandered. But would the noble-minded Sebastian become a consenting party to the perpetration of such a treacherous act of duplicity? He was thus debating the matter with himself, till, almost unconsciously, he exclaimed aloud, "No, no—I cannot—will not do it."

"It is the only way to save you," whispered the voice of Phelim, who had silently approached and overheard the exclamation; "when he is disposed of—and it may be done secretly enough—we can tell our own tale and divel a sowl will know anything about it at all at all."

"What do you mean, Phelim?" eagerly inquired his commander, although he was well acquainted with the purport of the intimation; for conscience told the unhappy man that similar designs had crossed his own ruminations.

"Mane!" returned Phelim, cautiously, in the same low tone, "why what should I mane? You will soon anchor in Galway Bay, and a pretty reckon there 'll be anyhow if he arrives safe. Arrah then, captain, sure and you know that dead men can tell no tales?"

Lynch Fitz-Stephen was silent for several minutes. He looked upon the sparkling foam of the ocean, but there was an unnatural redness in its hue; he gazed upwards at the bright clear sky, but the face of the heavens seemed to be tinged with blood. At length he forcibly uttered, "Never, Phelim, never! Do not mention such a thing again."

"It is well, captain dear, that you understand me," responded the foster-brother, with earnestness. "Oh, but it's aisey enough to comprehend matters

Paris, 23rd July.

It is not at present in Paris that Parisian fashions are to be seen; they are now only to be met with at the watering-places, and on the borders of the Rhine. At Basle, a fête takes place every two years, when the carabiniers of 22 cantons assemble to try their skill. In addition, this year is the fourth centenary of the battle of Saint-Jacques, where 1500 Swiss contended with 30,000 troops: the Swiss were destroyed, but Swiss liberty was established. This double fête attracted crowds of strangers and natives, and great interest was excited by an English Lord having entered the lists for the first prize with the carabine; there being two hundred prizes and six thousand carabiniers to contend for them, he was considered successful in having obtained the third prize, and he was cordially congratulated by his compatriots and the numerous French visitors who were at Basle.

Our correspondent assures us that the coup-d'œil was magnificent. The gay costumes of the Swiss from all the cantons, in their best attire—the flowing lace of the Fribourgeoises—the flower-decked hats of the young girls of Lucerne formed an admirable contrast with the toilettes just arrived from Paris.

The shape and size of hats continue the same, but the ornaments and accessories are very varied.

White crape hats are ornamented with roses and crêpe lisse.

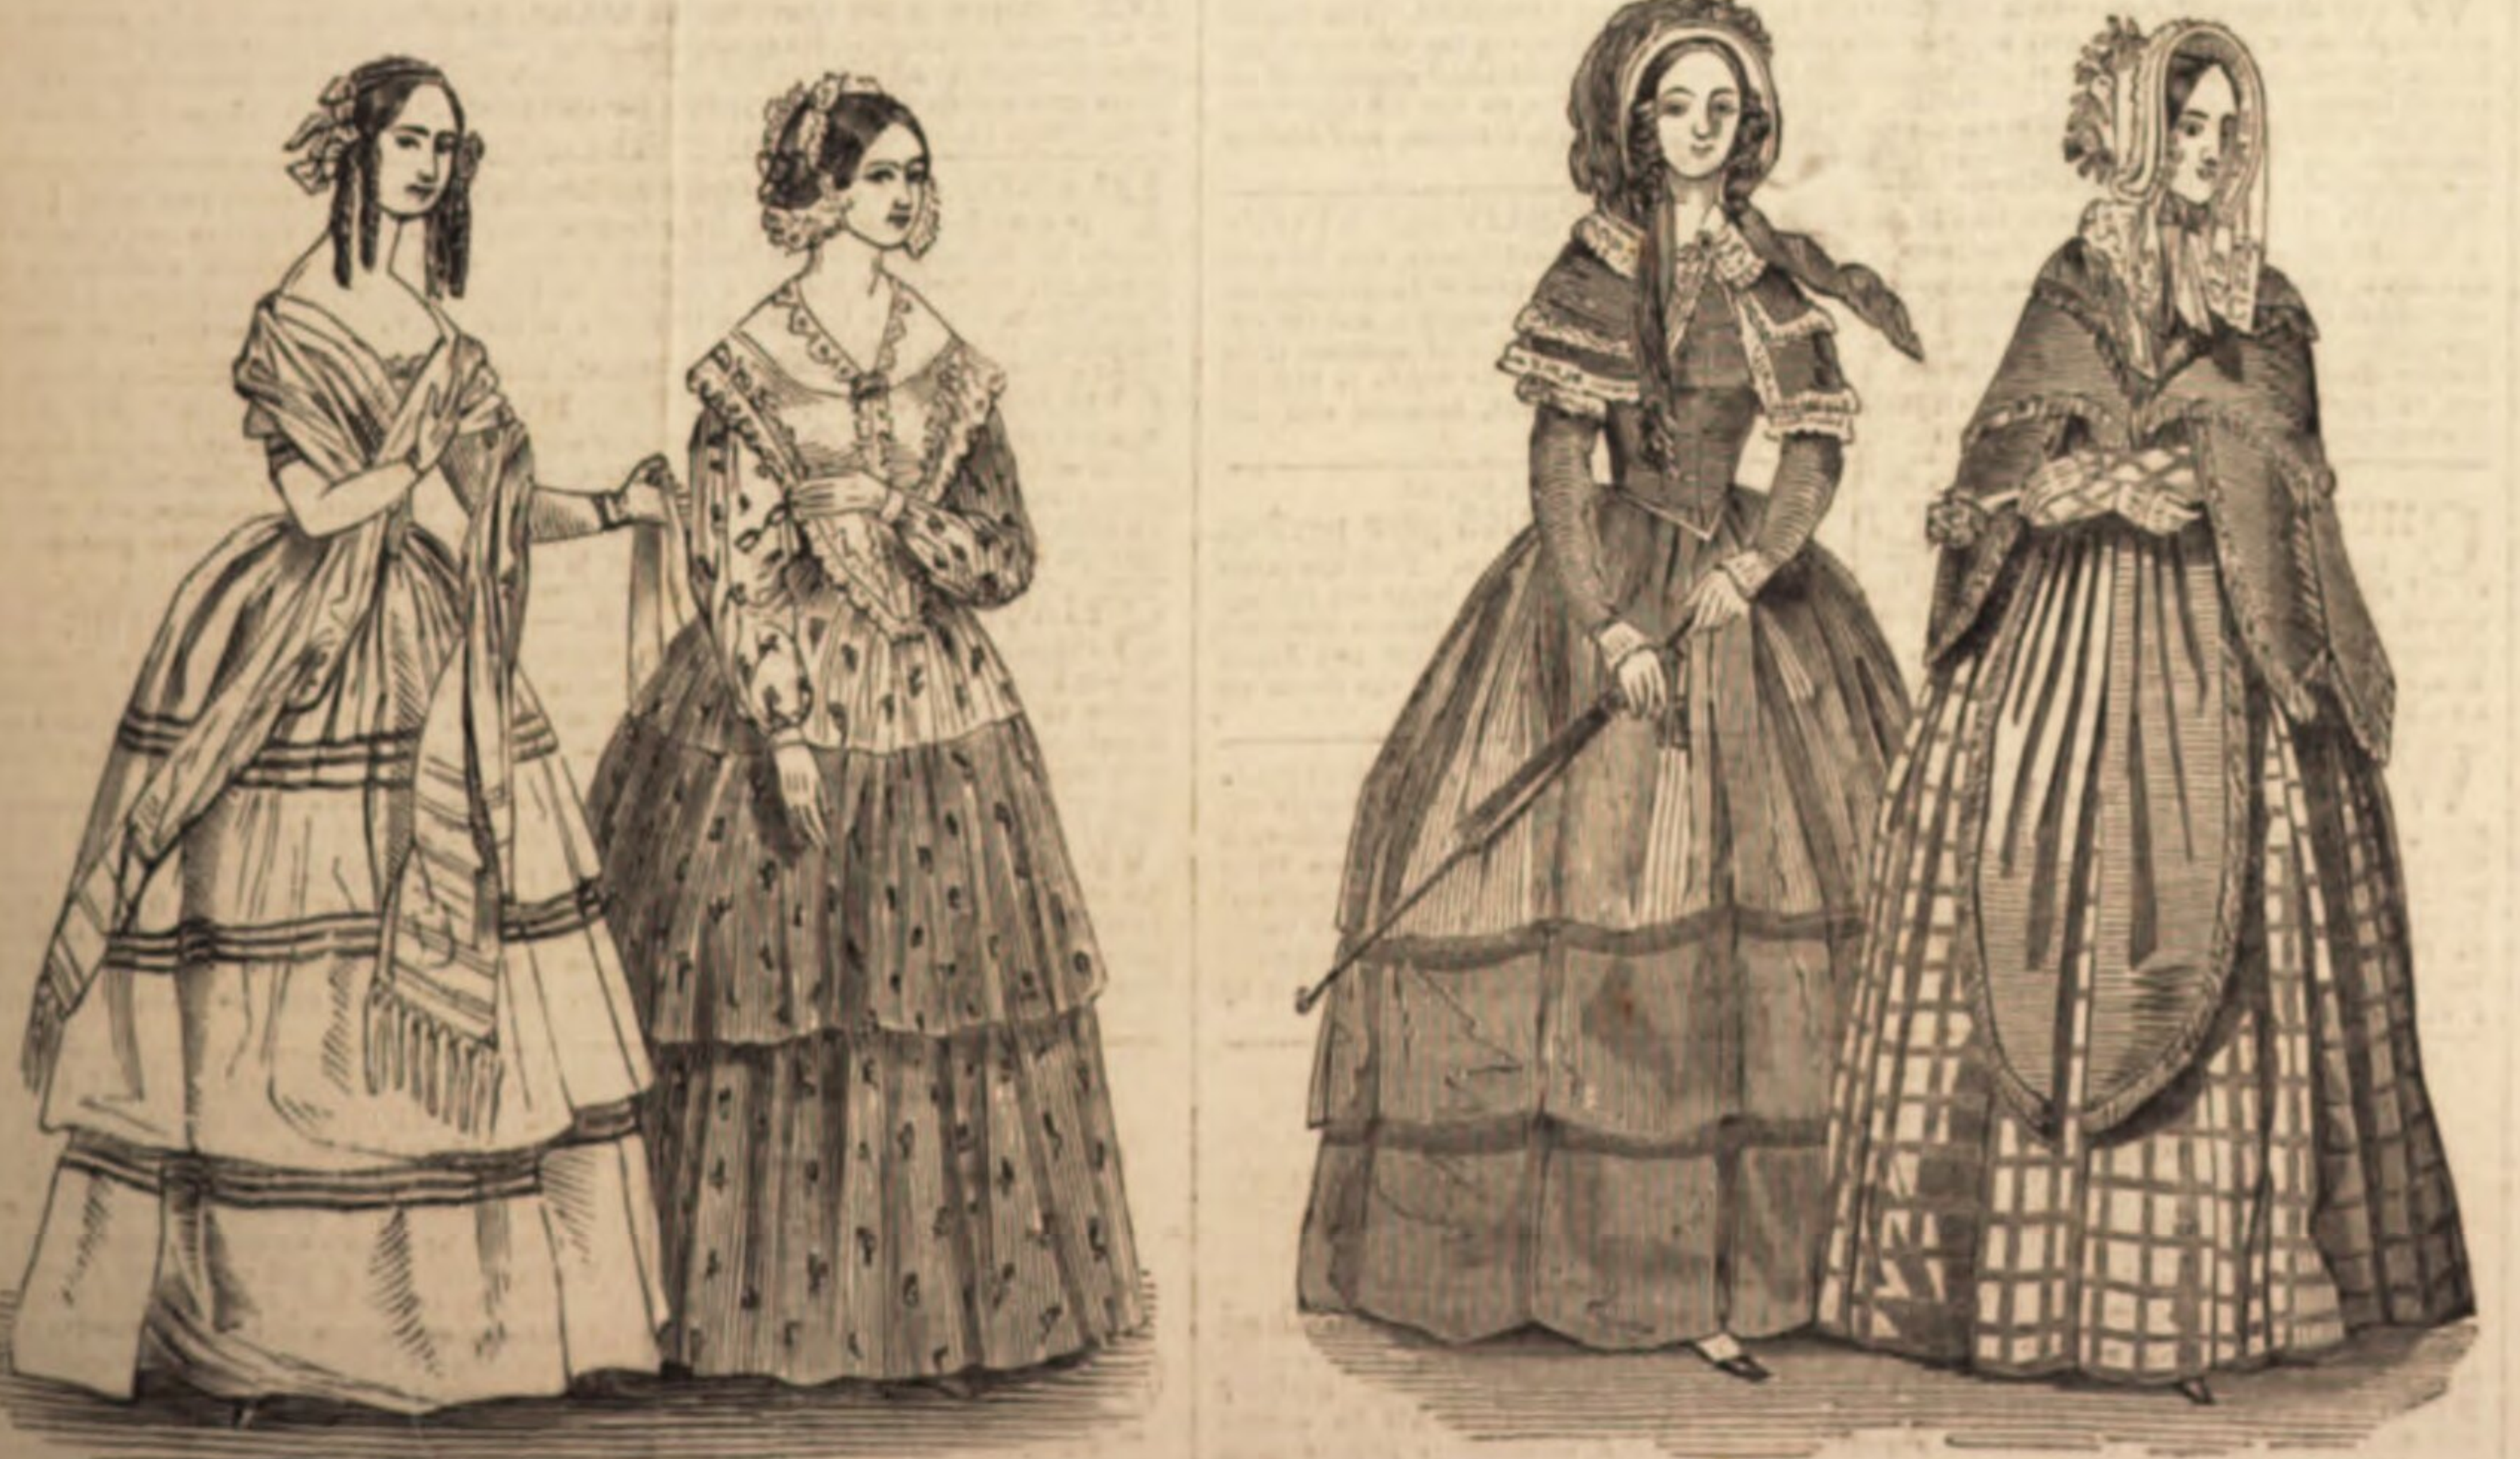
Paille de riz hats are ornamented with flowers. Capotes of straw-colour crape are trimmed with biaises of lilac and straw-colour.

Summer toilettes are mostly composed of barège, chamelion silks, and coloured tarlatanes, accompanied with lace scarfs and shawls, or with mantelets of embroidered muslin, and with crape, tulle, or paille de riz capotes.

Barège dresses are mostly trimmed with volans, as most suitable with soft materials, whilst organdies, and other starched materials, always have plaits. Festoons and embroideries are adopted with transparent materials. Many tarlatanes are embroidered in colours; the skirts are plain, but the volans are studded with pea spots, and the festoons bordered with the same.

The King of Saxony in a Dilemma.—While the King of Saxony was at Liverpool, he determined to make a theatrical visit. His Majesty and suite drove to the Amphitheatre, and actually got into one of the boxes of that house, where the coolness of their reception—the audience knowing nothing of the rank of the illustrious visitor—induced his Majesty to make an inquiry, which convinced him that he was in the "wrong box." The royal party beat a speedy retreat, and arrived at the Theatre-Royal, where the King intended to go, about a quarter of an hour after the commencement of the "Love Chase," where the audience, being on the qui vive, rose and cheered heartily as they entered the stage-box.

On Monday the usual annual meeting of the proprietors of Drury-lane theatre took place in the saloon, and was fully attended. Lord Glengall was in the chair. The report, read by Mr. Dunn, was to the effect, that the late season, under the management of Mr. Bunn, had been more prosperous than any season for a considerable time past, and that the committee had concluded an agreement, for a further term of three years, with that gentleman, determinable, at the option of either party, at the end of the first; and they trusted that, with the renewed exertion of the lessee, a still more favourable season even than the last might be anticipated. The report was confirmed, and thanks were voted to Mr. Bunn.



FASHIONS FOR AUGUST.

when the maneing jumps with our own thoughts. Sure and I'll do as you bid me but the sorrow and the shame it will be to you, and he to the fore letting 'em into the knowledge of affairs that might be kept snug and sacret enough. And how could you help his falling or jumping overboard? Think of the sternness of your father—think of the finger of scorn pointed at your father's son—think of Miss Aileen—and how would you bear to see her given to another before the very face of you?"

"Avast, avast, Phelim!" exclaimed the almost desperate and maddened man, as he clutched his foster-brother's arm; "you raise a raging torment within my breast."

"I must not avast," returned the other impressively. "Sure and I know my duty, Mister Lynch. I can die with you, or for you, without a groan or a murmur. I could lie down by side your coffin in the cowld grave, and hear the aarth shovelled in upon the living and upon the dead, and never utter a complaint; but I cannot see you a dissolute outcast, pining with the troubled mind and the broken heart, dying by inches, with a blight upon your spirit and a blast upon your name, and not raise my voice again it."

"Is there no other remedy, no possibility of keeping the matter secret for a time?" inquired Fitz-Stephen, with a groan, as he covered his face with his hands. "My invention is utterly at fault, my faculties are becoming prostrated beneath the weight of my calamity. Phelim, Phelim! something must be done to avert this dreaded evil; but my soul sickens at the plan you would propose."

"Arrah, captain dear, sure and your own self proposed it to yourself afore I opened my lips," returned the man, with affected simplicity. "You were discoorsing it in your mind when I first spoke; but no matter whose plan it is, it must be done, and you must do it."

Lynch shuddered.

"If we had him ashore, it's up the mountains he might be till the breeze blowed itself out; but there's no doing such a thing now, captain, and a few days will bring us into Galway Bay."

The foster-brothers held further conversation together, and then separated; Fitz-Stephen throwing his fevered body, in sleepless restlessness, upon the lockers in the cabin—Phelim stretching his giant limbs upon the deck in heavy slumber—whilst the unconscious victim of their nefarious schemes reposed in the calm tranquillity of an upright mind in the state-room, which had been appropriated to his use.

Two days elapsed, during which Lynch and Sebastian conversed with more cheerfulness and gaiety than they had done since their embarkation, and the former seemed to have got rid of much of that depression of spirits that had been manifested since his quitting Spain. On the second day, at the close of a beautiful summer's afternoon, the blue land of Cape Clear was seen in the distance, and every Irish heart, but that of Fitz-Stephen, throbbed with tumultuous delight at once more beholding their native shores.

I have already said that Lynch Fitz-Stephen was an only son, but he had a sister; and Don Sebastian had frequently heard mention of her as one of Galway's fairest daughters, mild and amiable, and possessing every virtue that could constitute a blessing in a wife. Her father was wealthy, and there could be no doubt that her portion would be handsome, while an union of the families might lead to more profitable results in their commercial speculations. He had sent gifts to the lady, which had been most graciously received and pleasantly acknowledged; and now, with the sanction of his father, he had undertaken the voyage in order to satisfy himself as to the qualifications of her mind and person before he made her an offer of his hand. Nor had Mary Fitz-Stephen been insensible to the generous attentions of the young Spaniard. She, too, had made inquiries of her father and her brother, and the answers she obtained were truly gratifying to her womanly pride. She heard with pleasure of his intention to visit Ireland, and, though no especial time had been named, yet she felt disappointed on the return of every ship to find that he was not in it. To none but Aileen was her secret told; and, loving each other as they did with strong sisterly regard, in no instance was their mutual confidence broken.

And now the gallant carrack was running along the land for her destined harbour, and the young Spaniard, full of eager hope and expectation, tinged with anxious surmisings, watched the various headlands which they passed during the hours of a lovely night, in which Nature was still and passionless. The following morning, however, he was no where to be found; all the cabins and every part of the ship were carefully searched, but no trace or vestige of him could be discovered, nor could any one give the slightest account of what had become of him. Phelim had last seen him about midnight sitting near the stern, and the only probable conjecture was, that, being overpowered by sleep, he had fallen overboard. At what time, or in what place this had occurred, it was impossible to tell, and therefore to return and seek for him would have been utterly useless, especially, if their ideas were correct: he must have sunk immediately, and so they continued on their course.

THE MARKETS.

Corn-Exchange.—The arrivals of English wheat up to our markets during the week have been only to a moderate extent, yet the number of unsold samples on offer has been tolerably good. For all descriptions of that grain the demand has ruled excessively heavy, at a reduction in previous rates of from 1s to quite 2s per quarter, without effecting a clearance. The imports of foreign wheat have been seasonably extensive, while the duty has been paid this week on nearly 6000 quarters. In this article, both free and in bond, so little has been doing that the rates have ruled almost nominal. No English barley has been at market: but of foreign we have had a good supply, and the quotations have declined from 1s to 2s per quarter. The malt trade has proved excessively dull, at a reduction of 2s per quarter. From Ireland, the receipts of oats continue above an average, owing to which the inquiry for them is inactive on easier terms. Beans, peas, and flour have sold lower.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 44s to 52s; ditto white, 50s to 56s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 42s to 50s; ditto white, 42s to 52s; rye, 31s to 33s; grinding barley, 27s to 28s; distilling ditto, 31s to 32s; malting ditto, 32s to 34s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 59s to 60s; brown ditto, 57s to 60s; Kingston and Ware, 62s to 64s; Chevalier, 64s to 65s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 20s to 22s; potatoe ditto, 23s to 25s; Youghal and Cork, black, 19s to 21s; ditto white, 19s to 21s; tick beans, 29s to 31s; old ditto, 38s to 40s; grey peas, 31s to 33s; maple, 33s to 34s; white, 35s to 38s; boilers, 38s to 39s per quarter. Town-made flour, 45s to 48s; Suffolk, 38s to 39s; Stockton and Yorkshire, 37s to 38s, per 280 lbs. Foreign.—Free wheat, 58s to 61s; Dantzig, red, 50s to 56s; white, 56s to 61s. In Bond.—Barley, 23s to 24s; oats, brew, 17s to 19s; ditto feed, 14s to 17s; beans, 24s to 28s; peas, 28s to 29s per quarter. Flour, America, 24s to 25s; Baltic, 24s to 25s per barrel.

The Seed Market.—Although the supply of seeds on offer has been but limited, the general demand has ruled heavy, and our quotations are barely supported.

The following are the present rates:—Linseed, English, sowing, 50s to 60s; Baltic crushing, 25s to 37; Mediterranean and Odessa, 26s to 38s; hempseed, 28s to 35s per quarter; coriander, 15s to 20s per cwt.; brown mustard seed, 12s to 18s; white ditto, 10s to 12s; tares, 4s to 4s 6d per bushel; English rapeseed, new, £25 to £26 per last of ten quarters; Linseed cakes, English, £5 to £6 10s per 1000; rapeseed cakes, £5 5s to £5 10s per ton; canary, 58s to 60s per quarter.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 8d to 8½d; of household ditto, 6d to 7½d per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Averages.—Wheat, 54s 1d; barley, 34s 5d; oats, 21s 5d; rye, 36s 4d; beans, 37s 8d; peas, 36s 1d.

Six Weeks' Averages that govern Duty.—Wheat, 55s 3d; barley, 33s 8d; oats, 22s 5d; rye, 34s 6d; beans, 37s 8d; peas, 36s 1d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 17s; barley, 5s; oats, 6s; rye, 8s 6d; beans, 5s 6d; peas, 7s. 6d.

Tea.—The public sales of tea which have taken place since our last statement have been well attended by buyers, yet the biddings have been languid at about previous rates. Privately, a fair business has been doing at full prices. No imports have taken place this week from China.

Sugar.—In West India, as well as in Mauritius and Bengal sugars, a steady business has been doing, at full quotations. The refined market is firm, at 1s. per cwt. more money.

Coffee.—In West India coffee only a moderate business has been transacted, though at full prices. Ceylon, as well as most kinds of foreign coffee, are quite as dear, with a fair inquiry.

Hops.—The accounts from Worcester, Sussex, and Mid Kent, continue unsatisfactory, but those from other quarters are favourable. The demand here is in a sluggish state, and prices are with difficulty supported. The duty is called £145,000.

Wool.—The public sales of wool—at which about 23,000 bales have been offered—have been brought to a conclusion. On the whole, they have gone off well, and very fine parcels have been withdrawn. Privately, a good business doing, at full prices.

Coals.—Hetton, 24s 6d; Lambton, 24s 6d; Adelaide, 24s 6d; Gordon, 23s; West Tees, 22s 6d; Adair's, 19s 6d; Holywell Main, 22s; Hartley, 20s 6d per ton.

Smithfield.—Although we have had full average time-of-year supplies of fat stock on offer this week, the general demand has ruled somewhat active, at full prices:—Beef, from 2s 4d to 4s; mutton, 2s 6d to 4s; lamb, 4s to 5s; veal, 3s 4d to 4s 4d; and pork, 2s 4d to 4s per 8lb., to sink the offals.

Newgate and Leadenhall.—Prime beef and mutton have been in steady demand, at full prices. In other kinds of meat next to nothing has been doing:—Beef, from 2s 4d to 3s 4d; mutton, 2s 4d to 3s 8d; lamb, 4s to 5s; veal, 3s 4d to 4s 2d; and pork, 2s 4d to 4s per 8lb., by the carcass.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent).

There have been no circumstances worthy of particular remark during the week in monetary circles. The Commercial Bank of London confirmed at a meeting held on Monday, a previously-passed resolution of dividing their £1000 shares, into ten of £100 each; this judicious alteration has had the effect of improving their value in the market, from the simple fact of their present value rendering them more accessible to small purchasers, and also enabling the brokers to hold, without temporarily sinking a very large capital. The profits of the year were reported at £6300, and a dividend of five per cent declared. Money has shown a slight tendency to advance in value, but its existing abundance must still prevent any hope of profitable employment. The continued fine weather has indeed removed the last apparent chance for the present, in rendering it highly improbable that any alteration in the exchanges is likely to result from the sudden importation of corn. The Consol market has been buoyant, opening on Monday with a good amount of business, and a marked improvement in prices. The broker for the Commissioners of the Savings Banks, took his purchase in the Three per Cent. Reduced, at 100⅝. Consols quoting 99½, for money and time. This price, on Tuesday, improved to 100, the closing quotation standing 99⅞ to par. Consols at par, was, however, too tempting an opportunity of realising, to be readily passed over by the speculators, consequently some large sales were made on Wednesday, the price leading to 99¾ ⅝, and on Thursday, this quotation was not supported, 99½ with a flat market being the closing quotation. The present extraordinary price, of course, renders the market very susceptible, and a sale of any extent immediately influences it. The heavy stocks stand at present as follows:—Three per Cent. Reduced, 100⅝ to ½; New Three-and-a-half per Cents., 102⅛; Long Annuities, 12½; India Stock, 286; India Bonds, 96; Bank Stock, 200; Exchequer Bills, 79-80; Consols, 99½ ⅝.

It will be remembered that some time since, the Government of Buenos Ayres, entered into an arrangement with Mr. Falconnet, the agent of the bondholders, to remit 5000 hard dollars monthly, for the benefit of the bondholders, subject to the approval of the House of Representatives, which was not sitting at the period referred to. On Tuesday, Messrs. Baring, Brothers, and Co., communicated to the Committee of the Stock Exchange the confirmation of this decree, which, although involving a very small amount in comparison with the debt, is still satisfactory, from its indicating some intention of liquidation on the part of an hitherto supposed insolvent State. The price of the stock, consequently quoted 35½ to 36½. Spanish Stock, which Monday's unsatisfactory advices had depressed to 23¾ ½ for the Actives, and 33¼ to ⅜ for the Three per Cents, rallied on Tuesday, advancing to 23½ and 33⅝, prices which were maintained. Mexican has also, during the week, been tolerably firm, at 36⅝, at which price it continues. Portuguese has been, and remains, at 45½ to 45. Spanish, towards the close of the week yielded a point, quoting only 22¾ for the Actives, Three per Cents, 33⅝. Belgian, also, receded to 103⅞; and Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents closed at 62⅛; Five per Cents, 101½.

The Railway Market has shown a tendency to advance on most of the lines, excepting South Eastern and Dover. This, however, is to be attributed to the announcement made at a special meeting on Thursday, of the intended raising of £400,000 on debentures to complete the Ramsgate branch. It will be remembered that the last issue of shares was to pay off the existing debentures, consequently this new loan will be an affair of small moment, as it will be doubtless borrowed at a low rate of interest. The closing quotations stand—Birmingham Stock, 229 to 230; Chester and Holyhead, 5½; Chichester and Brighton, 4½; Edinburgh and Glasgow, 64; Great Western, 134 to 135; South Western, 87; Croydon, 18; Manchester and Leeds, 110; Manchester and Birmingham, 54; Brighton 48¾; South Western, 87; Norwich and Brandon, 11½; Dover, 38 to ⅛; Orleans, Tours, and Bordeaux, 2⅝; Dublin and Cashel, 5⅛; Midland Counties, 99½.

STRAUS and Co., Bankers and Receivers General, Frankfort, or by remitting a post-office order to their office, 26, Bouverie-street, Fleet-street, London. Government Lists of the drawing will be sent to each purchaser.—Office hours from 12 to 3.

REALLY WATERPROOF.—BERDOE'S superior light SUMMER FROCKS, SHOOTING JACKETS, &c.—An extensive variety of the above, in new and greatly improved materials (in lieu of the unsightly rubbish made by slopsellers), now ready, guaranteed to exclude any rain whatever, and confidently recommended to those who regard a respectable appearance, or wish to avoid disappointment and vexation. First-rate Clothing of every description upon the lowest terms possible consistent with true economy and ultimate satisfaction.—W. BERDOE, Tailor, Waterproofer, &c., 69, Cornhill (north side).

EMPLOYMENT.—Persons having a little time to spare, are apprised that Agents continue to be appointed in London and Country Towns by the EAST INDIA TEA COMPANY, for the sale of their celebrated TEAS (Offices, 9, Great St. Helen's Churchyard, Bishopsgate-street). They are packed in showy leaden canisters, from an ounce to a pound, with the prices and weight marked on each packet, and but little trouble is occasioned by the sale; the license is only 11s. per annum, and many, during the last nineteen years, have realised considerable incomes by the Agency, without 1s. let or loss. Application to be made (if by letter, post paid) as above.

LONG LIFE, HEALTH, AND HAPPINESS.—

CURE OF CONSUMPTIVE ASTHMA BY PARR'S LIFE PILLS.

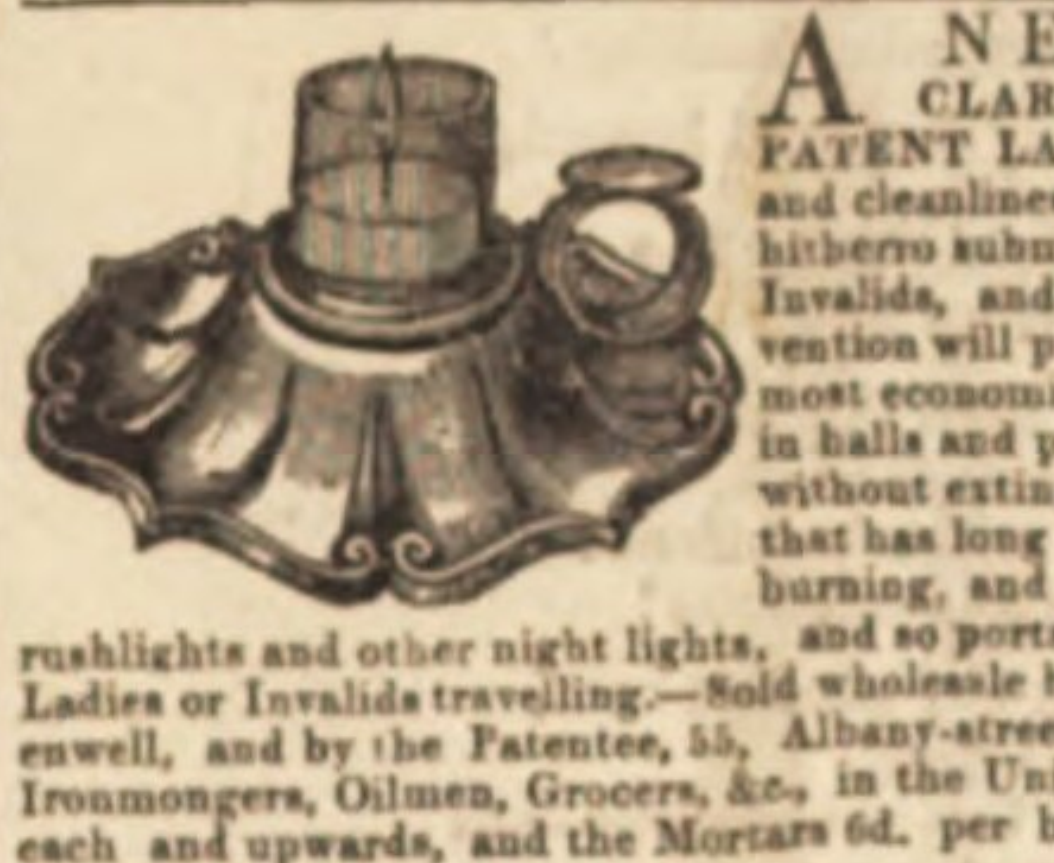
I, ALEXANDER DOUGLAS, do hereby declare the good I have received from taking PARR'S LIFE PILLS. In the year 1840 I was afflicted with a most distressing Asthma, Cough, and Shortness of Breath, which reduced me to death's door; notwithstanding my spending nearly £200 in consulting the most eminent medical men in London and Edinburgh, my disease continued unabated, and I was, as a last resource, advised to try my native air of Dundee, which I did, and, at the same time, was recommended by a friend to take PARR'S LIFE PILLS. I commenced with them in the spring of 1843; experiencing relief, I persevered, and am now, in my 63rd year, perfectly cured, and in better health than I have been for many years. Having just arrived in London, I hasten to make my wonderful cure known to the proprietors; and to recommend something to the afflicted worthy of a fair trial, and no favour. I have recommended them to many of my friends, and they have all found relief.

July, 16, 1844, ALEXANDER DOUGLAS, Farmer.

Witness, to the above, ALEXANDER CUTHBERT, Stolswell-road, Dundee.

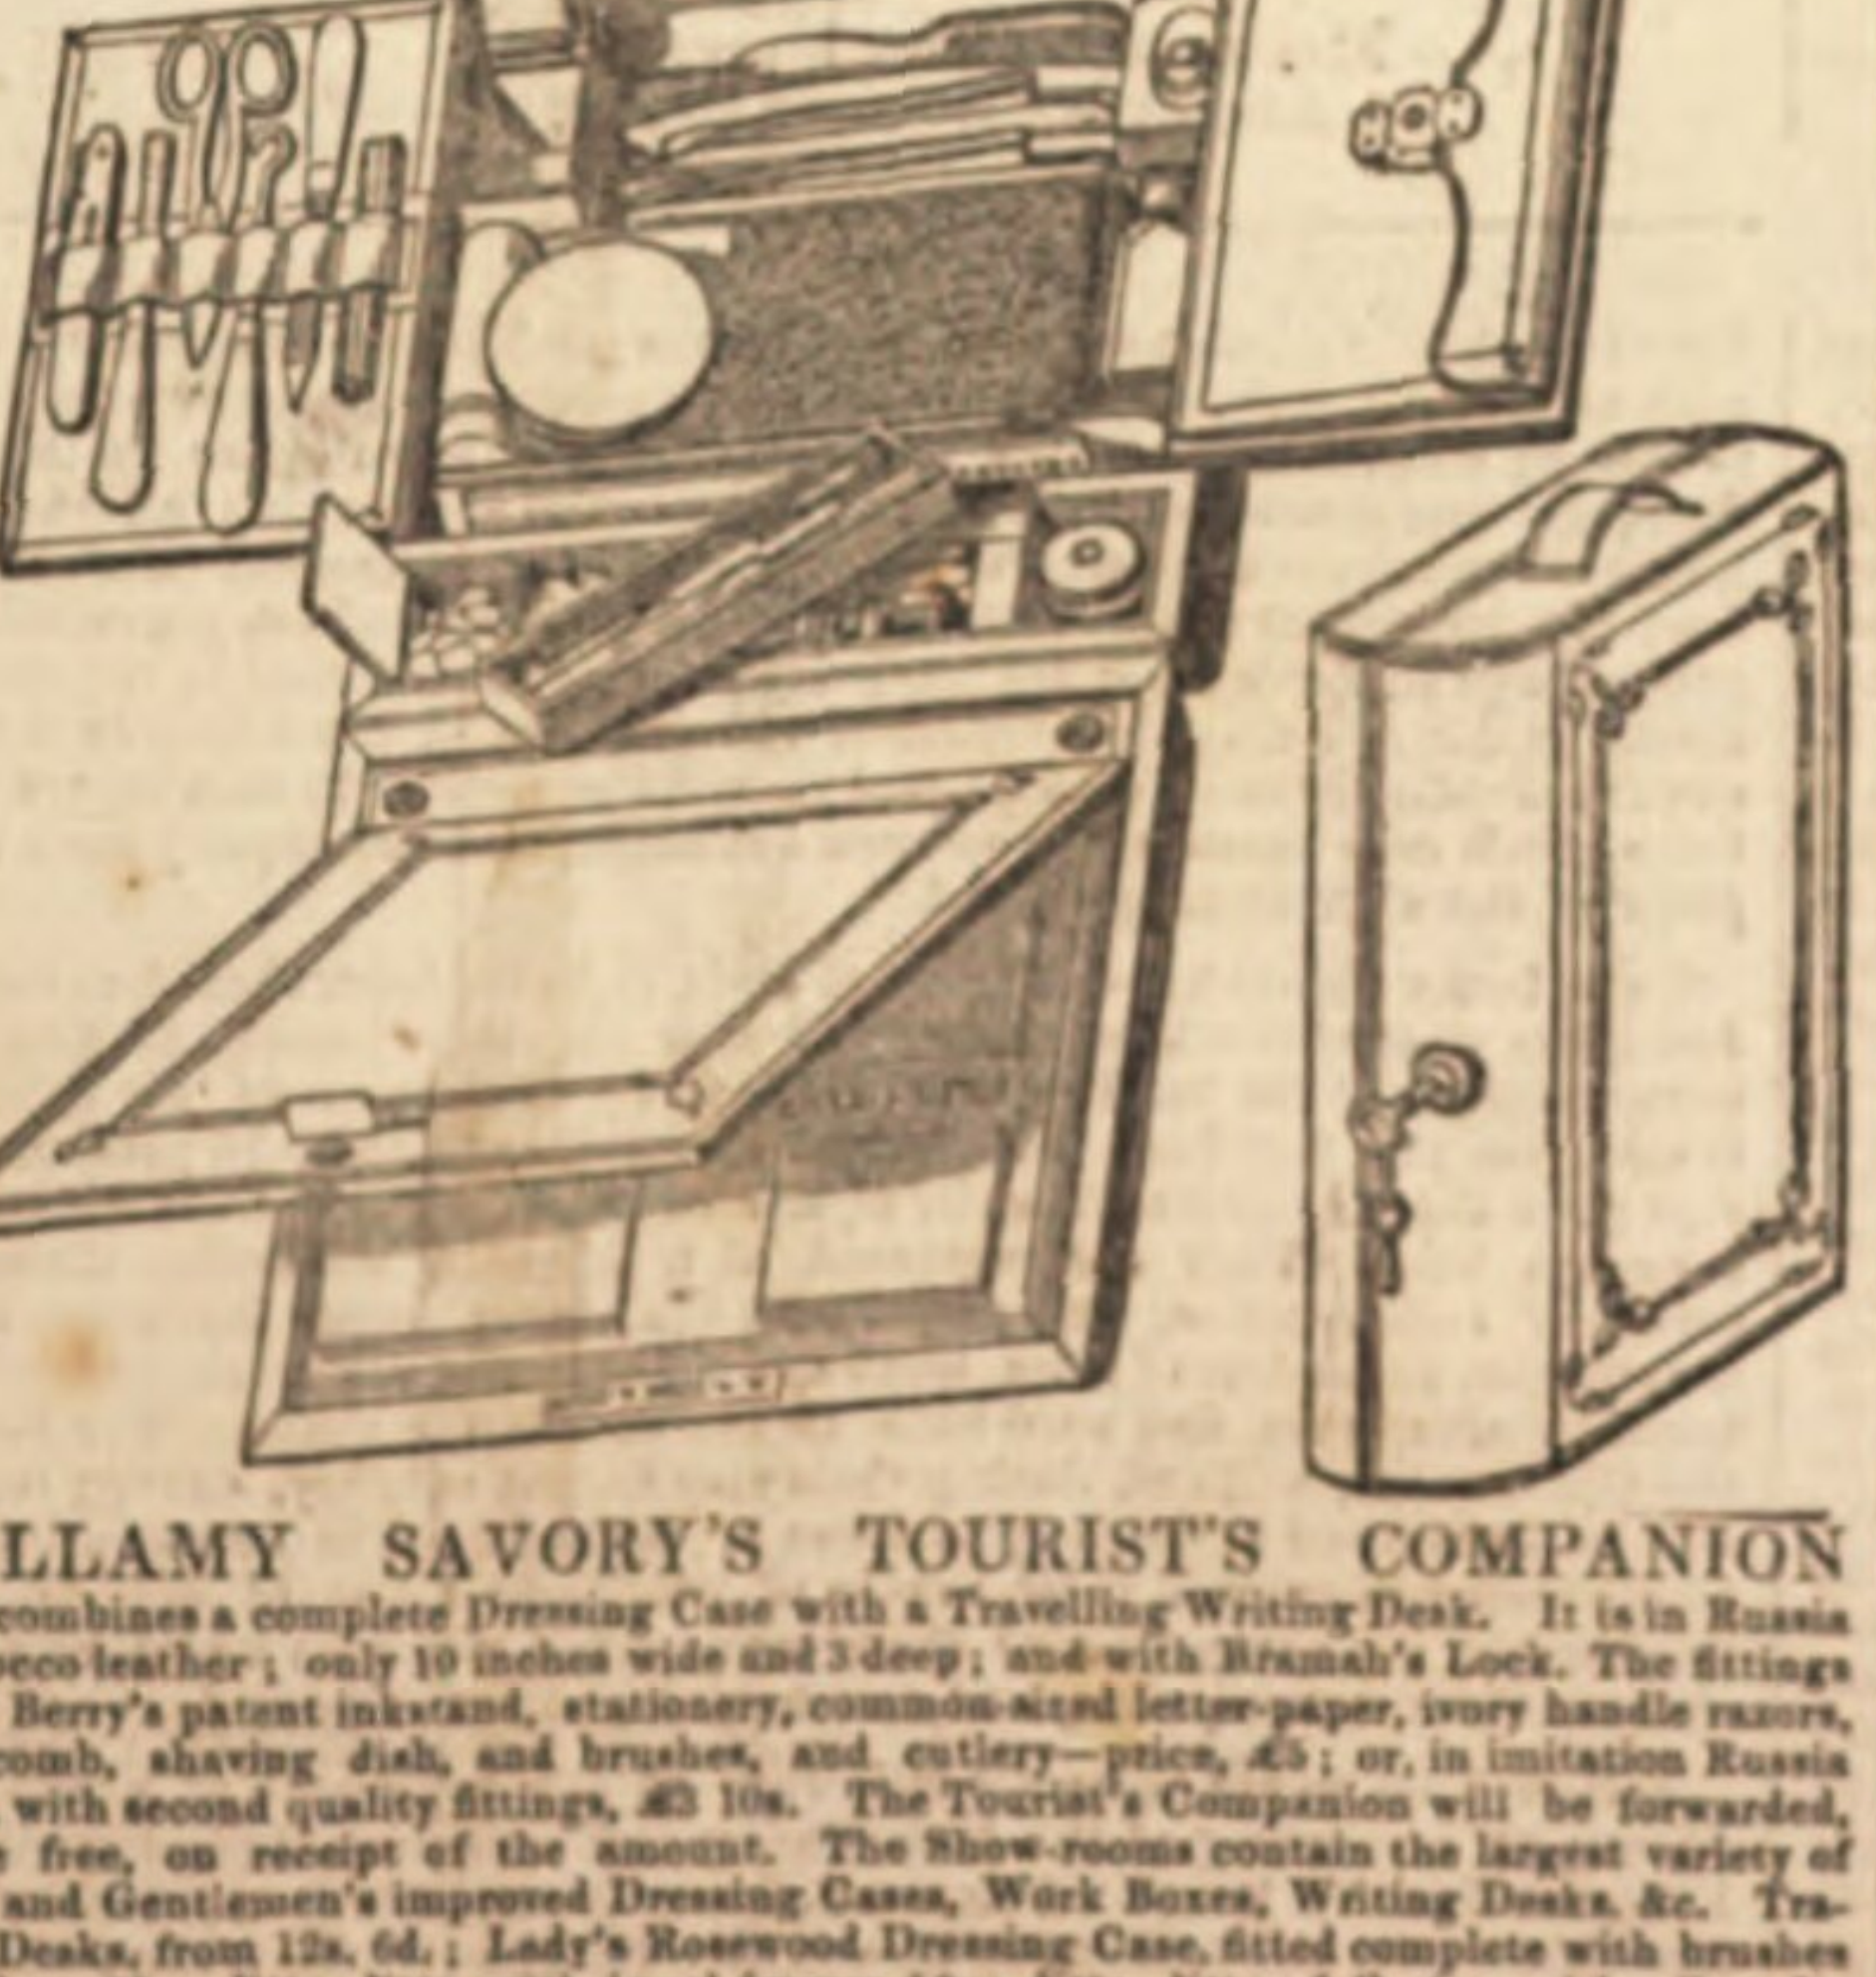
BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

In order to protect the public from imitations, the Hon. Commissioners of Stamps have ordered the words "PARR'S LIFE PILLS" to be engraved on the Government Stamp, pasted round the sides of each box, in White Letters on a Red ground. Purchasers are also requested to observe that a fac-simile of the Proprietors' signature, "T. ROBERTS and Co., Crane-court, Fleet-street, London," is printed on the directions wrapped round each box—without which none are genuine.—Sold by all respectable Medicine Vendors.



A NEW NIGHT LIGHT.— CLARKE'S PATENT MORTAR LAMPS, AND PATENT LAMP MORTARS.—For elegance, simplicity, and cleanliness, this Night Light is very far superior to any hitherto submitted to the public. To Medical Gentlemen, Invalids, and all persons requiring a night light, this invention will prove invaluable, being the best, safest, and most economical ever produced; it will also be serviceable in halls and passages. It can be carried in perfect safety without extinguishing the light, supplying a desideratum that has long been felt. It is free from danger, uncertain burning, and the offensive odour and smoke arising from rushlights and other night lights, and so portable that it will be found a great comfort to Ladies or Invalids travelling.—Sold wholesale by PALMER and CO., Sutton-street, Clerkenwell, and by the Patentee, 55, Albany-street, Regent's Park, London, and retail by all Ironmongers, Oilmen, Grocers, &c., in the United Kingdom. Price of the Lamps, 1s. 9d. each and upwards, and the Mortars 6d. per box, 12, 10, or 8 Mortars in each, to burn 6, 8, or 10 hours.

THE TOURIST'S COMPANION.



BELLAMY SAVORY'S TOURIST'S COMPANION combines a complete Dressing Case with a Travelling Writing Desk. It is in Russia or Morocco leather; only 10 inches wide and 3 deep; and with Bramah's Lock. The fittings include Berry's patent inkstand, stationery, common-sized letter-paper, ivory handle razors, strop, comb, shaving dish, and brushes, and cutlery—price, £5; or, in imitation Russia leather, with second quality fittings, £3 10s. The Tourist's Companion will be forwarded, carriage free, on receipt of the amount. The Show-rooms contain the largest variety of Ladies' and Gentlemen's improved Dressing Cases, Work Boxes, Writing Desks, &c. Travelling Desks, from 12s. 6d.; Lady's Rosewood Dressing Case, fitted complete with brushes and cutlery, 25s; ditto, ditto, with jewel drawer, 50s; ditto, ditto, full size, with silver fittings, 5½ guineas; elegant Rosewood Writing Desks, 11s. 6d.—Bellamy Savory, Stationer and Dressing Case Maker, British Paper Warehouse 46 Cornhill, London.

A NEW and CERTAIN CURE for GOUT, RHEUMATISM, &c. &c. The COD LIVER OIL is now just introduced in this country in its pure state. In every case yet tried it has produced instant relief, and, after a short time using it, A PERFECT CURE; Prospectuses, containing a full account of this remedy, to be had of JONES and Co., 201, Strand, London. To protect purchasers against fraudulent and spurious imitations, the following important Caution must be strictly attended to:—Messrs. JONES and Co. having been appointed as the sole mercantile Agents for this remedy by the only manufacturer, an eminent chemist and practitioner, residing on the Continent, they beg to state that every bottle sent from their establishment will be contained in a wrapper, bearing a fac-simile of their signature, and that the outside wrapper will be further protected by the stamp and address, "JONES and Co., 201, Strand, London.

Wholesale Agents: BARCLAY and SONS, Farringdon-street; E. EDWARDS, 67, St. Paul's Churchyard; SUTTON and Co., Bow Churchyard. Sold in bottles at 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s each.

FOR SEA-SIDE PROMENADES.—Ladies should not neglect a real opportunity to purchase the Spring Novelties at quarter price.—DISON (who acknowledges with gratitude the patronage he has received this short season) has reduced the prices of his remaining fancy stock of mantles, capes, canezoux, collars, &c., in lace, muslin, and tarlatans, to half their original price, and in some instances, where the articles are out of condition or passé, to a third their cost, in order to effect a total clearance before the close of the season. Ladies will likewise do well to lay in a stock of cambric pocket handkerchiefs, as an immense saving is made by purchasing these articles from DISON, who maintains a first-rate reputation for excellent fabrics as well as cheapness Address, DISON, principal Laceman to her Majesty, 237, Regent-street.

WOOLLASTON'S PATENT GELATINE, for immediately making Jellies or Blanc-mange, being quickly dissolved in boiling water. It is of equal strength with the finest Russian Isinglass, and perfectly free from any unpleasant taste or smell, requiring less flavouring than any other preparation of Gelatine or Isinglass being a perfectly pure, colourless, and soluble substance. For Jellies it will not be found necessary to use eggs, as passing through a flannel bag is sufficient. Invalids will find this a very nourishing and valuable restorative, from the great facility and readiness with which it is used, and not being liable to become sour so soon as isinglass.—Manufactured and Sold by EDWARD L. WOOLLASTON, Dover; and retailed by all respectable Druggists, Grocers, and others, at 8s. per pound.

IMPORTANT to FAMILIES FURNISHING.—A considerable saving can be effected in the purchase of Furnishing Ironmongery, by visiting the PANKLIBANON IRON WORKS, 58, Baker-street, Portman-square, where may be inspected the most extensive STOCK of IRONMONGERY GOODS in the Kingdom, consisting of kitchen cooking utensils, German silver wares, drawing-room stoves, shower and vapour baths, ornamental iron work, garden implements, japanned water cans and toilette pails, best Sheffield plate, kitchen ranges, fenders and fire-irons, tea trays, ornamental wire-work, flower-stands, table cutlery, &c. Every article being marked in plain figures, at the lowest possible price, will fully convince purchasers at this establishment of the great advantage resulting from Cash payments, as the Proprietors warrant every article of the very best manufacture, at a saving of at least 30 per cent.—THORPE, FALLOWS, and CO., 58 Baker-street, Portman-square.—A liberal allowance to merchants and captains.

FOR STOPPING DECAYED TEETH.—Price 4s. 6d. Patronised by her Majesty, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent. Mr. THOMAS'S SUCCEDANEUM, for Stopping Decayed Teeth, however large the cavity. It is placed in the tooth in a soft state, without any pressure or pain, and will remain firm in the tooth for many years, rendering extraction unnecessary, arresting the further progress of decay. All persons can use Mr. Thomas's Succedaneum themselves with ease, as full directions are enclosed.—Prepared only by Mr. THOMAS, Surgeon-Dentist, 64, Berners-street, Oxford-street. Price 4s. 6d., and can be sent by post. Mr. THOMAS continues to supply the Loss of Teeth on his new system of Self-adhesion, without springs or wires. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation whatever. At home from Eleven till Four.

PRESERVES and CONFECTIONERY.—The superiority of BETTS'S PATENT BRANDY, for Preserves and Confectionery, is testified by the fact that it is preferred to any other spirit by the most extensive Wholesale Confectioners in the Metropolis; for fortifying Home-made Wines it is invaluable; as an ordinary Beverage it is congenial to the most delicate constitutions; and, as a Medical Stimulant, it is peculiarly adapted to persons of bilious or dyspeptic habits. Quantities of not less than Two Gallons, supplied at the Distillery, 7, Smithfield Bars, in Stone Jars, at 18s. per Gallon, exclusive of the price of the Jar; and in Glass Bottles, at 20s. per Gallon, Bottles and Case included.

Consumers of Brandy are respectfully informed that J. T. BETTS, Jun. and Co. will not be responsible for any Bottled Brandy that is not protected against fraudulent substitution by the Patent Metallic Capsules, made of pure and solid metal, (not tin-foil,) embossed with the words "Betts's Patent Brandy, 7, Smithfield Bars," to which attention is especially directed.

MOURNING—Court, Family, and Complimentary.—The Proprietors of the London General Mourning Warehouse, Nos. 247 and 249 Regent-street, beg respectfully to remind families whose bereavements compel them to adopt mourning attire, that every article (of the very best description) requisite for a complete outfit of mourning may be had at their establishment at a moment's notice. Widows' and Family Mourning is always kept made up; and a note descriptive of the mourning required, will ensure everything necessary for the occasion, being sent (in town or country) immediately. Ladies requiring Silks—either Satins, Satin Tures, Watered or Plain Ducapes, and Widows Silks, are particularly invited to a trial of the new Corbeau Silks introduced at this house, as they will be found not only more durable, but the colour will stand the test of the strongest acid, or even sea water. Black and Grey, and Fancy Mourning Silks of every description. The Show Rooms are replete with every novelty that modern taste has introduced in mourning millinery, flowers, collars, head-dresses, bugle berthes, trimmings, &c. &c.—The London General Mourning Warehouse, Nos. 247 and 249, Regent-street, near Oxford-street.—W. C JAY, and Co.

ROWLAND'S ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE.— Under the patronage of her Majesty the Queen, H. R. H. Prince Albert, the Royal Family, and Nobility.—A fragrant White Powder prepared from Oriental Herbs of inestimable virtue for strengthening, preserving, and cleansing the Teeth. It eradicates the factitious formation of tartar, and by the removal of that extraneous substance, lends a salutary growth and freshness to the gums. It removes from the surface of the teeth the spots of incipient decay, polishes and preserves the enamel, substituting for discolour and the aspect of impurity, the most pure and pearl-like whiteness; while, from its salubrious and disinfecting qualities, it gives sweetness and perfume to the breath. Price 2s. 9d. per box, duty included.

CAUTION.—To protect the public from fraud, the Hon. Commissioners of her Majesty's Stamps have authorised the Proprietors' signature to be engraved on the Government Stamp, thus:—A. ROWLAND & SON, 20, Hatton Garden, which is affixed on each Box

 All others are Fraudulent Counterfeits!!!

THE HAIR.—Of the numerous compounds constantly announced, for promoting the growth or reproduction of the Hair, few survive, even in name, beyond a very limited period, whilst ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, with a reputation unparalleled, is still on the increase in public estimation. The singular virtues of this successful invention for Restoring, Preserving, and Beautifying the Human Hair, are too well known and appreciated to need comment. The very facts of the high and distinguished patronage it enjoys, its general use in all countries, together with numerous testimonials constantly received in its favour, are authorities which stamp its superior excellence and title over all attempts of a similar nature. Being universally preferred, its consequent great demand excites the cupidity of unprincipled shopkeepers, who vend the most spurious trash as the "GENUINE" Macassar Oil; whereas, the genuine article is wholly the invention and property of A. ROWLAND and SON, and the amalgamation of its costly exotic materials (solely imported by them) renders abortive any attempt to discover its component parts—thus proving the imposition of all other articles bearing the title of "Macassar Oil." The genuine article has the words ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL engraved in two lines on the Wrapper; and on the back of the wrapper nearly 1500 times, containing 29,028 letters.—Price 3s. 6d., 7s.; Family bottles (equal to four small), 10s. 6d.; and double that size, 21s. per bottle.— All others are FRAUDULENT COUNTERFEITS!!!

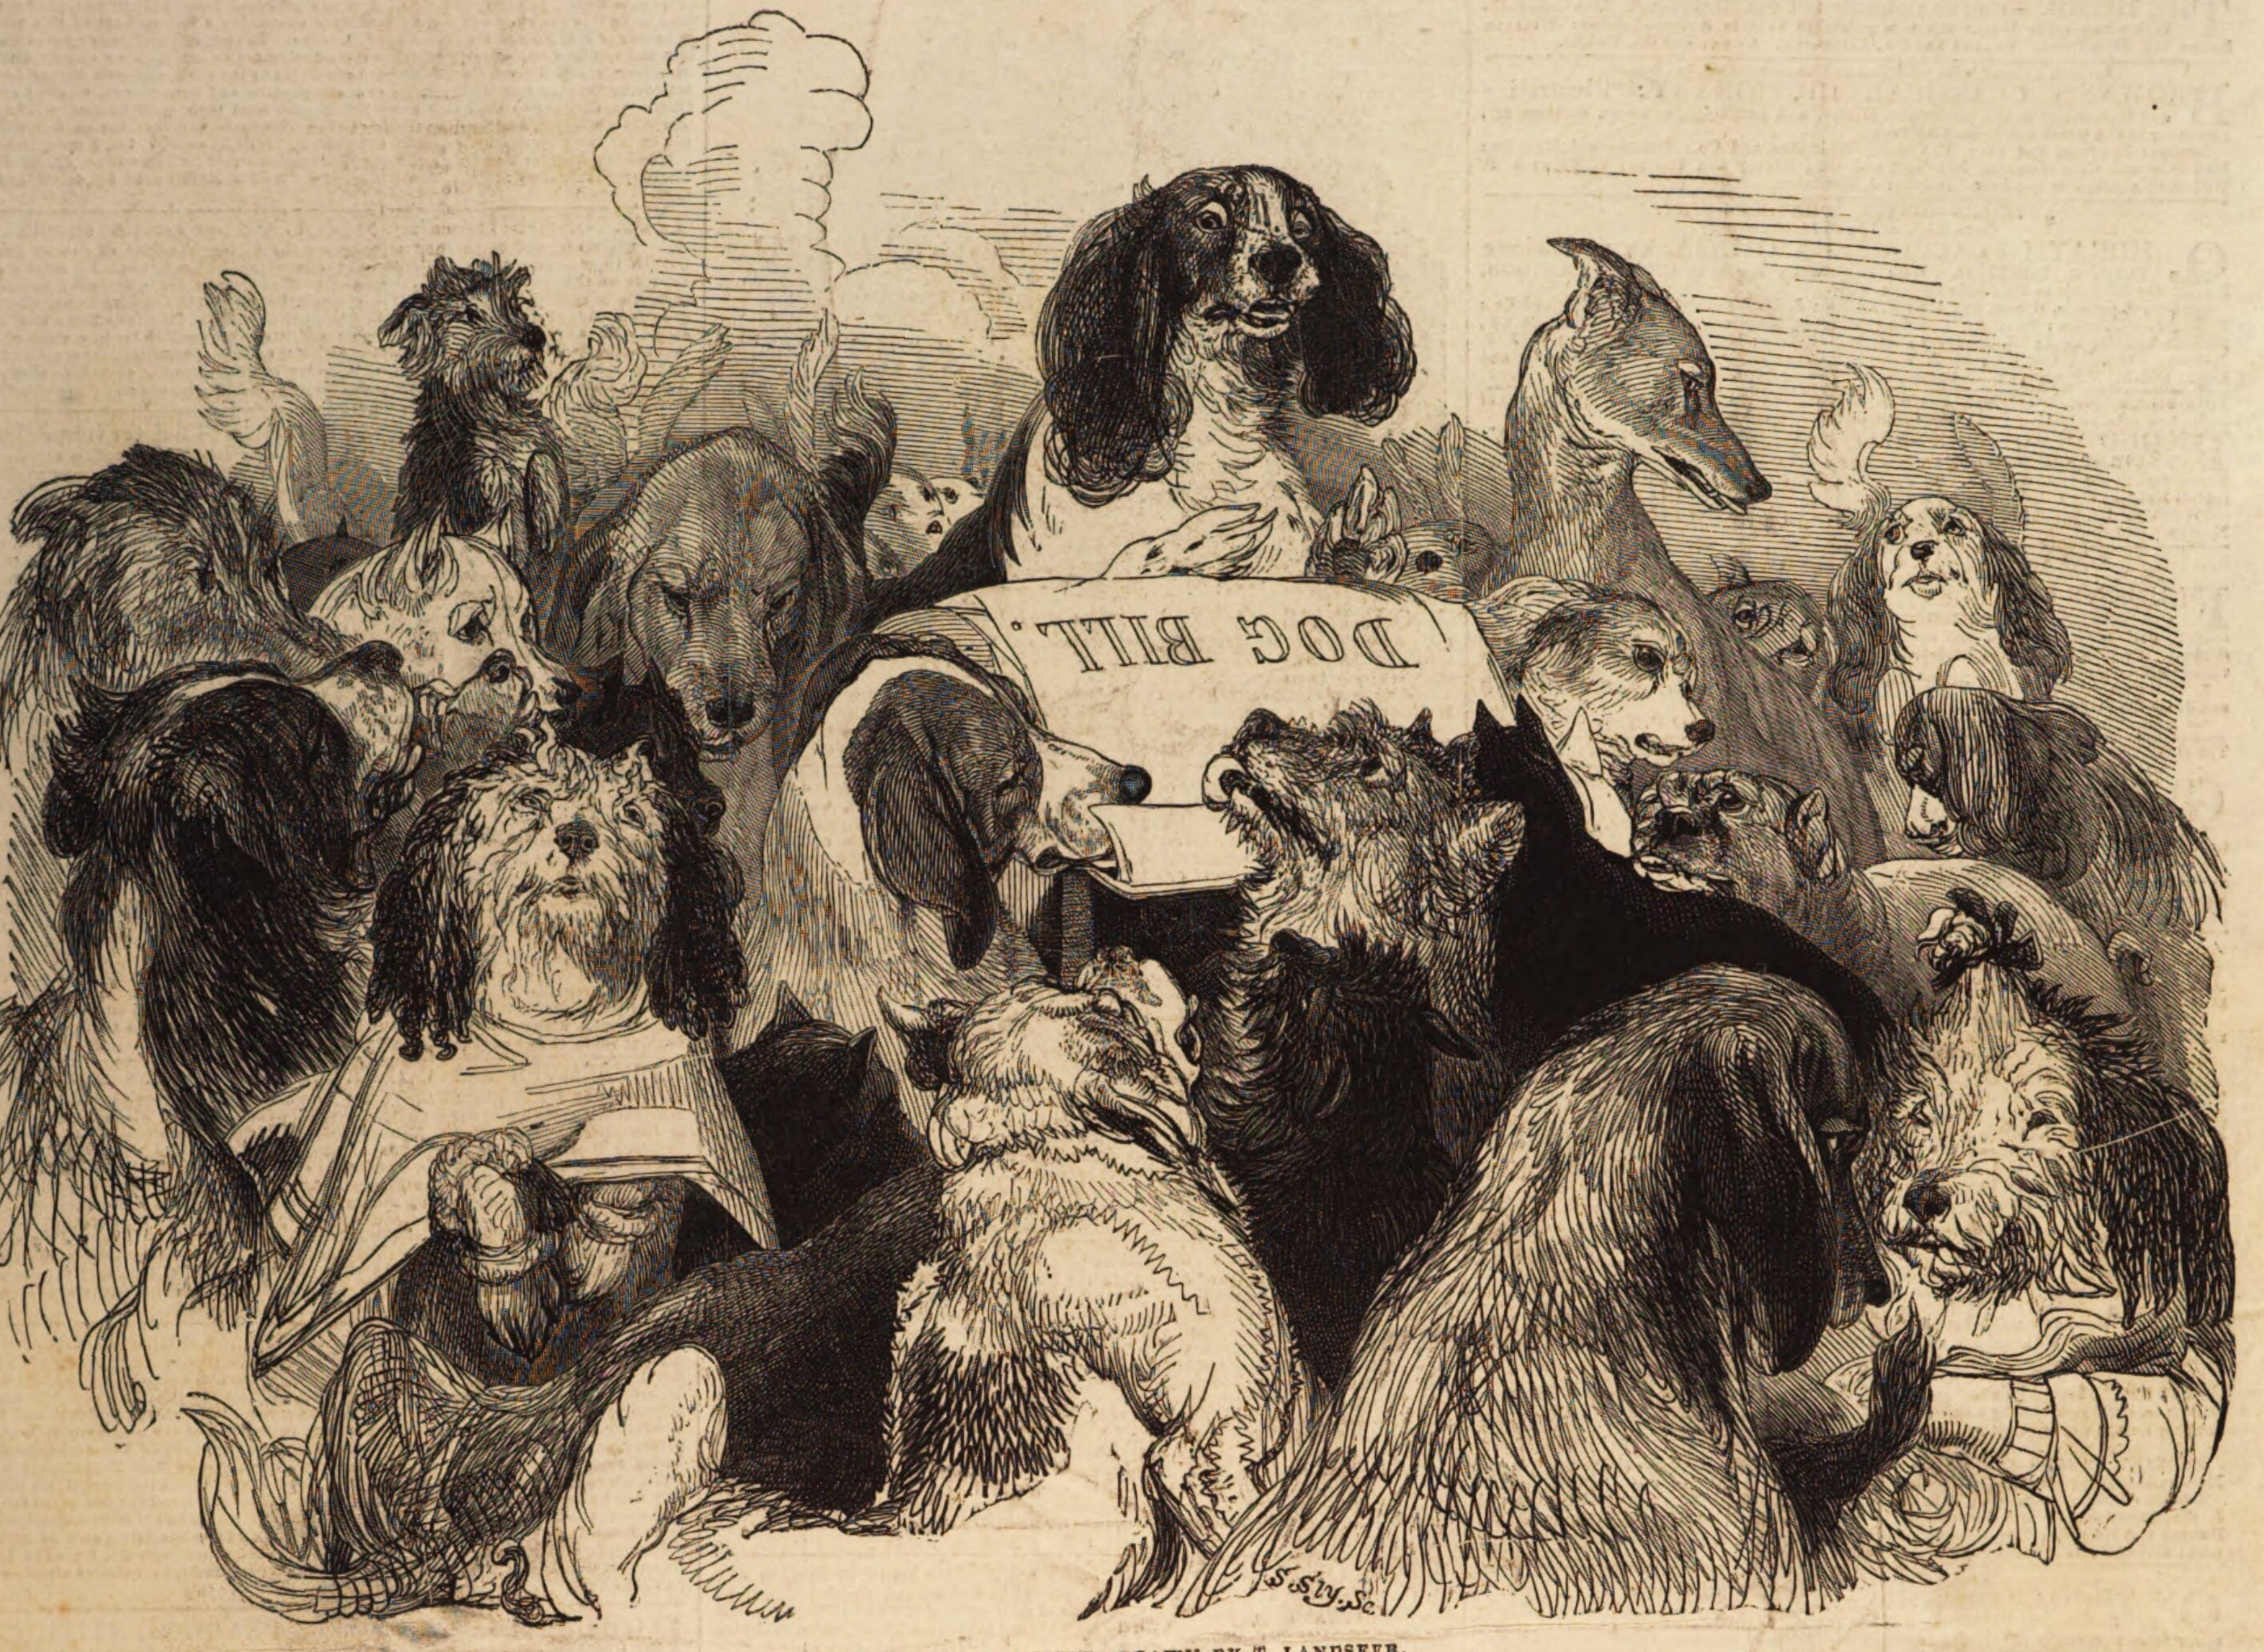
IMPORTANT.—Any article purchased, or ordered, if not approved of, exchanged, or the money returned.

Observe.—E. MOSES and SON, Tailors, Wholesale and Retail Woollen Drapers, Outfitters and General Warehousemen, 154 Minories, and 86, Aldgate, City, opposite the church.

CAUTION.—E. Moses and Son are obliged to guard the Public against imposition, having learned that the untradesman-like falsehood of being connected with them, or it's the same concern, has been resorted to in many instances, and for obvious reasons. They have no connexion whatever with any other Establishment; and those who desire genuine Cheap Clothing, should call or send to 154, Minories, or 86, Aldgate, opposite the church, to prevent disappointment, &c.

N.B. No Business transacted at this Establishment from Friday at sunset until sunset on Saturday, when Business is resumed until twelve o'clock.



DOG BILL.
S. Sly. Sc.

THE DOG BILL COMMITTEE—DRAWN BY T. LANDSEER.

DOG-STEALING.

[Mr. Liddell moved that the Select Committee on Dog-stealing (Metropolis) be composed of the following members:—Mr. Liddell, Captain Rous, Mr. Kelly, Mr. Henry Berkeley (Bristol), Mr. Beckett Denison, Mr. Vernon Smith, Mr. Fitzroy, Mr. Mackinnon, Sir John Yarde Buller, Major Beresford, Viscount Barrington, Mr. Montague Gore, Lord Arthur Lennox, Sir Robert Pigot, and Mr. Richard Hodgson.]

Come all you thieves of idle dogs,
And idle dogs—of thieves,
And listen to our Muse to-day,
As plaintively she grieves!

Your members have been stealing all—
Now, get ye in a stew—
For Members of our Parliament
Are stealing over you!

Each M.P. 's a Columbus now,
With dog-bill in his hand,
As though each new found puppy were,
In fact, a new found land!

If this be justice unto you,
We're sure it's far-fetched, very;
Must dogs have bills as well as birds?
Then justice is Dog-berry!

Yet so it is! dogs stolen now,
Alas! and more the pity!
Have been returned to Parliament,
And got into committee!

Old sporting members of old clubs—
White, Crockford, Brooks, or Boodle,
Will soon examine all your race,
From bloodhound down to poodle.

To answer legal questions then
No more must you de-mur,
They'll get at every man and thing
That's going to a-cur!

So far their zeal concerning you
All human reason flogs,
They would transport the Isle of Man
To save the Isle of Dogs!

Let every mortal from this day,
Who men of dogs would diddle,
Unkennel all his wits, and so
Beware of Mr. Liddell!

John Bull! fill thy precautious head
With more precaution fuller!
To hide the bull-dog in thy yard
Away from John Yarde Buller!

Dogs, list to your committee's voice—
No more let stealers gammon you,
But let the world laugh while it hears
The Commons' House examine you.

You little terrier! quiet, you!
No more of that 'ere larking;
Or else Hal Berkeley there will think
You've just arrived from barking!

Stand firmer on your pins, old hound,
Less tipsy and repining,
Or you'll make Beresford believe
You've hardly left off wine-ing!

What, Pug! come hide those ivory teeth,
Curl less that tail capacious,
Or some pug-nose will take offence
At you, and turn pug-nacious!

Spaniel, drop down thy modest ears,
Or Kelly will be laying
Odds that you saw this moonshine law,
And sudden fell a-baying.

Pigot and Lennox stately sit,
Although their benches are low;
But 'mong the dogs they catechise
Who's member pray for Carlo?

Mackinnon hath a hungry look,
And eyes that seem to say,
I wish the other dogs would bring
Up something on the Tray!

Miss Fanny bolts, while Fitzroy cries
Halt—back her—stop her—ease her;
And Gore makes commentaries on
The evidence of Cæsar!

Rous loudly says—not mincing ought—
I'd like to see the witch
That all you pretty pups have brought
To represent Hounds-ditch!

While Denison greets Pompey now
In most familiar manner;
Smith eyes the skin of "black and tan,"
As though he were a tanner.

Barrington's dog-star rages now,
For his wise head hath what I call
A dogged wisdom in his eyes
Which makes him look dogmatical.

Now speak ye up, ye canine tribe,
To framers of our laws;
And when they've tak'n your evidence,
Why you may take your paws!

They surely see their dogs meet now—
As dogs ne'er met at will;
They've brought them to the scratch without
One cat's clause in their bill.

But dog-thieves never more shall make
A living at their ease;
The more the dog is bred to them,
The less he's bread and cheese!

And idle dogs that go astray,
Must all go home, says "Solon;"
For though they may have stolen away,
They never can be stolen!

Some of you white ones twice dyed red,
That men who stole might sell you,
Will be, when your committee barks,
Read a third time, I tell you!

THE NEW HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT.—The final meeting of the Commissioners of Fine Arts for the season took place recently at Gwydyr House, when the following six artists were chosen for the execution of works on given subjects for the decoration of the New Houses of Parliament:—Charles West Cope, Hyde-park Gate, Kensington Gore; John Calcott Horsley, 1, High-row, Kensington Gravel Pits; William Dyce, 1A, Royal-terrace, Adelphi; Daniel Maclise, 14, Russell-place, Fitzroy-square; Richard Belgrave, Hyde-park Gate, Kensington; William Cave Thomas, 27, Baker-street, Portman-square. It is understood that the commission to each artist will be to execute a cartoon upon a given subject, to be afterwards transferred to fresco in the usual manner for the decoration of the interior of the House of Lords. The six subjects are, it is supposed, intended to fill the six panels forming the interior of that apartment. The Commissioners having also inspected the models for sculpture in Westminster Hall, state, that they consider the exhibition as highly creditable to the country. At present they limit the selection of artists to three—viz., Mr. Caller Marshall, John Bell, and John Henry Foley, for employment in decorating the New Palace at Westminster. The Commissioners expressly state, however, that the selection of these gentlemen does not imply the exclusion of other sculptors. The Committee appointed to inquire into the present state of the building of the New Houses have made a report, from which we take the most essential extracts. They say:—"Your Committee have examined Mr. Barry as to the progress already made in the buildings of the New Houses of Parliament, and have endeavoured to ascertain from him the probable time that will elapse before the whole of the works can be completed, and the period at which the two houses may be occupied for the transaction of public business. He has stated to them, that, were it urgently required, the houses, and a certain number of committee-rooms and other offices, might be prepared for occupation at the commencement of the year 1846; but your committee do not feel themselves justified in affirming that such occupation could take place without inconvenience to the members, or impediment to the further progress and satisfactory completion of the building; and they think it right to observe, that the general arrangements for ventilation cannot be completed till the commencement of the year 1847. Your committee have examined various parties as to the course hitherto adopted by Mr. Barry, with reference to alterations of the interior arrangements shown in the plan approved by committees of both houses in 1836. They impute no blame to Mr. Barry for that course, and have every reason to believe that all the alterations hitherto made have conduced to the convenience and general effect of the building; but, looking to the misapprehension that appears to have prevailed as to these proceedings hitherto, they are prepared to recommend that in future Mr. Barry should make a half-yearly report of the progress of the works to the Commissioners of Woods and Forests; and should also submit to that Board any alterations which may hereafter be deemed advisable, and accompany such report with plans of the alterations proposed."

THE IOWA INDIANS.—A party of Iowa Indians, from their hunting grounds, 500 miles west of the Mississippi, are now on their passage to England. The party consists of the head of the tribe, who, with some of his chief warriors, their wives and families, will amount in number to 15 or 16 persons. It is the first time that the principal chief of a tribe has ever quitted his native shores for a foreign land. They are possessed of a splendid wardrobe, including every article of Indian attire, and travel with their tents, camp equipage, canoes, and a beautiful collection of rifles, bows and arrows, and other implements manufactured by savage art, and used both in war and in the chase. The Iowas, unlike the Ojibbeways, will not, during their stay in this country, occupy lodgings, but will be encamped in some open space in the metropolis or suburban districts, where they will exhibit their habits of life, their mode of warfare, and, where practicable, the navigation of their canoes, and also give a performance of their characteristic dances, rites, and ceremonials.

A New York paper gives the following as the argument of a simple-minded African at a meeeing of the Anti-Slavery Convention:—"My grandfather war a King in Africa! a King! You see before you some ob de royal blood! But de Americans cum and stole away de son ob a King, to make a slave ob him. Wat d'ye tink ob dat? Perhaps you don't tink much ob it; but what would de Americans say, if de Algerines war to cum and carry off young Bob Tyler?"

PRINCE ALBERT AND HIS FRIEND.—Prince Albert, having determined to devote some portion of his leisure time to the management of bees, has caused a portion of the royal domains, in the immediate vicinity of her Majesty's aviary, to be appropriated for the purpose of carrying this intention into effect. Two beautifully-constructed hives, of American manufacture, filled with bees, were brought to Windsor, on Wednesday, by Mr. Sholl, the patentee. Mr. Sholl, who is a Quaker, was in attendance at the spot where the hives have been fixed, to explain the nature and the peculiarity of their internal arrangements; by means of which the surplus honey can be easily removed, without (as is the case with the usually-constructed old-fashioned hives) destroying the industrious inmates. It has been communicated to the Prince, that bees in these hives will make three times as much honey as they will need for their winter subsistence; thus giving, as it were, two thirds of their labour to their landlord for the rent of their habitation. The Queen and the Prince, not leaving Frogmore House until within a few minutes of two o'clock (the hour for her Majesty's luncheon), had not time, on their return to the Castle, to inspect the hives. Mr. Sholl, who was waiting alone, with considerable anxiety for the arrival of her Majesty and his Royal Highness, ran out to them when he saw them pass by the entrance of the new apiary, and thus addressed these illustrious personages, with his hat undoffed, of course, being a Quaker:—"Friends, won't you look at the hives? They are all fixed, Friends: pray, come and look at them." The Queen and the Prince, however, hastily passed on to luncheon at the Castle, laughing heartily; evidently very good-humouredly enjoying the temporary disappointment of their "Friend" in drab. It is expected that the new apiary will be placed under the superintendence of Mr. Walters, who has the entire care of her Majesty's rare and highly curious collection of fowls, &c., at the Royal Aviary.

THE RIOTS IN AMERICA.

NOTWITHSTANDING the history of the past generation and the experience of the present one, with respect to America, do each furnish matters of unpleasant contemplation to England, there is yet a very general disposition on our part to think the best we can of the Western Republic. Pity it is the citizens of the "free and enlightened" state will not give us more cause to think better of them than we do; and less frequent occasion for thinking worse. Our older grievances are as much forgótten here as if they had never existed; and all that made the English Government of the day so little, and the name of Washington so great, is now surrounded with the dimness and mists of tradition. We have had Napoleon on our hands since then; and if Waterloo itself is more frequently recalled to our recollection by the existence of "the Duke," than by any sense of its consequences, it is no marvel that Bunker's Hill is remembered no more, or only as one of the "battles long ago," which are given over to the historian of the past, having no effect on the present or the future. These old quarrels are here quietly inurned, though they still stir and work on the other side of the Atlantic, in July orations, and other more questionable shapes—a thing more, perhaps, to be regretted than wondered at. To come down nearer to our own times, there are many matters about which we have no small reason to be dissatisfied with our Western offshoot. The "Pennsylvanian Bonds" business is not yet either forgotten or forgiven—for men and nations are alike in this, that they sooner pardon an open defeat than being made the victim of a swindle—and in this country, the transaction we allude to is considered nothing else. But we repeat, notwithstanding all these causes of discontent, old and new, there is a vast mass of public opinion in favour of America and her people: the whole English nation are not bondholders, and every body (though the assertion is scarcely a safe one) has not read the sarcasms of the Rev. Sydney Smith.

We wish, for the sake of both countries, that the good opinion that does exist may increase; but we have our fears on the subject, and they have been augmented by the last accounts from the "States."

In one of the principal cities of the Union, a riot which swelled into something not unlike a civil convulsion, has taken place, the origin and progress of which exhibit some sad defects in the working of the Republican Constitution. In the first place, in the very land, as it has been called, of religious freedom, there is evidently as much religious bigotry and intolerance abroad in society as there might be found in the statute-book of England, or, still worse, of Ireland; the difference being that in England, the old oppressive and intolerant laws have become dead and inoperative, from the freer spirit of the community, while in America it is the people who persecute with the most indiscriminating violence. The madness which the mob of London caught from their mad leader, Lord George Gordon, more than "sixty years since," is revived in all its fatal licentiousness by the inhabitants of the "City of Brotherly Love,"—the capital of the state founded by the sect who, above most others, learned the lesson—which they so fully practise—of Toleration, in the school of Persecution. There is nothing the Americans so strongly insist on as the fact that they are a "progressing" people, and they look with very thinly-disguised contempt on the states of the "Old World," for their want of the "movement" principle. It is but questionable progress, we think, that carries the present back into the worst barbarities of the past. How fast are they proving that their Constitution is a deception! It declares all men equal and free, and upholds a system of oppressive and degrading slavery, with such determination, that the friends of liberty can hardly hope for its cessation. It announces religious freedom to all—but burns the churches and chapels of those who hold a different faith!

The promise of the Constitution and its performance are truly of no kin together. In fact, taking the discrepancies between the theory and practice of the Constitution, the weakness of the Executive Government, the vicious principle of pushing party and election interests into the administration even of the criminal laws, the continual fever of excitement in which every one is kept by being always electing or preparing to elect,—are producing results most injurious to public and private morality. Many have hitherto looked on America as an example by which we should profit; but there is too much reason to fear that she will become only a beacon to warn us what to avoid. We may envy the physical well-being of her people, but it is more due to her vast territory, which, stretching to the south and west, will give space, and life, and action to the unborn generations of centuries to come. We can admire, too, the enterprise and energy of the race—though, to our cost, they have pushed their "smartness" beyond the verge of honesty; but we cannot extend that envy or that admiration to her political constitution, which seems to produce actual oppression without intending it. Of the cheapness of her Government, we do not doubt; the mere machinery of a State is not costly, and the Governments of Europe are more oppressed by their public debts than their public establishments. This is an evil that will never be felt by America, if she persist in denying her debts when payment is demanded. Whether it may not procure her expulsion from the money market of the world as a defaulter, is another question, one which the Americans themselves may yet find it difficult to answer.

Every public event of importance in the United States, so far as it exhibits the working of their political and social system, is sure to attract the attention of Europe: the late riots at Philadelphia will attract that notice, and the result of it will be an unfavourable impression both of the governing power and the body governed. It shows the existence of national hatreds and religious jealousies ready to shed blood without scruple; it shows that the Government is not strong enough to check that spirit; and, when driven by peril to property to interfere, acting without decision or promptitude. It is also evident that in the cities of America, as well as in the old and corrupt capitals of Europe, there are masses of savage and desperate men, made so by ignorance, vice, or want, or probably by the combined action of the three things so often found together, and who are ready to turn every accident to an opportunity of plundering. Even from this evil, the larger capabilities of America have not saved her.

THE BRITISH FLEET IN THE GIBRALTAR ROADS.

It is a goodly sight to see
The hundred-years-old greenwood tree
Vast, in its burly pride, among
Thousands of brothers, old and young,
Rearing, majestic as they stand,
A forest on the mighty land!

Too rooted in their strength to fall,
The Goddess Nature built them all.
When they are hewn by branch and stem
Man works his strength to build with them,
And every sturdy trunk that falls
Makes one brick in our wooden walls.

The axe, the saw, bring them no wreck,
They turn to rib, to mast, to deck!
They form our ships—which when they meet
Strong on the waters—lo! a fleet!
So the land-wood of grand old trees
Has grown a forest on the seas!

Behold it! Yonder looms a Rock
To stand the cannon's wildest shock,
To bid the loud war's thunder roar
Nor tremble on its iron shore—
Yet cannot its stone strength compete
With the proud firmness of that fleet!

There, on the waters, far away,
Gaze on it as it rides to-day.
Its firm peace-anchors grasp the deep,
And all its great war-thunders sleep.
Most royally it holds its place
With Ocean proud of its embrace!

Yet, 'neath that rock, by snow or sun,
It could do what it once hath done,
And wake, as it hath woke before,
And startle lands from shore to shore,
And build new trophies up to fame,
And crown again our British name.

A Nelson-inspiration thralls
The souls that fill those wooden walls,
And hands and hearts and hopes are there
That spurn defeat and scorn despair,
And in the fight would own no cry
Whose echo was not "Victory!"

'Neath every rock, near every land,
So fair may our Ship-prowess stand,
Where Commerce flies with golden wing,
A peaceful, bright majestic thing;
But, with a war-defiance hurl'd,
King of the Waters of the World!

English and Foreign Ships in the Mediterranean.—According to the latest accounts from Gibraltar, the following ships of war are in that bay:—Her Majesty's ships Caledonia, Albion, and Warspite; the Danish frigates Gefion and Thetis; the Norwegian frigates Freia and Josephine, and a sloop of war; the Norwegian frigate Josephine has the Prince Oscar on board. The force the French have there with the Prince de Joinville is as follows:—The Jemmappes (three decker), the Triton and Suffren (both two deckers), the Belle Poule (frigate), and the following steamers:—The Gassendi, Asmodée, Veloce, La Phare (steam frigates); and the Rubis and Pluton (steam sloops.) In addition to these there are two steamers and a brig of war in Tangier. The Dutch have at this port the Rhyn and Jasen frigates, and the Snelheid corvette. The Swedes the Freia and Josephine frigates, and a heavy Swedish corvette. The Spaniards have a 74-gun ship (name not known), the Christina frigate, the Manzanares (22 guns) brig, besides six or seven smaller vessels of war.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

FRANCE.

The Paris papers are devoid of important facts.

The fêtes in honour of the "three glorious days" of the last Revolution have been celebrated in Paris this year with great éclat. Unfortunately, however, three lives were lost, and several persons severely injured, in the rush made by the crowd at the termination of the fireworks to see the illuminations.

The latest news from Morocco is contained in the following letter, dated Marseilles, July 29:—

The French steamer, La Ville de Paris, entered at this port at five o'clock A.M. Captain Double, orderly officer attached to Marshal Soult, came as passenger with despatches from General Bugeaud. From information which may be relied on, Marshal Bugeaud informs his Government that he had received despatches from the Emperor of Morocco, to the effect that he had ordered the Calipha, who had attacked the French troops, to be put into chains, and to be placed at the disposal of Marshal Bugeaud. The Marshal replied that he should refuse receiving the prisoner until he had received further instructions from his Government; and that in the mean time he should continue hostilities against the Emperor. Marshal Bugeaud, on the 22d current, had his head quarters at three leagues from Ouchda, and was continuing to burn the villages and destroy the crops on the Morocco territory. The same day (22d) the Marshal sent despatches of a most pressing nature to the Prince de Joinville. The French army is well provided with provisions, and in high spirits.

Captain Double quitted Oran on the evening of the 22d.

The Chamber of Deputies has adopted the Paris and Strasburg Railroad Bill by a majority of 73 against 31.

In consequence of the quantity of business still remaining for consideration before the Chamber of Peers, the Parliamentary session cannot, it is said, be officially closed before the 5th of August.

At the Theatre Français a new drama, in five acts, has been produced, under the title of "Diegarias," being the first production of a maiden muse. The author, M. Victor Sejour, seems to have drunk deeply at the same fountain as M. Victor Hugo and M. Alexandre Dumas. This piece, abounding in all the faults of inexperience, contains, nevertheless, some powerful scenes, and, on the whole, it was very well received, though not of a nature to command anything like lasting popularity.

SPAIN.

The Madrid letters of the latest date are destitute of interest. The Cadiz papers mention that the Prince de Joinville was still there on the 20th ult.; that an English squadron had arrived in the bay of Tangier, and that one vessel had entered the port. The Prince de Joinville had made a remonstrance on the subject to the commanding officer of the squadron, from whom he received every satisfactory explanation, and afterwards returned with his fleet to the bay of Cadiz.

The siege of Saragossa had been raised.

PORTUGAL.

The letters from Lisbon of the 24th ult. state that on the previous Sunday the Duke of Palmella broke a blood-vessel in his lungs, and still continued in a very dangerous state, though not given over by his medical attendants.

The French frigate Adour had arrived from Cadiz. She is one of the vessels belonging to the Prince de Joinville's squadron, which she left at Cadiz.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs has addressed an official communication to his colleague of the Finance Department, stating that he will be able to effect a reduction of about 13 contos in this branch of the expenditure.

A most decided case of Asiatic cholera had taken place on board a Prussian vessel at Lisbon. The patient, however, was in a fair way of recovery.

GREECE.

Accounts from Athens state that some sensation had been created there, in consequence of a supposed attempt, on the part of a sergeant of gendarmerie, to assassinate King Otho. This singular accident occurred in the forenoon of the 7th ult., about ten o'clock. A man in the uniform of the gendarmerie rushed suddenly past the sentinel at the front of the palace towards the garden, with a large paper petition in his hand, which he began to wave, shouting at the same time "Long live Alexander the Great." The sentinel called to him to stop, and pursued him as he approached the private door of the palace, as all access to the interior by this side is prohibited. The second sentinel, seeing what was going on, placed himself before the door, and presented his bayonet, calling to the gendarme to stand. The unfortunate man then drew his sword, and getting past the soldier, rushed to the corridor, when the sentinel finding it impossible to stop him otherwise, transfixed him with his bayonet, and he fell severely wounded. By some it is doubted whether the man had any intention of attacking his Majesty, and they believe that he really intended to present a petition to the King. There is no doubt the man was deranged. His case is very singular. His name is Emanuel, and he is a native of Asia Minor. He is a man of about six feet high, of a prepossessing appearance, and served during the whole of the revolutionary war, though not yet more than 40 years of age.

TURKEY.

Advices from Constantinople of the 10th ult., allude to the great excitement produced there by the publication of a French pamphlet, in which the Turkish Minister of Finance and a celebrated banker and contractor are accused of a long-continued and enormous system of plunder upon the state purse. A report was in circulation at Constantinople that the Russians had been beaten in a severe battle with the Circassians, and had lost a large portion of their army. This report, however, requires confirmation, as several of the letters make no mention of it. A letter from Tabreez gives further accounts of an earthquake which took place there on the 12th of May. The shock was felt at Ispahan, Kashan, Fehzan, and the intermediate country. At Kashan many houses have been thrown down, and several people killed. The great Mosque Mussidi Shah, at Ispahan, has been injured. At Mecanna more than half the houses have been ruined, and many of the inhabitants have been killed, and others badly wounded. In some of the villages in the environs not a house has been left standing.

THE UNITED STATES.

More Rioting in Philadelphia.—The royal mail steamer Britannia has arrived with accounts from New York to the 15th ult., and Boston and Halifax to the 18th. The New York papers contain accounts of the renewal of the riots at Philadelphia between the native Americans and the Irish Catholics. The disturbances were of a very serious character, and it is difficult to give an accurate version from such a mass of details as the papers contain, but we believe the following comprises the main incidents of the origin and progress of the affray:—On the 5th ult. a report prevailed that a number of muskets had been conveyed by the Irish Catholics to the Church of St. Philip de Neri, in Queen-street, Southwark, Philadelphia. The report caused much excitement; the street was soon crowded with citizens, the sheriff and two aldermen were sent for, the building was entered, and ten or a dozen muskets were found. A committee of the citizens was subsequently appointed, and, after much consultation, the church was again entered, to search for more arms. It is solemnly averred, in a document signed by the committee and an alderman, that they were met at the church door by two Irishmen, with loaded muskets and fixed bayonets. These were immediately disarmed. The party entered a room, and found 27 muskets. The priest was found officiating at the altar: he was seized, and asked if he had any arms or ammunition. He replied in the negative. They subsequently found a quantity of arms, bullets, cartridges, gunpowder, and percussion caps. The excitement increased greatly after this. Crowds poured in from all the surrounding districts, and matters appeared to be so threatening, that troops filled the streets, and threatenings were heard in every quarter against the Irish party, respecting whose intentions the most absurd rumours prevailed. On the next day the excitement increased, and a mob assembled before the church in the evening, with appearances so dangerous as to draw to the spot a military force, with two field-pieces, under General Cadwallader. The general threatened to fire unless the crowd dispersed, and promptly arrested and confined in the church Mr. Naylor, an ex-member of Congress, who attempted to interfere. It does not appear, however, that the crowd did disperse, or that the threat was then put into execution. On the contrary, tumultuous proceedings continued during the night. Two pieces of cannon were brought to bear on the church by the mob, and on Sunday morning the doors were battered in, and Naylor released. He besought his rescuers to disperse quietly. They said they would if the Irish military company of "Hibernia Greens" left the church. The soldiers did so, and were pelted with stones by the mob. Some fell wounded; the rest fired, killing two or three of their assailants, and then attempted to escape. They were pursued by overwhelming numbers, and many of them wounded with their own bayonets, or beaten unmercifully. Meanwhile the church, being undefended, the mob rushed in, tearing and destroying everything within reach; and the riot continued to rage until General Cadwallader again appeared on the scene, and again took possession of the church. This was at eight o'clock on Sunday evening, and for a short time it seemed as if order was about to be restored.

Soon afterwards, however, a new riot broke out, and led to more fatal consequences. It commenced in a collision between another party of the military, called the "Cadwallader Greys," commanded by Captain Hill, and a portion of the mob which they were trying to disperse. The order to fire was given, it is said, without notice, and a murderous discharge took place up and down two of the principal streets. Seven, it is stated, were killed instantly, and a great many, including some females, badly wounded. The crowd fled in all directions, but collected again. A mob broke into a public building containing muskets, carried away a considerable number, and commenced firing on the soldiers, who soon found themselves exposed to an irregular discharge from covered positions on every side. The mob soon obtained possession of three cannon, taken from on board two vessels lying in the river. They also had procured a considerable number of muskets and other fire-arms. The cannon were loaded with various substances, one of them with a thirty-feet chain, which killed or wounded a number of the military, particularly the members of the National Artillery, a company of Native Americans. The firing with musketry was kept up briskly, and the mob took shelter in, and fired from, the houses and alleys in the vicinity upon the military, who changed their position, and were drawn up in front of St. Philip's Church, which recedes a short distance from the street. The military had obtained the upper hand when the accounts came away, but tranquillity was by no means restored. Several of the rioters had been arrested, and examined on charges of riot, high treason, and murder.

It was impossible to ascertain the numbers killed in these riots. One paper estimates it at 13, and the wounded at upwards of 50.

The New York papers give dreadful accounts of the destruction of property and life by the overflowing of the western rivers. For a region of more than a thousand miles, along the Missouri and Mississippi, above St. Louis, the inhabitants have been deprived of their cattle and crops, and in many instances their houses and barns also; while the soil itself, for hundreds of thousands of acres, has been either seriously injured or totally destroyed.

Under the head of "Important from Nauvoo," the New York Herald gives the particulars of the murder of Joe Smith, the prophet of the Mormons, and also of his brother Hiram. They were murdered in cold blood by a gang of ruffians, who attacked the gaol in which the prophet and his brother had been placed for security, There was a tremendous excitement at the west in consequence of their deaths. A dreadful civil war was expected.

The steam-ship Great Western arrived out at New York on the 7th ult. The commercial news from New York is rather more favourable.

The Washington Hotel, a large and handsomely furnished building, situated in Broadway, was destroyed by fire on the 5th ult. Loss, forty thousand dollars.

There has been another boat accident on the Ohio, of which the Cincinnati Gazette gives the following particulars:—The steamer Palestine caught on fire just above the mouth of the Ohio on the 19th. When the alarm was given, the wildest confusion prevailed. A rush was made for the yawl which was suspended at the stern of the boat; fourteen passengers crowded into it—one of the ropes was cut to prevent others from getting aboard, and all in it were precipitated into the water. Two of them only escaped. The rest, in seeking to avoid death by fire, met it in the flood of waters around them.

MEXICO.

The accounts from Mexico to the 20th of June are important.

The Mexican Congress has refused to grant Santa Anna the additional 30,000 men and 4,000,000 of dollars which is required for the invasion of Texas. Mexico, it is stated, has now a force of 36,000 men.

The letters from Monte Video are of the 21st of May. The war there was raging fiercer than ever, and provisions very scarce.

IMPORTANT EVENTS AT TAHITI.

It is not many months since that the English public were startled with the announcement of the aggressions of Admiral Dupetit Thouars at the island of Tahiti. His conduct towards the defenceless Queen Pomare excited general indignation here, albeit some of the excited and unquiet spirits of La Jeune France thought proper to do the French Admiral honour and present him with a sword. A correspondent of the Times, a British officer, a title which guarantees the authenticity of his statements and is a sure proof of his personal honour, gives a very interesting narrative of the events which have occurred at the island subsequently to the period when Admiral Dupetit Thouars forced the Queen to accept the so-called Protectorate of France. This correspondent commences by explaining some circumstances connected with the first occupation of Tahiti, which speak "trumpet-tongued" of the sort of persuasion used by the French to induce Queen Pomare to accept of French alliance. He says, in a letter dated Papeete, March 2:—

The paper presented to the Queen was worded in such a jesuitical manner as to deceive Europe into the belief that it was a voluntary act of the Queen; whereas the alternative was the French guns opening on her people, and laying her towns in ashes. The trivial pretext seized on with such avidity, of the Queen placing a crown set round with cocoanut leaves, and not inserting some device to please the French in her private flag, is too flimsy to blind any one not wilfully so. Some excuse was wanted to haul down her flag. This answered for want of a better: 400 marines were landed in presence of two of the Queen's chiefs; her flag was violently taken down, and the French colours then hoisted; they are still flying. The Queen, being apprised that it was the intention to seize her, and place her eldest son (a boy about seven years old) on a nominal throne, governed by a French regency, fled to her Majesty's ketch, the Basilisk. She was received by Lieutenant Hunt, who gave up his accommodation to her Majesty, her husband, and three children, with some other persons of rank. She has resided for several weeks on board this little vessel, not being permitted to land. Some time ago, hearing that her subjects had fled from their homes, had assembled in the mountains, and were in a great state of excitement, of her own accord she despatched a letter, which was seized by the French governor. It has been construed into treason against the Majesty of France. I append an authenticated copy, and mark it No. 1.

The narrative of the British officer proceeds as follows:—

Some of the chiefs were invited in and seized—one of them loaded with irons. They are all still confined on board the frigate Ambuscade. A proclamation was published ten days ago; it is also appended, and marked 2. These chiefs merely fled, dreading the punishment their friends had received.

On Sunday week soldiers came to a house where the Queen's female attendants resided; they threw their things and the Queen's furniture about, turned them out, and have turned the house into a prison. The poor people, having no shelter, have, since then, resided in the British chapel.

The French governor has strained every nerve to put this place into a fit state of defence; he boasts that if two months more be given him, he would defy any ship to enter. The small island in front of the harbour is having an earthen embankment of 12 feet raised on it! 15 32-pounders are to be mounted, also barracks built for the gunners. Commanding the entrance to the harbour barracks are built, and a battery being erected, to be armed with 14 8-pounders. Other works are being constructed behind the town on the rise of the hill. The French war steamer went with the proclamation to prevent the natives passing on the isthmus. Some of them returning to their homes, have been stopped; several have lost their money and other property. The governor has gone with 400 soldiers to erect a fort and hem the people in; an Englishman went with him as a pilot to take the frigate and steamer as far as water would permit. The acting governor has issued a proclamation, which I also enclose and mark 3, declaring this place in a state of siege. All English officers are obliged to be on board at eight o'clock P.M. Last night parties were found destroying all English boats hauled up on the beach: a few renegades who are a disgrace to their country have had their property spared. An owner of a vessel, who has just sold it to the French Government, not being able to procure any English house, is residing with his wife and his young children in a native one. He wrote mentioning that his wife is ill, daily expecting her confinement, and requesting he might be permitted to keep a light, but has been refused. He called on the acting governor—informed him of the dangerous state of his wife—the same apathetic reply was given, that no exception could be made in his favour.

A French officer, high in employ—no less a person than the Commissary-General—the day before yesterday publicly stated, in presence of some Englishmen, that if the natives rise, and are joined by any Englishmen, he would go, and with a pistol, be the first man to shoot Mr. Pritchard, the British consul.

The letter then states that the French commandant of police had arrested Mr. Pritchard, the British Consul; the details of this proceeding will be found in the next page.

The following are the official documents referred to in the narrative of this ominous and disgraceful transaction:—

No. 1.—POMARE'S LETTER TO THE CHIEFS.

Health to you all. I make known to you that our ship of war is about to leave: it has been sent for by the Admiral to return to Oahu. There is here a small ship of war to watch over us—another is coming. Do not listen to the men who will pain you by reporting that we shall not be assisted. Britain will not cast us off. Let our conduct be good, and wait until the despatches arrive.

This is my word to you—do not on any account cause evil to grow. By no means illtreat the Frenchmen. Have great patience. Take me for a pattern, and follow me, and let all of us pray very earnestly to God that he may deliver us from our trials as he formerly did Hezekiah.

Peace be with you all. Pomare.

No. 2.—FRENCH ESTABLISHMENT OF OCEANIA.

In the name of the King of the French. The Governor of the French Possessions to the people of Tahiti.

Taaniri, Kaheahu, Potowai, and Teraitane, refused to listen to my word of peace; in consequence I declare them rebels.

Their goods shall be put under sequestration. Eight days are given them to make their submission. The district affording them refuge shall be laid under a contribution, which shall be fixed according to the importance of the district.

The persons friendly to peace and the laws remain tranquil under the protection of France. The severity of the laws shall reach the guilty.

Done at Papeete, the 17th of February, 1844. Bruat.

No. 3.—FRENCH ESTABLISHMENT IN OCEANIA.

The commandant for the time being of the Society Islands declares what follows, viz.:—

Art. 1. Until the return of his Excellency the Governor, the establishments of the bay comprised between Cocoanut Point and the barracks of the Uraine are declared in a state of siege.

2. All European and native residents must be within their houses at evening gun-fire, and not receive any person after that hour.

3. After evening gun-fire until that of morning, the patroles, commanded by an officer, and police rounds, commanded by a commissary of police, can demand entrance or open by force and search any house that may appear suspicious, or in which they may suspect a meeting of persons besides those who inhabit the house.

4. At evening gun-fire all the fires in the native houses must be put out.

5. The boats of foreign ships, of whatsoever nation, must have left the beach at evening gun-fire, taking with them their whole crew and all the passengers who have come on shore during the day. It is forbidden that any officer, sailor, or passenger should sleep on shore.

6. From one gun-fire to the other, foreign ships are warned that, besides the shots to which they would expose their men in sending a boat on shore, the crew of the boat will be arrested, and the boat immediately sunk or destroyed.

7. If the patrol or rounds of gendarmerie find in the houses which they visit people who do not reside there, besides the arrest of those persons, of that of the proprietor, the confiscation or immediate destruction of all wine, alcohol, or other spirits, the houses may be destroyed, and their materials transported, at the convenience of the commandant for the time being, to construct guard-houses, magazines, or useful shelter for the garrison.

8. Whether the establishment preserve its tranquillity, or that it should become disturbed by any cause, it is expressly forbidden to Europeans and native Indians to leave their houses. Those who do not conform to this order will expose themselves not only to arrest, but to the fire of the patrol.

9. The agents of the native police, whose duty it is to watch at night, shall come each night to the barracks of the gendarmerie, which they will not leave for their duty without a light, and accompanied by a French gendarme.

10. The officers of the establishments whose duty or any other motive shall require their being out of their house after gun-fire, must have a light.

11. At evening gun-fire, all whale-boats and canoes belonging to residents or natives must be hauled up at least ten times the length of the boat from high-water-mark. Any boat or canoe found afloat after eight o'clock will be sunk or destroyed.

12. All whale-boats, boats, canoes manned by natives, or containing any who may come into the bay, or who may wish to leave it during the day, must come to the station-house, that they may be searched, to make sure that they do not contain alcohol, wines, munitions of war, arms, or anything suspicious.

13. Boats of French men-of-war who wish to come on shore, or remain there, after gun-fire, must be provided with a light as well as the officers of the fleet.

14. It is forbidden to strangers and natives to fire or explode boxes, whether by day or night, in the whole space in the state of siege. Transgressors will be arrested, their arms seized, and their houses searched.

(A True Copy.) D'Aubigny, Commandant.
Guillan, Captain of the corvette commanding the harbour.
Papeete, March 2, 1844.

Accident to the Starlight Steamer.—On Sunday evening, the Starlight, iron Chelsea boat, on her passage down the river, at nine o'clock, ran foul of Westminster bridge, and received such damage as prevented her from making the pier by at least ten feet, at which distance she grounded, fortunately for all on board, at low water. The passengers got safely on shore, and next day the vessel was got afloat, and was towed away to the Company's wharf for repairs.

ARRIVAL OF THE OVERLAND MAIL.

A telegraphic despatch has been received in Paris, which gives the following summary of the news brought by the Overland Mail:—

The Indian Mail arrived at Marseilles the 29th July, bringing news from Bombay to the 19th June, and from China to the 1st May.

The fact of Lord Ellenborough's recall was known at Bombay the 6th June, on which an express was immediately dispatched to Calcutta. His lordship would have known his recall, it was expected, by the 15th.

The assembly of the Beloochee chiefs passed off most orderly, but the result come to is not yet known.

The revolution in the Punjaub has as yet had no further consequences than the defeat and murder of Ittur Sing.

The district of Boorhampore has been taken possession of without resistance, and has, it appears, been restored to the Mahrattas.

The papers by the Overland Mail have since been delivered in London, and we subjoin the only details of interest regarding the death of Ittur Singh. On the evening of the 6th of May the troops encountered the enemy, who, however, averse to a battle so late in the day, retreated and took up a strong position in a village named Nourangabad, some distance from the right bank of the Beeah. On the morning of the 7th the troops of the state advanced, and the insurgents being drawn out in line a cannonade was commenced. The Gooroo Bheer Singh having been mortally wounded by a cannon ball, which crushed both his legs, and received besides a sabre cut across the shoulder, one of the generals of the army of Heera Sing asked leave to go and see him. This officer, named Golab Singh, was on his way met by Ittur Singh, by whom, after an altercation, he was shot; his followers immediately fell on Ittur Singh and put him to death, and his head having been struck off was forthwith sent to Lahore. Kashmeera Singh also fell in the conflict, having first offered to surrender, but afterwards resented an endeavour to make a prisoner of him, and the soldiers being deprived of their leaders fled. The news of the victory, and the head of Ittur Singh reached Lahore almost simultaneously between ten and eleven at night, and a salute was immediately ordered to be fired in commemoration of the great victory obtained at Nourungabad by some forty thousand men, with one hundred and twenty guns, over not seven thousand insurgents. At Lahore it was said that the loss on both sides was one thousand men killed. The wounded were not taken into account.

NEWS FROM CHINA.

The populace of Canton rose against the quarter where the factories are situated, but the tumult was promptly put down.

The following is given as the origin of the dispute at Canton:—It appears some Manilla seamen, belonging to a Swedish ship at anchor at Whampoa, had some quarrel with the Chinese, who began to pelt them with stones, upon which the Manilla men charged the mob, and it is said stabbed a Chinese. The mob, however, after having been dispersed in the first instance, soon returned, and threw stones at the seamen in the Company's Garden, and the latter had to take to their boat. As usual in such cases, the mob then assembled in front of the factories in formidable numbers, and some apprehensions were entertained that they might proceed to violence, but a detachment of police and soldiers was sent by the authorities from the city, and the mob was dispersed soon after dark without having done any damage.

Murder of the Hon. Erskine Murray and Party.—We are sorry to learn from the Hong Kong Gazette, of the 23d April, that Commander the Hon. Erskine Murray, who had proceeded with a couple of vessels to Borneo to form a settlement there, and to establish friendly relations, was betrayed and treacherously murdered, with several of his party, by the Sultan of Coti.

ATTEMPT TO ASSASSINATE THE KING OF PRUSSIA.

The following official account has been received of an attempt upon the life of the King of Prussia. The document was issued at Berlin in the form of a circular letter to the Prussian Legations, from Baron Bulow, the Minister of Foreign Affairs:—

"The Lord has prevented a great calamity! At the moment that his Majesty, on his journey to Erdmansdorff, in Silesia, went into his carriage, in which her Majesty already was seated, for the purpose of driving to the railway terminus, a madman fired both barrels of a double-barrelled pistol at him. One of the balls missed altogether, and the other, without wounding, only left a slight trace on the breast of his Majesty. Her Majesty the Queen escaped the imminent danger by just at the moment accidentally leaning forward; and in this way the ball, which otherwise inevitably would have hit the Queen, passed behind her. Their Majesties, notwithstanding this dreadful event, proceeded, nevertheless, on their journey to Ersmansdorff, where, Heaven be thanked, they arrived in safety. The perpetrator has been arrested, and has undergone a preliminary examination.

"Berlin, July 26." (Signed) "Bulow.

The following is an extract from a publication of the Minister of Police on the subject:—

"The perpetrator was, with a great deal of exertion, saved from the rage of the populace, and committed to the watch-house. He has been identified as a man by the name of Tscheck, formerly Burgomaster of Storkon, and states, as the motive of his crime, that several petitions for another appointment had been without effect. He has been committed for trial.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Monday.

The business transacted was principally of a routine character. The royal assent was given by commission to a number of bills, among which were the Sudbury Disfranchisement Bill, and the Actions for Gaming Discontinuance Bill. The Transfer of Property Bill and the Party Processions (Ireland) Bill were read a third time and passed.

The Duke of Buccleuch explained the provisions of the Metropolitan Buildings Bill, and moved the second reading.—Lord Campbell opposed the measure, on the ground that it made an improper interference with private property. On a division, however, the second reading was carried, and the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS—Monday.

The house met at noon, to discuss the Merchant Seamen's Bill, which went through committee. The Criminal Justice (Middlesex) Bill and the Controverted Elections Bill were read a third time and passed. Several other bills passed through a stage with rapidity.

Charitable Bequests and Donations (Ireland) Bill.—Sir J. Graham, in moving the second reading of this bill, stated that the object of it was to remove anomalies in the existing law; and assured the house that the measure was framed in the spirit of peace, and with due consideration to the circumstances of Ireland. The Roman Catholic Church in that country would not accept an endowment from the state, but it was desirable that individuals who were actuated by a spirit of piety should be enabled to contribute to the comfort and independence of that body of pastors who were the religious teachers of a large proportion of the population of Ireland. If the bill were accepted in the same spirit, it might, he believed, become the foundation, the corner-stone of that temple of peace which the right hon. baronet (Sir R. Peel) near him had expressed a confident hope might be raised at no distant time, when the Queen of this realm should visit her Irish dominions, and appear on her throne in the west, actuated, he was sure, by the kindest feelings towards all her subjects, and appealing to the hearts and affections of a generous, a gallant, and a still loyal people.—Mr. M. O'Ferrall and Mr. Bellew did not put the same construction on the bill, to which they objected, as the Catholics of Ireland considered it might operate to their prejudice. Mr. Bellew also said that the Government had not consulted the Roman Catholics respecting the bill.—Lord Arundel, on the other hand, returned thanks to the Government for the conciliatory spirit evinced in the measure.—Sir R. Peel defended the Government, professing, in the same tone as Sir J. Graham, their sincere desire to benefit the Roman Catholic population. Sir Robert read extracts from a work of Mr. Scully, showing the disadvantages under which Roman Catholic charities labour in the existing state of the law; and after explaining how these disadvantages are removed by the bill now in progress, appealed to the house whether it must not be disheartening to a Government thus earnestly exerting themselves for improvement, to be met with these ungracious comments upon their motives.—A controversy ensued, which was chiefly of a religious character, and a motion was made to get rid of the second reading, but eventually the bill was read a second time, by 71 to 5. The bill also went through committee. The house adjourned at half-past ten o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS—Tuesday.

Roman Catholic Penal Acts Repeal Bill.—The Lord Chancellor moved that the report on this bill be brought up, and entered into a lucid explanation of the grounds upon which it had been framed. Various penal acts against Catholics, passed in barbarous times, were still on the statute books, and it was thought just as well as expedient to repeal them—because from their very absurdity and severity it was impossible to enforce them. The Lord Chancellor enumerated twenty-four penal measures against Catholics, of which we select a few samples. For instance, an act of Edward VI. directed a certain form of prayer to be used in all churches, and forbade any person from attending any different form under pain of imprisonment. It was found impossible to compel Catholics to renounce the spiritual jurisdiction of the Pope in this realm, and yet persons who did acknowledge it were subject to the penalties of premunire, and even high treason. By an act of Elizabeth persons were compelled to attend their parish church at least once a week; and persons who became reconciled to the Church of Rome were also subject to the penalties of high treason. Another absurdity was, that every Catholic priest who said mass was liable to a penalty of two hundred marks, and every person who heard it to a penalty of one hundred marks, although it was notorious that mass was now said in all the Catholic chapels. The Lord Chancellor then proceeded to say that he now came to another of these penal acts, the 31st of Elizabeth, which required all persons to conform, and provided that all parties who did not attend their parish church should be called upon to conform; and that if they refused or neglected to do so, they should abjure the realm, or be held guilty of felony if they remained in this country; and further, if they abjured the realm and went abroad, and afterwards returned to this country, they should in like manner be held guilty of felony. That act of Parliament he also proposed to expunge. The next of these statutes with which he proposed to deal, or rather it was a part of the same, provided that any person professing the Roman Catholic religion must not be found at any place beyond three miles from his usual place of abode, under the severest penalties; and whatever might have been the grounds for passing that act originally, in this travelling age it would be considered a most barbarous law. ("Hear, hear," and a laugh.) Then there was a statute of William and Mary, which enacted that no Catholic should be permitted to come within ten miles of this metropolis. (A laugh.)—The Bishop of London opposed the bill, on the ground that it involved such important interests of the Church that the heads of the establishment ought to be consulted, and that such a measure ought not to be passed at this late period of the session.—Lord Brougham warmly advocated the bill, and ridiculed the idea of maintaining statutes which, from their rigour or absurdity, could not be enforced.—The Bishop of London did not divide the house, and the report on the bill was received.—Adjourned at half-past eight.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Tuesday.

There was another morning sitting to-day, which was devoted to the despatch of a variety of bills. The following were read a third time and passed:—The Protection of Purchasers, &c., (Ireland) Bill, the Customs (New South Wales) Bill, the Books and Engravings Bill, the Courts of Common Law Process Bill, the Courts of Common Law Process (Ireland) Bill, the Militia Pay Bill, and the Privy Council Bill.

The Earl of Lincoln obtained leave to bring in a bill to empower her Majesty's Commissioners of Woods to form a terrace and embankment, with convenient landing places for the public, on the Middlesex shore of the river Thames, between Westminster and Blackfriars bridges. The noble earl, however, explained that he did not mean to press the measure this session, his object being merely to give an opportunity of allowing the details of it to be considered.

The house was then for some time occupied with business of an unimportant character, and while it was in progress, Mr. Cripps noticed that there were not forty members present. The house was counted, and the fact being ascertained, an adjournment necessarily took place.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Wednesday.

The house did not sit.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Wednesday.

The house met at twelve in the day. The following bills were successively read a third time and passed:—The Grand Canal (Ireland) Bill, the Spirits (Ireland) Bill, the Piccadilly Improvement Bill, the Woods and Forests Accounts Bill, the Clerks to Attorneys Bill, and the Consolidated Fund (Appropriation) Bill.

Various other bills also underwent discussion.

The Outrage at Tahiti.—In answer to questions from Sir C. Napier, Sir R. Peel said the Government had received accounts from Tahiti, and presuming on the accuracy of these accounts, which he had no reason whatever to call in question, he did not hesitate to say that a gross outrage, accompanied with gross indignity, had been committed upon the British Consul at that island. (Loud cheers.) Her Majesty's Government received information of that on Monday last, and the first opportunity was taken of making those communications to the French Government which her Majesty's Government considered the circumstances of the case to call for. (Cheers.) That outrage was committed by a person in temporary authority at Papeete. We know that, in fact, it was not committed in consequence of any authority given for that purpose by the French Government; and he must presume, therefore—assuming that the statements we have received were correct—that the French Government would at once make that reparation which this country had a right to require.

Captain Warner's Experiment.—At the evening sitting, Lord Ingestre called attention to Captain Warner's discovery and the recent experiment at Brighton, which the noble lord said was either a gross imposition, or else demonstrative of the possession of some formidable destructive power, the exclusive possession of which would be of vast importance to this country. The latter was his belief, which ridicule would not restrain him from avowing. All great inventions—gunpowder, steam, and so forth—were matters for incredulity before their powers were developed. Lord Ingestre proceeded to give an explanation of the various negociations which had taken place with the present and preceding Governments. He said, the Board of Admiralty, like all boards, treated the matter with indifference, neglect, and contempt; Lord Melbourne was dilatory, Sir Robert Peel polite; the friends of Mr. Warner were referred from one department to another; and the commission to which the matter was entrusted required experiments which involved too much expense and disclosure, as well as leaving the question of remuneration without a sufficient guarantee. At first Mr. Warner had asked £400,000 as the value of his two inventions, but he had subsequently offered to refer it to arbitration, being satisfied that Sir Robert Peel would not act unjustly, on proof of the value and importance of his discoveries. By the liberality of private individuals he had been enabled to make experiments, ending in the decisive one off Brighton; and, however destructive the power thus evinced, its possession by this country would be a preventive of war. Brighton, for instance, could be easily reduced to ashes, but Mr. Warner, with a steamer, could set at defiance any approaching hostile fleet. Lord Ingestre concluded by moving for the production of the correspondence between Mr. Warner and the Government.—Sir R. Peel rose immediately to second the motion for the correspondence, and gave a full explanation of what had taken place between the Government and Captain Warner, who said he was in possession of two instruments of most destructive powers—one called the invisible shell, and the other the long range. Of the latter Captain Warner gave the following account:—"I can project 100 shells of most destructive power, and I can repeat the operation with rapidity. If I threw them into Gibraltar, in a few hours not a man would be left alive in the place. (Laughter.) This I can accomplish at almost any distance. By means of my long range I could bombard a fortress, and, with a single vessel, could cut out a fleet in defiance of the garrison. (Hear, hear.) I could have demolished Algiers, instead of merely damaging it, as was done by Lord Exmouth, with his splendid fleet. (Cheers, and laughter.) After that I could, with a comparatively small refit, undertake to destroy Toulon." ("Hear," and cheers.) Sir R. Peel stated that the Government did not wish to treat a person possessed of such a power with disrespect, and detailed the course which had been adopted. He (Sir R. Peel) had required experiments to be made before competent professional men, whose opinions would guide and guarantee the Government, before it was committed to any pledge. It was a rule, that parties professing to have made discoveries should make the experiments at their own expense; otherwise the Ordnance-office would break down under the weight of applications. That very day, for instance, had brought him four letters from individuals professing to be in possession of secrets as destructive as the "invisible shell." Yet this rule was relaxed in favour of Mr. Warner, who, however, closed the commission appointed by the Government, by his preliminary demand of four hundred thousand pounds. After some further explanations, Sir R. Peel defended the determination of the Government not to promise payment of any sum whatever, without a previous concession of the secret, and a thorough knowledge of its efficacy; and he cautioned the house against any departure from this rule.—In the course of the discussion which followed, Sir C. Napier spoke of the experiment in a sarcastic tone, said there was nothing new in it, that it was performed forty years ago, and that every chemist fancied he knew of some strong explosive power.—Mr. Wakley treated the experiment off Brighton as ridiculous and childish.—Sir George Cockburn said he had received a report from an artillery officer, who had watched the Brighton experiment, and was assured that the explosion was produced by some force like nitrate of silver, or others known to chemists, but which required contact and management, and therefore useless in active service against an enemy. The Government would reward the inventor of a useful and serviceable projectile.—Lord Ingestre again gave his opinion that the Brighton experiment was a bonâ fide one, and renewed the expression of his confidence in Mr. Warner's destructive powers. The motion for the production of the correspondence was then agreed to.

A debate ensued on a motion of Mr. M. Gibson, that the house should take into consideration the petition of Mr. Heathcote, a superintendent of factories, dismissed on the allegation of having written an anonymous letter to Mr. Ferrand.—Sir J. Graham explained the motives which had induced him to dismiss Mr. Heathcote.—On a division the motion of Mr. Gibson was negatived, and the house adjourned at a quarter to twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS—Thursday.

The Insolvent Debtors' Bill was read a third time and passed.

In answer to some questions from the Marquis of Clanricarde respecting the late aggression by the French at Tahiti, the Earl of Aberdeen made some remarks in a spirit similar to those of Sir R. Peel in the House of Commons. The noble earl expressed his belief that what had taken place was without the slightest encouragement or even knowledge on the part of the French Government. I believe (added Lord Aberdeen) this will be a godsend to the enemies of peace between the countries, and it will be turned by them to good account. (Hear, hear.) But, my lords, I have every reason to believe that, by the exercise of a spirit of justice and moderation, this unfortunate affair will not lead to serious consequences. (Hear, hear.) I have reason to believe that the French Government will take the same view of the matter that I do. I believe, also, that at this very moment Queen Pomare is restored to full power.

The Railways Bill went through committee.

The discussion on the Law Courts (Ireland) Bill was by consent adjourned, and their lordships rose at half-past seven o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Thursday.

In the morning sitting much miscellaneous business was disposed of.

After a short discussion, the Savings Bank Bill was read a third time and passed.

The Marriages (Ireland) Bill was committed, and ordered to be read a third time on Saturday.

The South Sea Company's Bill, the Fisheries (Ireland) Bill, and the Bishop of London's Estate Bill were read a third time and passed.

Sir James Graham moved the order of the day for going into Committee on the Charitable Bequests (Ireland) Bill, and stated the nature of some amendments which he meant to propose.

The report of the Arts-Union Bill was brought up, and the bill was ordered to be read a third time to-morrow.

The remainder of the evening was occupied in discussing the several clauses, nineteen of which, with various amendments, were agreed to.—The house adjourned at a quarter past 11.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Friday.

The Metropolis Buildings Bill was read a third time and passed, and some formal business was gone through.

Some discussion then took place upon the subject of the recent execution of a British subject at Tunis by the Maltese authorities.—Lord Clarendon stated that her Majesty's Government had taken care that justice should be done in the case of this Maltese. The Bey delayed execution until he consulted the British Government, and the criminal was properly put to death.

On the question that the Railway Bill be read a third time, the Bishop of London moved an amendment to the 6th clause, on the ground that it legalised Sunday railway travelling. At the suggestion of the Duke of Wellington, however, the discussion was postponed till Monday.

Lord Wharncliffe having moved the third reading of the Unlawful Oaths (Ireland) Bill, a very long debate arose upon the Irish policy of the Government. The bill was then read a third time and passed, and the house adjourned soon after ten o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Friday.

The house assembled at twelve o'clock.

New Writ.—On the motion of Mr. J. Young, the Speaker was directed to issue his warrant for a new writ for the borough of Dudley, in the room of Thomas Hawkes, Esq., who had accepted the Chiltern Hundreds.

Insolvent Debtors' Bill.—On the order of the day being read for going into committee on the Insolvent Debtors Bill, the Solicitor-General entered into an explanation of the chief provisions of the measure. The bill was divided into three branches: the first related to the law of cessio bonorum; the second, and most important, proposed the abolition of imprisonment for debt in execution under £20; and the third introduced some important amendments into the machinery of the Court of Bankruptcy; and it was his (the Solicitor-General's) honest and conscientious conviction, that the measure would be attended by the most beneficial effects. The hon. and learned gentleman proceeded to read several passages from the evidence taken before a committee of the house on the subject, the tenor of which went to show that the abolition of imprisonment for debt would not have the effect of abolishing bona fide credit, but only that of making tradesmen more careful. After some discussion the house went into committee on the bill. The clauses were agreed to; after a protracted debate the Chairman reported progress, and the report was received, in order that the bill might be reprinted and recommitted on Monday, to enable the Government to introduce the compensation clauses.

In answer to a question from Mr. Dennistoun, the Chancellor of the Exchequer said, he had for some time been in communication with the India Board relative to a new arrangement for a communication with India. He believed that this new plan might be carried into effect on the 1st of Jan., 1845.

After a brief discussion, the Art Unions Bill was read a third time, and passed.

The house then resolved into committee on the Charitable Bequests (Ireland) Bill.—Sir J. Graham said he intended to propose several amendments, and, with that view, to recommit the bill. The right hon. baronet stated that these amendments had been framed with a view to meet the objections made to the bill on the other side.—Mr. Wyse said he believed these amendments would be satisfactory. The clauses proposed by Sir James Graham, were read a first time, and the bill was ordered to be recommitted.

The Debtors and Creditors Bill went through committee, and also the Transfer of Property Bill, and the Arms (Ireland) Bill.

The Private Partnerships Bill was read a second time.

Mr. Hume submitted several resolutions respecting Savings' Banks, and moved that they be taken into consideration next session.—The motion was negatived, the Chancellor of the Exchequer having objected to the principle of printing motions for next session.

The house adjourned at half-past seven o'clock till to-morrow (Saturday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Saturday.

The house met this day at noon. The business was unimportant.

The Marriages (Ireland) Bill was read a third time and passed.

The house then went into committee on the Insolvent Debtors Bill. The compensation clauses were brought up, and the house resumed.—Report on Monday.

The Debtors and Creditors Bill was read a third time and passed.

The Arms (Ireland) Bill was read a third time and passed.

Lord Villiers appeared at the table of the house to take his seat as a member for Cirencester, but as the Clerk of the Crown had neglected to forward the certificate of return to the house, the noble lord was obliged to withdraw, and consequently cannot be sworn till Monday. The house adjourned at 20 minutes past 12 o'clock.

TAHITI.

Intelligence has just been received of a renewed act of French aggression at Tahiti, which Sir Robert Peel, in Parliament, has already characterised as "a gross outrage, accompanied by a gross indignity, committed upon this country in the person of its officer."

By H.M.S. Vindictive, which arrived at Portsmouth on Friday last, there have been received Valparaiso papers to the 1st of May, and correspondence of importance, from which we learn that Mr. Pritchard, our Consul at Otaheite (Tahiti), came home with part of his family in the Vindictive, having been exiled from that island by the French authorities in the most arbitrary and unjustifiable manner, without trial or inquiry of any kind, but merely upon the bare suspicion of having influenced Queen Pomare in her unconquerable hatred of the French. A portrait of her Tahitian Majesty, with the details of her deposition by the French, will be found in No. 95 of the Illustrated London News, and the perplexing position of the poor Queen is elsewhere narrated in our present paper.

The facts of Mr. Pritchard's arrest are stated in a letter addressed to the Times, by a British officer, dated "Papeete, March 6," from which it appears that the French commissary-general, on March 4, publicly stated in the presence of some Englishmen, that if the natives rose, and were joined by any Englishman, he would go, and with a pistol be the first man to shoot Mr. Pritchard! This gentleman was, for many years, a missionary at Tahiti; for ten years he has served his country as British Consul; he is beloved by Queen Pomare, respected and looked up to by the people, and universally well spoken of by the commanders of English vessels; all which has rendered him obnoxious to the French. On the morning of his arrest, a placard was stuck up, signed by the captain of a French corvette, ascribing to Mr. Pritchard the rebellion of the natives, and holding his life and property responsible if a drop of French blood were spilt!

The arrest took place as follows: Mr. Pritchard left his house to go on board her Majesty's steamer Cormorant, to see some of the officers; he had only a few yards to walk from his gate to the jetty. The commandant of police, who had been observed all day prowling about, ran out of the guard-house without his hat, seized Mr. Pritchard, and hurried him off, followed by some soldiers. Immediately on hearing it, the commander of the Basilisk, and the British officer above-named, went to the acting Governor, M. d'Aubigny, who refused to tell where Mr. Pritchard was confined. After some demur, he gave a paper to Lieut. Hunt, which he also read aloud: it stated that a French sentinel had been attacked on the night of the 2nd to 3rd of March; and that, in reprisal, he, M. d'Aubigny, had caused to be seized "one Pritchard, the only daily mover and instigator of the disturbance of the natives. His property shall be answerable for all damage occasioned to our establishments by the insurgents; and if French blood is spilt, every drop shall recoil on his head." This document was placarded in French, English, and Tahitian, on the different public places. "Thus," adds the correspondent, "has a British subject, and he our Consul, and the representative of the Majesty of England, been treated as a common convict, seized in open day, in the presence of his family, hurried like a vile malefactor along the streets, jeered at by the French soldiers, as he was dragged in front of the barracks."

Mr. Pritchard was then taken to a wretched block-house, or wooden hut, behind the French Governor's house, who, since the exile of the Queen, has occupied her habitation. Here he was kept a close prisoner, no one being allowed access to him; as is proved by the following document issued by the French commandant:—

RELATING TO THE PRISONER WHO HAS BEEN TAKEN.

The head of the department will treat him with kindness and politeness.

The soldiers will serve him in every necessary way, sweep his room, make his bed, and keep every thing clean—each thing necessary for a prisoner of distinction will be done.

The prisoner will have light from five A. M. till eight P. M., when at gun-fire the light will be put out. At eight o'clock in the morning a basket can be sent, containing meat, clothes, dressing things, books, &c.; at four P. M. a second basket may be sent when the first shall be returned. Neither strangers nor any of the family of the prisoner can communicate in person with him. The baskets will pass through the soldiers, under the inspection of the commander. All letters addressed to the prisoner must pass through the hands, and under the inspection, of the commandant in particular, who, on seeing them, and that they contain nothing wrong, will let them pass. If the hours fixed on to take things to the prisoner be convenient they will continue; if not, they can be changed, or anything more by applying to the particular commandant.

The sergeant on duty will not suffer any one to come near the Blakans—such persons will be ordered off.

It is expressly ordered to the sergeant of the prison-house not to allow the person bringing the basket to mount up the stairs or to see the prisoner, neither to enter inside nor to speak through the bars.

The man named Lilleur will attend each day at eight and nine o'clock to explain to Mr. Pritchard any wishes he may have to give to the people at the prison-house.

Mr. Pritchard was, at length, released from prison, at the intervention of Commander Gordon, on the condition that he was not to be landed on either of the Society Islands. The Consul was compelled to leave his wife and part of his family at Tahiti, as he was not suffered to go to his house for an instant, to make arrangements on their account, or to take any of his papers. The Cormorant brought him from Tahiti to Valparaiso a day or two before the Vindictive left that port. Mr. Pritchard is now in London, and his case is undergoing the strictest investigation by our Government. He has brought with him two of his daughters, whom he received on board from another of the Society Islands, Eimeo. They were on a visit to a missionary there, and the Cormorant remained an hour, in order that they might join their father.

of the British flag, and wept bitterly on the Cormorant's departure, on seeing Mr. Pritchard, who has been her faithful friend for so many years. thus treated in her own dominions.—Simmonde's Colonial Magazine for August.

The three annexed Engravings are from sketches by Mr. Joliffe, just received, with the intelligence, from Tahiti. The first illustrates the circumstances of the Arrest; the second, the Interior of the Block-house, or Prison; and the third, the Dungeon itself. All may be relied on as faithful representations of the principal stages of this eventful affair.

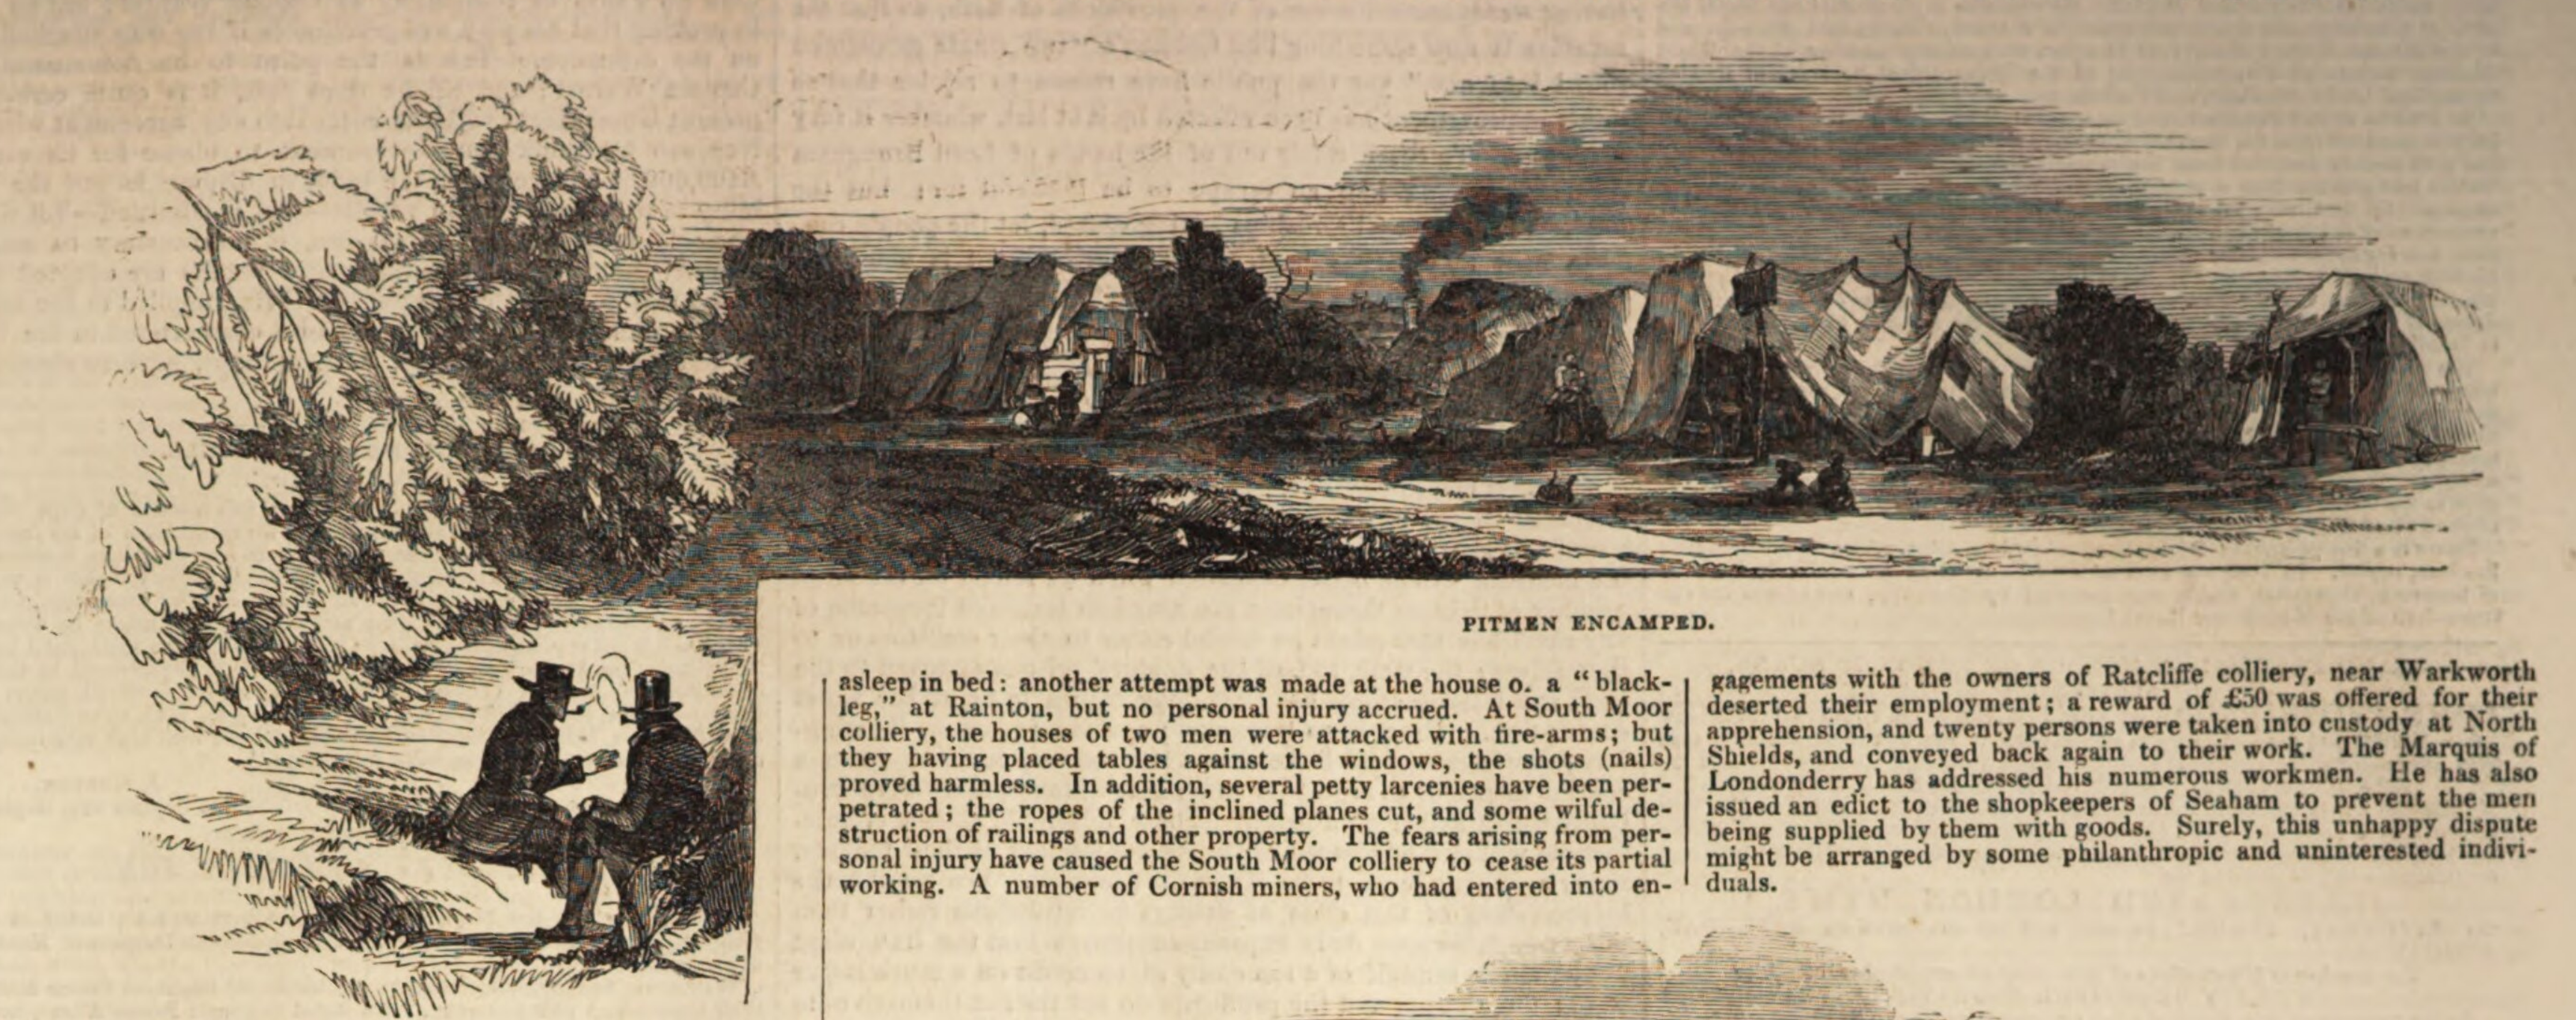
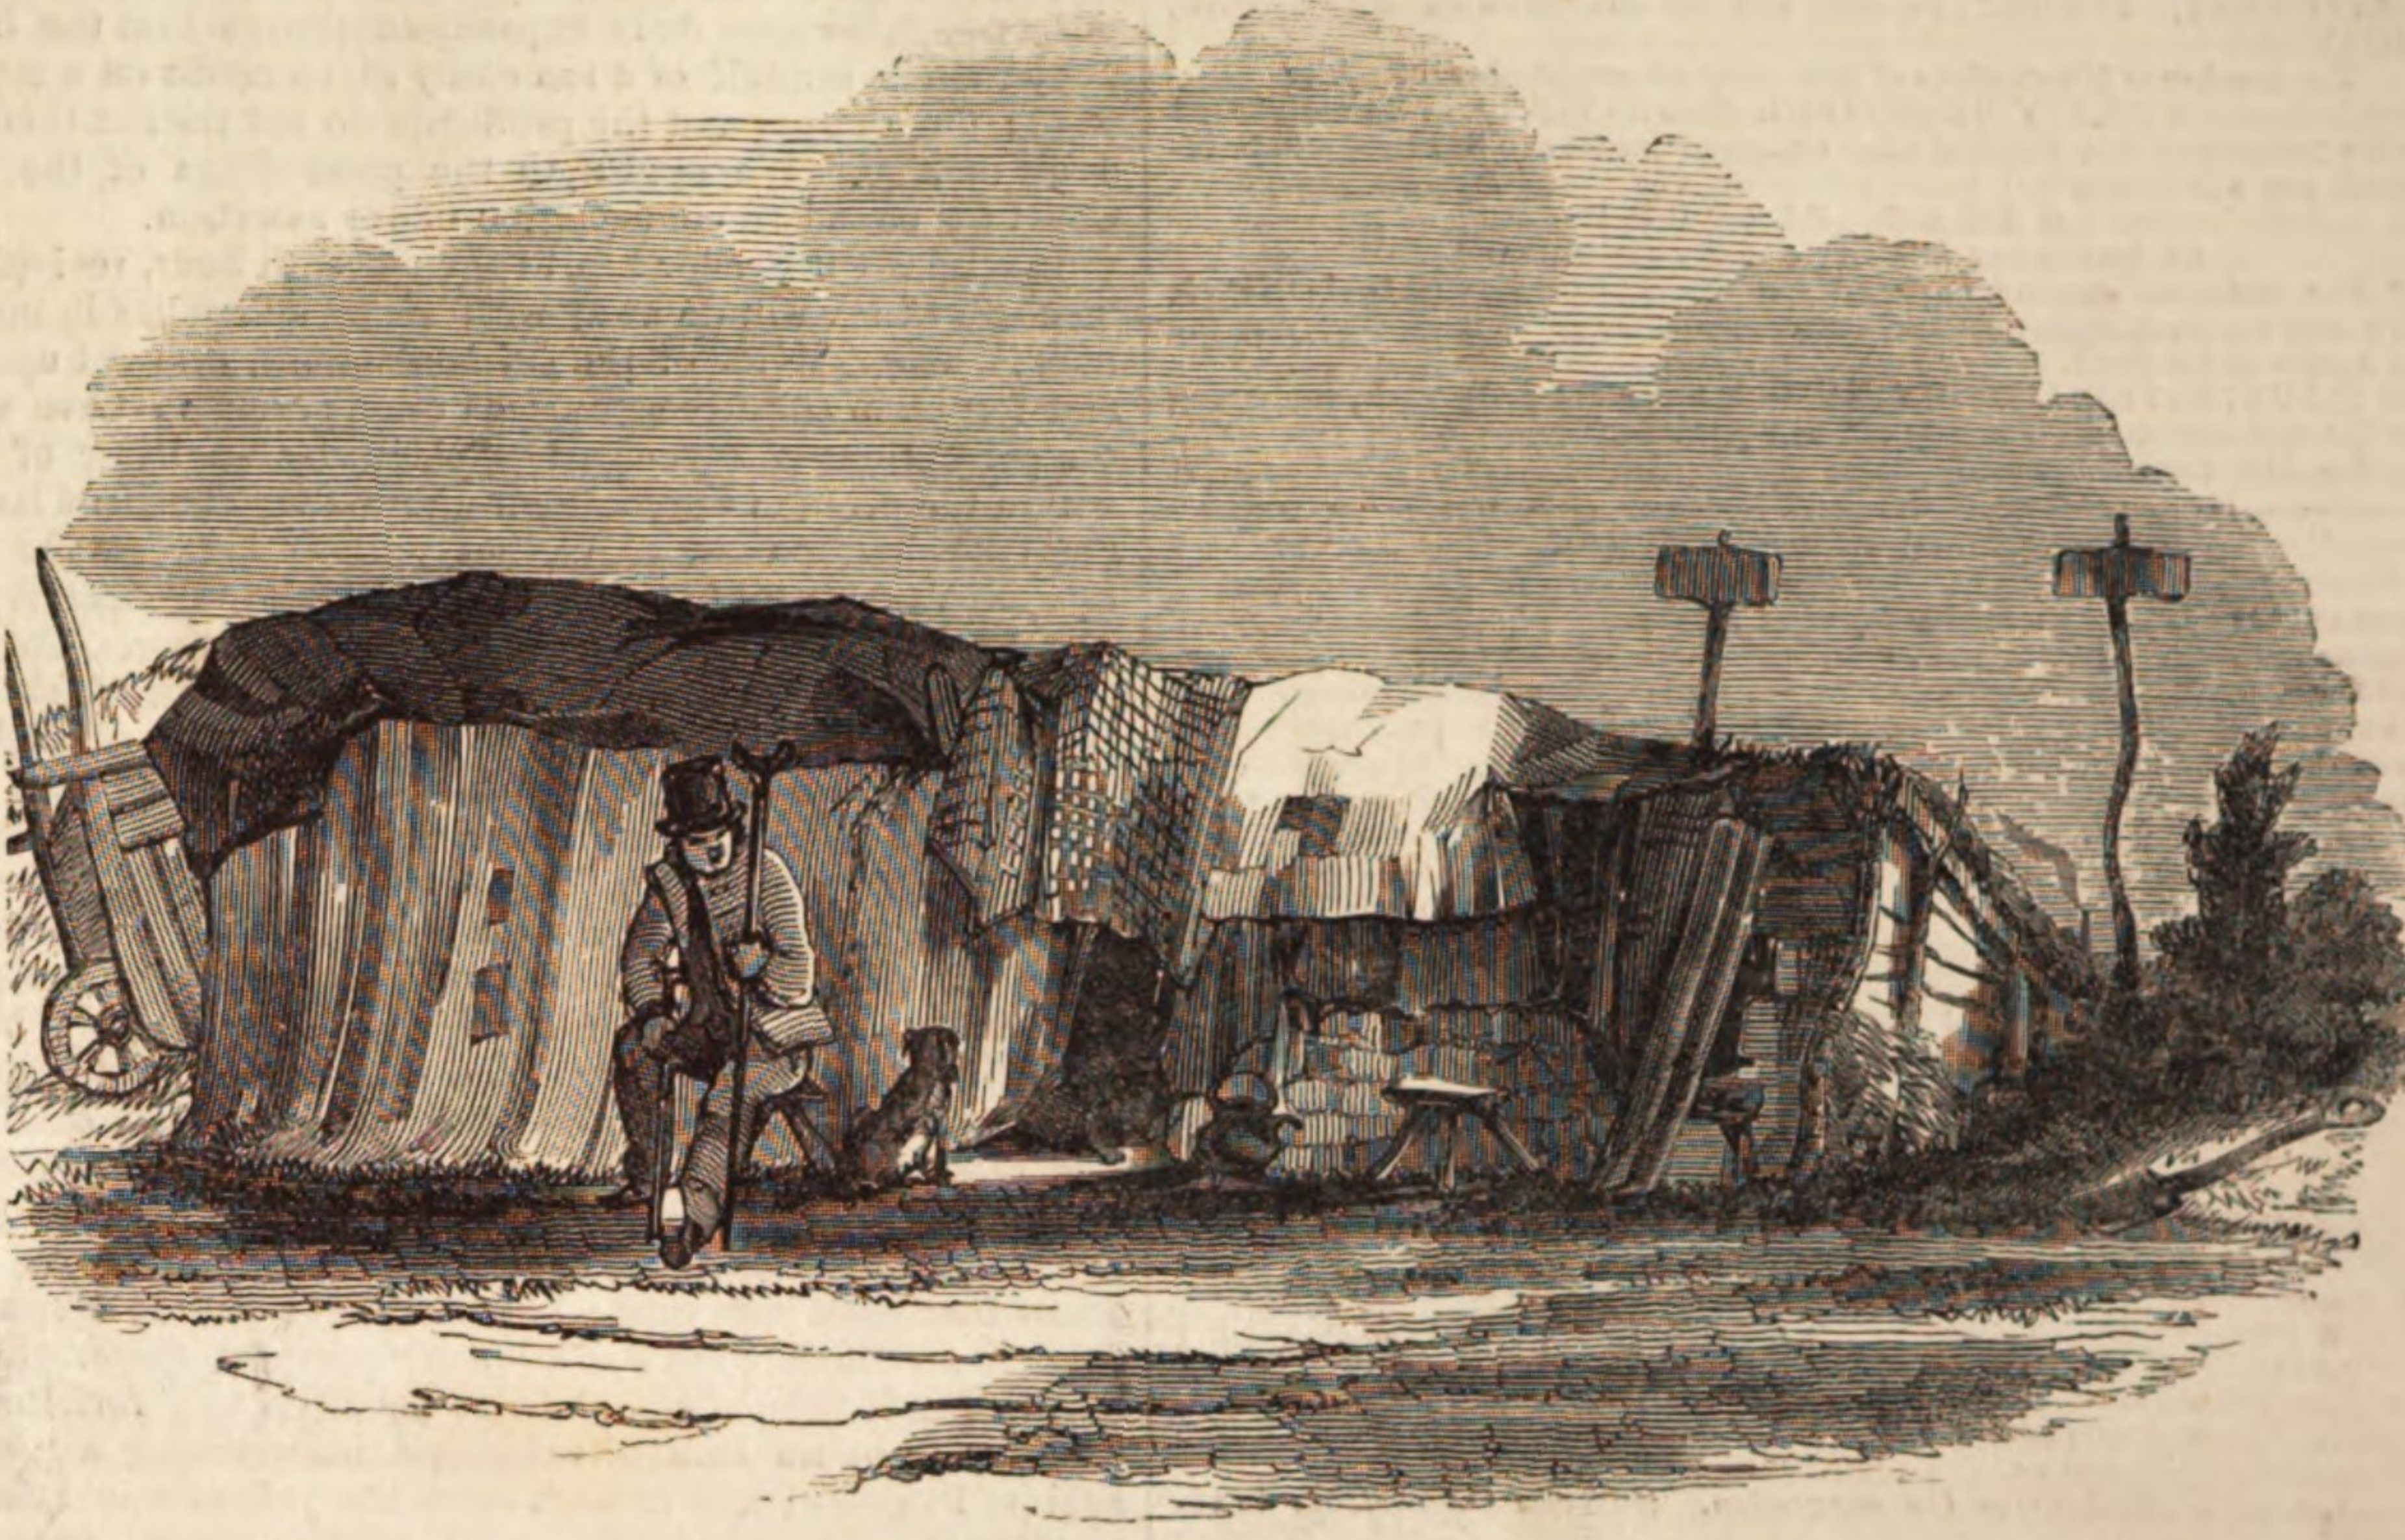
ENCAMPMENTS OF THE PITMEN IN NORTHUMBERLAND AND DURHAM.



PITMEN ENCAMPED.

The unfortunate dispute between the coal-owners and pitmen of the north of England still continues, with as little prospect of an amicable adjustment as ever. It is the longest strike (seventeen weeks), ever recorded of this important branch of our national industry; and its extent may be judged by the fact of 20,000 of the miners petitioning for the interference of the Legislature. As the difference appears to be a matter of wages, principally, we decline entering into details, especially from the very contradictory statements of either party, which have been laid before the public. The owners of the mines provide cottages for their workmen near to the pits in which they are to be employed; these are granted rent free, and as the men refuse to accept of the terms offered them by their masters, the latter have demanded possession of the houses inhabited by the former, and numerous forcible ejectments have been made; several defalcations from the men's union, the arrival of many Irishmen, and an importation of Welch miners, rendering such a step necessary that those willing to work might have the usual accommodations. The old hands, thus driven forth, have betaken themselves to the waste grounds, lanes, and highways, where they have erected temporary huts, those near to Cramlington and Seghill extending about two miles in length; but every here and there in the extensive coal-field of Northumberland and Durham, near to the mines, towns and villages are to be seen of those picturesque but wretched abodes of unfortunate creatures, many of whom possessing large families of seven or eight children are huddled in the small space they have been enabled to allot to themselves; further adding to their miseries by selling their household goods and necessary covering, which, from the glut of the market, bring but very small prices.

Heretofore, all had been peaceful and legal in the behaviour of the ousted men, until within the last few days, when fearful symptoms of mischief have exhibited themselves by the houses of obnoxious individuals having been fired into. At Waldridge, near Chester-le-street, some malicious person fired through the window of a Mr. Walker, a deputy, and severely wounded him and his wife, who were asleep in bed: another attempt was made at the house of a "black-leg," at Rainton, but no personal injury accrued. At South Moor colliery, the houses of two men were attacked with fire-arms; but they having placed tables against the windows, the shots (nails) proved harmless. In addition, several petty larcenies have been perpetrated; the ropes of the inclined planes cut, and some wilful destruction of railings and other property. The fears arising from personal injury have caused the South Moor colliery to cease its partial working. A number of Cornish miners, who had entered into engagements with the owners of Ratcliffe colliery, near Warkworth deserted their employment; a reward of £50 was offered for their apprehension, and twenty persons were taken into custody at North Shields, and conveyed back again to their work. The Marquis of Londonderry has addressed his numerous workmen. He has also issued an edict to the shopkeepers of Seaham to prevent the men being supplied by them with goods. Surely, this unhappy dispute might be arranged by some philanthropic and uninterested individuals.

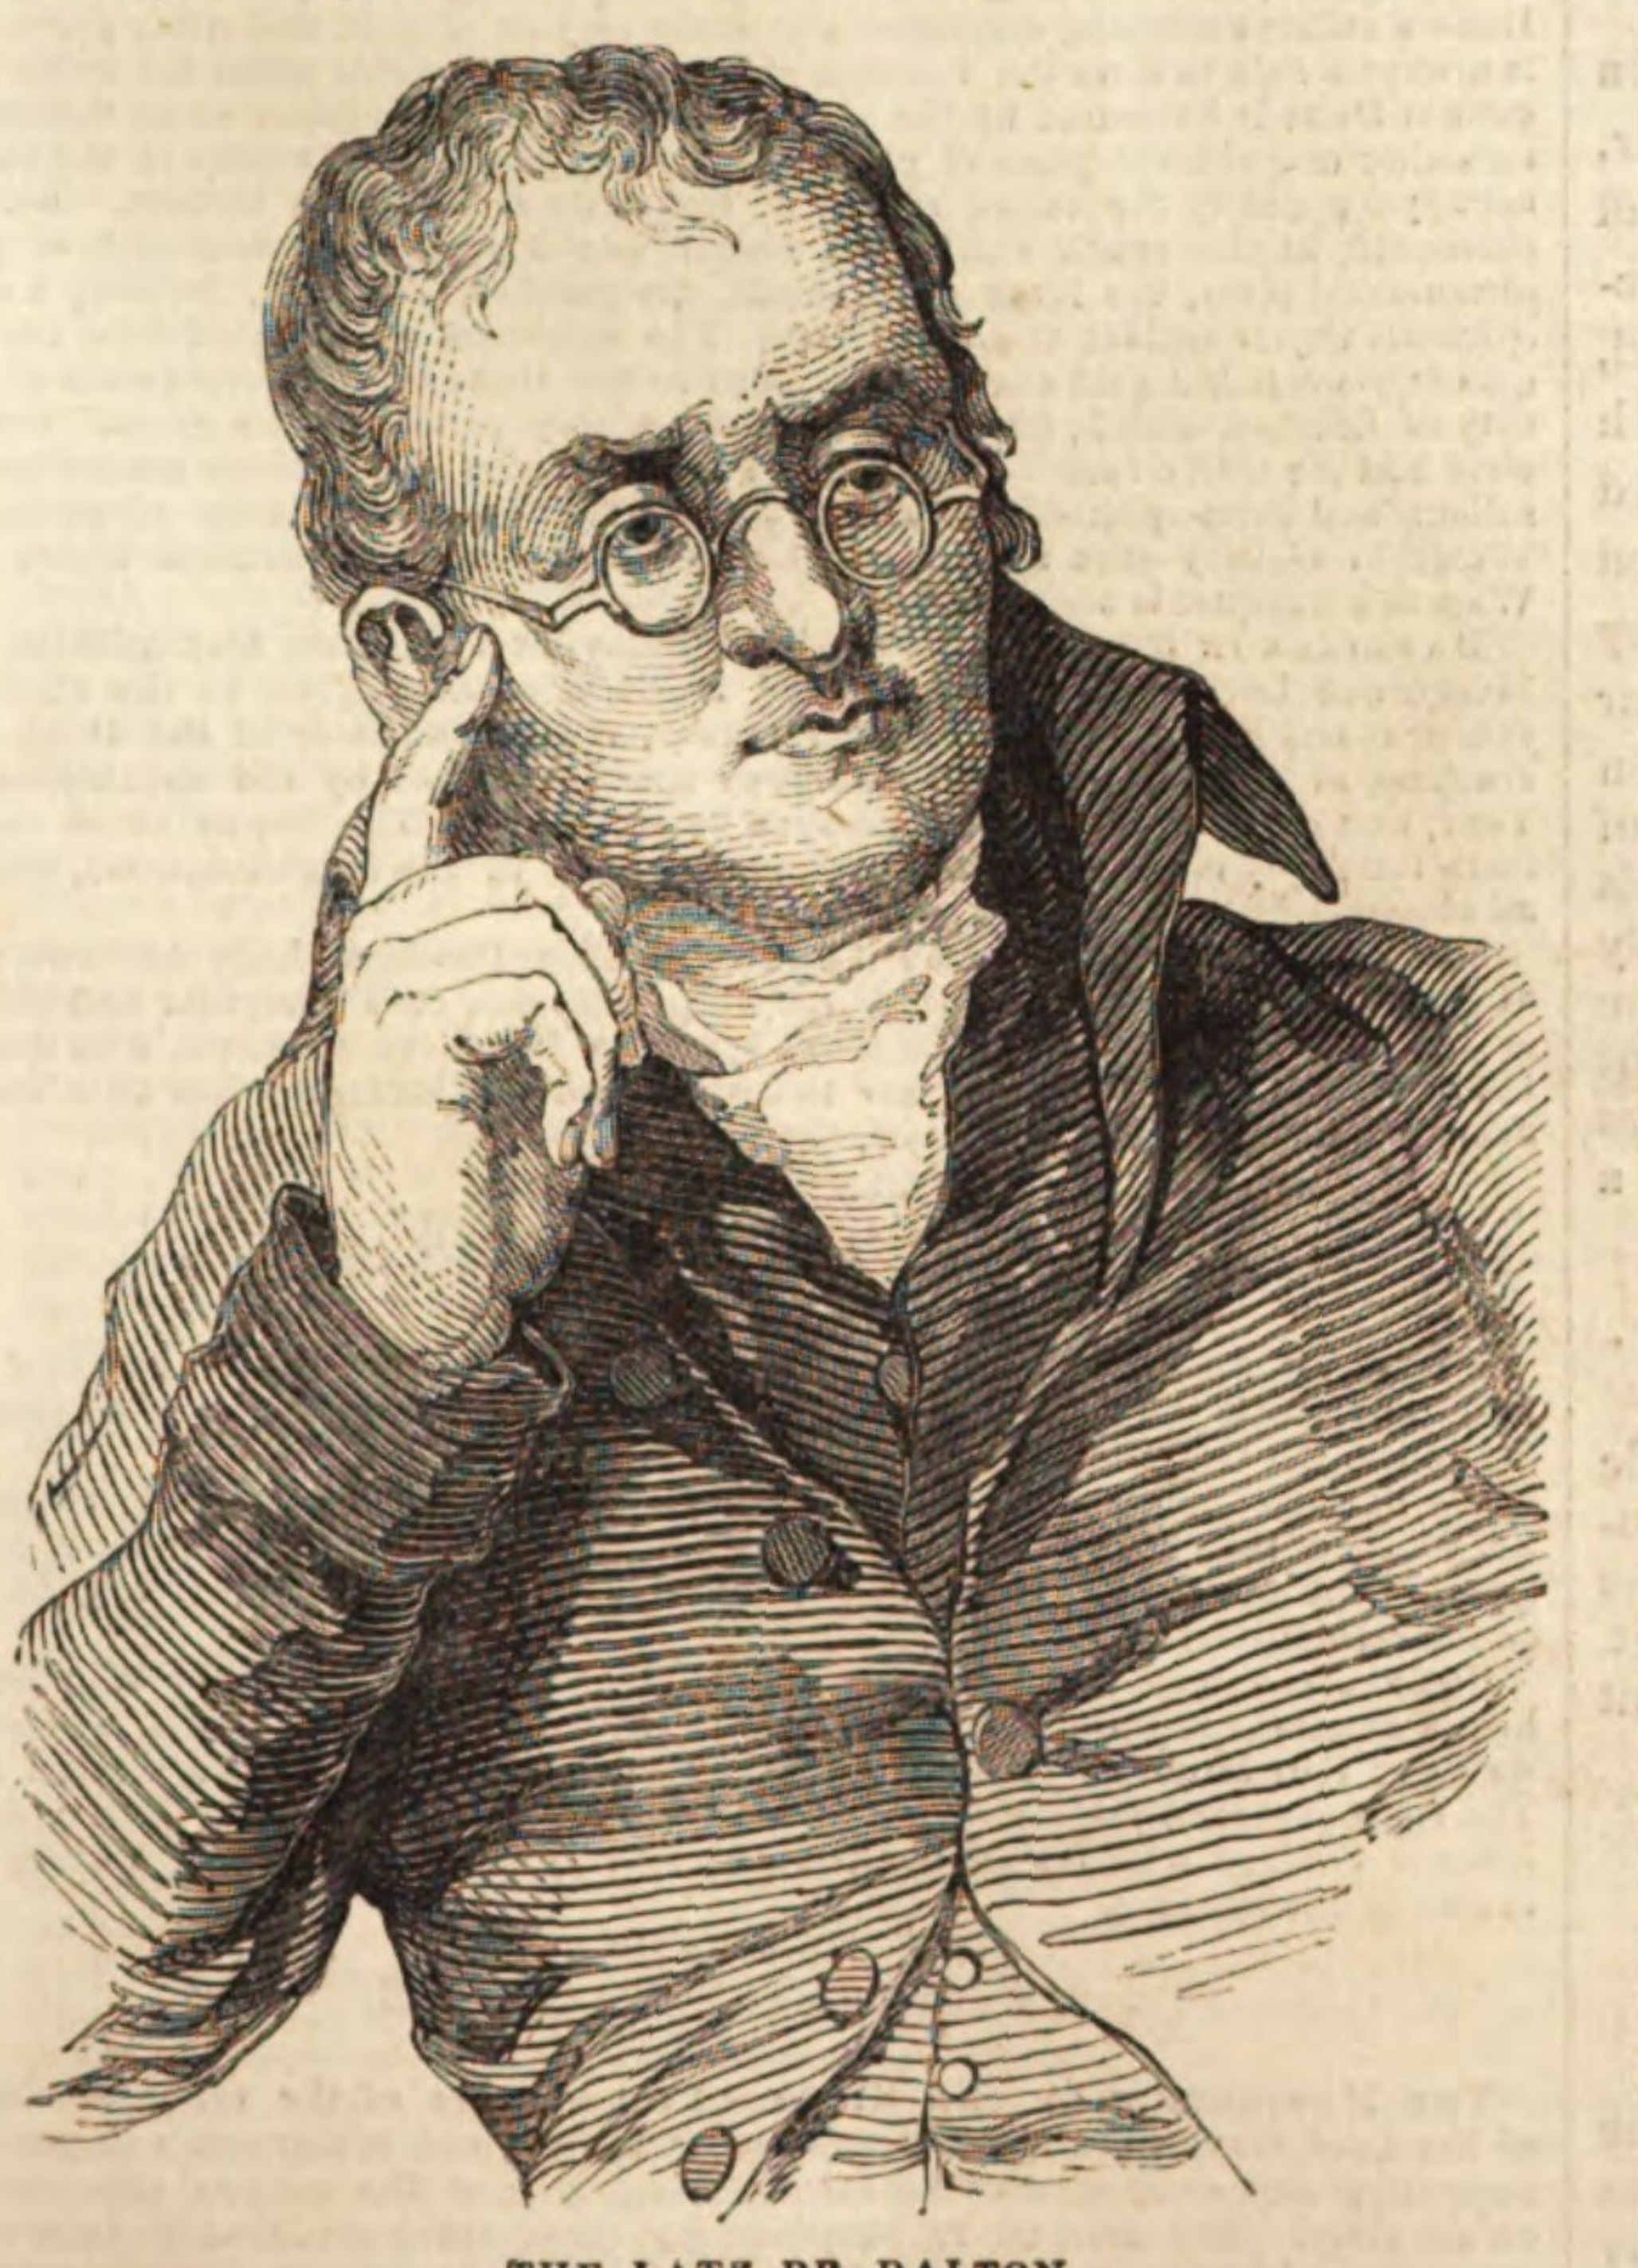


PITMEN ENCAMPED.

DEATH OF DR. DALTON.

Another sun of science hath just set—
But e'en beyond the precincts of the deep
Some tributary stars around him weep
And cast his lustre back upon us yet—
The blaze of genius never all departs
But leaves a twilight gentle—soft—behind,
Enough to interest most careless hearts
Or rouse to rapture the ecstatic mind!
Happy were he who could a moonlight crave
Of the departed luminary lost,
And steal from out the dull and dismal grave
E'en glimpses of his mind's eternal ghost!

We regret to record the demise of this great and good man, who closed his long and useful life, unexpectedly, but apparently without suffering, at Manchester, on Saturday morning last.



THE LATE DR. DALTON.

On the 18th of April, 1837, Dr. Dalton, then in his 71st year, had a severe attack of paralysis, and a second attack on the 21st of the same month. After an illness of some months, he partially recovered his strength; though his articulation was less distinct than before. On the 17th of May last, he had a third paralytic attack, from which he so far recovered, that on the 19th ult., he attended a meeting of the council of the Manchester Literary and Philosophical Society, and received an engrossed copy, on vellum, of a resolution of that society, passed at its annual meeting, recording "their admiration of the zeal and perseverance with which he has deduced the mean pressure and temperature of the atmosphere, and the quantity of rain for each month, and for the whole year; with the prevailing direction and force of the wind at different seasons in this neighbourhood, from a series of more than 200,000 observations, from the end of the year 1793 to the beginning of 1844, being a period of half a century." In this resolution the members of the society earnestly prayed that the venerable philosopher might long be spared to honour their meetings with his presence: within eight days he had ceased to exist. On the occasion of the resolution being presented, the doctor received it sitting, and, being unable to articulate a reply, had prepared one, written with his own hand, which Mr. P. Clare read as follows:—

I feel gratified by this testimony of kind regard offered to me by my old associates of the Literary and Philosophical Society of Manchester. At my age, and under my infirmities, I can only thank you for this manifestation of sentiments, which I heartily reciprocate.

This was the last appearance of the venerable philosopher in the society of which he had so long been the president, and whose proceedings had so long derived honour from his giving to them the sanction of his presence and his name.

On Friday he registered the temperature with his own hand, though he could scarcely hold his pen. Next morning he was found in bed in a state of insensibility, and he died before a surgeon could reach him. The writer of an excellent memoir of the philosopher, in the Manchester Guardian, says:—"On visiting the chamber of death several hours afterwards, we were struck with the serene and placid expression of the countenance of the venerable man, which had the appearance of the healthy repose of a brief half hour, rather than the deep and lasting slumber of the grave. His fine massive head, venerable with the silvery hairs of age, and with the still more characteristic expression of a benevolent spirit, with which, even in death, his brow was radiant, was a solemn, but a gladdening picture.'

John Dalton was in his 78th year, which he would have completed on the 5th of next month. He was born at Eaglesfield, near Cockermouth, in Cumberland, where he attended a school kept by a member of the Society of Friends, until his twelfth year. He then opened a school in his native village. He had an early tendency to mathematical pursuits, and contributed largely to the Gentleman's and Lady's Diaries, from 1784 to 1794. In 1788, he commenced his "Meteorological Observations," which he continued to the day preceding his death. He next accepted the situation of Professor of Mathematics and Natural Philosophy, in the New College, Mosley-street, Manchester, from which he withdrew in 1799, when he began to teach mathematics and natural philosophy privately. In 1794 he joined the Manchester Literary and Philosophical Society, and from thence became a constant and liberal contributor to their Memoirs. In 1803 or 1804, he made his greatest discovery, that of the Atomic Theory, or the application of mathematics to chemistry, described by Davy as the greatest step in modern science.

Dr. Dalton for many years lectured in public at Manchester, first in 1805; and in London at the Royal Institution, in 1804 and 1810. He was elected as Fellow of the Royal Society in 1821 or 1822. On the first opportunity, he was admitted a corresponding member of the Institute of France; and a few years afterwards he was enrolled one of the Foreign Fellows, of whom the number is very limited. He was President of the Manchester Literary and Philosophical Society, which office he attained in 1817. He was also a member of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, the Royal Academies of Science of Berlin and Munich, and of the Natural History Society of Moscow, an honorary member of the Royal Medical Society of Edinburgh, and of the Philosophical Societies of Bristol, Cambridge, Leeds, Sheffield, and Yorkshire.

In 1822 he visited France, where he was duly honoured by the Institute. In 1826 he received from the Royal Society, for his scientific discoveries, the first of the gold medals awarded from the munificence of George IV. In 1833 Dr. Dalton had granted him a pension of £150, subsequently increased to £300 per annum. He first attended the meeting of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, when held at Cambridge; and through his presence at the next meeting at Oxford, the University presented him with the degree of D C.L. In 1834, upon a similar occasion, he visited Edinburgh, when the Town Council presented to him the freedom of the city, and the University of Edinburgh the degree of LL.D. In 1835 he once more attended the meeting of the Association in Dublin.

His perseverance was untiring. He paid an annual visit to his native mountains of Cumberland and Westmoreland, and there pursued his investigations of the constitution of the atmosphere. When at home, no sooner was the fast of the morning broken, than Dr. Dalton repaired to his laboratory, where he remained teaching his pupils, and at the same time pursuing his manipulations, till nine at night. These long hours of mental toil were for years persisted in during six days in the week, with the exception of the Thursday afternoon, which Dr. Dalton allowed himself as a period of relaxation.

There is a fine portrait of Dr. Dalton, painted by Allen, whence our engraving has been copied. In 1833 the sum of £2000 was raised for a full-length statue of the great philosopher, which was executed by Chantrey, and adorns the entrance-hall of the Manchester Royal Institution.

GRAND FESTIVAL IN HONOUR OF THE POET BURNS,
AUGUST, 1844.

THE PROPRIETORS of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS feel great pleasure in announcing to the Public of Scotland that they have secured the services of several eminent Artists and Authors to attend the
GREAT FESTIVAL IN HONOUR OF ROBERT BURNS.
No expense will be spared in the execution of the Engravings, which will be both splendid and numerous. The Literary Department is intrusted to one of the most popular Writers in Scotland, and it is arranged that these Illustrations and contributions will be given in the
ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS,
On SATURDAY, AUGUST 10, and will be concluded on SATURDAY, AUGUST 17.
The number of Illustrations of this event are expected to comprise
TWENTY BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVINGS.
In the progress of this Festival other objects of interest in Scotland will be introduced, and will form a
GREAT PICTURE
OF THE MOST ROMANTIC PART OF BRITAIN.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Our Manchester Correspondent is informed that what is called the Speaker's Gallery of the House of Commons consists of the front part of the Strangers' Gallery—that is to say, the lower seats partitioned off are devoted to persons who have orders from the Speaker.

"Telemachus."—We have already stated that we do not intend to translate The Wandering Jew in our journal.

"H. G."—The copy of the sermon preached on the installation of Sir Charles Lemon has not reached us.

"Dublinensis" is thanked for the suggestion. How can the sketches be obtained?

"Beaks."—The paragraph relating to the fall of a portion of Beachy Head is too loose in its details.

"I. E. F."—The dress still worn occasionally in the Highlands of Scotland is not ancient, but an incongruous, fanciful costume. (See Mr. Planché's volume on British costume.) The notice to quit must be given as our correspondent infers.

"I. A.," Carlisle, is thanked. The illustrations suggested would be entertaining, though scarcely in place in a newspaper.

"Colanthe" should refer to a small volume, entitled The Language of Flowers.

"E. F. H.," Carlton Chambers.—Thanks; but the interest of the subject has been exhausted.

"XL."—The portrait (a drawing) was furnished by a friend of the deceased.

"A Constant Reader," Ayrshire, should write to the editor of Simmons's Colonial Magazine.

"I. H.," Llangollen.—We occasionally insert ground plans as well as elevations of buildings.

"Q. in a Corner," Kingston.—The large print of "London in 1842" can be had by order of any news-agent. We have not room for the paper on the age of horses. Write again to the Post-office.

"Pippo" should write to any bookseller in Shrewsbury.

"A Subscriber," Sydenham.—The charge will depend upon the length of the will.

"Pauline Pontop."—Apply to the broker by whom the stock was invested, or to his successors.

"A Subscriber," Cannon-street.—Thanks.

" * V."—We will see.*

"An Old Subscriber," Downpatrick.—The Harrogate water is highly beneficial in cases of gout, and the accommodations of the place are good. Will any correspondent favour us with a description of the New Pump Room, at Harrogate?

"S. O.," Luton, should continue the Saturday's edition, to insure the latest news.

"Clericus."—Next week.

"G. M'D.," Glasgow.—Under consideration.

"O. K.," Boston.—The price of Vol. I. of our journal is 21s.; of Vols. II. and III., 18s. each. The present number is 118; and the back numbers may be had by order of any news-agent.

"X. Y. Z.," "S. C."—We do not know the whereabout of the Ojibbeway Indians.

"R. W.," Liverpool, and "R. J.," Dudley, are thanked for their correction of our statement last week, that the Rothsay steamer was wrecked in 1839; whereas she was lost off Puffin Island, August 17, 1831.

"P. W.," Chelsea.—The Royal Union Dictionary, published by Didot, Amen Corner, is the latest French dictionary, and has already been much approved of.

"W. B.," New Ross; "D. W. M.," Edinburgh; "W. F. G.," Dublin; "H.," Liverpool, will each be entitled to the large print.

A Birmingham Button."—Whenever opportunity offers.

Lines on Morn, by "H. H.," are inadmissible.

"W. F. G.," Dublin.—Cricket shall not be forgotten.

"A Subscriber," Haverhill.—Yes.

"A Subscriber," Carnarvon.—The portrait in No. 116 represents Mr. Roberts, who lately held a concert at the Music Hall, Store-street.

"A Subscriber."—The new American bee-hive shall appear next week.

The illustrations of Hampton's new balloon, promised last week are unavoidably deferred, on account of the great number of engravings in the present number.

"A Subscriber," Cannon-street.—Will he favour us with a sketch?

Burns' Festival, on the Banks of the Doon.—The commencement of our promised engravings of this grand national festival is unavoidably deferred until next week: when we shall be enabled, not only to present to our readers the portrait and scenic illustrations of the genius of Burns, but also the most attractive scenes and incidents of this great and exciting fête; the series to be completed in our journal of August 17.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, AUGUST 3, 1844.

Close as the session is to its termination, the Government does not despair of carrying some measures, which, having been in abeyance for some months, are suddenly revived and pushed through their final stages with great rapidity. The Insolvent Debtors Bill, for instance, will soon become law, and though there has been some jealousy awakened by the measure between Lord Cottenham and Lord Brougham, as to the preference given to their respective bills on this subject, the committee of the Peers having amalgamated some of the provisions of both, so that the measure is now something like Colman's "two single gentlemen rolled into one," yet the public have reason to rejoice that so much improvement has been effected by it at last, whoever it may belong to. To come safely out of the hands of Lord Brougham seems something like an escape to be thankful for; but the quarrels of their legal lordships having ceased, let the people estimate what they have gained. First, imprisonment is abolished for any debt under £20. This is clear enough from the 40th clause of the bill:—

> After the passing of this act, no person shall be taken in execution upon any judgment obtained in any superior court, or county court, or court of requests, or other inferior court for any debt wherein the sum recovered shall not exceed £20, exclusive of the costs of such judgment.

The next clause carries the enactment into immediate effect, by releasing all persons at present in custody for debts under the specified amount. Here is a vast improvement, and the value of the measure will be better estimated when we reflect on the large number of debtors throughout the kingdom rendered incapable of any exertions that might be useful either to their creditors or to themselves; the state, too, of the debtors' prisons attached to the local and inferior courts has been long known to be of the worst description. Even in so large and populous a place as Birmingham, the Secretary of State found it necessary to send down a special inspector to report its condition. Many others were probably worse rather than better. These miserable abodes of misfortune will now be cleared of the greater number of their tenants, never again, we hope, to be similarly occupied. We ascribe the incarceration of this class of debtors to misfortune rather than misconduct, because daily experience proves that the fraudulent debtor avails himself of a too easily given credit on a much larger scale; the sharper and the profligate do not restrict themselves to debts of £20. We appeal to the proceedings of the Insolvent Court for abundant confirmation of our assertion.

The Lord Chancellor has, at the eleventh hour, revived another measure which will do away with many anomalies in our statute-book. The example of the qui tam actions, brought upon the old and forgotten statutes against gaming, seems to have sharpened the perceptions of other parties, placed by the letter of old laws within the gripe of the common informer. The penal laws against the Catholics, passed at various periods between the reigns of Edward VI. and William the Third, though long since repealed, in fact, by time and public opinion, are still existing. They fell into desuetude from the utter injustice and cruelty in which they were conceived and passed; and the vindictive hatred of their authors made them overshoot their mark. The natural sense of justice in the mass of mankind recoiled against their cruel absurdities. The penalties recapitulated by the Lord Chancellor, on Tuesday evening, appear barely credible to the present age; but there they stand on the statute-book, sad evidences of what some call the wisdom of our ancestors, but which may more fitly be termed their ignorance, their bigotry, and their love of oppression raging without check. These enactments have long been dead in fact—but, like frozen vipers, it would be possible to revive them, to the working of incalculable mischief. This possibility the Lord Chancellor wishes to destroy. Thousands on thousands do not even know that such laws exist; but now that notice is drawn to them, there is no course open but at once to repeal them. Stimulated by the profit to be derived from penalties and forfeitures, there would soon be no lack of informers undertaking a "holy war" against Papistry; and in such cases the judges would be obliged to carry the enactments into effect, unless released from the disagreeable duty by an "Actions' Suspension Bill." This danger is distinctly pointed out by Lord Campbell; but if any informers have speculated on the chances, they will be disappointed. The enactments in question, having been long dead, will speedily be buried and put out of sight, leaving those who read them as legal curiosities to wonder how they could ever have existed. It is curious that some of the worst of these laws were passed under Charles II., whose mother was a Catholic Princess—whose Catholic subjects were his most zealous defenders—and who, for a great part of his life, owed the bread he ate, and the roof that covered him, to the hospitality of a Catholic King and people. But we must do his memory the justice of saying, that the acts he authorized are far surpassed in oppressiveness and iniquity by those of William III.

After the sensation caused by the destruction of the John o'Gaunt by Captain, or—as Sir R. Peel calls him—Mr. Warner, the debate in the House of Commons on the subject will be read with some interest. Captain Warner has proved to the satisfaction of the world that he can blow a vessel to pieces. Granted, says Sir R. Peel; but before we buy your secret, we should wish to know something of the modus operandi; can it be applied without preparation on board, or under, or beside the doomed vessel? If it cannot, it is useless, for an enemy must be a very simple one that will let you come near enough to prepare your torpedo, or infernal machine of whatever kind it may be. Then as to the implement called in the reports the "long range;" of that no proof has been given, except on two mysterious vessels blown up "at the close of the last war," unknown to anybody but Captain Warner "and another." All this, says the Prime Minister, who, in such matters, is caution personified, does not satisfy him; he has no doubt that the Captain can do all he says he can; what remains unproved is whether he can do it in such a way as to be practically applied in the 'art of war,'" to thunder-strike the walls

Of rock-built cities, bidding nations quake,
And monarchs tremble in their capitals.

He who says he could destroy the city of Algiers from a single vessel, and then, after a slight refreshment, cross the Mediterranean, and with the mere remnant of his ammunition, lay flat the fortifications of Toulon, is in possession of a marvellous secret. After this, the destruction of ships and fleets, which "are but boards," is a very minor achievement.

The oak leviathans, whose huge ribs make
Their clay creator the vain title take,
  Of lord of thee, and arbiter of war;
These are thy toys! and like the snowy flake,
  They melt into the yeast of waves, which mar,
  Alike the Armada's pride, and spoils of Trafalgar.

To Capt. Warner they can be but toys indeed. Seriously, the power must be a tremendous one, and yet the Government shows no anxiety to possess it. Sir R. Peel says he has so many offers of secrets of the same kind, that if the Board of Ordnance were to test them all, it would have nothing else to do. On the day of the debate he had had four proposals from persons having invented instruments each as destructive as Captain Warner's. In fact that compositions of the most tremendous powers exist, is known to every chemist; nor are proposals to use them in war by any means novelties. Fulton, the first man who applied steam to the propelling of vessels, invented a sub-marine ship-destroyer that was tried by the three Governments of England, France, and America, and came to nothing at last. He could blow up a ship as completely as Captain Warner; but he failed in proving that his plan was practicable if the ship attacked stood on the defensive. This is the point to be demonstrated by Captain Warner; and till he does this, it is quite certain the present Government will not enter into any agreement with him. Nor can we think the Government to blame for its caution: £400,000 is a large sum; the point in dispute is not the possibility of producing certain results—that is admitted—but when a thing is proposed for actual use, it is necessary to ascertain whether the means of effecting these results are adapted to the rough manipulation, and capable of being applied in the midst of the thousand difficulties that must be encountered in the face of an active and skilful enemy, with, perhaps, adverse elements to boot.

CAPTAIN NORTON'S SHELL.

(To the Editor.)

In your paper of Saturday last, after giving a full account of Capt. Warner's successful experiment off Brighton, you also make mention of my sub-marine Percussion Shell. This Shell I constructed about four years ago, in consequence of having read in the "Transactions of the Royal Society," that it would be desirable if a Shell could be contrived so as to explode by concussion, on reaching the bottom of the sea; as by that means the depth might be ascertained. This Shell is not applicable to Artillery; but the Concussion Shell that I invented, is applicable to Artillery of all sizes, and has been pronounced by the select committee of Artillery Officers at Woolwich, in their official report to the Master-General of the Ordnance, dated 15th October, 1842, to be "simple, safe, and efficacious, being well adapted for horizontal fire with high velocities, and to explode the instant of striking solid substances."

I am, &c.,
J. Norton,
late Captain 34th Regiment.

THE COURT AND HAUT TON.

On Saturday last her Majesty and Prince Albert took an airing in a pony phaeton, the Prince driving. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent visited the Queen.

Windsor, Sunday.—Her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert took their accustomed airings to-day. His Royal Highness Prince Albert, her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, the ladies and gentlemen of the Royal suite and the household attended divine service this morning in the private chapel of the Castle. The Royal Family were taken out in an open carriage this afternoon.

Monday.—The Queen and Prince Albert walked in the pleasure grounds of the Castle this morning, and went out in a pony phaeton in the afternoon. Their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales and the Princess Alice, were taken a drive in an open carriage. His Grace the Duke of Wellington arrived at the Castle this evening, on a visit to her Majesty. Her Majesty the Queen Dowager attended divine service at the Chapel Royal, St. James's, on Sunday. Her Majesty was attended by Countess Brownlow and Earl Howe.

Tuesday.—The Queen and Prince Albert walked as usual this forenoon in the pleasure grounds of the Castle. His Royal Highness Prince Albert, attended by Colonel Bouverie, Equerry in Waiting, afterwards went to inspect the Scots Fusilier Guards, on duty here. Their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, the Princess Royal, and the Princess Alice were taken airings in the gardens and slopes of the Castle. Her Majesty and the Prince rode out in the afternoon. Sir R. Peel arrived at the Castle this evening from town, on a visit to her Majesty.

Wednesday.—The Queen Dowager paid a visit to the Queen and Prince Albert to-day, at the Castle, from Bushy Park. A breakfast was afterwards served to the royal party, including the Duchess of Kent and Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar. The Queen and Prince Albert, accompanied by the Prince of Wales, took an airing in a pony carriage; and the royal children were also taken out for a drive.

Windsor, Thursday evening.—(From our own Correspondent).—The Queen left the Castle, this morning, between 8 and 9 o'clock, and proceeded, accompanied by his Royal Highness Prince Albert, through the Slopes, to Adelaide Lodge to breakfast. The infant Royal family were taken for their accustomed airing in the immediate vicinity of the Castle. Sir James Clark, after having had an audience of her Majesty this morning, left the Castle for town, and returned this afternoon. Dr. Locock and Dr. Ferguson have not left Windsor during the day. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, accompanied by the Countess Josephine Wratislaw, and attended by Lady Charlotte Dundas, visited the Queen, at the Castle, this afternoon. Between six and seven o'clock her Majesty and the Prince Consort took an airing in a pony phaeton and pair in the Home-park; the Queen, in consequence of the threatening appearance of the weather, not venturing more than a few minutes drive from the Castle. Notwithstanding her Majesty still continues in good health, and to be in the enjoyment, we rejoice to state, of her usual excellent flow of spirits, it is the opinion of the Queen's medical attendants that the auspicious event, to which every one of her loyal and affectionate subjects is looking forward with intense interest and anxiety, will not be much longer delayed.

Friday.—The Queen and Prince Albert walked this morning in the pleasure grounds of the Castle. His Royal Highness Prince Albert rode out on horseback, attended by Major-General Wemyss, Equerry in Waiting. In the afternoon the Queen and Prince Albert took an airing in a pony phaeton and pair. The Royal Family were taken airings in the afternoon.

Present from the Earl of Orkney to Her Majesty.—Two very beautiful emews, bred by the Earl of Orkney, upon his estate at Taplow, near Maidenhead, have just been presented by his Lordship to the Queen. They have been placed in her Majesty's Aviary, in the Home Park, with the other rare and curious birds belonging to the Queen, at Windsor.

The Duke of Wellington's Entertainment to the Royal Family.—On Wednesday evening the Duke of Wellington gave a magnificent banquet at Apsley House, which was honoured by the presence of their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, Duchess of Gloucester, and the Hereditary Grand Duke and Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg Strelitz. The whole of the party had collected in the picture gallery by a quarter to eight, at which hour dinner was announced. The banquetting board, as usual at all the Duke's entertainments, displayed a princely service of gold and silver plate. It is always a rule to have the Portuguese plateau on the table when the noble and gallant Duke is honoured by the presence of royalty at his table, so on this occasion that magnificent piece of plate was arranged along the centre of the table, occupying nearly the entire extent of the table from top to bottom. On the sideboard, at the south end of the room, was a splendid assemblage of gold ornamental plate, the large gold shield, designed by Flaxman, forming a conspicuous object amidst the collection. The sideboard was lighted from the exquisitely-modelled gold candelabra, given to the Duke by the Corporation of the City of London, which, from that fact, are highly prized by his grace. Covers were laid for thirty-four. It was nearly ten when the dinner circle retired to the saloon, and there partook of tea and coffee. The concert took place in the Waterloo Gallery—the spacious and richly-embellished apartment where the Waterloo banquet is annually held.

Marriage in High Life.—On Wednesday, at Trentham, Staffordshire, the Marquis of Lorn, son of the Duke and Duchess of Argyll, led to the altar the youthful and lovely Lady Elizabeth Gower, eldest daughter of the Duke and Duchess of Sutherland. The ceremony was performed by the Archbishop of York, and many distinguished persons were present. The happy event called forth much joy and strong public demonstrations in the neighbourhood, among all classes.

Death of Dowager Lady Ashtown.—The Dowager Lady Ashtown died at Dublin, a few days since. Her ladyship, who was only daughter and heiress of Dr. Robinson, married, 25th May, 1785, the late Lord Ashtown, who died in 1840. There was no issue by her marriage with his lordship, the title on his death devolving upon his nephew, the present lord.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

Morpeth, July 25.—The foundation of an intended new church has this day been laid in this town by Lord Morpeth. The church is dedicated in memory of St. James the Great.

We have to announce the death of the Rev. Dr. Lawrence Gardner, rector of St. Philip's, Birmingham, who expired on Friday week, at Sansaw, near Shrewsbury, at the age of 76. In addition to holding the above valuable living, he was canon residentiary of Lichfield.

Confirmation.—On Wednesday morning the Lord Bishop of Winchester held a general confirmation in the parish church of Odiham, Hants, when upwards of four hundred youthful candidates were admitted to the solemn rite. The right reverend prelate delivered a highly impressive charge. His lordship intends holding a series of confirmations in Guernsey and Jersey during the course of the autumn.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

The Navigation of the River.—In pursuance of the recommendation of the Lord Mayor, the Navigation Committee and the Watermen's Committee have suggested some regulations for the navigation of the various steam-boats on the river. The alterations proposed by these rules are, that in future no steam-boat is to carry beyond a certain number of passengers, according to its tonnage, and that proper persons are to be appointed to see that the regulation is not violated; and also that no boat is to be permitted to go beyond a certain rate of speed; and the places of embarkation are to be upon a secure and uniform footing. At a meeting of the Court of Common Council on Wednesday, the report of the Navigation Committee relative to steam-boat piers was agreed to, and referred back to the committee to be carried into execution.

A New Street to Islington.—The Commissioners of Sewers for the City have given directions for making a sewer, which is now in course of erection in Moor-lane, Cripplegate, preparatory to a new street being formed, which it is intended to lead to Islington, passing by the Eagle Tavern, across Shepherd-and-Shepherdess-fields, which spacious area is at present marked out for the intended buildings. Several houses will have to be removed between Moor-lane and Chiswell-street for the thoroughfare which, when completed, will open a new line of road from Southwark Bridge and Cheapside to Islington. A new church will also be built on the line in Moor-lane, for which purpose the old workhouse of the parish of Cripplegate will be taken down.

MORTALITY IN THE METROPOLIS.—The number of deaths within the metropolis during the week ending Saturday, the 27th ult., amounted to 1,066; the weekly average of the last five summers being 900, and of the last five years 946. The number of persons who died between the period of birth and the age of 15 amounted during the last week to 446; between 15 and 60, to 310; and from 60 upwards, to 188. The ages of two persons are not stated. Of the total number 514 were males, and 552 females.

FIRE IN THE BOROUGH.—At about half-past seven o'clock on Wednesday evening, a fire broke out on the extensive premises of Messrs. Brocksopp and How, of 233 and 234, High-street, Borough. The fire originated in the engine-room, to which place, by the opportune arrival of the engines, and a plentiful supply of water, the damage was confined.

GREENWICH PENSIONERS' DINNER.—On Thursday a meeting of the subscribers to the dinner intended to be given to the Greenwich pensioners, in commemoration of the erection of the Nelson Monument, and in memory of the immortal hero, Nelson, was held at Willis's Rooms, for the purpose of receiving from the committee a report of their proceedings, and the reasons why the dinner had not been held, as well as to give an account of the expenditure of the funds under their control. The meeting was presided over by Admiral Sir Edward Codrington. The report of the committee gave an account of their proceedings from the time they were first appointed to the present time. The amount originally subscribed was £407 7s. 5d., and the balance in hand was £347 6s., £61 1s. 3d. having been expended in printing, &c. It was agreed that medals should be presented to each of the Greenwich pensioners, commemorative of Lord Nelson's victories, and the residue of the funds should be divided among the wives, widows, and families of the seamen who participated in Nelson's victories. The value of the medals was stated to be very small. It was also stated that £51 6s. 6d. had been subscribed in coppers to see the Nelson Statue before it was erected. The meeting closed with thanks to the committee for their services.

COUNTRY NEWS.

CHARGE OF MURDER AGAINST PRIZE FIGHTERS.—Last week an inquest was held at Northampton, on the body of Frederick Fitzhugh, who lost his life in a pugilistic contest with a man named Cumberpatch. It was proved that Fitzhugh's father had said, he would bring his son home a corpse rather than he should give in. The fight was for 10s. a side, in order to decide, according to the slang phrase, which was the best man. The jury returned a verdict of wilful murder against the father, and all the seconders and backers of the men.

BRUTAL MURDER AT LIVERPOOL.—On Sunday last a murder was committed in Peter-street, Liverpool, by a tailor named Owen Leonard, upon his wife, under appalling circumstances. They kept a sort of lodging-house, occupying themselves the ground and upper floors, and letting off the second floor to some poor men who gained a precarious livelihood by working about the town. Leonard himself occasionally followed his employment of a journeyman tailor, but, from his dissipated and vicious habits, he appears to have been seldom successful in getting any work. It seems that for a long time past Leonard and his wife lived upon the worst possible terms, and that, particularly on Sunday evenings, they kept the neighbourhood in a constant state of turmoil, by fighting with each other, and smashing the chairs and tables of the house. Some of the inhabitants allege that both were in fault upon those occasions, for that they both drank. It was about half-past one o'clock on Sunday morning when the dreadful occurrence took place. The lodgers were singing and carousing in their apartment at the time, when suddenly Leonard rushed into their room, and accused one of them of paying too much attention to his wife. The man denied the charge; an altercation between the parties ensued, which for a time ended by Leonard striking his wife, and the man striking Leonard in return. Leonard subsequently fastened the street door, and in the presence of his son, a lad of thirteen years of age, deliberately took out his razor and began to sharpen the edge, muttering some threats at the same time as to what he intended to do to his wife. In a short time Mrs. Leonard came down stairs, and almost immediately upon her entering the apartment he struck her a blow on the head with his clenched fist, which felled her to the ground. He then caught hold of her by the hair, and with the razor partially cut her throat, first on one side, and then on the other. After he had mangled her in this brutal manner, he suddenly raised the razor and cut off a part of her nose. She being a powerful, muscular woman, made a desperate effort to release herself from his grasp, and in the struggle he gave her another deep cut with the razor upon the left leg, and also two other gashes upon her arms. The female screamed terrifically; so also did the lad, who was present during the transaction; and in a short time the house was surrounded by the people of the neighbourhood. The door was speedily opened, but before an entrance could be effected, the crowd was horrified at seeing the unfortunate woman, from whose neck, legs, and arms blood was flowing profusely, either kicked or pushed by her brutal husband down the steps and into the street. Here she lay upon the pavement for a short time in the greatest agony, but at length was removed to the Infirmary, where death speedily terminated her sufferings. Leonard was taken into custody upon the instant. The officer found him in the act of washing the blood from his hands, and he discovered the razor under the table. The wretched man was immediately conveyed to Bridewell, but he betrayed but few symptoms of concern at the awful situation in which he has placed himself. He is sixty years of age, of rather diminutive stature, and an Irishman by birth. His wife, also a native of the sister country, was about the same age, and extremely corpulent. It is said that Leonard has before made several attempts to cut her throat. He had frequently been jealous of his wife. An inquest was held on Monday on the body of the poor woman. After the witnesses had deposed to the facts, the coroner asked the prisoner, with the usual caution, whether he had anything to say? The prisoner said, "I will say nothing at the present." The coroner then briefly referred to the law of the case. The jury, without retiring from the box, in a few moments returned a verdict of Wilful Murder against Owen Leonard; and the prisoner was committed on the coroner's warrant to take his trial at the assizes.

SUICIDE OF A CLERGYMAN AT GRAVESEND.—A day or two ago the Rev. G. Harris, minister of one of the churches in the City, committed suicide at apartments he had taken for himself and family, at St. George's-terrace, Gravesend. The unfortunate gentleman, who was about forty-eight years of age, left town last Saturday week with his lady and two daughters, in hopes that a change of air would benefit his health, he having for the last three months been in a very desponding state of mind. It appears that at a late hour on Friday night he retired to his bedchamber, Mrs. Harris retiring to rest first. A few seconds only had elapsed before she heard a heavy fall in the room. She immediately rose, and perceiving Mr. Harris lying on the floor, got out of bed, and made the awful discovery that he had laid violent hands on himself. The police were called in, when he was found to have inflicted a mortal gash in his throat with a razor. An inquest was held by Mr. Carttar, on the body, and a verdict of "Temporary insanity" returned.

THE CASE OF POISONING AT KINGSTON.—An inquest, which had been adjourned, was held last week at the Railway Tavern, Kingston New Town, before W. Carter, Esq., on the body of Mrs. Susan Turner, aged 20, who had died very suddenly some days before, in consequence, as was alleged, of having taken a draught made up by a chemist there, which draught turned out to be tincture of digitalis, and the husband of the deceased swore that the chemist was drunk when he prepared the medicine. A partial post mortem examination had taken place, but there were no signs of poison. After a great deal of discussion, the jury returned a verdict—"That the deceased died on the 14th day of July, but from what cause we, the jury, have no positive evidence proved to us." This verdict leaves the matter open, and a further investigation is probable.

INCENDIARY FIRE NEAR GRAVESEND.—On Tuesday morning a fire was discovered in a meadow belonging to Thomas Collier, Esq., near Old Milton church, where a large stack of oats, containing thirty-two quarters, was in flames. The exertions of the police and others proved effectual, for the adjoining homestead escaped uninjured. The police, from information they received, apprehended a man of the name of Jonathan Rothwell. He was conveyed before Messrs. Oaks and Spencer, the magistrates, at the Town-hall, before whom he underwent an examination. Several witnesses were examined, who proved seeing the prisoner leave the field in which the stack was situated, and proceed up the Milton-road, towards Gravesend; and when taken into custody and brought to the station-house, Sergeant Penman noticed a quantity of oats and straw lodged on his hat and other parts of his attire. The prisoner was remanded.

SUPPOSED MURDER AT NOTTINGHAM.—Some excitement has been produced in the neighbourhood of Finkhill-street, Nottingham, a place inhabited by the lower orders, in consequence of a report that a woman named Burton had administered poison to her husband. At the inquest, evidence was given to the effect that the deceased's wife had repeatedly threatened her husband, and behaved in the most violent and cruel manner towards him, and several witnesses distinctly swore that she had declared she would give him an inch of cold steel, and that she would poison him out of her sight. It was also proved that, on Friday fortnight, in the afternoon, deceased's wife sent for a pennyworth of arsenic and soap, as she said to kill bugs with; but, although the soap was found, the arsenic could not be found; and it is believed she administered it to him, as he died in great agony, and much contorted. He was taken ill on the Monday, and expired on the Monday following; but no medical man was called in by his wife, and he was unable to move. The jury, after hearing all these particulars, wished to have a post mortem examination of the body, and the coroner accordingly adjourned the inquiry. There is no doubt the result will be "Wilful Murder," as the evidence of arsenic in the body has been clearly detected.

BANK ROBBERY AT BIRMINGHAM.—A young man named Stanley Warner, connected with the cashiers' department of the Birmingham Town and District Bank has absconded with £12,000 in notes. Warner however was soon afterwards apprehended at Chester, and a number of notes were found upon him. He was examined on Monday before the Manchester magistrates and was remanded.

STRIKE OF THE PITMEN.—The Tyne Mercury contains an account of another immense meeting of pitmen held on the Town Moor, Newcastle, on Tuesday, and which was one of the largest during the present strike, there being from 25,000 to 30,000 persons at one time on the ground. Everything was peaceable, but the men expressed a determination to continue the struggle. The cry was, "no surrender."

THE WRECK OF THE JOHN O'GAUNT.—On Wednesday a heavy sea removed the hull of the John O'Gaunt, the vessel destroyed off Brighton by Capt. Warner, and after a good washing by the waves, she separated into three pieces, and drifted on the tide towards the Chain Pier. The long boat, attached to the fore-part of the vessel, soon became detached, and drifted ashore eastward of the pier, without having sustained, apparently, the slightest damage. She was immediately seized by several fishermen, who claimed her as their own, but the representative of the lord of the manor stepped in, and put his veto on the boat, and also upon the fragments of the wreck which came ashore piecemeal in the course of the night. The greatest curiosity was evinced by the spectators, some hundreds of whom had assembled upon the beach, to see where the vessel was struck; but what with Captain Warner's destructive power, and the raking of the sea, the vessel literally tumbled to pieces, leaving no possible chance of tracing the exact spot where the vessel was struck.

THE HARVEST.—The harvest has commenced very generally in the south of England, and even the spring crops, such as oats and barley, have turned out better than was expected. Some winter-sown oats have proved very productive, and the crop has been already housed in some places in excellent condition. Where the harvest is not commenced, the late splendid weather has advanced the crops so rapidly, that the utmost exertions of the husbandman and the employment of all the hands he can command, will be required to gather it speedily in.

HIGHLAND SHOW AT GLASGOW.—The Scotch papers contain long accounts of the preparations for this meeting, which takes place next week. The entries far exceed those at any previous meeting, and include exhibitors from the most remote, as well as from the highest cultivated districts of Scotland. There are a number from England, and some from Ireland. Among the stock there will be choice specimens of short horns and Leicesters. The implements and machines will be very numerous, the entries, many of them by the most eminent makers in England and Scotland, being very considerable. These two departments, from their great extent and general interest, will be very attractive features in the show-yard. There is to be a trial of new and improved implements and machines. Among the competitors in the stock classes, landlords and tenants come forward, as heretofore, willing to meet each other. The Duke of Buccleuch, the Duke of Richmond, the Duke of Argyll, the Duke of Montrose, the Duke of Sutherland, the Marquis of Breadalbane, and other great names and extensive landed proprietors, are among the exhibitors.

COACH ACCIDENT.—Last week a serious accident occurred by the upsetting of the coach running in connection with the steamers to Edinburgh. It appears that the coach was returning to Stirling by the Carse road, with the passengers who left Granton Pier by the evening boat, and while at a sharp and precipitous turn of the road, that part termed the "fore coach" broke away, and the coach (which was quite full), after running for a short distance, upset. The consequence, we regret to state, was, that one gentleman, Mr. Jaffray, farmer, Skeoch, was killed on the spot; and several individuals more or less severely injured. Another coach was instantly despatched, by which the sufferers, to whom every kindness and attention were paid, were conveyed to Stirling.

IRELAND.

ARRIVAL OF LORD HEYTESBURY.—The new Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, Lord Heytesbury, arrived in Dublin on Friday last. When the Merlin steamer, which conveyed Lord Heytesbury, arrived at Kingston, the Right Hon. the Earl of Donoughmore and the Right Hon. Frederick Shaw, the two Privy Councillors appointed to receive his lordship, immediately proceeded on board. They were accompanied by the Solicitor-General, the Dean of Ossory, Colonel Bowles, and several of the aides-de-camp and officers of the household, and, having congratulated Lord Heytesbury on his safe arrival, signified to his lordship that the Lords Justices were ready to receive him at the Castle. His lordship then landed, attended by the above-mentioned personages; and, amid the continued cheering of the vast crowd which had assembled, proceeded to the railway station, where a special train was in waiting to convey him, and the cortège by which he was accompanied, to Dublin. His lordship appeared to be in the enjoyment of most excellent health, and acknowledged, in the most courteous and dignified manner, the cordial greetings with which he was saluted. Upon his arrival at Dublin Castle, Lord Heytesbury was conducted to the Presence Chamber, where their Excellencies the Lords Justices received his lordship, sitting covered under the canopy, as Chief Governors. After the usual ceremonies, his lordship was sworn into office, the oaths having been previously administered by the Archbishop of Dublin and Chief Justice Doherty. His Excellency then held an undress levee.

THE REPEAL ASSOCIATION.—The usual weekly meeting of the Repeal Association was held in Dublin on Monday. The chairman was the Rev. Mr. Tierney, one of the accused, who was suffered by the Crown to escape subsequently to the motion for a new trial. The rent was about £1000. There was very little to distinguish the proceedings from those of former meetings. An address in answer to Lord Wicklow's recent letter to the Association was adopted; its object being to show the reasons which induced the Association to require the presence of Repeal members at its meetings.

SHOCKING CASE OF HYDROPHOBIA.—The Cork Examiner contains the following:—"Painful is our duty to announce the death of Mrs. Delacour, the second victim to this fearful malady in one family, within the short space of five months. The sad death of the young and graceful girl, the first victim, excited general horror and consternation; but who can describe the feeling with which the announcement of the second death will be received by the public? It appears that the little dog which caused Miss Delacour's death, about five months since, licked Mrs. Delacour's face at that time; and she since had a horror of the fatal disease."

MURDER DURING THE HONEYMOON.—A woman, named Catherine Meany, has been committed to Kilkenny gaol on a charge of having poisoned her husband, to whom she had only been married three weeks. Suspicion attaches to one Thomas Lannan, that he assisted the woman in this unnatural murder, and he also is included in the accusation. The deceased made a dying declaration that the poison was given him by his wife, and that he suspected Lannan to be her accomplice.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

THE LATE ACCIDENT AT BLACKFRIARS-BRIDGE.—A large concourse of people was attracted to the burial ground of St. Faith, in St. Paul's Churchyard, on Sunday, to witness the interment of the three children of Mr. Bredcott, of Newgate-market, so unfortunately drowned by the accident at Blackfriars-bridge. The three coffins entered the ground in melancholy procession about half-past two, and were all consigned to the same grave. The father was sufficiently recovered to attend as chief mourner.

THE PARRICIDE IN KENT.—Richard Dadd, the supposed murderer of his father in Cobham Park, about a year ago, was examined before the magistrates at Rochester, on Monday last, Sir James Graham having claimed him from the French authorities. The prisoner was confined in a lunatic asylum at Clermont. He wore a lengthened beard, and hair over his upper lip. On his entering the office he with a firm step entered the dock. Mr. Hayward, the clerk, having prepared an information against the prisoner, exhibited by Thos. Cooper Bines, a constable of Chatham, charging the prisoner with the murder of Robert Dadd, the prisoner's father, in Cobham Park, the seat of the Earl of Darnley, on the evening of the 23d of August, 1843, Bines, the officer, prayed for a remand, to enable him to procure the several witnesses to establish the case of the murder against the prisoner. The information was read over to the prisoner, who, with an expression of wildness, said, "You say I am the murderer, you villain." He declined to offer any defence. The magistrates then remanded the prisoner for one week, and to be brought up again next Monday. On the prisoner leaving the office, he turned to the Court, and said, "It is true; and I have got the money."

ATTEMPTED MURDER AND SUICIDE.—On Monday evening great excitement prevailed in the parishes of Wandsworth and Battersea, in consequence of a woman having attempted the murder of her two children, and her own destruction. On the evening in question, about five o'clock, a woman about twenty-six years of age, named Amelia Alfred, left her home at the water side, Wandsworth, with her two children, a girl and a boy, aged respectively six and four years, and proceeded on to Wandsworth-common, to a large and deep pond, called the "Black Sea." Whilst standing on the margin of the pond she tied the two children to her waist, and then precipitated herself into the water. The bank was shelving, and the water was rather shallow at that point, but so determined was the wretched woman in making away with herself and her offspring, that she afterwards threw herself on her back, so that the water covered both the children and herself. At this critical period an alarm was given, and they were happily rescued from a watery grave.

FATAL ACCIDENT ON THE GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY.—Between eleven and twelve o'clock on Sunday night, James Smith, the driver, was killed at Iver Bridge, near West Drayton, where the body now lies. It is supposed that the unfortunate man was going along the luggage to speak to the guard. His head presented a most appalling spectacle.

ACCIDENT ON THE MANCHESTER RAILWAY.—On Monday a fatal accident occurred to a guard of the train which left Bolton for Manchester about three o'clock. The unfortunate man, whose name is James Cooke, was seated in one of the second class carriages, and was putting on the break as the train was entering the tunnel; but leaning too far over the side of the carriage, his head came in contact with one of the iron pillars of the tunnel, and with such force, owing to the speed of the train at the time, that the skull was dreadfully crushed and fractured. On reaching Prestolee the train stopped, and Mr. Turner, surgeon, of Manchester, who was travelling by it, got into the carriage where the poor man was lying; but the injuries inflicted on the brain were beyond surgical aid, and Cooke expired in about ten minutes after the blow had been received. There appears to be no blame attributable to any one else, the unfortunate man having imprudently stretched his head but too far over the side of the carriage.

ACCIDENTS ON THE RIVER.—On Wednesday night a collision took place off Woolwich, between the City of Canterbury (steamer) on her passage to London, and the Railway (steamer) from Blackwall, on her way to Gravesend. Neither vessel being provided with lights, they came in direct contact, which caused a severe crash, producing a perfect consternation among the passengers of both boats. Both the figure-heads were broken off, but no other material damage was done.—The Leith steamer left her moorings at London Bridge on Wednesday afternoon for Scotland, but had only proceeded as far as Woolwich when she ran aground, and the passengers were compelled to wait till next tide. —The steward of the Vesper Gravesend steam-boat, on Wednesday afternoon, lying off the Tower Pier, while in a state of maddened intoxication, jumped from the vessel into the river, immediately sunk, and was drowned.

COLONEL STODDART AND CAPTAIN CONOLLY.—The Levant mail has arrived, and, we are sorry to say, confirms the worst fears so long apprehended respecting Colonel Stoddart and Captain Conolly. It seems now ascertained beyond a doubt that the gallant officers were executed at Bokhara in the month of June, 1842. The object of Dr. Wolff being thus unhappily ended, the reverend gentleman was to leave Bokhara towards the end of May, on his way to Europe. He has written an official letter, by order of the King of Bokhara, in which the following are stated to be the reasons for the execution of Col. Stoddart and Capt. Conolly. The former had been put to death, firstly, on account of his having treated royalty with the greatest disrespect on different occasions; secondly, that he had turned Mussulman, and then returned to the Christian's faith; thirdly, that he had promised to get letters from England in four months, by which he would be acknowledged ambassador from England, and fourteen months had elapsed without receiving any answer, though the King had erected japar khans (post-houses) on his account. And, with regard to Conolly, that he had been put to death for having induced the Khans of Khiva and Kokan to wage war against the King of Bokhara, &c.

POSTSCRIPT.

Saturday Evening.

HER MAJESTY.—The accounts received in town this morning state that her Majesty continues in the enjoyment of excellent health.

THE GRAND DUCHESS ALEXANDRA.—A letter from Lubeck, dated the 25th ult., says, "No real change has taken place in the state of the Grand Duchess Alexandra; but as the Emperor and Empress of Russia have decided on leaving the Palace of Zarskoje-Selo to reside at the Chateau of Peterhof, this circumstance is regarded in some measure as a favourable sign."

CABINET COUNCIL.—A Cabinet Council, attended by all the ministers, was held at the Foreign Office to-day, at the early hour of 12 o'clock.

Sir R. Peel is to dine with the Worshipful Company of Clothworkers on Thursday next; and all the rest of her Majesty's Ministers will meet the right honourable baronet at dinner in Clothworkers' Hall.

We understand that Sir William Nott and Sir Robert Sale are invited to dine with the Hon. the Court of Directors of the East India Company on the 16th inst.

DEATH OF SIR JOHN MAXWELL, BART.—We regret to announce the sudden death of the above venerable gentleman, which took place at Glasgow on Wednesday morning, when stepping into his carriage for his usual morning drive. The deceased baronet is succeeded in his title and estates by his only son, Mr. (now Sir John) Maxwell, who, a few years ago married Lady Matilda, daughter of the late Earl of Elgin.

We are sorry to announce the death of Mr. Ralph Lambton, who had been, since February, 1837, confined to his couch from the effects of a fall while hunting. Mr. Lambton was son of General and Lady Susan Lambton, daughter of the Earl of Strathmore, and uncle of the late Earl of Durham.

Mr. Sugden, the son of the Lord Chancellor of Ireland, was yesterday married to Miss Cookson, the daughter of the late Col. Cookson.

REPRESENTATION OF DUDLEY.—Edward Holland, Esq., of Humbledon-house, near Dudley, who formerly represented the eastern division of Worcestershire, and Sir George Larpent, are spoken of as probable candidates on the Whig interest for Dudley. Mr. Benbow is the Conservative candidate.

NEW MEMBER FOR CIRENCESTER.—Lord Villiers was yesterday returned for Cirencester, without opposition, in the room of T. C. Master, Esq., who accepted the Chiltern Hundreds.

THE PARLIAMENTARY SESSION.—It is now generally thought that the business in the House of Commons will be brought to a close on Thursday next, and that the House will, on that day, adjourn for a short time, to enable the Lords to consider the bills which will be sent up to them. No prorogation, however, will take place until judgment is given in the case of Mr. Daniel O'Connell and the other traversers.

DETENTION OF DR. WOLFF.—The Overland Mail has brought a letter from Constantinople, which mentions the detention of Dr. Wolff by the Ameer of Bokhara, under the following circumstances:—The Bokharee Envoy, who, it was said, was to have accompanied Dr. Wolff to England, had been arrested on his road from Persia at Meshed, by the Ameer of that place, as a hostage for the Doctor's safe delivery from the hands of the Ameer of Bokhara; and the latter, on hearing of this act, had declared that the Englishman should not depart until the Bokharee Envoy had been set at liberty.

DOGGETT'S COAT AND BADGE.—The annual rowing match for a coat and badge, left by Doggett, the comedian, took place on Thursday. The distance, as usual, was from the Swan, at London-bridge, to the Swan, at Chelsea, five miles, against tide. The prize was won by Frederick Lett, of Lambeth. The other competitors came in thus:—William Wingate, Battersea, 2; John Thomas Sibree, Christchurch, 3; William Tomson, Hungerford, 4; Thomas Savage, Alderman Stairs, 5.

COURT MARTIAL AT THE INSTIGATION OF THE FRENCH GOVERNMENT!—A court martial was held at Devonport on Wednesday, on board the ship St. Vincent, for the trial of Lieut. E. E. Gray, late commander of her Majesty's brigantine Bonetta, on several charges, framed in consequence of the complaint of the French Government. The chief charge was for disobedience of orders on the coast of Africa, on the 4th of July, 1842, in causing the French vessel Luiz d'Albuquerque to be detained and searched, she having at the time displayed the proper colours indicating the nation to which she belonged, and no sufficient cause having existed for suspecting such colours to be false; and he, the said Lieut. Edward Evans Gray, not possessing the necessary French warrant to authorise his searching and detaining French vessels. Evidence was heard in support of the accusation; and the prisoner having requested time for his defence, the trial was adjourned. When the Court re-assembled, a good deal of evidence having been heard, and a long defence read for Lieut. Gray, the Court came to a decision that the first charge had been proved; that the second charge was not proved; and that the third charge was partly proved; and sentenced Lieut. Gray to be severely reprimanded, and cautioned him to be more particular in giving orders for the future.

SPONTANEOUS COMBUSTION.—On Thursday morning a fire broke out in a long range of building belonging to Messrs. Norton and Son, wheelwrights and waggon-builders, Grange-road, Bermondsey. The fire originated in the paint warehouse, through the spontaneous ignition of a quantity of lamp-black. Notwithstanding that there was a good supply of water, the firemen could not prevent the almost total demolition of that portion of the premises where the flames commenced. About two hours previously a fire broke out from the like cause, in a large stack of tan standing on the premises of Mr. Bottom, tan-dryer, situate in the Willow-walk, Bermondsey.

This morning a fire broke out on the premises of Mr. Webb, cooper, St. Thomas-place, Old Kent-road. The flames extending with rapidity, the whole was soon in a blaze. The flames were extinguished by two o'clock.

DREADFUL ACCIDENT AT JERSEY.—A gale of wind from W.N.W., commenced on Tuesday morning, and increased during the day and night. Out of 18 persons engaged off the island cutting vraic, or sea-weed, 14 have perished in consequence of the gale. They were seen from the shore clinging to one another on the rock, awaiting the fearful death which overtook them. It appears they had landed on the rock from the wreck of their cutter, which struck on a sunken rock. No assistance could be rendered them, in consequence of the increase of the gale.

JOSEPH ADY AGAIN.—Joseph Ady, who, some years since, made himself so well known by his attempts to obtain money upon pretence of communicating something of advantage to his employers, has again made his appearance before Sir Peter Laurie, at the Mansion House. He was charged with sending a circular to a magistrate of Scotland, Mr. Haldane, with the old story, and with pretending to have the authority of Sir Peter for his offer. Sir Peter, the worthy alderman, cautioned Ady not to make use of his name again, and allowed him to depart, which he did amidst general laughter.

THE LATE ATTEMPT AT MURDER IN HOLBORN.—Mr. Smith is progressing most satisfactorily, and all dangerous symptoms have disappeared, although the bullet has not yet been extracted.

FOREIGN.

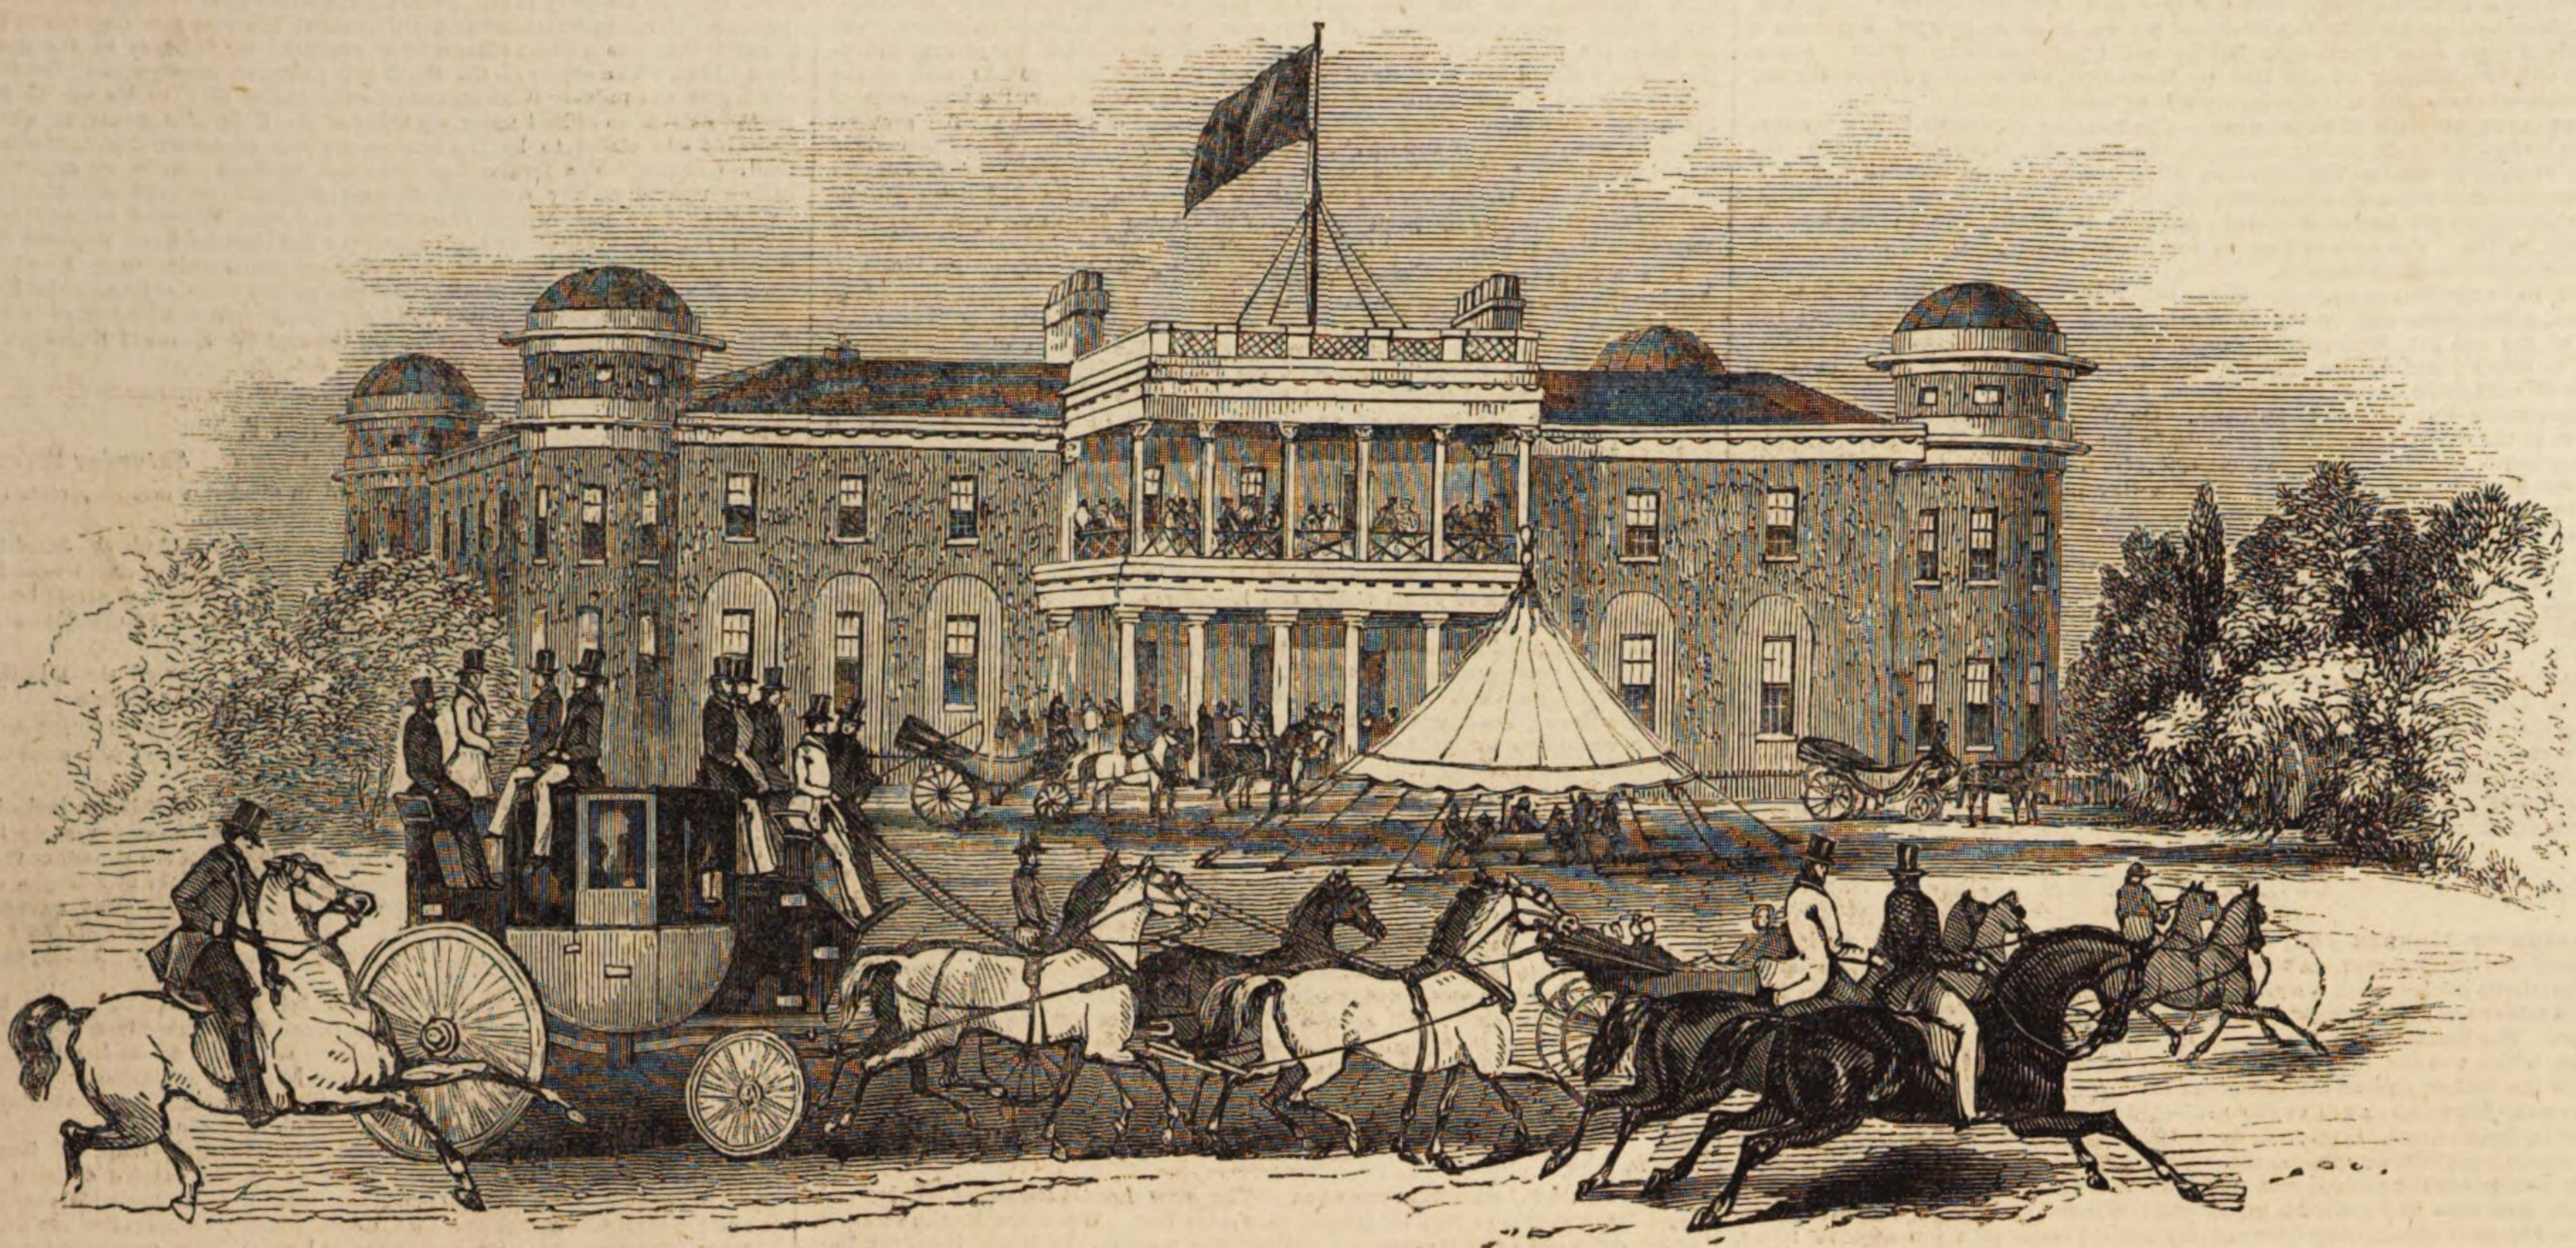
The latest accounts from Paris state that the accident in the Champs Elysées, while the fireworks were being discharged, was more serious than was at first supposed. The number of persons wounded and bruised amounted to fourteen. Of these, nine were able to return home after being bled and otherwise attended to. Several females were carried away fainting, and there is reason to believe that seven or eight, at least, are dead. A little girl, 12 years of age, was taken dead into the guard-house; and of five persons, a man and four women, who were conveyed to the hospital, one (the man) is since dead, and a woman was considered in imminent danger.

Accounts had been received in Paris of a railway accident. The six o'clock train from Montpellier to Cette, on arriving on Monday, near the Villeneuve station, ran in upon some waggons that had stopped there. The shock broke the chains which held the carriages, and they ran off the rails and were overturned. Three persons were killed, and four others slightly injured.

ATTEMPTED REVOLUTION IN SPAIN.—Accounts have been received to-day from Madrid of the 26th ult., from which it appears that another attempt at revolution has been made, but defeated. The Heraldo, Madrid paper, says, "According to accounts which have reached us, Providence has just saved us from a frightful catastrophe—the plan said to be in agitation was nothing less than to have set fire to the barracks, and, under favour of the first moment of confusion, to have assassinated the officers and the chiefs, and to have delivered up the city to all the horrors of a pillage. These horrible schemes have, however, been defeated by the zeal and activity of our military and political authorities, and the fidelity of the troops. Amongst the persons arrested, is a nephew of Don Alonso Cardero. It appears nearly certain, from all accounts, that the Exaltados had an idea of making some manifestation. They had made overtures to the sergeants of some of the regiments, and given them money; but, after they had got into possession of the secret, and received the bribe, those men, faithful to their duty, communicated the affair to their officers, and thus prevented the contemplated outbreak. Every precaution continues to be taken."

THE ATTEMPT TO ASSASSINATE THE KING OF PRUSSIA.—The annexed are the latest particulars which have been received relative to the attempt to murder his Prussian Majesty. The balls discharged from the gun of the assassin, Tschech, have been found in the panels of the carriage. The assassin, who was most violent, having been delivered up to justice, the King and Queen proceeded on their journey; but it was with great difficulty that the populace could be kept from inflicting summary punishment on the traitor. The affair caused a great sensation amongst all classes of Prussian subjects; and a prayer of thanksgiving was offered up in all the churches of Berlin for the happy deliverance of the King from the diabolical attempt on his life.

GOODWOOD RACES.—1844.



GOODWOOD HOUSE—SCENE IN THE PARK.

A PANORAMA OF GOODWOOD RACES.

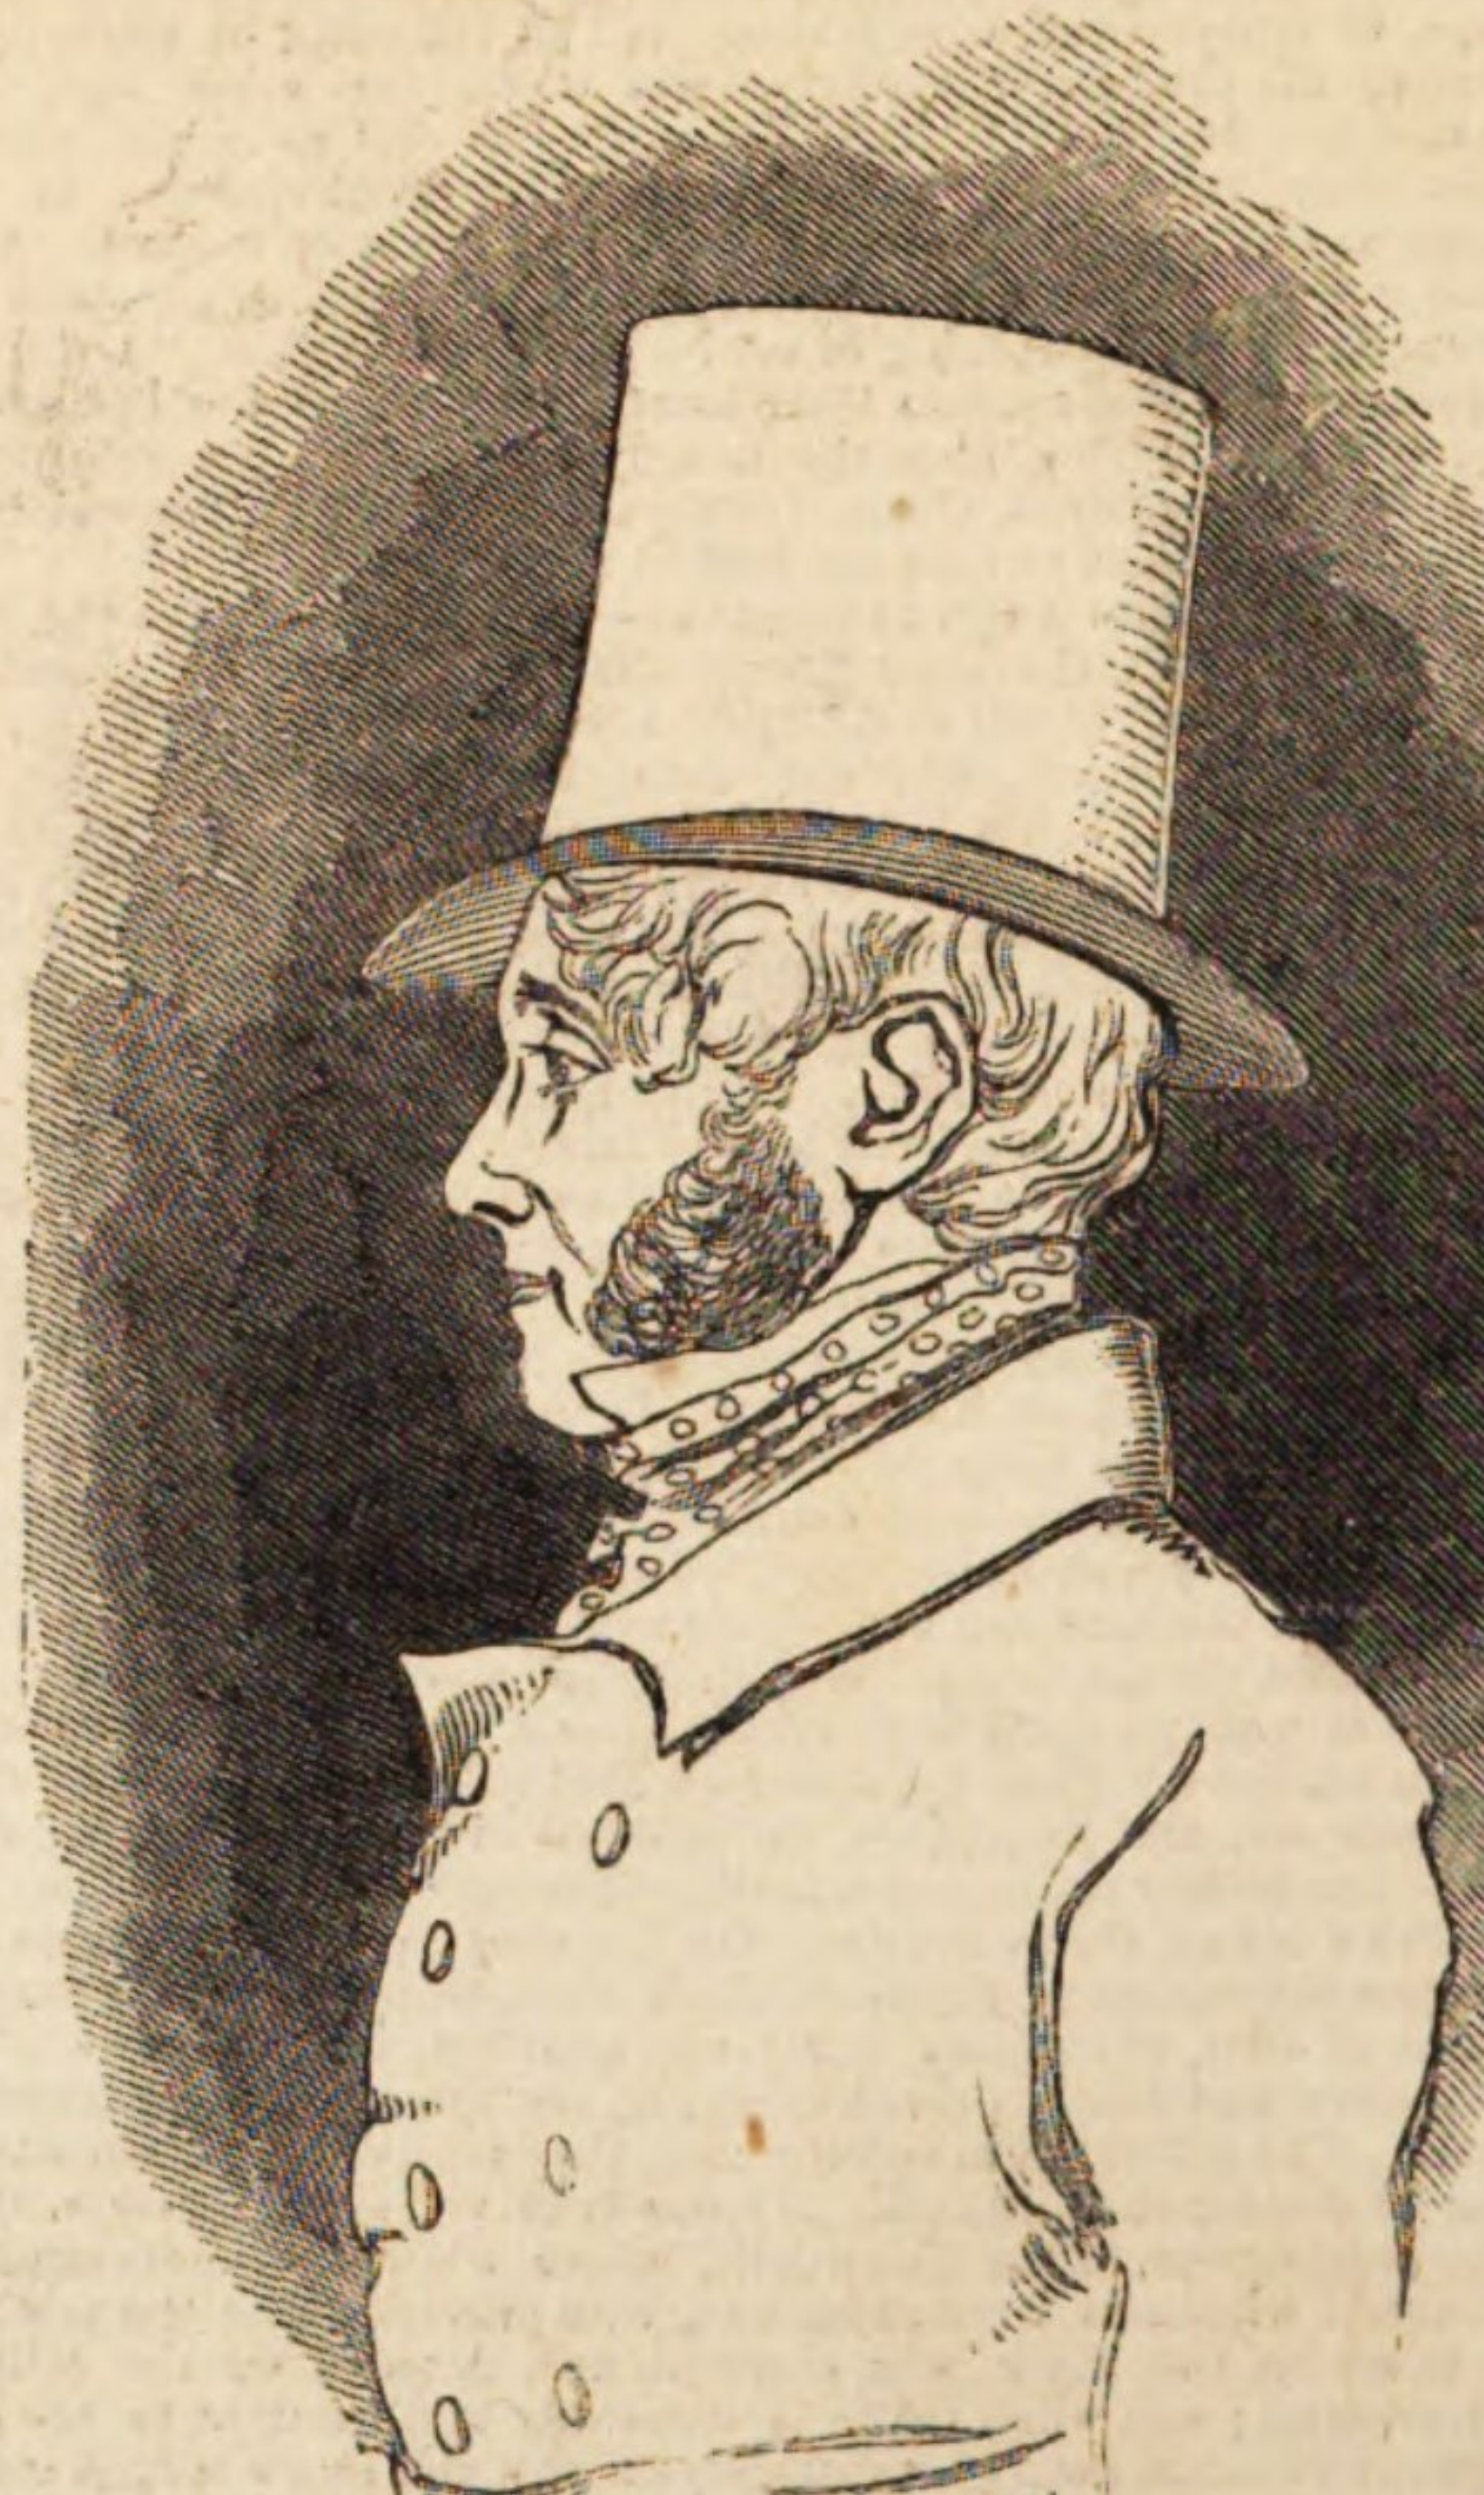
"Richmond! right well hast thou acquitted thee."—Shakspeare.

Since the days of Meleager, Pelops, and Iphitus, there never was such an exhibition of gorgeous games and proud pageantry as the present week witnessed in the broad domain of the Lennox. Elis and Olympia were places of account, no doubt, and famous for their chariots and their horses, but all Asia Minor could not have furnished a single turn-out like those which crowded in battalions to Goodwood: neither could the round world—Araby the blest to boot—have supplied a courser to compete with the meanest that trode its sod. This first of English meetings had its origin in 1802—a course for the purposes of horse-racing having been formed in 1801 on the heights of the park known as the "Harroway." There the sports of the turf flourished more or less till the season of 1830, when the magnificent Grand Stand was opened, and their golden age commenced. As a guide to the progress of their prosperity, it may be stated that the amount of money run for in 1802, was £1001; in 1814, it was £667; in 1824, it was £739; in 1834, it was £6425: and in 1844, there is good reason for believing it will be near eight-and-twenty thousand! We write previous to the conclusion of the four days' running. But to our purpose.

It is Tuesday the 30th of July, and after some mile or so beyond the entrance and the park has been accomplished, the noble home of the Lennox is before us—

The stately homes of England
How beautiful they stand!
Among their tall ancestral trees
O'er all the pleasant land.

Pity the weather is not equally agreeable: the tall trees are bent to the earth by the force of the tempest, and sad havoc is made among cardinals, pas dessus, and silk attire by the pitiless pelting of the rain. No show is satisfactory to be mixed up with things al fresco when it showers cats and dogs—but last of all at Goodwood. One might, therefore, be forgiven for envying the tenants of the fair saloons by which the route lay that conducted into the clouds which enshrouded the race-ground. However, they are left behind at last, and after winning a heavy way to the summit we are on the course. Here all is perfection, whether as regards the site, the view—the unequalled view from it, or the business arrangements, their style and their facilities. The agent of this excellence is Lord George Bentinck, by whom they were suggested, planned, and under whose supervision they have been carried out. Among the most extensive masters of race-horses ever known in this country, his lordship takes first place; and he is second to none in enterprise or general knowledge of the arts and mysteries of the turf. In the manner of his dealing with the infamously famous Running Rein case he conferred a boon on all the friends of our first national sport, which they are commemorating with a fitting spirit. The testimonial it is proposed to present him with, in memory of his efforts on that occasion, will be worthy of those who give and him that receives: we hope to give an engraving of it in these pages.



MR. GEORGE PAYNE—STEWARD.

But more on the arena of sport: the course is unaltered: the system of tanning has been adopted, and the effects of the long drought thus neutralized—this is the only novelty: all was perfect before. At half-past twelve the opening run was started for—the Craven Stakes—and at seven, the Innkeepers' Plate, the last, was decided—with half hour intervals between each, kept with chronometrical precision. This is the best indication of the amount of racing, its quality will come out in the sequel. We only advert to the principal events—to touch upon them all would be to transform the Illustrated London News into the Racing Calendar. The rich 300 sovs. stakes, 16 subscribers, witnessed the lamentable defeat of the once invincible Cotherstone. His star has set for ever; Aristides has conquered him—a horse before whom it may seem no disgrace to fall; but Aristides is in a questionable position. What's a lord or a horse without a gender? The Ham Stakes—which might be called those of the golden fleece—the Duke of Richmond's Oaks filly Refraction won—a bad race. The Gratwicke, a foretaste of the Leger, brought out eight, whereof five ran the wrong course, and of the three left in Ithuriel won slovenly, and so as not to increase his Doncaster pretension. As John Day forms one of the Two-year-old Stakes here annually, he carried of the Lavant with his Maid of Orleans—in the Oaks and a pretty mare. Such were the issues of account decided on Tuesday: the running was enormous. Wednesday, with one of the great betting races of the summer, the Goodwood Stakes, set in brilliantly; but anon there was storm and rain alternate, but not serious. The match between

THE ROAD.—WAGGONS, ETC.

Lords George Bentinck and Maidstone being off, the first affair to strike astonishment was the field and its efforts for the Stewards' Cup. Never was its like seen since the institution of the turf. Some three-and-twenty went, the distance being the T.Y.C., and they entered the rails all abreast, like the coursers of Aurora, filling the course from rail to rail—a sight that made your heart leap out of your mouth! Sir Abstrupus was the first—at last. Then followed abundance of sport, and came the serious business of the day. For the Goodwood Handicap at least twenty horses have been backed since it came into the market, at all sorts of prices—good for those who had fortune, but ruinous for those who were in too great a hurry. At one time the winner, Franchise, was the favourite; but the sporting papers declared she could not win, being no racer, and so they picked out The Era, because he had just won two crack events. A field of nineteen was admirably started for it by Lord George Bentinck, and, after an indifferent race—for, notwithstanding the great distance, none were tailed off—Franchise did win in a canter—to the dismay of more than one of Tattersall's habitués. And with this we take leave of the racing, turning to look at the fun, while the performers are discharging the important duty of "weighing tin."

Thursday, the day of gala and festival, opened with sunshine and brightness, but anon come clouds, storm, and then a deluge of rain, and thus it lasted till late in the afternoon, to the damage and discomfiture of holiday suits and holiday people. The grandees in the stand of course escaped—they were born with silver spoons in their mouths. The racing was good of its kind, and very full of interest for those concerned, till four o'clock brought on the Cup, in which everybody was concerned. A fair average field came to the post for it, against which they backed Alice Hawthorn at 3 to 1 on her! Eclipse in petticoats! The start was a good one—Antler only running out for the judge's chair, but soon settling to his work. No description can be done up for the race—the mare took the lead soon after making the first turn—led from end to end at her own pace—and won in a canter, hand in hand by three lengths; Prizefighter second, for the £100; and Era third, for the £50; places that might have been reversed had the latter finished a little more earnestly. We must not forget to notice the match between Lords G. Bentinck and Maidstone, which preceded the Cup—won by the latter after a race most creditable to gentlemen, or rather noblemen jocks. The Racing Stakes, Needful won, being Mr. Gratwicke's first winning since he carried off the Derby with Frederick in 1829! The 200 Sovs. Sweepstakes, all forfeit, Mr. Wreford won with Brother to Wintonian, and thus were the chief events of the day disposed of, when at five P. M. we left the course—in the hope of re-visiting it many—many years to come.

On Friday the races commenced with the Bathyany Stakes which were run a dead heat by Lord Maidstone's Mechanic and Lord George Bentinck's Naworth. The Nassau Stakes were won by Lord George Bentinck's All-round-my-Hat. The Chesterfield Cup followed, which was cleverly won by a head by Lord Chesterfield's Knight of the Whistle; Lord Eglintoun's Pompey being second.

On each of the days, the Stand, more particularly that portion of it appropriated to the reception of the Duke and Duchess of Richmond and their distinguished visitors, presented a fair display of rank, elegance, and fashion, and those present were—the Duke and Duchess of Bedford, Duke and Duchess of Beaufort, Marquis of Exeter, Marquis of Normanby, Earl Stradbroke, Earl and Countess of Eglintoun, Baron Brunnow, Earl of Verulam, Earl of Glasgow, Lord G. Bentinck, Lord Maidstone, Lord Duncannon, Lord Macdonald, Lord Paget, and the ladies Eleanor and Constance Paget, Lord Stanley, Sir R. Bulkeley, Sir W. W. Wynn, Sir J. Shelley, Hon. Colonel and Mrs. Anson, &c. &c.

THE PRIZE PLATE.

The "Goodwood Cup," as the great prize, run for on Thursday, is called by prescription, rather than in accordance with the proper use of terms, is a group in silver, from a design by Mr. F. Howard, the horse being modelled by Mr. Macarty, and the whole executed under the superintendence of Mr. Baily, R.A. The composition represents a well-known passage, in the escape of Charles II., from the Cromwellites, after the defeat of the Royalists, at the battle of Worcester. The passage in the perilous adventures of the "unkingship," is that in which Charles, disguised as a servant, when riding from the house of Col. Lane to the sea-coast, accompanied by Miss Jane Lane, was almost discovered by a farrier, who, in shoeing the horse upon which the King and the lady were riding, found out, from his knowledge in his profession or craft, that the animal had been shod in the north, and not in the west of England; the King having said, in reply to his question whence he came, that he was from the west. The entire group is characterised by fidelity and spirit: the horse is well modelled; the figure and position of Charles are excellent, the form and attitude of Miss Lane are very graceful, and the position of the farrier partakes of the general accuracy and life of the composition. The group has been manufactured at the establishment of Messrs. Hunt and Co. (late Messrs. Storr and Mortimer), in Old Bond-street; where, on its return from Windsor Castle, whither it had been sent for the inspection of the Queen and Prince Albert, on Saturday last, it was exhibited to many of the nobility and gentry, both of sporting reputation and lovers of the fine arts. It will be found engraved upon the preceding page.

Two other "Cups," or groups, run for at Goodwood, were manufactured by Messrs. Garrard, of the Haymarket, after designs and models by Mr. Cockerell. One of these is from "Waverley," and represents the Baron of Bradwardine, on horseback, and Gellatly, "the Innocent," lolling on the ground, and playing with the baron's hounds. This is a very commendable composition: the horse and hounds are life-like; the costume of the baron is excellent, and his position on the steed very good: the figure of Gellatly is, however, somewhat too subordinate.

The other group represents the touching legend of Llewellyn, who, having met his hound Gelert covered with blood, concludes that he has destroyed his child, and plunges his sword in his heart; the fact subsequently proving that the hound had saved the life of the child, by destroying a wolf, with whose blood he is covered; which wolf, but for the courage and fidelity of the dog, would have killed the infant. The group includes a horse, Llewellyn embracing his child, the dying dog, and the dead wolf. The treatment of the subject is not quite so successful as in the preceding group; but the design is, altogether, extremely interesting.

CRICKET.

The Gentlemen of England v. the Players of England.—This match, throughout which there has been an exhibition of the finest play that has been seen for some yeaas, was brought to a conclusion on Wednesday afternoon, after a contest of three days. The ground, as upon the preceding days, was well attended by the nobles and gentry of the land. At the close of the game on Tuesday evening the players had lost seven of their wickets in the second innings for 131 runs, and on Wednesday morning they added but 10 more, that number making therefore 141. The gentlemen were accordingly put in for 144 to win, and as they commenced the innings they bid fair to get them, for when they had lost two of not their best wickets they had scored 21. Mr. A. Mynn, however, lost his wicket without a run, and Mr. Taylor for three, whilst Mr. W. Mynn, whose left hand is still very bad, was removed for eight only. There were thus five wickets down for 27 runs, forming a vast contrast with the score of last year in the same match. Mr. Kynaston succeeded Mr. Taylor, and, with Mr. Anson, arrested the havoc which had thus far set in. The former scored 30, thus contributing 64 to the general total, and the latter 16. Mr. Fredericks was bowled for two, but Mr. Pickering carried out his bat with 20; whilst Captain Latour made two, and Mr. Spencer, with fine hitting, seven. The total was 105, the gentlemen thus losing by 38 runs.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

Accounts have been received of the murder of the crews of two English vessels by the natives of Maryee, one of the South Sea Islands, early in this year. The first case was that of the Janet of Dumbarton, Capt. Gorman. The brig unfortunately touched at Maryee, were they were immediately attacked, their boat destroyed, and 12 of their crew seriously maimed. The other was the Two Sisters, a South Sea whaler, commanded by Captain Brend, and every soul of the crew was barbarously murdered. Shortly after her arrival off the coast a large number of the natives of both sexes went on board. The crew were at their duties, but unfortunately one of them happened to take a slight liberty with one of the women, and a dreadful slaughter ensued. The natives then plundered the vessel, and in order to carry out their diabolical revenge, fired her, and she was entirely consumed. Five fine ships during the last two years have been captured and destroyed, and their crews murdered, by the savage barbarians of the South Sea Islands.

Tne Gazette des Tribunaux states, on the authority of a letter from Berlin, that the Prussian Government has come to a resolution to abolish imprisonment for debt in all cases.

The Rio de Janeiro papers give an account of the explosion of a steam-boat which plied between that city and Nitheropy, a village on the opposite harbour. The accident occurred on the day before Whit Sunday. About two hundred persons were on board, upwards of thirty of whom were severely injured, and the deaths exceeded seventy. Soon after the explosion the chimney and mainmast fell on the awning, and buried beneath it a number of the passengers, who were thus placed in the greatest jeopardy, as the boiling liquid was fast approaching them; but they were rescued by the great exertions made. The cause of the explosion had not been exactly ascertained, but great neglect must have occurred with respect to the safety valve, the wire of which was so corroded that the pressure must have been 100lbs. to the square inch when the explosion took place—it ought not to have exceeded 5lbs!

In consequence of the death of the Duke d'Angouleme, the Duc de Bordeaux has sent the following communication to some of the Courts of Europe:—"Having become, by the death of the Count de Maine (the Duke d'Angouleme, head of the House of Bourbon), I consider it as a duty to protest against the change which has been introduced in France in the legitimate order of succession to the Crown, and to declare that I never will renounce the rights which, according to the ancient laws of France, I hold from my birth. Those rights are connected with serious duties which, with the Grace of God, I shall fulfil. I will not, however, exercise those rights until Providence shall in its conviction call me to be truly useful to France. Until that period my intention is, during the exile in which I am forced to live, to assume only the title of the Count de Chambord. It was that which I adopted in leaving France. I desire to retain it in my relations with the Court."

The writer of a letter from Hobart Town, dated March 8, gives the following respecting the individuals convicted at Monmouth of high treason:—"I often see Frost, Williams, and Jones; the former lives a few doors from me, at a grocer's; he is in the counting-house; Williams is a constable; and Jones is a guard to the mail." The above may be relied on as correct.

The coronation of King Oscar of Sweden is to take place on the 21st of August.

The first portion of the Xanthian marbles which were selected by Mr. Fellows and his party in their survey of the extensive ruins on the banks of the Xanthus in Asia Minor, have arrived at the British Museum. There were altogether twenty large cases of marbles and casts. The most magnificent of these remains, the Horse and the Chimæra Tomb, were left on the ground, in consequence of their great weight; but it is supposed that they, with some other monuments of ancient art, are now on their way to England.

A fête, on an extensive scale, is about to take place at Dieppe, on the occasion of the erection of a statue to the memory of Admiral Duquesne. The King of the French has accepted an invitation from the Dieppe authorities to be present at the ceremony, which is to take place at the latter end of next month. There will be three days' rejoicing. All the spare troops from the north of France are to be present, and several ships of war are expected in the roads to salute his Majesty on his arrival.

On Thursday last the Act of Parliament for abolishing the collection of tolls at the different gates in Newington, Camberwell, Kennington, and Lambeth, came into operation, and the above gates will soon be razed to the ground.

A letter from Prestonpans states that some watermen, while fishing off there a few days ago, caught a skate of the enormous weight of 129½ lbs., and measuring in length six feet three inches; in breadth, five feet nine inches.

One of her Majesty's steam-sloops on the Mediterranean station is to proceed immediately to Alexandria, to embark Lord Ellenborough and convey his lordship thence to Malta and Marseilles.

The Select Committee appointed to inquire into the state of Westminster Bridge, has reported that on a review of the whole of the evidence, no case has been made out to justify the committee in recommending to the house the pulling down the present bridge and the constructing a new one. That it is desirable that the inclination of the roadway over the bridge be improved by lowering its summit and raisiing its extremities. That the parapets of the bridge be lowered as much as practicable and consistent with safety.

It is intended that the terminus of the new tunnel which the Liverpool and Manchester Railway Company propose to form under the town of Liverpool shall be at the north end of the town. The company will thus be able to receive and discharge goods and merchandise with ease at both ends of the docks, and merchants and shippers will be able to effect great savings in cartage.

Captain Fisher, R.N., Principal Harbour Master, has succeeded in raising the Atlas, which, it may be remembered, was sunk about five years since, by being run foul of by a steamer, near Heigham Creek, a few miles below Gravesend.

A letter received at Lloyd's, from their agent at Gibraltar, states that the Prince de Joinville appeared off Tangier with his squadron, on the 18th ult., but returned immediately to Cadiz, on finding that the English ships Caledonia and Albion had withdrawn from the port of Tangier.

A meteor, proceeding from north-west to south-west, was observed at Nuremberg on the 20th. It appeared like a globe about two inches in diameter, and passed slowly, sending out sparks of great brightness, and of a greenish tinge. It was in sight about half a minute, and in four minutes after it had disappeared a loud explosion and shock took place, which lasted a minute. The same meteor was seen at the same hour at Bamberg, and a number of persons at first thought, on hearing the explosion, that the powder-magazine had blown up.

On Monday the foundation-stone of the new public baths for the working classes, at Edinburgh, was laid with much ceremony, and a public procession of the trades of the city. The site is the Low Calton, immediately behind the range of buildings forming the south frontage of Waterloo-place.

Admiral Hamelin, who is to succeed M. Dupetit Thouars in the command of the French station in the Pacific, has sailed from Rochefort in the frigate Virginie.

A letter from Chambéry states that M. Bravals, Professor of Astronomy at Lyons, and M. Martins, Professor of Natural History at Paris, intended ascending Mont Blanc, and remaining there six days, if possible, for the purpose of resolving several scientific questions. Observations are to be taken during their stay at Chambéry, Geneva, the Grand St. Bernard, and other places, in order to be compared with those taken above. They purposed arriving at the summit of Mont Blanc on the 27th ult., or if the weather was unfavourable, some days later.

We learn from St. Petersburgh, July 15, that the health of the Grand Duchess Alexandrina continued to inspire great uneasiness in the Imperial family. Dr. Bange, of Copenhagen, who was sent for by the Emperor, had returned, after having had several consultations with the physicians in regular attendance upon the Grand Duchess.

The attempts to discover the grave of Mozart have not succeeded, but the searches made for it have disclosed that of Gluck, which has been found in the cemetery of Watzleinsdorf, at Vienna. It is covered by a slab, now broken in the middle, and obscured with moss, behind a splendid monument, erected to the memory of a rich banker. It bears the following modest inscription—"Here lies an honest German, a good Christian, and a faithful husband, Christophe Chevalier de Gluck, Master of the Art of Music. He died on the 15th November, 1787."

The Burns' Festival.—This truly national fête in honour of the genius of the poet Burns, and to welcome his sons, will take place on the Banks of Doon, on Tuesday next. The entertainment will be held near the poet's monument, and will consist of a grand procession and banquet; at the latter, the Earl of Eglintoun will preside, with Professor Wilson as Vice-Chairman. The various arrangements of Building, Collation, Music, Tickets, Police, Procession, Programme, and Toasts, are very extensive; a pavilion for 2000 persons, has been erected; festal arches will be raised on the occasion; and a tent will be put up, where entertainment may be had by the humblest pilgrim to the Land of Burns. An intensely national feeling on the subject pervades Scotland; the gathering of visitors has already commenced; and the fête promises to be a most brilliant recognition of the principle that merit, however humble, ought to have its reward. In the two succeeding numbers of our journal, we shall graphically illustrate the festival; whilst its incidents will be recorded by one of the most popular writers in Scotland.

Grand Centenary Celebration of Swiss Freedom.—We last week gave a short account of a grand meeting at Basle, to celebrate the fourth centenary of Swiss freedom and the battle of St. Jaques, fought near that town, in 1444. A gentleman, who has just arrived from thence, has furnished us with these additional particulars:—On this occasion two hundred prizes were awarded to the best marksmen with the carbine; a town of temporary buildings was erected in the form of a square, in the centre of which was a Gothic tower, surmounted by the statue of a Swiss warrior, and the flags and arms of the twenty-two cantons, the lower part being reserved for the étalage of the different prizes. The square was entered by a triumphal arch; one side of this immense building was reserved for the marksmen to exhibit their skill; on the opposite side five thousand persons were seated at dinner, and there was a rostrum from which patriotic speeches were delivered and toasts proposed. Some idea may be formed of the festivity of the scene, when it is known that twenty-one thousand bottles of wine were drunk on the first day! There were two hundred prizes for which five thousand carabineers contended. Lord V * * * *n (the English nobleman we alluded to in our last) was naturalised, to enable him to contend for the prizes; and, as we before stated, he carried off the third prize.

EVERY BODY'S COLUMN.

THE MAID OF JERUSALEM.

(Written by John Clare, in March last, in the Northampton Asylum.)

Maid of Jerusalem! by the Dead Sea
I wandered all sorrowful, thinking of thee;
Thy city in ruins, thy kindred deplored,
All fallen and lost by the Ottoman's sword!

I saw thee sit there in disconsolate sighs,
Where the hall of thy fathers a ruined heap lies;
Thy fair finger showed me the place where they trod,
In thy childhood, where flourished the city of God.

The place where they fell, and the scenes where they lie,
In the tombs of Siloa—(the tear in her eye
She stifled; transfixed, there it grew like pearl,
Beneath the dark lash of the sweet Jewish girl.)

Jerusalem is fallen, still thou art in bloom,
As fresh as the ivy around the lone tomb,
And fair as the lily of morning, that waves
Its sweet-scented bells over desolate graves.

When I think of Jerusalem, in kingdoms yet free,
I shall think of its ruins, and think upon thee;
Thou beautiful Jewess! content thou may'st roam,
A bright spot in Eden still blooms as thy home!

RULES FOR NEWSPAPER CORRESPONDENTS.

1. Never write on both sides of a sheet sent to a newspaper. Your copy must often be cut into many pieces, and a sheet written on both sides is a plague and a sorrow, often delaying the article or the paper. 2. Always keep a copy of your article, unless it be very long. It will be apt to get lost or mislaid among the haystack of an editor's manuscripts if not used immediately, and it is better and safer for you to keep a copy than to rely on the editor to return the original. 3. Never send an article to an editor unfinished. When he hears or reads that you have scrawled it off hastily, left it full of imperfections, &c., he mentally resolves to put it quietly in the fire the moment you are out of the way. 4. Never carry in an article, other than an advertisement, and demand that the editor read it at once, and say whether he will publish it or not. He cannot always spare time at that moment, and he does not, at any rate, want to tell you that you are incapable of handling your subject, should such be the fact; but send in your manuscript, and give him a reasonable time to consider it. 5. Never fall into the serious mistake of imagining that, because a man writes a sorry hand himself, he is partial to that sort of chirography. Remember that he is always writing, and generally at hand to correct any errors in his proofs, while you will not be. Write plainly, if possible; write decipherably, any how, or don't write at all.—Berkshire Chronicle.

INVENTION OF SUSPENSION BRIDGES BY THE CHINESE SIXTEEN HUNDRED YEARS AGO.

The most remarkable evidence of the mechanical science and skill of the Chinese at this early period, is to be found in their suspended bridges, the invention of which is assigned to the Han dynasty. According to the concurrent testimony of all their historical and geographical writers, Shang-leang, the commander-in-chief of the army under Kaon-tsoo, the first of the Hans, undertook and completed the formation of roads through the mountainous province of Shen-se, to the west of the capital. Hitherto, its lofty hills and deep valleys had rendered communication difficult and circuitous. With a body of 100,000 labourers, he cut passages over the mountains, throwing the removed soil into the valleys, and where this was not sufficient to raise the road to the required height, he constructed bridges, which rested on pillars or abutments. In other places, he conceived and accomplished the daring project of suspending a bridge from one mountain to another across a deep chasm. These bridges, which are called by the Chinese writers very appropriately "flying bridges," and represented to be numerous at the present day, are sometimes so high that they cannot be traversed without alarm. One still existing in Shen-se stretches 400 feet from mountain to mountain, over a chasm of 500 feet. Most of these flying bridges are so wide, that four horsemen can ride on them abreast, and balustrades are placed on each side to protect travellers. It is by no means improbable (as M. Pauthier anggests) that as the missionaries in China made known the fact more than a century and a half ago, that the Chinese had suspension bridges, and that many of them were of iron, the hint may have been taken from thence for similar constructions by European engineers.—Thornton's History of China.

EXPLOSIVE PROPERTIES OF GUNPOWDER.

M. Piobert has ascertained that gunpowder will not explode unless the grains be compact, and that if the interstices between them be filled up with finely-powdered charcoal, the gunpowder, if set fire to, will not explode, and will fuse slowly. When the powder is removed from the magazine for use, all that is necessary to restore the explosive property is to sift it. M. Piobert made a communication on this subject to the Government, but it does not appear that his plan was put to the test. In Russia, however, it has been tried, and there has been received from M. Fadeioff an account of the numerous essays made by the members of a commission, appointed to report on the discovery. M. Fadeioff states that the trials were successful.—Mining Journal.

CAPTAIN WARNER AND THE DISCOVERY OF EXPLOSIVE AGENTS.

Public attention is being still naturally directed to the recent experiment of Captain Warner. We subjoin some interesting particulars connected with it. The Brighton Herald last week published a statement which was calculated to excite some suspicion upon the genuine character of the experiment. The account was, however, of rather an ambiguous character, and was to the effect that some Shoreham pilots who had been to see the John o' Gaunt previous to the explosion had remarked, as a very unusual circumstance, some ratlin lines between the fore and main mast, down the ship's starboard side (her head then lying to the westward) and passing through an eye-bolt, which was about three inches in circumference. One of the pilots also remarked on board the ship a quantity of new warp (a rope about three inches round) lying on the deck, and wondered what the rope could be for. On the larboard side he had an opportunity of seeing also a ratlin down the ship's side. The day that the vessel was destroyed, the pilots went off towards the ship again, and one of them states that he then saw three ropes of the size of the warp passing from one point under the bulwark down the ship's side, but separated, as they descended, by two of them passing through the eye-bolts, leaving the centre one in a perpendicular line between them.—In answer to this account of the pilots, Captain Warner says, "This mysterious rope was simply a coil, consisting of two new tow ropes, for the purpose of towing the ship. Other ropes, which seem to have perplexed these Shoreham visitors, were merely guy ropes, for conducting the large or tow ropes on board the steamer; others were man ropes, hanging over the sides for the more convenient escape of the crew; and I dare say there were ropes towing overboard both ahead and astern, as will happen in slovenly ships; and the John o' Gaunt was slovenly enough, I dare say; though I pledge you my honour I was never on board her from the time she left Gravesend, ten days before." Capt. Warner, by way of clincher to sceptical gentlemen, naïvely advises the many correspondents of the papers who have raised doubts about his late feat, to "go and do likewise." A series of lectures has been commenced by Dr. Ryan, at the Polytechnic Institution, on the subject of explosive compounds. The subject of the first lecture tended to show the power the lecturer believed Capt. Warner had probably used in blowing up the John o' Gaunt. He believed Capt. Warner had used chlorate of nitrogen, a most dangerous compound; but, as a great many people believed, he did not suppose that Capt. Warner used a lock or a trigger for the purpose of causing the explosion, for there were innumerable other means at the disposal of the chemist much easier of application, and several of which were more to be depended on.—Capt. Warner's apparently remarkable and extraordinarily-powerful explosive and destructive agent, whatever it may be, calls to mind a saying of George the Third, in relation to inventions for destroying life in war. Bishop Watson was at a levee, after his successful experiments on his improved gunpowder had been made, when the then Duke of Richmond, Master-General of the Ordnance, informed his Majesty that they were indebted to the Bishop for that great improvement in its fabrication. On the latter saying he ought to be ashamed, inasmuch as it was a scandal in a Christian Bishop to instruct men in the mode of destroying mankind, the King answered, "Let not that afflict your conscience, for the quicker the conflict the less the slaughter."—It has been remarked in connection with the discovery of destructive modes of warfare, that the birth of gunpowder was the eternity of civilization. The barbarian was from that moment impotent, and never again could he destroy the works which science had raised and refinement consecrated. The confinement of the secret of the Greek fire so long to the Western Empire indicates a most ignorant and uninquiring age; and yet gunpowder, like steam, was a play-toy with boys in the streets two thousand years before its man-destroying qualities were known. Usually the discovery is ascribed to Roger Bacon; and, like true-born Britons, we contend against the claims set up by the Germans to the Liebig of the fourteenth century—the scientific monk, Barthola Schwartz. But the truth is, neither are entitled to any praise. Roger Bacon, in 1270, mentions it, not as a discovery of his, but as a thing so well known that boys used it in the streets in making squibs and rockets! Long before him, Magnus Grœcus described the mode of making it; and, what is not a little singular, recommends what is now used in preference—charcoal of willow wood. In a treatise on pyrotechnics, he describes the manner of using it as at the Zoological Gardens of this day.

THE WAY TO EXCITE A ROAR AT THE DINNER-TABLE.

In some societies jocose stories tell well. The best way of introducing them is to mention poor James Smith and the never-to-be-forgotten Theodore. Then you may rattle off a volley of their best sayings:—"Walking one day with Hook, in winter, we passed a shop with the name of Hawes: 'Oh,' said Theodore, 'fine weather for the surgeons—a nice practice, I've no doubt, during the frost—

Perpetual freezings and perpetual thaws,
Though bad for hips, are very good for Haws.

Before I had finished laughing, the name of Thurtell, the murderer of Weare, was named. 'Ay,' asked Hook, 'of course you know why he carried an air-gun?' 'No,' I replied. 'Because he wished to kill Weare without Noyse. Or,' he continued, 'like an old coat? Because he was the worse for wear,' (Weare.) Our conversation then turned upon the burning of the Exeter Theatre. 'Ay,' said Hook, 'that's quite theatrical—enter a fire, exit a theatre.' (Exeter Theatre.)"—Ainsworth's Magazine.

THE WEALTH OF CHINA.

It is calculated that the Chinese empire contains at least half as much wealth and industry as the remainder of the globe. The great body of the people are much wealthier, and more advanced in knowledge than the inhabitants of any other Asiatic country, and the advantages which their soil and climate give them in the production of valuable articles of export, and the effective demand which their wealth and taste for luxury create for the products of other countries, are such as to render them capable of becoming better customers than the same number of people in the far larger half of Europe and America.—Capt. Pidding's Chinese Olio.

THE THEATRES.

HAYMARKET.

On Saturday last the company, authors, and employés of this successful, and, we may say, only National Theatre in the metropolis, presented its spirited manager, Mr. B Webster, with a splendid piece of plate, as a testimonial of their admiration and gratitude for the unceasing energy and liberality displayed by him in the cause of the drama. Mrs. Glover was spokeswoman on the occasion, and delivered the following address (written by Mr. Buckstone), in a most forcible and affectionate manner. :—

Mr Webster.—I have been deputed by my brother actors, many authors, and all the officers and artisans of the "little theatre in the Haymarket," to present you with a testimonial of their regard for you and by which they desire to mark and commemorate an event unprecedented in the history of the drama—an event that the annals of the stage, throughout its best days, have never been able to record—and that is, a successful and uninterrupted season of four hundred nights. Four hundred consecutive nights, without, on any occasion, closing the doors for a special rehearsal, and on no pretext whatever making the slightest deduction from the stipend of any one person who has had the good fortune to be employed in your establishment!

It was originally intended that the entire Haymarket company should unite in celebrating this dramatic triumph, but a majority of the ladies, with that enthusiasm so characteristic of our sex, felt anxious at once to express their feelings for you, which they did to their satisfaction, and I am sure to your own. I preferred, with another sister actress (Mrs. Fitzwilliam), to join my brethren, and though there has been a division in the mode of doing a proud and pleasant thing, yet the hearty intention has been well and cheerfully carried out by all.

And believe me, my dear Mr. Webster, that we feel still higher gratification in presenting you this testimonial, when we know it also records your firm encouragement of English talent; proud are we to declare that the Haymarket Theatre has been English "from top to toe"—ay, "my lord, from head to foot"—with English actors, English artisans, English comedies, and, to crown all, ever a full and joyous English audience, to appreciate them.

And more honourable yet is your triumph, still more deserved, when we are conscious that circumstances—imperative, no doubt—have prevented your efforts being cheered by that high patronage which would make our English hearts beat with gratitude, and, indeed, "teach us how to act"—our poets how to write. Still a fostering public has enabled you effectively to present the comedies of the noblest drama in the world, as the honoured names of Shakspeare, Massinger, Congreve, Cibber, Vanbrugh, Goldsmith, Sheridan, Inchbald, Colman, Centlivre, Murphy, Morton, amongst the dead; and our Sheridan Knowles, with Bulwer, and many others, amongst the living, whose names have appeared in your bills during the four hundred nights, can successfully and gloriously testify.

That you may long continue in your honourable career is the wish of all who know you, and may the spirit and enterprise that so lately led you to make a munificent effort to discover hidden dramatic literary talent, never fail of receiving that encouragement from the public which is its due.

And, now, Mr. Webster, allow me to present you with that Epergne in commemoration of the event I have named, and with the heartfelt wishes of all your brother and sister actors and actresses, and every person in the theatre, for your health, happiness, and success, and for the happiness and prosperity of your dear children, who will one day read the inscription engraven here, with a glow of conscious pride, as they reflect on the triumph of their father, and the many warm and devoted friends who have recorded it.

Mr. Webster replied "in a neat and appropriate speech;" whereupon sundry champagne corks were emancipated, and the manager's health was given with three cheers. The piece of plate is an Epergne of exquisite design and workmanship, wrought in solid burnished and dead silver. Around its base is an inscription which records the occasion of its presentation, and which can never fail to produce the most grateful sensations in the breast of its present possessor. We must not forget to record that this season will have completed a series of four hundred nights of uninterrupted performance; a circumstance without parallel in dramatic history. The house will close on Wednesday next, with a variety of entertainments for the benefit of Mr. Webster.

MUSIC.

PRINCESS'S CONCERT ROOM.

On Wednesday evening a concert for the benefit of the widow and children of the late Mr. Thomas Hudson, the celebrated comic song writer and vocalist, was given in this beautiful room, and was attended by a crowded and fashionable audience. The bill of fare was of the most varied and excellent kind, comprising some interesting novelties, with several old established morçeaux. The vocal department was very charmingly performed. The Misses Williams possess very rich sweet voices, and sing together most exquisitely. Macfarren's clever duet, "Two merry Gipsies," was given by them to perfection, and deservedly encored. The concerted cadence at its close was delicious. Miss Lucombe sang a recitative and air by Sporle, "The White Rose," most exquisitely, as also Arne's "Where the Bee Sucks," both of which were encored. To the latter was imparted a peculiar quaintness which we have never heard, not to say excelled, but equalled. On the stage it would have been irresistible; in the concert room it was all, and more, than we ever heard any vocalist effect for it. Miss Dolby's magnificent voice was occasionally a little overstretched, but still evinced considerable science in vocalism. The room certainly has too much vibration for her power.

M. Leopold De Meyer, is a pianist of immense manual power, but he should get somebody to teach him the use of the pedals. His first fantasia was quite an incoherent jumble. How different Moscheles' duet for two piano-fortes "Homage à Handel," executed by the author and Mr. W. H. Holmes! All was clearness, beauty, and expression. It certainly was the gem of the evening, and never did Moscheles play more exquisitely, or perhaps was better seconded in his splendid work than by Mr. Holmes. Mr. Chatterton on the harp, and Mr. Richardson on the flute, were, as they always are, delightful, and a quartet on the subject of "Weber's Invitation à la Valse," was beautifully played on two trebles, tenor, and bass concertinas, by Messrs. Regondi, A. Sedgwick, R. Blagrove, and G. Case.

Two of poor Tom's songs were sung by Fitzwilliam and Edney; but they rather threw a gloom over the scene, by awakening us to the sense of "why we met." Nothing could have been better conducted; the whole arrangements were under the direction of Messrs. Sporle, Beuler, &c. We must add, by way of postscript, that Mr. John Parry gave, between the second and third parts, his "Explanation of the Polka," which, being encored, was in the Irish way responded to by "Fayre Rosamond." He certainly is a humorist, sui generis, and a deserving favourite with all who are acquainted with him in public or private life. Altogether the concert was a rich treat to those who merely went for music's sake, and those also who had its ultimate object in view—to assist the surviving relatives of a Man of Genius!

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL CHIT-CHAT.

Theatrical Movements.—On the close of the Haymarket Theatre, which will take place on Wednesday next, Mrs. Glover, that "mother of the stage," as Webster styles her, and Farren, will proceed to Manchester and Dublin; Mrs. Fitzwilliam and Buckstone to Wolverhampton, Manchester, and Birmingham; Madame Celeste and Webster to Norwich, Scarborough, and Liverpool; Mrs. Nisbett, Strickland, Hall, &c., to Liverpool; and Madame Vestris, with Charles Mathews, to Edinburgh. Thus will the constellation of "the little theatre in the Haymarket" diffuse its light all over the kingdom by the visitation of its separate stars.

Mr. Henry Phillips.—This popular vocalist will sail on the 17th instant, in the Victoria (Captain Morgan), for the United States. His reception there, we trust, will be worthy of his distinguished abilities.

Mr. Macready.—This gentleman has taken a most affectionate leave, for a short time, of Brother Jonathan, at New York. The following was his address on the occasion:—

According to my original intention, this evening was to have terminated my theatrical engagements in America, and the few words which custom exacts on these occasions were to have conveyed to you my parting acknowledgments; but I have yielded to influences difficult to resist, and have changed my purpose. The increasing favour of my audiences—their cordial sympathy with, and liberal approbation of, my professional efforts—the kind and friendly attentions so lavishly heaped on me, and the desire of extending still further my acquaintance with a country so full of interest to me—these are the considerations which have actuated me in prolonging the term of my visit here. In the latter part of September I shall have the honour of presenting to you once more, and I fear for the last time, those characters of Shakspeare in which you have so repeatedly and so indulgently welcomed me; and with the close of that month I shall take my regretful and reluctant leave.

Mendelssohn.—This great composer's music to a version of Sophocles' tragedy of "Antigone" has been performed at the Odéon Theatre, Paris, upwards of thirty times within the last two months. It is truly a most classic production, one which, from its solidity and grandeur, we had not expected to be popular with our Gallic neighbours. We rejoice to see they are becoming more German to the matter of sound music.

Her Majesty's Theatre.—The union of opera and ballet which has been aggregated for Mario's benefit on Thursday, fairly eclipses all possible rivalry. The ever fresh and sparkling "Puritani," with its mighty distribution of characters, will be given for the last time this present season. Cerito, who on every fresh appearance is hailed with enthusiasm and floral offerings, will, with St. Leon, dance the exquisite pas from the pastoral ballet of "Zelia." Moriani, who has stamped himself as the greatest dramatic vocalist of Europe, and the delightful Persiani, will co-operate in a lyrical selection. Perhaps the novelty most rife with curiosity is the advent of Fanny Elssler in the romantic ballet of "Esmeralda." Here is a worthy subject for the exercise of her rare powers as a dancer and mime. We feel that the impersonation of Victor Hugo's creation will be perfect. We perceive that the bill is honoured by a "desire."

ASSIZE INTELLIGENCE.

TRIALS FOR INCENDIARISM.

At the Suffolk assizes, held at Ipswich, the majority of cases tried consisted of charges of arson. There was nothing of striking interest in any of the facts, but as our readers will no doubt like to know the results and the general circumstances connected with these trials—the subject having excited so much attention, we subjoin a careful analysis of them.

George Garrett, aged 11, was indicted for feloniously setting fire to a straw-stack, shed, and other property belonging to James Cooper, on the 21st of February. The charge was fully established against the prisoner, but he had been sadly neglected by his parents; he had never learned a letter of the alphabet, and had never worn a pair of shoes in his life. The prisoner was recommended to mercy, and Mr. Baron Alderson promised it should be attended to.

James Lankester, aged 30, was indicted for wilfully and malisiously setting fire to a stack of wheat, the property of Mr. G. Paine, of Great Barton, in June last. The prosecutor is a farmer occupying land under Sir Henry Banbury, near Bury St. Edmund's. The prisoner is a native of Palgrave, and got his living by travelling round the country on foot, hawking trifling wares, and singing, or reciting, scraps of ballads, songs, and hymns, the burden of which, from a specimen which he gave to the jury in his defence, would seem to have been "the blessings of cheap bread," the "want of work" in general, and the particular lack of it on the songster's part. These songs and ballads—as were his cross examination and speech to the jury, which were voluble and fluent in the extreme—were strongly interlarded with allusions to the Deity. In fact, his mind, like his wallets, of which he had at least six of all shapes and sizes, was filled with the most extraordinary and heterogeneous collection of articles and "unconsidered trifles." This personage was seen on the day of the fire going on the road towards the wheat stack of the prosecutor, and at the distance of about half a mile of it, at about two o'clock. The flames were first discovered at four o'clock, and various witnesses proved that he was seen later than that on the same day just beyond the stack, and going through Barton towards Bury, where he ordered a fresh supply of his bills and songs, and was not long afterwards taken into custody on suspicion of this charge, an old lucifer match box having been found near the stack and in the road. On being taken to a public-house, the constables searched him. In one of his bags was a quantity of very dry grass; in another, a few broken matches; in a third, some old rags and paper; and in a fourth were three phials, each of which contained some liquid. The jury found him "Guilty."

Edward Botwright, aged 22, was charged with firing a barn and outbuildings at Sotterley, in the occupation of Hannah Watling, on the 1st of June; and John Spilling was charged as an accessory before the fact.—Robert Watling, the son of the prosecutrix, was awoke by his wife at twelve o'clock at night with an alarm of "Fire!" He jumped up directly, and hurried down stairs to the barn, which he found in flames. He and the men who were there let out the stock.—The prisoner Botwright had been discharged for dishonesty. A threatening letter was found in the yard, which was in his hand-writing. The case was made out against Botwright, who was convicted, but Spilling was acquitted, by direction of the learned judge.

David Jackson, aged 13, was found guilty of setting fire to a barn, the property of John Cracknell, at Redlingfield, on June 3. The jury, however, recommended him to mercy.—Mr. Baron Alderson admonished the lad for the enormity of his guilt, which had arisen purely from the idle conversation in which he had been engaged with his companions. In order, however, to carry out the views of the jury, in which he concurred, he should only sentence him to fifteen years' transportation, and care would be taken that he should be dealt with in the Penitentiary.

[While the above trials were in progress a curious incident arose, which resulted in the commitment of a clergyman, the Rev. Mr Maberley, who is said to have acquired some notoriety from his strong opposition to the New Poor-law. Suddenly, Mr. Baron Alderson rose in great agitation, and said, holding some papers in his hand, "I have received some letters from a clergyman, named Maberley, who says he has some materials in his hands that would be of advantage to these people. In God's name then, let him produce them. What am I to do? Am I to go out of court to speak to this person, who lives at the Admiral's Head? Have I not enough to do here in disposing of this heavy calendar? I know what turn such matters sometimes take. If I take no notice of these letters, assertions and statements may be made not warranted by facts. (With great energy)—I wish him to come forward in open court! That is the proper place for him. His conduct is very indecent and improper." Mr. Maberley stood up, and referring to some of the cases, said he wanted the trial to take place the next day, and he would be at any expense for witnesses. Mr. Baron Alderson: I can make no conditions, sir. The Rev. Mr. Maberley (with great energy): I want a fair trial for the men. Mr. Baron Alderson: Yes, and they shall have a fair trial whilst I preside here—as fair a trial as it will be in my power to afford. The Rev. Mr. Maberley (striking his hand upon the witness-box): I shall insist upon the men having a fair trial. I demand it—I demand that the trial shall be fixed for to-morrow. Upon this, Mr. Baron Alderson ordered the rev. gentleman into custody. Shortly afterwards, however, the learned judge directed that Mr. Maberley might be discharged, and said he would fix the case of Borley for the next day, if that prisoner wished it. Borley, on being saked, intimated that such was his desire, and thus the matter ended.]

On the succeeding day (Saturday last) the case accordingly came on.

Frederick Borley, aged 18, and John Durrant, aged 17, were charged with firing two stacks, the property of Ambrose Candler, at Stowmarket, on Sunday, the 19th of May. The evidence of the prosecutor proved that the stacks in question were fired about half past three o'clock in the afternoon, and totally consumed. From the description given of the premises, it appeared that they were situated near to the town of Stowmarket, and close by a plantation, and near to this place the two prisoners and one Williams were seen loitering and talking at intervals during the Sunday afternoon, and just before and after the fire broke out. In addition to this testimony, Williams, having been admitted Queen's evidence, was called, and he swore that he was engaged in watching Borley while he perpetrated the offence. Mr. Maberley interposed in the course of the trial and said he wished some witnesses to be examined for Borley, against whom he said he believed there was a conspiracy. The witnesses, whose names were given by Mr. Maberley, were then heard and an attempt was made to prove an alibi. It was not successful however, for Borley was convicted and Durrant acquitted.

Layzell Randall, aged 16, and Isaac Everett, aged 21, were charged with having fired the premises of Mr. Nordon, at Assington, on the 24th May. Verdict—Guilty.

Samuel Jacob, aged 28, was convicted of wilfully and maliciously setting fire to a barn, the property of Robert Boby, on the 25th of June last.

Robert Roper, aged 15, was indicted for setting fire to a stack of wheat, the property of the Rev. Thomas Collyer, on the 9th of March last.—The prisoner was acquitted.

Robert Grimwade, aged 38, was convicted of sending a letter to Sir Joshua Rowley, threatening to burn his house, in the occupation of Mr. Brown, the charge being varied in three counts of the indictment.

When the trials at these assizes were over, Mr. Baron Alderson and Mr. Justice Williams proceeded to pass sentence upon the prisoners who had been convicted of arson. The sentences were proportioned to the character of the offences in the several instances, some of the parties being transported for seven, others for ten, others for twenty years, and some for life.

The following is a correct summary of the result of the trials for arson in Suffolk. There were 21 cases for trial, in which 28 persons were charged with this crime. Of these there were—convicted, 15; acquitted, 10; no true bill, 2; admitted Queen's evidence, and therefore not tried, 1; total, 28.

The Grand Jury at these assizes made a presentment, in which they stated that although they had minutely examined the witnesses with the view of eliciting the causes and motives of the crime of arson, they could not arrive at any satisfactory conclusion. They add their testimony to the efficient and zealous exertions displayed by every class of people, not only in bringing to justice the perpetrators of this crime, but for the ready and active assistance afforded by the labourers in extinguishing the fires and protecting property on all occasions.

There have also been convictions for arson at Lewes and at Exeter, but there was nothing in the cases worthy of detail.

At the Nottingham assizes, Abraham Favour, aged 21, was found guilty of firing a stack of stubble at Barnby-moor, and sentenced to be transported for life.

Frightful Murder of a Wife and Three Children.—At the Nottingham assizes, before Lord Denman, William Saville, aged 29, a frame-work knitter, of New Radford, was charged with the murder of his wife. There were three other indictments against the prisoner, charging him respectively with having murdered Harriett Saville, Mary Saville, and Thomas Saville, his children. The indictments were sustained by a long chain of circumstances, for which purpose witnesses to the number of 40 were examined. By their evidence it was proved that in the month of May the prisoner was lodging at the house of a man named Sutton, near Birch-row, Radford. His wife and three children had been in the workhouse, but had come out on the Monday preceding the Tuesday the crimes in question were alleged to have been committed. It appeared Saville had been paying some attentions to a young woman named Tate, and the only motive that suggested itself to the mind for the commission of these awful murders was, that he wished to get his wife out of the way, and rid himself of the incumbrance of his children. It appeared that when the poor woman left the workhouse with her children, she said she would go in search of her husband, and on the following morning, the husband, wife, and children, were seen in Nottingham together. In the afternoon of the same day he was seen alone, and was heard to say he had lost sight of his wife near Manners-street. In the course of the Tuesday evening, Saville was heard to say he supposed his wife had drowned herself, and suspicion being excited enquiry was set on foot, and on the Wednesday the bodies were found between Colwick and Carlton in the neighbourhood of Nottingham. From the appearance of the ground, it was evident there had been a struggle between the wife and the prisoner; in her hand was found a razor. From Colwick to Carlton there is a footpath, and at the foot of a hill to which it leads is the spot wherein the bodies were found. At the commencement of the plantation there is a gate. The bodies were discovered by a man named Swinscoe on Wednesday, the 29th of May, about one o'clock. He went into the plantation to get something for his rabbits, where he saw three little children, lying, as he thought, asleep—one had its eyes open. Looking at the girls he saw them wounded—further from them the body of the woman was discovered with her throat dreadfully cut, and a razor in her hand, but quite loose, so that it would appear to have been placed there. The body of the woman was a few yards from the children. She lay stretched, as though dragged; the children lay together. There was a train of blood nearly all the way from the females to the children. They were put into a cart and carried away to a barn at Colwick. The evidence went to prove the prisoner was seen near to, and going in, the direction of the spot in question, with his wife and children, on the Tuesday; that he was carrying the youngest child on his shoulder, their ages being about seven, five, and three, and that the bodies of the murdered children were those that had been seen with the prisoner. Two men named Bret saw the prisoner, his wife, and children, sitting on a bank within twenty yards where the bodies were found. The children were gathering flowers. Saw the same man some time after come from the plantation alone—as he passed he looked very white. Many witnesses were called, and altogether a case of strong circumstantial evidence was made out. The jury almost immediately returned a verdict of Guilty, whereupon the prisoner was sentenced to be hanged.

POLICE.

Forgery of Coupons on the Government of the Netherlands.—On Monday Pietro Valler, a merchant, residing in Hatton-garden; Francis Enrico, Gibraltar-row, Lambeth, fencing-master; and Henry Harrison, whose residence was unknown, but was described in the police sheet as a linen-draper, were charged at Union-hall with forging and having in their possession certain Dutch coupons for dividends in Dutch Five per Cent. stock. Mr. Mullens, of the firm of Bush and Mullens, solicitors to the Society of Bankers for the Detection of Forgery, attended to prosecute the case on behalf of the Dutch Government. He stated that on the 18th ult. the prisoner Harrison came to the house of Mr. Louis Cluck Rosenthall, an artist and engraver, residing at 109, Wellington-terrace, Waterloo-road, and, after praising a work he had in hand, representing the figure of the late Duke of Sussex in his state robes, said he thought he could give him a little job of his own to do, and after a few minutes' conversation he departed, but shortly returned with a genuine coupon, and said he should require 550 of those documents to be printed, for which he agreed to pay £3 10s.; the coupon was left, and the prisoner went away with the understanding that the work was to be executed with all convenient speed. The suspicions of Mr. Rosenthall were aroused, in consequence of which he watched the motions of the prisoner, and observed that he joined two foreigners who were waiting outside, with whom he (Harrison) entered into an earnest conversation; afterwards, they all three walked away. Mr. Rosenthall immediately put himself in communication with the Dutch Consul, showing him the genuine coupon, and described the nature of the work he had been requested to undertake. A communication was immediately made to Messrs. Bush's office, and the witness was desired to proceed with the work, having received the authority of the Dutch Consul so to do. The affair was then placed in the hands of the detective force by Messrs. Bush and Mullens, and the whole of the prisoners were apprehended on Saturday last, at the Hero of Waterloo, Waterloo-road. Some further evidence was given, and the prisoners, who declined saying anything, were remanded.

Brutal Injury Inflicted by a Husband on his Wife.—At Clerkenwell police-court, on Tuesday, a man named George Lawson, residing in Charles-street, Bagnigge-wells road, was charged with wounding Frances Lawson, his wife, whereby her life was seriously endangered.—It appeared from the evidence that the prisoner, who is a man of drunken habits, was presiding at some society having benevolence for its professed object, in the Fox and French-horn beer-shop, in Clerkenwell-green, on Sunday night last. Having drank a good deal, he fell asleep in the tap-room, with his head reclining on the table. His wife, who was likewise under the influence of liquor, came in and asked him for money; he did not hear her, upon which she seized him by the arm, and shook him. He immediately jumped up, with a long pipe in his hand. Angry words ensued, and the prisoner thrust the shank of the pipe into her right eye. The thrust was made with such violence, that the shank penetrated into her head an inch and a half, and was broken across in the eye, about the eighth of an inch protruding. The woman fell, and bled so profusely that there was a pool of blood on the floor of the tap-room. Police-constable 242 G was called in, but he was so shocked at the woman's appearance, that he fainted, and was carried out of the room in a state of insensibility. The prisoner, taking advantage of the condition of the officer and without attempting to administer the slightest assistance to his wife, ran away, and was not arrested until Monday night, when Doyle, 197 G, arrested him in Maiden-lane, Islington. The prosecutor was conveyed to St. Bartholomew's Hospital, bleeding all the way thither The house-surgeon considered her life in imminent danger, and she still lies there.—The prisoner, who evinced the utmost indifference at his wife's condition, was remanded for a week, but subsequently admitted to bail.

Riot and Assault at the Essex-st. Pier.—On Tuesday, at Bow-st., William Irish, George Everard, James Everard, John Rutland, and William Reeves, were charged at the instance of Henry Maynard with having committed a violent assault upon him, on the morning of Thursday week. The charge arose out of an attempt made with great violence on that morning to destroy a pier belonging to Mr. Francis, at the east end of Essex-street, Strand. The court was crowded with a number of lightermen, watermen, and several of the Thames police, and also persons residing in the neighbourhood, who have for some time suffered the greatest annoyance from the uproar and confusion continually occurring in the locality, in defiance of a strong body of police who were constantly in attendance. Mr. Bodkin attended on the part of the Watermen's Company to prefer the complaint, and Mr. Child appeared for the defendants, some of whom carried broken shovels, hammers, crowbars, and other articles which had been used in the affray.—Mr. Bodkin explained that the misunderstanding arose respecting property belonging to Mr. Francis, who owned a floating pier at the end of Essex-street, in front of his premises, which for a considerable time had been found to be of the greatest convenience to the public. On the day in question the defendants came at an unusually early hour to destroy the works erected by Mr Francis, which, being taken notice of by two or three more left in charge, they were opposed by about thirty persons, who succeeded in destroying the bridge, during which time assaults were committed, in addition to a serious riot and confusion which ensued, to the annoyance of respectable inhabitants in the neighbourhood.—Henry Maynard, who had his arm in a sling, in consequence of the wounds he received, stated that, being in the service of Mr. Francis, he was placed on, Thursday, at the top of Essex-street, for the purpose of protecting the bridge, which occupies one half of the steps. About three o'clock in the morning he was called by Charles Hill to the upper part of the pier, where he saw the defendants, with about thirty others, some of whom were then in court. [The witness here pointed out Henry Collins, who was instantly placed at the bar.] Several of them came from Execution Dock. When he came up they were breaking down the steps at the pier. He addressed Rutland first, and said he thought he was more interested in the works than to act in such a manner, and he instantly struck him in the breast, after driving him from the gate, saying he would attend to his own interest before that of old Francis. He was next assaulted by William Reeves, who struck him three times, merely because he was protecting his master's property, while George Everard held him by the throat to enable James Everard, assisted by Irish, to fell him to the ground, where he received severe kicks from George Everard, and when he called Hill to protect him they threatened to "do for him" if he attempted to approach. They at length succeeded in tearing up the platform and destroying it. The defendant George Everard held a crowbar, with which he aimed a blow at witness which struck him in the mouth, and had the blow not been warded off by a young man he would have received a very serious injury. After he was repeatedly assaulted a man named Fitzgerald and Reeve told him they were paid for what they had done, and if he would pay them they would build up the works again. Richard Everard repeatedly said he belonged to the Woolwich Company, the boats of which stop at the next pier.—Charles Hill, after confirming the statement of the last witness respecting the assaults and riot, said that on Monday week it was agreed, in the presence of Inspector Lewis, of the Thames police, that his master should in future make use of half the way without interruption.—In answer to Mr. Child, the witness said it was not the first time an attempt had been made on the works belonging to Mr. Francis, and his bridge was at present in the mud, but persons could get to the pier, unless they were prevented by the touters who induced them to go on the other. Other confirmatory evidence was given.—Mr. John Tyas stated that shortly before three o'clock on the morning in question he was returning along the Strand to his residence, 16, Essex-street, when he heard the noise, and, on entering the street, he saw his wife looking out of the window, beseeching of him not to proceed further, as he might receive some injury from the mob that had collected. There were several other persons at their windows, in great alarm, and, on advancing to the steps of the pier, he found a riot of a most serious nature going on, of which he gave information to the police. On returning again, he saw the platform struck, and the witness Maynard very seriously injured, and bleeding profusely from his wounds. He drew the attention of the constables to this, as he thought they would be justified in taking some of the assailants into custody, but they refused, and his impression was that they were afraid of being overpowered by numbers.—Mr. Twyford ultimately ordered the defendants to put in bail, themselves in £20 each, and two sureties in £10 each, to answer the charge at the sessions.

A letter from Gibraltar states, that while the Prince de Joinville was there, he was present at a ball, given on board her Majesty's ship Warspite, by Capt. Wallis, in honour of his Royal Highness Prince Henry of the Netherlands. His Royal Highness Prince Henry was received on the quarter-deck by Capt. Wallis and his officers, together with the Governor, Sir Robert Wilson. The ball commenced shortly afterwards, and was opened by Prince Henry and Miss Wilson, daughter of the Governor. About an hour afterwards the Prince de Joinville arrived, and danced also with Miss Wilson. His Royal Highness danced no more, and retired at an early hour; but Prince Henry remained all the evening, and the greater part of the ladies were honoured by dancing with him in quadrilles, waltzes, the polka, &c.

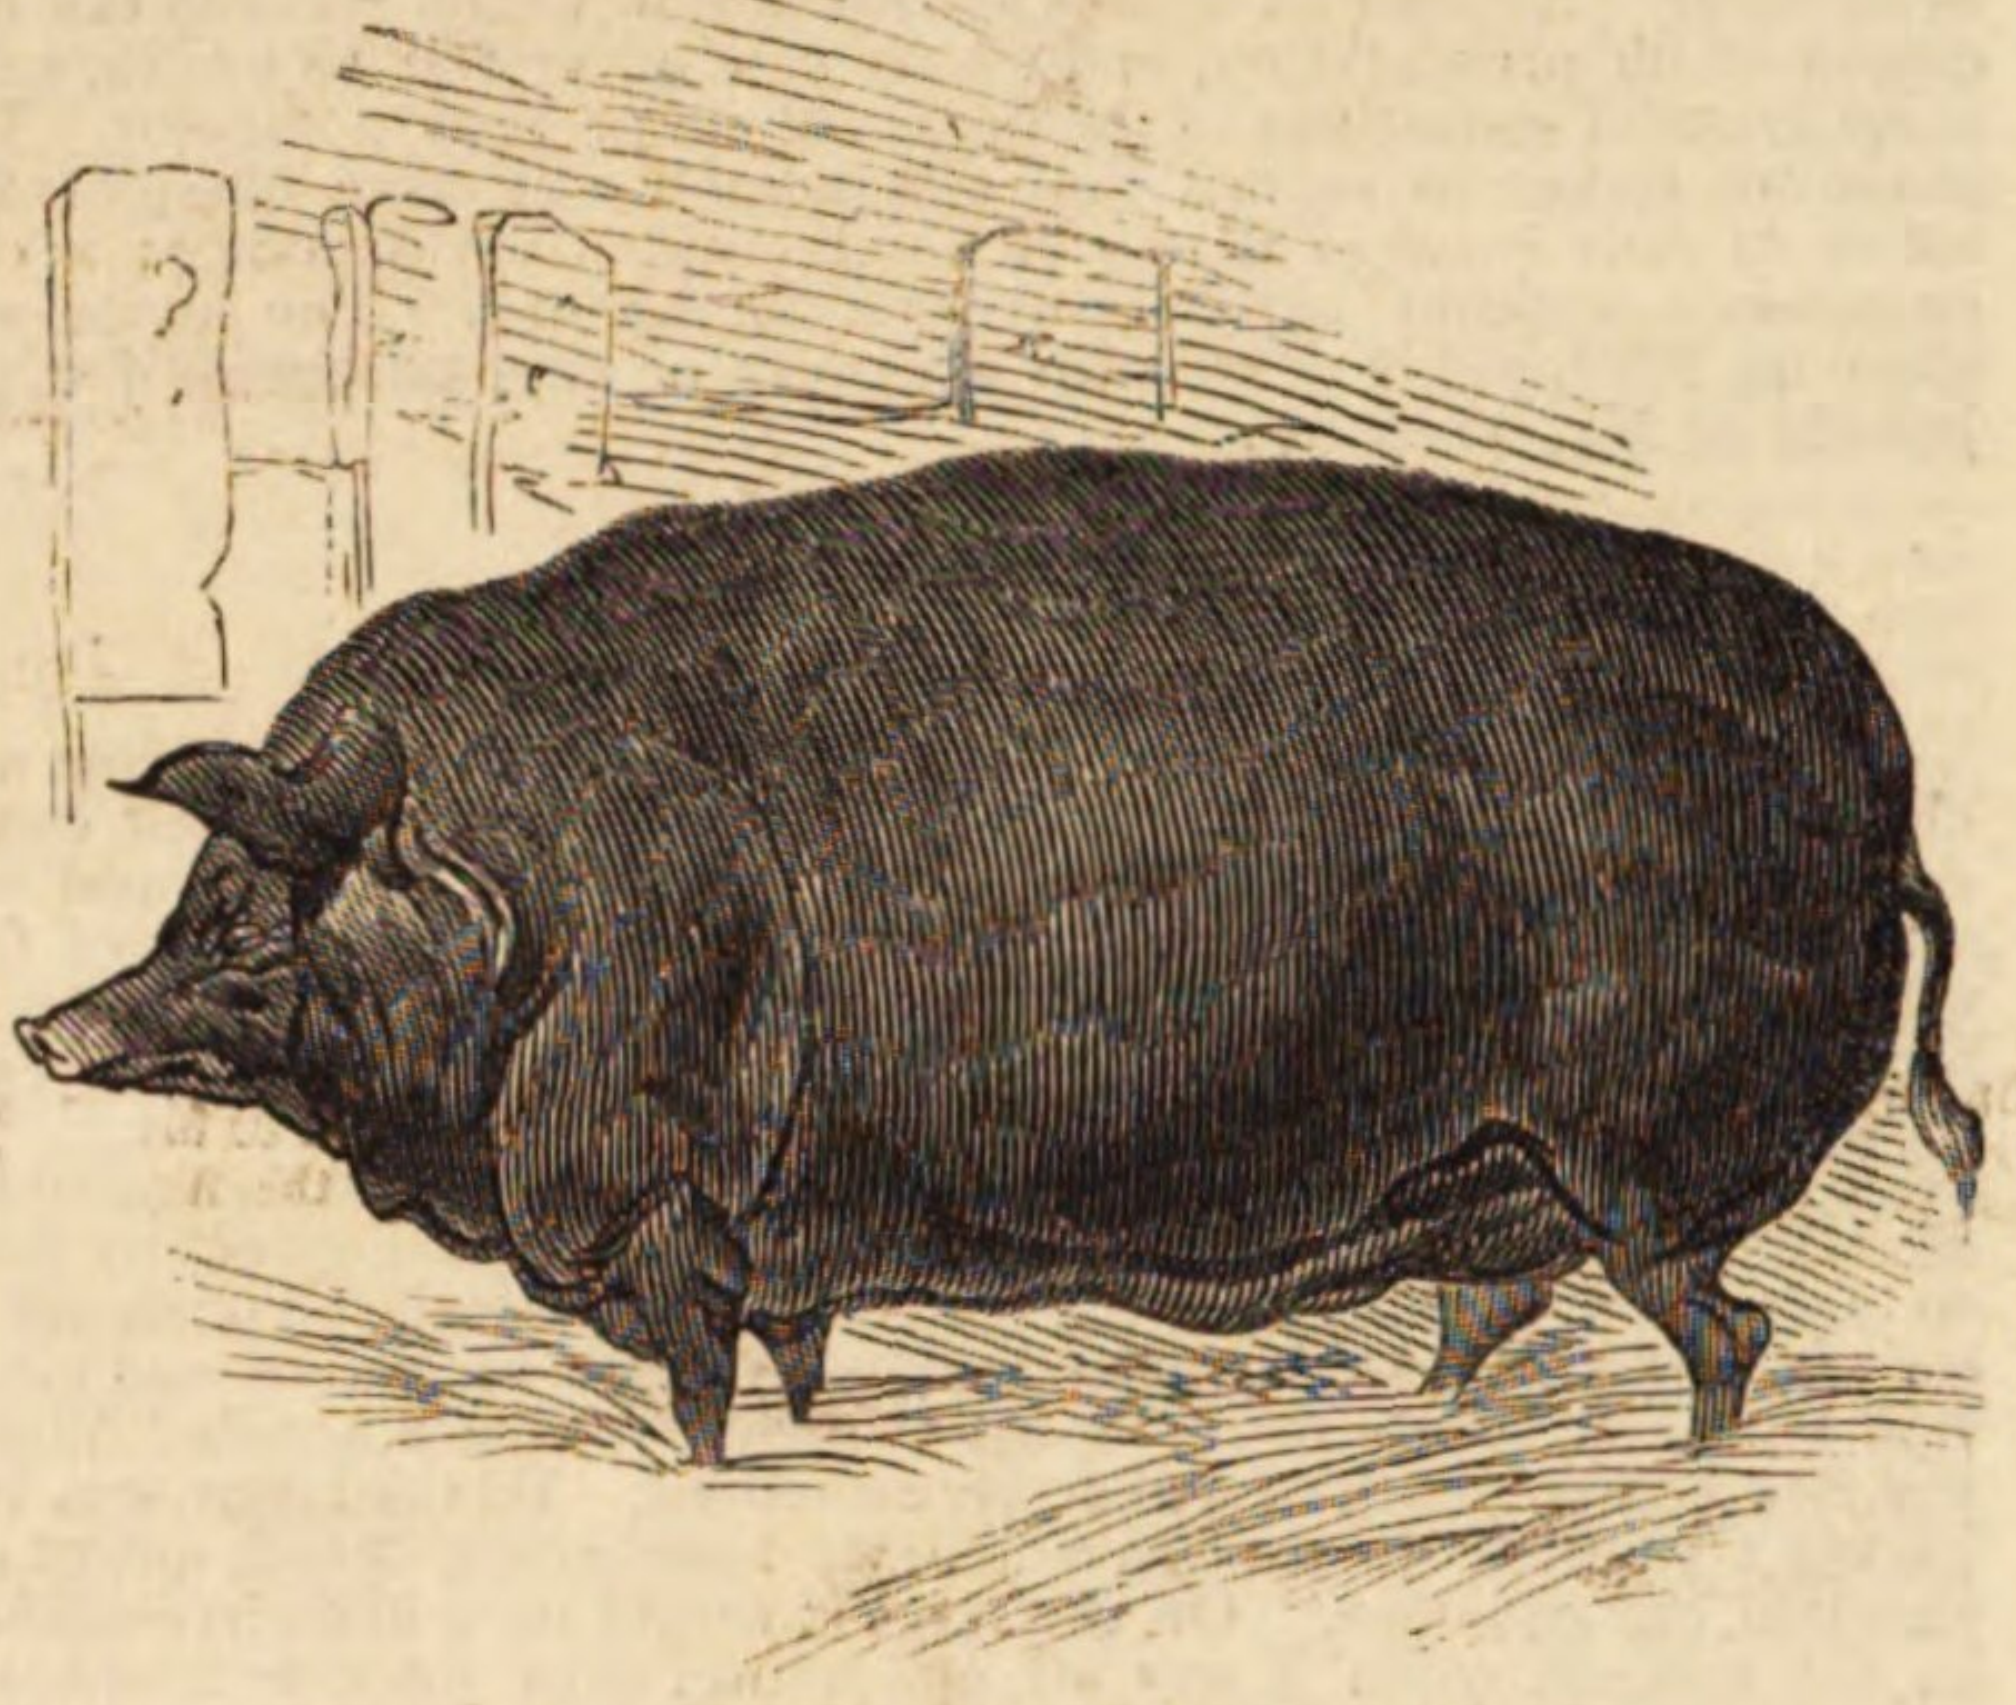
SOUTHAMPTON MEETING OF THE ROYAL AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY OF ENGLAND.

In our journal of last week we reported the proceedings of this highly important meeting, to "the Dinner in the Pavilion," on Thursday. In the evening there was a grand ball at the Victoria Assembly-rooms, at which between 400 and 500 persons were present.

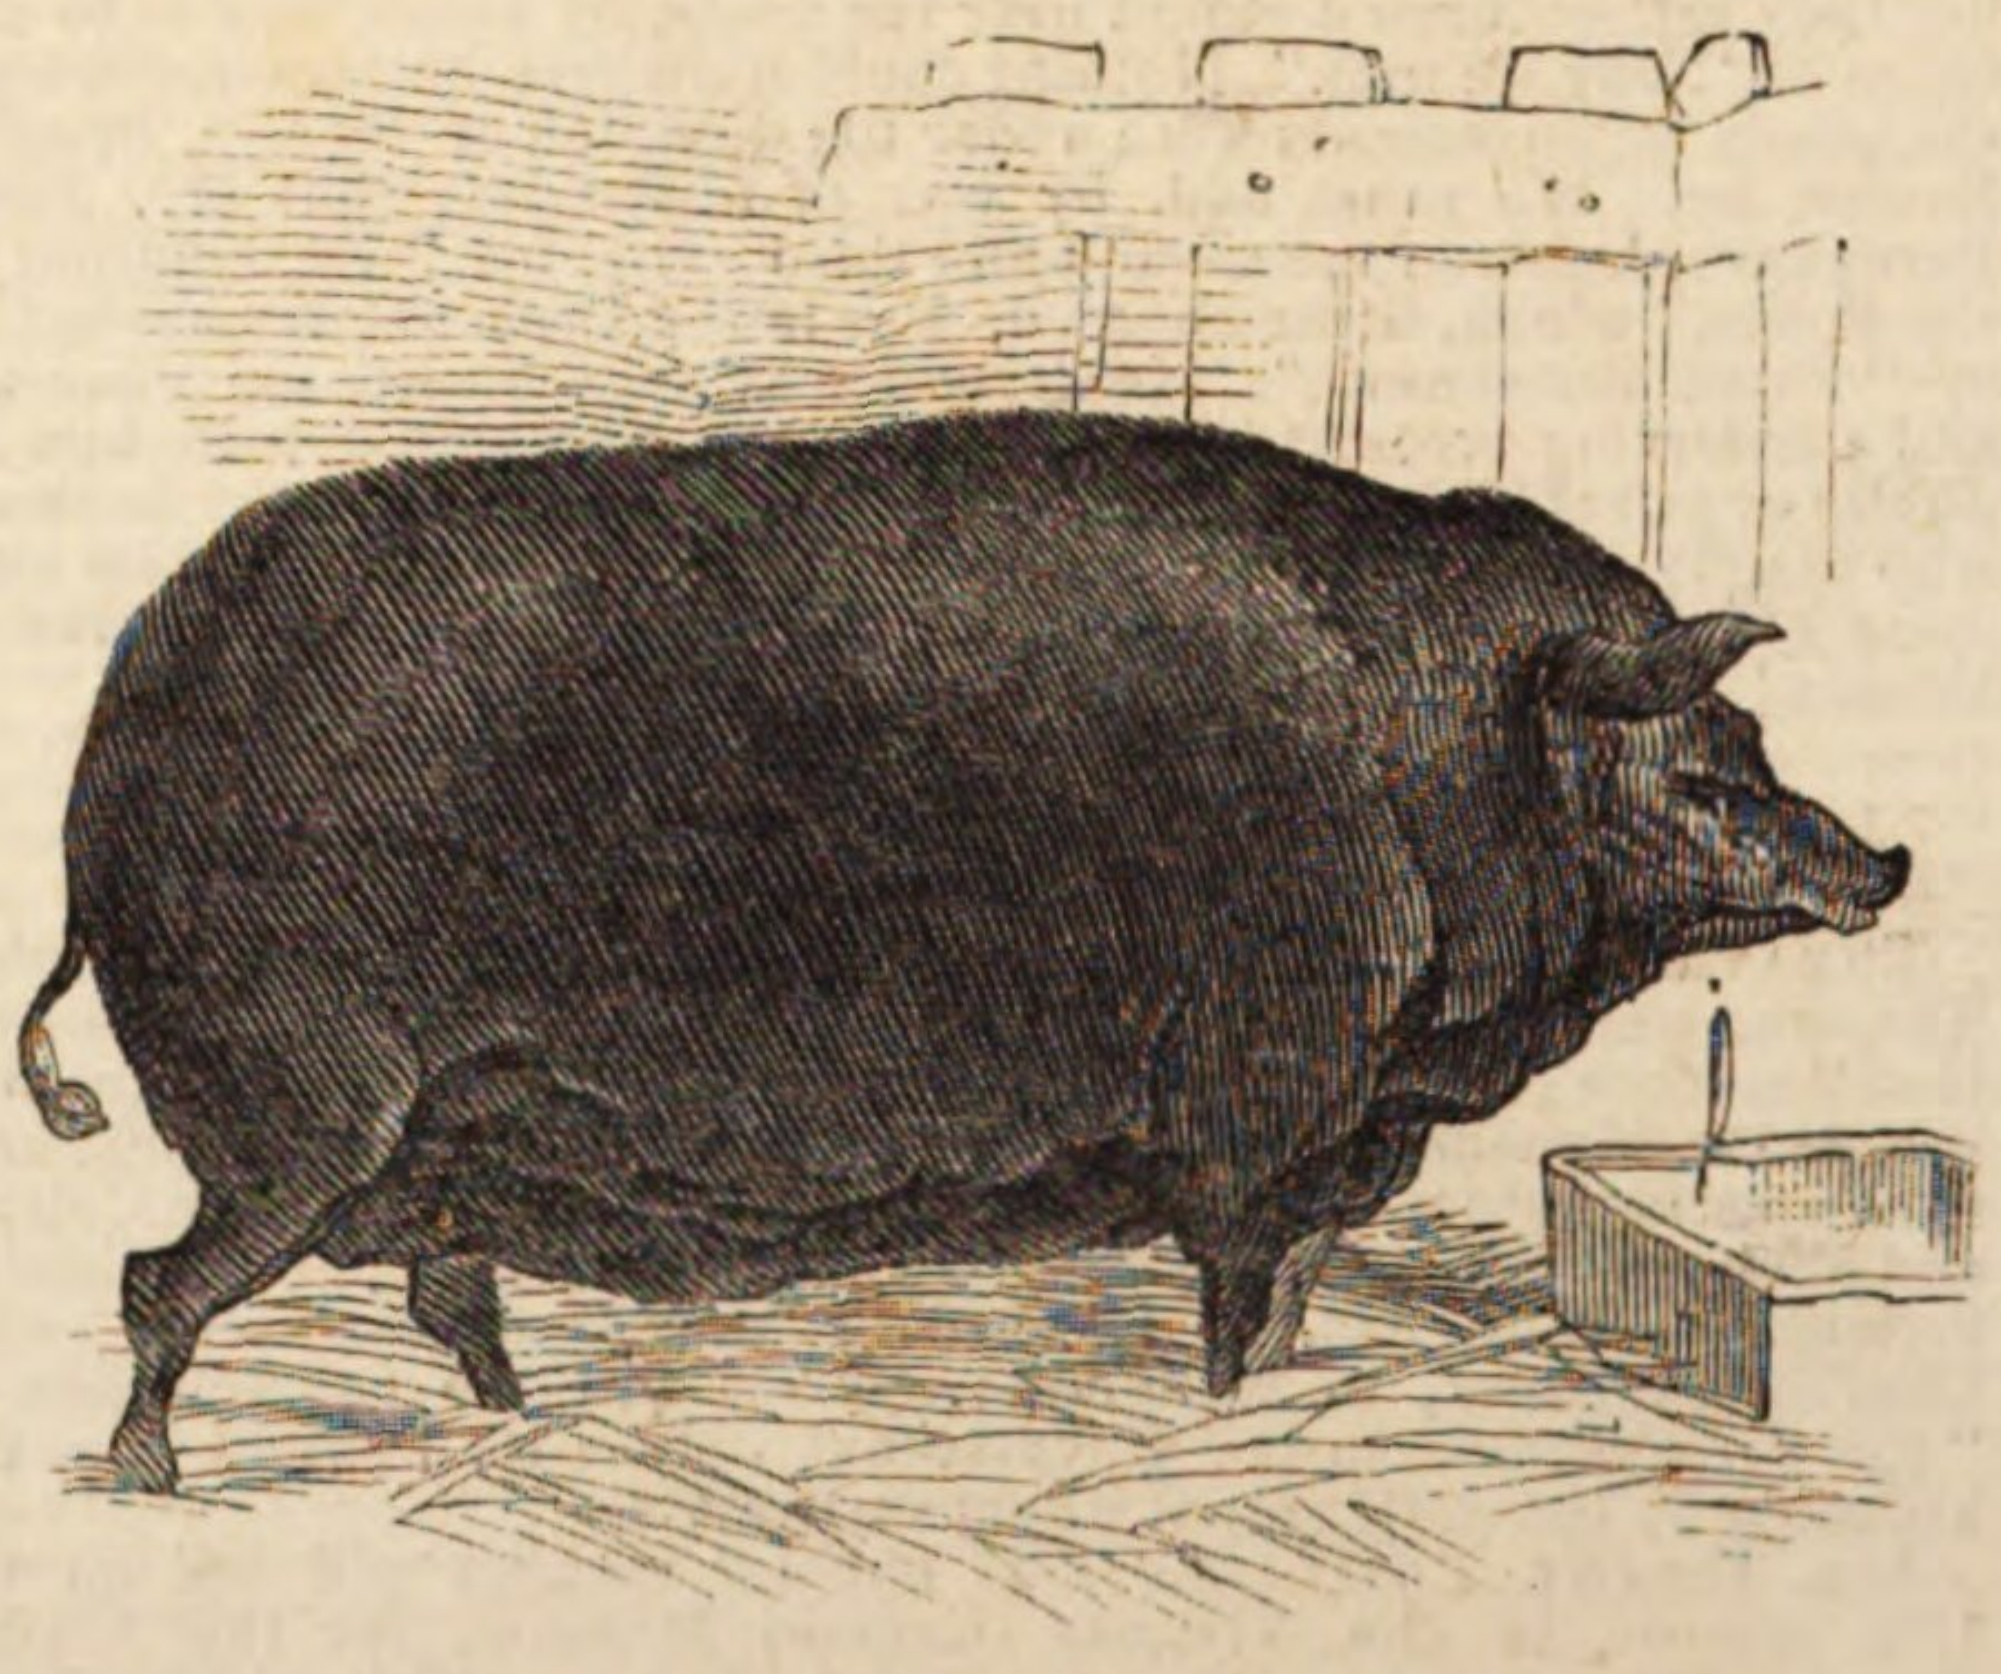
The meeting may be said virtually to have closed on Thursday but, owing to the sale of cattle and implements announced for Friday, a very large proportion of the distinguished visitors, and a great number of the farmers, remained. At twelve o'clock a general meeting of the Society was held at the Victoria Archery-rooms for the transaction of certain routine business, with which the gathering terminated.

These meetings have been successively held at Oxford, Cambridge, Liverpool, Bristol, and Derby; so that the gathering just ended at Southampton was the sixth of its kind. The result has fully realised the most sanguine anticipations of the Council; and much of this success is attributable to the excellent arrangements of the indefatigable secretary (Mr. Hudson), and Mr. Brandreth Gibbs. The following details will be read with interest. The next meeting is appointed to be held at Shrewsbury.



MR. W. F. HOBBE'S IMPROVED ESSEX BOAR.

On Tuesday 1280 persons were admitted to the Implement Show-yard, paying half a-crown each, realising £160; on Wednesday. 3600 persons were admitted at the same rate, realising £450; on Thursday, 10,200 paid 2s. 6d., previous to twelve o'clock, to view the cattle and implements, and from that hour to six, 13,300 went in at 1s. each, producing £1941. The total receipts for admissions were upwards of £2550. The rush at the doors at twelve o'clock to obtain entrance at the 1s. fee, was far greater than was ever seen at the doors of a theatre on the night of a royal visit. About 5000 persons were brought in from various places by the railway trains on this day, most of them having arrived in the morning; and at half-past two trains began to be dispatched with the persons leaving, who crowded to the terminus in great numbers. Trains continued to be sent off at short intervals up to half-past ten, and during this time 4000 persons were conveyed away, and £1100 was taken for fares. Not the slightest accident occurred to any one of the vast number of people who have travelled on the line during the week. On Tuesday, the arrivals were about 2000, and on Wednesday something more. The steam vessels from Portsmouth and the Island brought on Thursday nearly 1500 passengers. The vessels from the Channel Islands and Weymouth and other places, were also well filled during the Show; and extra coaches were put on all the roads.



MR. J. HOUSE'S DORSETSHIRE SOW.

The list of the prize stock was given entire in our journal of last week. We now annex a series of illustrations of the most admired specimens.

CLASS 2.—To the owner of the best ram of any other age, 20 sovs., awarded to Mr. Thomas Hutton, of Upton Gray, Odiham, Hants, for his Hampshire Down ram, 29 months old, bred by himself.

CLASS 3.—To the owner of the second-best ditto ditto, 5 sovs., awarded to Mr. James Linton, of Henningford Abbotts, St. Ives, Hants, for his pen of five Lincoln and Leicester ewes, 16 months old, bred by himself.

PRIZE IMPLEMENTS.

Among the prize implements were Messrs. Ransome's light and heavy land ploughs, each £10 and silver medal; Mr. Garrett's drill, £20 and silver medal; Mr. J. Smyth's turnip drill, depositing manure with the seed, £10 and silver medal; the Earl of Ducie, the Uley cultivator, and a patent chaff-cutter, for each £10 and a silver medal; Messrs. Ransome's hand-draining tile and pipe machine, £20 and silver medal; Mr. D. Coombe's Oxfordshire waggon, £15 and silver medal; Mr. Hornsby's drill presser, £10 silver medal, &c.; Mr. D. Harkes, an expanding horse-hoe, £5; Mr. J. Reid, a subsoil pulveriser, £10; Mr. Crosskill, a clod-crusher, £20; Mr. Garrett, a patent horse-hoe, a silver medal; Mr. Cambridge, a steam-engine, £5; Messrs. Ransome, a set of horse-workers with bean-splitter, linseed-crusher, chaff cutter, &c., £30; Messrs. Tasker and Fowle, a set of iron machinery for drawing water, silver medal; Earl Ducie, a set of screw spanners, silver medal; Mr. R. Stratton, a harvest-cart, silver medal; Earl Ducie, a Richmond cart, silver medal; Mr. R. Stratton, an agricultural spring cart, silver medal.

The annexed machine excited considerable attention. It is a compact and simple invention for the manufacture of pipe or D tiles. It consists of a pair of cast-iron cylinders, revolving on a column, which supports the machinery, and is itself secured at top and bottom. A plunger is worked by a rack and pinion, in one (while the other is being filled), which presses out the clay through dies (of brass, and of which there are several sizes) at the bottom.

Price, with six sets of brass dies, for making 1½, 2, 2½, 3, and 4 inch pipe, and one for making common D tiles, £25.

FITZ-STEPHEN.

BY

"THE OLD SAILOR."

LYNCH FITZ-STEPHEN was more than full of grief—he was half-crazed with horror; his incoherent expressions startled those who heard them; his foster-brother, by unremitting attention, at length succeeded in calming the fever of his soul; but he could not wholly subdue the terrible agitation which would at intervals burst out as the thoughts of his friend's untimely fate rushed upon his memory.

Don Sebastian's property and papers were collected together for better security, but not without a secret examination of the latter by Fitz-Stephen, who found amongst the rest of the packages a letter from the old merchant in Bilboa to Lynch's father, hinting at the indiscretions of the young man, and detailing all the particulars of a debtor and creditor account between them. There was also another communication from the same source, which was to be delivered or not, according to the discretion of the bearer, as circumstances might require or direct. It was overflowing with expressions of kindness and good feeling, and not only candidly explained the real cause of Sebastian undertaking the voyage, but also gave perfect sanction to the young people, should no insurmountable obstacle present itself to prevent their coming together.

To describe the agony of Fitz-Stephen during the perusal of this latter document would be utterly impossible; but after a severe and almost life-destroying struggle, he repressed it; and when they sighted the isles of Arran, he had in a great measure recovered a serenity of demeanour that was foreign to the tumult in his heart.

It was evening when the vessel came to her anchorage, and the young ship-master was received on shore with joyful greetings by his parents, relatives, and friends. But, when with bitter anguish he told his sorrowful tale of the loss of his fellow-voyager, lamentation and weeping succeeded mirth and pleasure, and the house of cordial welcome became the scene of general mourning. As to Mary, a vivid and glowing imagination had pictured the young Spaniard as comprising every good quality that maiden delicacy ought to esteem. She had prayed for him at the altar, and beheld him in her dreams till a lively and fervent association had mingled with her affections and cheered her days with hopes of soon meeting. Now, however, the fiat had gone forth, the communion of spirit was dissolved, never to be resumed; the fancied bond which imagination had created was dissevered, never to be again united. The blow did indeed fall heavy; the mind had been the depository of her romantic regards and it was the mind that suffered most acutely from the fatal catastrophe; poor Mary sank; her intellects gradually decayed, the long-cherished wishes and anticipations of her heart were destroyed. She sickened and withered under her calamity.

Aileen welcomed Lynch with all the sweet refreshing energies of woman's precious love. It is true that she perceived the dark cloud that frequently gathered on his brow; but she attributed it to the melancholy accident that had occurred, and the responsibility which the young man might have attached to himself. She also found him changed in temper, occasionally passionate or morose; but this was ascribed to a similar cause, which she believed time and kindness might get the better of; and she had acquiesced in the fulfilment of her promise to become his wife as soon as a proper period had elapsed in mournful but respectful remembrance of his friend. Lynch would have hastened their union, but the maiden was inflexible, and devoted the intermediate time to poor Mary, who was fast sinking.

The elder Fitz-Stephen had promptly dispatched advice to the old merchant in Bilboa, acquainting him with the untimely decease of his son; and in the meantime, as he had the office of chief magistrate of the town, he had examined and taken the depositions of the seamen relative to the distressing affair, and collected all the particulars that could be gleaned, which left no doubt in his mind, or in the minds of the community in general, that the young Spaniard had been accidentally drowned.

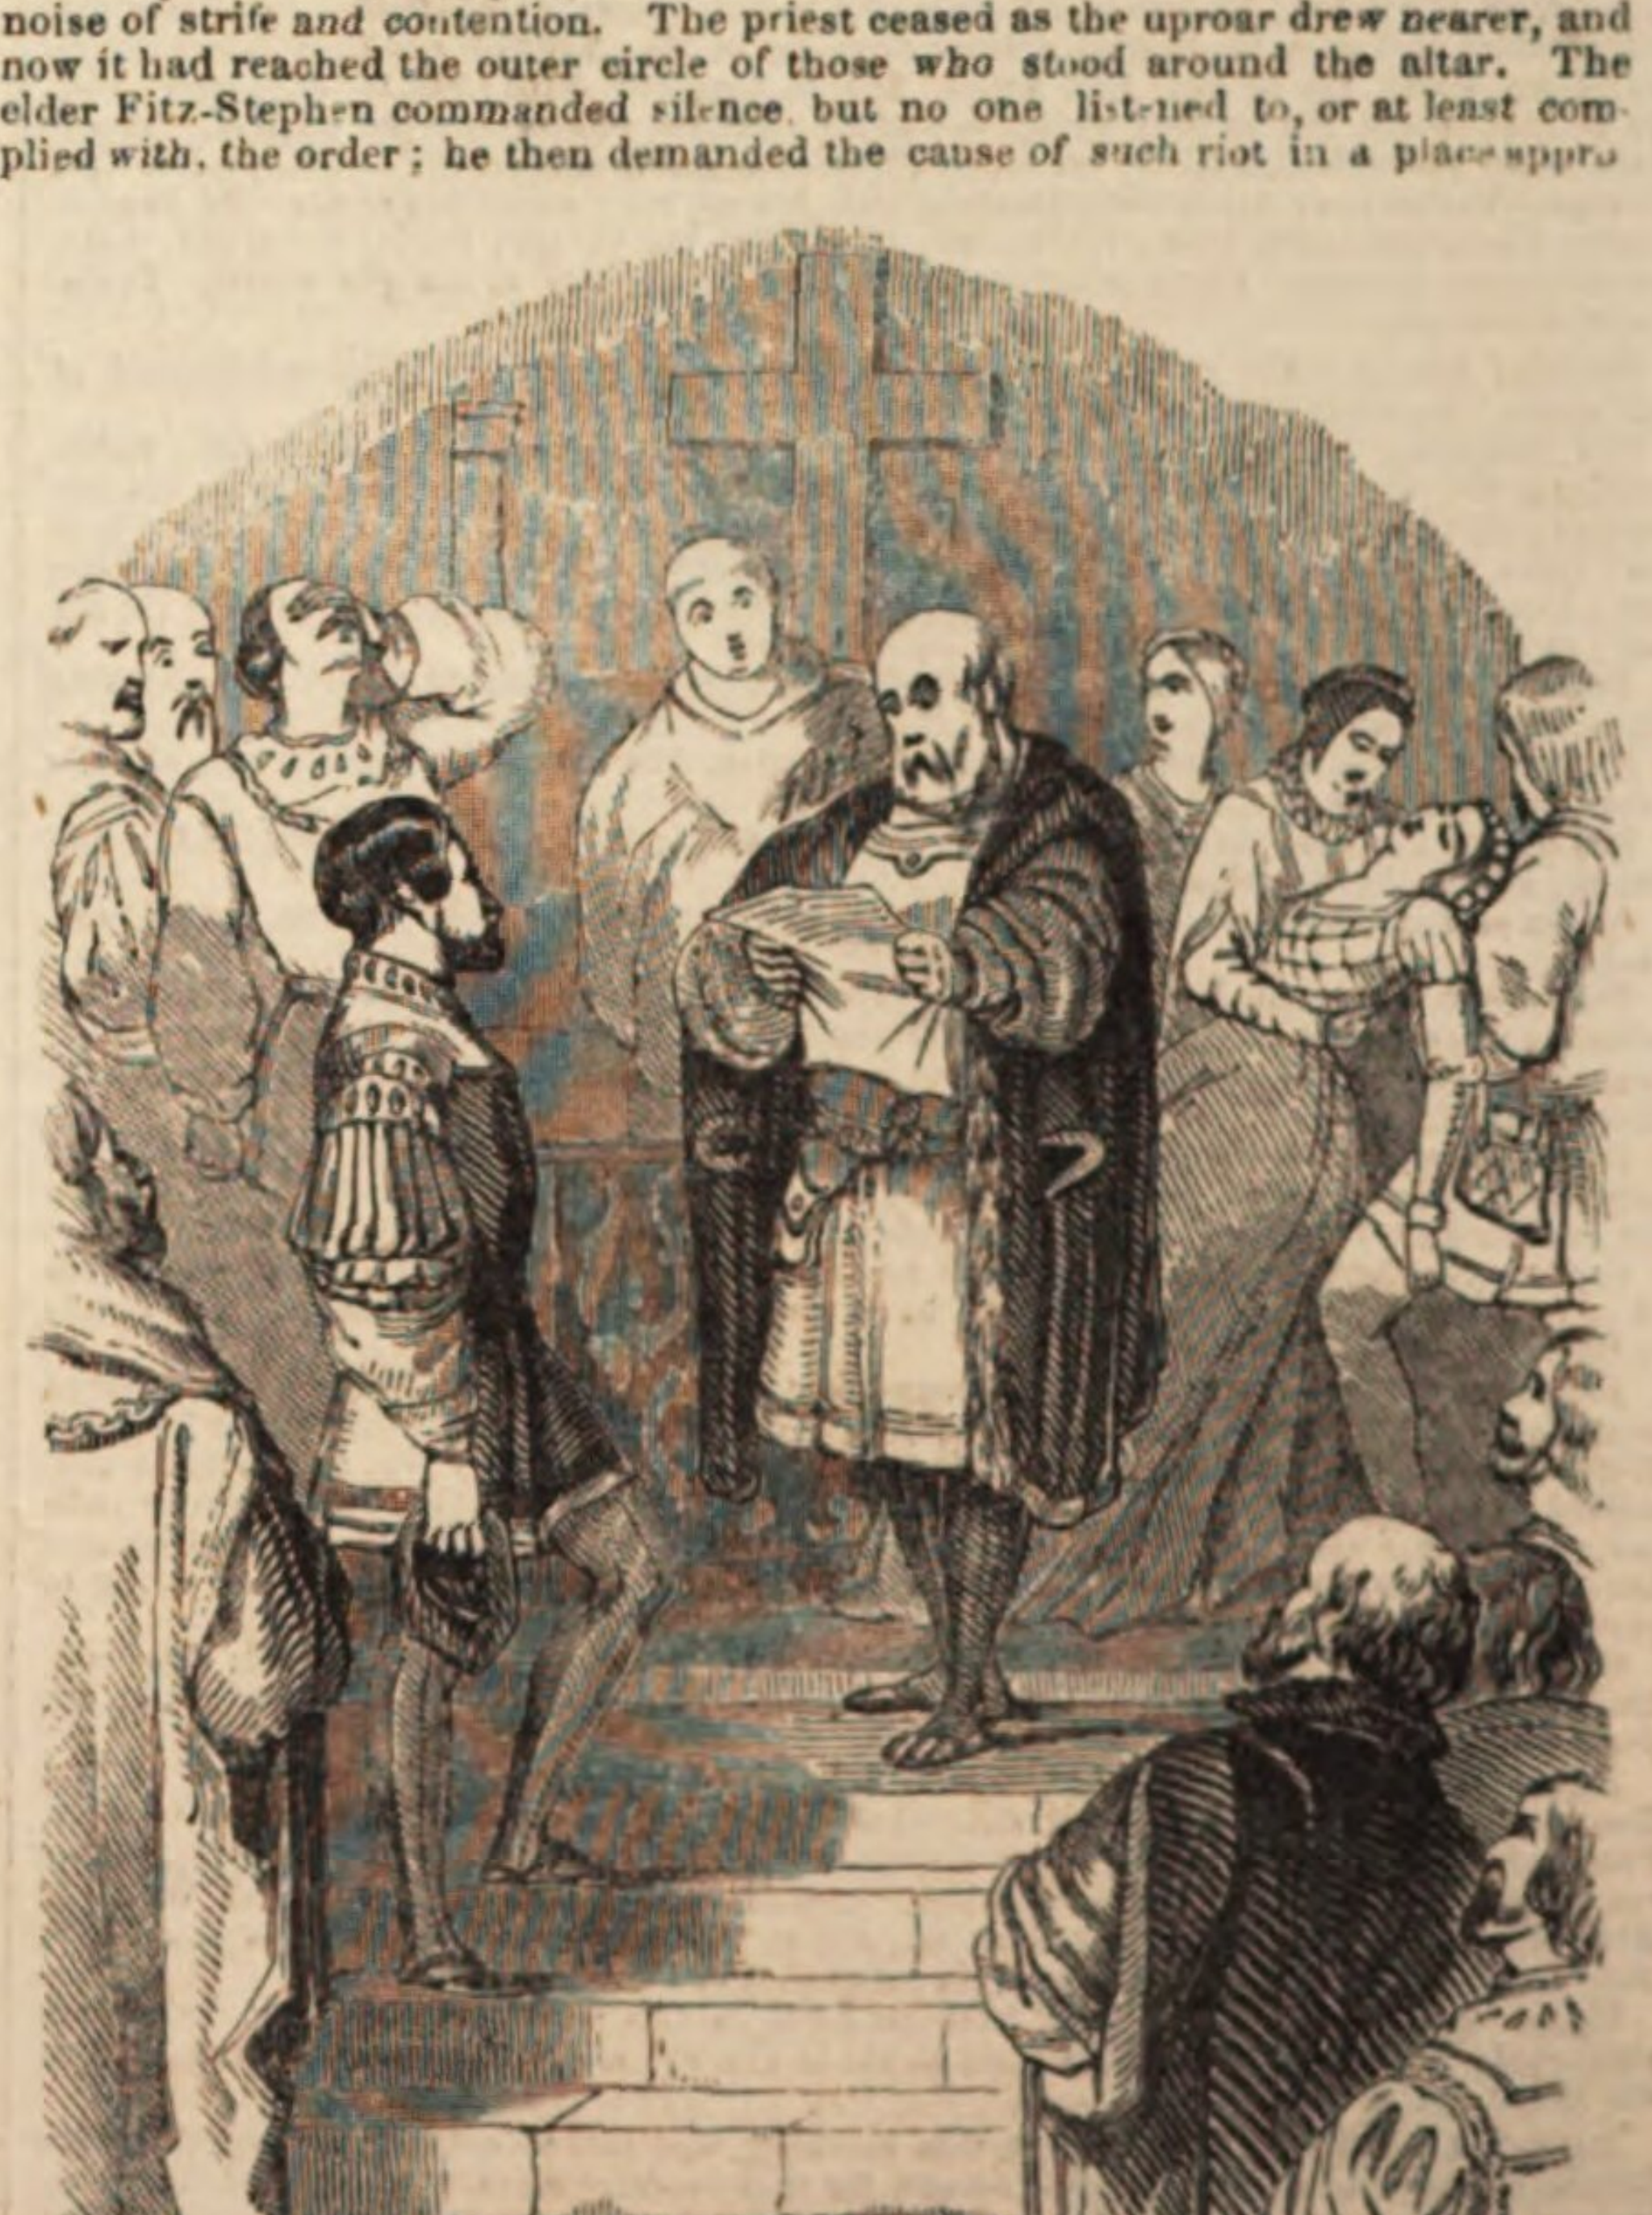
At length the day for the celebration of the nuptials of Aileen and Fitz-Stephen drew near, and the latter was more cheerful and gay as it approached. The maiden had earnestly requested that the ceremony might be conducted privately between the families; but the fathers of both decided that it should be graced with all the splendour which their rank and station in society demanded. General invitations were given and accepted; Irish hospitality embraced all—rich and poor.

The morning was auspicious. The sun shone gloriously in the heavens; the face of the earth was tinged with a rich autumnal hue; the bright waters seemed to dance in gladness; and the flashing banners of the ships gleamed like streaming meteors in the solar beams. The gentry, arrayed in their richest apparel, and the peasantry in the finest they could procure, were assembled.

Aileen, in her bridal dress, looked more lovely than ever, as she clung to the arm of him to whom she was about to resign the guidance of her future destiny. Poor Mary had, at the entreaty of her friend, summoned sufficient resolution to act as bridesmaid, and smiles were on her pale countenance as she contemplated the expected happiness of her new sister.

And now, encompassed by their friends, whose merry faces and warm hearts afforded encouragement to the bride, the couple stood before the altar, and certainly a more handsome and apparently devoted pair could not have well been found. Lynch had put on a suit of rich purple velvet; gold chains, with heavy links, were hung around his neck; and his black and glossy hair, tastefully yet carelessly arranged, spread round a face that nature seemed to have endowed with manly grace, as he gazed with fondness upon the lovely female about to become his wife.

The priest commenced the sacred service; every sound was hushed, every tongue was still, as he proceeded; and almost breathless silence prevailed, when suddenly a loud shouting was heard outside the sacred building, and there was the noise of strife and contention. The priest ceased as the uproar drew nearer, and now it had reached the outer circle of those who stood around the altar. The elder Fitz-Stephen commanded silence, but no one listened to, or at least complied with, the order; he then demanded the cause of such riot in a place appropriated to the worship of the Deity. He was answered by an officer of justice forcing his way through the crowd, and requesting to see the Mayor.



"Is your business, then, so urgent?" asked the elder Fitz-Stephen, as, stepping out prominently before the assembled throng, he addressed the man.

"It is—it is, sir," rejoined the officer with eagerness. "I hold a warrant for the apprehension of an alleged murderer, and it requires your signature before I can take him into custody."

"That is, indeed, a case that admits of no delay," responded the Mayor; "and yet, methinks, you might have waited, if only for a few minutes, till the ceremony had been completed, and we had left this holy place."

"I durst not tarry, sir," exclaimed the resolute official; "he whom I seek is now within these walls. I pray thee, then, good Mr. Mayor, put thy signature to this"—and he held out the warrant—"that I may at once proceed to the execution of my duty."

The announcement that the supposed guilty person was then among them, caused strong sensations in all who heard the accusation. Those who composed the crowd looked in each other's faces, as if to read what was passing in the heart; and many, who fancied a neighbour's countenance had undergone a momentary change, were ready to exclaim, "Thou art the man!" But had they observed the bridegroom, they would have perceived a convulsive spasm shaking his whole frame, and an ashy paleness spreading over his features, as the elder Fitz-Stephen received the paper from the intruding stranger; which, having unfolded, he read aloud to appease the murmurings of the assembled spectators.

At the sound of his voice on such an important occasion, the silence became profound. The usual preliminaries of a warrant were delivered in a loud, clear tone, but his speech faltered; a bright flush crimsoned his cheeks, though his lips were livid and white, his hands and knees trembled, when he came to the name of the accused, for it was that of his own, his only son, who was charged with the murder of a Spanish passenger on board the vessel he commanded, when sailing upon the high seas; and Phelim Mac Connor, his foster-brother, was included in the charge for aiding and abetting the same.

Fitz-Stephen clasped his hands in speechless agony, and Aileen fell senseless at her lover's feet. Mary uttered a fearful shriek, as she fancied that guilt was indelibly stamped upon her brother's haggard face. The priest closed his book; and consternation and confusion prevailed throughout the hallowed fane. At length, the elder Fitz-Stephen once more commanded silence, and, collecting all his energies, thus addressed the throng:

"My friends," said he, "this, as you may well believe, is a moment of intense anxiety to me, and were it not that I fully believe the innocence of my son with respect to this charge, I should indeed stand before you a miserable man. But I feel confident that the honour of my family is untarnished. Some individual, to whom Lynch has most likely rendered himself obnoxious by an enforcement of duty on ship-board, has taken advantage of a late unhappy occurrence, basely to wreak his cruel revenge. Nevertheless the marriage rites shall be suspended till his fair fame is cleared from even the shadow of imputation."

"Why—wherefore should our union be delayed?" asked Lynch, as, gathering fortitude, he raised the reviving Aileen in his arms. "You are right father I am innocent of this foul crime of which they would accuse me." He turned fondly upon Aileen. "Indeed, dearest, I am innocent. An enemy hath done this, and why should the cup of happiness be dashed from my lips to gratify the foul malignity of another? Father, let the ceremony proceed."

"It must not be, my son," returned the elder Fitz-Stephen, soothingly, "rely upon it all will yet be well. But till the black slander is removed, I cannot consent to your union with this fair girl, whom, Heaven knows, I love as much as if in truth she were really my own—cheer up Aileen, and do not look thus sad!"

"Father," implored Lynch, as he strained the maiden to his breast, "Oh! do not thus decree misery to us both; it is an infamous conspiracy to rob me of my bride, and"——"Stop, my son, stop," replied the venerable Mayor, as he raised his hand to check all further utterance. "The parents of Aileen would not give their child to one who had been charged with murder; and, if cherishing the same confidence that I now feel, they would do so, still I have a most important duty to perform, and, though I suffer as a father, yet, as a magistrate, I cannot, nay, I will not, shrink from the due execution of my obligations to the community over which I have been called upon to preside. No, my friends, no, and do you think that I would give my consent that my son should take upon himself the onerous responsibility of husband to this dear lady, when, at the conclusion of the ceremony, I must send him to a prison?—Never, never. Here, will I back the warrant, ay, before the altar of the Supreme Being, and may he avenge the injured!"

This last was uttered with strength and firmness; the prayer came from the depths of the old man's heart. Lynch drew a convulsive respiration and shook in every limb, but it was only momentary, and so much were the company impressed with the address of the father, that they did not remark the sudden alteration in the manners of the son, so that it passed off unobserved. The Mayor called for writing materials, and, laying the document on the rails, he wrote his name with a steady hand, and having returned the warrant to the proper officer, Lynch was immediately taken into custody. Phelim was the next: he would have resisted and called his comrades round him for that purpose, but the Mayor sternly charged him to "keep the peace."

"Oh, then, and what for should I keep the peace?" asked Phelim, with anger, "sure, and its innocent I am, as well as Master Lynch, long live to him, and"—turning round to the throng—"will you see your own flesh and blood, in regard of country, sent to a hard-hearted gaol? And for what, I should like to know? seeing as we are both of us innocent entirely."

The words of Phelim made a deep impression on all who heard them; they were exactly calculated to operate upon the impulses of the Irish character—the disappointed assemblage seemed inclined to promote a rescue, but the Mayor, arming himself with the authority of his office, declared that unless they desisted, he would himself arrest the first man who attempted to resist the execution of the law. This had its effect to curb the rising passions of the turbulent, and Phelim was given into safe-keeping. The bride and the bridesmaid, frightened and fainting, were removed, but each with different feelings. Aileen rested her hopes upon the assertions of the accused and his father, whilst Mary, whose eyes had been keenly fixed upon her brother, feared that he was not so innocent as he had declared himself to be. As the prisoners were being conducted to the place appointed for confinement, a tumult again arose, but the Mayor promptly interfered, and stopped the progress of disorder. He appealed to their best feelings, and strove to bring them to cooler judgment, which, having in a great measure achieved, he exhorted them to depart peaceably, and they should find that ample justice should be done to all.

THE MARKETS.

Corn-Exchange, Friday.—Only moderate supplies of English wheat have been received up to our market this week, yet the stands to day were tolerably well filled with samples of that grain. Fine qualities mostly found buyers at full prices, but the value of other kinds was barely supported. Foreign wheat, upwards of 47,000 quarters of which have been released this week, previous to the rise in the duty to 18s per quarter, was a mere drug, and almost nominal in value. Grinding barley was 1s per quarter lower. In other kinds no alteration occurred, notwithstanding the large imports from abroad. In malting next to nothing was doing. The oat trade was very dull, at a decline of 6d. per quarter. In other articles no variation.

Arrivals.—English: Wheat, 4120; barley, 310; oats, 70 quarters. Irish: oats, 8340 quarters. Foreign: Wheat, 14,160; barley, 21,230; oats, 25,400 quarters. Flour, 2990 sacks. Malt, 3550 quarters.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 41s to 48s; ditto white, 48s to 57s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 38s to 46s; ditto white, 44s to 54s; rye, 31s to 33s; grinding barley, 27s to 28s; distilling ditto, 31s to 32s; malting ditto, 32s to 34s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 59s to 60s; brown ditto, 57s to 60s; Kingston and Ware, 62s to 64s; Chevalier, 64s to 65s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 20s to 22s; potatoe ditto, 23s to 25s; Youghal and Cork, black, 19s to 21s; ditto white, 19s to 21s; tick beans, 29s to 31s; old ditto, 38s to 40s; grey peas, 31s to 33s; maple, 33s to 34s; white, 35s to 38s; boilers, 38s to 39s per quarter. Town-made flour, 46s to 48s; Suffolk, 38s to 39s; Stockton and Yorkshire, 37s to 38s, per 280 lbs. Foreign.—Free wheat, 44s to 56s; Dantzig, red, 50s to 56s; white, 56s to 61s. In Bond.—Barley, 23s to 24s; oats, brew, 17s to 19s; ditto feed, 14s to 17s; beans, 24s to 28s; peas, 28s to 29s per quarter. Flour, America, 24s to 25s; Baltic, 24s to 25s per barrel. Town-made, 46s to 48s.

The Seed Market.—For canary seed we have to report a somewhat improved demand, at full prices. In other kinds of seeds exceedingly little is doing.

The following are the present rates:—Linseed, English, sowing, 50s to 60s; Baltic crushing, 25s to 37; Mediterranean and Odessa, 26s to 38s; hempseed, 28s to 35s per quarter; coriander, 15s to 20s per cwt.; brown mustard seed, 12s to 18s; white ditto, 10s to 12s; tares, 4s to 4s 6d per bushel; English rapeseed, new, £25 to £26 per last of ten quarters; Linseed cakes, English, £5 to £6 10s per 1000; rapeseed cakes, £5 5s to £5 10s per ton; canary, 58s to 60s per quarter.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 7d to 8d; of household ditto, 6d to 6½d per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Averages.—Wheat, 52s 3d; barley, 34s 2d; oats, 20s 10d; rye, 33s 8d; beans, 37s 1d; peas, 37 4d.

Six Weeks' Averages that govern Duty.—Wheat, 54s 3d; barley, 34s 1d; oats, 22s 3d; rye, 34s 9d; beans, 37s 9d; peas, 36s 7d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 18s; barley, 4s; oats, 6s; rye, 8s 6d; beans, 5s 6d; peas, 6s. 6d.

Tea.—Since the conclusion of the public sales, a good business has been transacted in the private contract markets, and the prices of the fine qualities of teas have been very freely supported. During the past fortnight, the imports have amounted to nearly 1,300,000 lbs direct from China.

Sugar.—During the present week the sugar market has been somewhat inactive, and the quotations have suffered a decline of quite 6d per cwt. The private sales of West India have not exceeded 1200 hhds and tierces. In refined goods, comparatively little is doing.

Coffee.—For Ceylon coffee, the demand has ruled somewhat active, at an advance of from 6d to 1s per cwt. All other descriptions have moved off slowly, at late rates. The stocks in bond are remarkably good.

Provisions.—For Irish butter the demand is tolerably steady, at full prices; Carlows having sold at 74s to 78s; Carrick, 77s to 79s; Limerick, 74s to 76s; Cork, 75s to 76s; and Waterfords, 72s to 76s per cwt. Dutch butter has met a very heavy sale, and must be considered 3s to 5s per cwt. lower. The bacon market is very active, at a rise of from 2s to 3s per cwt., prime sizeable Waterfords being held at 51s to 55s; inferior, 48s to 50s; and heavy, 48s to 51s per cwt. Hams and lard sell freely, at full quotations. Other kinds of provisions rule about stationary.

Coals.—Holywell Main, 22s 6d; Wylam, 21s 6d; Bewicke and Co., 22s 9d; Gosforth, 22s 6d; Hotspur, 22s 3d; Braddyll's Hetton, 24s; Lambton, 23s 6d; Stewart's, 23s 6d; Tees, 23s 9d, per ton.

Hops.—The accounts which have come to hand, to-day, from Worcester, parts of Mid Kent, and Sussex, are considered somewhat less favourable than for some time past. From other quarters, the reports are satisfactory. The demand here rules heavy, yet we can notice no material variation in prices. Sussex pockets, £5 18s to £6 8s; Weald of Kent do., £6 4s to £6 12s; Mid Kent do., £6 8s to £8 16s; do. bags, £6 18s to £7 16s; East Kent pockets, £7 to £9; Choice do., £10 to £11 12s.

Tallow.—Although the amount of business doing in this market is not large, prices are supported. P.Y.C., on the spot, is held at 41s to 41s 9d; and for forward delivery, 42s to 42s 9d per cwt.

Smithfield.—Although our market, this morning, was rather extensively supplied with beasts, we have to report a steady demand for that description of stock, and, in some instances, an advance of 2d per 8lbs. was obtained for the primest Scots, which were quoted at 4s per 8lbs. The fresh arrivals, from Scotland, comprised 200 Scots. For all kinds of sheep, the numbers of which were not large, the inquiry was active, at very full prices. The supply of lambs was large, owing to which, the sale for them ruled heavy, at barely Monday's quotations. Calves, which were again plentiful, moved off freely, and the rates had an upward tendency. In pigs, very little was doing. Milch cows sold at from £16 to £19 10s each.

Per 8lbs., to sink the offal:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 2s 4d to 2s 6d; second quality do, 2s 8d to 2s 10d; prime large oxen, 3s 2d to 3s 6d; prime Scots, &c., 3s 8d to 4s 0d; coarse and inferior sheep, 2s 6d to 2s 10d; second quality ditto, 3s 0d to 3s 4d; prime coarse woolled sheep, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; prime South Down ditto, 3s 10d to 4s; large coarse calves, 3s 4d to 4s 0d; prime small ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 4d; large hogs, 3s 0d to 3s 6d; neat small porkers, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; lambs, 3s 10d to 4s 10d. Suckling calves, 19s to 35s; and quarter old store pigs, 16s to 20s each. Beasts, 767; cows, 160; sheep and lambs, 11330; calves, 414; pigs, 270.

Newgate and Leadenhall.—We had only a moderate supply of meat on offer to-day, while the demand ruled steady, at full prices:—Per 8lbs by the carcass:—Inferior beef, 2s 2d to 2s 4d; middling ditto, 2s 6d to 2s 8d; prime large ditto, 2s 10d to 3s 0d; prime small do., 3s 2d to 3s 4d; large pork, 2s 6d to 3s 6d; inferior mutton, 2s 6d to 2s 8d; middling ditto, 2s 10d to 3s 2d; prime ditto, 3s 4d to 3s 8d; veal, 3s 2d to 4s 2d; small pork, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; lamb, 3s 10d to 4s 10d. Robt. Herbert.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent).

The attention of the members of the Stock Exchange and capitalists generally has lately been attracted to the position of the South Sea Company. A meeting was held on Wednesday, which was numerously attended, to discuss the proposition of the Chancellor of the Exchequer. A strong feeling was evident in favour of the dissolution of the Company, and the transfer of its powers to the Bank of England. This, however, was opposed by the direction, and, as no decided motion to that effect was proposed, the meeting separated, after unanimously accepting the propositions of the Government.

The Consol Market has experienced some fluctuations during the week. It opened buoyantly on Monday, and the broker for the Savings Banks was obliged to take part of his purchase at 99¾. This, however, is in part attributable to a scarcity of stock among the jobbers, which, joined to the steady demand on the part of the public, necessarily supports prices. The news from Tahiti of the menacing posture of affairs in that quarter, operated slightly on quotations. Although no warlike result is apprehended, sales on speculative accounts caused a flatness, prices receding to 99⅝ ⅞. This price, although held steadily, was not materially improved on; but on Thursday a decline of one quarter per cent. took place. Prices have, however, since rallied, and the closing quotations are, Consols, 99⅝ to ¾ for money and time; Three per Cent. Reduced, 100½; Three and a Half per Cent. ditto, 102⅞ to 103; Bank Stock, 200½; Long Annuities, 12 9-16ths; Exchequer Bills, 77 to 79.

There has been but a limited amount of transactions in the Foreign Bonds during the week. A correspondence between the chairman of the South American Bondholders, and the agents of the Mexican Government, has elicited the fact, that sufficient funds to pay the dividend due on October, 1843, have not yet arrived. Another correspondence with M. Mosquera, the diplomatic representative of New Granada at the British Court, is of a different description. M. Mosquera replies by tacitly admitting the possession of a large sum, but states that he is without any directions from his Government with regard to its application. The settlement of the account, on Wednesday, was readily accomplished, transactions having taken only a very limited range. Spanish Three per Cents., the pre-eminently fluctuating stock, have only ranged between 32¾ and 33⅛. Portuguese has yielded about 1 per cent., but the price is almost nominal; Mexican, on the contrary, improved to 36½ ¾, but have since receded to 36⅝; Spanish Actives close at 22⅝; Three per Cents., 33⅝; Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents., 61⅝; Five per Cent. ditto, 101⅝; Dutch Four per Cents, 96¼.

This being about the period when the half yearly meetings of the different railway proprietors are usually held, the market is less active in consequence, the jobbers, as well as the public, awaiting the different results, previously to purchasing. The Liverpool and Manchester held a special meeting last week, declaring a dividend of £5 per share, for the last year. The report, with great honesty, called the attention of the shareholders to the fact, that in consequence of the debt, amounting to £454 055, not paying the same rate of interest, the effect would be, if created into shares, to reduce the dividend to 7½ per cent. per annum. The plan unanimously adopted is, to create £40 shares, and apportion one to the holder of every £100 share, or its equivalent. The Bolton and Leigh Company have also been permitted to unite its line, at the rate of every three shares on the latter line, to be considered equal to one of the Liverpool and Manchester. The South Eastern Railway Company also held a meeting, and decided upon raising £133,000 on mortgage, to make branches from Margate, Ramsgate, and Canterbury, joining the main line near Ashford. In addition to this, £600,000 is to be raised, to make a branch from the line to Folkestone harbour, and to complete the works there.

The principal feature in the market has been a reaction in Manchester and Leeds. The sudden rise at the close of last week was too suspicious a circumstance to deceive the wary. It appears that they had been forced up by extensive purchases for parties who had oversold themselves for the account on Wednesday, and as soon as the public, tempted by the price, became sellers, a reaction followed. The account day passed off quietly, South Easterns quoting an advance, closing at 38⅝; Manchester and Leeds, 117; Birmingham Stock, 233; Blackwall, 7⅞; Brighton, 49⅝; Norwich and Brandon, 14½; Trent Valley, 9½; Chester and Holyhead, 5. Newcastle and Darlington, 39½; Manchester and Birmingham, 54½; North British 198; Great Western, 137½; Paris and Orleans, 38½; South Western, 88.

Saturday Morning.—The operations of yesterday were comparatively unimportant. Bank Stock yielded a point, quoting at the close of business 199¾ to 200¼; Exchequer Bills were also a shade lower, closing at 78 to 76 premium. In the Foreign Market, Brazilian declined to 82; and Mexican receded to 36. Dutch Stock on the contrary, improved a point. Some fluctuations have occurred in Railway Shares, Midland Counties Stock advancing to 108; Birmingham has also improved to 232, and Brighton to 49⅝.

Our LIQUEUR GINGER BRANDY on similar terms.—HENRY BRETT and Co. Old Furnival's Inn, Holborn-bars.

JULLIEN'S ORIGINAL POLKA.—Monsieur JULLIEN has the honour to announce that he has just published the seventh edition of his Original Polka, with description by E. Coulon, splendidly illustrated by Brandard. The immense success of this celebrated Polka having induced unprincipled persons to publish spurious imitations, Mons. Jullien has published the original Polka at his own Office, 3, Maddox-street, New Bond-street; and in order to secure the public against the possibility of purchasing incorrect copies, he has attached his signature to each copy; none can therefore be relied on which have not his autograph. Correct copies of Mons. Jullien's Original Polka to be had only at the respectable Music Sellers in the kingdom. Also, No. 2, the Royal Polka; No. 3, the Drawing room Polka; No. 4, the Rage of Vienna Polka; No. 5, the Imperial Polka; No. 6, the Douro Polka; No. 7, the Ducal Polka; all by Jullien, The Pollington Polka by Kœnig, and the Opera Polka by Pugni. The numerous base plagiaries of Mons. Jullien's Original Polka having on all their Title pages the following words—"The celebrated Polka, performed at every Theatre in London, the Nobility's Balls, &c."—M. Jullien feels compelled to inform the public that none of those pretended Polkas have been performed at Theatres, and that the above-mentioned Polkas, by Jullien, are the only Polkas that Mons. Jullien and Herr Kœnig have played nightly at the Soirées where they have had the honour to conduct, viz.:—the Duke of Wellington, the Duke of Beaufort, and the Duke of Leinster's Balls, the Countess of Jersey and the French Ambassador's Soirées, Countess of Mansfield's Fête, and at the Balls, Soirées, and Parties, given by the Marquis of Clanricarde, Marchioness de Salis, Countess Wilton, Countess Powis, Countess Norbury, Earl Sefton, Earl of Dartmouth, Lord Foley, Lord Kilmaine, Lady Bateman, Lady Balfour, Lady Domville, Lady E. Fielding, Lady Charlotte Guest, Lady Johnstone, Lady Bowyer Smith, Hon. Mrs. Carleton, Hon. Mrs. Damer, Hon. Mrs. Law, Hon Mrs. Meade, Mrs. Ames, Mrs. Arabin, Mrs. Edward Buller, Mrs. Tyrwhitt Drake, Mrs. Buller Elphinstone, Miss Elwes, Mrs. Charles Grenfell, Mrs. Hatfield, Mrs. Hogg, Mrs. Charles Mills, Mrs. Powel, Mrs. Ravenshaw, Mrs. Sebastian Smith, Mrs. Staniforth, Mrs. Symonds, Mrs. Wyndham, H. Fellowes, Esq., and all the leading Balls of the haut ton; also, the Royal Academy Ball, the Caledonian Ball, the Polish Fancy Ball, the Oxford Grand Commemoration Festival, &c., &c., &c.; in which Mons. JULLIEN and Herr KŒNIG have had the honour to conduct the above-mentioned Polka, and where they have never played, or have been asked to play, the spurious imitations published under so many assumed forms and disguised titles.

FIFTY POUNDS REWARD.—The hard substance obtained by pressure from the Crude Cocoa-nut Oil, is an essential ingredient in the PATENT COMPOSITE CANDLES; and as EDWARD PRICE and Co. hold the Patents for this process, and grant no licences under them, it follows, either, that the Imitation Composite Candles are entirely different from the Patent ones, or that the imitators are infringing the Patents. The first is generally the case; but to protect themselves against the possibility of the other, EDWARD PRICE and Co. hereby engage to pay a Reward of Fifty Pounds to any workman or other person who may give such information respecting parties pressing Cocoa-nut Oil as shall lead to their conviction. The name of the informant will be kept strictly secret, and he need not take a prominent part in the proceedings, as all that E. P. and Co. require, is the first clue to the discovery of the infringers, which they will then follow up for themselves. This advertisement is being published in every newspaper of any circulation in the United Kingdom. The Candles are now so well known to the public, that it is hardly necessary to state here that they burn more brilliantly than the best wax, and give so large an amount of light, as to be cheaper, taking this into account, than the commonest tallow candles. They may be had of most of the respectable Tallow-chandlers throughout the kingdom; but purchasers must insist on being supplied with "PRICE'S PATENT CANDLES," otherwise they are liable to be deceived with some of the imitations, all called, like the real ones, "Composite." Those parties really in the trade who do not yet keep them for sale, are informed that they can purchase, of the Patentees, or of Palmer and Co, Sutton-street, Clerkenwell, any quantity, large or small, at the wholesale price; and that allowances are made, in an increasing ratio, to parties taking to the amount of £50, £100, £150, or £200, at a time; and a very large allowance indeed to parties taking so large a quantity as to enable them to become wholesale agents for an entire district.—Belmont, Vauxhall, July 24, 1844.

INTERESTING TO LADIES.
To Messrs. Rowland and Son, 20, Hatton-garden, London.
Percy-place, Landport, Portsmouth, April 4th, 1844.
Gentlemen,—I think it but an act of justice to inform you of the benefit I have derived from the use of your admirable Macassar Oil. About six months ago I found my hair getting daily more weak and thin, and much discoloured from a practice I had adopted of wetting it continually; fearing that I should lose it entirely, and hearing of the efficacy of your Macassar Oil, I have for some time past constantly used it, and the result is, that my hair is now perfectly restored and much improved in appearance and colour, having become thick, dark, and glossy; it also curls freely without the use of paper, which it never did before. To all my friends I have warmly recommended your Macassar Oil as an excellent restorative and preservative for the hair. As I have an objection to see my name in print, I beg you will not publish it; but you are at liberty to show this letter, or make any other use you please of it, and refer applicants to me, if necessary, in proof of the efficacy of your Macassar Oil. Your obedient servant, * * * * * * * * * * *
ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL preserves and reproduces the Hair; prevents it from falling off or turning Grey; changes Grey Hair to its Original Colour; frees it from Scurf and Dandriff, and makes it beautifully soft and curly.
Ask for "ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL." All others are Fraudulent Counterfeits.

A NEW and CERTAIN CURE for GOUT, RHEUMATISM, &c. &c.—The COD LIVER OIL is now just introduced in this country in its pure state. In every case yet tried it has produced instant relief, and, after a short time using it, a perfect cure. Prospectuses, containing a full account of this remedy, will be sent to any address on receipt of two postage stamps. To protect purchasers against fraudulent and spurious imitations, the following important Caution must be strictly attended to:—Messrs. JONES and Co. having been appointed as the sole mercantile Agents for this remedy by the only manufacturer, an eminent chemist and practitioner, residing on the Continent, they beg to state that every bottle sent from their establishment will be contained in a wrapper, bearing a fac simile of their signature, and that the outside wrapper will be further protected by the stamp and address, "JONES and Co., 201, Strand, London."

NEWTON, commander, lying in the London Dock. This superior vessel is built expressly for this trade, with the strictest regard to the safety, comfort, and convenience of invalids and other passengers; has a raised quarter-deck 18 inches high, and 45 feet long, and has an experienced and attentive master. Passage money £20, which includes a liberal table, wines, bedding, &c. Servants and children half-price.—For freight or passage, apply to the Captain, on board; or to the owner, Richard Dart, 3, Walbrook-buildings.

CHILDREN AND INVALIDS.—What is more beneficial to the HEALTH of CHILDREN than frequent and systematic exercise in the open air, or is it less salutary in mental than in bodily improvement?—CHILDREN'S CARRIAGES, neat, light, easy, compact, and perfectly secure, comprising chaises, vis-à-vis, phaetons, sociables, and waggons, of numerous shapes, and dimensions, warranted well-built. Invalids' wheel-chairs, on every plan studious of comfort to invalids, from the cheapest to the most expensive builds (second-hand as well as new), on sale or hire. Spinal or long bed carriages, self acting wheel-chairs, to which any degree of exercise for the arms can be obtained. Any of the above can have tops to screen from the weather.—INGRAM'S Manufactory, 29, City-road, near Finsbury-square.

TO THE NOBILITY, GENTRY, and RESIDENTS IN THE COUNTRY.

THE recent settlement between this country and China has opened a wide field for commercial enterprise; embracing the opportunity, we sought to establish a Large Ready-Money Trade. We courted patronage, and we have received it, and we are now fully convinced that our system needs but be generally known to be supported.

FIRST.—Our sales being extensive, alike are our purchases, with corresponding advantages.

SECONDLY.—Our arrangements are conducted with strict regard to economy—the main secret after all—our warehouse, though perhaps the largest in London, is situated in a by thoroughfare, unencumbered with those merciless expenses usually attached to those showy plate glass shops, where the articles are taxed to pay.

THIRDLY.—We give no credit—consequently, the ready-money buyer has not to pay for those who take credit, or who do not pay at all.

For the more effectual mode of carrying out our system, we have determined on appointing one agent in every town in the kingdom, who will be supplied with Teas done up in tin-foil packets, of from 1oz. to 6lb.

BLACK TEAS.		GREEN TEAS.

QUITE A NEW DISCOVERY.
NO MORE SUFFERING FROM CORNS OR BUNIONS.

JONES'S PHILOSOPHICAL REMEDY, for the relief and cure of Corns, Bunions, &c., is offered to the Public as quite original, and totally different from all others that have hitherto been advertised. IT WILL AFFORD IMMEDIATE RELIEF, and, by attention to the directions, will ultimately cure the worst Corn or Bunion that ever tortured humanity; its composition is such, as to combine PROTECTION AGAINST FUTURE PAIN, with an instant removal of the cause of present suffering. In other words, it is a MECHANICAL AND MEDICINAL REMEDY. Any person suffering from the agony and pain of a Corn or Bunion, so as to be incapable of placing the foot to the ground, on the application of this remedy, may immediately walk with the greatest ease and comfort.

Sold wholesale by Messrs. BARCLAY and SONS, and may be obtained through all Patent Medicine Vendors in boxes at 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d.

A box will be sent free on receipt of fifteen postage stamps, addressed to Messrs. JONES and CO., Light House, 201, Strand.

WORN-OUT PLATE IMMEDIATELY RE-SILVERED.—COGAN and GILLO'S NOVARGENT, or Silver Solution, immediately re-silvers Plated Articles, and preserves and cleanses Plate, Plated ware, and German Silver by depositing a Coating of Pure Silver (without a particle of Mercury), and Preserves and Cleanses Plate and Plated Goods. It is highly approved by Dr. Ryan, Professor of Chemistry to the Royal Polytechnic Institution, and other eminent Chemists. Sold by Messrs. BARCLAY and SONS, 95, Farringdon-street, London, at 1s. and 3s. the bottle; and to be had of the principal Silversmiths and Chemists in the Kingdom.—None are Genuine, unless signed on the wrapper by J. D. COGAN and R. GILLO.

STOOPING of the SHOULDERS and CONTRACTION of the CHEST are entirely prevented and gently and effectually removed in Youth and Ladies and Gentlemen, by the occasional use of the PATENT ST. JAMES'S CHEST EXPANDER, which is light, simple, easily employed outwardly or invisibly, without bands beneath the arms, uncomfortable constraint or impediment to exercise. Sent per post by Mr. A. BINYON, 40, Tavistock-street, Strand, London, or full particulars on receiving a postage stamp.

BEST COALS 25s.—The City Coal Company beg to caution the public against the frauds daily practised in regard to weight and quality, which realize an immense although most nefarious profit. Their present cash price for Hetton's, Stewart's, or Lambton's Wall's end is 25s. per ton, coke 17s. and advise all purchasers to inspect their coals on delivery, and satisfy themselves they receive full weight in each sack.—Office, 7, George-yard, Lombard street.

EAU de COLOGNE, 10s. per case of six, or 2s. singly.—This article, since its first production, in 1709, has maintained an undisturbed supremacy over all other distilled compounds; can be had genuine, as prepared from the original recipe, by application to H. BREIDENBACH, 88, Park-street, Grosvenor-square, manufacturer at Cologne. This Eau de Cologne is no spurious imitation of Farina's, but the genuine article itself, and as such defies all competition.

THE TOILET OF BEAUTY furnishes innumerable proofs of the high estimation in which GOWLAND'S LOTION is held by the most distinguished possessors of brilliant complexions. This elegant preparation comprehends the preservation of the complexion both from the effects of cutaneous malady and the operation of increased temperature, by refreshing its delicacy and sustaining the brightest tints with which beauty is adorned. "ROBT SHAW, London," is in white letters on the Government Stamp, without which none is genuine. Prices, 2s. 9d., 5s. 6d., quarts, 8s. 6d. Sold by all Perfumers and Chemists.

NEW PATENTS.—BROCKEDON'S IMPROVED STOPPERS.—This important Invention, a Substitute for Corks and Bungs, has, by new and Great Improvements, become a pure, imperishable, and perfect means of preserving, for any length of time, Wine, Beer, Spirits, &c. They are cheap and easily applied, and the appearance which they now have of fine Cork has removed the prejudice against their former dark colour. Also, DECANTER STOPPERS, to keep Wine which is in daily use in perfect condition.—C. MACINTOSH and Co., 19, Walbrook, London, and 22, York-street, Manchester.

EMPLOYMENT.—Persons having a little time to spare, are apprised that Agents continue to be appointed in London and Country Towns by the EAST INDIA TEA COMPANY, for the sale of their celebrated TEAS (Offices, 9, Great St. Helen's Churchyard, Bishopsgate-street). They are packed in showy leaden canisters, from an ounce to a pound, with the prices and weight marked on each packet, and but little trouble is occasioned by the sale; the license is only 11s. per annum, and many, during the last nineteen years, have realised considerable incomes by the Agency, without 1s. let or loss. Application to be made (if by letter, post paid) as above.

GRAFFTEY'S POMPEIAN HAIR DYE, price 3s. 6d. and 5s. 6d., is unrivalled for its efficacy. It is a liquid preparation, free from unpleasantness or risk, and is warranted to dye the Hair or Whiskers to a permanent, natural and beautiful Brown or Black in one application, without staining the skin. Prepared in three colours—1st, a Black; 2nd, Dark Brown; 3rd, Lighter Brown; and sold only in London by S. Grafftey, 26, Warwick-street, Regent-street; or of Viney, Worcester; Finigan, Bath; Piper, Exeter; and all other Perfumers in the Kingdom.—Ask for "GRAFFTEY'S" DYE, and notice the address. Also GRAFFTEY'S celebrated DEPILATORY, price 4s. 6d., or in packets, 2s. 8d., postage included.

DAWSON'S AUXILIAR.—Another instance of its surprising effects.—A Gentleman residing at Brixton, whose hair was rapidly falling off and becoming grey, after using every other means unsuccessfully, tried DAWSON'S AUXILIAR, and in two months the greyness was rapidly disappearing, and the hair returning with youthful vigour. It is equally effective with Children's Hair, securing a luxuriant growth through life. Sold at 3s. 6d., 7s., 10s. 6d., and 21s. per bottle, by Barclay, 95 Farringdon-street, wholesale and retail; Sanger, 150, Oxford-street; Prout, 229, Strand; Butler, St. Paul's; and most Chemists, Perfumers, &c. Caution—Particularly ask for DAWSON'S, and observe the signature, R. DAWSON, on the envelope. The genuine are not sold at any house in Holborn. A saving in the larger bottles.

PRESERVES and CONFECTIONERY.—The superiority of BETTS'S PATENT BRANDY, for Preserves and Confectionery, is testified by the fact that it is preferred to any other spirit by the most extensive Wholesale Confectioners in the Metropolis; for fortifying Home-made Wines it is invaluable; as an ordinary Beverage it is congenial to the most delicate constitutions; and, as a Medical Stimulant, it is peculiarly adapted to persons of bilious or dyspeptic habits. Quantities of not less than Two Gallons, supplied at the Distillery, 7, Smithfield Bars, in Stone Jars, at 18s. per Gallon, exclusive of the price of the Jar; and in Glass Bottles, at 20s. per Gallon, Bottles and Case included.

Consumers of Brandy are respectfully informed that J. T. BETTS, Jun. and Co. will not be responsible for any Bottled Brandy that is not protected against fraudulent substitution by the Patent Metallic Capsules, made of pure and solid metal, (not tin-foil,) embossed with the words "Betts's Patent Brandy, 7, Smithfield Bars," to which attention is especially directed.

IMPORTANT to FAMILIES FURNISHING.—A considerable saving can be effected in the purchase of Furnishing Ironmongery, by visiting the PANKLIBANON IRON WORKS, 58, Baker-street, Portman-square, where may be inspected the most extensive STOCK of IRONMONGERY GOODS in the Kingdom, consisting of kitchen cooking utensils, German silver wares, drawing-room stoves, shower and vapour baths, ornamental iron work, garden implements, japanned water cans and toilette pails, best Sheffield plate, kitchen ranges, fenders and fire-irons, tea trays, ornamental wire-work, flower-stands, table cutlery, &c. Every article being marked in plain figures, at the lowest possible price, will fully convince purchasers at this establishment of the great advantage resulting from Cash payments, as the Proprietors warrant every article of the very best manufacture, at a saving of at least 30 per cent.—THORPE FALLOWS, and CO., 58, Baker-street, Portman-square.—A liberal allowance to merchants and captains.

LOSS OF TEETH SUPPLIED, without Springs, Clasps, or Wires; Loose Teeth Fastened; and Filling Decayed Teeth with Mineral Marmoratum.—Mons. LE DRAY and SON, SURGEON DENTISTS, 42, Berners-street, Oxford-street, continue to restore Decayed Teeth with their celebrated Mineral Marmoratum, applied without pain, heat, or pressure, preventing and curing the Toothache, and rendering the operation of extraction unnecessary. They also Fasten Loose Teeth, whether arising from age, neglect, the use of calomel, or disease of the gums. Incorrodible Artificial or Natural Teeth, of surpassing beauty, to match in colour and shape those left in the mouth, fixed, from one to a complete set, without extracting the roots, or giving any pain, at the following charges:—A single tooth, 10s; a set, £5 5s. Arranged on the most approved principles, and restoring perfect articulation and mastication. At home from Ten till Six. N.B.—Removed from 60, Newman-street, to 42, Berners-street, Oxford-street.

TO LADIES.—ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, for the SKIN and COMPLEXION. This Royally Patronized and universally adopted Specific is composed chiefly of extracts from the most rare flowers and herbs of an eastern clime and perfectly free from all mineral admixture. It exerts the most soothing, gentle, cooling and purifying action on the skin; and most effectually dissipates all Redness, Tan, Pimples, Blotches, Spots, Freckles, and other Cutaneous Visitations. The radiant bloom it imparts to the Cheek, and the softness and delicacy it induces on the Hands, Arms and Neck, render it indispensable to every toilet. It affords immediate relief in cases of Sunburn, Stings of Insects, or incidental Inflammation. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle, duty included.

CAUTION.—Many Shopkeepers vend the most spurious trash under the title of "Genuine" Kalydor, containing mineral astringents utterly ruinous to the complexion, and by their repellant action endangering health. It is therefore imperative on purchasers to see that the words "ROWLAND'S KALYDOR" are on the Wrapper; and A. ROWLAND & SON, 20, Hatton Garden, engraved (by Authority) on the Government Stamp affixed on each bottle.

 All others are Fraudulent Counterfeits!

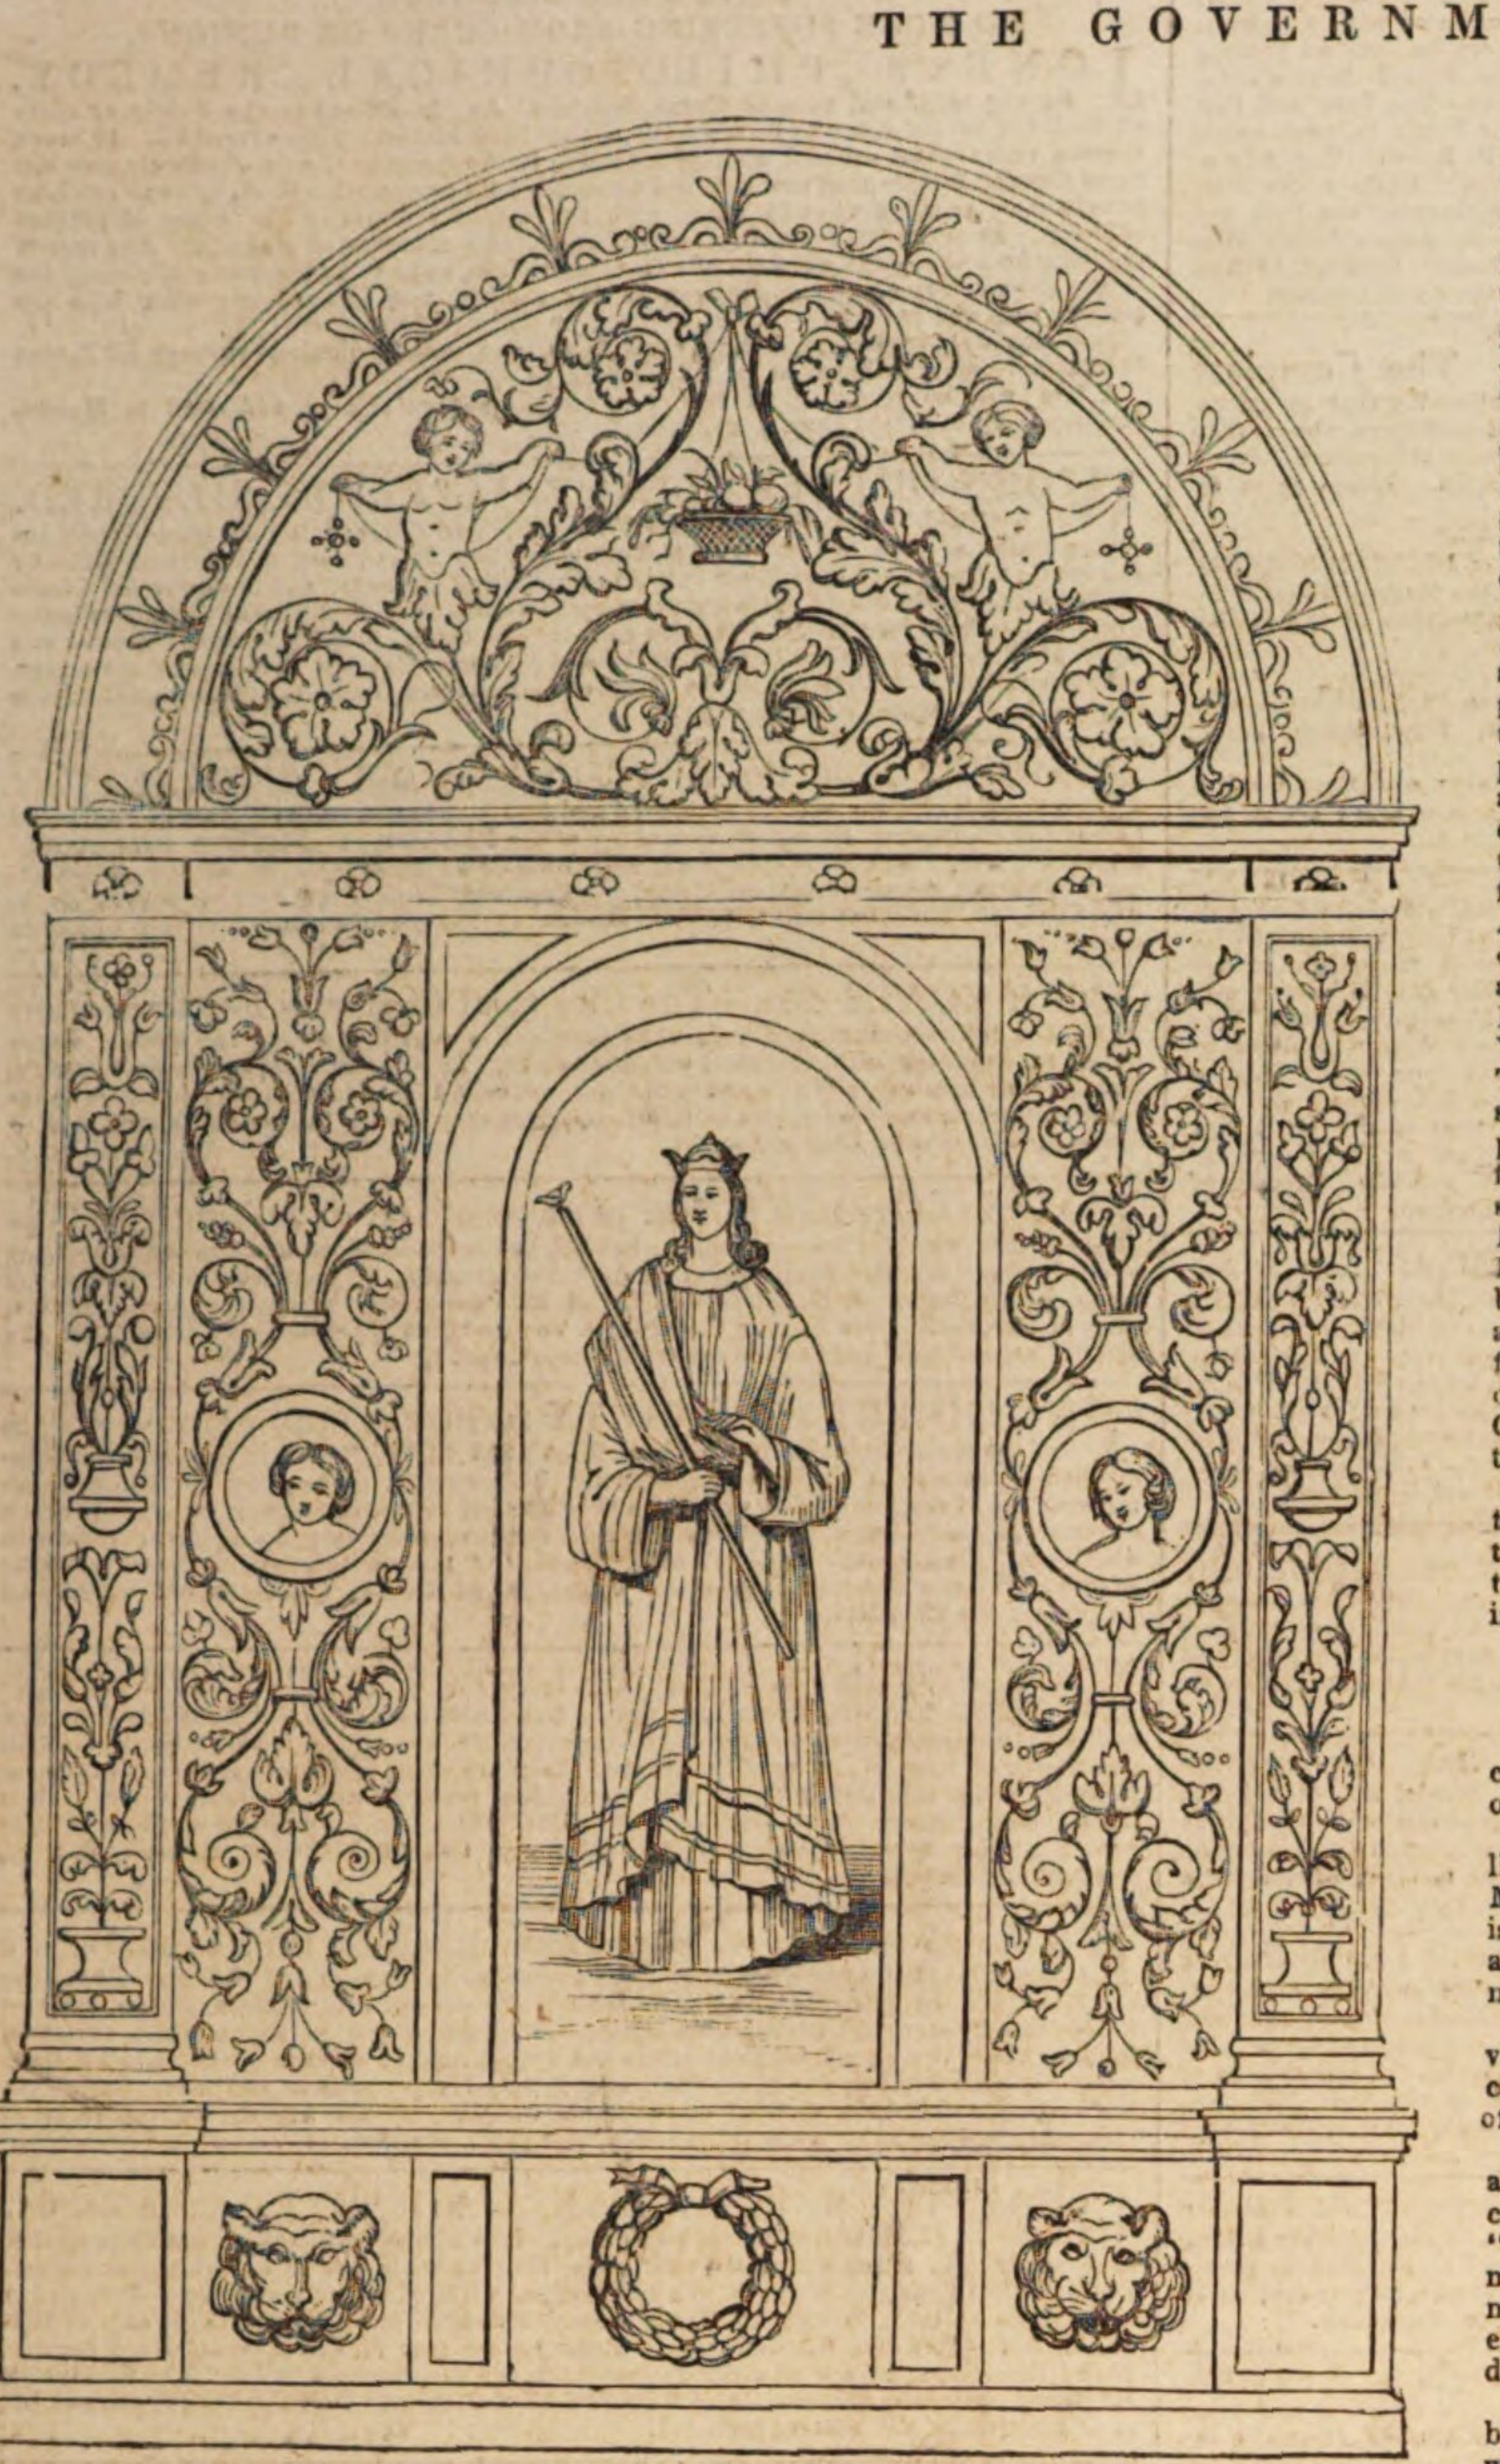
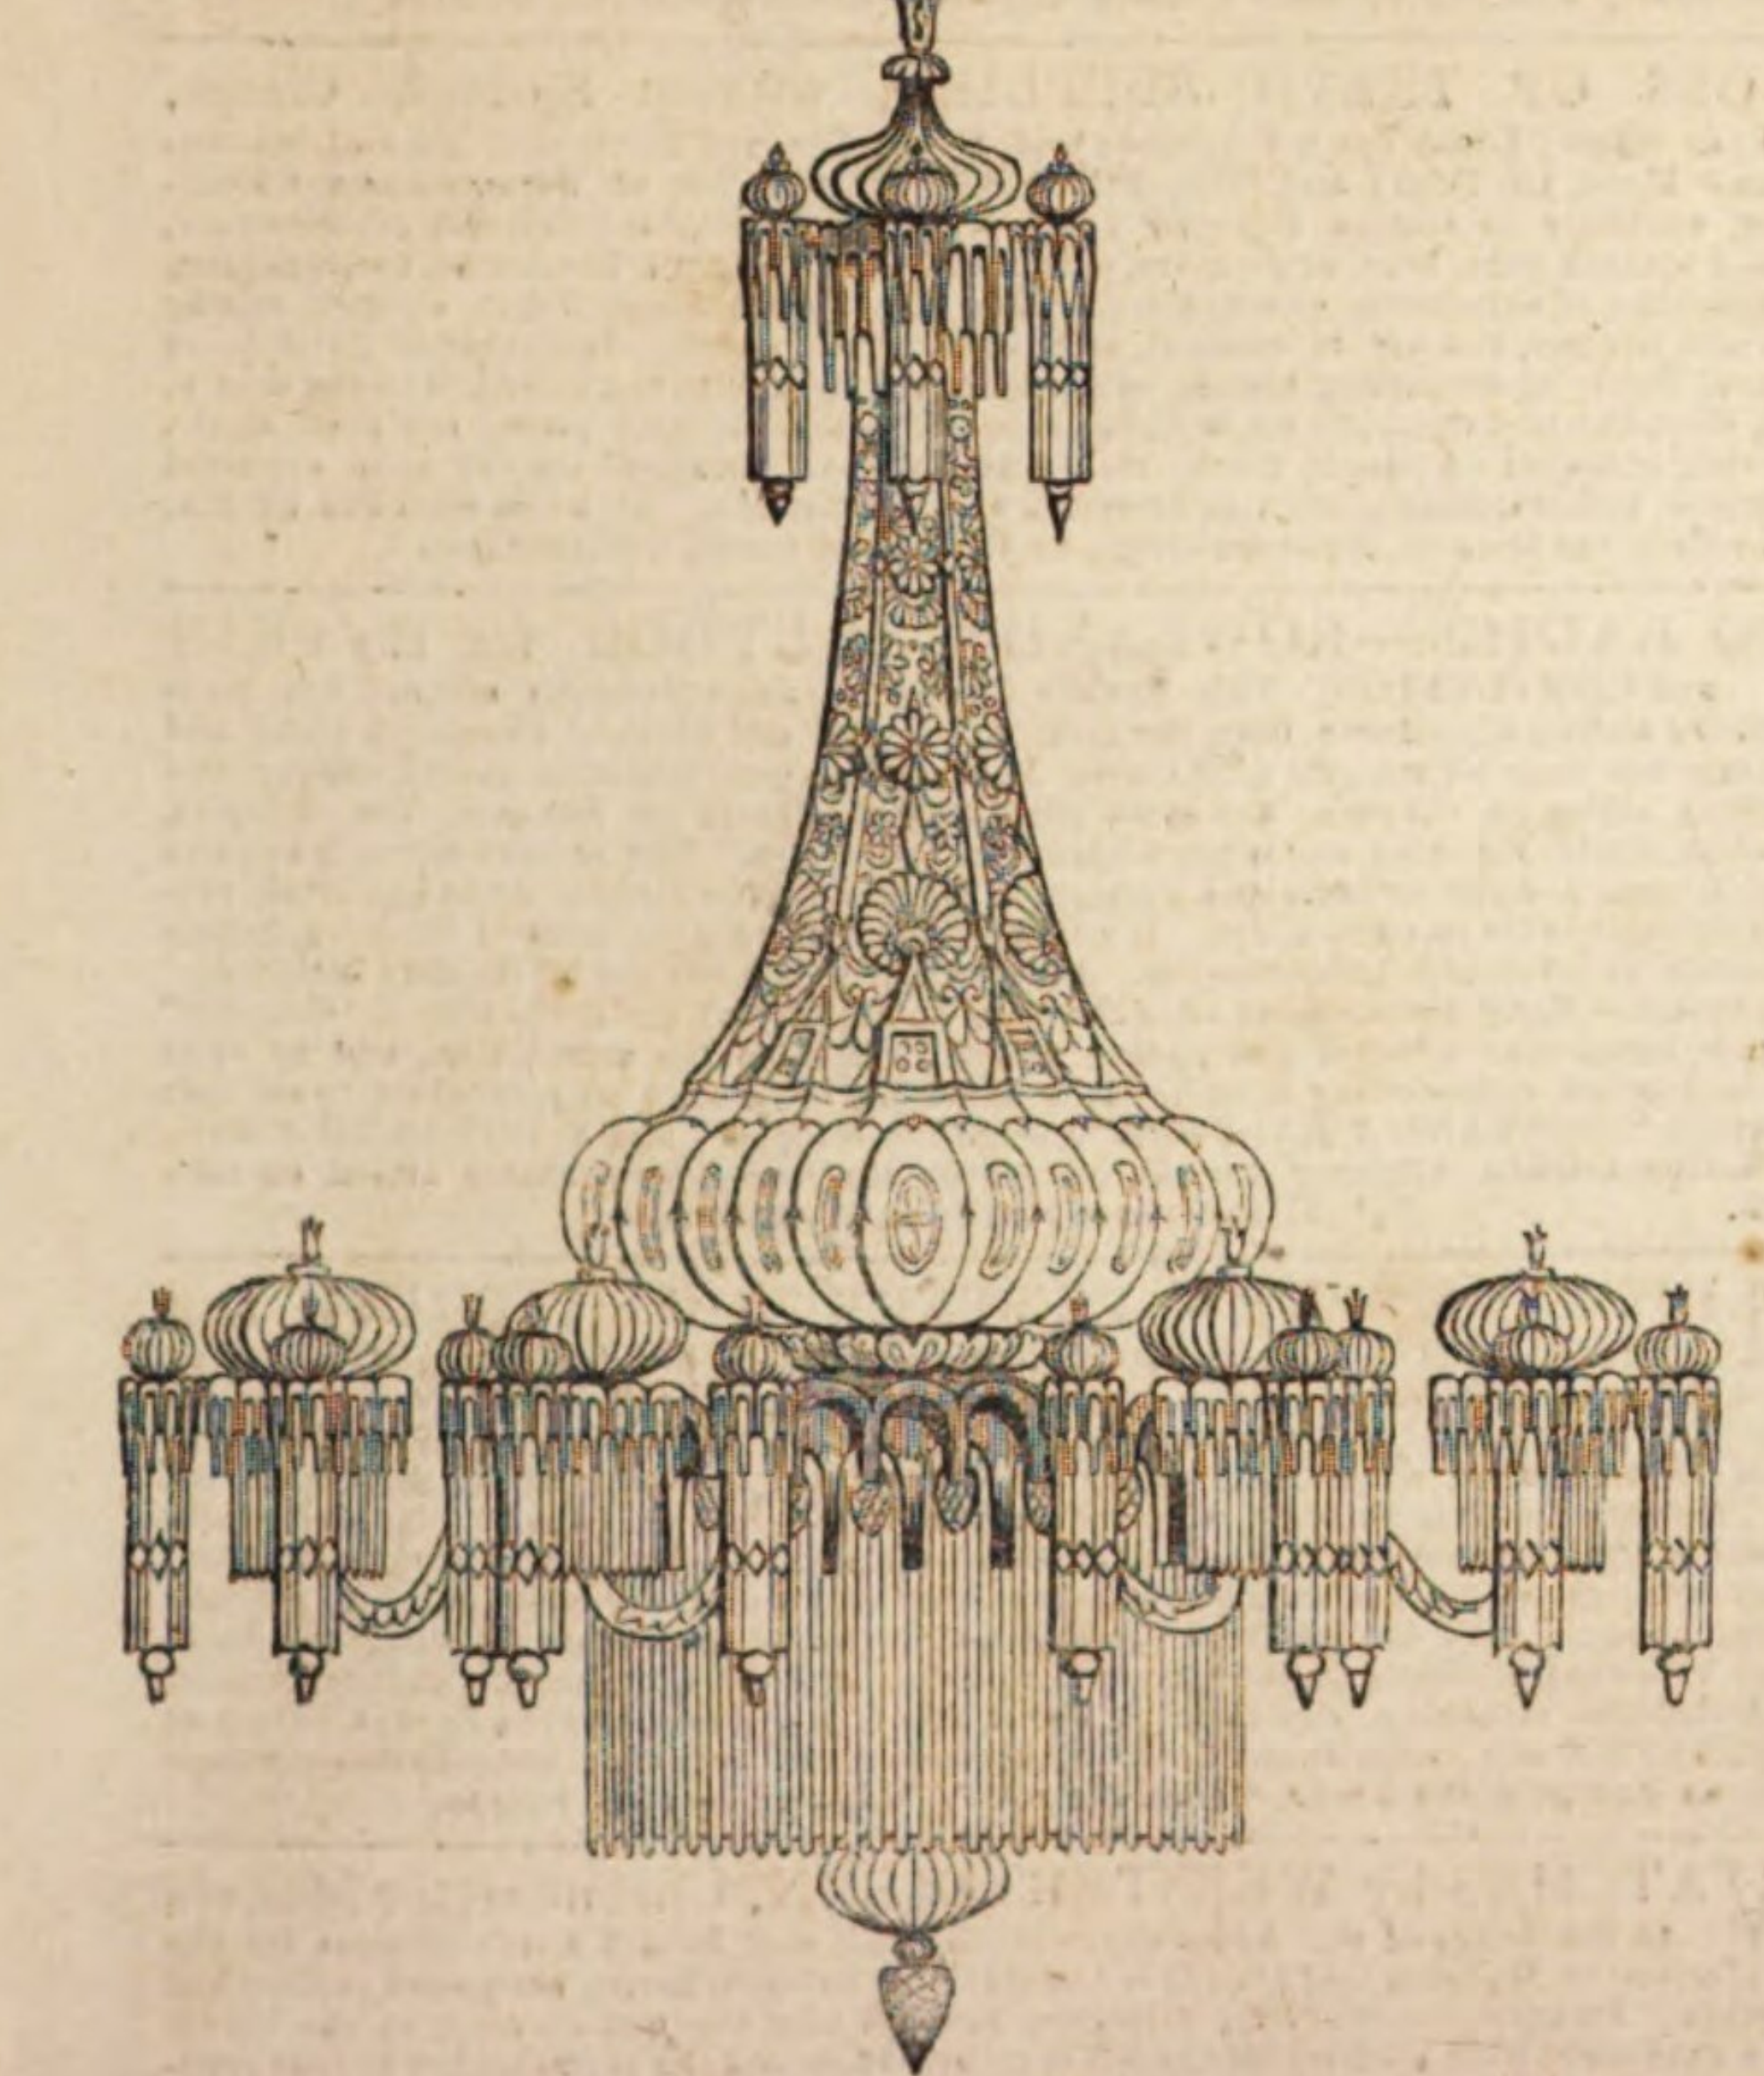
THE GOVERNMENT SCHOOL OF DESIGN.



MR. RICE'S ARABESQUE PAINTING IN FRESCO.

The annual distribution of prizes to the candidates whose works had been pronounced most meritorious, took place on Thursday week, as noticed in our last, in the large apartment at Somerset House, which was formerly occupied as the principal exhibition-room of the Royal Academy. The walls were decorated with drawings, casts, &c.; and upon the tables were specimens of designs and manufactures, many of them executed by the pupils, and some procured as patterns for imitation from the late "Exposition" of manufactures in Paris, which, we understand, have been purchased at a great cost. The room was filled with pupils and with the company invited to witness the distribution of the prizes Lord Colborne, as President of the Council, took the chair at four o'clock, and he was supported by Lord Westmoreland, Lord Dalhousie, the Right Hon. Mr. Gladstone, Colonel Wodehouse, R. M. Milnes, Esq., M.P.,; H. Labouchere, Esq., M.P.; B. Hawes, Esq., M.P.; W. Gladstone, Esq., senior; H. G. Knight, Esq., M.P.; T. Wyse, Esq., M.P.; Sir R. Westmacott, P. Pusey, Esq., M.P.

Lord Colborne, in opening the business of the day, explained that Prince Albert would have been present, as previously arranged, could the distribution of premiums have taken place previously to his Royal Highness going to Windsor. His lordship then paid an elegant compliment to Mr. Wilson, the director of the Institution, which was received with great applause. Lord Colborne then quitted the chair, which was taken by Mr. Gladstone (the President of the Board of Trade); and Mr. Wilson briefly directed attention to the specimens of the decorative and industrial arts which had been purchased at Paris. These consisted of bronzes, porcelain vases, silks, carpets, and some exquisite pieces of iron-work. A magnificent specimen of carpet, made by a new process, was much admired; it has a pile, resembling our richest Wilton manufacture, and the pattern, a golden plant upon a rich brown ground, is truly superb.



MR. STRUDWICK'S DESIGN FOR A GLASS CHANDELIER.

Mr. Gladstone then addressed the company, assuring them that the Ministry felt a lively interest in the success of the Institution, and that no vote in Parliament was more cheerfully made than that for the advancement of the School of Design. The right hon. gentleman concluded by congratulating the meeting on the results of what had been attempted, and then delivered the prizes to the following pupils:—Mr. Silas Rice, and Mr. George Stewart, arabesque paintings in fresco, five guineas each. Mr. Adam E. Findon, arabesque painting in oil colours, five guineas. Mr. R. Fusell, arabesque painting in oil, there guineas. Mr. Walker, design for paper-hanging, two guineas. Mr. John Brown, composition of ornament from flowers, three guineas. Mr. J. Hardwick, design for glass chandelier, five guineas. Mr. George Wallace, and Mr. W. C. Wilde, designs for a dinner service, in porcelain, each five guineas Mr. J. Phillip, designs for a sideboard, two guineas. Mr. J. R. Harvey, design for a carpet, three guineas. Mr. J. Strudwick, design for a candelabrum, five guineas. Mr. John Brown, design for silk hangings, three guineas. Mr. W. C. Wilde and Mr. J. R. Harvey, coloured design for a printed drugget, each three guineas. Mr. H. Armstead, ornamental modelling, £3. Prizes for drawings, varying from £2 10s. to £1, were awarded to Messrs, W. Scott, J. George, Joseph Philips, J. Pringle, Short W. Gleadall, L. C. Wyon, E. Arnold, L. Walker, and F. Smallfield. The total amount of prizes awarded in the male school was £88 17s. In the female school, a prize of three guineas was awarded to Miss Dixon, for design of a pattern for lace; for the best shaded drawing from a cast, a prize of £2 to Miss Hunter; a second prize of £1 10s. for the same to Miss M. E. Filmore; a prize of one guinea, for the best coloured design for a dress, to Miss Smith; and prizes, varying from two guineas to one guinea, for drawings, were awarded to Misses R. Dimsdale, E. Channon, Augusta Colchester, Bragg, Clark, and Bridges. The total sum awarded was thirteen guineas.

The business of the day having thus terminated, the thanks of the meeting were moved by one of the Council to the right hon. chairman, who returned his acknowledgments; after which the meeting broke up.

We have engraved five of the prizes:

1. Mr. Rice's Arabesque Fresco.
2. Mr. Fussell's Arabesque in Oil.

These are beautiful works, both as regards the classic character of the designs, and their delicacy of colour.

3. Mr. Strudwick's Design for a Glass Chandelier; the copyright of which has been secured by Mr. Apsley Pellat, of the Falcon glass works: it is a beautiful production in a branch of decorative art wherein comparatively little taste has yet been manifested.

4—5. Two designs for a Porcelain Dinner Service, by Mr. Wallace; both presenting highly commendable specimens of the best forms of antiquity.

We were much gratified with the entire scene, and the proceedings were of extreme interest in connexion with the solution of the problem, "Whether or not," as Mr. Gladstone lucidly remarked, "a true estimate of the beautiful in art might be united to the commercial industry and enterprise of trade, and might not exist in its full development in England."

Of the School-room, an engraving, accompanied by a brief account of the origin of the Institution, will be found in No. 56 of our journal.

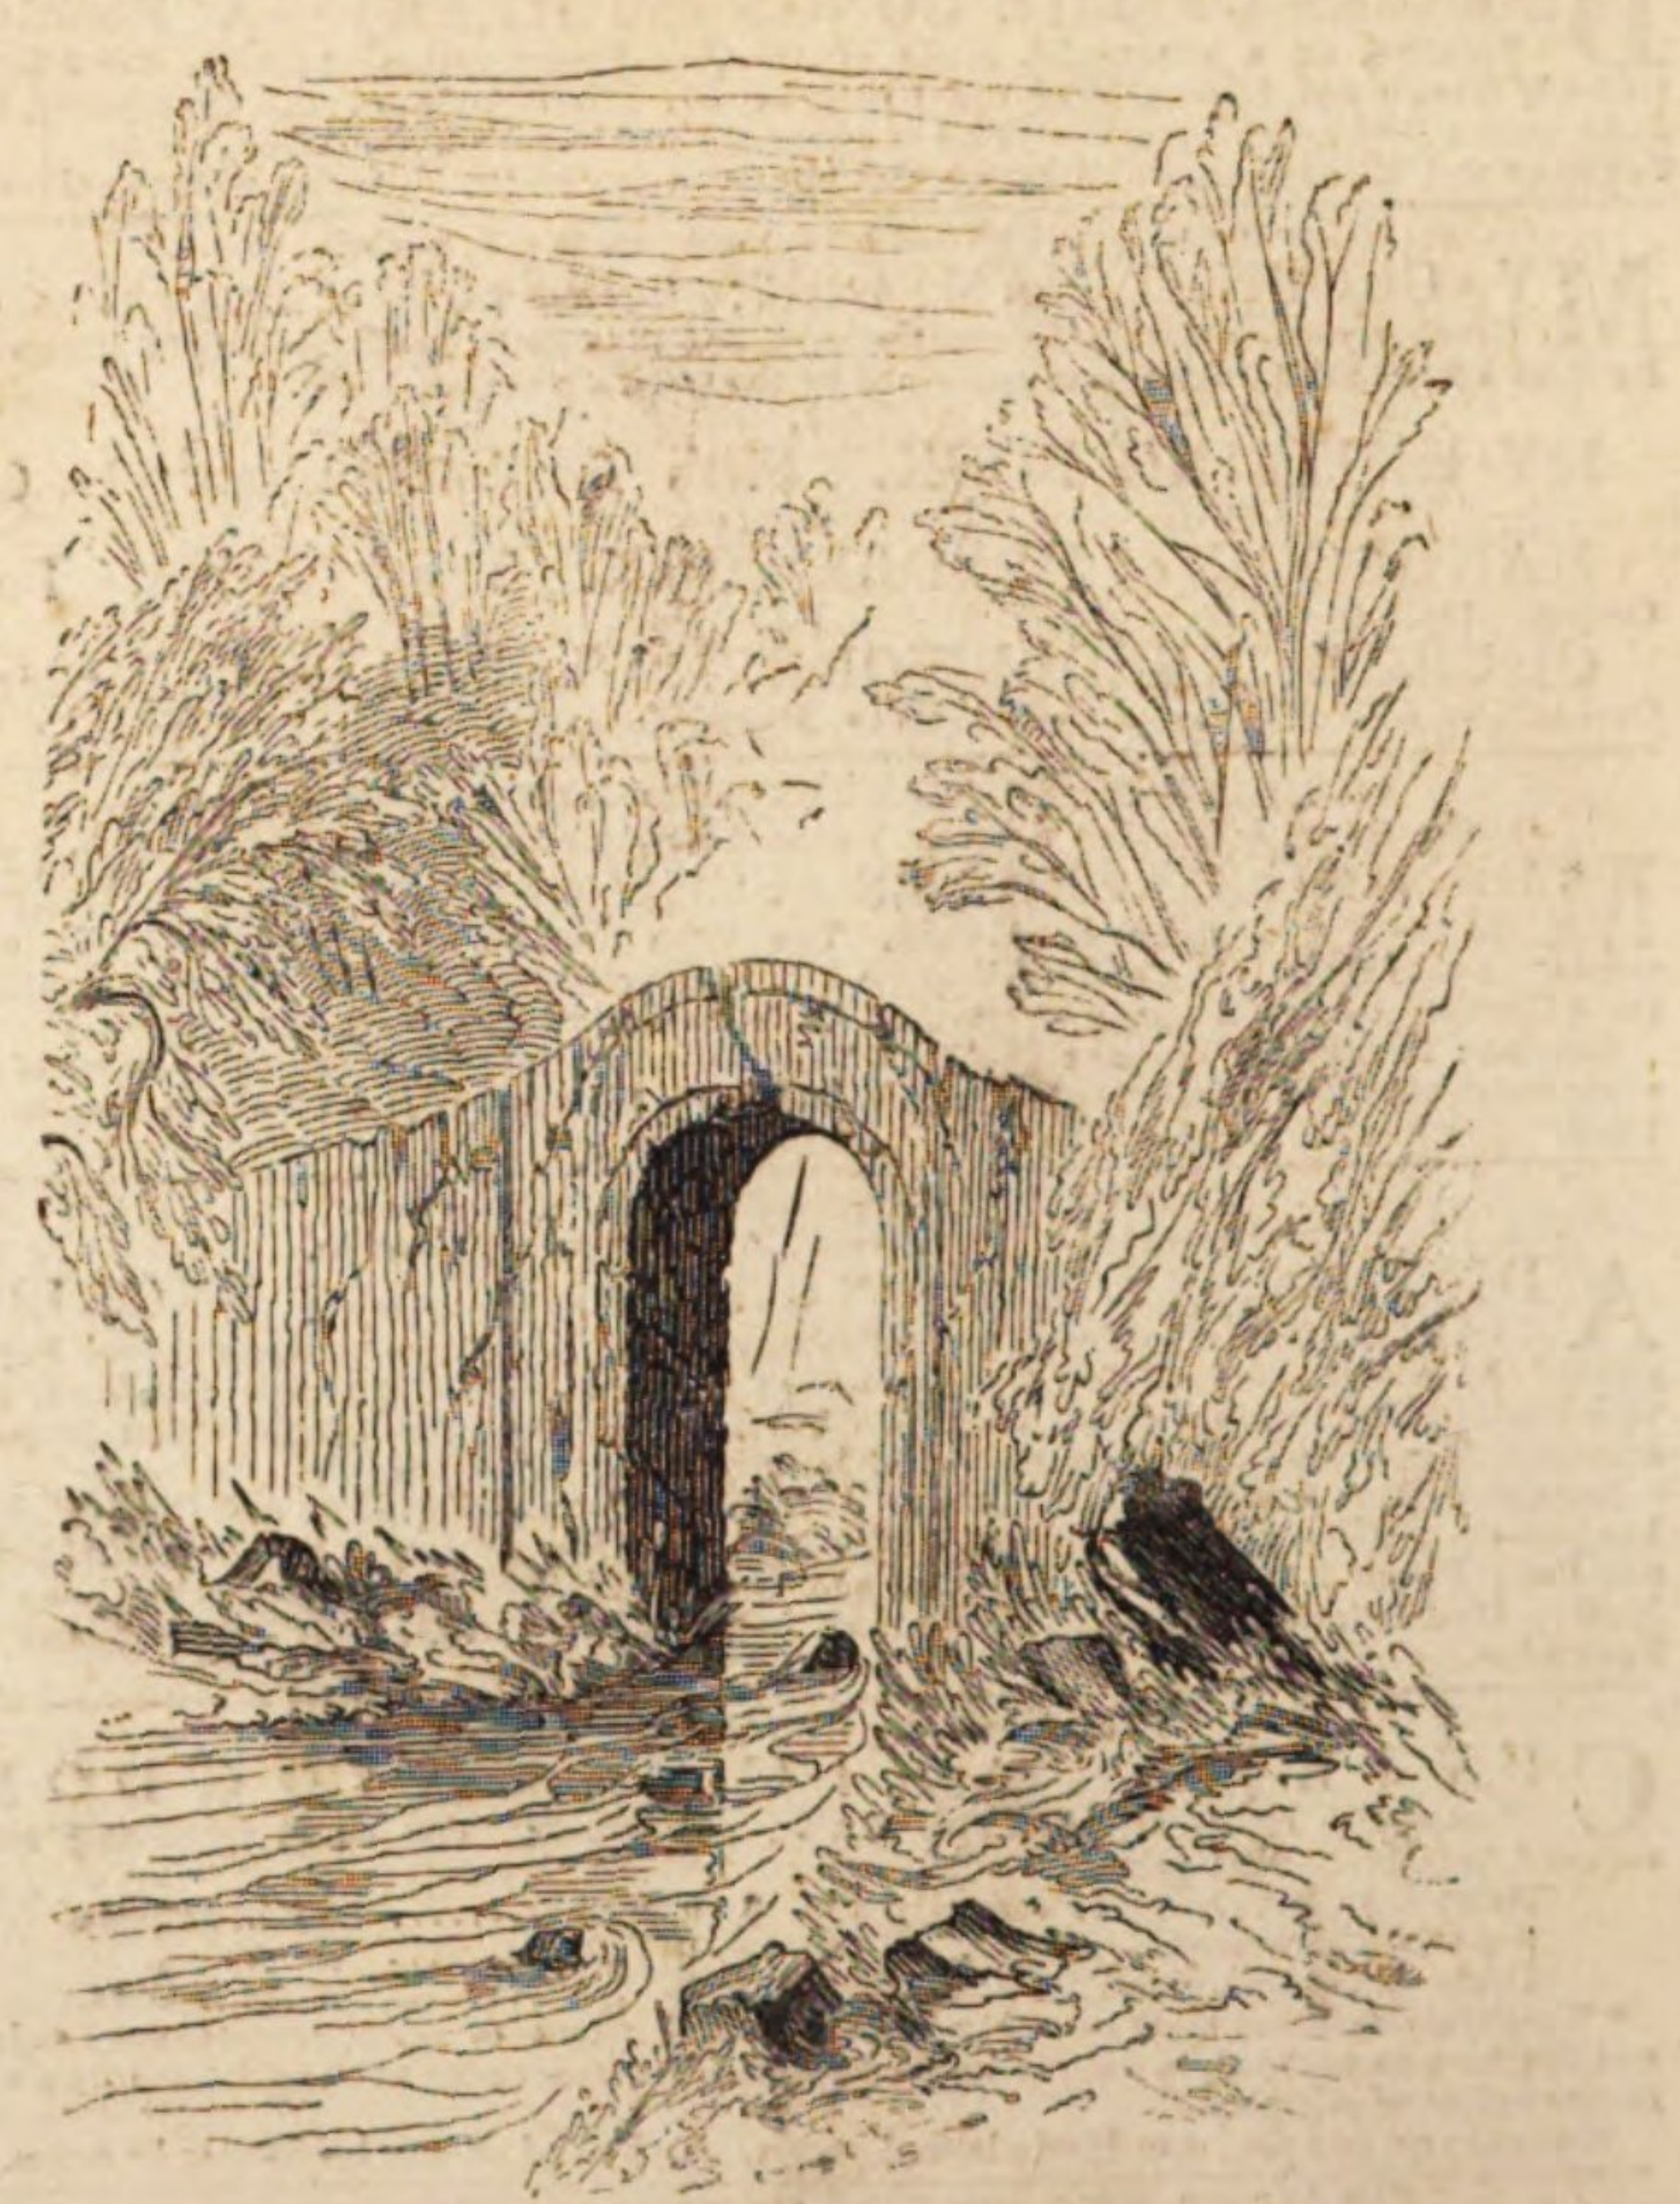
The New Houses of Parliament.—The committee appointed to inspect the works of decorative art exhibited in King-street, St. James's, in April and May last, have made a report, in which they state they have examined the specimens of carved wood, and the designs relating to such specimens, which have been sent in by artists desirous of being employed in the decoration of the houses of Parliament. The committee proceed to say that, not being at present in possession of sufficient information as to the extent to which wood-carving may be considered desirable in the Palace at Westminster, or as to the precise character of the works which may be required, they have thought it expedient in general to enumerate the names only, without further distinction of the artists whose works have received the commendation of the committee. In the department of wood-carving the artists so noticed in the detailed report of the committee are Mr. Cummings, Mr. Ollett, Mr. Ringham, Mr. Freeman, Mr. Browne, and Mr. John Thomas. Among the artists in wood, the committee mention Mr. Rogers, whom they consider as the person best qualified to be intrusted with those parts of the wood-work of the House of Lords in which great richness of effect and delicacy of execution are required. The name of Mr. Rogers, however, was not mentioned in the above list, as he had not complied with the terms of the notice.

Roman Remains in the City.—In the course of the present week, during the excavations which are being made in Peter's-hill, Bread-street-hill, Huggin-lane, and Great Fish-street, several Roman relics have been found. On Monday, a large Roman earthen urn, about two feet in diameter, in which were some smaller urns such as were used to contain the ashes of the dead, was found at the top of Bread-street-hill. On Wednesday, at a short distance from Huggin-lane, a small Roman lamp was found. They were at a distance of about six feet from the surface. At a few feet from the latter spot were several fragments of walls, with fresco painting of a rich red colour on them. In Peter's-hill, was discovered the Roman barrier wall to prevent the overflow of the Thames. The barrier consisted of massive stones, of 8 or 9 cwt. each, supported by piles of wood deeply imbedded in the soil. The men have now been employed several weeks in this neighbourhood, and every day they have discovered remains showing that at a very early period a large area was here occupied by Roman buildings of massive construction, as in all directions are foundation walls of from three to six feet in width. A great many silver and copper coins have been dug up, many pieces of fresco-painted walls, and a large quantity of broken pottery.

NOOKS AND CORNERS OF OLD SCOTLAND

THE AULD BRIG OF DOON.

The "Auld Brig of Doon" which figures so conspicuously in Burns's "Tam o' Shanter" has been till very lately the chief communication between the Kyle and Carrick shores of the Doon, being on the highway leading from Ayr to Maybole, and nearly two miles from the former town. Its age is not known, but it is supposed to be very old, from the appearance of the masonry, and the high sweep taken by the arch. Having been found very inconvenient and difficult of passage from its narrowness and height, a new bridge, larger and perfectly level with the road, has lately been erected, leaving the "Au'd Brig" in disuse; which, if it had been a common piece of stone and lime, would probably have been demolished through age and the efforts of unsentimental boys, who amused themselves by throwing the stones of it into the river; but some gentlemen, trustees of the road, instigated by Mr. David Auld, of Ayr, subscribed a sufficient sum to repair it as far as possible; and since then it has been visited by thousands, with "that peculiar interest which genius calls forth in favour of insensible matter."



THE AULD BRIG OF DOON.

This memorial will, also, be visited by the majority of those who will flock to this locality during the ensuing week, to participate in the Great Festival in honour of Robert Burns; of which we shall next week commence a series of picturesque illustrations.

THE "ALL-HAIL HEREAFTER."

CLOSE on the death of Thomas Campbell has followed the festival in commemoration of Robert Burns. The dust of Campbell was attended to the grave by the highest and greatest men of the day, by statesmen, artists, and writers. The tomb closed over him with all the honour the living can pay to the dead; but still more satisfactory is it to know that during his life he was exempt from the ills of penury—the lot of so many of the children of song. All the rank and wealth and power that stood around his coffin might not, perchance, have saved him from want had his youth been less fortunate, or his age less prudent, and had his life outlasted the means of supporting it unassisted. Such things have been; and we have starved those in life to whom, after death, our shame and pride have built splendid monuments—to those who asked for bread, literally giving a stone. Dryden died after a long struggle with toil, old age, and poverty; and the nobility of the land gathered round his hearse, compensating their carelessness of the living by the splendour they cast around the ashes of the dead; the aristocracy of England supported the pall of Sheridan, and walked in his funeral train, though it suffered him to die destitute, and with the shadow of the prison wall almost falling on the bed of death. We must not rate these posthumous honours at more than they are worth, when those who pay them might have done more; nor have waited till they were startled, by the extinguishing of the lamp of genius, into the recollection that it might have been as well had they fed it for the sake of its light.

But there are other honours which the living may pay to the dead, with which such recollections cannot mingle. It is when the gulf between the present and the past has become widened, when generations have passed away, and posterity pays homage to the genius for what it has given to the world, feeling more admiration for the man than his contemporaries, without the possibility of participating in the guilt of their neglect. Such are the occasions when men meet together to honour the memories of those who have thrown a spell over the minds of all generations. We are a cold and phlegmatic people, and it is said, not without some truth, that we are hardened by our too great avidity in the pursuit of wealth, our too unremitting worship of Mammon. Our homage to genius is seldom manifested outwardly; we are not possessed of that enthusiasm which impels men to celebrate in public the memory of the great poet or artist. Italy seems the land of such displays of fervour, which grows chill and faint beneath our northern skies. But the present week has furnished a striking exception to our general indifference, in the festival held in commemoration of Robert Burns.

Of this fête we have elsewhere given ample details; we recur to it here only to remark on the general spirit that has, in all ages, prompted such celebrations. Whenever they occur, they constitute that "all-hail hereafter," which is the > "Life to come of every poet's creed," that all anticipate, and that some attain. And, wherever they occur, they have some features in common. In the first place it is very, very rarely that these honours are paid by the generation among whom the object of them moves and lives. The contemporaries of a man allow his superiority with something of a grudging spirit. His frailties, too, are linked with his fame, and the mean and the vicious dwell with malicious satisfaction on those defects which are all that genius has in common with them, delighting to blacken the brilliant, and prostrate the beautiful to the dust. And in addition, no one ever achieved greatness without creating enemies:—

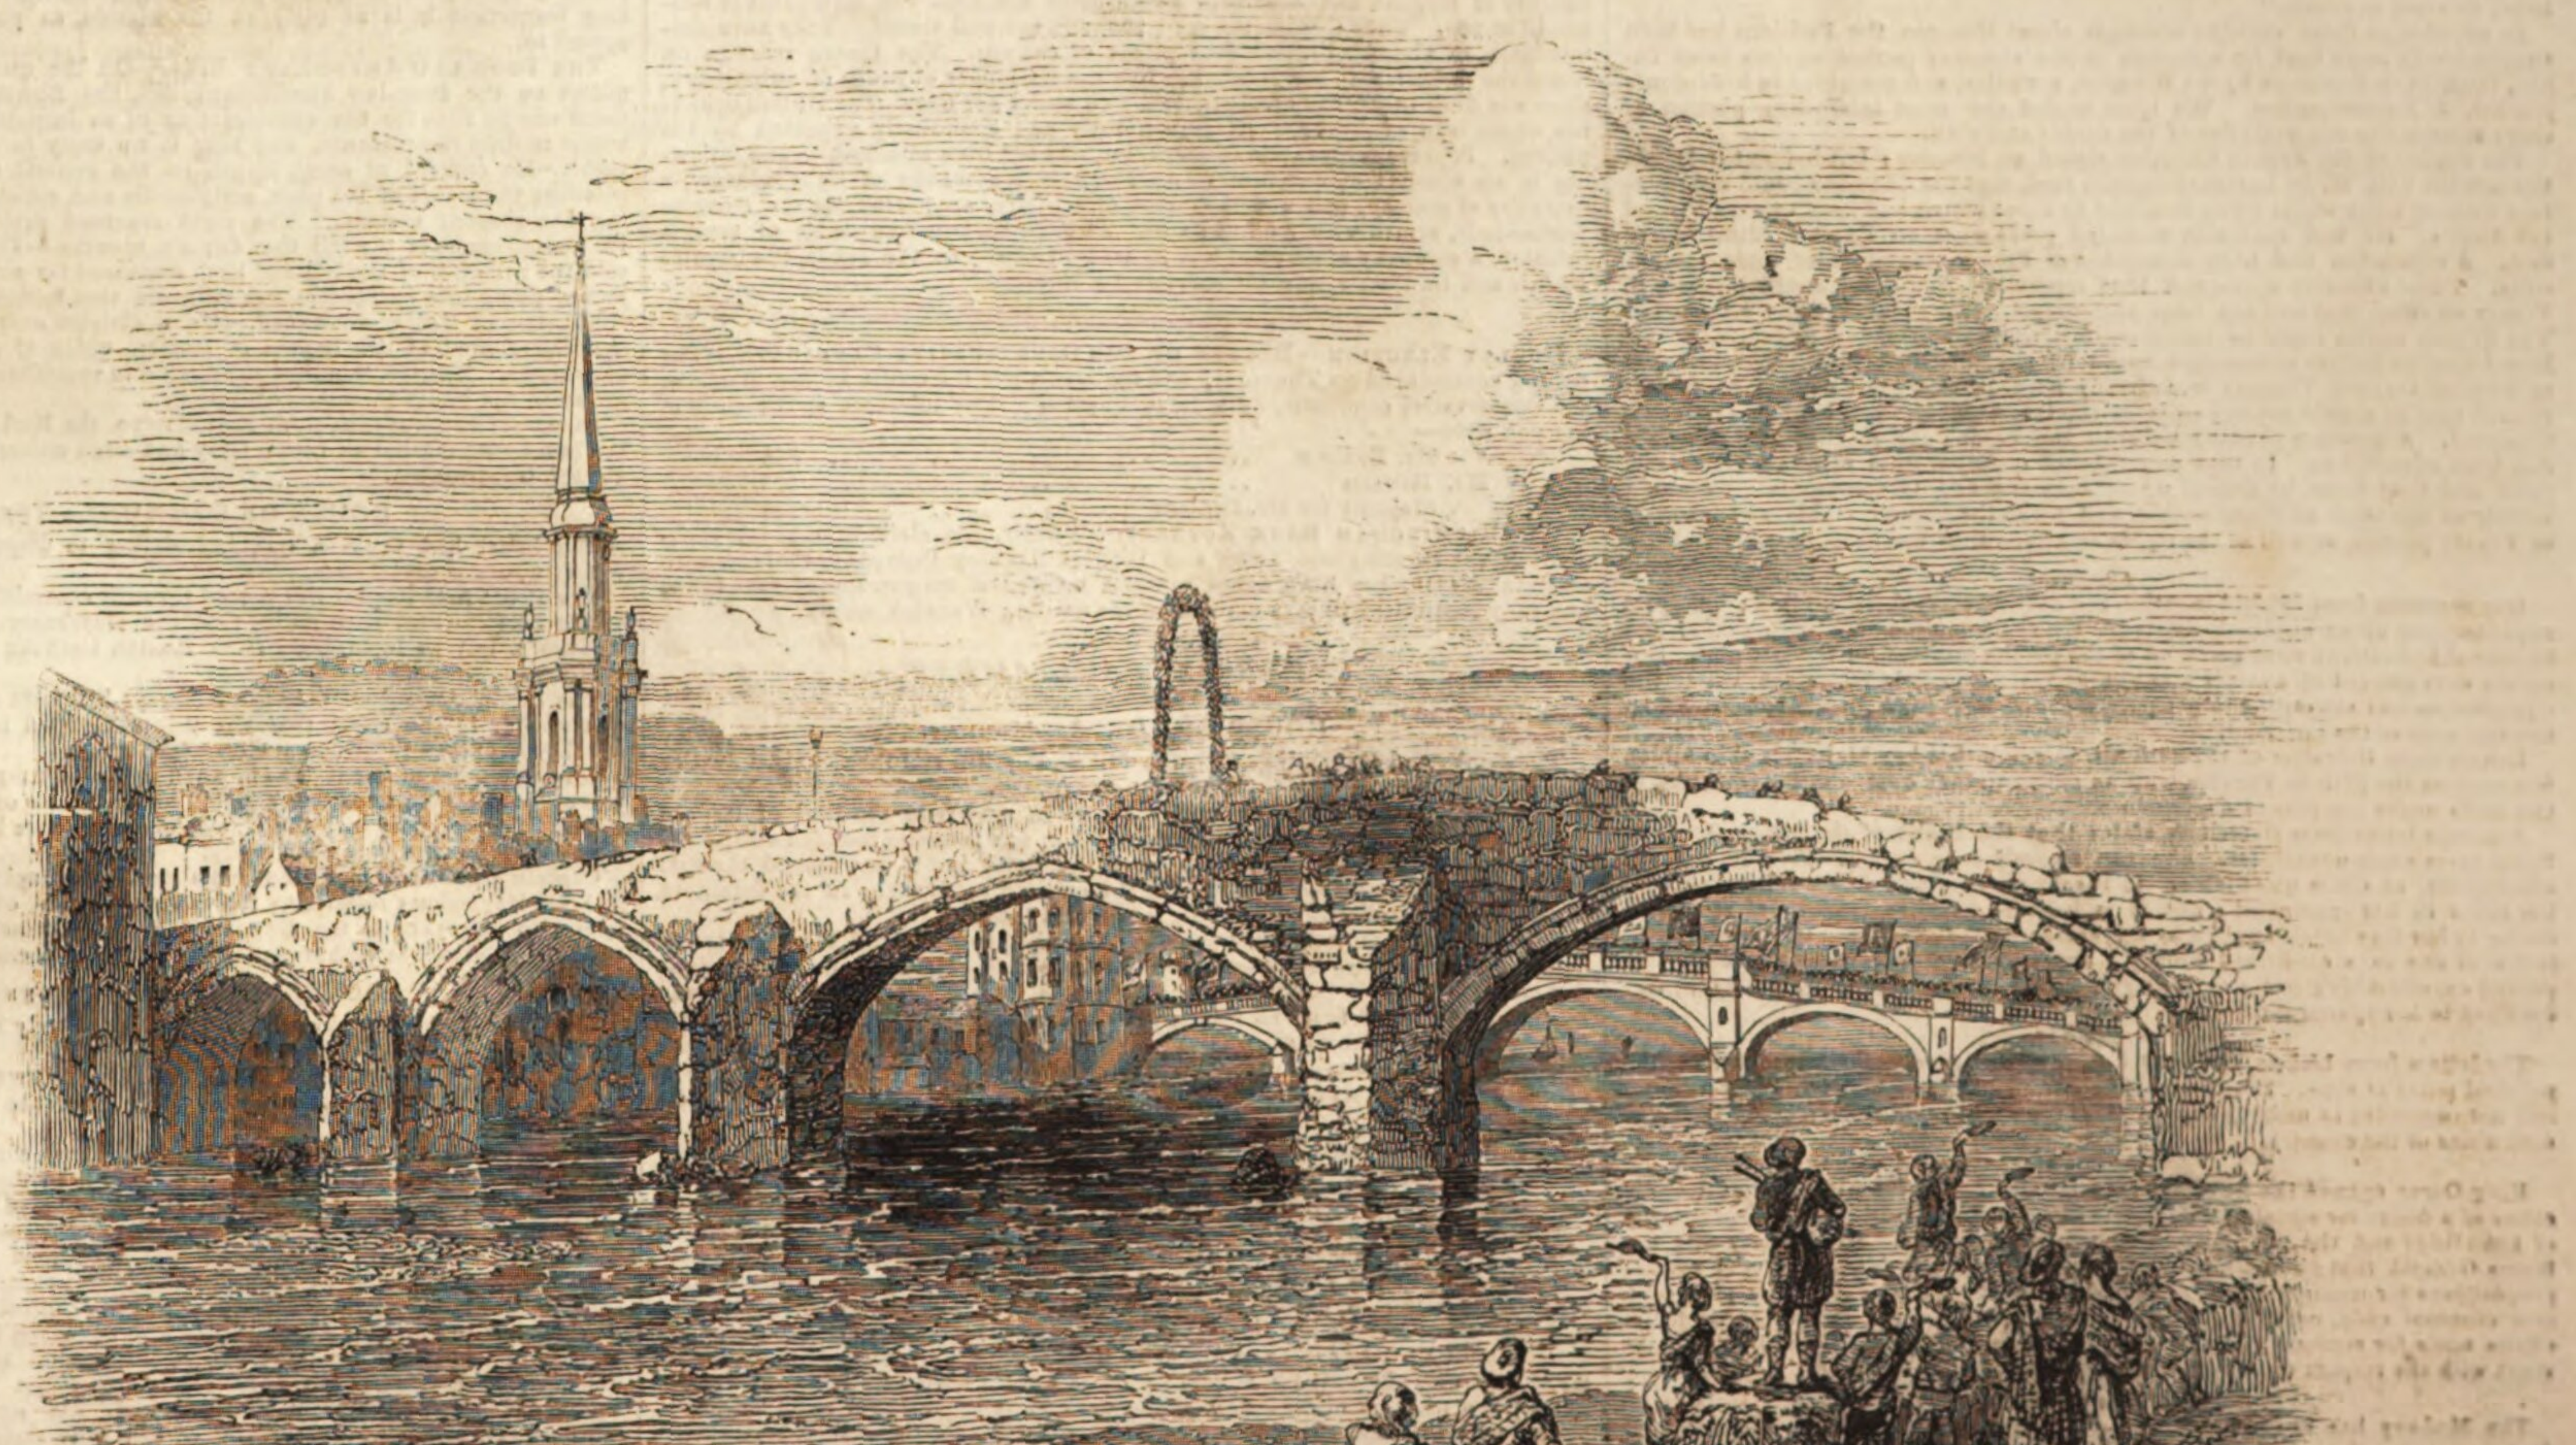
> "He who surpasses or subdues mankind,
> Must look down on the hate of those below."

All these causes combine to hide a man's true greatness from his fellow-men, his competitors in the race. But time and death sweep into oblivion all minor failings and petty passions; the lapse of years acts on the memory of the departed, like soft moonlight on a magnificent ruin,

> Leaving that beautiful which still is so,
> And making that which is not; till the place
> Becomes religion and the heart runs o'er
> With silent worship of the great of old,
> The dead but sceptred sovereigns who still rule
> Our spirits from their urns.

Thus a public and universal homage has never, we may almost say, been rendered to the intellectually great during their life. It has been always thus; it was not till after the death of Homer that seven cities contended for the honour of having given him birth; Dante was not only unhonoured during his life, but was persecuted, banished, and sentenced to be burned alive; he was a soldier, a political partizan, and a man of action as well as a poet. Tasso, indeed, by the favour of a Roman Pontiff, would have been publicly crowned with the laurel; but the solemnity was deferred from the winter to the spring, and the poet was struck in the interval with the disease, of which he died on the very day appointed for the ceremony. Shakspeare was comparatively unknown to his contemporaries except as the successful manager of a popular theatre. As a poet he was almost unknown to himself, for he flung his immortal works from him with unconsciousness of their value—except as things to be acted; and many generations passed before the admiration of posterity prompted the jubilee at Stratford. And now, nearly half a century after the death of Burns, thousands have gathered on the banks of the Doon, round the place o his birth, and the spot over which he has thrown the lustre of his genius; we need not here describe the scene but must not the thoughts of many there have turned from th present to the past, from the generous and enthusiastic homage paid to the dead, to the cold heart and the grudging hand with which the world meted out its favours to the living.

In July, 1796, died the poet Burns, his last moments embittered by unspeakable anxieties and cares, from which the most trifling exertion from a very few might have saved him. In



THE BRIGS OF AYR.

August, 1844, men of all ranks are vieing with each other in the celebration of his memory. So it seems ever to have been:—

'Tis the doom
Of spirits of his order to be rack'd
In life,—to wear their hearts out, and consume
Their days in endless strife, and die alone;
Then future thousands crowd around their tomb,
And pilgrims come from climes where they have known
The name of him—who now is but a name,—
And wasting homage o'er the sullen stone,
Spread his—by him unheard, unheeded—fame!

But darker still would be the fate of genius if the present did not thus atone for the past; and we at least may join in that homage without self-reproach; the neglect of the poet was the fault of our fathers, but the admiration of his genius and the pride in his memory, we can claim as merits of our own.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

FRANCE.

Our arrivals from France this week cannot fail to excite the attention of our readers, as they bring important information upon the subject of the dispute between France and Morocco. Even the Journal des Débats admits that the French have determined to prosecute the war. It appears that the Emperor had offered to comply immediately with the ultimatum of the French Government, with the exception of the demand for the expulsion of Abd-el-Kader. On this point the Emperor equivocated; and the consequence is, that the Prince de Joinville has received orders to commence operations against some of the ports on the coast of Morocco. The ports to be attacked are Mogadore, Mazagan, Salé, and Larache. Tangier, as being the centre of European commerce, is to be spared.

Nothing had occurred at Tangier up to the 30th ult. Another version says:—"Some of the Emperor's troops had entered the town, but had subsequently retired from it. The Prince de Joinville had given the Emperor until the 2d instant to accede to the demands of the French Government, and in the event of his refusal would bombard Tangier."

It was known in Paris that Marshal Bugeaud had advanced beyond Ouchda, in the territory of Morocco, and one of the Paris papers even states that Tangier had been bombarded, but of this report there is no confirmation.

Although, as will be seen, the intelligence regarding the real position of affairs between France and Spain is somewhat contradictory, it is evident that there is ample ground for considering that it has assumed a very grave character. This opinion is fully borne out by the following official despatches. The first was addressed to the French Government, and the latter has been received at Lloyd's:—

(OFFICIAL.)

Gibraltar, July 28.—The Chancellor of the Consulate and all our countrymen have retired from Tangier, with the consent of the local authorities. The Albion was sent on the 27th to Tangier, with an officer to take charge of the squadron in the roads under the title of "Commodore."

All the Consuls have quitted Tangier. The English Vice-Consul has returned there. The arrival of Mr. Drummond Hay is hourly expected.

Copy of a letter received at Lloyd's from their agent at Gibraltar, dated August 1, 1844.

Sir,—The only novelty which has transpired is the receipt of the expected despatches from our own Chargé d'Affaires, Mr. Drummond Hay, dated Morocco, 26th ult., when he was actively negotiating with the Emperor, through his Imperial Majesty's minister Ben Rez, which news our Governor considers to augur favourably for the realization of his hopes that all differences will be amicably settled; but I apprehend that the public are of opinion that the existing condition of affairs is such as not to exclude all apprehension; and if the negotiations, however successful, be tardy, it is thought that the French Admiral may not be induced to continue to delay hostilities; indeed, a general rumour prevails here—but on what grounds I am unable to find out—that in a day or two coercive measures will be adopted by his Royal Highness Prince de Joinville, who is already at Tangier, with a part of his forces. Everything remained quiet yesterday in that town, Consuls afloat, and European population retired; but numerous armed tribes had congregated under the walls and in the neighbourhood.

Nothing can be more critical than the actual position of affairs. The British Admiral, in the Formidable, remains in our bay, with the Caledonia, three-decker; whilst at Tangier are the Warspite and Albion, under Commodore Lockyer. On the part of the Spaniards their brigade is ready at Tarifa and Algesiras, and 1000 cavalry are daily expected in our immediate neighbourhood, from Madrid, to join the African expedition. Their movements will, however, wholly depend on the French, without whom, it is expected, they will not act.

(Signed) J. L. Cowell.

To Wm. Dobson, Esq., Secretary.

It is stated in the Paris papers, that in addition to the Chancellor of the French Consulate at Tangier, several French subjects had likewise been arrested; whereupon the Prince de Joinville notified to the Maroquin authorities, that if within a period of three days his countrymen were not liberated, he would himself open the doors of their prisons.

A letter from Cadiz, of the 25th ult., gives the following particulars:—"On the 24th the Pluton again entered the roadstead of Cadiz, bringing back the Prince de Joinville, and having on board the Consul-General of France at Tangier, and certain European residents. The property of the Consul was left behind, as well as the archives and official papers of the consulate. The Cocyte steamer, sent from Oran with despatches from Marshal Bugeaud, anchored in the roads the same evening, and the Chimère, which was to have returned to Oran, was despatched the next morning to Toulon. Soon after the arrival of the Cocyte, the Asmodée steam-frigate was sent to Tangier, as well as the small steamer the Rubis. A report was current here that the Cocyte had brought a treaty concluded between Marshal Bugeaud and the Emperor of Morocco. Nevertheless, at the moment when the Chimère left Cadiz roads, the French squadron was under sail for Tangier. The greatest enthusiasm prevailed on board the French vessels. The persons who have come on board the Pluton state that the fortifications of Tangier have been put into a state of defence, and that a battery has been erected to defend the entrance of the port, which will take vessels entering between wind and water, and which may, perhaps, do some mischief."

In addition to these exciting accounts about Morocco, the Parisians had been supplied with more food for agitation in the shape of further advices from Tahiti, brought to Bordeaux by the Reunion, a whaler, and contained in a Toulouse journal, L'Emancipation. We have copied the most interesting portion of these accounts in our narrative of the events at Tahiti.

The session of the French Chamber closed on Monday; but before the Deputies left the hall, M. de Larochejacquelin said, that the Chamber could not separate without some words being returned to those which had been uttered beyond the Straits. He had read with wounded pride what an English Minister had said. A reparation had been demanded of France, accompanied with gross insults. Those offensive words and that reparation would no doubt produce in France an effect that had not been anticipated. They would unite all parties. The French nation could be relied on, but could its Ministers be trusted? He hoped that no further concessions would be made to England. The disavowal of Admiral Dupetit Thouars had already been far too great a one. M. Guizot replied that he should not depart from the language he had held in the other Chamber. A question pending between the French and English Governments had been adverted to. In that complicated question were involved rights and facts, and they must be cleared up between the two Governments. He would bestow on the affair all his attention, and make the honour, rights, and interests of France prevail, as well as the rights and honour of her naval officers.

SPAIN.

Our accounts from Madrid mention the continuance of tranquillity; but great apprehension of an outbreak existed. Every precaution had been taken, and further examinations were going on of the parties arrested for the late plot. Rumours were current of another attempt at insurrection at Barcelona, where the conspirators had attempted to get possession of Montjuich, but were defeated by the vigilance of the governor.

Letters from Gibraltar of the 28th ult. mention that her Majesty's ship Albion was sent on the 27th to Tangier, with an officer to take charge of the squadron in the roads under the title of commodore.

A private letter from Barcelona states that the health of the young Queen of Spain gives some uneasiness. She can scarcely take exercise even in her own apartments, as she is quite lame. It is said she sprained her foot dancing with her sister in her apartment; but it is believed that her difficulty of moving is owing to her legs being swollen in an extraordinary manner. Her appearance is that of one in a confirmed dropsy. Some weeks after her arrival she had improved considerably; but she has again retrograded. Her sister is also ill, and confined to her apartment.

PORTUGAL.

The letters from Lisbon, of the 30th ult., do not possess the least interest in a political point of view. The Court still continued at Cintra, and the Government had not succeeded in making any progress towards the mitigation of the financial difficulties of the country.

SWEDEN.

King Oscar opened the Swedish Diet on the 20th ult., with a speech indicative of a desire for social and domestic improvements, and for the development of knowledge and the maintenance of truth and justice. His Majesty told the States General that he intended during the present session to present several propositions for measures of high interest; and in the first place the plan of a new criminal code, conformable with the ideas of the age, as well as with the efforts made for reconciling the severity necessary in the application of punishment with the respect due to the dignity of man.

THE WEST INDIES.

The Medway has arrived with the usual West Indian mails. Her dates of departure were—from Tampico, June 21; Vera Cruz, July 1; Havannah, 11th; Nassau, 13th; and Bermuda, 22d.

The advices by this arrival were unimportant. The weather had been more favourable in Jamaica, Barbadoes, &c. At Dominica tranquillity was perfectly restored, and the trials were about to commence. There had been a movement in Trinidad for a reduction of wages.

The Jamaica Journal states that Sir C. Metcalfe was quite recovered from his recent indisposition. The Chief Justice of Antigua, Justice Nanton, was dead and had been succeeded by the Hon. J. Sheil.

UNITED STATES.

The Great Western has arrived at Liverpool from New York, after a passage of a little less than 15 days, having sailed on the 20th ult., about midday. By her we are supplied with intelligence five days later than that received by the royal mail steamer Britannia. The news does not, however, possess any feature of striking importance. The royal mail steamer Hibernia, which sailed from Liverpool the 4th of July with the American mails, arrived out at Boston in the remarkably short period of twelve and a half days.

Great excitement continued to prevail in Philadelphia and New York, in reference to the recent outrage in the former place between the Irish Catholics and the native Americans. Nothing further had, however, transpired; but the authorities were busily engaged in investigating the cause of the outbreak, and continued to arrest and examine every person against whom there was any evidence of having in any way participated in the disgraceful conduct.

The Canadian papers give the particulars of several collisions in the neighbourhood of Montreal and Toronto, arising out of some processions of Orangemen on the 12th of July, but it does not appear that any material damage to life or property was done.

The public mind at New York was still much excited upon the subject of Texas; various official documents having been published connected with the annexation, although an attempt had been made to suppress them. The commercial advices are unimportant. Money was abundant. Foreign exchange dull at 109¼ to 109½. Freights had improved.

IMPORTANT CONSEQUENCES OF THE FRENCH AGGRESSION AT TAHITI.

The Favourite, South Sea whaler, has arrived from Tahiti, with news a fortnight subsequent to the outrage upon Mr. Pritchard. The account brought by this vessel is that a skirmish had taken place between the French and the natives. By means of a telegraphic communication which the French have already established in the island, orders were conveyed a day or two before the Favourite left to one of the French steam-frigates then lying in the Bay of Papeete, to embark troops and proceed to Tairapu, forty miles distant, and situated at the other side of the island of Tahiti. At the time of starting she had 150 soldiers on board. This order is supposed to have been caused by an outbreak, the particulars of which, as far as could be gained, are as follow:—

"A number of the natives, who now live in encampments up the mountains since they have been expelled the town, were seated taking a quiet meal, when some Frenchmen came upon one party, consisting of two chiefs and their wives, and seized hold of the women, whom they attempted to drag on board their boat, then lying moored on the beach a short distance off. The chiefs resisted this aggression, and were immediately shot. A third chief then rose up and exclaimed, 'What! are we dogs, that we are treated thus? We are a quiet people, and wish for peace, but you will not let us have it.' Whereupon the French fired at him, but, missing their mark, he gave the signal to the natives for an onset. At the first charge 15 Frenchmen were either killed or wounded, and a second attack almost immediately taking place, between 30 and 40 more of their number were killed or disabled by the Tahitians."

Soon after this transaction had taken place, it was reported that many of the French had deserted, saying they had only been brought out to be shot at. The men generally do not seem at all contented, for they appear half-starved and are badly clothed. The regulation that no one is to be allowed out after eight o'clock at night is strictly enforced against the natives and foreigners, but the French themselves seem to pay little or no attention to this order.

Just as the Favourite was getting under weigh the crew saw the French steam-frigate return from Tairapu, but the wind being favourable for their passage, and they having been delayed a long time, they did not put back to learn whether any more fighting had taken place.

When the Favourite left, a French whaler, commanded by an American, had been detained twelve days at Tahiti, and was still there waiting for despatches for the French Government. The Favourite brought despatches to the Government at home. She had a very quick passage.

Commencement of Hostilities.—The following letter, dated Papeete, March 26, gives some important particulars, from which it will be seen that in spite of the attempts to gloss over the state of affairs, they have assumed a very serious aspect. The account, it may be added, is confirmed in its main incidents by the Emancipation, a Toulouse paper:—"Hostilities have commenced. The intrenched camp of the bay of Tairabou was attacked on the 21st inst. That day, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, two musket-shots were fired in the direction of the hill where the first advanced sentinel was placed. M. Mariani, a captain of the staff commanding the bay, sent two patrols, one of Voltigeurs, and another of seamen, to reconnoitre the ravines extending to the bay. The marines, guided by an Indian, fell into an ambuscade and received a volley of musquetry, to which they made but an indifferent return, because the weather was wet and their guns had been loaded for some days. The marines then retreated quickly under the fire of the enemy, who killed one man and wounded another. When M. Mariani heard the firing, he commanded an officer and 30 men to protect the retreat of the marines. At 5 o'clock, the same hill was again attacked by 30 men. A line of fire soon demonstrated the number of the insurgents. Their fire was returned, and 40 Voltigeurs, acting as sharpshooters, and supported by the guns of the fort, maintained a good position. A howitzer well served sent volleys of grape-shot against the different points where the firing was best supported. Moreover, the corvette Embuscade, anchored at a quarter of a league from the field of battle, directed some shot with so much effect that the enemy's fire was silenced. As it was 7 o'clock at night, it was impossible to pursue them through the ravines in which they had sought shelter. On being informed of these events, the Governor embarked on board the Phaeton steamboat, and proceeded to the place of action. Our loss has not been considerable—two killed, one carried off by the enemy, and seven wounded. The loss of the insurgents has not been ascertained, but there were found on the field five bodies. It is supposed they had 50 killed or wounded. This result, however, is far from being complete, and can have but a trifling effect upon the enemy. As the Phaeton passed along the coast on her return, throwing shells on all the houses within her reach, there were perceived with astonishment two intrenchments sufficiently capacious to shelter 200 combatants, whose heads appeared above the parapet. The more this fortification was examined, the more regular it appeared. In the midst was seen the pavilion of Queen Pomare. Some Europeans who appeared to command them came to the shore to challenge a landing. Prudence commanded that nothing should be done. We were satisfied with sending them some broadsides, which appeared not to frighten them, as they did not stir. The number of English and American adventurers amongst the insurgents is estimated at 200. They themselves are 1,200, and are well armed. They have ammunition in abundance, and four pieces of cannon. The Queen remains on board the British ship the Basilisk. She has no longer any idea of submitting, since she finds that 1,500 combatants march under her flag. The British squadron which is to exterminate us is anxiously and confidently expected by the natives. Papeete is in a state of siege, but has not been attacked. The following is an account of our force:—At Tairabou, a company of light infantry, a company of seamen, and a detachment of artillery, supported by the corvette Embuscade, armed with 30 howitzers. At Papeete, two companies of marine infantry, a company of seamen, and 75 artillerymen. In the roads, the frigates Uranie and La Charte, and the corvette La Meurthe."

Dudley Election.—Return of the Conservative Candidate.—The polling commenced on Thursday, and the result was the return of Mr. Benbow, the Conservative candidate, by a large majority. The numbers at the close of the poll were—

For Mr. Benbow 388
Mr. Rawson 175
Majority for Mr. Benbow .. .. ——213

The Birmingham Bank Robbery.—Warner, the clerk in the establishment of the Birmingham Town and District Banking Company, charged with stealing £4210, has been again brought before the magistrates of that town, and fully committed to take his trial at the ensuing Warwick assizes.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Monday.

The Books and Engravings Bill, the Militia Pay Bill and the Criminal Justice (Middlesex) Bill were read a third time and passed.

The Duke of Wellington having stated in answer to the Earl of Radnor that the Government did not intend to bring in any measure founded on the report of the Post-office Secret Committee, the latter noble earl moved the first reading of a bill to amend a portion of the existing act relative to the detention of letters. The bill was accordingly read a first time.

Some further discussion took place on the Railways Bill. Lord Wharncliffe declared that the proposed amendment of the Bishop of London respecting Sunday travelling, was impracticable, and suggested, by way of compromise, a clause requiring that when first and second class trains are run on Sundays, they shall be accompanied by third-class carriages at least once each way. Ultimately this clause was carried, and, thus qualified, the Bishop of London's amendment was adopted. The bill was then passed, subject to the adoption of the amendments by the Commons.

The State of the Navy.—Earl Minto called the attention of the house to the present state of the navy, contending that the force at the disposal of the Government was inadequate in the present position of affairs to maintain our honour and security. The noble earl deprecated any attempt to disturb peace, and said no man attached more importance to the preservation of the best understanding with France; but all the good understanding which we could cultivate must be on terms of perfect equality, and not be based upon anything like submission, or sacrifice of the interest or the honour of this country. In calling the attention of their lordships to the state of the navy, he wished to say that he, for one, was no advocate for very large naval establishments during the time of peace; but without maintaining any extravagantly large naval establishments, he was sure their lordships would go with him in thinking that there was a limit to the extent of economy which might be injurious, and to the confidence with which we might calculate upon peace, or upon the forbearance of foreign countries. After suggesting that it was impossible to look at the state of affairs on the coast of Africa without apprehension, Earl Minto thus supported his views as to the inadequate state of our navy:—He said, our whole navy, at the present moment, in line-of-battle ships, consisted of nine ships of the line. Of these nine ships of the line, two were on a very distant station—the East Indies; one was also on a very distant station—the West Indies; one, as he understood, was under orders to sail for a distant station—the Pacific. He had heard a short time ago that there were at home three ships of the line, one at each of the home ports, and that one, also a flag-ship, was the ship of the rear-admiral commanding at Cork; and the ninth ship was the Mediterranean fleet, consisting of one sail of the line. He asked their lordships whether, under any circumstances, that was a fit state of things? Could they conceive any state of things such as to make it tolerable that the Mediterranean fleet should be reduced to one ship of the line, and the power of reinforcing it also to one ship, unless we called upon the guard-ships, and left ourselves destitute of defence for the coasts of the country? To this condition he thought the navy of England ought never to be reduced. Earl Minto, after arguing that while he was at the head of the Admiralty, there was a much greater number of ships in commission, touched upon the events at Tahiti; and concluded by moving for a return of her Majesty's ships of war (other than those reserved for harbour duty) in commission, on the 31st of July, 1844; and also a return of her Majesty's ships of war present at Tahiti, from the 1st of September, 1842, to the latest period to which advices have been received, specifying the date of the arrival there and departure from thence of each ship.—The Earl of Haddington censured the Earl of Minto with making an inconvenient speech, without having a parliamentary case to justify it. This country had overwhelming means of defence available, should war arise; though our present number of ships of the line in commission was small, they were well manned; and our dockyards were busily occupied in the building of additional vessels, and in adding to the strength of our steam marine.—The Duke of Wellington defended the censure he had formerly cast on the Whig Government for making war with a peace establishment, and made the following declaration in regard to the present efficiency of our navy, and the outrage at Tahiti. The noble duke said—"I understand that ample means exist everywhere of performing the services which ought to be performed by her Majesty's navy; that is, giving protection to her Majesty's subjects wherever their commerce or other concerns may carry them. When I say given everywhere, I do not mean to advert to that recent transaction in the Pacific, carried on under circumstances protested against by this country, and disavowed by the Government of France. My lords, those who have been guilty of these eccentricities will be responsible for them to somebody, and I conclude that that responsibility will be carried into execution, and that they will be required to account for their conduct in those eccentricities. I will venture to say, and I have no doubt it will be found so when the matter comes to be examined into, that our fleet in the Pacific was, at the period at which these events occurred, sufficient to give full protection to her Majesty's subjects. My noble friend has stated what is true—that a great outrage was committed. I entertain no doubt that satisfaction will be given for that outrage, and I am sure that it is better that there should have been no naval contest there, than that there should have been any attempt made by the naval officer on the spot by a contest to prevent what has happened."—Lord Minto's motion was agreed to.

After a long and desultory discussion, the house went into committee on the Poor-law Amendment Bill pro formâ, and the committee was ordered to sit again next day. The house sat till past one o'clock in the morning.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Monday.

There was again a morning sitting to-day.

Lord Villiers entered the house soon after 12 o'clock, and having subscribed to the oaths, took his seat for Cirencester.

The Leeds Vicarage Bill was read a third time and passed.

Sir R. Peel moved the second reading of the Roman Catholic Penal Acts Repeal Bill. Some discussion arose, but as we have already explained the object of the bill, it is quite unnecessary to recur to the subject. The bill was read a second time.

The Insolvent Debtors' Bill went through committee, and some other routine business was transacted.

Mr. Hume gave notice that, early next session, if he was well, and all went right (a laugh), he would move for the appointment of a select committee to inquire whether the Royal Academy had been favourable or injurious to the progress of the fine arts in this country.

Mr. Gladstone obtained leave to bring in three bills for the consolidation of the various acts relating to public companies and the construction of railways. These are to be printed, in order to be circulated during the recess. He also, in a committee of the whole house, obtained leave for a like purpose, to bring in a bill to amend the laws relating to the support and relief, in certain cases, of merchant seamen, their widows, and children.

Lord Sandon brought up the report of the Secret Committee on the Post-office.

The house adjourned at an early hour in the evening.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Tuesday.

The royal assent was given, by commission, to a number of bills.

Address of Congratulation to her Majesty.—The Duke of Wellington, after recurring to the happy event which had that day occurred, moved, "That an humble address be presented to her Majesty, to congratulate her Majesty on the birth of another Prince, and to assure her Majesty that every increase of her illustrious family, and every addition to her Majesty's domestic happiness, affords the most unfeigned joy and satisfaction to the House of Lords." The address was unanimously agreed to.

The Spirits (Ireland) Bill, the Woods and Forests Accounts Bill, and the Grand Canal (Ireland) Bill, were read a third time and passed.

Lord Beaumont having put some questions with respect to the alleged interference of Russia with the affairs of Servia, the Earl of Aberdeen said he had not received any information to justify a belief in such interference, and expressed his doubts that any had taken place.

The Results of the Session.—The Marquis of Normanby then complained of the hurried manner in which several bills had recently been disposed of, and accused the Government of negligence in their legislative duties. He complained that the promises held out in the Queen's speech had not been fulfilled, and suggested that important business ought to be brought on early in the session. He moved for a return of the days and hours during which the house had been occupied in legislative business.—The Duke of Wellington denied that the members of the Government had neglected their duties, and said that steps had always been taken to afford any explanation of bills which were before the house.—Lord Wharncliffe combatted the idea that nothing essential had been obtained during the session. He instanced the conversion of the Three-and-a-Half per Cents., which he characterised as one of the most important measures ever sanctioned by Parliament. The noble lord referred to other bills which the Government had passed, and gave his opinion that this had been a very "fruitful session."—The Marquis of Lansdowne concurred in the complaint of Lord Normanby, and particularly dwelt upon the advantage of discussing important bills as early in the session as possible. The motion was agreed to.

The Poor-law Amendment Bill.—On the question for going into committee on the Poor-law Amendment Bill, the Bishop of Exeter urged that there was no time for the consideration of so important a bill, and thought it better to drop the measure, and take it up early in the next session of Parliament. He entered at great length on the general question of the Poor-law, pleading the rights of the poor, scripturally and constitutionally, and condemning the present system. The right reverend prelate concluded by moving the commitment of the bill that day six months.—The Duke of Wellington said the principle of the bill had been discussed for several sessions, and the object of going into committee was to insure that mitigation of the law for which the Bishop of Exeter contended.—On a division only one vote was recorded for the amendment of the Bishop of Exeter, while 17 peers voted for going into committee. The bill was then considered in committee, the discussion on which occupied the house till nearly midnight.

In answer to a question from Earl Minto, the Earl of Aberdeen denied that the late Court-martial on Lieut. Gray had been ordered at the instigation of the French Government.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Tuesday.

The house had again a morning sitting to dispose of the business, but it was of a formal description.

The Penal Acts Repeal Bill passed through committee, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer gave notice that the Government would, next session, introduce a bill to include all Irish Roman Catholic Penal Acts in the present measure.

The Lords' Amendments to the Railways Bill were agreed to, and one proviso was added, to the effect that the prices charged for conveyance on Sundays should not exceed those charged on week days.

On the motion of Sir R. Peel, an address of congratulation to her Majesty was agreed to, similar to that adopted in the House of Lords.

Several conferences with the House of Lords were held, respecting bills upon which amendments have been made.

Captain Bernal then introduced a motion for copies of any instructions given to Lord Heytesbury relative to the future disposal of church patronage in Ireland with reference to the Education Board. After a desultory debate, however, the motion was withdrawn.—The house adjourned at half-past eight.

HOUSE OF LORDS—Wednesday.

The house met to-day for a short time, but merely to advance a few bills formally.

HOUSE OF COMMONS—Wednesday.

The house, as usual, met at twelve o'clock, but the first part of the sitting was uninteresting.

Lord Palmerston took an opportunity of reviewing the whole system of foreign policy of the present Government, which he described as a system of resistance at home and concession abroad. He alluded to our cession of territory in North America—to Spain and Portugal—and proceeded to comment upon the recent events at Tahiti. The noble lord contended that Mr. Pritchard, at the period of his imprisonment, although ceasing to exercise his functions, was invested with the character of his commission as Consul, and that his position was then similar to that of an ambassador who has given up communication upon a disagreement with the Government to which he was accredited. The noble lord, although generally condemning the system of foreign policy which the present Ministry had followed, did not submit any motion.—Sir R. Peel expressed his surprise at the wide range which Lord Palmerston had taken, and denied that the Government had made any concession to foreign powers which would be injurious to this country. The right hon. baronet adverted to all the points touched upon by Lord Palmerston, except Tahiti, on which he said he had before given an opinion, and a discussion upon which, in the present posture of affairs, was not desirable.

The report on the Catholic Penal Act Bill was agreed to.

The Insolvent Debtors Bill was read a third time, after an ineffectual attempt on the part of Mr. Spooner to defer the operation of the fifty-fourth and fifty-fifth clauses till March next.

Sir J. Graham also introduced his bill for the better regulation of the medical profession, the object being to have it printed, with a view to circulation during the recess.

The house adjourned at a quarter to 8.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

The Marquis of NORMANBY presented a petition from Leeds, drawing the attention of the house to the efforts of the Protestant Missionary Society for the last 50 years in the island of Tahiti, and complaining of the violation of the law of nations by the French naval commander at the island. The petitioners had no wish for war between England and France, but they hoped the influence of the Government would be exercised to restore the independence of Tahiti. The noble marquis, in presenting the petition, took an opportunity of referring to the recent proceedings at Tahiti, and said he could not consent that peace should be preserved at the expense of national honour.—The Earl of ABERDEEN said he had very recently received assurances from the missionaries in Otaheite that they had nothing to complain of as against the French authorities. The noble earl, in reference to the case of Mr. Pritchard, denied that the Government had sacrificed the interests of the country by truckling to France. There was, he said, a party in France; but he still believed that moderation and justice on the part of both Governments would disappoint that party in France, and the enemies of peace at home.

The Poor Law Amendment Bill was read a third time and passed, two clauses moved by Lord Teynham being negatived without a division.

The house sat for some time in order to receive the consent of the Commons to several alterations made by their lordships in various bills; after which their lordships adjourned at nine o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

The house met at three o'clock.

After some discussion, the Lords' amendments to the Seamen's Hospital Bill were agreed to.

In answer to a question from Mr. WYSE, the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said, that in future he should not consent to the return of the number of stamps issued to each newspaper, but the total number of stamps would of course be returned as usual.

Some further questions were put by Captain PECHELL upon the subject of Captain Warner's recent experiments. He said he had received a model of a vessel from Shoreham, the port from which the ship destroyed by Capt. Warner had sailed; and from that it appeared the ship had ropes fitted on board her, fastened from stem to stern, and that after the process it appeared that from 150 to 200 fathoms of line had been thrown overboard from the steam-vessel, showing that a direct communication had been established between the steam-vessel and the ship.—Sir R. PEEL gave no information upon this point, but said he would not give £400,000, or even £100,000, for the blowing up of a vessel, without having that vessel pretty closely examined beforehand—(Laughter)—but he again repeated, that he did not mean to insinuate that there had been any unfair proceeding on the part of Captain Warner.

The Roman Catholic Penal Acts Relief Bill was read a third time and passed.

Leave was given to Sir JAMES GRAHAM to bring in a bill for the alteration of the Law of Settlement, the provisions of which he explained at considerable length. The main principle of the measure is that of making birth—and birth only—the fouudation of the claim of settlement, thus doing away with the intricate legislation on this subject, which has caused so much litigation.

The remainder of the evening was occupied with routine business, and the house rose at nine o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY.

The royal assent was given by commission to various bills, among which was the Insolvent Debtors' Bill, which abolishes imprisonment for debt for sums under £20.

The Common Law Courts (Ireland) Bill was read a third time and passed, after a long discussion.

An address to her Majesty was adopted, praying that the New Houses of Parliament may be proceeded with as soon as possible.

Some further discussion took place upon unimportant topics, and the house adjourned at eight o'clock, until Monday, the 2nd of September.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FRIDAY.

The house met at four o'clock.

ADJOURNMENT OF THE HOUSE.—Sir R. PEEL moved the adjournment of the house till Thursday, the 5th of September. This motion afforded the opportunity of raising a desultory discussion upon the events of the session. In the course of it Lord J. RUSSELL called upon the Government to put down agitation in Ireland, by releasing O'Connell, and referred, at some length, to the state of Ireland.—Sir R. PEEL replied, and adverted to the various measures which the Government had passed. Ultimately, the motion of adjournment till the 5th of September was carried, and after some formal business was transacted, the house broke up.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE FLEETS IN THE MEDITERRANEAN.

A letter from Gibraltar, dated the 27th ult., gives the following interesting information respecting the movements of the Prince de Joinville's squadron, and the state of affairs at Tangier. The Prince de Joinville having received what he considered an evasive answer from the Emperor of Morocco, entered the bay of Tangier on the 23rd, in the Phare war steamer, and having got off his Consul, with a secretary and a few others, on the plea, it is said, of there being a fête on board, on occasion of the christening of the secretary's child, informed the other Consuls and the Moorish Governor that at the end of twenty-four hours he would proceed to take the place. It appears that he was induced, by the representations of the different Consuls, as it is stated, to postpone operations; but vessels of all kinds have been since bringing over Christian and Jewish families, who embarked in the utmost consternation, many leaving behind property of considerable value. Our Consul-General in Morocco, Mr. Hay, has not yet arrived, and it is pretty certain that unless his efforts with the Emperor are successful in inducing the latter to agree to the proposals of the French Government steps will be taken which must be very embarrassing to our Government.

The Hecla, British war steamer, arrived in the course of last night, bringing for the second time a batch of unfortunate fugitives. This vessel is going back again, taking Mr. Murray, British Vice-Consul at Tangier, who came over to communicate with the admiral, explain matters, and forward despatches to Lord Aberdeen.

Considering the uncivilized masses at Tangier and at its walls, there can be no doubt of the propriety of all the Consuls having left Tangier, and getting on board the ships in the bay. Mrs. Hay, the Consul's lady, went on board the Hecla, but was received on board a Danish man of war, on the departure of that steamer for Gibraltar, but as the wind became favourable for the Warspite, that frigate, which had been prevented for the last three days by contrary winds from getting to Tangier, no doubt got there early yesterday, and Mrs. Hay would, no doubt, be received on board.

At 11 o'clock to-day the Albion got under sail for Tangier, and will be anchored there.

Though things wear so formidable an aspect, the British Vice-Consul at Tangier, says that he has still some very good grounds for expecting that matters will be settled. At any of the Moorish towns on the coast it will, with the Prince Joinville, be a simple matter of veni, vidi, vici, the means of defence are so wretched. This morning the only French force in the bay of Tangier was a war steamer or two. Our force remaining here this evening was the Caledonia and the Formidable flag-ship.

A later letter (of the 29th ult.) says the Hecla has returned from Tangier. All was then quiet, the different consuls or vice-consuls being embarked. Our Consul-General (Mr. Hay) had not arrived from Morocco: some reports stated that he had been left very ill on the road by which he followed the Emperor on his way to Rabat, where it is now confidently stated the latter has arrived.

The Warspite saluted on her arriving at Tangier three days ago; the salute was returned, and there was a good feeling towards the English at that place.

There are no particular accounts from the Prince de Joinville. We are assured that the despatches to him from General Bugeaud are calculated to contribute greatly to keep down his Royal Highness's rage for war.

This morning there was only one French brig in Tangier bay. The Spaniards have a 52-gun frigate there, two brigs, and a steamer.

Rear Admiral William Bowles, C.B., has left the Admiralty for a short time, on a visit to Perthshire.

We have to announce the restoration of Col. Hon. H. Dundas to active service, in his appointment to the lieutenant-colonelcy of the 60th Foot, vice Lieut. Col. Trevelyan, who has exchanged. It will be recollected that the Hon. H. Dundas was removed from the command of the 83rd, in consequence of some indiscreet observations at the dinner table, of which an ungenerous advantage was taken. The 60th embarks this month for service in India.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

THE CASE OF MR. DYCE SOMBRE.—The Lord Chancellor gave judgment on Thursday morning, in the Court of Chancery, in this case. His lordship went over the evidence very elaborately. He said, this was a petition to supersede the commission of lunacy issued against Mr. Dyce Sombre. It had been ably argued at very great length. There were two main questions to be decided, namely:—First, whether Mr. Dyce Sombre was of unsound mind at the time the commission issued; and, secondly, if that gentleman was of unsound mind at that period, whether or not he was at the present moment in a sane state of mind, and able to manage himself and his affairs. The noble and learned lord then adverted to the birth, education, and history of Mr. Dyce Sombre, as detailed in evidence. His lordship concluded by stating that he felt it his duty not to grant the prayer of the petition. The commission for the present must continue. He saw no objection, however, for Mr. Dyce Sombre to go to Paris if he wished, provided he would consent to allow some competent person to attend him.

PUNISHMENT OF A FRAUDULENT INSOLVENT.—At the Insolvent Debtors' Court, a long inquiry has taken place into the case of Simon Davis, a Jew, who had been an extensive tailor and draper in Church-street, Whitechapel. The disclosures made were of a very painful and extraordinary character. The complaint was, that the insolvent had concealed or otherwise made away with property, consisting of stock in trade, which he had obtained from his creditors, to an extent of upwards of £2000. For years the insolvent had carried on business in Whitechapel, and in 1842 he commenced a career which resulted in his present appearance. His debts were now £4756 6s., all contracted in the short period of seven months, and his debtors owed him £501, which sum could not be recovered. In April of the year mentioned a fire occurred on the premises in Church-street, and from that period, when he obtained a sum from the Sun Fire Office, to the end of September following, he had obtained the goods which formed the principal portion of his debts; having in September and October of that year obtained somewhere about £2000 worth of property from his creditors. Taking into consideration these facts, the judgment of the Court was, that the insolvent should be remanded from the vesting order (June last) for a period of two years, for a fraudulent disposition of property.

ASSIZE INTELLIGENCE.

APPALLING MURDERS BY A RELIGIOUS ENTHUSIAST.—At the Norfolk assizes, held at Norwich, James Frost, a man of about 33 years of age, was charged with the wilful murder of Harriet Frost on the 8th of April. When called on to plead to the indictment, he said guilty enough in the eyes of the world, but not of God. The following is a summary of the painful facts disclosed by the evidence:—In early life the prisoner became attached to the Primitive Methodists, and before he had attained to manhood, and before he could read or write, was distinguished among that sect by the zeal and energy of his religious tone and feeling. In the course of a short time he took a decided lead among the congregation, and was esteemed a "powerful preacher." He was esteemed by all who knew him and thought with him. Some of his fellow-workmen devised a scheme to shame him. On one unlucky evening they seduced him into a debauch, and drugging his beer, succeeded in making him completely drunk. The scandal which this affair entailed on his religious pursuits resulted in his dismissal from the pulpit, and he was no longer allowed to preach. This circumstance weighed on his mind and spirits, and deeply oppressed him. He became moody, sullen, and reserved. Soon after this he married, but fell sick of typhus fever, and for seven weeks he was out of his mind. His love for his young wife changed to loathing. He subsequently, however, became more himself, and in this state of things the prisoner's family, consisting of three little girls, grew up around him, and about ten weeks before the 8th of April his wife bore him a fourth. Notwithstanding his "delusions" he was a fond and affectionate husband. On the day in question his wife found him sitting moodily by the fire. Not being able to ascertain from him what had become of the children, the thought suddenly struck her that some mischief had happened to one of them. She accordingly rushed up stairs, where a most dreadful spectacle assailed her. On the floor were the lifeless bodies of the two eldest girls, smeared with blood, which thickly sprinkled the boards. A wild shriek called to her assistance her neighbours, and the house was speedily filled with anxious friends. To none of these would the prisoner give a word by way of answer or explanation, but doggedly preserved a gloomy silence. The truth, however, was soon ascertained in all its horrid reality, for in the pantry was found the mangled corpse of the third child, while in a jug of water, into which it had been forcibly crammed head foremost, was the poor little infant, all four of the children having been thus cruelly murdered, in the course of ten short minutes by their father. A policeman coming in soon after, discovered the bloody hammer in the pantry, with which the desperate man had literally smashed the skulls of his three eldest children. When his master came in he said to him, when asked whether he had thus butchered his innocent children under an idea that he would get them to Heaven, that "he hoped so," and admitted that he had accomplished their death with the hammer. On this he was taken to a neighbouring public-house, whence, after the inquest, which terminated in verdicts of "Wilful murder," he was removed to Norwich Castle. When parting with his friends, who were all in tears, he assumed a look and attitude of joy, and sung, "Glory be to God. My sins are forgiven me, and I shall go to Heaven." On his way to the castle, he sung snatches of hymns and psalms, one of which the policeman described as being "most appropriate to his situation." He also seemed rather to glory in the deed, than to feel either regret or repugnance for his conduct, chiding his wife for "going on so," and endeavouring to reconcile her to the loss of her children by the reflection that "they were now happy, and in glory, where they would both be also."—The evidence of these facts left no doubt of the insanity of the prisoner, who was acquitted on that ground.

MURDER FROM JEALOUSY.—At the Bodmin assizes, Matthew Weeks was tried for the wilful murder of Charlotte Dymond, in the parish of Davidstowe, Cornwall. The prisoner, who is only 22 years of age, looked very sullen and dogged. The evidence proved that the prisoner and the deceased were fellow-servants at a Mrs. Peters's, at Penhall Farm, in the parish of Davidstowe. The deceased was about eighteen years of age, and was possessed of considerable personal attractions. She and the prisoner had kept company for some time, and there was reason to believe that he was jealous of her, particularly with regard to a young man named Thomas Prout, who had called at Mrs. Peters's on the morning deceased was killed, and had made an appointment to meet her that night at chapel. It did not appear conclusively whether the prisoner had overheard this conversation or not, but there was reason to believe that he had. In the afternoon the prisoner and the deceased came down stairs together, when the deceased, addressing Mrs. Peters, said, that she should not be at home at milking time, but Matthew (the prisoner) would. They then went away together, with every appearance of the most friendly feeling. Mrs. Peters saw nothing more of either of them until half-past nine, when the prisoner returned alone, without the deceased. About a mile from Penhall Farm are the Davidstowe Moors, a wild and desolate track, seldom crossed by persons on a Sunday. A farmer, named Cory, who knew the deceased and the prisoner perfectly well, and who had some fields out by this moor, happened to be there on the Sunday afternoon in question, for the purpose of looking after some wheat. He saw the prisoner and deceased proceed along the road to a place called the Higher Down Gate, which led to the moor, and they were subsequently seen together by another farmer. When the poor girl was missed the prisoner denied all knowledge of her, but on the following Wednesday her murdered body was found in the moor, and when the prisoner's clothes were examined, marks of blood were found upon them in several places. The jury returned a verdict of "guilty." The learned judge, much affected, sentenced the prisoner to death. Weeks subsequently admitted that he was guilty, but says it was not a premeditated act. On hearing his sentence he fainted away, and was so removed from the dock.

THE WEDNESBURY MURDER.—At the Stafford assizes, William Beard was indicted for the murder of Ann Griffiths. The evidence given on the trial was very lengthy, but it is only necessary to recapitulate the main incidents, as our readers will, no doubt, recollect the details which were published when the murder took place in March last. The deceased was housekeeper to Mr. J. Crowther, of Wednesbury, and had been left alone on the premises in the absence of her master, who was a single man. The object of the prisoner was plunder, and having formerly been in the service of Mr. Crowther, he was well acquainted with the premises and the habits of their occupants. On Mr. Crowther's return he went up to the room occupied by the deceased, to see if she was there, and was surprised to find the bed unmade, and her boxes about the room. He then went down again into the kitchen, and thence into the brewhouse, where the first object that met his eyes was the murdered body of his housekeeper. The unfortunate woman lay on the floor, which was covered with blood, and which appeared to have been trampled all about the brewhouse. Her hair was very much dishevelled, and had blood upon it, and a bloody knife lay at a very short distance from the body. At least ten wounds had been inflicted on her head with a hammer, which was usually kept in the brewhouse, and there were other circumstances which led to the conclusion that she had offered some resistance to the savage, whoever it was, who perpetrated this dreadful deed. The evidence left no reasonable doubt of the prisoner's guilt, and the jury having returned a verdict to that effect, the learned judge passed upon him the awful sentence of death. At the close of the sentence the prisoner, who had remained apparently quite unmoved during its delivery, exclaimed, in a very determined tone, "My lord, I have been found guilty, but I am as innocent as a child!" On leaving the bar, he struck his hand forcibly on the railing, and added, "I am as innocent as a child, if I was to die this moment." The prisoner was then removed by the officers of the gaol. Beard has since confessed the crime. His execution will take place on Saturday next, the 17th instant.

A WIFE MURDERED BY HER HUSBAND.—At the assizes at Newcastle-upon-Tyne, on Saturday last, Mark Sherwood, a grey-haired man above the middle age, and whose face bore traces of habitual indulgence in spirituous liquors, was found guilty of the wilful murder of his wife, Ann Sherwood, on the 14th of March last, by cutting her throat. It was proved that the crime was committed while the prisoner was in a state of intoxication, and that during a quarrel the deceased had provoked him as much as possible. Sentence of death was passed on the prisoner in the usual form.

IMPORTANT CONVICTION OF A FRAUDULENT BANKRUPT.—At the Norwich assizes, on Monday, William Browne Cockrell was found guilty on the charge that he, being a trader, became bankrupt on the 2d of November last, and that within three months preceding his bankruptcy he did, under colour and pretence of carrying on business in the ordinary course of trade, obtain on credit divers goods and chattels from various persons (whose names were set forth in the indictment) with intent to defraud them of the same. It appeared that the prisoner sold the whole or the greater part of the property (cattle) within a day or two of the respective purchases at prices far below those which he had agreed to pay for them, in some instances at 20 per cent. below those prices. He was sentenced to six months imprisonment.

THE LATE ASCOT RACES.—THE COLT BLOODSTONE.—A feigned issue has been tried at Guildford, Herbert v. Day, to ascertain whether the plaintiff, the owner of the colt called Bloodstone, or the defendant, the owner of a horse named Old England, was entitled to certain stakes run for at the last Ascot Races. The trial lasted two days, but as the evidence turned chiefly upon the exact pedigree of the colt, and the time when it was foaled, and scarcely disclosed any other point of interest, we think it unnecessary to go into detail, particularly after the turn which the case took. Mr. Sergeant Channell, who appeared for the plaintiff, stated that his client was an attorney, and the defendant a trainer of horses, and then mentioned the nature of the testimony which he should adduce to prove that the colt which ran the race was foaled in 1842, that its sire was Bubastes, and its dam a mare called Romaike. On the part of the defendant the case was, that the horse which won the race was the Beiram colt, foaled in 1841, and not the Bubastes. Previous to the commencement of the case, the jury went to look at both the horses. The following evidence on the part of the defendant settled the case:—Henry Bell: I rode Bloodstone at Ascot. Before the race I saw Mr. J. Morrison, and he told me to ride him a quarter of a mile and then pull him up, for he would not have him win on no account. I told this before the race to Captain Rous and Colonel Wyndham's training groom, and consulted them what to do, and they told me to win. (A laugh.) I did win. (Renewed laughter.) I had no difficulty to win. I won in a canter. (Laughter.)—Cross-examined: I believe the horse had fell lame on the day before. I was riding him a gallop at the time. A mare named Cassoneer ran with me, but I don't know whether she hurt herself.—Mr. Platt: Did she gallop with you the day before?—Witness: Yes.—Mr. Platt: Did she beat you in your gallop the day before?—Witness: Yes, by sufferance. (Laughter.)—Lord Stradbroke: I am one of the stewards of Ascot Races, and was present when Bloodstone beat Old England. A complaint was made that Bloodstone was more than two years old, and the stewards sent for Mr. Field, the veterinary surgeon, from London, and another gentleman named Perry, from Reading. When Mr. Field examined the horse he immediately pronounced him to be three years old, and gave a certificate to that effect. Mr. Parry gave a similar certificate.—Mr. Field corroborated this statement, and the jury said they were satisfied.—The foreman of the jury said they were of opinion that Mr. Herbert might have been deceived.—Mr. Platt (who was for the defendant): We believe that to be the case.—Baron Parke expressed his opinion that the jury could come to no other conclusion. The history of the case probably was, that it was the small miserable colt which died, and the other was put in its place.—The jury then returned a verdict for defendant.

BREACH OF PROMISE OF MARRIAGE.—At the same assizes, an action was tried, Roberts v. Denham, for a breach of promise of marriage. The plaintiff, Miss Melville Roberts, a very respectable young lady, had been a governess in the family of a gentleman named Evans, and went with them to Malta. It was on the passage that an acquaintance was formed with the defendant, an officer in the East India Company. The promise of marriage was proved, but subsequently, he sent a letter in which he stated that he had lost much money at horse-racing and the gaming-table, and must go to China to economise. Within a month afterwards, however, he was married to another lady. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, damages £800.

BILL TRANSACTIONS.—At these assizes the case of Parry v. Lord C. Fitzroy, which was an action to recover a sum of £1000 on a bill of exchange, was tried. The circumstances were detailed very recently in the police reports. The jury, under Mr. Baron Gurney's direction, found a verdict for the plaintiff for £1012, the amount of the bill and interest.—Sergeant Gazelee applied for immediate execution.—Baron Gurney: No, I think not. You have got 25 per cent. interest, and you can afford to wait a little while for your money.

The case of Cooke v. Fitzroy, which was a similar case, had the same result.

INCENDIARISM IN NORFOLK.—The Norwich assizes terminated on Monday. In the course of the day four prisoners, English, Fary, Powing, and Potter, were placed at the bar to receive sentence for the crime of arson, of which the three first had severally been found guilty, the last having pleaded guilty. Mr. Justice Williams sentenced English to fifteen years' transportation, and the other prisoners to terms of imprisonment varying from three months to two years, according to the peculiar features of the case.

THE QUI TAM ACTIONS.—RUSSELL V. LORD G. BENTINCK.—This action, which, of course, excited a good deal of interest from the recent parliamentary proceedings, was tried at Guildford on Thursday. It appeared from the pleadings that the plaintiff was Charles Henry Russell, and William George Fred. Scott Bentinck, Esq., commonly called Lord George Bentinck, was the defendant. The declaration stated that one John Day did, on the 31st of May, 1843, by unlawfully betting on a horse, lose the sum of £3000 to the defendant, and that he paid that sum over to him, and that he did not within the period of three months sue the said defendant for the recovery of the money which he had so lost, and that, therefore, the plaintiff was entitled to sue and recover from the defendant the said sum of £3000, and treble the amount, making altogether £12,000. The declaration also stated that one Henry Hill had lost the sum of £3000 to the defendant, and had paid him that amount. The plea put on the record by the defendant was the general issue. Mr. Baron Parke gave his opinion that the act of Parliament was an answer to the case, and barred all proceedings, but as it was stated that the defendant had no desire to avail himself of the act, the learned judge said he would try the case, and reserve the question of law if necessary. Several witnesses were examined, including Mr. Day, Mr. Hill, and Mr. Gully, but the plaintiff could not prove his case, and the jury gave averdict for the defendant.

POLICE.

THE ATTEMPTED MURDER AND SUICIDE AT WANDSWORTH.—Monday was fixed for the examination, at the Wandsworth Police-office, of Amelia Alferry, the young woman who, on Monday, the 29th ult., attempted the murder of her two children and self-destruction, on Wandsworth-common. The prisoner is about 27 years of age, she was deadly pale, very weak, and had a vacant look. The children, one a girl six years of age, and the other a noble-looking boy about four years old, were also brought into court. The charge, as entered on the sheet against the prisoner, was as follows:—"Amelia Alferry, aged 27, single woman, charged with assaulting her children, Mary Ann, aged six years, and Henry, aged four years, with intent to murder them, by drowning, and also with attempting to commit suicide at the same time, to wit, on the 29th of July last."—William Alferry, a lad about 14 years of age, was sworn, and stated, "I live near the White Horse, Water-side, Wandsworth, and am brother to the prisoner. On Monday evening, the 29th of July, between five and six o'clock, I was crossing Wandsworth-common, when I saw my sister sitting on the island near Mr. Wilson's; she had her two children with her; their names are Henry and Mary Ann French. I wished her to go home; she said, 'You can go home—I'm coming presently.' I went home alone, but came back shortly afterwards to play at cricket. My sister was still sitting on the island, and the children were playing near her; she called them to her and said, 'We'll go home.' She then drew them to her, left the bench on which she had been sitting, walked to the water's edge and jumped in with them. The part into which the prisoner jumped is called the 'Black Sea.' I went in after the children and held their heads up to prevent them from drowning. I halloed for help, and kept the little children up until Mr. Steers came, and he walked into the pond and took the children out. Mr. Steers afterwards got my sister out with a great deal of trouble, and laid her upon the grass. Prisoner had said nothing to me before she went into the water about drowning her children or herself. I do not know whether she went into the pond by accident. It was in her way home."—Mr. Burrell asked the prisoner if she had anything to say?—The prisoner, in a faint voice, said "No more than that it was trouble that caused me to do so."—The prisoner was remanded till the next day.—On Tuesday the prisoner was again brought up. After several witnesses had been examined, Mr. Clive asked her if she had anything to say? The prisoner, in a low voice, uttered the words, "No further than it is trouble." The various witnesses were then bound over to prosecute. Mr. Clive then informed the prisoner it was his duty to commit her for trial, but she would be allowed to see her children.

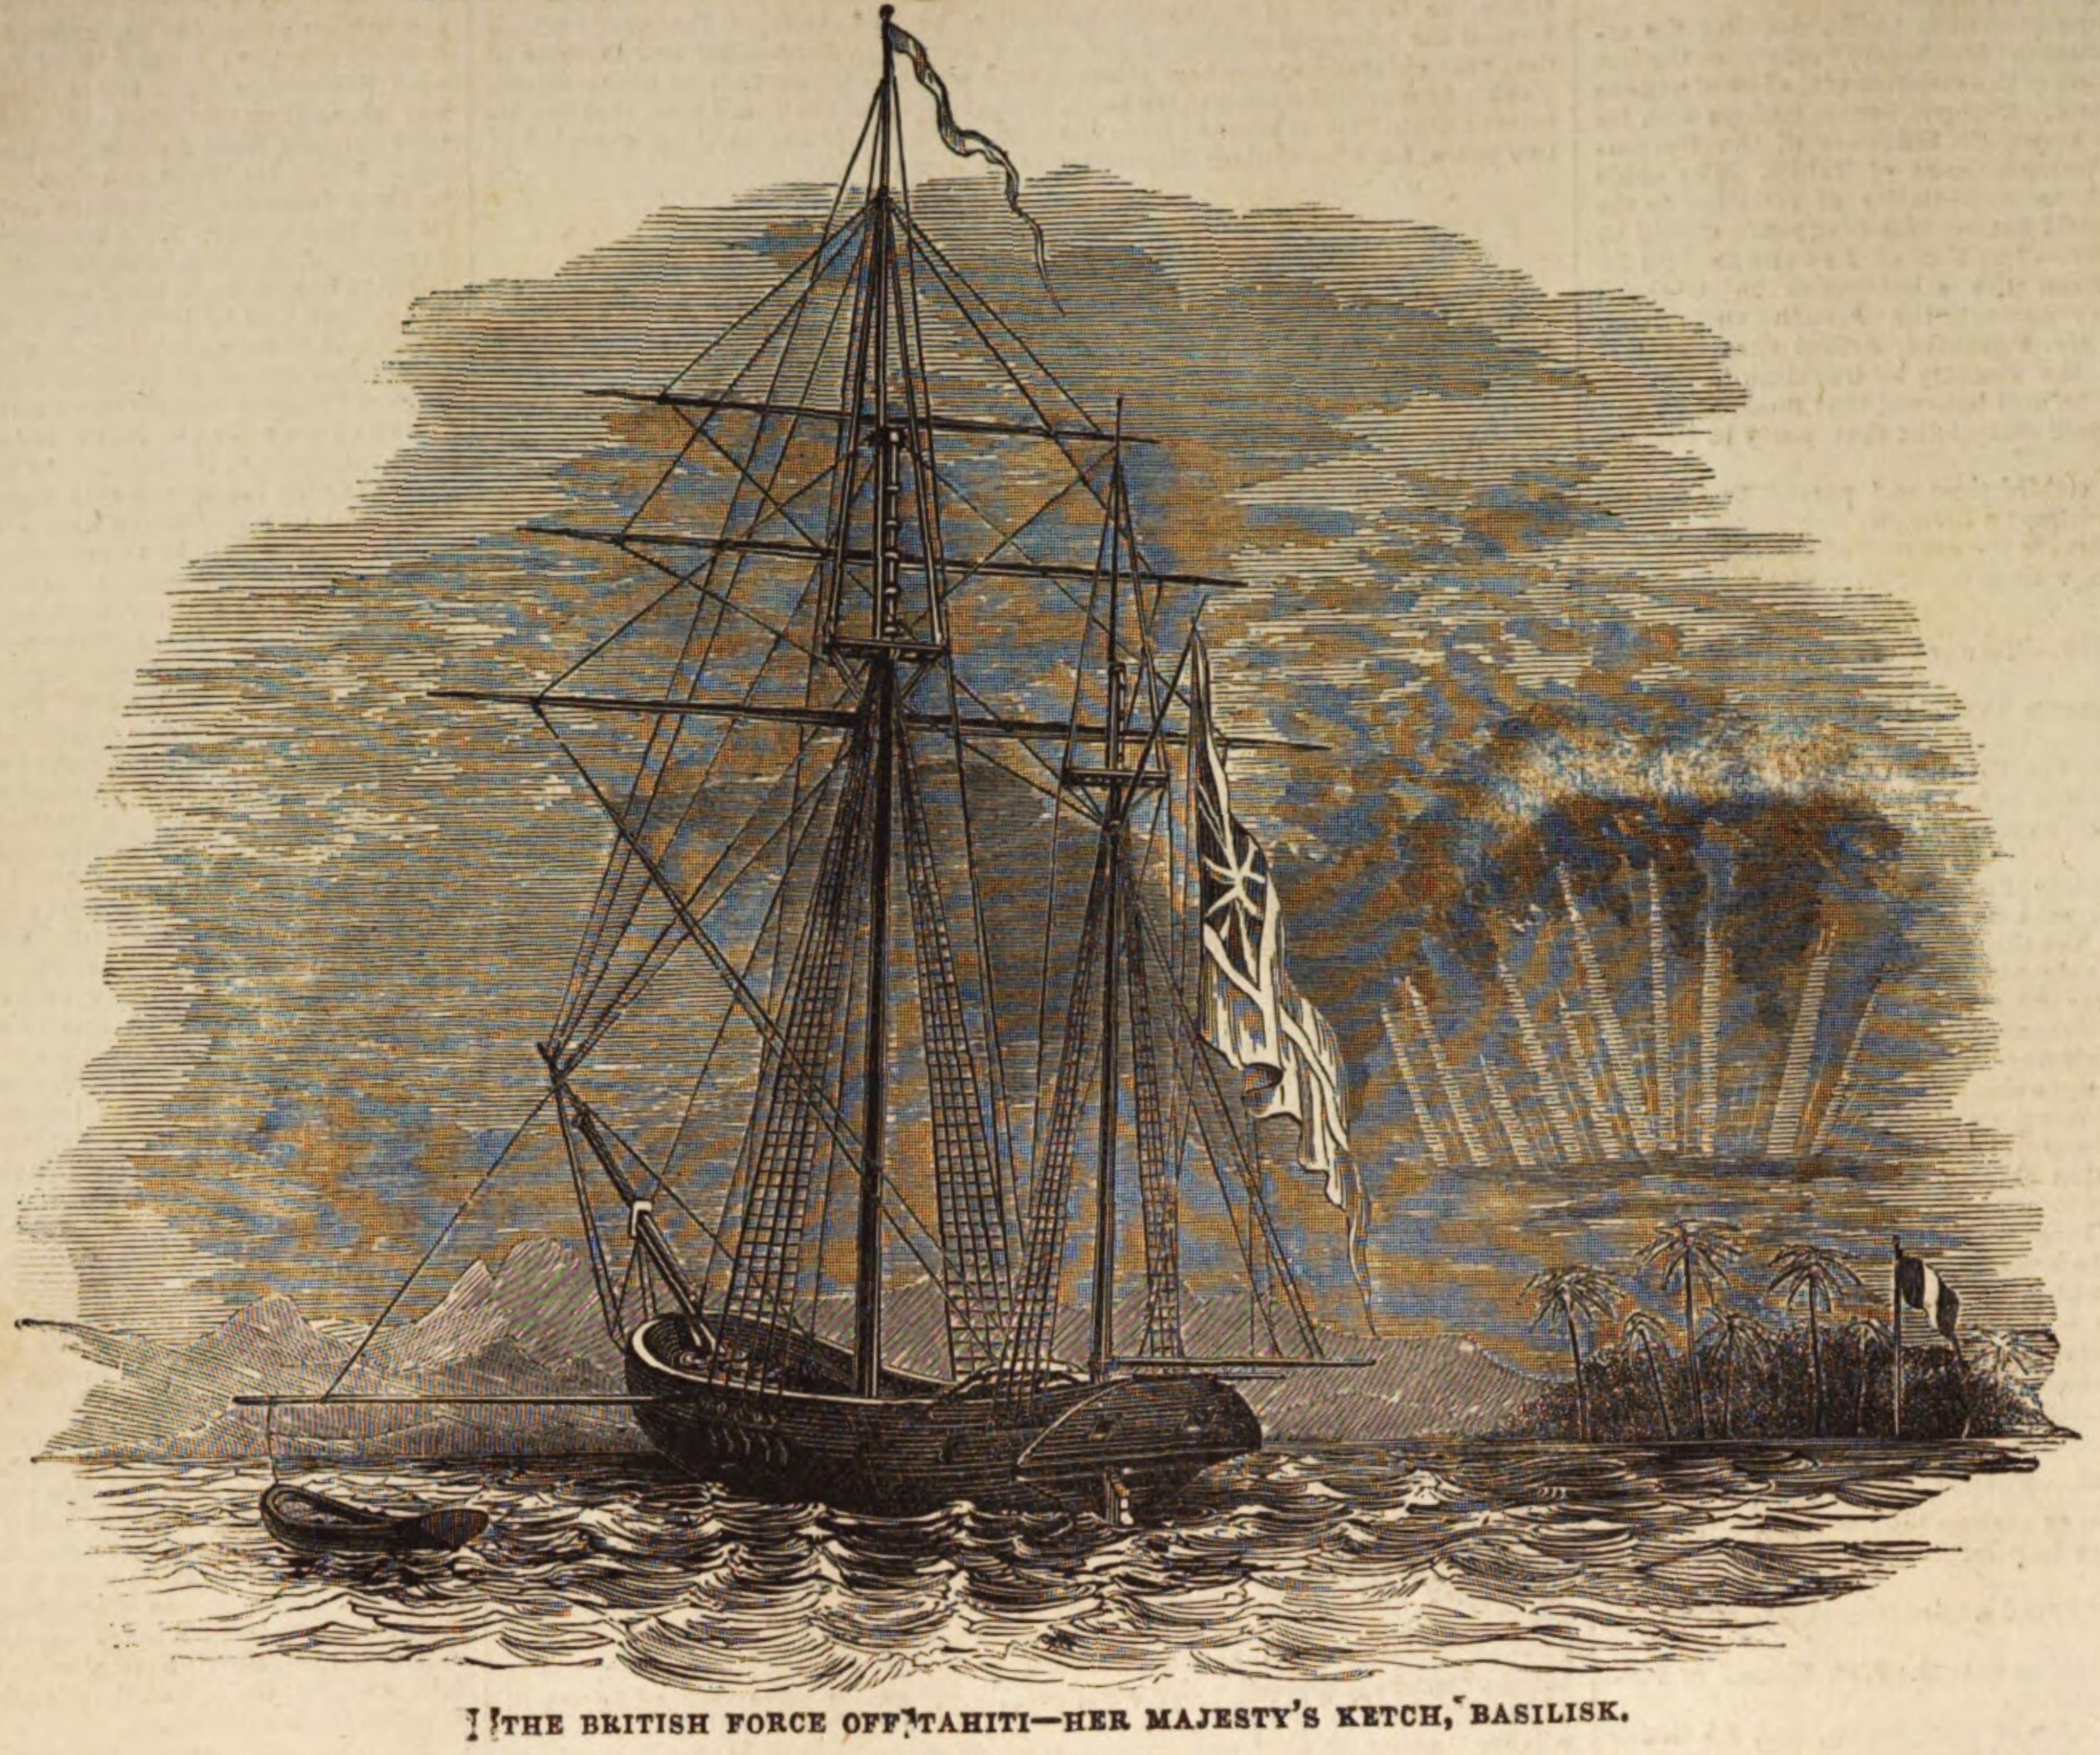
THE LATE POISONING CASE AT STEPNEY.—COMMITTAL OF MR. BELANEY.—At the Thames Police-court on Wednesday, after the unusually long remand of six weeks, Mr. James Cockburn Belaney, surgeon, was brought up for final examination, charged with the wilful murder of Rachael Belaney, his wife, by administering to her a quantity of prussic acid, at Stepney, on the 8th of June last. The prisoner was attired in deep mourning, and appeared haggard, and much thinner than he was on the last occasion, the effects, probably, of his long confinement. He bowed respectfully to the bench on being placed in the felons' dock. The court was excessively crowded, and a number of ladies were present. Mr. Reynolds, who appeared on the part of the Crown, said he did not intend to offer any further evidence against the prisoner, as he considered that which had already been given was quite sufficient to justify the magistrate in sending the prisoner before another tribunal. The coroner's jury had already returned a verdict of wilful murder against the prisoner, and the warrant for his committal was made out. He now prayed that the prisoner be forthwith committed for trial. Mr. Clarkson, who defended the prisoner, applied to Mr. Broderip, the magistrate, for a remand to Clerkenwell prison, on the ground that the prisoner would there have better facilities for seeing his friends and legal advisers. After a long discussion, however, Mr. Broderip declined the request, and committed the prisoner to Newgate for trial. Mr. Clarkson submitted that the papers in the possession of Sergeant M'Cardell, who had apprehended the prisoner, ought to be restored. M'Cardell said he had taken one letter and a bottle of poison (acetate of morphine) from the prisoner, and he had sent them to the solicitor of the Treasury. Mr. Reynolds assured Mr. Humphreys, the letter, which was of no importance, should be delivered to him.

IRELAND.

DIABOLICAL ATTEMPT AT MURDER.—On Thursday week a most diabolical attempt was made on the life of Edward Parker, Esq., of Lisaniskea. Mr. Parker had been at the fair of Nenagh, and left for home about three o'clock. When he reached within about a mile of his own house, he was waylaid by an armed ruffian, who fired at him with deliberate aim, lodging twenty slugs in his back, and also wounding the boy who drove the jaunting-car. The assassin paused a moment, as if to gloat over his diabolical deed before he fled. Mr. Parker, though thus wounded, seized his pistols, and aimed twice at the sanguinary miscreant, but unfortunately both pistols missed fire. Though very seriously wounded, Mr. Parker is not in imminent danger. The boy's wound, it is feared, will prove mortal. The amiable lady and daughter of Neil Quin, Esq., M.D., Nenagh, were in the jaunting-car at the time of the attack, and had a narrow escape. A short time since Mr. Parker was served with a threatening notice, and his steward was nearly killed by a savage attack on him by a gang of miscreants."

A FATHER TRIED FOR THE MURDER OF HIS TWO CHILDREN.—At the Galway assizes, Peter Larkin, an old man of 60, was tried for the wilful murder of his two children, Bernard and Martin Larkin, at Shanaglish, in that county, in the month of June last. A daughter of the prisoner proved that Bernard Larkin had been killed by him with a razor. The boy was about 15. The father murdered him with a razor. The witness proceeded to depose as follows:—Martin was asleep at the time Bernard was cut across his throat. I saw the razor with which it was done in my father's hand. I saw my father do this dreadful act. When my brother received the cut he awoke. I do not know how long he lived afterwards. I am sure he did not live long. I called my mother up out of bed. I was cut with the razor by my father, and that aroused me from sleep. I strove to save myself and ran away. When I called my mother she got up and ran down stairs, where she remained. Bernard got out of the bed and went into another room, in which he died. Bernard was my elder brother. I had another brother in the house at the time; he killed him also, and in the same way, and at the same time as my brother Bernard. He showed the same affection towards him as to Bernard, and only he was out of his mind he would not do it. They were the only children besides myself he had living.—Several other witnesses were examined, including James Geraghty, who described the horrible appearance of the children when he entered the house. The witness added—"I asked the prisoner why he had killed his children, and he said that he thought he was doing the finest work in the world. That he knew he himself would not be long in this life, and that he was sure he was sending the children to heaven. Both the boys were dead at the time I went in."—The jury found a verdict of "Not Guilty," on the ground of insanity.

THE LATE EVENTS AT TAHITI.



THE BRITISH FORCE OFF TAHITI—HER MAJESTY'S KETCH, BASILISK.

In another part of our journal will be found narrated the principal intelligence of these outrageous proceedings, received during the past week.

We are now enabled to illustrate, in detail, the principal stages of the affair, as related in our journal of last week.

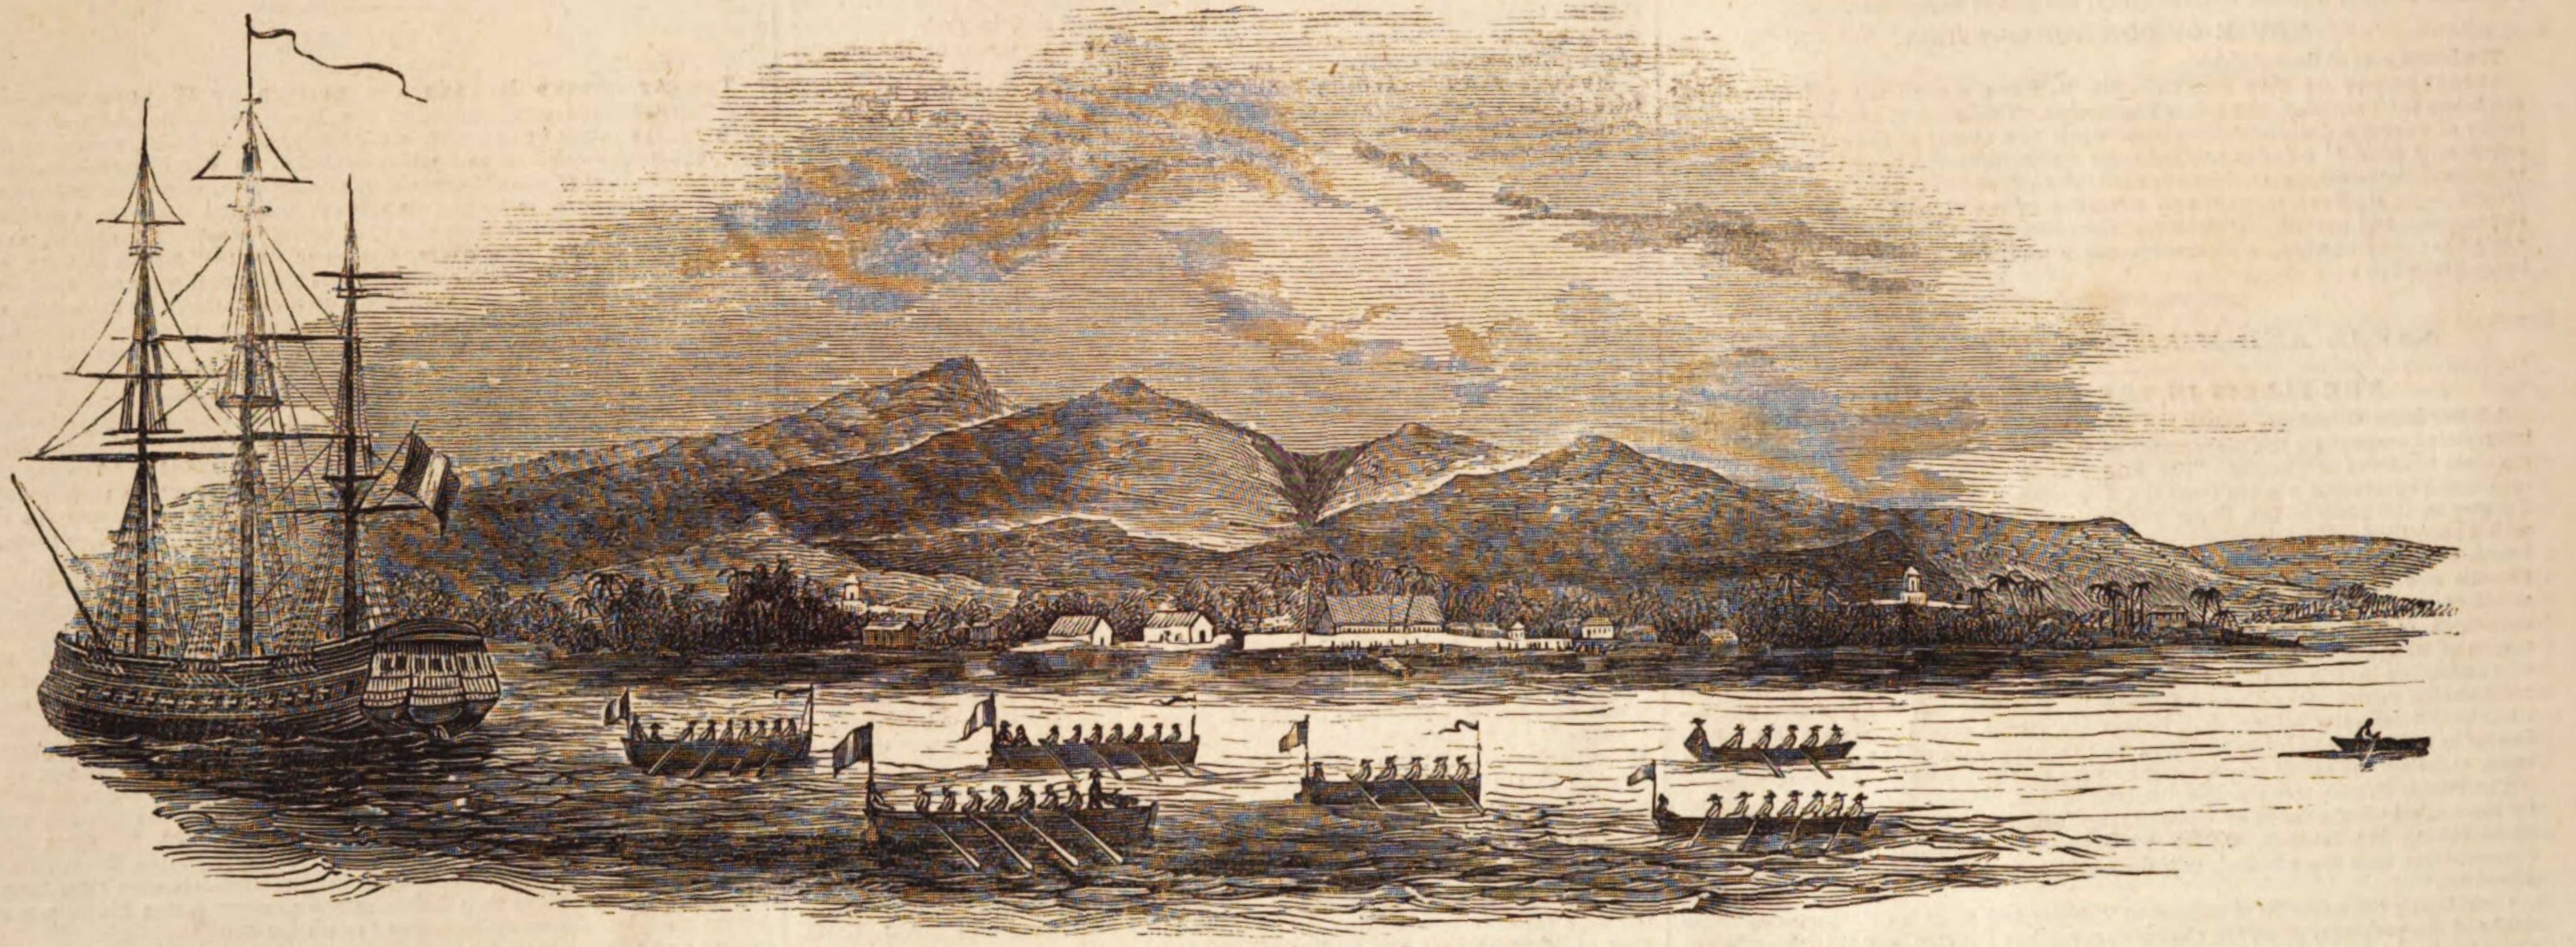
The first engraving shows her Majesty's ketch, 200 tons, commanded by Lieutenant Hunt, on board which vessel Queen Pomare took refuge, on her being apprised that it was intended to seize her and place her eldest son (a boy about seven years old) on a nominal throne, governed by a French Regency. Pomare has resided for several weeks on board this littl vessel, not being permitted to land. To this "donkey frigato or ketch," the Earl of Minto stated, in the House of Lords, on Monday evening, has been confided our honour and interests at Tahiti, after the withdrawal of the Vindictive and the Dublin, and at the precise moment when the French played off their recent "eccentricities," as the Duke of Wellington designated them on Monday night.

The French version of this portion of the affair is, that the police having arrested the bearer of a letter which compromised Queen Pomare and Mr. Pritchard, "The moment the Queen heard that her intrigues had been detected, she ran terrified to her neighbour, the British Consul, and after a short conversation with him, it was resolved that she should repair on board the Basilisk, English war schooner, which had occupied the station since the recall of the Dublin, on the 17th of January, placing herself under the protection of the British flag, which was immediately done—that is on the 31st of January. Her whole family followed her. On the 1st of February, the Governor sent M. Malmanche, the chief of his staff, to inform the English commander that the French Government would regard as an act of hostility the re-landing of the ex-Queen Pomare on any point of the Society Islands."

Again, date March 26: "The Queen remains on board the British ship, the Basilisk. She has no longer any idea of submitting, since she finds that 1500 combatants march under her flag." It should, however, be added that the Earl of Aberdeen stated in the House of Lords, on Friday, the 2nd instant, his belief that "about the present time, and not before, Queen Pomare would be restored. It was in March last, that the French Government repudiated the acts of their officers at Tahiti, and as he had just received accounts from Tahiti, dated in March, it was probable that about this time, and not before, the instructions of the French Government would reach its officers in the Southern Seas. Queen Pomare would then be immediately restored, not to all her rights, but to the same position in which she was placed under the former Protectorate."

The second engraving shows the blockade of Tahiti by the French, and Paofai, in the harbour of Papeete, with six French boats in pursuit of a canoe, which had ventured to quit the island without leave. The chase was hot and strong, and the refractory Tahitian was not caught until he had made great portion of the circuit of the island! The affair reminds one of Cowper's stinging lines:—

Like ocean into tempest tost,
To waft a feather, or to drown a

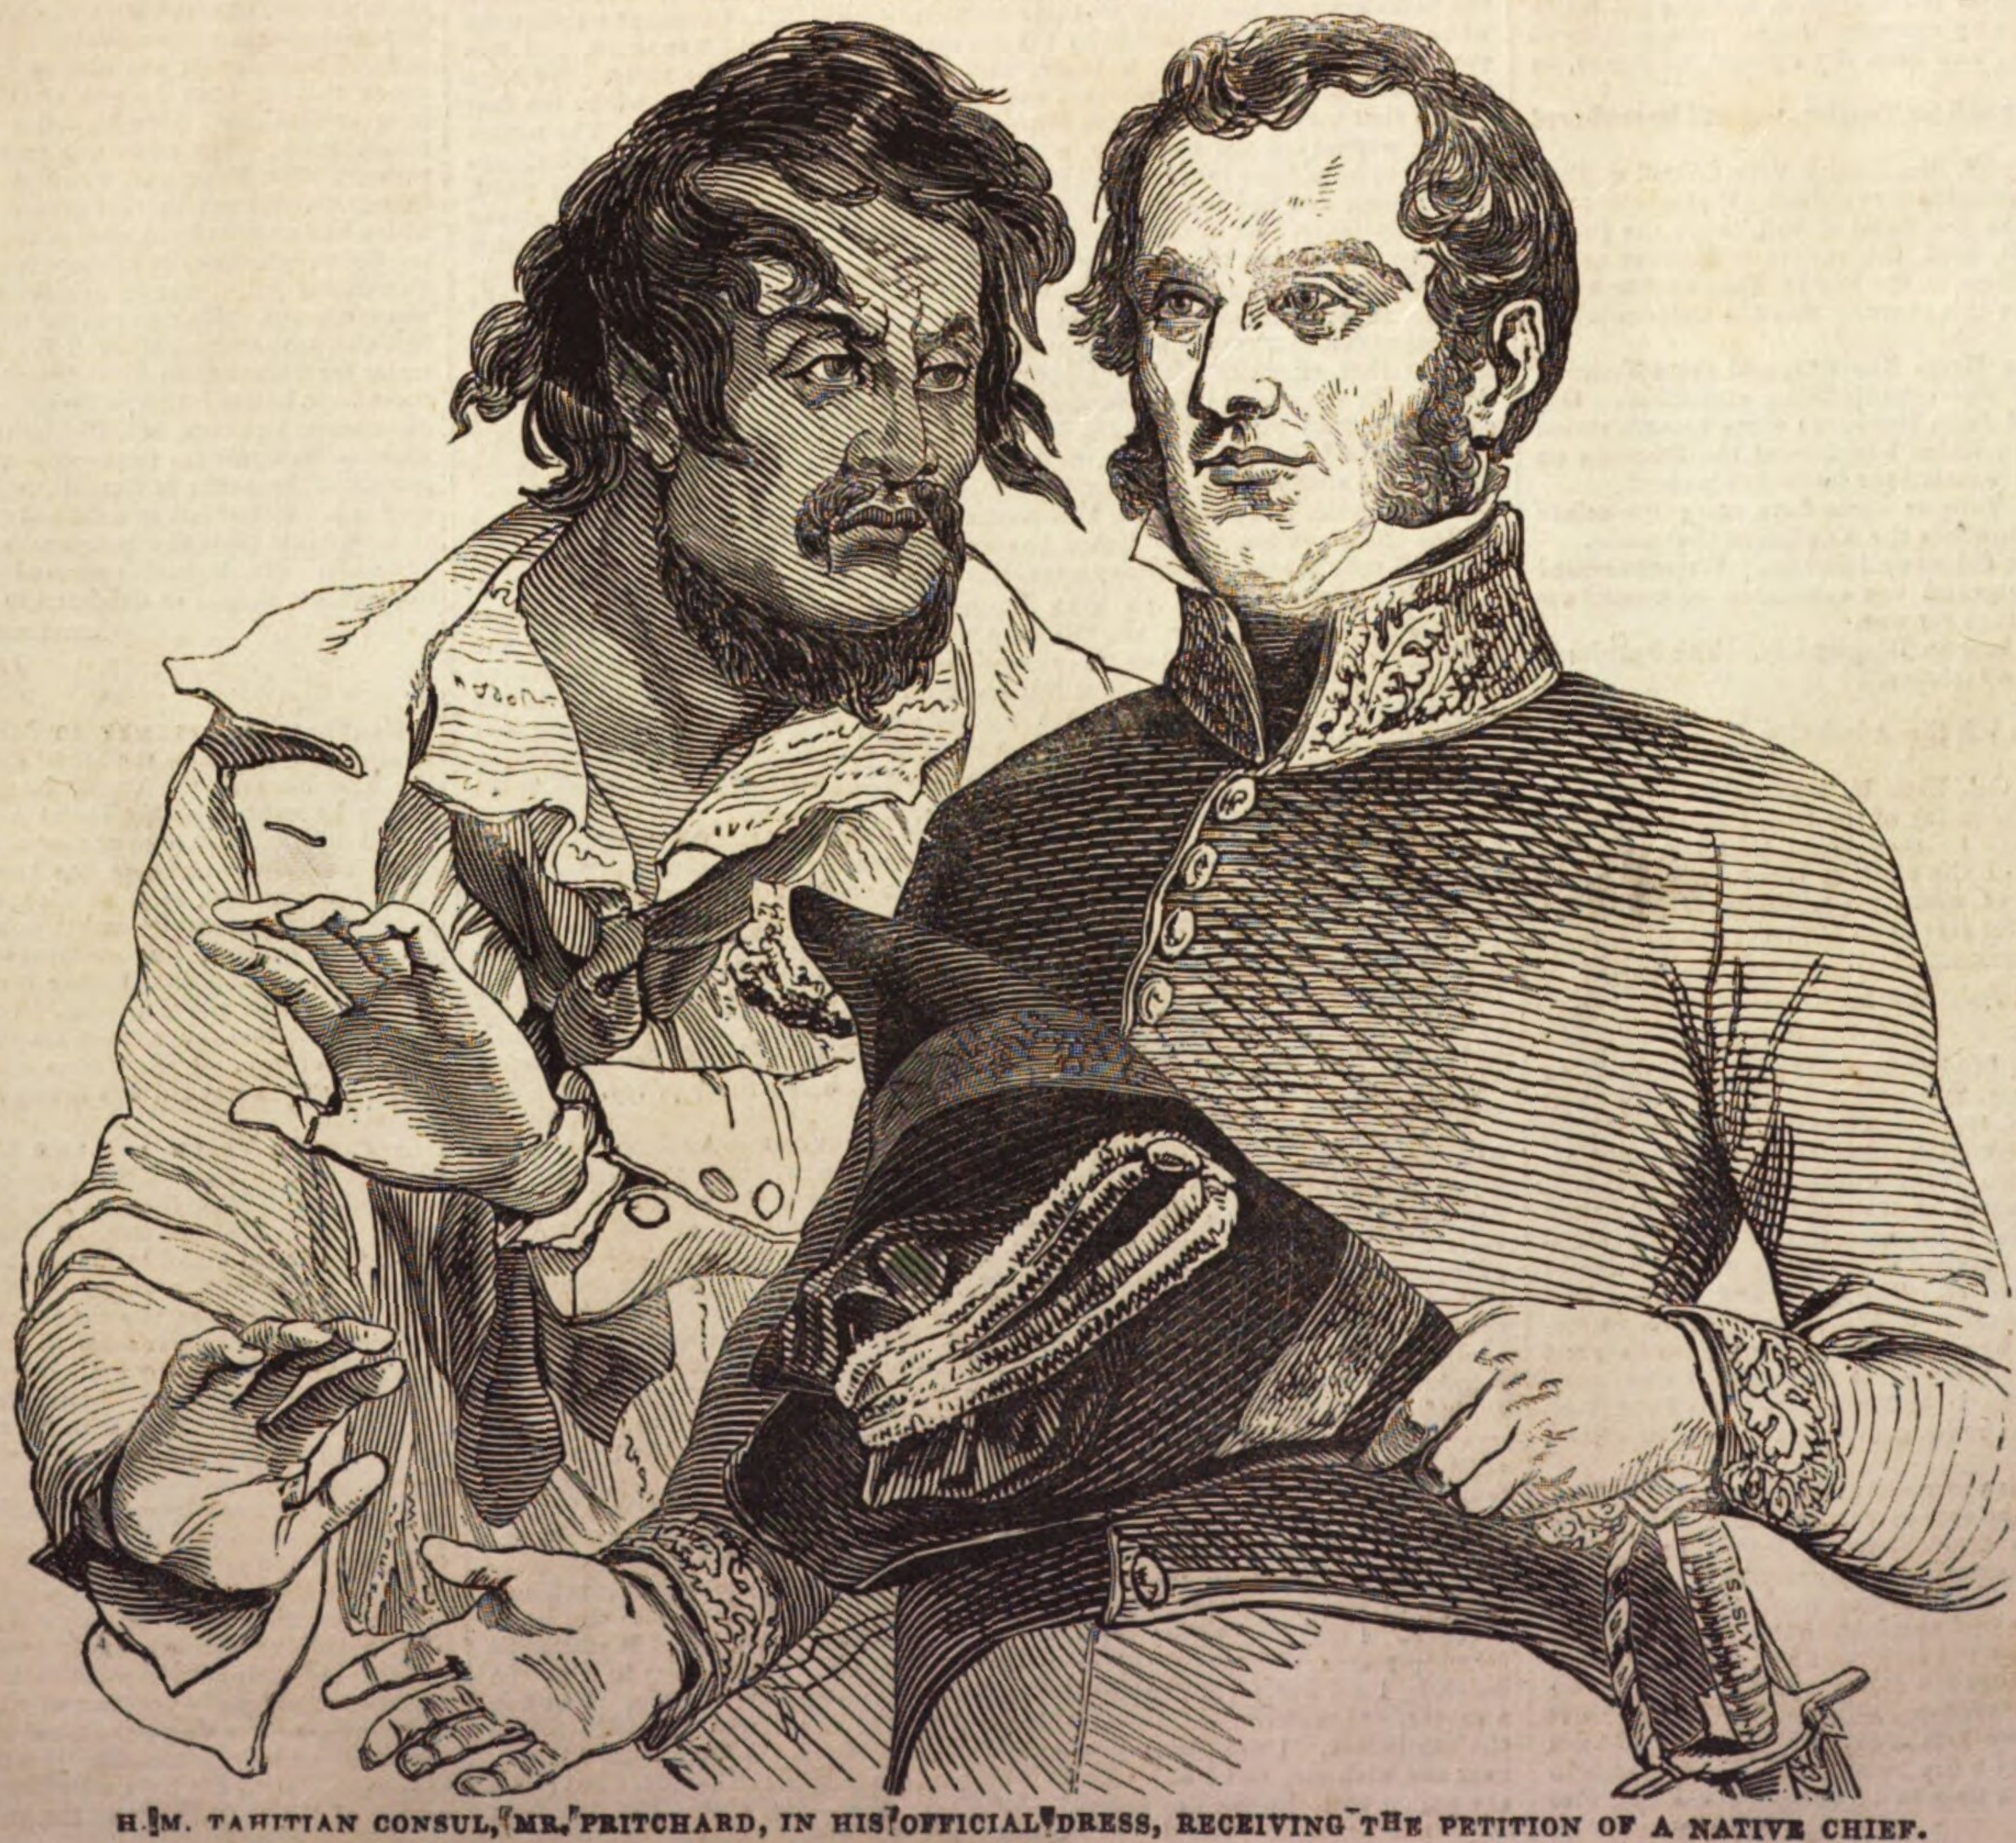


URANIE, FRENCH FRIGATE. FRENCH FORT. FRENCH PRISON. BRITISH CONSULATE. FRENCH FORT.

THE FRENCH BLOCKADE OF TAHITI.

In the view are seen the prison in which Mr. Pritchard was confined, the residence of the British Consulate, and the position of L'Uranie. Here, likewise, are shown the two forts constructed by the French, the circumstances of which are thus explained by the French themselves.—The chiefs of Tairabou, a peninsula on the south-eastern shore of the island, then declared that they acknowledged no authority but that of their Queen. The French account asserts that they "menaced the envoys of the Governor, and declared that they no longer obeyed his authority, and only recognised that of their Queen Pomare. This declaration was made in the presence of the British missionary, and the respect shown to him by the chiefs 'proved that he had been the promoter of it' The French were forbidden to reappear in the bay. The Governor replied to that manifestation by ordering the construction of two blockhouses on two hills commanding Papeete. Those blockhouses were established in three days, 600 men having been employed in their construction night and day."

In the third illustration is pourtrayed Mr. Pritchard, in his official costume, receiving the petition of a native chief. We gather from the statement of Mr. Josiah Conder, at a meeting held at Finsbury Chapel, Moorfields, on Tuesday evening, that principally to the generosity of Mr. Pritchard is Queen Pomare indebted for aiding her to pay the fine inflicted upon her by the French. It appears that Mr. Pritchard left Tahiti early in 1841, and did not return till 1843: and it was during his absence that those events took place which ended in the dethronement of Queen Pomare.



H. M. TAHITIAN CONSUL, MR. PRITCHARD, IN HIS OFFICIAL DRESS, RECEIVING THE PETITION OF A NATIVE CHIEF.

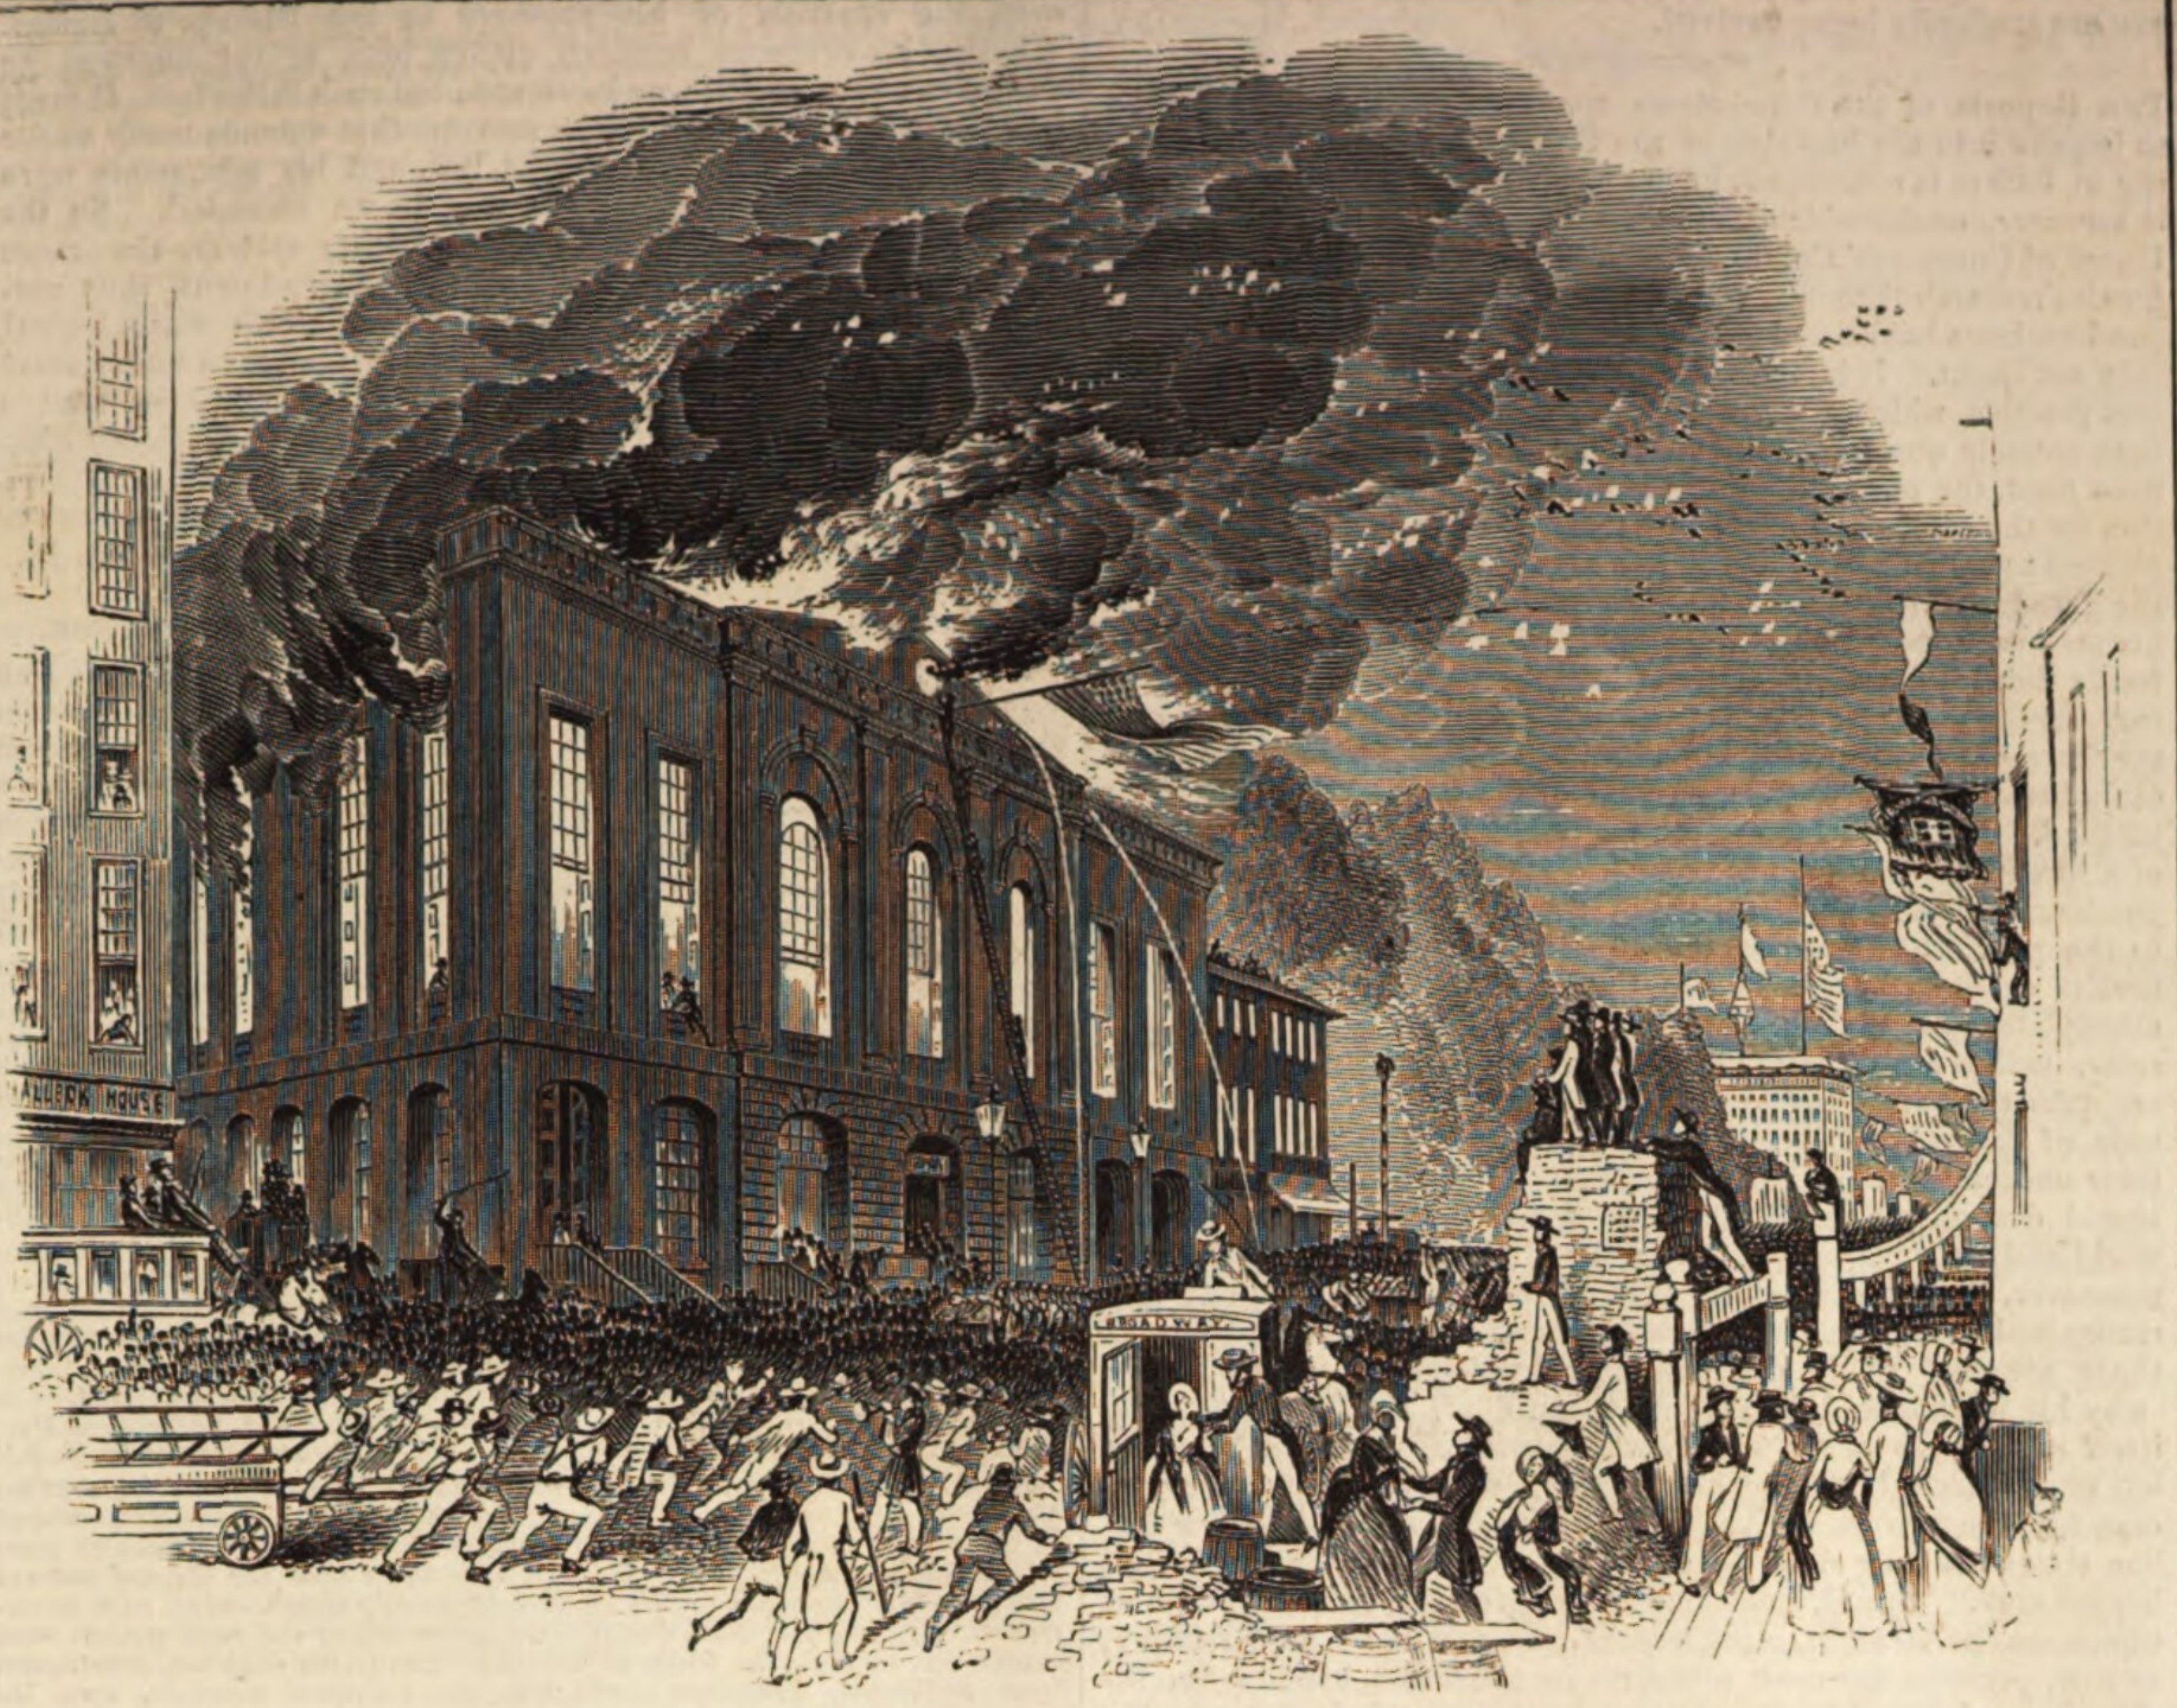
The following picture of the condition of Tahiti is quoted from Dr. Russell's work on Polynesia, published about two years since:—

"There has been a gratifying advance, both in religious knowledge and in the several arts which minister to the social improvement of mankind. The residence of an English Consul in Otaheite is itself a proof that the natives are no longer what they were in the days of Cook, or even of Captain Bligh. Industry is now supplied with a stimulus; the wants of the simple inhabitants are increased; their ambition is elevated; and they have learned to aspire to an imitation of the dress, luxuries, and manners of the most enlightened people in the world."

The Outrage at Tahiti.—A public meeting was held in Finsbury chapel on Tuesday evening, Alexander Fletcher, the minister of the chapel, in the chair, upon the subject of the late outrage at Tahiti. Mr. Conder entered into a statement of the circumstances, and insisted upon the danger with which Protestantism was threatened in the Pacific, after which Mr. Wire read a resolution expressive of indignation at the unprovoked outrage upon the British Consul. The resolution was agreed to unanimously, as was a resolution—"That the meeting felt that the good fame and honour of Great Britain were compromised by the denial to Queen Pomare of the repeatedly solicited pledge of protection given by Mr. Canning in 1827, and by the withdrawal of the English naval force from Tahiti."

Metropolitan Improvements.—On Monday a communication was opened for foot passengers from Oxford-street to Charlotte-street, Bloomsbury, on the south side of the new thoroughfare that is to connect Oxford-street with Holborn, by which the circuitous route in front of St. Giles's church may be avoided. The passage is across the cellars which have been built for the new houses on that side of the street. On the north side of the way the whole of the ground is nearly excavated for the vaults, which will be completed in a very short time. In digging the ground about the spot where stood the hospital, some deep wells were found, in which were pumps that had evidently been there several hundred years, as they were formed of hollow trees sunk in the wells.

NEWSPAPER



BURNING OF THE WASHINGTON HOTEL, NEW YORK.

BURNING OF THE WASHINGTON HOTEL, NEW YORK.

We have just received from our clever artist, resident in New York, the original of the annexed engraving of this lamentable catastrophe, by which the splendid Washington Hotel has been so far destroyed, that nothing but the bare walls are left standing.

The site of the hotel is at the angle of Broadway and Reade-streets. The fire was first discovered at about half-past ten, A. M., on the 4th ult.: it was then perceived bursting out from the eaves of the building along the roof, and is supposed to have originated from sparks lodged on the roof, by the firing of rockets, at the Independence Commemoration. The fire continued to rage slowly but surely, as from its height and the headway it had got under before it was discovered, it was found utterly impossible to suppress it. The firemen with their engines and apparatus were on hand at an early hour, but without being able to do anything except to save the adjoining buildings.

The building was owned by John G. Costar, Esq., of this city, and originally cost 140,000 dollars. It was erected during the years 1809-10, and '11, by the Washington Union Benevolent Society. The stock was divided into shares, and it became a losing concern to the stockholders, causing them to dispose of it, when it was altered and constructed into an hotel. Mr. Van Buren formerly made it his head-quarters when in the city.

As a singular coincidence, we may mention the circumstance that the corner-stone of the edifice was laid on the 4th day of July, 1809—just 35 years ago, about the same time that the fire broke out. The corner-stone was laid on the north-east corner of the building, on Reade-street.

The building presents a melancholy appearance, nothing being left but the four walls blackened and burnt, and a spectacle of splendid ruins!

CELEBRATION OF AMERICAN INDEPENDENCE AT NEW YORK.

"The Glorious Fourth" of July, as most of our readers may be aware, is the day set aside by Brother Jonathan as the great anniversary of independence throughout the United States. The New Yorks celebrate the affair in right metropolitan splendour; and our artist has chosen one of its most stirring scenes on the 4th of last month. The carnival of liberty cannot perhaps be better described than in the following extract from the Atlas New York journal:—

On the evening of the third, a number of juveniles, in accordance to custom, commenced firing off pistols. The native aldermen, in some of the wards, were determined, however, that these young go-a-headers should not take time by the forelock in handling a firelock. They accordingly stopped their sport. Now, this enabled a number of persons who care not a cent for the day to slumber to the music, probably, of their own proboscis, who might otherwise have been swindled out of a few hours repose. It is evident that, if the natives have made but little progress in great reforms, they have made great progress in little reforms, and we are rather inclined to think that the public fully understand the value of their great services, and will reward them accordingly.

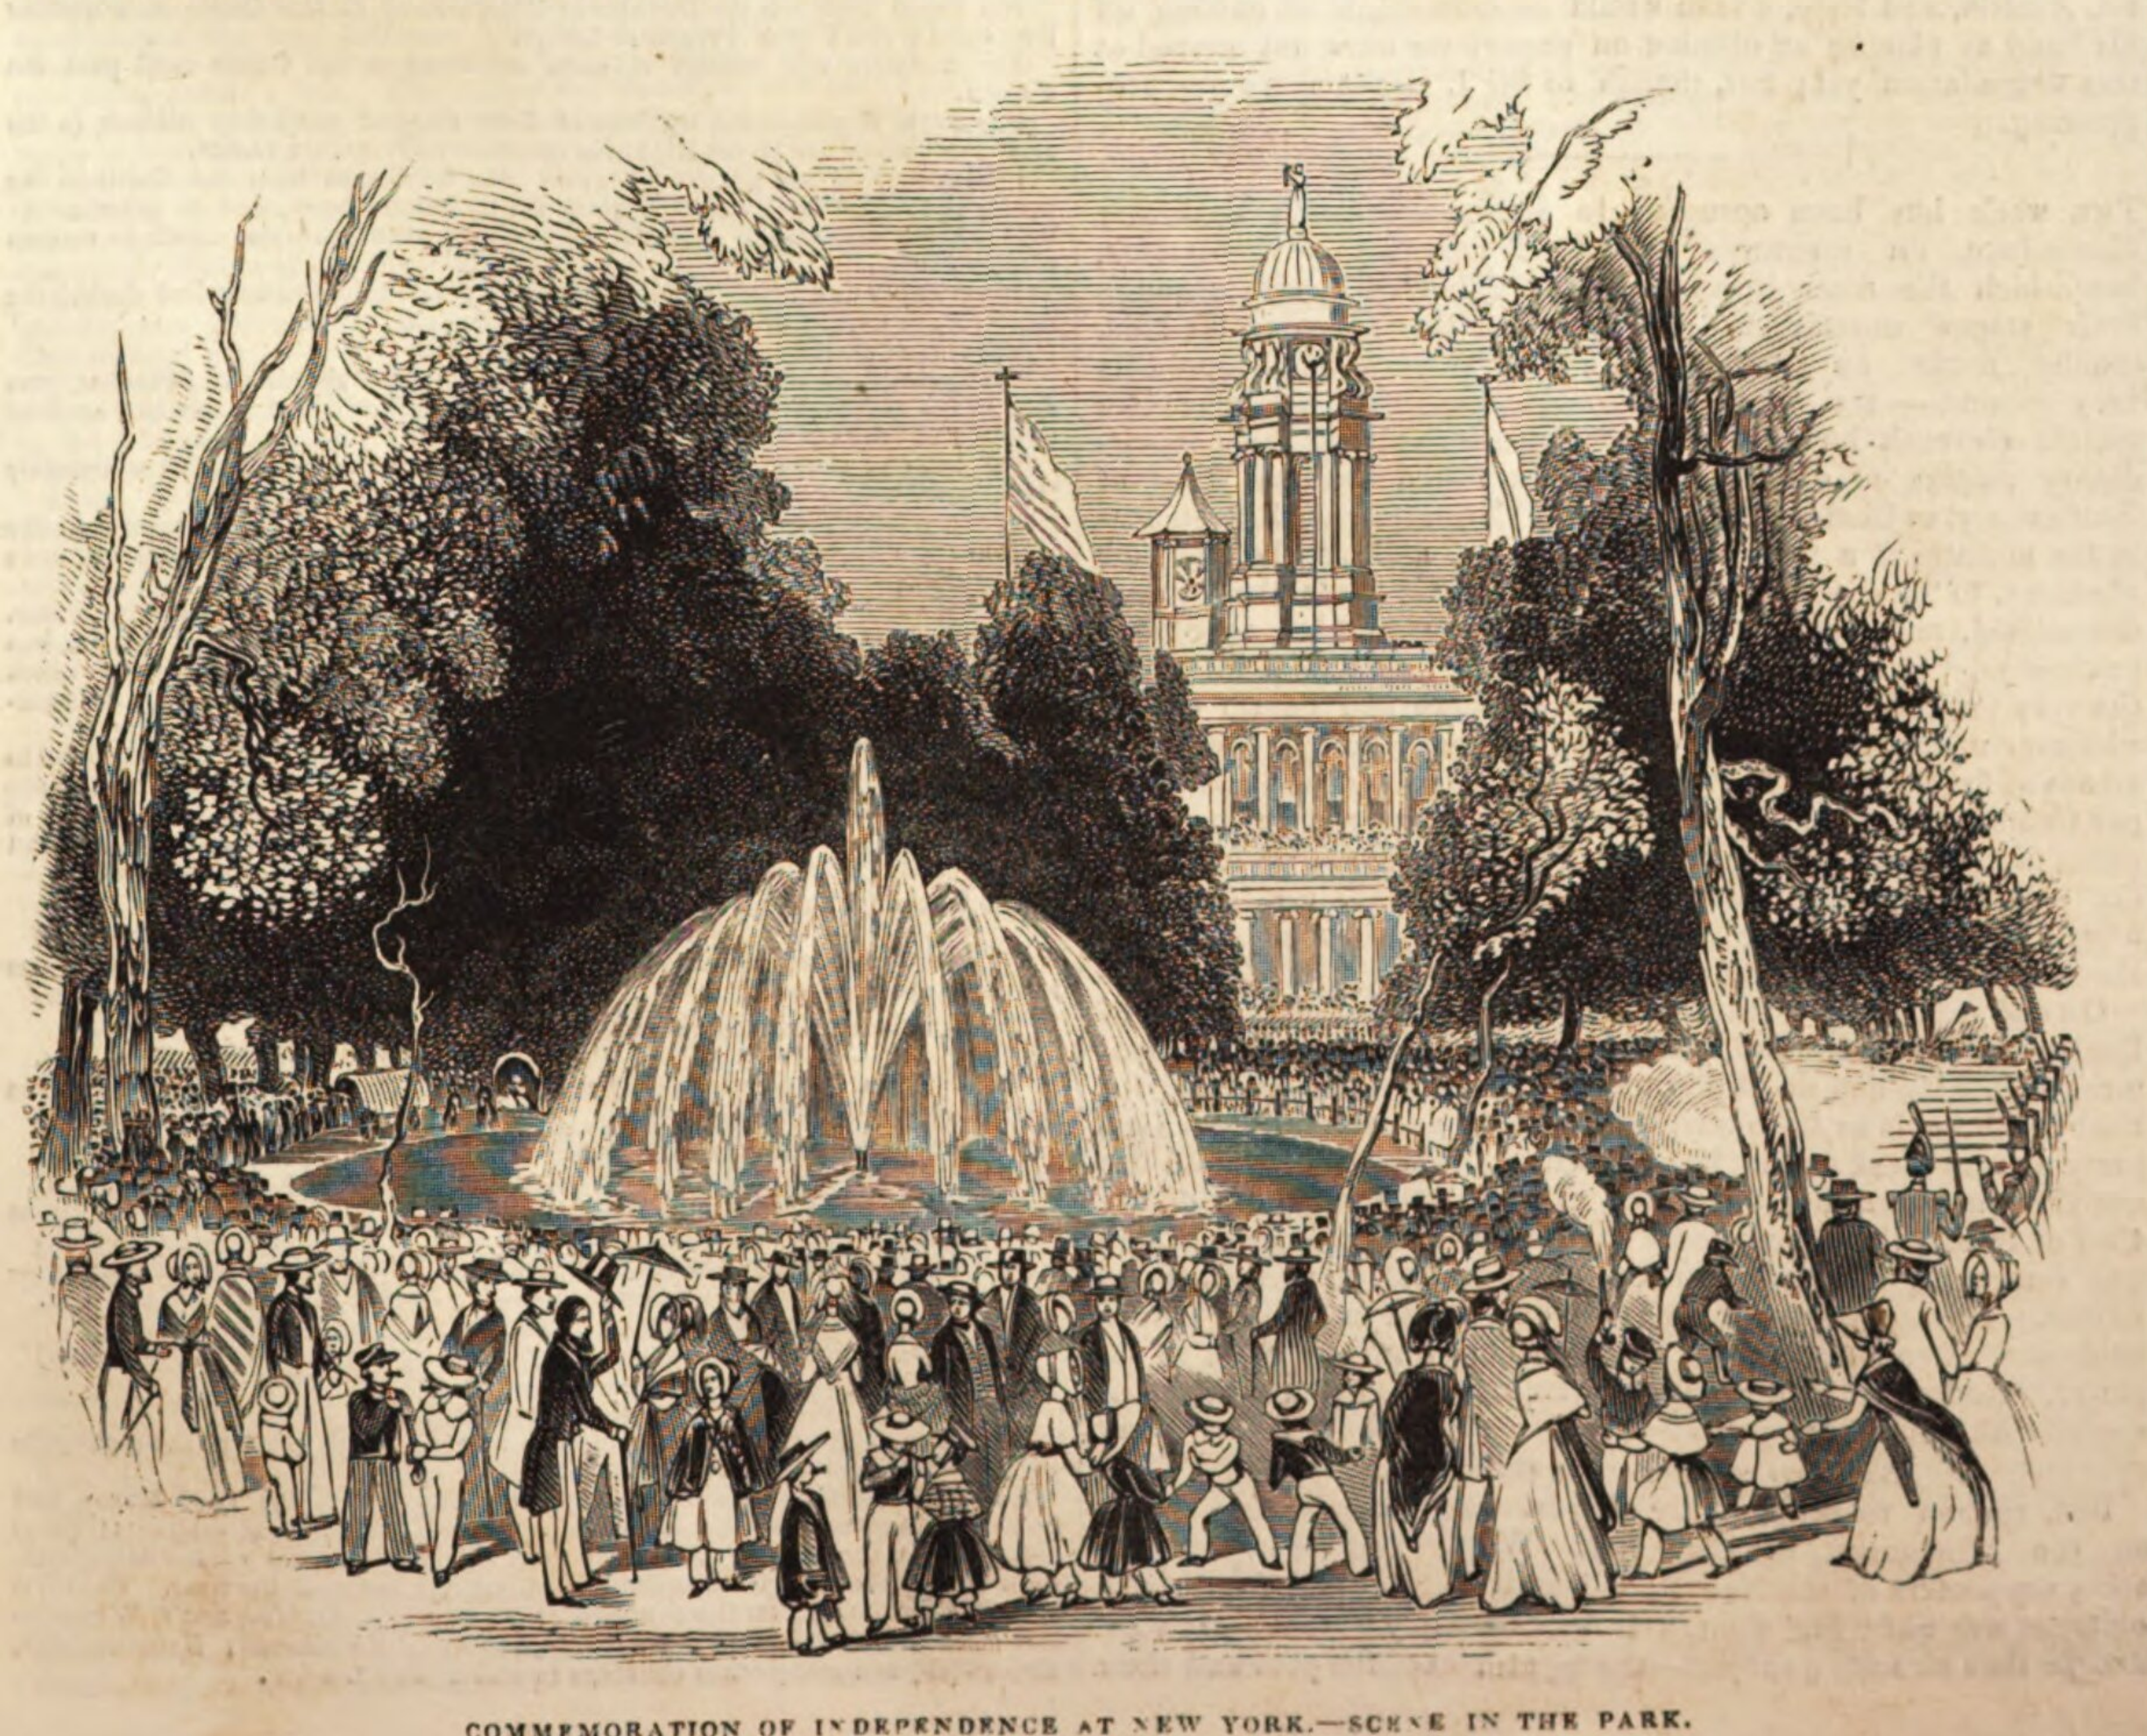
The sun, on the day of days, rose beautifully, as though enamoured of it. He even tempered his fiery beams, suffering cool and pleasant airs to play before his face, for the especial benefit of those who celebrated the day. But he did not shine into the booths, which, all in the olden time, surrounded the park—for there were no booths to shine in. He did not, in consequence, see the tired travellers reposing there and taking a luncheon or dinner, as it might be, to refresh and invigorate themselves. "Oh, no," said he, "the native is a high character like myself. He is an aristocrat, too, and will not disturb the pleasure of the rich for the convenience [he had almost said necessity] of the poor. I must take example by him, and shine only upon the rich."

The sun then looked towards the fountain, and he saw quantities of ice dumped into the basin, disturbing the dirt at the bottom, which mixed with the Croton; and he saw hundreds and hundreds of persons drinking of the muddy mixture out of tin dippers; and he heard the Common Council rejoicing greatly over the Croton punch which they had provided for others, and which they did not drink themselves.

"These gentlemen are not so bad, after all," said he; "for if they do prevent the country people, in a great measure, from purchasing eatables, they provide them with gruel gratis—a gruel that would be of great value in a poor house, for even an Oliver Twist would not ask for more!"

Of the other matters and things, what shall we say? How shall we tell the oft-told tale? How that the boats were thronged throughout the day with thousands of human beings bent on pleasure excursions, until the bay itself looked alive, and one might have imagined that the city would be deserted—how that the military and civic procession was well got up, and greatly admired—how the veteran corps fired—how the bells rung—how the crackers exploded—how the orations were delivered—how the museums were filled, the theatres crowded, and how the exhibition of fireworks at night really did honour to his honour and the other honours who had the honour of securing them? These things can be better understood than expressed.

The officers on duty, and others, were accommodated by the mayor with crackers, cheese, and lemonade, after which they adjourned to the residence of General Sandford, to get some refreshment.



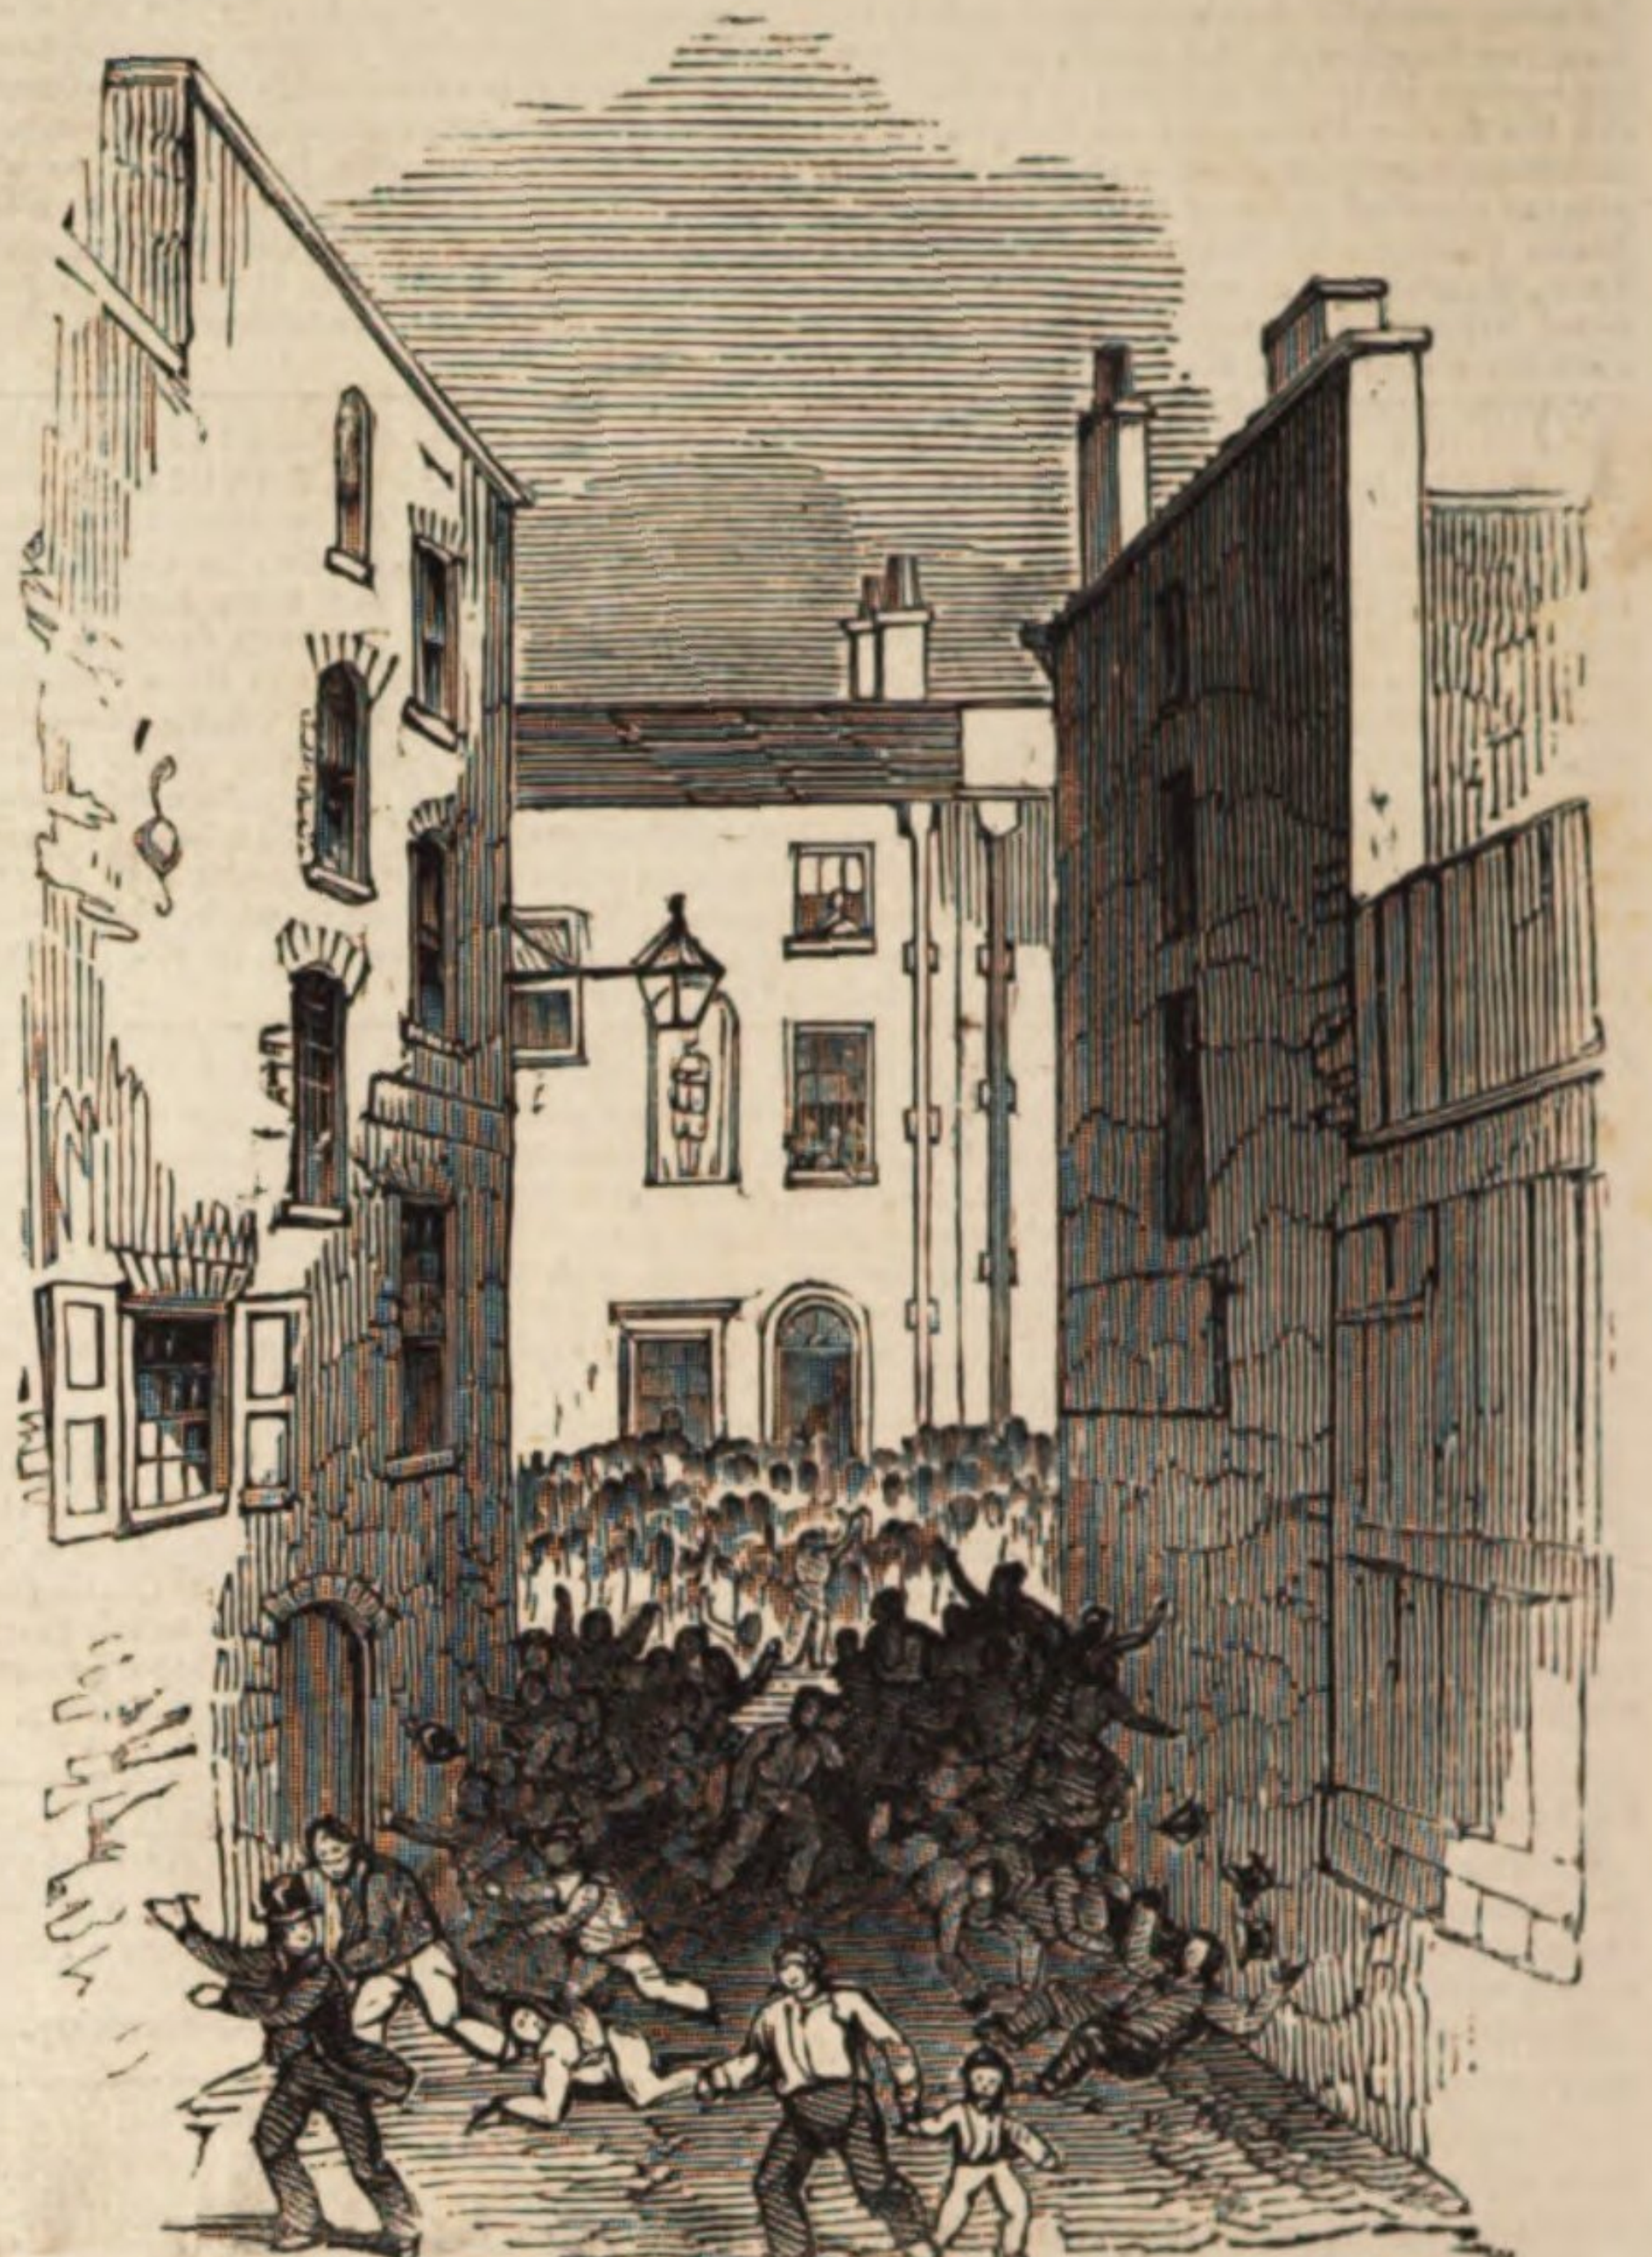
COMMEMORATION OF INDEPENDENCE AT NEW YORK.—SCENE IN THE PARK.

EXECUTION OF A MURDERER AT NOTTINGHAM.—DREADFUL OCCURRENCE.

On Wednesday morning, the awful sentence of death was carried into execution, in front of the County Gaol, at Nottingham, upon William Saville, aged 29, for the murder of his wife and three children, at Colwick; the full particulars of which have already appeared in our journal.

The deportment of the culprit since the passing of the sentence has evinced the utmost hardihood and indifference to his ignominious end. There was, however, on Saturday last, a slight relaxation of his firmness, and he sent for a magistrate, to whom he confessed that he murdered his wife, but denied killing the children. He said that his wife having cut all their throats, he resolved that he would "serve her the same." The circumstances elicited at the trial, however, disprove this tale.

On the night preceding the execution, Saville was in good spirits and slept well. He arose about five, and walked about in the felons' yard until six. He then spent an hour with the Rev. W. Butler, the chaplain of the gaol, in prayer and religious exercises. At seven he ate a hearty breakfast, and was brought up into the grand jury-room soon afterwards. Here he was pinioned, a pair of heavy irons put about his legs, and the fatal noose placed round his neck. The customary prayers were read by the rev. chaplain, after which a few minutes remained before it was eight o'clock, the appointed hour. He desired the clergyman to tell those assembled that he acknowledged the justice of his sentence, and requested their prayers. He then shook hands with the turnkeys and others, and asked the governer of the gaol, "Is it time?" Upon being told the hour was come, he arose with alacrity, and the mournful procession approached the scaffold, which the prisoner ascended with the greatest firmness. He was greeted with terrific yelling and shouting, but in less than a minute after his appearance before the crowd, the cap was pulled over his face, and the bolt withdrawn. The murderer gave a few convulsive throes, and in a short time life was extinct. After hanging the usual time, the body was cut down and buried the same evening within the precincts of the gaol.



ACCIDENT AT NOTTINGHAM.

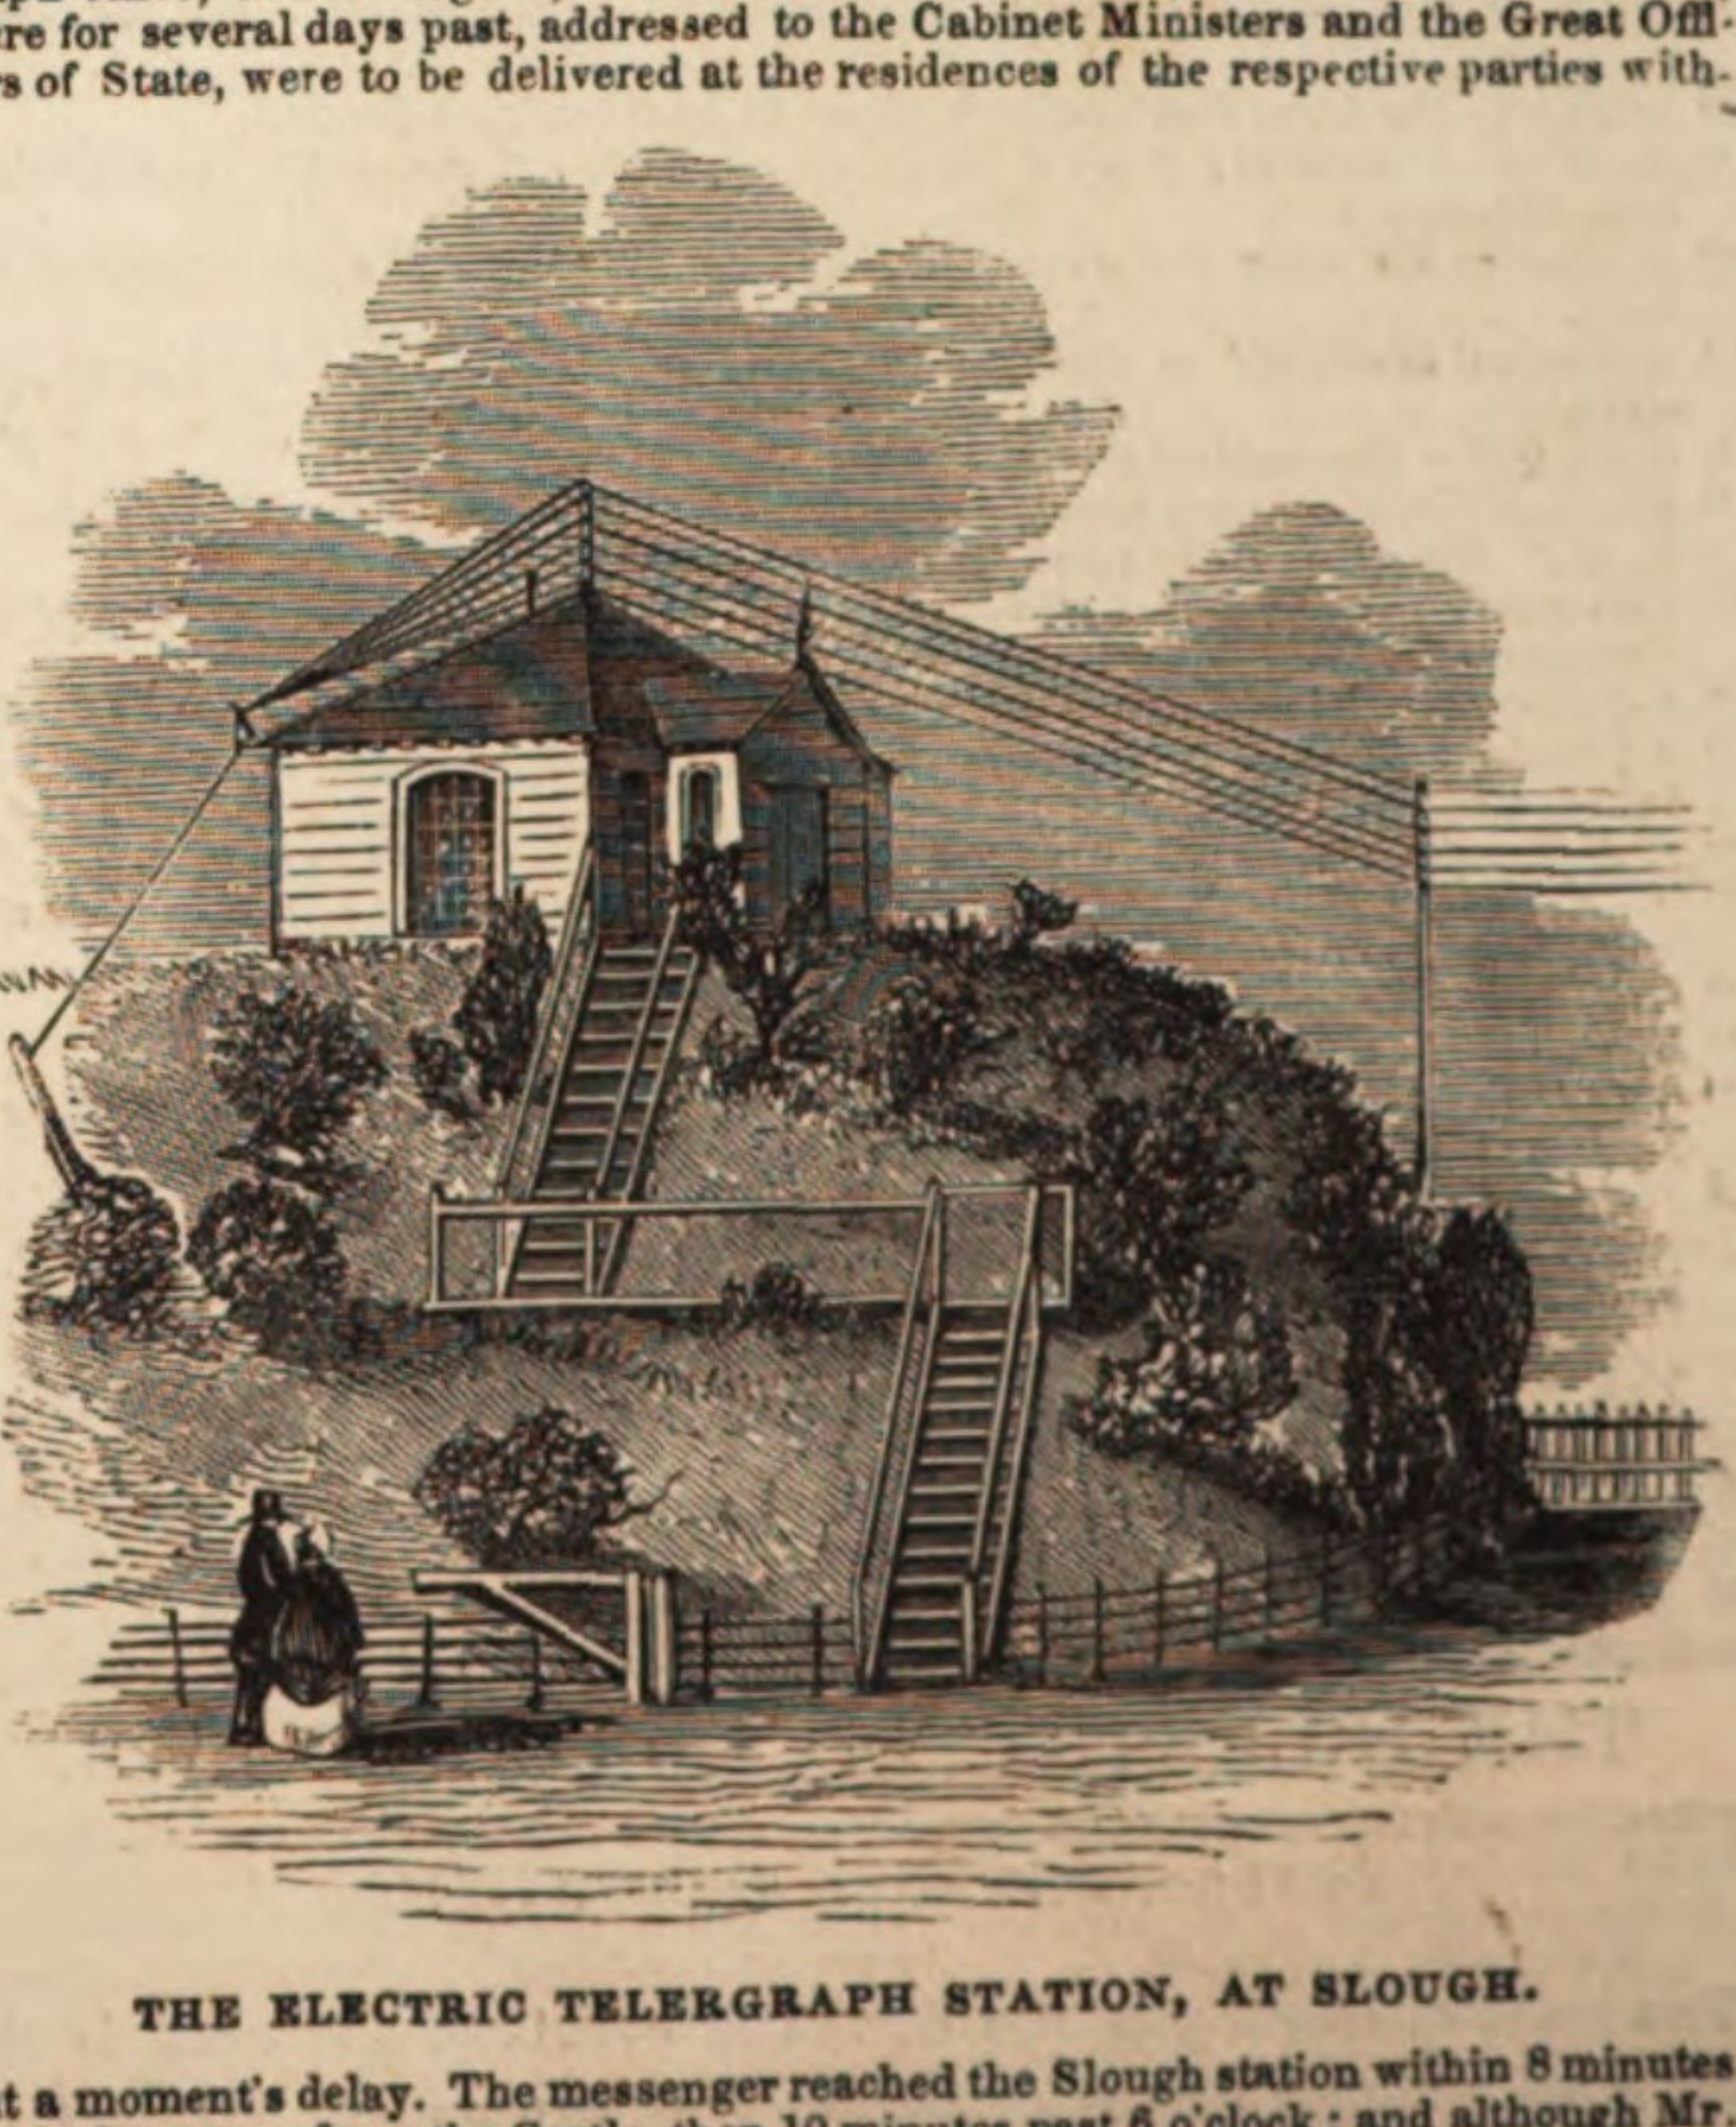
The crowd on the occasion was unprecedentedly large, and, in consequence, a most shocking accident occurred. The place where the execution took place is in a confined street called High Pavement, between 20 and 30 feet wide, and at the distance of about 100 yards is an avenue, called Garner's-hill, a very steep descent, with five or six steps at the top. As soon as the drop fell, the crowd rushed violently along High Pavement, and hurled a number of persons down the steps. Eight were taken up dead from suffocation, four have died since. Another account states that in all 30 persons were seriously injured.

A letter which we have seen, contains the following details:—"A few minutes since, I saw one of Tunley and Hodson's men with a light waggon, and he told me he had removed seven dead bodies to the workhouse, and taken four nearly dead to the Infirmary. In all, at the lowest computation, there cannot be less than eleven or twelve killed outright, and many more are expected to die. And all this took place without any scaffolding breaking down, or accident of a like description, but was caused by pressure only. There were no barricades in the streets to break the force."

THE ELECTRO-MAGNETIC TELEGRAPH AT SLOUGH, ON THE GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY.

By aid of the extraordinary power of this triumph of science, the auspicious event of her Majesty's accouchement on Tuesday morning, was communicated from Windsor Castle to the metropolis within eleven minutes! The details are as follows:—

"At two minutes past six o'clock, a messenger, mounted upon one of the fleetest horses in the royal stables, was despatched from the Castle to Mr. Howell, the superintendent at the Slough station, with instructions to communicate, by means of the electro-magnetic telegraphic, to the person in attendance at the Telegraph-office, at Paddington, to the effect that the letters, which had been waiting there for several days past, addressed to the Cabinet Ministers and the Great Officers of State, were to be delivered at the residences of the respective parties without a moment's delay. The messenger reached the Slough station within 8 minutes of his departure from the Castle, then 10 minutes past 6 o'clock; and although Mr. Russell, the gentleman who has the superintendence of the Telegraph-office, and Mr. Howell, had to be called from their beds, yet such was the admirable nature of the arrangements which had been made, and the extreme rapidity with which they were carried into effect, that within three minutes of the instructions reaching the Slough station, the telegraph was not only at work, but the communication was despatched to Paddington, and an acknowledgment of its receipt returned to Slough; and this was all effected within eleven minutes of the special messenger's departure from the Castle!



THE ELECTRIC TELERGRAPH STATION, AT SLOUGH.

"Upon the departure of each of the three special trains conveying the Cabinet Ministers and Great Officers of State, from Paddington, that fact was instantly telegraphed to Slough, so that at that station not an instant was lost upon the arrival of the Ministers, &c., in their proceeding in the Queen's and the Royal Hotel carriages to the royal residence at Windsor."

This telegraph has been constructed for the Great Western Railway by Mr. Cooke, who, instead of laying the conducting wires in iron tubing, has suspended them in the open air from lofty polings, the advantages of which are diminished cost, superior insectation, and facility of repair. The telegraph is available by the public, for the transmission of messages and replies; and the apparatus may be inspected, though at the exhibition charge of 1s. each person.

On the above day, also, were performed some wonders of railway travelling. The journey, from Slough to the Paddington terminus, was accomplished in less time than the distance had ever previously been traversed by a special passenger train on the Great Western line. The eighteen miles and a quarter only occupied fifteen minutes and ten seconds, being at the rate of upwards of seventy miles an hour!

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Last Night but one of the Season.—Mdme. PERSIANI respectfully informs the Nobility, Subscribers to the Opera, her Friends, and the public, that her BENEFIT will take place on THURSDAY next, August 15, 1844, when will be performed, Mozart's Chef-d'œuvre, IL DON GIOVANNI. TRIUMPHANT SUCCESS of ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE. Proprietor and Manager, Mr. W. BATTY.—Under the Especial Patronage of her Majesty the Queen and Prince Albert, and honoured by the presence of his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, Prince Mecklenburg Strelitz, and distinguished assemblage of Nobility.—MONDAY, AUGUST 12, and during the week, at Seven o'Clock, 69th time of the CHINESE WAR, with the brilliant FEAST OF LANTERNS; splendid Acts of HORSEMANSHIP; the DANCE of the POLKA; and last Six Nights of the GREAT STEEPLE CHASE, or ENGLAND'S HARVEST HOME.—Mr. Batty respectfully acquaints the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public, that having just returned from the Continent, and notwithstanding his present unprecedented success, and overflowing houses, he is ever anxious to produce novelty, to render this establishment pre-eminent, and the first in Europe for its unequalled and extraordinary productions, he has succeeded in forming arrangements with the following first-rate French artistes, in addition to his present talented corps of British and Foreign Equestrians:—Mdlle. Lerette, Mdlle. Felenè, Mdlle. Phillipe; M. Pierre, M. Georges, M. Ferdinand Schmidt, from the Circle Olympique, Paris, Hamburg, &c., who will make their first appearance in England in their various and novel Scenes—Equitation. Acting and Stage Manager, Mr. W. D. Broadfoot. Box office open from Eleven till Five.

IOWAY INDIANS.—UNPARALLELED EXHIBITION EACH DAY OF NEXT WEEK.—The party of Fourteen IOWAY INDIANS, with their Interpreter, from the Upper Missouri, near the Rocky Mountains, in America, having arrived in London, are giving their NATIVE DANCES, Songs, Games, &c., in CATLIN'S INDIAN COLLECTION, Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly. Their modes and their history fully explained by Mr. Catlin, from the platform. This is the party which has been drawing such vast crowds to see them while in New York, and they are accompanied by the Head Chief of the tribe, "The White Cloud." The party consists of every grade—of Chiefs, Medicine Men, Warriors, Women, and Children—in splendid costumes, the youngest of which is only six months old, and carried upon its mother's back in the cradle. The public will easily decide that these are by far the wildest and best representations of the Red Men of America ever seen in England; and their stay in London at present must be limited to a very short time, as they are on their way to the Continent. Each day of next week, the hours, from Half-past Two to Four, in the day, and from Half-past Eight to Ten, in the evening Doors open half an hour previous.—Admission, One Shilling.

TO the LADIES.—Madame TUSSAUD'S NATIONAL GROUP, in honour of her Majesty and the illustrious Wellington.—The Queen and Prince Albert are supposed to be offering to the hero the honours he so well deserves, surrounded by Sovereigns in amity with England, supported by the great characters of the day, in splendid costumes, consisting of eighteen figures.—"This exhibition, in its present state, is one of the very best sights in the metropolis, and abounds with such a variety of objects that it is a matter of surprise how so many things could have been collected together."—Times. Admittance, 1s.; Napoleon Rooms, 6d. Open from Eleven in the morning till Ten at night. Concert at Eight.

INVENTORS and other GENTLEMEN in the possession of INTERESTING MODELS or WORKS of ART who intend to deposit them at the ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION, are respectfully requested to forward them on or before the 31st Instant, in order that they may be inserted in the Revised Catalogue. All such works are received gratuitously, and the depositor has free admission to the Institution. WORKING MODELS are DAILY EXPLAINED, and, where the subject admits, are described in a LECTURE. R. J. LONGBOTTOM, Secretary.
N.B.—The Institution is Open Daily, as usual.

THE QUEEN'S ST. LEONARD'S ARCHERS.—The ANNUAL PRIZE presented by her Majesty will be Shot for on WEDNESDAY, the 21st inst. Also the SILVER CUP and other Prizes for the Members and Visitors. TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"A Subscriber" is thanked, but we have not room for the long article on Cruelty to Horses.

The Dove Cot Tower, engraved in our number, still belongs to the family of Masters.

"A Subscriber from the Commencement."—The paragraph, "Reverence for the Bible," originally appeared anonymously. We have not room for the dates of marriages, &c.

"Anglicus," Liverpool, is correct in his inferences.

"J. W."—The sketch of the Cork Regatta arrived too late.

"R. A. I.," St. Servan.—We cannot entertain the proposition.

"An Original Subscriber."—The diagram may be of service.

"Mr. A. Park," of Glasgow, is thanked for the early impression of his neat Guide to the Burns' Festival.

"B. G.," Mile End Road, is thanked for the suggestion.

"Alchymia."—There is a fine laboratory attached to the Royal Institution, in Albemarle-street, where Davy made some of his great experiments. Messrs. Brande and Faraday lecture during the season.

"W. P.," Manchester.—The Ticket for the Foresters' Meeting did not reach us in time.

"Lelia."—The term dandysette is about as legitimate as dandy.

"H. W. L.," Bristol; "W. F. M.," Runnymede; "Romulus."—See future announcements.

"Krale."—We have not room for the song. Dr. Wolff's portrait shall appear.

"A Medical Student" is thanked for some of the hints in his letter of four sides.

"O. P. Q."—The subject will not suit.

"W. C. S."—We do not remember to have seen the tale of the Two Lovers.

"T. A.," Norwich.—The solution shall be corrected in our next.

"Zoroaster, Sub."—The Print of London in 1842 may be had by order of any news-agent.

"A Subscriber," Cardiff.—The volume has been too much beaten by the binder.

"A Constant Reader."—We have not room for the biographies of Mrs. Barbauld, &c.

"F. E."—The sketch of Coombe Abbey is not adapted for engraving.

"W. X."—The History of Wood-Engraving can only be obtained in the numbers of our journal, in which it originally appeared.

"I. H.," Islington.—Each translation of a foreign work is copyright.

"R. R."—The witness is indispensable.

"I. C.," Old Change.—The Royal Prince born on Tuesday last is not Duke of York by birth; and her Majesty can invest him with any other title.

A few correspondents shall be replied to next week.

Ineligible.—H. L., To the Evening Star; The Convict's Farewell, by G. I. S. H.; B. E. L., The New Destructive Power; To Maria; Lines, by Celia.

The Burns' Festival.—Next week, we shall complete our Illustrations of this Grand National Commemoration, with Portraits of the Three Sons of Burns, &c.; accompanied by an interesting contribution from the graphic pen of Mrs. S. C. Hall, describing a visit to some of the most interesting localities of "the Land of Burns."

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, AUGUST 10, 1844.

The most interesting of the domestic events of the week is the birth of another Prince of the line of Brunswick, which took place at Windsor on Tuesday morning last. The Ministers of State were not present on the happy occasion, as Royal etiquette and custom require, the earliest in arriving coming too late. The young Prince will be created Duke of York. Thus, the names that mingled so largely with the Court history of the latter part of the last century and the commencement of the present one are gradually being revived.

The Reports of the Committees appointed by the two Houses to inquire into the business of the Post-office, as far as the opening of letters is concerned, have appeared nearly together. There is, however, considerable difference between them; the report of the House of Commons' Committee is fuller, more minute, and displays greater research than that of the Lords. It is the report of men of good business habits, and disposed to take more pains with anything they set about. It is, in fact, a rather elaborate history of a secret practice, which, though not very extensively used, has never been entirely obsolete. But in all the instances in which it has been used, the power never appears to have been put in operation for the exclusive benefit of a foreign state till Sir J. Graham pleased to consult the convenience of the Italian police. This is the grand distinction between the present Home Secretary and all his predecessors. From the beginning of the last century downwards they have used the power, whenever it was considered necessary, for the purpose of tracing and detecting criminals, or whenever the State was disturbed by plots or commotions. And in all these cases there was a utility—a purpose of some kind or other to be pleaded. But never before was the convenience or the suspicions of a foreign power made the motive for spying into the correspondence trusted to the honour of the English Government. As to the plea that the peace of the world might be endangered by revolts or disturbances in the Italian States, we hold it to be utterly absurd. If the misgovernment of the Pope, as a temporal ruler, makes his subjects discontented, poor, and unhappy, they are quite right in trying to upset it; and England would take no note of the matter except perhaps to wish the patriots luck in their undertaking. What sympathy or concern have we with the stupid despotisms that blight and oppress the finest nation in the world and the most prominent in its history? With the Pope, moreover, the law of England forbids our Ministers to hold any recognised correspondence, under penalties not much short of those attached to the crime of high treason; we see no reason why his fears should be made the cause of England disgracing itself in the eyes of the world, which in this Post-office business has undoubtedly been the case. Nor have we much more concern for the terrors of Austria, whose conduct towards her Italian states has long since deprived her of the good opinion of all honest men. Brutal, cold-blooded oppression, and a system of espionage the meanest, most treacherous, and most demoralising, as it is, perhaps, the most complete in the world, are her two instruments of government. It was never exceeded, even by the aristocratic republic of Venice. Supposing the Italians chose, or were able, to drive every Austrian bayonet beyond the Alps, what would England have to do with it? Nothing, except to congratulate those who had accomplished so good a work. As to saying that England might be involved in a war by the change, the supposition deserves to be laughed at. Our Government, we apprehend, would not venture to send a force to assist the insurgents, and we are sure the people would not interfere to aid the Emperor. To allege danger to the peace of England, then, as an excuse for opening the letters of foreigners, is a mere subterfuge. Besides, even were peace to be so purchased, we are yet to learn that we are justified in buying peace with dishonour. We can imagine the scorn with which Cromwell would have replied to an application from Rome, or Austria, to give up to them the contents of letters confided to the English Government. And yet Cromwell was one of those who are cited as authorities for the practice. He used the power, but he did not prostitute it.

Allowing the research the committee has displayed to be satisfactory, the conclusions it has come to are not quite so unexceptionable. It is marked by great indecision; as if Lord Sandon and Mr. Warburton had "agreed to differ." The practice, according to the committee, has its advantages and its disadvantages; it would not do to sanction an unlimited use of it—it would not be advisable greatly to restrict the use made of it at present—it would be better to leave it alone than to mend it, since formal amendment of a practice pre-supposes its sanction. So, not knowing what to do, the committee determine on nothing, and turn the troublesome question over to the consideration of Parliament, on the same principle that Dogberry's watch having caught a thief, suspected him, by virtue of their office, to be no true man, but presently let him go, "thanking God they were rid of a knave." In many of these cases, however, there is a consolation in this, that publicity often furnishes a better remedy than legislation. While we slept in security, confiding in official honour, we might be the victims of official curiosity; but, the practice once known, it is not likely that many political secrets will pass through the Post-office. In Russia, Austria, and Italy, a man would as soon think of cutting off his hand as placing an opinion on paper; we have not arrived at this degradation yet; but, thanks to Sir J. Graham, we are progressing.

The week has been occupied in Parliament, with desultory discussions, on measures important indeed in themselves, but which the utter impossibility of debating speeds through their stages unresisted. On Tuesday the Marquis of Normanby made an attack on the Government on this very ground — the incomprehensible deferring of measures till the eleventh hour. He gave a passing hit at the extraordinary powers of dispatching bills exhibited by the Earl of Shaftesbury, as Chairman of the Lords' Committees. Fifteen bills in ten minutes is a very ordinary average, and, as the Marquis observed, to be credited it should be seen. Were the process dramatised, and "played on the stage," it would be, as Shakspeare says, "condemned as an improbable fiction;" it would be the very burlesque of legislation. Now there can be no doubt, whatever measures a Ministry wishes to push through, it can find means of forwarding. For instance, the conversion of the Three per Cents., and the revision of the Bank Charter, were soon disposed of; other measures, of which the Government were equally the originators, were incomprehensibly delayed, and are now passed at the end of the Session, in a sort of rush. In both Houses it has caused great dissatisfaction.

On one measure a sort of stand has been made; the Bishop of Exeter has, single-handed, fought against the Poor Law Amendment Bill. He had no supporter, either by speech or vote, for Earl Stanhope is in Germany, we believe, and the old Poor Law party is very weak in the Upper House. "Young England" has not yet penetrated into the Peers, and there the admirers of the 43rd of Elizabeth are very few. Under these circumstances, there was something chivalrous in the exertions of the Bishop of Exeter. His speech was a very able one, warm in feeling, always bold, and often bitter in its language, but unmistakeable in its power. Addressed to a popular assembly, it was just the sort of speech that would have caused—

> The stones of Rome to rise and mutiny.

But, spoken to three Whig Lords, and four or five Peers on the Ministerial benches, both Whigs and Ministerialists being supporters of the New Poor-law, it fell flat and dead; the audience was not "fit," though it was certainly "few." It was strange that on such a subject—the treatment of the poor and their condition, physical, moral, and religious—not a single Prelate gave even the sanction of his presence to the Bishop of Exeter. Whether his reverend brethren dislike him, or the question he was advocating, or both, we know not; but such is the fact. It must be observed that he spoke on a measure that amends many of the harsher provisions of the present law, and his arguments were directed exclusively against the law to be amended. So the more he exposed the evils of the existing system, the more he established the necessity for their amendment, thus cutting the ground from under his own feet. This was a logical defect that would have been fatal to his success even under more favourable circumstances. He moved that the bill be read a second time that day six months; and in doing so, he placed himself in the position of opposing improvement; the result was, that on the division he voted by himself—with not one supporter—against the whole house, which had gradually increased to 16.

ACCOUCHEMENT OF HER MAJESTY.—BIRTH OF A PRINCE.

The auspicious event which the whole nation has for some time past been anxiously expecting, took place on Tuesday morning at ten minutes before eight o'clock, our beloved Queen having at that time safely given birth to a Prince at Windsor Castle. This addition to the house of Brunswick, while it forms a source of hearty congratulation to all her Majesty's subjects, who take so deep an interest in the happiness and domestic comfort of their Queen, is also of importance politically, increasing, as it does, the links of the succession to the throne of this realm. Feeling, therefore, that our readers will naturally desire to become acquainted with every circumstance connected with this happy event, we have collected full and interesting particulars from the most authentic sources.

Although excellent arrangements were made in order that her Majesty's Ministers should be present at the Castle at the time, as the subsequent narrative will show, yet none of them were able to arrive until after the accouchement had taken place.

There were present with her Majesty in the room at the time, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, Dr. Locock, and Mrs. Lilly, the monthly nurse. And in the rooms adjoining were the other medical attendants, Sir James Clark and Dr. Ferguson, and also the Lady in Waiting on the Queen.

At half-past eight o'clock the following official bulletin was issued:—

"Windsor Castle, Aug. 6, 1844, half-past eight, A.M.

"The Queen was safely delivered of a Prince this morning at fifty minutes past seven o'clock. Her Majesty and infant are perfectly well.

"James Clark, M.D.
"Charles Locock, M.D.
"Robert Ferguson, M.D."

It will be seen from our Windsor report, under the accustomed head, that her Majesty was well enough to go out on Monday forenoon, and was only prevented by bad weather from taking another airing in the afternoon. It will give great satisfaction to the Queen's loyal subjects to know that her Majesty suffered much less pain previous to the event than usually attends upon such occurrences. Indeed, the usual domestic arrangements of the royal patient were carried out through the whole of Monday without the slightest interruption from preliminary symptoms; and from the subjoined anecdote, upon the authenticity of which every reliance may be placed, it is obvious that, even when those symptoms did occur, there was no severity in the character of them to affect in any way the habitual thoughtfulness and presence of mind of her Majesty.

On Monday night, at nine o'clock, a special messenger from the Lord Chancellor reached Windsor Castle with the commission which it was necessary for her Majesty to sign, in order that the royal assent might be given next day to the various bills which were only waiting that stage to become law.

It was mentioned to the Queen that a commission requiring her signature had arrived, but that she need not sign it until the following morning. About five o'clock, however, feeling that her accouchement was fast approaching, and with that presence of mind so characteristic of her recollecting that an important public document was in the Castle awaiting her signature, she immediately directed it to be brought, and, although not free from pain and anxiety, affixed her signature, with the same freedom of hand as usual, to the commission, and the sheets of parchment upon which the names of the bills were inscribed. As there were seven sheets of parchment, the signature of the Queen was required to be as often repeated, and this was done within three hours of the birth of the Prince. This is another instance of her Majesty's ready attention to public affairs, regardless of her own personal sufferings.

Her Majesty was taken ill soon after five o'clock, at which time the medical attendants were summoned to be in readiness to attend upon the Queen.

At two minutes past six o'clock (unequivocal symptoms having then manifested themselves), a messenger was dispatched from the Castle to Slough, and the intelligence communicated to the Cabinet Ministers in town, by means of the electro-magnetic telegraph, within eleven minutes!

The first special train which reached Slough from Paddington arrived at the station at twenty-three minutes past eight o'clock, having performed the eighteen miles and a quarter in exactly eighteen minutes, being at the extraordinary rate of more than sixty miles an hour! In this train were the Duke of Buccleuch, the Earl of Delawarr, the Earl of Jersey, Lord Lyndhurst, and Sir James Graham. Earl Delawarr was the first who arrived at Paddington, upon the receipt of the important intelligence from Windsor Castle. His lordship was there for nearly half an hour before he was joined by his colleagues.

The second special train from Paddington, which brought down Sir Robert Peel and Lord Stanley, reached Slough at forty minutes past eight o'clock. A delay of some ten or twelve minutes occurred in the arrival of the First Lord of the Treasury and Lord Stanley, in consequence of the eight o'clock down train being in advance of them, and preventing the special train from "going a-head."

The whole of these distinguished personages proceeded to the Castle at full speed, in the royal carriages and four, which were in waiting at Slough.

His Grace the Duke of Wellington arrived in a third special train, shortly afterwards, alone, performing the distance from Paddington to Slough in seventeen minutes and a half. The noble duke immediately proceeded to the Castle in a carriage and four, and reached there in eleven minutes after his arrival at the station, and within less than half an hour from the period of his leaving Paddington.

The Earl of Liverpool and Lord Wharncliffe left town by the regular nine o'clock train, and proceeded to the Castle, from Slough, in carriages and four.

Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent arrived at the Castle at a quarter past eight o'clock from Frogmore Lodge.

The ministers and officers of state remained at the Castle until past ten o'clock.

Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent stopped until four o'clock in the afternoon, when her Royal Highness returned to Frogmore Lodge.

Intelligence of the auspicious event was forwarded from the Castle in the course of the forenoon, to her Majesty the Queen Dowager, and to other members of the royal family. Official notifications of it were also made to various foreign courts.

The nobility and gentry residing in the vicinity of the Castle called during the day to make inquiry after the health of the Queen.

The Queen passed an excellent day on Tuesday.

The bulletin, announcing the event to the loyal inhabitants of Windsor, was sent to the Mayor of the town, and posted at the Town-hall within half an hour after it had taken place.

The bells of the chapel of St. George and the parish church were instantly "manned" and merry peals were rung for upwards of an hour.

At ten o'clock a royal salute was fired from the corporation ordnance, in the Bachelor's Acre, under the superintendence of the corporation gunner and town bombardier.

A royal salute was also fired from the Belvidere Battery, near Virginia Water.

The town, in the evening, notwithstanding the shortness of the notice, was brilliantly illuminated; there was scarcely a house throughout the borough which did not exhibit some mark and token of the affection and loyalty of its occupants towards our beloved Sovereign.

Mrs. Perkins, the female who has received the appointment of wet-nurse to the infant Prince, and who was confined of a fine boy at the residence of Lady Barrington, at the Wardrobe-tower, in the upper ward, within the precincts of the Castle, on Friday se'nnight, was removed in the morning, between ten and eleven o'clock, to the royal residence, to be in attendance on the royal infant.

The following bulletin was issued on Wednesday morning:—

"Windsor Castle, Aug. 7, 1844. Nine, A.M.

"The Queen passed an excellent night. Her Majesty and the infant Prince are doing perfectly well." (Signed as before.)

The bulletin of Thursday is as follows:—

"Windsor Castle, Aug. 8, 1844, Nine, A.M.

"The Queen has slept perfectly well, and her Majesty and the infant Prince are going on quite favourably." (Signed as before.)

Yesterday's bulletin was as follows:—

"Windsor Castle, August 9, 1844, Eight, A.M.

"The Queen has had another good night. Her Majesty and the infant Prince are doing well." (Signed as before.)

The bulletin of to-day (Saturday), we are happy to say, is equally satisfactory:—

"Windsor Castle, August 10th, 1844, Eight, A.M.

"Her Majesty goes on favourably. The infant Prince continues well." (Signed as before.)

PUBLIC REJOICINGS.

The news of the birth of a Prince was received in all parts of the metropolis with the liveliest satisfaction.

An official notification of the happy event was sent to the Lord Mayor, and immediately posted at the Mansion-house. A double royal salute (41 guns) was fired at the Tower. The Park guns also saluted, and similar demonstrations were made by private individuals along the banks of the river. The royal standard was hoisted on the churches of St. Martin's, St. Margaret's, Westminster; St. Mary, Lambeth; St. Mary Abbott's, Kensington; Hammersmith, Greenwich, and many other churches in and around London.

A similar feeling was displayed upon the river. In the afternoon, the shipping presented a pleasing spectacle, and the fineness of the weather added to the beauty of the scene. Scarcely a vessel in the Pool, St. Katharine's, London, West India, and East India docks that was not decorated.

At Deptford and Woolwich dockyards the union-jack was hoisted at an early hour, and the numerous Government steamers and men-of-war lying off these depôts were gaily dressed out with their flags, and formed a sight of no ordinary occurrence on the Thames. At the latter place, the Royal Artillery fired a royal salute on the occasion.

Immediately on the news reaching Gravesend, it was promptly communicated to the commander of the Russian frigate, Aurora, lying off the Terrace Pier, and shortly afterwards a royal salute was fired from that splendid vessel, the fine brass band of the ship playing at the same time the national anthem.

At Chatham the troops were instantly mustered, and a double salute was fired from the lines, and a similar honour was done by her Majesty's ship Ocean, the guard-ship at Sheerness, the numerous vessels moored in the river Medway displaying their colours.

A Privy Council was held on Tuesday afternoon, at the Council Chamber, Whitehall, when it was ordered that a form of thanksgiving for the Queen's safe delivery of a Prince be prepared by his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury, to be used in all churches and chapels throughout England and Wales, and the town of Berwick-upon Tweed, on Sunday (to-morrow), or the Sunday after the respective ministers shall receive the same. The prayer is as follows :—

> O Merciful Lord and heavenly Father, by whose gracious gift mankind is increased, we most humbly offer unto Thee our hearty thanks for Thy great goodness vouchsafed to Thy people, in delivering Thy servant our Sovereign Lady the Queen from the perils of childbirth, and giving her the blessing of a son. Continue, we beseech thee, Thy fatherly care over her; support and comfort her in the hours of weakness, and day by day renew her strength. Preserve the infant Prince from whatever is hurtful either to body or soul; and endue him, as he advances in years, with true wisdom and every Christian virtue. Regard with Thine especial favour our Queen and her Royal Consort, that they may long live together in the enjoyment of all earthly happiness, and may finally be made partakers of everlasting glory. Implant in the hearts of Thy people a deep sense of Thy manifold services, and give us grace to show forth our thankfulness by dutiful affection to our Sovereign, by brotherly love one towards another, and by constant obedience to Thy commandment; so that, passing through this life in Thy faith and fear, we may in the life to come be received into Thy heavenly kingdom, through the merits and mediation of Thy Blessed Son Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Privy Council also ordered that every minister and preacher, as well of the Established Church in that part of Great Britain called Scotland as those of the Episcopal Communion, protected and allowed by an act passed in the tenth year of her Majesty Queen Anne, chapter 7, entitled "An act to prevent the disturbing those of the Episcopal Communion in that part of Great Britain called Scotland, in the exercise of their religious worship, and in the use of the Liturgy of the Church of England; and for repealing the act, passed in the Parliament of Scotland, entitled 'An act against irregular Baptisms and Marriages,'" should, at some time during the exercise of divine service in their respective churches, congregations, or assemblies, put up their prayers and thanksgiving to Almighty God for her Majesty's safe delivery of a Prince.

Some misapprehension seems to prevail as to the title of the young Prince. He has already been designated "Duke of York," probably from the circumstance that the second son of King George III. was invested with that title. A morning contemporary, however, says that the Prince may hereafter be created Duke of Kent—that having been the title of her Majesty's father, whose demise without heirs male left it unappropriated.

It is by no means an uninteresting incident, that the news of this important circumstance was published by the Times at half-past eight o'clock, just forty minutes after it took place at Windsor. Our contemporary states that it was indebted to the extraordinary power of the electro-magnetic telegraph for the rapid communication of this important announcement.

THE COURT AND HAUT TON.

On Saturday last her Majesty and Prince Albert promenaded for some time on the terrace of the Castle. The royal family were taken out for airings.

Windsor, Sunday.—The Queen and Prince Albert took their usual early walk this morning in the pleasure grounds of the Castle. Her Majesty and his Royal Highness took an airing in the afternoon in a pony phaeton. The Hon. and Rev. C. Leslie Courtenay performed divine service in the private chapel of the Castle.

Monday.—The Queen and Prince Albert walked this morning in the pleasure grounds of the Castle. Her Majesty and his Royal Highness also took an airing in a pony phaeton. The royal children were driven out in an open carriage in the morning. His Royal Highness Prince Albert, attended by Major-General Wemyss rode out on horseback. The unfavourable state of the weather, during the whole of the afternoon, prevented her Majesty and Prince Albert taking their accustomed airing. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent dined with the Queen and Prince Albert at the Castle in the evening.

Tuesday.—His Royal Highness Prince Albert rode out on horseback in the afternoon; and their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, the Princess Royal, and the Princess Alice, were taken their usual walks and rides in the course of the day.

Wednesday.—Her Majesty the Queen Dowager sent from her residence, Bushy Park, this morning, to make inquiry after the health of the Queen. There were, also, numerous other inquiries. Prince Albert rode out in the afternoon, and the royal children were taken the usual drives and walks.

Thursday Evening.—(From our own Correspondent).—We rejoice to state that her Majesty and the royal infant are proceeding most favourably. The Queen, last night, enjoyed several hours of refreshing sleep, and up to this hour (nine o'clock) continues remarkably well. Prince Albert took walking exercise this morning in the Home Park, visiting the royal aviary and apiary, and returned to the Castle to luncheon. His Royal Highness rode out this afternoon on horseback, attended by Major-General Wemyss. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent visited her Majesty this afternoon. The Lady Charlotte Dundas was in attendance upon the royal duchess. The infant royal family were taken out for their usual airings this morning, in the Home Park; and this afternoon they were driven out for a carriage airing through the Long-walk towards Virginia Water, returning to the Castle at six o'clock. The Dowager Lady Lyttelton was in attendance upon the Princess Royal. A vast number of the nobility and gentry, not only in the neighbourhood, but several residing in London, left their names in the visitors' book at the Castle during the day.

The King of Saxony.—On Friday week the King of Saxony went to Edinburgh, where his Majesty was received with every possible respect. The Parliament-house at the bottom of the Castle-hill was visited, the Lord Provost of the city, the Lord Advocate, and other authorities being in waiting to offer their official attendance in conducting the illustrious stranger over the several departments of that public building. Proceeding by the North Bridge, and by Waterloo-place, his Majesty repaired to the Calton-hill, and, having ascended to the tower at the top, remained for a short period beholding the extensive view commanded from that eminence. The ancient Palace of Holyrood was the next object in the royal itinerary, his Majesty taking an entire inspection of the state apartments of that regal residence, in which are an indifferent collection of the Scottish sovereigns. The royal party having concluded their visit forthwith repaired to Arthur's Seat. His Majesty and attendants went by the pathway to the top of the mountain, and seemed particularly pleased in viewing the vast range of diversified scenery for miles around. His Majesty and party then left on their return to Dalmahoy Castle, the distinguished circle having the pleasure of meeting the illustrious guest of the noble Earl of Morton at dinner.—On Sunday last his Majesty embarked at Granton Pier on board the Lightning steamer for Hamburgh, on his return to his own dominions.

Presents to the Queen from Louis Philippe.—The Sèvres, Gobelins, and Beauvais royal manufactories, and several private artists and manufacturers, have received large and splendid orders from the French civil list, destined, it is believed, for presents from the King of the French during his visit to England.

Statue of Prince Albert.—A marble statue of Prince Albert, executed by the celebrated sculptor Wolff, has arrived from Leghorn, and has been forwarded to Windsor Castle.

More Royal Visits.—It is stated that the Prince and Princess Royal of Prussia are about to come to England, on an invitation from Queen Victoria.

Alliances in High Life.—The marriage of Lord Claude Hamilton, M.P., brother of the Marquis of Abercorn, to Miss Proby, daughter of Rear-Admiral the Hon. Granville Leveson Proby, presumptive heir to Lord Carysfort, took place, on Wednesday, at Lambeth. His Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury performed the ceremony. The attendance of family connections was numerous. Lady Harriet Hamilton, sister of Lord Hamilton, was one of the bridesmaids. After the ceremony the noble lord and his fair bride proceeded to Belgrave-square, where a splendid entertainment was given to a large and distinguished party. The bride and bridegroom afterwards left town for the Priory, Stanmore, the seat of the Marquis of Abercorn, there to spend the honeymoon. The contemplated marriage between the Earl of Mulgrave, only son of the Marquis of Normanby, and Miss Russell, niece of the Dowager Duchess of Cleveland, is to take place on the 17th instant, at Mulgrave Castle, near Whitby. Mr. Charles W. Beauclerk, eldest son of the Rev. Lord Frederick Beauclerk, will be united, early in the ensuing week, to the accomplished daughter of a gentlemen of large fortune in Sussex.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

Suspension of a Clergyman.—A proceeding was recently instituted under the Church Discipline Act, against the Rev. James Frederick Todd, M.A., Vicar of Liskeard. Some time since, the brother of Mr. Benjamin Hart, an inhabitant of that parish, died, and the burial service was performed by the Rev. Defendant. One part of the service was omitted, namely, the words "as our hope in this our brother doth." The Bishop of Exeter in stating his judgment upon these proceedings, gave his opinion that the words were omitted because the minister did not choose to give expression to the pious and charitable hope of the Church, that the deceased Christian brother resteth in our Lord Jesus Christ, who is the resurrection and the life, and in whom, unless he resteth so as to be found in him at the last day, he hath perished everlastingly. The Right Rev. Prelate after some appropriate remarks upon the offence, pronounced his judgment that the Rev. James Frederick Todd be suspended for the space of fourteen days, to be computed from the time of publishing the suspension in the parish church of Liskeard, from all discharge of his clerical functions, and execution of the duties thereof.

Cambridge, Aug. 3.—King's College: James A. Yonge, Scholar, has just been elected a Fellow: Barnard Drake and Thomas Brockeland have just been admitted Scholars of this society. Emmanuel College: The Rev. Joseph Brett Grant, B.A., has been appointed to the mastership of the Endowed Free Grammar School, at Haworth, Yorkshire. Pembroke College: The Rev. Thomas Hirst, M.A., has been presented to the head mastership of the Free Grammar School, Bakewell, Derbyshire.

The Rev. Henry Ives Bailey, incumbent of Drighlington, near Leeds, has been instituted by the Lord Bishop of Lincoln to the vicarage of North Leverton, Nottinghamshire, on the presentation of the Lord Bishop of Ripon.

The Dean and Chapter of the Cathedral Church of St. David have ordered the pews that are in the nave of the Cathedral to be removed, and the whole of it to be thrown open. Benches of oak will be substituted.

The Rev. William Hutton, vicar of Wharton, Lancashire, has been presented to the rectory of Beetham, vacant by the death of the Rev. Joseph Thexton; and the Rev. James Pollitt, formerly missionary in India, has been instituted to the vicarage of Lindale, near Cartmel.

Oxford, Aug. 6.—Yesterday the election of three scholars from the Free School at Abingdon, to Pembroke College, took place, when Mr. E. Hall, son of the late Master of Pembroke, and Messrs. Goodenough and Swabey, were elected.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

The Judgment in the Case of O'Connell and Others.—We have reason to believe that the Judges will meet, upon their return from the several circuits, on Monday, the 26th inst., to consider of their judgment on the writ of error in this important case. The judgment will probably be delivered in the House of Lords on the following Wednesday or Thursday.

Church Rates.—The polling in the parish of St. Saviour's, Southwark, for a church-rate, closed on Tuesday, when the numbers were equal, there being for the 8d. rate, 152; and for the 6d. rate, 152—on which the warden gave the casting vote for the 8d. rate.

Mortality in the Metropolis.—The rate of mortality, notwithstanding the apparently favourable character of the weather, still continues considerably above the average. In the week ending on Saturday last, the number of deaths from all causes, within the Bills of Mortality, was no less than 1014, while the average of five summers gives only 900; and of five years, only 946, as the ordinary number of deaths per week.

Death from Exposure to the Weather.—On Thursday Mr. Mills held an inquest at the Swan, Chalk-road, on the body of William Lynford, aged 36. It appeared that the unfortunate deceased led a wild wandering life, and that having drank too much he fell down on the carpet ground, behind All Saints' Church, Islington, on Tuesday night, and being unable to raise himself up, he was exposed to the torrents of rain that fell during the night. On the following morning he was found completely drenched, and dead on the spot where he first fell. Verdict, "Fouud dead."

Fire in the Borough.—On Monday a fire burst forth from the extensive premises tenanted by Messrs. Staff and Co., marquee, tent, and flag-manufacturers, situate at Lawson-street, Great Dover-road. Before any assistance could be obtained, the fire extended to some immense piles of marquee covers, one of which was sufficiently capacious to cover 4000 persons. It contained upwards of 12,000 yards of the best canvass. Besides these there were several thousand yards of manufactured tarpauling, sacking, rick cloth, and other stock in trade. The shed in which they were stored was 140 feet long by 18 feet broad, and the height was eight feet. Upwards of half this warehouse, with the valuable contents, is destroyed. There was also damage done to several of the adjoining houses. Messrs. Staff and Co.'s loss is very considerable. Unfortunately they are uninsured.

Recovery from Apparent Death.—The following singular case of apparent death and extraordinary recovery occurred at Deacon's Hotel, Walbrook, on Monday evening. The waiter, whose name is Boston, while pursuing his usual duties, was observed to stagger, and utter an exclamation of pain, and would have fallen had not a gentleman sitting near caught him. He appeared perfectly insensible, and was no sooner conveyed to bed than to all appearances he immediately expired. The house was in consequence closed, and remained so till twelve o'clock on Tuesday. Mr. Deacon, the proprietor, who was out of town, had arrived about the above time, and went into the room where the body lay, when he perceived a slight movement of the head—on further examination, he perceived that the heart was beating, though very slightly. Dr. Lucking of Walbrook was instantly called in, and applied restoratives, and in a short time the young man so far recovered as to be able to resume his usual avocations.

COUNTRY NEWS.

Extensive Fire near Gravesend.—On Wednesday morning early a fire of a most alarming kind broke out at the village of Lower Shorne, near Chalk, a few miles from Gravesend, which terminated in the all but destruction of what formed that secluded village. It is situated in a vale, about a mile and a half from old Chalk church, and lies about mid-way between the Chatham road and the Thames. The fire originated in the house of a labouring family named White. This, with six others, formed a row on the left hand side of the lower road, and immediately behind them stood a farm, the whole being the property of Mr. Thomas Solomons, the tenants being employed on his estate, the largest in that part of Kent. A vast number of persons came to their assistance, and every effort was resorted to in order to prevent the flames extending. Three poor fellows were extricated sadly burnt, and it was much feared that one or more fell a sacrifice. The flames reached another of Mr. Solomons' homesteads, called the Queen's Farm, the premises of which were of great extent. This and another farm, called the King's Farm, with much valuable property was destroyed. A later account states that one of the poor fellows who attempted to save part of the property has since died from the injuries he received. His name is James Miller.

Execution at Lincoln.—On Friday week, at twelve o'clock, the unfortunate woman, Eliza Joyce, suffered the extreme penalty of the law, on the new drop, for the wilful murder of her two children, Eliza and Ann Joyce, at Boston, Lincolnshire, by administering to them laudanum. It being market-day, upwards of 5000 spectators were present. We recently gave the particulars of the trial among the assize intelligence.

Committal of Richard Dadd, the Parricide.—On Monday morning this unhappy man was brought up on remand before a bench of magistrates at Rochester, charged with the wilful murder of his father on the 28th of August, 1843, in Cobham-park. The evidence having been gone over, the particulars of which have been often published, the prisoner was asked if he had any questions to put, and, with a shake of the head, he said no. The magistrates retired for a short time, and on their return the reverend chairman inquired of the prisoner if he had anything to say why he should not be committed for the offence with which he stands charged? Prisoner: Oh no, of course not. The prisoner was then committed. Mr. Brown, a solicitor, who attended on behalf of the family of this unfortunate young man, made an application to the magistrates under the 3 and 4 Victoria, cap. 24, "that if two justices of the peace, and two surgeons, make a report of the insanity of the prisoner to the Secretary of State, he can, upon the receipt of it, order the prisoner to be confined in some lunatic asylum." The magistrates intimated that such a course will be taken.
